In the first part of her program Miss Howe selected four characters from a number, the four being respectively: "Punch," "Pompano Service," "Crawley," and "Exhibition Day in the Fifth Grade."

SHOULD WE HAVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING?

The problem of whether we should have compulsory military training in peacetime is being discussed with much vigor throughout the United States. At the present, it is advocated by the American Legion, The Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Navy and War Departments, and the Gallup and Fortune polls show that two-thirds of the people are for compulsory military training, and two-thirds of the soldiers, both here and abroad, are for it. However, it is being vigorously opposed by ministers, educators, and citizens alike. Some believe we should have compulsory military training but feel that Congress should wait until after the war or until an international organization is set up, and take proper action at that time.

Two bills have been introduced in Congress to establish compulsory military training in the postwar world. The May bill (H. R. 3947) would begin training at 17 years of age, or on the completion of a full high school or preparatory school course. The Wandsworth bill (H. R. 1806) provides that all male citizens or alien residents be inducted into the army or navy when they become 18 years of age. They would serve for one year. They could, however, arrange for a deferment for three years. After the completion of training they would be enrolled as reservists, subject to additional refresher training.

FOR COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE
The War and Navy Departments urge compulsory military training because it is the only practical, democratic, and economic method of achieving national security. A case for compulsory military service was made by the late Secretary of War, Henry Stimson, in a message to Congress on August 29. He declared that every American "not mentally deficient or immobilized by permanent physical handicap should receive a minimum of 12 months continuous training." He believed that it would make the country "healthier, more unified... and more democratic." The young men would be "helped to find a purpose in life, a place in society, and a rugged body." In addition, the boys "would be taught lessons in patriotism, love of country and devotion to flag."
Some exponents of compulsory military training believe that the Army would absorb youth unemployment following the war. The advocates of such a program argue that a year of training under Army auspices would give youth good work habits, and further it would prevent illiteracy and help youth morale in general. It would mean a general invigoration of the education idea.

The main argument for compulsory military training is military necessity. Twice within a generation we have been caught in a state of unpreparedness. The hope is to maintain national security by a pool of trained manpower such as a compulsory military training system can provide. It is maintained that the only way we could guarantee world peace is by adopting such a program now. A writer in the Army and Navy Register (Washington) commented on August 5: "Peace and goodwill amongst the nations can be maintained after the war if we maintain an adequate regular army, navy and trained reserves."
It is further argued that working with and training a million men a year or two will make it possible to know what is involved in the business of war. John learn the problems of a division by dealing with a squad, no matter how much you simulate the size or try to extend in theory the size of that squad." Granted that technological developments may change rapidly, the seventeen or eighteen year olds will have had the fundamentals of a soldier. He will, it is argued, know about discipline, command, the discomforts of maneuvers, etc. Those things which will stay with him a long time.

AGAINST COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE
Critics of compulsory military training say there is no substance to the argument that it would improve the health of our young people. Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal, in a statement of November 23, 1944, said: "The Navy believes every physically fit young man should receive military training as a national life insurance policy, a contribution to our country's security." In other words, the people who would benefit of health would be the ones who would not be admitted to the program.
Educators opposed say that military service is no solution or an insurance to the program of improvement of youth. They advocate rather an improving of the school system and taking more education available to the young men in the seventeen-eighteen age group.
General Fuller writing in BRITANNICA believes that our armies of tomorrow will be smaller. Our armies will depend on the number of skilled mechanics. He does not believe compulsory military training is necessary because the tendency is toward smaller armies "in which quality will replace the quantity theory of the present cannon fodder masses." Emphasis will be placed on technicians rather than infantrymen. The technicians cannot be trained suitably in a year.
A Sociology professor, Charles A. Ellwood of Duke University fears that if we train the youth of seventeen and eighteen year they will eventually be used as reserves against labor unions in tense situations. "In this country we rightly fear a civil war between classes, when the whole population has been trained to the use of armed force, they naturally resort to armed force as a political method," says Dr. Ellwood.

Those opposed to compulsory military training find it difficult to understand, when in the process of building up an international organization to preserve peace, we have to abandon a characteristic aspect of American life which is that we do not have peacetime conscription.

Father Allan P. Farrel, a Catholic educator, summed up very concisely the arguments of those opposed to compulsory military service, by saying, "admittedly the army can teach the meaning of discipline, but few people would suggest that it teaches self-discipline, even a slight degree. Discipline has been the ideal of Prussia, self-discipline an ideal of England and America."

WALLACE MAY REPLACE JONES AS SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

It has been rumored among Washington political circles that President Roosevelt is considering the possibility of replacing James A. Wallace, who left office as Secretary of Commerce, with J. Edgar Hoover as his successor. It is believed that Hoover would be a stepping stone to the presidential nomination in 1948.

IS "BLAZE" GOING TO TAKE ELEANOR'S PLACE?
There has been talk in the past few days by some people who think that Eleanor Roosevelt will be replaced by Mrs. Wallace, who is the wife of the new Secretary of Commerce. It is believed that this would be a great honor to her, but it is also believed that it would be a great honor to the country.

WHAT CAN WE EXPECT THIS TIME?
The new bill set up a new World L. Wilkie fund for the purpose of honoring New York writers. The award, a $500 prize and $250 honorarium, will be given each October for distinguished writing on questions of general interest in this country. It is believed that this will be a great honor to the writer who receives it.

STUDENT OPINION POLL

Students Favor Compulsory Military Training
The trend of thinking among students at the University of Illinois is in favor of compulsory military training in peacetime. A survey conducted by the Student Opinion Poll shows that 67% of the students favor compulsory military training, while 33% are opposed.

General Fuller writing in BRITANNICA believes that our armies of tomorrow will be smaller. Our armies will depend on the number of skilled mechanics. He does not believe compulsory military training is necessary because the tendency is toward smaller armies "in which quality will replace the quantity theory of the present cannon fodder masses."

WINTER SPORTS

TOUGHEST WINTER IN YEARS

The following is a condemnation of a memorandum prepared by Dr. Willis G. Swann, Head of the Government Department and Chairman of the Subcommittee on Conversion of the Illinois Ordnance Plant, pointing out the need for converting the Illinois Ordnance Plant to peacetime civilian production.

General Characteristics of the Crab Orchard Defense Area
The Crab Orchard defense area is one of the most densely populated areas in the United States. It contains a large number of industrial plants, including the Illinois Ordnance Plant. The area is also one of the most fertile in the country, and it has a large population of farmers.

The Decline of the Coal Industry in Southern Illinois
The industry of mining coal in the Southern Illinois area has been declining steadily for many years. This is due to a number of factors, including the depletion of the coal reserves and the increasing cost of production.

Pre-War World II Relief Loads in Southern Illinois
During the depression year, 1933-34, there were heavy relief loads in the Southern Illinois area. This was due to the fact that the coal industry had collapsed, and many people were out of work.

THE ONLY SOLUTION TO THE PROBLEM AT PRESENT APPEARS TO BE THE PROVIDING OF JOBS THROUGH NEW INDUSTRIES. IT SEEMS REASONABLE TO SUPPOSE THAT BETWEEN 50,000 AND 60,000 NEW JOBS WILL BE REQUIRED IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS TO TAKE UP ALL THE "SLACK" IN EMPLOYMENT IN THE POSTWAR YEARS. THE FACTS SEEM TO WARRANT THE CONCLUSION THAT THE CONVERSION OF THE ILLINOIS ORDNANCE PLANT TO POSTWAR CIVILIAN PRODUCTION IS MORE IMPORTANT THAN THAT OF ANY OTHER PUBLICLY-OWNED WAR PLANT IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

Veterans, as an organization, to the war is necessary. However, it is not necessary to have a compulsory military training law. The Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, and the United States Veterans Association all oppose such a law.

TRUE AMERICANS
Somewhere in France Dear Editor: I would like to see myself and you in a little bit of a row. I was reading an old copy of the Egyptian and I noticed an article about the relocated American soldiers. It is a good article. It was a very good article but it had something I should like to add. I am sure it might be of interest to the readers who were at that time.

I am a member of a Japanese-American organization. I have been with the outfit since it was activated as a member of the armed forces of the United States. I was one of the first to go through active combat as an infantryman and I do know that they are not just "relocated." They are real Americans. They are real Americans. They are real Americans. They are real Americans. They are real Americans.

VOICE OF S.I.N.U.
Dear Editor: If ever again I hear that phrase "conversion of the Ordnance Plant," I will disavow the speaker. I have never seen one of them at S.I.N.U. who spoke like that. I have never seen one of them at S.I.N.U. who spoke like that. I have never seen one of them at S.I.N.U. who spoke like that.

DISTURBING FACTS
Dear Editor: I was recently confronted with the difficult problem of converting the Ordnance Plant to peacetime production. It is a very difficult problem. It is a very difficult problem. It is a very difficult problem.

NEED MILITARY TRAINING
Dear Editor: Most people agree that following the war the United States must strive to maintain peace with the other nations of the world. As I believe if we are not prepared, we will not be able to do so.
