Furlough possible if Thompson orders high budget recall

SIU-C President Albert Somit Thursday raised the possibility of calling for a faculty and staff furlough over spring break if the governor orders a second budget recall of over 2 percent.
Somit, addressing the Graduate Council in the Student Center, said there is "considerable expectation" that the University could see another cutback. If it is more than 2 percent, and goes as high as 3 percent, he said, one option that may considered be would be to close the institution for a number of days.

But, Somit said, "If there is another 2 percent cut, we can control it without any forthcoming measures."

In another possible 2 percent recall, revenue is expected. Eighty percent of the 4 percent levy that employees were scheduled for receipt Jan. 1. The staff council in March was to meet the original 2 percent recall, nanticoke for spring break as the 4 percent levy that employees were scheduled for receipt Jan. 1.

The council passed a resolution that requires individual departments to institute pre-service training and in-service training programs for graduate assistants.

The resolution was passed allowing departments to institute the programs to enhance the training of teaching assistants at SIU-C to improve their effectiveness in the classroom. The Learning Resources Service is available to assist departments that do not have such programs.

Eugene Tempe, professor of Foreign Languages and Literature, said that the initial responsibility lies with the department that they would be in the best position to solve these needs.

The council passed a resolution eliminating the graduate master's degree program in engineering biology of the College of Engineering and Technology. William Simon, chairman of the Program in Engineering Biology, said that the initial responsibility lies with the department that they would be in the best position to solve these needs.

A master's level concentration in audiology of the Department of Communications and Sciences was also approved by the council.

William Schoenemeyer, the staff council's representative to the Graduate Student Council, said that it was important for the council to take a stand on the issue before it is discussed at the Board of Trustees meeting Thursday in Edwardsville.

The University is also beginning a service charge of 1.5 percent on each month of a delinquent minimum amount due. Amounts are deemed to be delinquent when they were not paid during the period immediately following the billing date. That period is usually 30 days.

The USO had suggested that the service charge only be one percent, but the 1.5 percent charge will be implemented this semester.

The University dropped plans to withhold the installment payment privilege from students who have delinquent bills from a previous semester. Under that plan, students would have to pay any bills from a previous semester, plus total outstanding debts owed to the University.

Thompson may hike income tax to pull state out of budget crisis

By William C. Strong
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. —
Aides to Gov. James R. Thompson said Thursday he is weighing raising Illinois' personal income tax to help the state out of its financial bind, but they would not confirm reports that he already has decided to propose a $1.5 billion tax package that includes higher income taxes.

Thompson reportedly will recommend a 25 percent increase in Illinois' personal income tax and a 40 percent boost in the corporate levy next Tuesday night in his State of the State message.

Asked to confirm the report, Thompson press secretary Dan Gilbert said he would say only that "it's studying the possibility."

"He hasn't decided finally. There are still some issues that are open," Gilbert said.

Thompson, however, speaking with reporters in Peoria, denied that he has made a final decision on what he plans to propose Tuesday.

"I don't have a tax program yet because I haven't settled on the final details of my State of the State and whether I have all received the advice I intend to solicit around the state," he said.

Gannett News Service, quoting sources "close to the governor," said Thompson also will recommend a 35-cent gasoline tax, higher license fees and a liquor tax hike in his speech to help generate the $1.5 billion.

"This is the minimum needed. That may be understated," said a legislative source close to budget talks. "It's the Associated Press Thursday."

"I don't think the options are all that surprising," the source said, noting the state's desperate fiscal crisis.

"I'm not surprised by the number that was suggested," said Doug Whiteley, president of the Taxpayers' Federation of Illinois, a tax study group.

But Whiteley said he doubted the proposed increase would be "set in concrete," and that it may be refined before Thompson's Tuesday night speech to a joint session of the General Assembly.

Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan of Chicago met with Thompson Thursday, but was evasive about details of their discussion. As in previous statements, he said he is not yet convinced a general tax increase is "absolutely necessary.

State Senate President Philip Rock, D-Dekalb, was in Washington Thursday and had not heard of a final Thompson plan, according to a spokesman. A spokesman for Sen. Rock has backed an income tax hike, although not a specific figure.

A review of Illinois' finances suggested the state may need about $2 billion in new money next year just to meet deferred payments and resolve state spending to the level originally expected by lawmakers last year.

If the state decided to provide a mass transit subsidy and make modest increases in spending over this fiscal year's original levels, nearly $2 billion more would be needed.

This assessment of the state's situation was confirmed by the legislative budget official, who said the administration was aware of its implications for the tax system.

Current economic forecasts indicate little or no growth in state revenues for the fiscal year starting Jan. 1. Thompson may have to come from taxes, Illinois' treasury, like that of many other states, has suffered because the national economy has held down tax collections.

Thompson's latest projections of revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30 are about $800 million lower than he predicted when he unveiled his fiscal 1983 budget nearly a year ago.

No charges filed against driver in student auto death

Carbondale police said Thursday no charges will be filed against the driver of the car that hit and killed a 19-year-old international student Jan. 27 on U.S. 51 south of the SIU-C Physical Plant.

Police identified the driver as Eric L. Johnson, 27, of Carbondale, and said her car accidentally struck and killed Wald A. Ayash, a 2-year-old student.

Police said that according to witnesses Ayash was living at Town & Country Mobile Park at Route 6, Carbondale, and was walking in the roadway when he was struck about 8:20 p.m.

Ayash was registered for the fall semester, 1983, and listed construction technology as his major.

New budget proposed in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first comprehensive alternative to President Reagan's three-day-old budget surfaced in Congress on Thursday, a GOP plan to trim the defense buildup, fund new programs and spread the state's 16 percent income tax cut over two years.

Sen. Slade Gorton of Washington called also for a sharp reduction in H. J. Johnson's proposed $30 billion defense build-up, while separately, presidential aides attempted to fend off ever higher criticism from Democratic members of Congress.

Judge dismisses contempt case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration lost a round Thursday in its attempt to stymie a contempt of Congress action by the Environmental Protection Agency, said Judge Anne M. Gorsuch as a federal judge dismissed an unprecedented administration lawsuit against the House.

U.S. District Judge John D. Ciriaco ruled Monday that the administration should not intervene in the dispute between two branch of government, which began when Mrs. Gorsuch refused to give documents to a House subcommittee. The House cited her Dec. 16 for contempt of Congress, a criminal offense punishable by maximum penalties of a year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Both Chicago papers back Daley

CHICAGO (AP) — For a generation, the late Mayor Richard J. Daley dominated the city while critics cried dout and resentment now the city's two major newspapers, often adversaries of the late mayor, have endorsed State's Attorney Richard M. Daley in the city's Feb. 22 Democratic mayoral primary.

Daley's opponents in the race are Mayor Jane Byrne, one of the city's major editorial writers, and Congressmen Mike Coia, a Democrat, and Angus King, an independent member of Congress.

Both papers, the Chicago Sun-Times and the Chicago Tribune, endorsed Daley Wednesday morning.

Officials plan for jobs programs switch

By Terry Lerecke
Staff Writer

Local officials have begun planning for the transition from the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, which terminates Sept. 30, to the Job Training Partnership Act, which begins Oct. 1.

A workshop to help local government officials understand implementation of the new act was held by the state Department of Commerce and Community Affairs Thursday in the Student Center.

The JTPA differs from CETA

In that local government and private industry will play bigger parts in designing and administering training programs, more funds will be used for training rather than for public employment, and so more than 15 percent of the funds will be used for administrative costs, according to Martin Jensen of DCCA.

The bill states the objective of the two-year program is to "prepare youth and adults for entry into the labor force and to afford training to those economically disadvantaged and others facing serious barriers to employment."

The program calls for more cooperation between local governments and businesses, which will have to work together to design each training program. A private council comprised of members of the private business community will be established. County boards, along with some input from city councils, will have the government role in administering the program.

Jensen said geographic redesignations for service areas are under way.

if the council and the administration can work together, the two can be more effective. "I think the GSC will compromise if the administration is willing to compromise," Venturi said.

Venturi also said he feels it is important to get the council organized once again.

"We're going to work to unify the group to get it back to where it was before it was election as being a decisive body once again," he said.

Greeley said it will be important for her as president to be a listener as well as a leader.

"I will make sure that I listen equally to all different ideas, to get input from the people who didn't vote for me as well as those who did," she said. "I'm willing to listen and work closely with them and with the people I already know."

Greeley said the council must solidify its direction and goals and rules as a student constituency.

The GSC also appointed Steve Katsinas and Dave Rogers as representatives to the Graduate Council, and Dan Lewis, Jerry Tollefson and Terry Williams and Rogers to the student trustee election commission.

charges for the current semester without using the installment plan. The University dropped that plan as "well-defeating."

"We didn't think that it was an effective way of dealing with the problem," Buffum said.

The University is also considering restructuring the cancellation and waiver procedures for fall semester. The waiver is used for those students who experience delays in receiving financial aid. Buffum and Bruce Swinburne, vice president for student affairs, will make recommendations for changes in the program.

"I think the waiver is very important, especially due to the complexities of financial aid," Cook said. "We'll be watching any changes in that very closely."

Service areas will contain populations of 200,000 to CETA's 100,000. Areas with smaller populations will be able to apply for designation to provide service areas.

The amount of funding per designated area is scheduled to be determined around March 15.

Training programs can include institutional and on-the-job training, counseling and occupational services. Institutional training can pay students with tuition for community or private college, and private business may employ persons under the act and be reimbursed, Jensen said.

The program is currently in its first phase of designing service delivery areas. The governor will assign areas throughout the state which will be set up in accordance to labor markets. Each area will have the opportunity to accept or reject the designation. If rejected, the individual areas will have to re-apply according to their requests.

The Private Industry Council is scheduled to convene April 1.

Grant recipients and selecting service providers are scheduled to begin in June.

A SURVEY RELEASED last week indicated that over one million young men have filed for exemption from the draft as required by law.

That is not surprising, even though these men are facing felony prosecution and jail terms for a year. After all, this means that some young men have the guts to stand up for what they believe is right.

Registration serves no purpose except as a prelude to induction. When President Jimmy Carter reinstated draft registration, he insisted that the government had no intention of starting an actual draft. He merely wanted a pool of names to draw from in case American involvement was needed in someone else's business, sometimes known as a "midnight" position, a deliberately false or incredibly naive.

When Carter's plans to register young men were announced, politicians lined up to object. Republican and Democratic representatives in Washington were flinging arrows. Republican Speaker of the House and public enemy number one said there was no publically opposed draft registration. He stated in his keynote speech at the Republican Convention that there would be no draft; the responsibility is of his administration.

APPELLANT the President has changed his mind. It is now apparent to us that we enjoyed the privilege of having a complete opposite without any accountability. The young men who have been ordered to register only enjoy that privilege.

Of course, if a genuine danger to the security of the United States did exist, we would have to be prepared to face it. Perhaps Mr. Carter believes the all-volunteer approach is not strong enough to deter that. We should not confude prideful patriotism with the notion that America is sitting by and allowing a group of young men to threaten to become a dominant force in the American way of life.

But the President's aboutface has far broader implications beyond the scope of the draft. It marks a betrayal of the American people who voted to let Reagan follow through on his promise. He didn't. Now that same man is asking the young men of the United States to trust him with their lives, I, for one, say no.

Of course, the President has been communicating for months. If he is to be believed, the government is asking for more next week.

One thing has been clearly given. It is the draft registration. Congress will not lift it. Why? It can not be claimed that registration will save a significant amount of time in the event of a national emergency. The Congress has said in all of its many statements that we do not have a national emergency. According to Pentagon sources, is less than eight hours. The Congress can have access to Social Security records for several days in the event of a national emergency and obtain the same information contained on the draft form in a matter of hours.

THE GOVERNMENT has proceeded to bring in just two of the 26 people registered to register for the draft. It has proceeded to bring in just two of the 26 people who have not spoken publicly against the draft. It has brought in just two of the 26 people who would be no draft and no prosecution. America cannot fail a generation...

Who made theater a free forum?

On Sunday night, Jan. 24, I was fortunate enough to attend the world premiere of the film, "The Lucky Man," in the Student Center Auditorium. The movie, "The Lucky Man," was in itself a discussion of the draft. The audience was comprised of about one thousand people, who were deeply concerned just before its showing can be thought of as nothing less than outrageous. After almost everyone had been seated in the auditorium, a spokesperson for the Vietnam Veterans Against the War appeared on the stage to announce that he would deliver what he called "Gods of Metal" would be shown prior to the scheduled movie. This showed a complete lack of coordination, documentation of the actions of various members of the disarmament movement, and documenting the actions of various members of the disarmament movement, spicing the words, "spreading the word," so to speak.

The film serves its purpose, it presents a view held by a large number of people around the world is not coming from a nuclear age is a frightening proposition. I mean to lend support to the God of Metal. But, nor do I wish to express an opposing opinion on the subject of disarmament.

My reason for writing this is that the impetus for any single-minded point of view presented as propaganda upon the American stage of the collective audience is entirely distasteful to me. As far as I know, the Student Center Auditorium was not designated a free forum for any reason. The result has been to give the public issues that evening.

I believe that the people's voices by choice, primarily with the idea of being entertained in music and saying to some extent what to expect, if, on the other hand, they are unwillingly being browbeaten to a moral and political statement, when expecting a simpler form of entertainment, an entirely different aspect of their choice is taken away.

One may argue that in such a situation, it is free to stay as they choose.

I must give the S.P.C.C. credit for giving people the option to leave the theater. I believe that it was the first time that the first film was shown, however I think that it would have been better if it had been more strongly irritating to many if it had been more strongly irritating to many if it had been more strongly irritating to people of the group that originally scheduled - R. America can't jal a generation

By Brad Lancaster

DISTRICT Judge Terry Heaton on Monday afternoon sentenced Jan. 13-year-old draft resistor David Fiske to jail for 30 days. Fiske's appearance in Heaton's courtroom was the culmination of a week that began with Carter's proclamation reinstating registration was seized by a group of extremists who, under Wayne's constitutional right of free speech had been violated because the government chose to prosecute only the most vocal opponents of registration.

If Fister's ruling stands on appeal, the entire draft registration procedure will be invalid. Millions of dollars will have been spent needlessly.

Although registration may not be as objectionable to some as an actual draft, it is not the more filling out of a form. Registration is critical choice for all young men, especially those that agree with our founding fathers that service to our country must be freely given. If you register, you are telling the government "hey, I trust you to tell me when it is right to fight." I know enough about the government to know that the government makes mistakes and there are mistakes that cost 50,000 lives.

AMERICA IS supposedly built on free choice. I will volunteer for combat when the need arises, but I believe war is the solution to the world's problems. There are other ways.

It is easy for them just as it is to think that filling out a form is no great sacrifice of liberty. But it is not so easy to realize its implications into our personal freedom that we all gain or get away from. It could be that the million or so young men out there who refused to sign up are America's patriots.

Registration dispute shifts into courts

By Christopher Kade
Staff Writer

JUST THREE years ago, 400 students gathered in the Student Center to protest the planned start-up of draft registration. When the Southern Illinois Draft Counseling Center opened its doors in the spring of 1968, it had 24 counselors, each handling an average of six clients per week.

Times have changed. The center is now virtually defunct, according to the Rev. Theodore A. Gill, campus minister for University Christian Ministries and one of the center's draft counselors. In fact, a 23-year-old college graduate who walked in last week represented its first client in more than a year, Gill said.

THE LACK of public outcry or concern about draft registration is true across the nation. "It has become a quiet issue," said Bob Seeley, spokesman for the Philadelphia-based Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors.

But Gill, Seeley and other observers say it would be wrong to assume a battlefront of no longer exists. It has, they say, simply shifted to other locales; namely, the courts and Congress.

Draft laws front events are said to rapidly.

Since the summer, when the government opened its offensive against registration resisters by indicting college students Benjamin Sawawy and Elston Eller, there have been 14 such indictments. They have led to six convictions (including Sawawy and Eller) and two dismissals. The rest are pending.

IT WOULD SEEM to be a fairly good track record for the government, but John Russell, spokesman for the Justice Department, agreed with registration critics that "the most significant case so far" is one in which the government lost.

On Nov. 14 in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, Judge Terry Hatter dismissed all charges against registration resister David Wayne. Hatter's decision was based on two important points.

First, he said the government failed to rebut charges that it was selectively prosecuting resisters. Secondly, he said draft registration regulations were invalid because the government enacted them before allowing a full 30 days for public comment, a procedure mandated by law.

The government is appealing both points of the decision in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 9th Circuit and, although its decision will technically bind only on those courts within the 9th Circuit, there are many who feel the entire draft registration system is on the line.

Draft counselor waits and waits. Page 8

ACCORDING to CCCO spokesman Seeley, three essential things could result from the Wayne appeal. If the charge of selective prosecution is upheld, he said, the precedent would enable other states throughout the country to argue that they too were being unfairly selected for prosecution.

Of far greater consequence, he said, is the finding that registration regulations are invalid. If that is upheld, Seeley said, it would make registration unenforceable within the 9th Circuit's jurisdiction.

That, most observers agree, would be the end of draft registration in its present form. It would be ridiculous for the government to continue registration if its regulations were invalid in an entire section of the country," Seeley said.

The third possibility is that Hatter's ruling will be overturned. Whatever happens, Seeley said, the case is likely headed for the U.S. Supreme Court.

ACCORDING to Gill, the entire counseling community is waging a "holding action," expecting that the Supreme Court must inevitably rule on the issue of draft registration.

Justice Department spokesman Russell said the government believes that Congress is going to prevail in the courts and, therefore, the prosecutions continue. Just last week the government handed down its 14th indictment, against Daniel Rutt of Detroit.

Rutt is a member of the pacifist Church of the Brethren and, like all the others indicted so far, an outspoken opponent of draft registration. It is, Seeley said, yet another indication that the government is prosecuting only those who make their resistance public.

Selective prosecution is not only a legal defense, Seeley said. "I think it is a description of what is actually occurring." The government "sees these people and it makes their blood boil," he said.

Russell doesn't deny the government has so far prosecuted only those who have been public figures.

"But you have to understand that there was no system available to us to determine who in this country was a war resistor," Russell said.

The names the government received were obtained until recently through "passive enforcement," Seeley said. That is, he explained, "those who went public or those who were snitched on.

Now the Justice Department is embarking on its "active enforcement" program, Russell said, in which it will obtain names by cross-checking Selective Service files with Social Security and state driver's license records.

The government has, of course, less time-consuming methods of enforcement and it will soon be availing itself of one that strikes directly at college campuses.

Exactly how many young men remain unregistered for the draft? Well, exact numbers are hard to come by.

Selective Service officials say that 3.7 million men born since Jan. 1, 1946 have registered. That's out of a total of 15 million - 3.3 million men born before Jan. 1, 1946 are not yet in the service.

So, according to Selective Service, roughly 500,000 men remain unregistered - a compliance rate of about 94 percent.

In Illinois, 437,711 of an estimated 419,653 have registered through November 1982, according to Capt. H. W. Wals, director of Selective Service System Region III.

That makes Illinois' compliance rate 99.39 percent, or 47th in the nation.

Betty Alexander, public service officer for Selective Service headquarters in Washington, said that Illinois' low compliance rate is partly due to a large number of out-of-state residents living in Illinois, which distorts the census figures.

Selective Service's figures are not, however, beyond dispute.

A recent survey by the American Civil Liberties Union concluded that the number of unregistered men was closer to two million. But ACLU officials would not comment on how they arrived at the figure.

Charles Harms, spokesman for the Washington-based lobbying group Draft Action, said, perhaps jokingly, that we always take what Selective Service says and don't believe it.

Bob Seeley, spokesman for the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors, said that he "doesn't know how much stock to put in" the Selective Service figures.

"You must remember that they have a vested interest in maintaining that the number of unregistered is low," he said.

How many sign up? It depends

Protest a galent draft registration was more vocal in Spring 1980, a time when students and others in the community assembled to voice their objectives.

Daily Egyptian
Congress passed a law last year that, as of July 1, 1982, makes draft registration a condition for receiving federal student loans and grants. The law, passed as an amendment to the Military Selective Service Act, affects Guaranteed Student Loans, PLUS auxiliary loans, National Direct Student Loans, Pell Grants, supplemental grants and work-study programs.

UNDER THE LAW, male students eligible for federal aid will be required to sign a statement saying they have registered for the draft and will also have to show their acknowledgement letter from Selective Service. Although federal regulations for the law have not arrived yet, Daniel Mann, assistant director of Student Work and Financial Assistance at Woody Hall, believes the registration requirement will somehow be incorporated into the Statement of Educational Purpose. All students receiving federal aid are now required to sign a statement saying the money will be spent for educational purposes only.

However the new law is worked out in practice, Mann has absolutely no doubt that it will affect financial aid operations "a great deal."

"It will almost certainly require more paperwork and time on our part," Mann said.

MANY UNIVERSITY officials across the country fear the new law will further complicate an already confusing financial aid process. But opposition to the law is not solely based on fear of increased paperwork.

Before it was voted on last summer, Southern Illinois Rep. Paul Simon, D-22nd District, offered in its place what he called the "Simon Substitute." Simon's idea was to add a form copy to the educational purpose statement which would have served as a draft registration form. He also suggested that the form include a check-off box for those who wished to proclaim conscientious objector status. It was primarily because of the latter provision that the substitute was voted down, Simon said.

Simon voted in favor of passing the new law, but still feels that "student aid should not be used as a law enforcement device."

Simon, head of the Subcommittee on Post-secondary Education, has scheduled hearings on the law to be held Feb. 24 in Washington Administration officials, college administrators and students are being invited to offer opinions on what problems the law may present and suggestions for changing it.

ANOTHER CHALLENGE to the law is taking place in Minnesota and is one more example of where the battleground lies. The Minnesota Public Interest Research Group in November filed suit against Selective Service and the U.S. Department of Education to prevent the government from enforcing the new law. On Jan. 24, a federal district judge in St. Paul denied the right of the group to contest the law, saying that neither the group nor any of its members were injured directly by the law.

But now the challenge is being pursued by the Minnesota Civil Liberties Union on behalf of three anonymous students who have not registered for the draft.

The plaintiffs are contending that the law violates the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and that it violates constitutional guarantees of equal protection under the law by discriminating against males who cannot afford to attend school without financial aid.

The suit has the support of the University of Minnesota's Board of Regents, which has filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the case. And several universities -- including Illinois' Northwestern, Yale and Earlham College, a Quaker institution in Indiana -- have suggested they may help compensate any students rendered ineligible to receive federal funds.

AS OF YET, the controversy has not extended to Southern Illinois Financial Aid assistant director Mann said there has not yet been any discussion about whether the University will replace lost federal funding.

Congress joined the fray on another front on Jan. 27 when a bill was introduced to abolish peacetime draft registration.

"Clearly, the current system is not working," said Rep. Martin Sabo, D-Minn., who, along with Rep. S. William Greene, R-N.Y., is sponsoring the legislation.

"The high number of young men who have failed to register and the high number of objection addresses rob the system of many of the virtues hoped for by its supporters," Sabo said.

In its place and only in the

event of a national emergency, he proposes a one-day registration of eligible males. Mass one-day registrations were carried out, Sabo said.

"What concerns him," he said, "is not the system itself, but rather making it responsive to those who have, in his words, "problems of conscience."

"Draft registration is here to stay," Simon said. "The question is how it's run."
Draft counseling is a waiting game

By Christopher Kade
Staff Writer

Whether the Southern Illinois Draft Counseling Center will continue functioning is a question that Theo Gill admits "is up in the air.

Because only one person has requested counseling over the last year and because the registration system itself is under legal attack, he can only shrug his shoulders and wait.

But Gill, campus minister for University Christian Ministries and one of the center's counselors, said, "We're here and ready if the situation comes along when we will be needed again."

Gill, Leonard Goering, his predecessor as campus minister, and a small group of lawyers and community activists formed the center in the spring of 1980, when draft registration was reinstated.

There were at one time 24 counselors working out of offices at the Interfaith Center, 1135 Illinois Ave. There is now just a handful. But the approach toward counseling remains the same.

First and foremost, Gill said, they inform their clients of the legal requirement to register. "After all, it's the law," he said, and added that the center would be subject to prosecution if its counselors did not stress the fact. Once that has been made clear, "the emphasis is on listening," Gill added. "We try to figure out why the person is coming for counseling rather than going to the post office to register."

Then clients are told they should begin considering what kind of person - militant, religious or conscientious objector - they would seek in the event of a draft and how they would defend it, he said. Gill said the counselors "really wrestled" with their own beliefs in the beginning and decided it was important to avoid any attempts at persuading clients to become conscientious objectors.

"But in many cases," he said, "we felt we had to explain exactly what our beliefs were - sort of laying our own cards on the table."

Speaking for himself, Gill said, "I'm a pacifist and a conscientious objector."

"As a Christian," he added, "I have no trouble with the concept of laying down my life for something I believe in. But I think the commandment 'thou shalt not kill' takes precedence over the needs of any one country or government."

In short, Gill said, "My first loyalty is to God."

He is not so confident that others feel the same. "I would like to believe that all true peace people who have not registered - some 500,000 - did so because they oppose military service," he said. "But I don't."

He added that most of those who came in for counseling did so in registering for the draft.

Man fined for violating gun law

CHICAGO (AP) - Morton Grove has prosecuted its first case under its controversial handgun ban, a year after the northern suburban village adopted the ordinance.

James Crawford, a Highland Park businessman, was fined $65 by a village judge Wednesday. He was arrested Sept. 14 as he sat in his car in a parking lot, a .22-caliber pistol on the seat beside him.

Cook County Circuit Judge Morris Toppel found Crawford guilty and ordered the weapon confiscated. Under the ordinance, the village will hold the gun five years and then destroy it.

Police have said Crawford bought the gun Sept. 13 for protection and attended a business meeting in a restaurant adjoining the parking lot the next day. He apparently fell asleep in his car after the meeting and a passerby spotted the weapon and called police.

BTO variety show a success

By Sheila Washington
Staff Writer

From a joke-filled magic act to an emotional and gripping call for black-on-black support on campus and across the nation, the show sponsored by the Black Togetherness Organization Tuesday night in Griffin Hall gave what it promised: variety.

More than 150 people attended the event. For blacks, it was a time to take pride in rich culture and recognize black accomplishments that have been lost in the history books, while enjoying entertainment from fellow students and community members. For the few whites and Hispanics in attendance, the show presented an opportunity for them to absorb the gist of black pride and the reasons behind the perpetual struggle for justice and equality in America.

The 5- to 12-year-old Betty Cole Dancers demonstrated their skills with batons to start the affair. Other entertainment included performances from The Black Fire Dancers, a Bob Marley musical interpretation from Kenya, a magic act which included rope and card tricks from magician Brad Lancaster, a gymnastic-dance routine from Patricia Hampton and a moving oral interpretation from a Margaret Walker poem by Shirell Leford.

The occasion also gave BTO-C black leaders a chance to voice the importance of the Black Affairs Council and to reflect on the events blacks have faced at SIU-C. Dwayne Williams, noted for work with WIDS, reminded students of the successful fight last year to save the black media with the black media rally. Kevin Valentine voiced the accomplishments of the BAC and its efforts to bring black students motivating, educational, and entertaining programs that teach them about their history. Karen Shari‘ati, BAC president, reminded the crowd of black martyrs, specifically Martin Luther King Jr. She also stressed that past accomplishments to promote better lives for blacks should not be allowed to fade in future efforts.

Shari‘ati moved the audience with a speech on the state of blacks today and the need for support of black leadership.

“We have to be a leader without support,” Shari‘ati said. “We have to begin to support ourselves.”

He also voiced his support for candidate Harold Washington in the Chicago mayoral race, a pending boycott against Anheuser-Busch products and his encounter with the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

“He is arrogant like most people think, but he’s a hell of a man,” Shari‘ati said.

Phil in the Blanks will play at Airwaves this weekend.

Phil n' the Blanks to rock Airwaves' official opening

By Jeff Wilkinson
Staff Writer

Phil n' the Blanks, a Chicago-based group that has been called the thinking man's dance band, will bring their own unique style of catchy dance tunes laced with intriguing lyrics to Airwaves tonight and tomorrow night.

Phil Bimstein, the group's eminiscient leader, is excited about the gig and plans to debut some new songs, two of which might be released through a national music magazine, Trouser Press. The publication was impressed with the band's new album, "Lands and Peoples," and will include a plastic "flexidisc" of two of the Blanks songs in an upcoming issue that will be mailed to subscribers. Bimstein said in an interview Monday that the group was going into the studio Tuesday to try to get the tracks together. If everything goes well in the session, the two new releases will be "Dance-Dance" and a song with the provocative title of "A Space Travelers Manifesto."

"The new songs have a lot of keyboards and synthesizer," and we plan to do one set of the older guitar stuff at Airwaves this weekend. Then I'll switch over to keyboards for the second set -- it will be a new experience for me."

If the "new stuff" doesn't come together in the studio, Bimstein plans to release songs off of "Lands and Peoples," probably "Meadowlands" and "The National Dance Contest." Bimstein's influences are hard to pin down. "Meadowlands" and the title track from the album are based on traditional Russian folk songs, but Bimstein said his music is not dominated by old songwriting.

"I listen to Greek and Balkan folk music and it has an effect on my songwriting," he said, "I'm not setting out to write ethnic folk songs."

"I never listen to anything for very long and I don't listen to much radio. I'm not trying to imitate any pop trends, but I do like the Talking Heads alot."

Bimstein said that most of his songs were culled from "found poems." He finds them in such varied places as the newspaper and the public library. Fascinating films at festival

The name, Fassbinder, is already a legend in the film world. His work, a strong body of remarkable films, has come to the Big Muddy Film Festival. "4.l~e.d. non-functional Politicallhemes presented a pessimistic allegory about representations merely to push political parables as human often used stereotypical celluloid experience.

Fassbinder's intense Hollywood films do. One finds a sense of emptiness in Fassbinder's intense melodramas and technical perfections, a vacuum to be filled when the viewer comes out of the cathartic experience of the celluloid experience.

His films are dramatized and stylistically unique. Fassbinder often used stereotypical representations merely to push melodrama to its absurd limits. He even wrote more or less nonsensical dialogue.

"All - Fear Eats the Soul," was shown Thursday night of Fassbinder's best works are yet to come. Flop Friday at 7 p.m. and Saturday at 11 p.m. "Marriage of Maria Braun" will be shown. On Saturday at 8 p.m., "Merchant of Four Seasons" will be presented.

Fassbinder died on June 10 of last year at the age of 36, thereby ending a brilliant, rapid and highly productive career in dramatics, acting and directing. He worked with a small group of committed individuals who came to share his passion and politics.

I don't make any films which are not political," Rainer Werner Fassbinder replied seven years ago to the question every film-maker must face.

Fassbinder's intense Hollywood films do. One finds a sense of emptiness in Fassbinder's intense melodramas and technical perfections, a vacuum to be filled when the viewer comes out of the cathartic experience of the celluloid experience.

He was a prolific film-maker of post-war Germany, who consistently talked politics without offending different groups with diverse interests. His films do not make a call for politics.

"It is a story that almost everyone I know has lived himself. A man wishes that he had made something of his life that he never did," said Fassbinder, in describing this film. "His education, his environment, his circumstances don't admit the fulfillment of his dream."

"The Marriage of Maria Braun" is Fassbinder's most popular film in this country. Shot in black and white color, it is a film about cultural and spiritual anemia - a film about post-war Germany. Germany a blinded by greed and hypocrisy.

More than anything, "Maria Braun" is a stylistic success. The title character is a strong, believable although flawed, character. She plays at being everyone's instrument for pleasure of profit, yet actually uses them. She exhibits the kind of will that will one day take her to the top of society.

The film is Fassbinder's incisive comment on the ability of power to corrupt. Her determination to turn sexual oppression against its own forces, makes every personal change to political.

Overall, "Maria Braun" is a well-textured, serious story of the successes and failures of a woman. It shows that above all, Fassbinder was a great story-teller who utilized a blend of politics and pleasure.

Don't miss this opportunity to see films by an acknowledged master of the medium.

Ziegler's quotes during the Nixon era. When asked about Nixon's relations with the press, Ziegler answered that Nixon was "wasting too much time on the wind." I really liked that and wrote a song about it. I also wrote a song about President Reagan's acceptance speech for the Republican nomination. When he said he would base his campaign on family, work and neighborhoods, it just clicked. I took the first verse from all my thoughts about family and the second verse about work and so on.

Despite the political tone of some of his songs, Bimstein calls his politics "minimalist", focusing mostly on social comment.

"When I was younger, I was very political. I try not to take so many stands now and just focus on social comment and self-alliance."

One stand that Bimstein is taking is has to do with the promotion of the band. So far, the almighty contract has eluded Phil and the Blanks, so the group is producing their own albums and using a grassroots style of promotion to get the music to the people.

Although Bimstein admits he is an economist and a damned good diplomat," Shari'st said, speaking of the group's professionalism. "With his speech, Karriem set the mood for my act, and the won't be a beat at the show."

His dramatic interpretation was a dramatic interpretation of a poem written by Margaret Walker. Her dramatic interpretation spurn the wheels of time and travel to slavery, oppression and the death of the slave master. Saffold, dressed in clothing that looked similar to what a slave might have worn, made the audience forget the inhumane acts of a woman in bondage. The poem, which she recited in the Miss Eboness Pageant last year, was one with which she felt the crowd could relate.

"I like this poem. When I first read it, I liked what it expressed."

What is expressed also depicted the theme of the variety show - an expression of black life and its people's quest to recognize the plight of the past while preserving cultural dance, music and a quest to make black life a positive venture. The audience makes the gig, so if you want to dance - do it. But if you want to sit back and listen, there's something for you too.

Racking up Phil 'n' the Blanks will be the English influenced, St. Louis based group, The Avon Ladies. Tickets for the 9 p.m. shows are on sale at Plaza Records and at the door. Plaza Records also carries the Phil 'n' the Blanks albums.

The Blanks are sure to provide a great show for the official grand opening of Airwaves, so beg, borrow or otherwise come up with $5 and be there.

Referral service links callers with listings of social services

By Robert Green
Staff Writer

A much-needed link between the public and social service agencies in Southern Illinois is now just a phone call away.

The Comprehensive Referral and Information Service (CRIS), operated by SIU-C's Evaluation and Developmental Center (EDC), has a listing of over 1,000 social service agencies in 31 Southern Illinois counties.

The disabled, the poor, human service professionals and the general public may obtain quick referrals and information on social services by dialing 1-800-642-7759. The number is toll-free and calls are accepted 24 hours daily.

Rene Prentki, one of three CRIS staff members, said the new service can direct callers to social services ranging anywhere from services for handicapped children to nutrition sites for the elderly.

"We expect calls on almost everything dealing with people," she noted. "And lately agencies have been referring callers to us."

Prentki, a doctoral student in rehabilitation, said similar referral services have operated in other parts of the state but were unable to adequately cover Southern Illinois.

"Before there was no clearinghouse to find services in this area, and social service directors found it to be a problem," Prentki commented.

She said the Illinois Department of Rehabilitation Services realized the problem in Southern Illinois and asked the EDC to initiate the ongoing project, which began Dec. 1.

The process of handling calls begins with clarifying the problem. Usually callers are asked to call back a few days later to give the staff time to collect information and determine their eligibility.

"Callers are given the names of agencies or people to contact, and sometimes more than one agency may have to be contacted," Prentki said.

"For example, someone may call needing money for food or emergency shelter, and we would find an agency to help with that short-term problem. But the real problem may be that they need to learn how to budget, or they need some form of assistance."

Prentki said disabled individuals are one of the main targets of CRIS and the service is equipped with a special telecommunications system for deaf or speech impaired callers. The so-called "porta-printer," or TTY device, can receive and transmit messages instantaneously via telephone lines.

"Except for some police departments, there are very few places that have these devices. But they can only be answered from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., when staff members are here," Prentki said.

Regular telephone calls can be received at all times by staff or message recorder. The CRIS staff also includes Vince Stasek and Nancy Wright. Prentki said the fledgling referral service has received up to 17 calls per day in recent weeks.

"I think we've gotten all of the bugs out of the system," she said.

Law school dean spotlights budget cutback strangulation

By Glenn Richardson
Student Writer

Financial "days of reckoning have arrived," according to Dean Dan Hopson.

Although the current impact of state budget cutbacks may only be "a few pennies," Hopson noted, the "shocks are pinching" and the Law School is not able to do the job it could do because of the funding cutbacks.

"There is a fine line between disaster and hurting but not destroying the basic quality of the school," Hopson remarked. He said he couldn't claim the Law School was "seriously jeopardized," but noted the financial base "is in such bad shape that if there isn't an increase in funding, the University will be in serious difficulty. Certainly the Law School will be." No increase in funding has actually meant a decrease, he noted, because costs have continued to escalate. Hopson indicated funding increases were absolutely necessary in the near future to maintain the quality of education.

He supports increased taxes to pay for his vision. Admitting his bias as a university administrator, Hopson argued the return on investment in higher education is high in measurable economic terms as well as in the quality of life. He dismissed the idea that tax increases would scare potential investors away from Illinois: "I am an economist," Hopson said, but added he personally did not consider Illinois' personal income tax high when he decided to become dean of the Law School.

"It seems to me that we may be buying $12,000 cars and driving them on $3,000 roads," Hopson remarked, and he suggested we might do better by "buying $10,000 cars and $5,000 roads." Salaries for law professors have failed to keep pace with those offered at other law schools around the country, according to Hopson. And if the state doesn't increase funding, it will be difficult to attract talented faculty needed to complete the law school's planned expansion in enrollment, he believes. Hopson indicated salaries have already become a factor in faculty retention.

Focusing on long-term problems has been sidetracked, he said, because of having to deal with the immediate crunch caused by Gov. James R. Thompson's funding rollback. Hopson implied the SIU-C hiring freeze. It's been "a strain on the campus," observed Hopson, adding that fatigue can bring on increased mistakes as one tries to do the job in troubled times.

Hopson sees three major issues on the long term agenda: the expansion of the student body and faculty, decisions to be made by the faculty on the mix of real-life training and classroom education and simulation, and the integration of new technology into the curriculum.

The availability of clinical or hands-on learning experiences has been a hot topic late, motivating a Graduate Student Council resolution last week supporting clinical training.

Hopson said the issue is raised throughout the profession and noted the faculty will reach a major decision before the end of the year on the mix between clinical and classroom instruction.

He noted there is a good deal of argument over the emphasis on skills as opposed to a broader concept of legal education. He added that the increased costs of clinical training is a factor too.

You can lead a horse to water and you can make him drink—if you sell him well enough first.

This philosophy has guided Anna Carol Fults Khattab, professor in the Department of Vocational Education Studies, through 31 years of teaching at SIU-C.

"It's the selling process that's important," she said. "You can sell students by getting them interested and excited."

Khattab, also known as Professor Fults, is retiring in August. In honor of her retirement a committee has been organized to set up a scholarship in her name.

Former students, colleagues, regional high school teachers, business associates and acquaintances of Khattab are invited to contribute to the scholarship fund, said Rose Mary Carter, chairman of the award committee.

The $5,000 scholarship will be awarded every year beginning next year as long as funds are available. Carter, professor in the Department of Vocational Education Studies, said.

Those wishing to contribute to the fund are asked to send their tax-deductible checks to the SIU Foundation, 599 Chautaqua St. Any graduate student in home economics who has demonstrated leadership in the profession is eligible for the scholarship, Carter said. This includes academic scholarship criteria, activity in a professional organization, holding office in a professional organization, involvement in community affairs, volunteer services and research projects, she explained. Faculty in the Home Economics Department will determine who the recipient will be.

The committee, which is composed of high school teachers from Illinois and Murphysboro, and professors from Southeast Missouri State University and Murray State, along with friends and colleagues, was initiated about two weeks ago to honor Khattab's outstanding service to SIUC. Carter, who is retiring this month, along with friends and colleagues, was initiated about two weeks ago to honor Khattab's outstanding service to SIUC. Carter, who is retiring this month, is retiring after 26 years of teaching at SIUC.

"It's hard to find anybody in the business profession and in the local area that doesn't know who Professor Fults is," she noted.

Khattab, 60, came to SIU-C in 1962, after obtaining her undergraduate degree at University of Tennessee. She came here, Khattab noted, "because they were building a university and a building and I'm a builder.

Khattab's first years here were spent devoted to erecting a home economics building.

"I like to plough new furrows. I made stump speeches all over Southern Illinois. I begged to get money to building the home economics building," she said.

Khattab, who is married to Ibrahim Khattab from Cairo, Egypt, commented, "There is nothing more important in this world than teaching. You can't teach a student unless you love that person, so you must care for students."

Khattab, who earned a master's degree at Cornell University and a doctorate at Ohio State University, noted she plans to write when she retires.

"I'm asked to have a desk in this office as a Professor Emeritus," she said. "There's a lot of writing I want to do, such as how teachers should deal with values, and how teachers should teach a student critical thinking."

A retirement dinner for Khattab will be held May 7 in the Student Center, Ballroom D.

judge believes lack of space "cripples the court system"

Terry L evecke
Art Writer

The caseload in the Jackson County courts has tripled in the 15 years, but courtroom facilities have not kept pace. The problem has gotten to a point where it is crippling the court system. According to Judge William F. Green who presides over the building and grounds committee of the Jackson County Board Wednesday night, there are three courtrooms in four judges, and two jury rooms, one which doubles as a meeting room for clients and their lawyers. Library space has been reduced to shelves in the hall, in order "to make another courtroom.

"This can't go on if we're going to keep any dignity in the court," Green told the committee.

Committee burns mayor's proposal

A disgruntled Mayor Sydney Appleton of Murphysboro left the Jackson County Building and Grounds committee meeting Wednesday night, after it was later revealed he had suggested to look into purchasing the city block, burned out by fire.

Appleton went to the meeting to discuss with the committee the possibilities of the county purchasing property on the block for its courtroom expansion. But Chairman Harry Browdy refused to hear anything Appleton had to say.

Air Illinois, TWA join service

By Patrick Williams
Staff Writer

Reduced-rate national air fares will be available for air passengers from Illinois under a new joint fare agreement between Air Illinois and Trans World Airlines.

The new rates are comparable to 1979 fares, said Alice Mitchell, marketing vice president for Air Illinois.

Under the agreement with TWA, passengers leaving from Air Illinois-serviced cities will be able to travel to all TWA cities for as little as $30 more than the normal TWA rates from St. Louis. All connections with TWA must be made in St. Louis.

"TWA looks at it as an extension of their own route system into Illinois," Mitchell noted.

The basis for the joint fares is TWA's desire to get a bigger share of Air Illinois' passengers who transfer to national airlines in St. Louis. Mitchell said nearly 100,000 passengers "interline" from Air Illinois to St. Louis every year. TWA is the largest air carrier flying out of St. Louis' Lambert International Airport, connecting with over 46 cities in the U.S.

"TWA wants us to feed our volume to them," Mitchell said. There are no restrictions on most routes and travel classes, Mitchell said, although passengers using TWA's "Super Saver" fares must purchase tickets at least 14 days in advance.

The joint fares may save travelers $10 or more. Mitchell said federal airline deregulation allowed the airlines to offer the new air rates.

40 more needy youngsters will get chances for Head Start

Barry S. Renack
Aid Writer

Project Head Start, a program for children from low-income homes, has increased its program by 140 children this school year beginning last July. Barbara Grace, director of the SIU-C Head Start Agency, sought teachers on behalf of more than 200 children enrolled in the program. "By increasing the number of children in the program, we can increase our governmental appropriations at the same time," said Grace.

Project Head Start, which receives $10,000 from the Department of Health and Human Services which enables them to help children 3 to 5 years of age, is part of the program. Parent volunteers can attend either the morning or the afternoon sessions. If it's impossible for parents to attend the daily session, other means of involvement, such as cooking for the children, are available.

Ten percent of the children in the program are physically handicapped and receive special attention from teachers. Most of the children are of black or white ethnicity, but in addition, children from Malaysia, Syria, Spain, Nigeria and Cambodia are also enrolled.

Recent social changes such as the working mother haven't had a strong immediate effect on parental involvement. "Just as many or more mothers are donating their time in one way or another to Head Start," said Grace.

The goals of the program range from nutrition and mental health to physical rehabilitation. The program's diversity has shown some measurable success which is evaluated through their growth, she said.

Project Head Start is located at the Lakeland Elementary School on Giant City Road near east of Carbondale. The building is leased from the school district for 4 years. The program is sponsored by the College of Human Resources at SIUC. Head Start centers also exist at 906 Washington St. in Johnston City and at 418 S. Fifth St. in Murphysboro.

Engineers and what they do will be highlighted during St. Louis University-Collinsville's Engineering Week, to be held Feb. 20-25.

The program is designed to showcase engineering in general and SLUC's engineering and technology programs for students, both on the SLUC campus and from Southern Illinois high schools and community colleges.

Sponsored by the College of Engineering and Technology, the program is in accordance with the annual nationwide Engineering Week celebration sponsored by the Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers. The theme of this year's observance will be "Engineering: Turning Ideas into Reality."

"This is a national observance of the importance of engineering and the purpose of Engineering Week is to call public attention to engineering," said Marvin Johnson, associate dean in the College of Engineering and Technology. "Johnson said the week's activities include displays and demonstrations put on by each of the college's five departments, guided tours of SLUC engineering laboratories, engineering-oriented events, and an open house to be held Friday, Feb. 25, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., beginning in Tech Atrium. Open house will include films, slide shows, and a variety of demonstrations.

The annual SLUC Engineering Club banquet, to be held at the Carbondale Holiday Inn, will begin at 6:30 p.m. Friday, Feb. 25. The keynote speaker will be George B. Sloan, director of science and engineering at the St. Louis Regional Commerce and Growth Association. Sloan will address the University-Based Research Centers. A Breeding Place for High Technology Development.

Competition will be open to students, faculty, and others interested in a five-event "engineering pen-pal-athon." which will include egg dropping, air craft design, a competitive structure competition, a mouse trap marathon and a maze.

A tryout clinic is a new feature in this year's Engineering Week observance, according to Johnson. Contestants must be students majoring in a program in the College of Engineering and Technology. The winner will receive $100.00 courtesy of Turco DeQuin.

Support is key to kicking habit

By Mary Price
Staff Writer

When a person is climbing a mountain because he is trying desperately to ignore a craving for a cigarette, he may be very much in need of a good friend. Support is the key to changing any habit, including smoking, according to Joyce Combes of the Wellness Center.

"Although the basic decision to quit smoking has to come from within the person, he needs to have at least one person who knows what is happening and how to help him when going through withdrawal symptoms," said Combes, who is working with Nancy Logan to teach a five-week course called "Stop Smoking Now.

"Some people actually grieve like they are losing a friend when they quit smoking," Combes said. "However, some people will not even experience any withdrawal symptoms."

The program is designed to help the smoker mentally and physically to end his addiction by giving him a program to follow, motivation and group support.

Logan explained that the smoker must have self-discipline to know that his body's daily need for nicotine.

One girl in the course remembered times on campus when she needed a cigarette but didn't have a match. "I thought I'd die!"

Ridding the body of cigarette remains is a flushing process. Therefore, drinking unsweetened fruit juices and water is recommended.

Everyone in the group is given suggestions of what to do and what to eat for the week. Logan said a smoker attempting to "kick the habit" is encouraged to increase his intake of fresh fruit and other healthy foods.

"The body is deficient of proper nutrients because of the use of cigarettes," she noted. "Also, this is a good time to get into other good habits.

Combes said a smoker may think he will put on pounds if he tries to quit smoking. She said that to equal the risk factor of smoking, a person would have to gain 50 pounds. However, in the group, one goal is "to teach people how to quit without gaining weight."

With the idea of weight control in mind, Logan and Combes tell the smoker after a few weeks to cut back on the amount of juice he drinks. This is important because it prevents him from trading one habit, smoking, for another habit, eating.

After making the decision to stop inhaling tar and nicotine, the smoker sets his 'quit day,' and has three choices of how to stop:

"He can stop cold turkey, cut back the number of cigarettes he smokes per day, or choose cigarettes with less nicotine each time he buys a pack," Combes said. "The only problem with going to a cigarette containing less nicotine is that he may smoke more cigarettes, and that isn't the idea. We want him to stop completely."

Benefits of not smoking are numerous, according to Combes and Logan. A person who quits, they said, will be less likely to get a cold; his brain will work better because it will receive more oxygen; and he will save money.

Of course, there is also a benefit one girl in the group is looking forward to — that of no longer being called "death breath" by her boyfriend.

Saluki volleyball swings into its second season this weekend when Coach Debbie Hunter takes an eight-member team to Chicago to compete in the Windy City Invitational.
Two teams from Carbondale will actually be competing in the tournament, which will be conducted under the auspices of the U.S. Volleyball Association rather than the NCAA. One team comprises players who still have years of college eligibility remaining and who will compete for SI-U-C next fall.
That team will be coached by Hunter and will compete as Salukis.
The other team's roster consists of a conglomeration of SIUC students, including ex-Salukis as well as women who haven't played for the school's intercollegiate team. The team calls itself the Stray Dogs and is headed by player-coach Robin

Lynne Miller, a 5-foot-10-inch junior forward, is a wait-and-see starter after spraining an ankle in practice Wednesday. Sophomore (Andy) Hauder, at 5-foot-11 inches, will give up three inches to Warring at center. Rookie Diene Pasley rounds out Gazer's starting lineup at guard.
D.D. Flah and Rosee Peeples will counter in the SIUC backcourt. Peeples has been suffering from tendinitis in her right knee, but has still managed to increase her scoring average to 8.6 points a game. Flah has been on a tear recently, with 12 points in the 12-5 Salukis' two-game losing streak.
"D.D. Has been playing super," Scott said. "I'm really proud of her. Everyone has to pick up on the scoring. We were all extremely disappointed about Connie, but we're all going to have to pick up.
And although it might appear somewhat difficult to see the forest through the trees after Price's injury at that crucial point, hope prevails. When Price returns, all the lineup is in plenty of time for the GCAC tournament. Scott will undoubtedly have a stauncher front line, a more liberally-shooting backcourt, and an extremely deep bench.

Men tracksters seek 8th state title
By Ken Perkins
Staff Writer

For Illinois track and field enthusiasts, this spring may be the one to smile about. The big talk in central Illinois is the Illini's efforts to upgrade an already potent track program. And from the looks of things, they aren't doing such a bad job.

The end result, Illinois supporters hope, is to clinch the Big Ten conference again and place among the best at the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

But first things first this weekend they must get past the Salukis at the Illinois Intercollegiates.

"I guess all we can do is wait and see what happens," said Coach Lew Hartung. Hartung said the figuring is over and the Fighting Illini are favored to win their eighth indoor title. But he's not coming out his Salukis. He knows that strange things happen in Champaign. "I don't see any one team running away with it," he said that was the case last year, too, but SIUC capitalized on eight first and five second-place finishes and outdistanced the Illini by 21 points. Illinois State, who Hartung said would also be tough to beat, finished with 102, while Eastern and Northern Illinois rounded out the top five with 74 and 36 points respectively.

Hartung said his tracksters turned in "super performances" last year but will be hard pressed for a repeat performance and defend their title. "Right now I feel very uneasy about this team. We are not hurt, but we are on the verge of it. Whether these guys can turn it over, I don't know," he said SIUC and Illinois share bragging rights for most state titles won. If the meet's held, both have won seven apiece. But this year Illinois State, who Hartung said has run "all times this year, will make it a three-team showup.

Saluki individual defending champions include: Mike Keane in the three mile; Stephen Wray in the high jump; Tony Adams in the 440-yard dash; Parry Duncan in the 80-yard high hurdles and Mike Franks in the 300-yard dash.

Tracksters hope changes lead to win
By George Pappas
Staff Writer

After a satisfying fourth place finish last week in Normal, the women's indoor track team is off to Champaign this weekend for their second meet of the season. SIU-C will meet Eastern Illinois for the second time this season, and Ohio State and Purdue.

The week may have outdistanced the Salukis' last week by 50 points, but Coach Claudia Blackman says that with a few changes, they can beat the Fighting Illini.

Since EIU's track is measured in yards, not meters, Blackman has made a few changes from last week's lineup. Denise Blackman, who broke the Saluki 300-meter dash last week, will step up to the 440-yard dash. She has been practicing all week for this event and is ready to run it, said Coach Blackman. She will keep practicing this event because the 300-meter race is no longer an event at the national championships. Blackman will also be entered in the 60-yard dash. Rhonda McCaultrain will square off with Purdue shot putter Stacey Hartman, who has put the shot 44-2. McCaultrain, who broke a Saluki record last season with a toss of 46-4, has competed against Hartman both, and after being beaten by her all through high school, she is really looking forward to running with her, the coach said.

Blackman has also changed the lineups of the relay teams. Even though they broke Saluki records last week, Hartman said this talk in central Illinois won't stop them. "I changed them a little," Blackman said because "I think we can do even better." Blackman considers Ohio State and Purdue very strong teams, that will be hard to beat. "But with the momentum of last week," Blackman said "we could knock off EIU."
Salukis travel to Bradley to face inconsistent Braves

By Dan Devine
Staff Writer

Saluki coach Allen Van Winkle will rely on his great length on the strengths or weaknesses of his basketball players. Van Winkle's comments to the order of "Yes, Pete, you've got a very good game," or "Yes, Dennis Goin is done a good job."

But in a week like they guard down. After last week's 8:7-5 loss to Wichita State, for example, "What ends up beating us is our team's inconsistency," Van Winkle said. "Size means so much in the college game, a factor of less than anything."

And then again on Wednesday, in Missouri Valley Conference games. The Salukis are out opti-metically enough.

With one win there's really only one loss, and we're separating from us from four places.

Then, "Strange things happen." Another pause, and finally he added, "Maybe not many, probably too few.

Bradley coach Dick Versace has similar problems. Van Winkle will travel to Bradley Saturday to take on the defending MVC and National Invitational Tournament champions.

But the Braves have fallen on hard times this year, partly because they don't have a true center either.

Bradley is 8-8 overall and 3-5 in the MVC, and only 8-2 at home, but hasn't won on the road since November. One of these losses was an 87-75 setback to SIU-C at the Arena. It was the first time since Nov. 2 that win SIU-C got 26 points from Ken Rupley and made the win look easy.

"We didn't play a great game," Versace remembered the game from Chicago, where the Braves played Creighton last night. "It was one of the worse games we've played.

Versace is less reticent than Van Winkle and about discussing his team in great depth.

The players are young, inconsistent, and not sure what to expect. "I certainly didn't expect another MVC championship," I didn't expect once we lost Cooper and Cook that we'd have a good team.

Pierre Cooper and Kerry Prince were a pair of 6-9 centers who might have shared up the Braves' shaky defense. Cooper will miss his second straight season with a rare blood disorder, and Cook is in the Saluki coach Allen Van Winkle was in a good mood after SIU-beat Indiana State 97-79 Thursday night at the Arena.

"What is this, February?" he said. "Can't win in January. I didn't know if we'd ever finish.

Actually, the Salukis did win in January, way back on Jan. 8. The win Thurday broke a six-game losing streak and gave the team some company in the MVC Valley Conference.

SIU-C is now 6-12, 2-7 in the Valley, and ties them for the ninth place with the Sycamores, who have the same record.

"We had a lot of people help in a lot of different ways," said Van Winkle, who got scoring from Darnell Jones, 29, and Ken

Price-less Salukis battle Bears

By Brian Higggis
Staff Writer

The Saluki women's basketball team will be forced to undergo a rather in-convenient position refor­mation after the temporary loss of its leading scorer and rebounder.

Laura Price, a 6-4 forward who suffered a compound fracture in her right hand during a pre-game drill in Normal Tuesday, will be out of action for about two weeks, according to Friday's 7:35 p.m. David Devine/Staff writer/Gateway Collegiate Athletic Association for South­west Illinois.

"She saw the doctor yesterday afternoon," Devine said, "and the head coach Cindy Scott said of the junior, "He said it looked bad, but it's only one hand.

Meanwhile, the healthy Saluki backcourt will be led by sixth-year head coach Cindy Scott of the junior. "He said it looked bad, but it's only one hand.

That will necessitate moving Chas Waring from power forward to center. The Salukis will only lose an inch in the pivot position, with Waring stepping it at 6-feet-2-inches. She'll still sacrifice a lot of muscle. Waring is currently averaging 16 points and 7.1 rebounds per game.

She will remain intact at the other three hormone. She's appearing average and a 7.5 rebounding mark into Friday's contest with the Bears.

"They haven't had a real center to date," Devine said, commenting on her 12 opponents. "They're a young team. But they're playing small Connie is hurt, and everyone in the Valley can see it. We'll be out for a bit, but remember what sleep that's all about. We're playing small.

Coach Marc Gasser's Bears, who are playing their 18th road game of the season due to their move to Division I basketball, are led by their 6-foot power forward Lynn Strubing.

The 5-foot-11-inch senior is the school's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, and is currently averaging 16 and 8.8 this season. Cindy Castillon, a senior guard, poses WGWOM'S College Basketball with her 11 points and 10.1 rebounding average.

Despite the loss of Price, Gasser foresees no revisions in the defensive strategy.

"We've been practicing with a lot of people this entire year," the fourth-year head coach said, "We're going to

Swim meet to provide change of pace

by Jean Maczewska
Special to the Daily Egyptian

A break from the regular lineup of dual meets will provide a change of pace for the men's and women's swimming and diving team when it hosts Missouri at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Recreation Center.

The one- and three-meter diving boards and some distance races will be held, but most of the meet will be held in the shallow end, such as from 200 yards to 50 and 100 feet.

"It will be a good meet because it will be probably a faster meet, with more exciting shorter races," said assistant coach John Hayman. "We haven't gone short this year and the guys can get more psyched up about it.

Other changes will appear in the lineup, with some swim­mors from other teams doing very well outside their specialties.

"Height might be lacking," Hayman said. "We'll use one swimmer in the back that has never been in our diving."
