McFarlin's wait nears end, spirits high

By Robert Green
Staff Writer

For the past seven weeks, SIU-C history professor Harold McFarlin has literally experienced the wait of his life on a waiting list for a new heart.

One by one, heart transplant patients at the Stanford University Medical Center have undergone their operations, raising McFarlin's name on the list and his spirits as well.

"I'm bedbound and chair-bound, but my spirits are sky high," McFarlin said Wednesday in a telephone interview from his apartment near the hospital in Palo Alto, Cal.

"All of the patients ahead of me have had successful operations, so I'm definitely in the right place," he said. "The next compatible heart could be mine."

McFarlin, 46, whose plight inspired hundreds of people in the area to contribute more than $60,000 for a life-saving operation, arrived at Stanford May 11 and immediately underwent a battery of tests which confirmed that his heart is dying.

After the tests, McFarlin moved into an apartment a few miles from the hospital, where he, accompanied by his mother, has since quietly awaited his turn.

McFarlin said most of the patients ahead of him have already received their new hearts, and that his operation will probably take place within the month.

When a suitable heart arrives at Stanford, McFarlin said he will be notified by the beep of an electronic pager he must keep with him at all times, just in case he isn't near his home phone.

But the bedbound professor said he isn't likely to stray far from home these days, as his physical condition is very bad.

"I seldom go out any more, or do anything except read for a few hours a day," he said. "I can hardly even write any more. But I'm not complaining.

The overall situation is very optimistic."

McFarlin said he did venture to the hospital several weeks ago and met four heart transplant patients who had received new hearts within the last week.

"They looked wonderful, like they were back on their feet," he said. "It was very encouraging to see how they rebounded."

The Stanford medical facility is generally considered to be the best in the country for heart transplants, with a first-year success rate of over 90 percent. Stanford averages one or two heart transplant operations per week.

After McFarlin receives a suitable heart - a heart of the right size, tissue and blood type - he will enter the post-operative phase, which may last five to seven months.

McFarlin's diagnostic and post-operative expenses will be paid through the locally raised Harold McFarlin Heart Transplant Fund, and a National Institutes of Health grant will cover the operative phase.

Total costs of the operation will be at least $80,000 and perhaps as much as $100,000, but McFarlin said it appears that all the costs will be covered.

Bill would toughen rape laws

By Karen Torry
Staff Writer

Legislation passed last week by the Illinois General Assembly may make it easier to convict accused rapists, but also could "create a whole new body of case law," Jackson County State's Attorney John Clemons said Wednesday.

House Bill 606, passed unanimously by the Senate and 110 to 4 by the House, is a "massive overhaul" of sex offense laws in Illinois, said Clemons, but it's hard to predict the final outcome of the bill. Gov. James Thompson has amendatory veto powers.

Clemons noted, allowing him to change parts of the bill and send it back to the Legislature.

But whatever the final version of the bill, constitutional challenges to the new laws probably will tie up many rape cases in court, Clemons said.

The new legislation would categorize sex-related crimes by severity, under the heading "sexual assaults," according to Lynne Price of the Carbondale Women's Center Rape Action Committee. For example, a person convicted of raping and beating a woman may receive a stiffer sentence than someone found guilty of rape alone.

Another change would make it an accused rapist's responsibility to prove that the victim did not consent to sexual relations, Price said. In the past, victims have shouldered that burden, she said.

Price cited the case of a Carbondale woman whose attacker was convicted of two counts of deviate assault, but was later freed when an appellate court ruled that the woman had not sufficiently

Engineering firm on campus to inspect McAndrew Stadium

By William Jason Yong
Staff Writer

A team of technicians and engineers from Hanson Engineers Inc., is on campus to begin a preliminary inspection of the structural integrity of McAndrew Stadium.

SIU-C is paying the Springfield firm $23,000 to conduct the study, which is scheduled to be completed by Aug. 31.

Clarence Dougherty, vice president for campus services, said that the team will be on campus Thursday to begin the preliminary inspection and will leave that evening, he said.

Gene Wilkinson, executive vice president at Hanson Engineers, said that although the work is only preliminary, engineers are on campus to do the work.

"Our company basically consists of engineers and support technicians and both will be on campus Thursday to conduct the study," he said.

Wilkinson said that he does not know how long the preliminary work will take or how long the whole study will last.

"We have been advised by the administration that all communications regarding this study be directed to the

Corcoran blasts Percy as anti-Israel

By Mike Robinson
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Sen. Charles H. Percy is under attack as "Israel's most powerful adversary" in the Senate in an expanded replay of a political fundraising drive that figured heavily in the defeat of downstate Rep. Paul Findley last year.

"More than any other officeholder in Washington, Percy has worked to destroy the special relationship between the United States and Israel," says a letter sent to more than 50,000 Jewish campaign contributors nationwide on behalf of the senator's primary challenger, Rep. Tom Corcoran, R-14th District.

It resembles fundraising appeals that amassed thousands of dollars for U. S. Rep. Dick Durbin, D-11th District, who unseated Findley in 1982 after the GOP lawmaker's Mideast views angered Jewish contributors.

"They're really sharpening the knives," Findley, now a Washington writer and lecturer, said after hearing of the attack on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman. "I hate to see Chuck Percy on the receiving end."

Corcoran press secretary

Scott McMurray said the 50,000 fundraising packets fashioned by direct mail expert Jerry Benjamin of Milwaukee, a Durbin consultant in 1982, were mailed June 10 and have "exceeded expectations."

"You can tell by the fact that we're mailing more of them that we're making money," McMurray said of the letter signed by Northfield, Ill., businessman Louis A. Morgan, a leading Durbin fundraiser who is now heading Corcoran's drive in the Jewish community.

The two camps are at odds over specifics in the letter. It says Percy "led the battle" in 1978 for Senate approval of a sale of F-15 fighters to Saudi Arabia and "followed up on that outrage" in 1981 when he "pushed through" the sale of AWACS radar planes to the Saudis.

Percy backed both plans, but Foreign Relations Committee staff director Scott Cohen, a Percy supporter, argues that "led the battle" goes too far and President Reagan "pushed through" the AWACS sale.

The letter says Percy "almost singlehandedly" blocked a shipment of F-16 warplanes to Israel last year. In fact, the Reagan Administration blocked the shipment when Israel went into Lebanon but has since released the planes, in both cases with Percy's support.

Percy, the letter says, has supported a Palestine Liberation Organization state on the West Bank of the Jordan River and described PLO chief Yasser Arafat as a "moderate." Percy contends he said Arafat was moderate compared to Dr. George Habash, a Palestinian Marxist leader.

Cohen said a taped Percy interview following a journalism breakfast here, where the "moderate" controversy originated, clearly contained the Habash comparison. But he said it was omitted in a report filed by an influential correspondent and the canard has since spread.

As for the PLO state on the West Bank, Percy says he was misquoted in leaked cables from the U.S. Embassy in Moscow in 1980.

The letter says, without citing specifics, that Percy has opposed aid to Israel. In fact, he did oppose a move last year to raise aid to Israel above the amount sought by the administration, on the eve of the invasion of Lebanon, but backed the White House request.

How much Corcoran can realize from Jewish contributors is unclear. The outspoken conservative, himself, says he believes his prospects are good.

Gus Bode

Gus says Corcoran may win the Republican nomination but don't bet on him for any Mr. Congeniality awards.

Rise in Salvadoran death toll called insufficient to block aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of civilians killed in El Salvador's political violence has gone up for the first time since Congress began requiring twice-a-year findings that the U.S.-backed government is making human rights progress.

But State Department officials say the 12-percent rise for the past six months — reported by the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador and a church-sponsored agency — is too small to block the administration's expected July 20 certification that the Salvadoran government is making a "concerted" effort to respect human rights.

Critics of President Reagan's policies in El Salvador, however, contend the increasing death toll and higher numbers of political kidnappings show that Salvadoran security forces, confident of continued U.S. aid, are stepping up internal repression.

The July 20 human rights finding, the fourth under a 1961 law, is needed to continue U.S. military aid to the Salvadoran army in its war against leftist insurgents. Congress has approved $56 million in military aid for this year and is considering Reagan's request for an additional $60 million.

According to unclassified cables from the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador, 1,072 civilians died in the political violence between Dec. 16 and June 15, the latest six-month period available. That amounts to a 12-percent increase over the 961 civilians killed from July through December 1982, the period covered by the last certification.

"It's impossible to say that that small increase is actually an increase," one State Department official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said Wednesday. "It could be attributable to a lot of things (including) better reporting by the newspapers."

The embassy's count of political deaths is based on the pro-government Salvadoran newspapers' listing of civilians killed. U.S. officials concede that those totals understate the actual number of civilians killed because few deaths are reported from the countryside, where newspapers don't circulate.

"Six months ago, the president certified that military aid to El Salvador should continue largely because of a decrease in political violence," said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., author of the certification requirement. "Now, in order to maintain the flow of military supplies, the president is prepared to certify once again, despite an increase in the political violence as evidenced by the administration's own data."

"The conclusion is inescapable: the Reagan administration places greater value on arming the generals in El Salvador than it does on coming clean with the American public."

Meanwhile, Tutela Legal, a human rights agency sponsored by El Salvador's Roman Catholic Archdiocese, reported 2,185 civilians killed by government armed forces and rightist death squads from January through May, or an average of 437 killings a month. Its figures for June are not yet available.

News Roundup

Walesa refuses to return to work

SOKOLOW PODLASKI, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa refused on Wednesday to end his unauthorized vacation and vowed to fight in court to keep his job.

Walesa ignored a deadline for returning to work, saying he would not go back unless "taken by force." Polish law stipulates that failure to return from an unauthorized leave within three days constitutes grounds for dismissal.

"I will never lose my job because of this — simply because I'm right," he said.

Canada to regulate news industry

OTTAWA (AP) — The government proposed legislation Wednesday to regulate the Canadian newspaper industry, including limits on the growth of newspaper chains, establishment of a national press council and government financing of news bureaus in foreign countries.

The president of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association, J. P. Callaghan, said some parts of the proposal may violate Canada's new constitution.

A government spokesman said the bill was not a threat to press freedom, saying, "You can't have a free press if too much is owned by too few."

Study says housing revival unlikely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Though recent sales and construction figures look a lot like a national housing revival, the percentage of Americans who can afford to buy homes is actually declining and prospects for the future are dim, say institutions specializing in home loans.

The U.S. League of Savings Institutions, in a study released Wednesday, said "the longer-term outlook for homeownership is a sobering one," because of such problems as the record government deficits and the unlikelihood that adults who grew out of the "baby boom" will save much of their income.

Floods lead to disaster declaration

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Gov. Thompson has declared DeKalb, DePage, Kane and Will counties state disaster areas because of heavy rains last weekend, it was announced Wednesday.

Thompson said more than 1,000 homes were flooded in those counties last Friday and Saturday. The declaration will entitle homeowners and businesses to have damaged property reassessed for tax purposes.

High court equalizes retirement pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled 5-4 on Wednesday that retirement plans cannot pay smaller monthly benefits to women solely because of their sex, even though they live — and hence collect — years longer than men.

The ruling, according to statistics quoted by the justices, could cost from $85 billion to $93 billion a year in extra benefits.

"The decision may prove a boon to millions of female employees but could mean, in many cases, that workers of both sexes will pay higher premiums."

Study shows prison sentences determined by available space

CHAMPAIGN (AP) — The main factor in determining the length of a prison sentence is the number of jail cells available, a study in Illinois, Michigan and Pennsylvania concludes.

"It appears that the supply of prisoners will increase to meet the available number of prison beds — at least during times of great public concern with crime," said Peter Nardulli, a political science professor at the University of Illinois.

The longest sentences were given in Michigan, the state which had built the largest prison capacity, but Michigan did not have the lowest crime rate, the study said.

The research as done in nine counties by Nardulli, Roy Flemming of Wayne State University and James Eisenstein of Pennsylvania State University. They interviewed 7,500 criminal cases over a five-year period.

The team considered socioeconomic factors in each county, political views, and the severity of the local crime problem. But, Nardulli said, they found the primary factor affecting sentencing was state and local detention capacity.

Public concern about crime and pressure to get tough with criminals led to the construction of new prisons in the 1960s and 1970s, he said. It costs up to $100,000 to build a maximum security cell, and another $14,000 a year to house a prisoner in it, he said.

"If we're incarcerating people who are marginal offenders just because of this pressure to incarcerate, we've got to question whether that is the best response, given the enormous costs and the other demands for state funds," said Nardulli. "It would be one thing if you could say it would have a direct impact on crime, but you can't say that."

Kalamazoo, Mich., has the most cells available and has the longest sentences in the study. But that county also has one of the highest crime rates, he said.

"You might say they have this aggressive policy of locking them up and protecting society. Well, it's not working."

He said construction of more prisons could lead to a policy of trying to fill those cells, perhaps with marginal offenders who might become hardened criminals because of the prison atmosphere, said Nardulli.

"The real question is, 'Are we going to be less careful about who we choose to incarcerate when there's all kinds of space?'"

He said there are many criminals who belong in prison, but others could be placed in work-release programs or assigned community service tasks.

Sex traded for Carter papers?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee chairman said Wednesday there are allegations the 1980 Reagan campaign used sex to obtain President Carter's briefing papers. Meanwhile, counselor Edwin Meese said President Reagan would agree to be interviewed by the FBI about the documents.

Rep. Donald Albosta, D-Mich., whose subcommittee on human resources is investigating the briefing papers incident, said: "We've got indications that a sex scandal could be created out of the testimony."

He said the subcommittee is focusing on the information, but remarked the material was "just hearsay" without confirmation. He said, however, it "seems to be coming from people who are reliable sources."

New coal research study under way

By Karen Torry
Staff Writer

The SIU-C Coal Research Center has begun a study it hopes will increase understanding and use of high-sulfur coal in Illinois.

The U.S. Department of Energy has provided $1.5 million for a cooperative study between the Coal Research Center and the federally owned Coal Technology Laboratory in Cartersville. SIU-C will put up $320,000 for the 18-month project.

The overall aim of the study is to help stabilize a declining coal industry through increased use of Illinois coal in "environmentally acceptable ways," according to a news release. But most of the research, which will be con-

Meese, asked about Albosta's comment, said: "At no time was there any contemplation or attempt by the Reagan campaign management to get any information out of the Carter campaign."

Meese, in noting that Reagan might speak to the FBI, noted that the president might not be a good source of information because he insists he knew nothing about the briefing papers.

But, Meese said in a telephone interview, "I am sure he would (talk to the FBI) if there were any information he could provide."

Reagan's chief spokesman, Larry Speakes, bristled at a series of questions on the briefing book episode Wednesday and told reporters: "I think you are possessed."

ducted at the Coal Technology Laboratory, will address more basic scientific questions, Michael Dingerson, acting director of the Coal Research Center, said Wednesday.

Researchers hope to learn why sulfur exists in coal and develop new, less costly ways to remove it, Dingerson said. Currently, extracting sulfur from coal is very expensive and hinders use of high-sulfur Illinois coal, he said.

Researchers will also study the relationship between burning high-sulfur coal and acid rain, as well as the economic aspects of the coal-mining industry, the news release said.

The study will be headed by the new director of the Coal Research Center, who Dingerson said may be named as soon as Friday.

resisted the attack.

In its decision overturning the conviction, the appellate court said, "We do not mean to suggest that the complainant did in fact consent; however, she must communicate in some objective manner her lack of consent."

"I knew I could not fight him," the woman, who lobbied for House Bill 606, said at recent news conference in Chicago. "There was no one close enough to hear my screams. I thought he'd kill me."

"The appellate court committed an absolute miscarriage of justice," said Clemons, prosecuting attorney in the case. The decision was a "misreading of the evidence," according to Clemons, who said he is unsure whether a change in the law would have made a difference.

Married women could — under certain circumstances — charge their husbands with rape under a provision in the new legislation, according to Price. A woman attacked by her husband must prove that he was very brutal, beat her or threatened her with a weapon.

Price said she hopes that, if the new bill becomes law, it will encourage more women to prosecute attackers. Many women are humiliated by having to prove their own innocence, she said, and feel it is futile to press charges.

Another bill, legally assuring victims of confidentiality in rape counseling, was approved by the General Assembly last week.

If signed by the governor, the bill will make disclosure of confidential information by a rape crisis counselor a Class C misdemeanor, punishable by up to 30 days in jail or a $500 fine, or both.

"Prior to this bill, a rapist had more rights than his victim," State Sen. Adeline Geo-Karus, R-Zion, said last week.

University," Wilkinson said. "All I can say is that the engineers and technicians will be on campus Thursday."

Dougherty said that the actual analysis of the stadium's structural safety will be conducted between now and August 31.

"They (Hanson Engineers) have given us a list of people who will work on the study but the exact number of people involved is not known yet," he said. "The length of time for the completion of the work is also not known."

But he added that as many people as necessary will be brought in.

The firm will base its investigation on a list of questions submitted by University engineering experts. The questions were prepared by Philip K. Davis, Najim Rubayi, Aslam Kassimali, and Kenneth Tempelmeyer, all from the College of Engineering and Technology; and by Allen Haake, supervising architect-engineer at the Physical Plant.

Among the questions the University engineers asked the firm to look into are: whether the stadium stands were built according to original plans and specifications; whether there is any evidence of structural fatigue or cracks; whether there is a need to place load limits on the use of the structure; whether there is any reason to think the stands are unsafe and, if so, to recommend corrective measures; whether there is any clear or present spectator danger if the stands are loaded to capacity; and to determine the maximum static load that the east stands can support without resulting in buckling failure.

During the preliminary analysis, Hanson Engineers will investigate the stadium's conformance with building codes and static stress level, consider fatigue aspects of the steel structure and prepare a written report with recommendations.

A proposal submitted by Hanson Engineers to Haake stated that if "non-destructive fatigue testing" is needed, it would cost between $6,000 and $12,000. But if "whole structure dynamic analyses are appropriate," that kind of work could cost between $25,000 and $50,000. Payment of the initial $23,000 will be split equally among the president's office, the Office for Campus Services and the Inter Athletic Advisory Committee.

The investigation resulted from police reports two years ago that said there was visible movement of support beams beneath the east stands of the stadium. Further investigation was conducted on Nov. 3, 1979, during a football game against Indiana State.

Wiss, Jarney, Elstner and Associates, Inc., a Northbrook consulting firm, conducted the study, which cost $4,093. The firm concluded that further studies were needed.

Don't blame teachers

SOME CRITICS blame teachers for the relatively mild standards of education in Illinois. Indeed, standards are lax — as illustrated by the negligible list of mandated requirements for high school graduation in the state — but the blame for low standards should fall elsewhere.

Sen. Kenneth Buzbee, D-Matanzas, wants to beef up the state's requirements. He has pushed a bill to the governor's desk which would require high school students to take a minimum of three years of English, two years of math, two years of social studies, one year of science and one year of either music, art or a foreign language.

The math, humanities and science requirements are completely new. The social studies requirement is twice the current mandate.

BUZBEE SAYS one group has given the proposal "strong backing" — the Illinois Education Association, a group of teachers. "The people who wanted this bill the most were the teachers," Buzbee said.

So why are the teachers being blamed for the failure of the state's educational system? They want more requirements and tougher standards. Most of them have been functioning the best they can with the standards that are in place.

Teachers do not set the curricula for their schools — school boards and administrators do. And board members think as much in terms of dollars and cents, and frequently in athletics pride, as they do in terms of educational excellence. They must — for their school systems are bound to the limits of tax revenues and the whims of taxpayers.

FOR EXAMPLE, a few years ago, one nearby Southern Illinois school system eliminated semester examinations for high school students because of the time and cost involved in administering them. The abolition was supported by students, though semester exams were considered by many teachers to be a key to determining levels of student achievement. After five years, standards in that school system had dropped to the point that the school board decided to reinstate the exams — at the insistence of many of the system's teachers.

A quality education costs more than a superficial one. More teachers must spend more time using more expensive materials to meet high educational standards. Yet the resulting improvement in student performance may not be highly visible — though it might appear on aptitude test scores — and taxpayers are traditionally reluctant to support the intangible.

ON THE OTHER HAND, schools with winning sports teams get substantial recognition. Unfortunately, many taxpayers — and, as a result, many school boards and administrators — are more likely to question why their teams aren't winning than why Johnny can't read.

Most of the state's teachers, however, ask the latter question. The only response has come from the Legislature.

Sen. Buzbee's proposal may help Illinois education, but only to the extent to which each system is willing to go along. Those who set the standards and provide the means for school systems must begin to do the most they can for education, and stop trying to do the least that teachers will let them get away with.

Letters

Draft-aid discriminatory

After reading Jay Small's column on the "proof of Selective Service registration in order to receive financial aid" issue, I felt compelled to "put in my two cents." I am a recipient of financial aid and am registered with Selective Service, thus I am in compliance with the much-debated legislation.

However, I agree with Mr. Small that it is ridiculous to place the responsibility of securing a reserve armed force in the hands of the financial aid offices of our colleges and universities. Can you see the U.S. having to tell the Salvadorans that their war will have to wait because of the backlog of paperwork at the ISSC?

The purpose of this letter, however, is not to make jokes at the financial aid office, but to inform the readers of the main point of this issue. If the legislation requiring proof of registration before a student may receive financial aid is upheld in the Supreme Court, then Congress is saying that only the economically disadvantaged college students must prove that they are willing to defend our country in order to enjoy higher education.

What is even worse is that a disproportionate number of "minority students receives financial aid; so, as was the case in Vietnam, the minorities and the poor will be the first to die over there while the rich enjoy life over here. This legislation is saying that the poor must fight first, but receive benefits like education last.

Mr. Small's "far-fetched scenario" actually provides more equitable methods of insuring that our young men face their responsibility to their country. It is fair to require proof of registration to receive a grade in a course because at least that will put the burden of proof on everyone, instead of a select few. It is even plausible that Selective Service registration be a prerequisite to registering for classes. Again, this will affect all eligible males, not just those who already have the misfortune of not being able to afford a decent education.

It is a crime that our Selective Service registration process is a discriminatorily selective process.

Withholding surplus a cheesy deal for poor

WASHINGTON — Standing among 35 elderly citizens as they ate a free lunch in a church basement, John Bode, 28, the Reagan administration's No. 2 person in food programs, said, "I came here to learn." His audience, with more pressing urgencies than educating the bureaucracy, ate on. It wasn't until a question-and-answer period at the end of the meal that the official had his desired learning experience.

Bode said in explaining the Department of Agriculture's recent reductions in cheese distribution — from a peak of 50 million pounds to about 25 million now — that a major concern was "commercial displacement." Cheese companies were suffering economic losses, he said, because a large number of people "stopped buying cheese because they were getting it free."

THE PASTOR of the church, who oversees the feeding of 600 people every day, gagged on Bode's comment. He wondered aloud what kind of government it is that cares more about protecting food-company profits than hungry people. Bode couldn't offer much in reply, except the standard piety that the Reagan administration was doing its utmost to feed the truly needy.

If the politics of cheese says anything, the reality known by the nation's hungry and underfed is much different. According to the National Cheese Institute, sales in 1982 were down 1.6 percent. For the first quarter of this year, the annualized drop is 6.6 percent. Even if the poor, who are not heavy consumers of cheese because of the high prices, were to blame for the declines, a question is still unanswered: Why is the USDA cutting back 50 percent of its cheese distribution when this year's sales are down by less than 7 percent and last year's by less than 2 percent?

THE INSTITUTE itself admits that, after sales increase every year for decades, the recession is having an effect.

Colman McCarthy
Syndicated Columnist

To finger the poor as a cause of one wealthy industry's minor hardship, when other industries are suffering severe slumps, is only part of an attack on the hungry. The other is that the shorting of cheese occurs when the federal surplus has never been higher.

In 1979, USDA warehouses had 50,000 pounds of cheese. The stockpile today is 851 million pounds. Record surpluses exist in butter and nonfat powdered milk. While warehouses fatten, the mayors of cities see an unprecedented rise in emergency food appeals from the poor. Food centers and soup kitchens that fed a few hundred people three years ago now see double and triple that number.

OFFICIALS of the Reagan administration appear determined not to see anything unfair about bulging warehouses and empty stomachs nor anything shameful about a nation of foodlines. Instead they worry about chiselers. Last December, a USDA official told a reporter, "That's not the elderly and needy you're talking to in those food lines. There are people who take advantage of these things." Last week, Bode among the elderly poor also spoke about moochers crashing the cheese lines.

'Reagan's lack of interest in facts about the poor persists.'

The bureaucratic underlings are in step with the no-free-lunch obsessions of Ronald Reagan. His welfare queen who drove her Cadillac to the supermarket to cash in food stamps apparently is now stopping at the cheese lines to fill her trunk with a tub or two of USDA brie.

THOUGH REAGAN has dropped the welfare queen from his speeches, his lack of interest in facts about the poor persists. At his most recent press conference, he stated that, "We have four million more people getting food stamps because we redirected more effort and $3 million more in spending in food stamps." For Sen. Mark Andrews (R-N.D.), who conducted hearings in June on surplus food and hunger and discovered "mismanagement and inefficiency" in the USDA, the President is "spouting numbers that don't make sense. How can you feed four million more people with $3 million? That would be 75 cents a year per person. That's the kind of figures David Stockman came up with."

In addition to cuts made in 1981-82 that resulted in a $7 billion reduction in food stamps (House Budget Committee figures), the administration now opposes a bill passed 389 to 18 in the House that would expand emergency food assistance to the poor.

ON JUNE 27, this opposition took on symbolic meaning when a delegation from Congress went to Kansas City to tour the USDA's warehouses. Media camera crews were barred from photographing the stockpiles. "Our government," said Rep. Mary Rose Oaker (D-Ohio) "didn't want the public to see the 700 million pounds of stored food, while we have 20 million people going to bed hungry every night."

The poor are no longer invisible, only the food.

Red Cross seeks more blood donors

By Paula J. Finlay
Staff Writer

Response to the blood drive in the Student Center Wednesday was slow, and American Red Cross workers have asked for more donors.

Thursday is the second day of the two-day drive. Staff members from the Red Cross' St. Louis blood bank will take donations between 11 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Thursday.

Only 60 pints of blood had been donated by 1 p.m. Wednesday, far short of the 225 pints the Red Cross had hoped for as the day's total.

"It's been a little slow. We're hoping for more," Bob Urvin of the Red Cross said.

Red Cross worker Ed Hellweg said they hoped to collect 250 pints Thursday.

Workers attribute the low number of donors to the limited number of students on campus during the summer semester.

away from the drive because they believe they could get Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome from donating blood, said Cheryl Carter, registered nurse supervising the drive. "Some of the recruiters in St. Louis have reported that some people are staying away because of the misconception of getting AIDS from donating blood," she said.

The Red Cross has issued an assurance that there is no danger of AIDS disease for either donors or recipients.

The federal government said Tuesday that it would provide the public and the medical community with up-to-date information on AIDS, through a toll-free hotline and two new publications.

The hotline will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. EDT daily. The number is 800-342-AIDS. Public Health Service employees will answer the calls and make referrals if necessary.

A leaflet called "FACTS on AIDS" may be obtained, free of charge, by writing to the Public Health Service, Office of Public Affairs, Room 721-H, 200 Independence Ave., S.W., Washington, D.C. 20201.

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome has affected more than 1,600 Americans and killed more than 600. Its principal victims are homosexual and bisexual men with multiple sex partners, intravenous drug abusers, recent Haitian emigrants and hemophiliacs. It leaves the body vulnerable to a variety of infections by destroying its ability to fight off disease.

Interns provide legal aid for elderly

By Belinda Edmondson
Staff Writer

Crystal Smith provides legal assistance, but she is not a lawyer. Her clients do not pay her—nor does anyone else. And don't try to set up an appointment with her, unless you are about 60 years old -- or at least 40.

It may sound a strange job, but not for a student intern at the SIU-C Legal Services for the Elderly.

"Actually, I am paid in a way," said the 25-year-old Smith. "As a graduate assistant, I get a tuition waiver for my work."

But Smith's real pay comes in the academic credits she receives for her services, which go toward her degree.

Legal Services for the Elderly is one of the clinical programs at the SIU-C School of Law. As part of their schooling, Smith and other interns provide legal assistance to needy senior citizens in the 13 southern counties of Illinois, under the supervision of an attorney.

Smith said that services are offered to anyone over the age of 40, but they give first priority to anyone who is over the age of 60 and indigent -- someone with an annual income of about $8000 to $9000.

However, she said, there are exceptions to the rule. If an applicant is 45 years old and handicapped, he or she has an equally good chance of being assisted.

The interns, who Smith described as working on an "ad hoc basis," work at the Carbondale Senior Citizens Center and see clients every other week.

Smith, a veteran of two years in the program, finds that the legal problems common for elderly people are matters involving social security, elderly abuse, real estate, civil services, guardianship and even divorce.

"The elderly are sometimes taken advantage of in these matters," Smith said.

However, Smith said that the majority of the cases that are brought to the program involve the making of wills. "That's our biggie," she said.

'Bearded wimps' support unit counsels men against violence

By Cynthia Rector
Staff Writer

It's hard for "masculine men" to identify with what they interpret as a "bunch of bearded wimps," said Lynne Price, in reference to a new Carbondale men's support group.

The group of "bearded wimps" will offer support and education to men who tend to behave or feel violently toward women, she said.

The idea for the local group came from Rape and Violence End Now, an outreach of the national organization, Brothers in Change, she said.

Price has been a volunteer with the Women's Center's Rape Action Committee for the past two and a half years. She's also recently become involved with Coalition for Safety, a new group concerned about the incidents of violent sexual attacks in Carbondale.

The Coalition, which now consists of men and women, has been organizing the support group. Soon, however, the responsibility for its operation will fall solely in the hands of male members.

Price believes many men who could possibly benefit from such a group are turned off at the onset by the stereotype that men who are involved in counseling and consciousness raising must be effeminate or overly sensitive.

She is very concerned that potential rapists, wife beaters or other kinds of abusers might want to get involved but might also feel excluded from such a program simply because they assume they won't fit into the meek image.

Price said that actually this work is not limited to any specific type of individual. She said there are plenty of "masculine" looking men involved in such work.

She said she's even seen a couple of Coalition for Safety's male counselors in the Recreation Center Weight Room, including the man she's seeing romantically.

Price believes the "bearded wimp" stereotype is used by insecure men. "Actually, the bearded wimps are the ones who are masculine enough to be gentle," she said.

"What has to be realized is that all men have some responsibility for the abuse of women, whether it's to control their own abusive tendencies or if it's to provide education," Price said.

This isn't to say that women aren't important in the process, she said. But as far as the men's support group is concerned it needs to be limited to men.

"Even those who do the dirty work, like typing or washing dishes after a potluck, should be men," she said.

"It's really important that the group is men helping men."

The support group will hold its second organizational meeting at noon Tuesday in the group room at Jackson County Mental Health Center, Carbondale.

Men interested in counseling are invited. Professional training isn't required, said Price, "just willingness."

Job training funds allocated

Jackson County has been allocated $358,228 in preliminary planning of Job Training Partnership Act programs which will replace the current Comprehensive Education and Training Act Oct. 1.

The Private Industry Council is responsible for distributing funds and determining policies for the job training programs. No decision has been made about the agencies that will receive the funds.

Boy in coma shows signs of improvement

CHICAGO (AP) — A 10-year-old South Side boy who has been comatose since a swimming accident in Georgia two weeks ago has been weaned off a respirator and appears to be making progress, hospital officials said Wednesday.

Officials at Wyler Children's Hospital said Anthony Williams remains in serious condition in a coma but is moving about and can now breathe on his own.

Dr. Peter Huttenlocher, a neurologist caring for the boy, said Anthony doesn't respond to anyone's voice but his increased movement appears to be a sign of improvement. He also said the extent of Anthony's brain damage is not known.

On Tuesday, Anthony was flown to Chicago from Atlanta, where he had been hospitalized since the June 22 accident. That trip, on a special pressurized plane, was financed by a fund-raising drive led by workers at Atlanta's Southwest Community Hospital.

Hospital workers there raised about $10,000, including $5,000 from an anonymous Atlanta woman whose child drowned.

Anthony has been unconscious since the accident. He and some of his 13 schoolmates on a band trip were swimming at an Atlanta motel, trying to see who could stay under water the longest. When Anthony failed to come up, a motel guest pulled him from the water.

Device to prevent explosions may have contributed to blast

POWERTON, Ill. (AP) — A coal-dust cleaning system designed to prevent explosions at the Commonwealth Edison Powerton Plant may have contributed to an explosion there Saturday.

"There may have been some association with the dust collection system," said Jim Toscas, a utility spokesman.

"It's too early. We haven't pinpointed an exact cause yet.

"But there's a lot of suspicion directed that way," he said.

Two explosions Saturday did extensive damage to the plant, which was crippled by a blast in October 1986, but there were no injuries. One blast was in the area of the collection system — a sort of central vacuum cleaner with tentacles reaching into different areas of the coal-burning plant.

Toscas said officials were not sure if that was the primary blast or a secondary explosion touched off by a first. He said a team of Commonwealth Edison investigators has been joined by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Acting OSHA area director Jack Janda said he has no idea what triggered the explosions, nor does he know how long the investigation will take.

A roof collapsed and, while one generator is believed damaged more than the other, both are out of service. Toscas said. Walls and siding were blown out and the main coal-carrying conveyor was also damaged.

Toscas said improvements — flame walls and automatic sprinklers — made to the plant after the $20 million blast in 1980 "cut our losses" this time. He added that an early damage estimate was about $1 million from Saturday's blast.

He said the plant may be out of service for a month, but there should be no interruption to Northern Illinois customers.

Stroke club provides therapy for stroke victims and family

By Lisa Maenzer
Student Writer

Victims of strokes have a friend in Carbondale. In fact, they have many friends whom they can turn to for help.

These friends make up the Stroke Club, a support group for stroke victims in Carbondale, according to Michael Crary, professor of communication disorders at SIU-C.

It is sponsored by the local chapter of the American Heart Association.

Crary said the Stroke Club, headed by president Arline Clemons of Carbondale, is made up of people who have had strokes or who are related to stroke victims. Its primary functions are to provide information to stroke victims and to help them in whatever way they can.

Stroke victims often have communication disorders, visual problems and physical paralysis. These handicaps make everyday living difficult to cope with, Clemons said.

The club meets on the third Wednesday of each month, except July, at the Carbondale Senior Citizens Center. Transportation is provided if members have no way to get there.

"Our meetings are basically group therapy sessions. We have some coffee and a rap session. During this time, the members really open up about their problems and how to deal with them," Clemons said.

"It's not a complaint session. We simply share our feelings with each other. Members are able to be open because they know the others have been through the same thing."

Clemons said that contrary to popular belief, stroke victims are not necessarily older people. Strokes may strike young people as well. She said that recently a 46-year-old man suffered a stroke and almost lost his speech. The disability is nominal, she said, but the man is involved in therapy.

About 20 members are actively participating in the program at this time, according to Clemons. There are no dues, but a small collection is taken up for a summer picnic and a Christmas party.

"We are a good support group," said Clemons. "We should have more publicity because I don't think enough people are aware of our program."

Crary said the Stroke Club is one of only two programs of its kind in Southern Illinois. The other is in Mount Vernon.

"Long-term rehabilitation is quite backward in Southern Illinois," Crary said. "This service is very beneficial to the community and the surrounding area. Some people go all the way to St. Louis for help and some just sit home and wait. I think more people and more physicians need to be made aware of the program."

Cherie Richardson, a doctoral student in communication disorders at SIU-C, is establishing a training group which will teach stroke victims to maximize their communication skills and enable them to function as normally as possible. The project has the support of the Senior Citizens Center and the local chapter of the American Heart Association.

Anyone interested in learning more about the Stroke Club may call the Carbondale Senior Citizens Center.

Fifty-five birds in a net are better than one in a jet

CHICAGO, AP — Fifty-five wild ones were rounded up by helicopter Wednesday, but they weren't mustangs — they were Giant Canada geese that have made aircraft pilots nervous by settling year-round at O'Hare International Airport.

Thought by naturalists to have become extinct by the mid-1940s, the birds have made such a comeback since their 1965 rediscovery near Rochester, Minn., that they are now an urban nuisance.

Weighing up to 20 pounds and known to fly more than 400 miles non-stop, the geese were rounded up by state and federal conservation officials from a comfy nesting ground at O'Hare lake — right "between two very heavily used runways," an airport official said.

"When you mix birds with jets, you have a potentially very serious problem," Robert Frink, assistant air traffic controller at O'Hare tower, said.

"One of those at 200- or 250 knots can put quite a hole in an airplane — and in addition to holes in windshields, there've been instances of jets crashing with birds getting sucked into the engine intake," Frink said.

"They call it flameout — the engine just quits." The Giant Canadas so enjoy the world's busiest airport and the metropolitan area that "they don't even migrate anymore," said Mark Tuttle, Illinois Department of Conservation spokesman.

They "adapted to urban living," Tuttle said. "They've no need to migrate because there's plenty of food, open water even in winter — with Lake Michigan nearby — and they never see a hunter's gun." Tuttle said the geese just pulled off the Mississippi Flyway, a sort of bird freeway between Canada and points south, and decided to stay. Thousands of the gray birds, adorned by a white cheek patch, make a permanent home in Illinois.

About 20 conservation officials took part in Operation Goose, a mere stone's throw away from crowded passenger terminals.

"We fly over the lake in a helicopter and just guide them over to the shoreline, where we have our people hidden in the grass," said Conservation Department photographer Ben Lenkart, 48.

"We put big screens around them and make a triangle with the birds in the middle. Then a guy goes in and takes them by the wings and grabs them in the middle of the back," he said.

"They're so big and strong, that's the only way you can hold them. And if they bite, they'll give you a welt that's unbelievable."

Sparks highlight of Springfield show

By T.E. Sparks
Entertainment Editor

It was "An Affair of the Heart" from the moment the black curtain which veiled the stage dropped to reveal Rick Springfield, astride a hydraulic riser above his drummer.

The crowd of 3,000-plus was comprised mostly of teenage girls who had come to see their idol, and as the opening bass line to his latest single began to throb, their screams rose with the level of the music.

Concert Review

Springfield, looking more like a biker than a teen idol, seemed to just eat up the adoration as he led his four-piece band through their paces.

But the event didn't start with the opening of the concert.

Since about 9 a.m. Tuesday, people had begun to line up outside the gates of the Du Quoin State Fairgrounds to get the best seats in the grandstand. Seating was general admission, something of a rarity since the tragedy at the Who concert in Cincinnati.

Around 3,000 tickets were sold in advance, but the crowd that showed up voiced their enthusiasm — screaming at the slightest glimpse of anyone backstage — even vaguely resembling Springfield.

Someone outside the grandstands was selling single roses — roses intended for the single purpose of throwing up onto the stage in the hopes that the bearer would be rewarded with a snit or a glance.

A girl even waved a pair of black panties around, on which she had pinned a note with her phone number written on it.

Those who had come for the music rather than just to get an in-person look at Springfield probably didn't go away disappointed either. Throughout the evening, he delivered songs from each of his more recent LPs in a manner that made them virtually indistinguishable from the studio versions.

In concert, Springfield comes off much as his music is classified on the radio — middle-of-the-road power pop.

All of this is not say Springfield wasn't good.

He played and sang almost perfectly and the audience responded to his every move. The band backing him played with a precision and tightness that many other groups would envy.

There were just few surprises in the relatively short show.

their mix of off-the-wall antics and European danceable pop.

The brothers, Russell and Ron, played up their contrasts in both looks and style as they treated the crowd to their humorous lyrics backed by effervescent hook-laden pop.

Especially well-received was the strip-tease of Ron Mael (to a sleeveless Tee shirt and boxer shorts). Most of the evening, Ron simply stood behind his synthesizer looking content while brother Russell sang, danced, leaped and generally put on a show.

The Rogues will bring their '50s and '60s brand of rock and roll to Turley Park as the fourth offering of the Sunset Concert Series sponsored by the Student Programming Council, the Student Center and the Carbondale Park District. The show is free.

The Rogues to revive early rock at Turley

The revivalist rock of The Rogues will roll through Turley Park at 8 p.m. Thursday.

Playing songs made famous by rock stars from the '50s and '60s, this quartet originated in Milwaukee. The band performs numbers by musicians such as The Beatles, Chuck Berry, Elvis Presley, Fats Domino, The Beach Boys, James Brown, Buddy Holly, and Tommy James & The Shondells.

The group is comprised of Don Garvin on bass guitar and vocals, Henry Ehler on lead guitar and vocals, Mike Nuffer on keyboards and sax, and Dan Allen on drums and vocals. All four are under 30 years old, yet cite people such as Buddy Holly, Chuck Berry, The Beatles and the Beach Boys as their major musical influences.

The concert is the fourth in the Sunset Series sponsored by the Student Programming Council, the Student Center and the Carbondale Park District. Rain location for The Rogues concert is Ballroom D of the Student Center. Turley Park is located on Route 13 near the Murdale Shopping Center.

Prof probes sports psychology

Bert Rosenc
Staff Writer

In sports, it is said that if an athlete has to think, he has lost competitive edge. Joel Thirer seeks to find the things that set an athlete's thinking.

Thirer, an associate professor of physical education, has been studying sports psychology. It is a relatively new field. It is a science that requires a great deal of research and analyzing, Thirer said.

"We're interested in enhancing motor performance," Thirer said. He is that through research. The research done is usually published in periodicals and the information is used by athletes and coaches to help gain an advantage over opponents.

For example, Thirer's main interest lies in aggression and violence in sports. His most recent research effort focuses in the effects of abusive spectators' behavior on performance of home and visiting intercollegiate basketball teams.

Thirer said he found that abusive spectator's behavior affects the home team more than the visiting team. Thirer said coaches might read this and change their teams' style of play to make the home crowd less abusive, therefore less harmful to his teams.

"Gathering the data really isn't that hard," Thirer said. "It's all the publishing backups that you run into that slow you down."

Thirer, 34, a native of New York City, was a psychology major as an undergraduate and an athlete. "It was a natural marriage for me," he said, describing his current research interest.

He earned a master's degree from Ithaca College in New York and a doctorate from Florida State University.

Thirer is now graduate coordinator, which he said is a very time-consuming task. "It takes away from doing as much research as I would like," Thirer said.

One of his goals as graduate coordinator, Thirer said, is to develop an internship program so that doctoral candidates could act as consultants for SIUC or other athletic teams in the area.

Thirer said that collegiate and professional teams want consultation, "but nobody wants to pay for it."

As a supplier of information to coaches, Thirer has a little better insight because of his experience as a coach. Thirer said he would stick to research of coaching rather than actively coaching a team, which he did while at Florida State. "It's not the life for me. I'm a devoted family man," he said.

Thirer has had articles published in national magazines like "Psychology Today" and "Sport" and received a degree of respect from his peers for his work, he said.

The articles were based on various sports psychology themes but Thirer said he is most interested in society's effect on sport. He is an active member of two professional sports psychology societies.

Pre-game pick — it's the NL again

From the Press Box

By Dan Devine
Sports Editor

By the time this goes into print and sees the light of day, the National League will again have proved — for the 20th time in the last 21 years — that it is the superior league.

Why bother indulging in any pre-game speculation about the game itself? Why compare Mike Schmidt to George Brett, or Manny Trillo to Steve Sax, or the National League hurlers to their AL counterparts? Why bother analyzing the lineups, the batting orders, the managers, the team benches, the managers, or anything about the game itself?

Without waiting for the game to end late Wednesday evening (long past the Daily Egyptian deadline) it says here that the National League has it all over the American League.

American League proponents dismiss that idea the same way they dismiss the National League's yearly victory at All-Star time. One game means nothing, they say. Maybe, but 19 games in '20 has to mean something.

Any mathematician would tell you that a streak like that could hardly be coincidental. And a baseball man might tell you that you could pit the Los Angeles Dodgers against the Minnesota Twins and still not get such a one-sided outcome.

It may be of course that the American League loses every year because its players come to sightsee and rest rather than play baseball, or it may be that the American Leaguers are simply psyched out by their annual loss.

Maybe the American Leaguers look at the All-Star break as simply time off — and just go about the business of waiting for the season to resume.

Waiting is an American League philosophy. Wait for the curveball, wait for the home run, wait for the starting pitcher to run out of gas.

In the other league — the better one — pitchers throw fastballs and hitters hit them. Baserunners steal, go the extra base, and occasionally get their uniforms dirty. And the manager has his bullpen on constant alert. After all, he has to do a little thinking.

In the American League, a manager can go for days without stirring. One year, Boston manager Don Zimmer pinch hit only nine times all season.

the high outfield grass.

There are more doubles and triples and stolen bases on artificial turf. The NL has its sluggers, but what it doesn't have any more are lead-footed .225-hitting infielders managing 12 home runs and calling it a good year.

The NL plays a faster, more aggressive, more dangerous game.

American League boosters may sneer about pool table baseball, but by bringing speed into baseball artificial turf has made the game more varied offensively.

The NL was superior in the 1960s because it tapped the supply of great black ballplayers first, using Willie Mays, Hank Aaron, Juan Marichal, Frank Robinson, Bob Gibson and company, to lead it to victories. During this decade they tapped the country's supply of pure speed before the American League.

There is a chance that the American League may have won last night. And if it did — well, so what. What does one game mean anyway.

The American League attitude is the Ted Simmons attitude. Who does the Milwaukee catcher think will win?

"We're all wonderful," said Simmons. "He who is most wonderful will win."

Okay, Ted.

Cincinnati catcher Johnny Bench epitomizes the National League attitude. For years Bench hit, drove in runs, headed a pitching staff, threw out baserunners, a more active job in the speedy NL, and generally showed himself to be one of the greatest catchers in major league history.

A few years ago though, Bench's skills began to deteriorate. Even moves to third base and first base couldn't hide the fact that it was time to retire.

So he did. He didn't trade himself to an American League team to spend the next five years in the comfortable designated hitter's rocking chair. Bench realized that if you can't play the entire game, why play it at all.

The designated hitter rule aside, the reason for the National League superiority lies in a distinctly untraditional NL innovation — namely, artificial turf.

There are six carpeted baseball fields in the NL, only four in the AL. And most of those are recent installations.

Artificial turf adds speed to the game. Baseball's present-day sprinters scumiliate on the bases and make breathtaking plays in the field.

Slow outfielders get embarrassed on ersatz grass. Cub fans remember Dave Kingman, Bobby Murcer and Scot Thompson chasing balls hit into the gaps at the Astrodome. In Chicago that trio was saved by Women gymnasts add vault champion

The SIU-C women's gymnastics team has added Jennifer Lynn Moore, an all-around gymnast who was Indiana High School State champion in 1982 and 1983. Moore signed a national letter of intent with SIU-C last month.

SIU-C head coach Herb Vogel said Moore will help plug holes at floor exercise and uneven bars as well as adding to present Saluki strength at vault and balance beam.

"Jennifer is extremely strong in both floor and bars, two events where we lacked strength and depth last season," said Vogel. "She can score 9.5 in beam and vault and that should make us very competitive next year."

Moore will be joining Jackie Ahr and Pam Turner, who led SIU-C to a Gateway Conference Invitational title and a berth in the NCAA division I regionals. The Salukis, winners of three national championships in the 1970s, will be trying to improve a 12-10 dual meet record. All nine members of a sophomore-laden squad return in 1984.

"Jennifer is a virtual unknown," said Vogel. "She is not burned-out on competition and has the personality and desire to fit into our team concept."

Moore, of Columbus, Ind., selected SIU-C over Oklahoma State, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan State, Indiana State and Northern Illinois.

Cubs pitcher Noles gets prison sentence

CINCINNATI (AP) — Chicago Cubs pitcher Dickie Noles was sentenced to 16 days in jail Wednesday after pleading no-contest to a charge of assaulting a police officer in Cincinnati.

Hamilton County Municipal Court Judge David Albanese ordered Noles to begin serving his sentence Wednesday night.

Noles, 26, pleaded no contest to assaulting a Cincinnati police officer outside a downtown bar April 9 following a Cubs' game against the Cincinnati Reds. Two additional charges of disorderly conduct while intoxicated and resisting arrest were dropped in exchange for the no-contest plea.

Cubs spokesman Alan

Friedman said the team would have no comment on the matter.

Albanese sentenced Noles to spend 180 days in jail, then suspended 150 days of the sentence. He gave Noles credit for 14 days he served in an alcohol rehabilitation program in Chicago and ordered him to serve the remaining 16 days starting Wednesday.

The judge also imposed a fine of $1,000, to be paid to a local knothole baseball association. Noles will be on probation for one year when he gets out of jail.

Noles' attorney had asked for sentencing to be delayed until the end of the season, but Albanese declined.

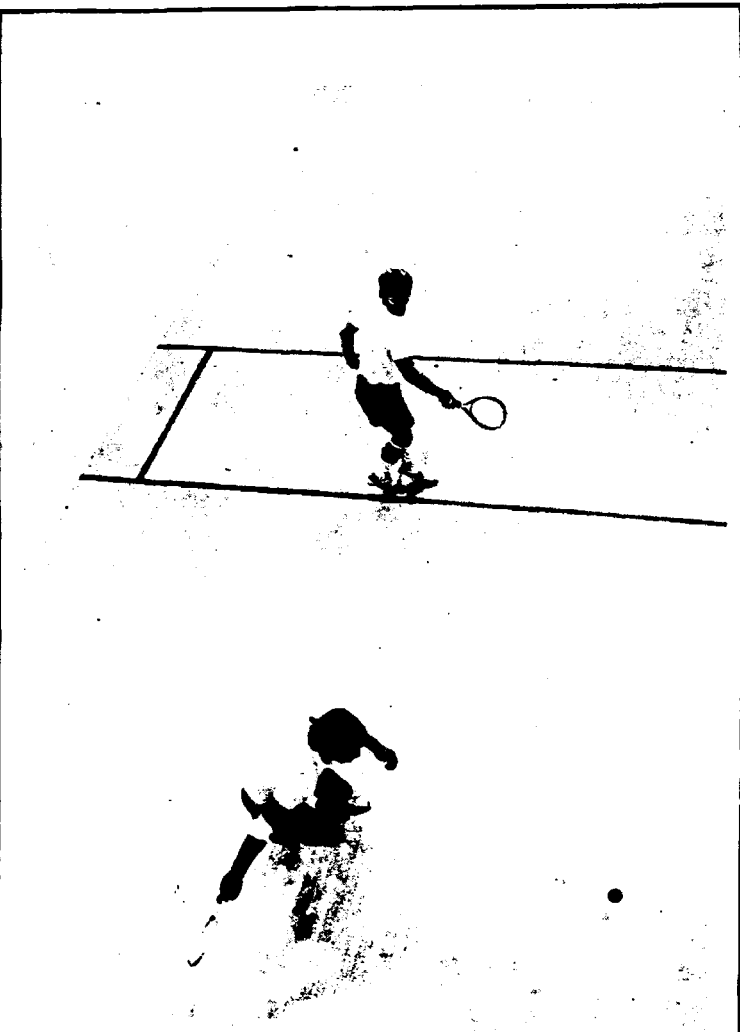

Phoenix cyclists stay successful

Led by veteran John Elgart the SIU-C Phoenix Cycling team continued to win this past week, gaining several high placings in races throughout the Midwest.

Elgart won the Leroy Criterium in Leroy, Ill., placed second and fifth at the Wisconsin Lowenbrau Series, and took fourth out of a hundred-man field at the St. Louis VP Fair Criterium.

Meanwhile, Leroy Elgart took third at Leroy, tenth in the Lowenbrau Series and 12th at St. Louis.

Another Phoenix rider, Curtis Martell, captured a fourth place in the men's second division race of the Champaign Criterium. Martell made his move with two laps to go and outspurred most of a 40-man field.

Intramural action

Said Abugharbieh, about to hit the ball, worked out at Rec Center racquetball court Tuesday after he won his scheduled game against Jerry Zang by forfeit. Intramural racquetball tournaments began Tuesday night with 30 players competing in five divisions. Of the nine opening night contests, three were played, three were rescheduled and three were forfeited. "That happens frequently," said Joyce Craven, intramural director.
