Resident returns to rid summer blues at Shryock

By Paul Eisenberg
Entertainment Reporter

Blues saxman A.C. Reed has played with world class musicians like Muddy Waters and Stevie Ray Vaughan, but when he lived in Carbondale in the 1940s, he had to travel to Cairo just to get a gig. "There was nothing in Carbondale back then — nothing," Reed said. "There was only one hotel in town and I think it got burned down. Now you got Holiday Inn and everything — everything's changed." Reed has played in Carbondale twice since he moved away and will return 7 tonight for the Sunset Concert on the steps of Shryock Auditorium. After Reed moved from Carbondale to Chicago in the 1950s, his name became known in blues circles. He eventually went on to play with many of the biggest names in the business, like blues legends Muddy Waters, Albert Collins and Buddy Guy. He said he got to play with the established acts of the time because he was one of the only saxophone players who could play blues. "Most of the other sax players did jazz or big band," he said. "I enjoyed playing the blues and I knew how to play it." While in Chicago, he played the local nightclub circuit and cut albums with Muddy Waters and many other popular acts. "I did three recordings with Muddy," Reed said. "Muddy was a nice fellow. Even then he was known as the 'godfather of the blues.'" In the late 1960s he started playing regularly with Buddy Guy and Junior Wells, a gig which allowed him to share the stage with old bluesmen and relative newcomers like Eric Clapton and the Rolling Stones. During the 1970s, he had a short stint with Son Seals before joining Albert Collins' band for five years and five albums. "Around 1980, Reed started his own band, the Sparkplugs, and began playing in Chicago nightclubs," Reed said. "I just got tired of backing people up," he said. Sparkplugs' guitarist Jerry DeMink said the blues Reed plays is the "real thing." "I've played with white blues bands on the East and West coasts, but this is the real stuff," he said. "But A.C. lived it and is still living on CONCERT, page 5
INDIAN REBELLION IN MEXICO COMES TO END

GUADALUPE TEPEYAC, Mexico—An Indian rebellion that captured the world’s attention six months ago here in southern Mexico appears to be in full retreat, mainly because of a government social-spending blitz aimed at weakening rebel influence by flooding the region with jobs.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari’s administration has set out to militarize the rebels politically and contain and discredit the Mexican army co-ralling them militarily, an official in Mexico City said. A government-declared cease-fire ended actual fighting in mid-January, with an official death toll of 150. The government’s three-pronged approach was designed to block any repeat of the Jan. 1 rebel seizure of four municipalities in Chiapas state, which embarrassed Salinas internationally and threw the nation into chaos just as Mexico was celebrating inauguration of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

GAY DOCTORS ASSOCIATION URGES ACTION

LOS ANGELES TIMES — As Dr. Katherine O’Hartan listened to her colleagues at a national meeting on breast cancer, she was surprised that no one mentioned lesbians.

The meeting, held by Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala, was focusing on minority women’s low access to cancer screening. African Americans, Latinos — each had poor mammography rates. But no one was mentioning gay women. Then O’Hartan took the floor. Lesbians, she pointed out, were the least likely to go for mammograms but, for reasons that are unclear, have among the highest rates of breast cancer. Several large upcoming studies, including the sweeping Women’s Health Initiative, will strain data by sexual orientation. The story illustrates one of many recent inroads that can be claimed by the nation’s predominant group of gay doctors — the American Association of Physicians for Human Rights — of which O’Hartan is president.

REPLACEMENT FOR AIDS DIRECTOR SOUGHT

WASHINGTON — The search is on for a replacement for AIDS policy director Kristine M. Grable. Word is the White House is in the process of finding a successor to a sad tale.

The administration is casting a wide net not for the usual suspect: someone of stature who can somehow command respect from the administration, Congress, the AIDS community, the National Institutes of Health, the Centers for Disease Control, the Food and Drug Administration, Oregon Gov. Barbara Roberts, D., not running for re-election, is being talked about as a possibility.

JOURNALISM FIASCO SEEN IN SIMPSON CASE

THE WASHINGTON POST — From buying information to embellishing a photograph to filling up hours of air time with idle chatter, the worst sins of American journalism seem to be on display in the O.J. Simpson saga. After all the excesses of the past year — over Heidi Fleiss, Michael Jackson, the Bobbitts, Tanya and Nancy, the Menendez brothers, Troopergate — this is the mega-story that dwarfs them all. But it is the errors, born of the inevitable rush to be first, to unearth some new tidbit, to milk those ever-present anonymous sources who may or may not know what they’re talking about, that have truly distinguished the Simpson coverage.

In today’s supercharged media universe, it takes only one out of information sleuthing across the sky brings a thousand journalists to keep repeating the pseudo-fact until it hardens into news. Yet 999 of these media accomplices have no way of knowing whether the latest hot allegation is true — and with disturbing frequency, it isn’t.

Painted exhibitions: Shows demonstrate talent

By Katarzyna T. Bukas
Associate Art Editor

An exhibition at the Associated Artists Gallery called "Text-Texture-Content" uses the printed word in order to express artistic thought, imagination and emotion.

Walking into the gallery, the viewer enters a piece called "Manifeste of the Art-Texture-Content".

There are graphically colored words immersed in frames that are splattered in colors that sing a song of their own.

One green word in this piece that springs to mind is "script", which is the array of sensory perceptions and pins and paws involved in each piece of the work in this time.

Kevin Boe, a senior in university studies from Evanston, said the show uses text as an image in fine art and written word.

"This theme has come out of a circle of discussions that has been going on for a year or so and which ultimately led up to this gallery opening which deals with these issues," Boe said.

The theme is "the eyes of every citizen: it's good to have the community involved," Prowell said.

The board has asked the community's help to keep the program going. Cash rewards come from money donated by local businesses and individuals.

Crime stoppers seek contributions

By Stephanie Moletti
Police Reporter

The program that has acquired information aiding in the investigations and arrests of murderers, thieves, drug dealers and other wanted persons is asking the public to help in financing.

Carbondale Crime Stoppers, Inc., has been operating since January 1993. In that time almost $3,000 in cash rewards have been given to anyone providing information.

Jim Prowell, president of the Crime Stoppers board of directors, said he helped with the organization of the program.

"The most important thing is that we cannot ask the organization to pay for the cost of everything," Prowell said. "(Fighting crime) is a joint effort on all our parts."

Frank Hunk is treasurer for the board and Joe Hughes is secretary.

Other board members include: Sharon Humes, Richard Johnston, Vicki Neville, Dennis Olson, Cleveland Matthews and Ron Manis.

The Crime Stoppers tip line allows callers to phone in anonymously and provide information about unsolved crimes, Prowell said. Investigators follow up on the tips and if the tip leads to an arrest the Crime Stoppers board of directors considers a fair cash reward to be given the caller.

The award is given to the caller through a blind fund so the caller's identity remains unknown in Crime Stoppers and the police.

"It's good to have the community involved," Prowell said.

Hating Hamlet

Play adds comic relief to old story

By Melissa Edwards
Special Assignment Reporter

How many times while sitting in high school English class did the thought cross your mind — "I Hate Hamlet"?

Sturdy Paul Rudnick shared this sentiment when he wrote the play "I Hate Hamlet," the second of three summer appointments of the actor, who was many works by Arvid, a SIUC university in his work. He said the board is asking for donations.

McGowan said she sells a variety of used furniture, from kitchen tables and chairs to couches and dressers.

"Any and only a lot more," McGowan said.

"I need to see what the city pays for this," she said.

Hating Hamlet is "a comedy that deals with hiking what you think you should want versus having what you really want," said Arvid, whose exhibit includes both paintings and sculptures, creates, work reflecting various styles, and subject matters, something he said he receives a lot of energy from.

"Because I know little or no consistency in my work people say 'You do this every year. don't that.'" he said. "I can't tell them what I'm doing because I don't know:"

Arvid said the painting, an expression of his anger with his acquaintance who seemed to criticize everything he painted, inspires controversy among people who see it.
Clinton should treat all refugees equally

PRESIDENT CLINTON'S ADMINISTRATION announced Tuesday that Haitians who flee their country by boat will not be allowed to seek asylum in the United States. If Haitians are judged to be political refugees, they will be sent to Panama, which is designated a safe haven. If not, they will be sent back to Haiti.

The latest in a policy change came after the U.S. Coast Guard intercepted 3,247 Haitians on 70 boats fleeing their country. Of those, 247 were packed into these small vessels risking their lives on the seas because May 8 Clinton announced that all Haitians designated as political refugees would be given asylum in the United States.

According to the policy, a person designated as a political refugee is one who has a well-founded fear of persecution. However, Clinton is sending the message that if you are a Haitian, your persecution must be a little bit greater to be granted political asylum.

Clinton needs to standardize the term political refugee to insure all refugees are judged equally.

Clinton had to change his policy because our country cannot deal with all the victims of impoverished Haitians. Refugees fleeing by boat have increased dramatically since Clinton decided the best way to topple Haiti's military dictatorship was to impose tougher economic sanctions.

ALL OF THIS LEADS ONE TO BELIEVE Clinton's handling of foreign policy, in terms of Haiti, is at best inconsistent. Haitians are not the only aliens to whom our country grants political asylum. Cubans, Nicaraguans and Panamanians are also given political asylum. However, there is a difference. For some reason, these other nationalities are not being proved to our government they have a well-founded fear of persecution.

If the Clinton Administration has discovered our country is not prepared to grant thousands of Haitians political asylum, then they should change our country's refugee and immigration policies for all aliens, not just Haitians. It is inconsistent and unfair to Haitians to be judged by a different standard than Haitians. If a malnourished Haitian found drowning in the ocean is not acting on a well-founded fear of persecution, then just who is?

But what do we do about the starving and sick Haitians we are turning away from our shores? Should we continue to ask other Caribbean countries to provide temporary safe havens while we wait for economic sanctions to work?

The reason given for interfering in Haitian government is simple. President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was popularly elected by the people, but was exiled by military leaders who now run the country in the form of a dictatorship.

By imposing economic sanctions, it is our government's hope that the handful of wealthy elite that live in Haiti will not allow the military to continue to rule. But the wealthy are leaving Haiti behind, which is exactly what our government will not let the mass of suffering poor Haitians do. If the United States political asylum laws are too lenient for Haitians, they are too lenient for all refugees.

Letters to the Editor

Definition of academic worker causes loss of unemployment

We are writing in response to the article on the summer employment of school employees published June 15th. As stated in your article, each year some employees of SIUC are laid off during the summer, as well as during school breaks.

You referred to these employees as "seasonal employees." They are not seasonal employees. They are merely laid off due to the University's failure to maintain services for SIUC students during the summer and break times.

Furthermore, these employees are not denied unemployment benefits because they are told, when they are hired, that they are seasonal employees ineligible for unemployment benefits.

The absurdity of the law is academic employees are not defined as employees involved in academics, such as instruction, research or administration, but employees who work during the academic school year. Even dietary employees, bus drivers, school aides and some janitors throughout Illinois have absolutely nothing to do with academia, they are classified as academic employees and are denied the right to receiving unemployment benefits.

This is why we are lobbying in support of House Bill 3131 which will correct the definition of an "academic" employee in the law.

The dietary employees at SIUC earn an average of $12,000 annually.

Mary Morgan, assistant director of housing for SIUC, made the ridiculous statement that all these employees need to do is plan ahead so that they can live on a $12,000 a year income.

Who can manage their expenses when five months out of the year they have zero income?

Other employers don't want to hire laid off SIUC employees during the summer because they know when school starts these employees will return to their jobs at SIUC.

Consequently, there are very few options for these employees as they are not eligible for unemployment, public aid, food stamps or, at this time, summer employment at the University.

We do not want a free ride.

We do not want sympathy.

We do want to make a fair and honest living so we can support our families and provide our children, with the same opportunities everyone wants for their children.

We appreciate all the support we have received from SIUC employees, students and the public in our efforts.

If you have not already done so, please contact your legislator today in support of House Bill 3131. Thank you.

Clinton needs reality check

I have chosen to speak out this week because I am outraged over the least recent from President Clinton for public dollars to finance his personal legal battles.

When Clinton drafted this propositional supplication for funds I thought of the hundreds of people in this area out of work, standing in those humiliating welfare lines. I thought of all the body,- self-esteem of hard working men and women who feel shame in asking for a modest couple hundred dollars a month to support their families.

Yet a man of such high status who commands the idea of morality, who symbolizes the ethics of loyalty and self determination can stand boldly before the American people and request charitable contributions to fund his legal fight against charges for which others have gone to prison.

I feel that President Clinton's request for contributions is completely inexplicable, but for those of you who plan to contribute, may we all wish to live to Europe.

We’re not just musicians playing a certain style of music, we live and play the blues.

Reed is currently touring the United States and Canada for what he said might be the last time.

I’m getting a little too old for this, he said.

He said he hopes to open a blues bar at a location he calls “food around” when he wants to not touring all over the country.

He also worked on an album which he hopes will be released by Polygram Records. His last album, released on Chicago blues label Alligator Records, and featured guest appearances by Bonnie Rain and Stevi Ray Vaughan.

Reed remembered doing shows to Austin Texas andicago. Over the old Vaughan in the front row begging to play with him. When Stevie Ray Vaughan and bluesman in his own right, he did not forget his roots.

As I was doing the album, he called me up and said that he had played 100 hours of studio time just to play on my album.

He has had his many years of singing and playing the blues, Reed has retained a sense of humor, as well as his original singing and playing style.

I would have been a boxer and made Rocky III. I would have been a star like Sylvester and Mr. T.

part of a process called productivity, Quality and Priority (POP) that is being used throughout the United States to cut down on unnecessary programs so the money from these programs can be reinvested in other areas.

The community development program was eliminated earlier this year and Bill Hall, Graduate and Professional Student Council representative from community development, said that it is a key program because it could have been saved for another program. He said the legislators have spent on the special budget sessions.

According to the SIU Productivity Report for fiscal year 1994-1995, a secretarial position in community development was cut to save the University $123,981.6.

Kyle Perkins, associate vice president for academic affairs-planning, said the report is produced every year to make the University accountable for how it spends and retains money to increase productivity in the programs.

Hall said arguments within the state legislature over the budget are shrinking money that could save a program like community development.

“This is a perfect example of how political gridlock affects citizens of Illinois,” Hall said. “At a time when the nation is in need of community development practitioners, the government in Springfield is spending $14,000 a day on political gridlock.”

According to the productivity report, the doctoral program in molecular science is also scheduled to be cut by the University another $20,094 for fiscal year 1994.

Gerard Smith, director of molecular science, said he does not favor the political process, but he thinks the legislature may be wasting money that could be spent to save academic programs.

“I think if the legislature is wasting money, it will be bad for the state as a whole,” Smith said.

“If the state does not fund higher education, it will always hurt the state in the long run.”

Smith, director of the Illinois Board of Higher Education, said the $14,377 spent at each special session is not a large sum of money when put into perspective with the proposed state budget of $31 billion with $252,800,000 going to SIU.

“State legislators have acted responsibly up to this point in time in trying to reach an agreement for the state budget. If this budget goes into effect, special sessions only cost about $14,000.”

Hodel said the primary concern of IBHE is that if the legislature does not agree on a budget by July 17, state employees, including state workers at SIUC, will not receive their paychecks.

Mike Bost, Republican candidate for state representative of the 115th District, said he feels each special session could be better used to save academic programs that have been cut.

“Yes, this money could be used for better things,” Bost said. “The budget proposal was introduced before June 30, but instead they (the state legislature) are playing politics, it’s costly and it’s ridiculous.”

The group insurorized members of their budget committees met at noon Friday 10 a.m. today to negotiate a new budget.

Mike Bost, R-Carbondale, who is running against Gerald Hawkins, D-Carbondale, state representative of the 115th district, held a news conference Wednesday at SRC in an effort to address the budget issue.

Bost said Hawkins’ decision to vote against Gov. Jim Edgar’s budget proposal July 3 was a “heartful one for Southern Illinois. Hawkins said the proposal would cut $4.5 billion in revenue for SIU, which Bost said is being jeopardized by the state.

Bost said many Republicans believe the state is voting against the proposal. Democrats maintain that Hawkins are voting against their constituents.

Hawkins said Republicans are making false accusations and are returning to certain tactics in an effort to discredit Democrats.

“That is political rhetoric,” he said.

Hawkins said the $4.5 million increase Bost refers to has never been at risk of being cut.

Mike Cys, spokesman for Bost, said Bost’s budget fails to pass, state Comptroller Dawn Clark Nettles will be forced to issue paychecks to state employees including about 500 SIU employees.

“They’re holding you hostage for whatever reason,” he said.

“You’re all in danger until an agreement is reached,” Cys said.

According to Cys, the refusal of democrats to agree to the proposed budget could lead to problems for hundreds of constituencies.

“By voting against this, Hawkins has endangered the pay of all 500 employees,” he said.

Hawkins said these accusations are baseless.

Currently, budget disagreements has yet to be settled, both sides will be spent on unpaid Medicaid bills and on increases in education spending.

Although Democrats want to see additional money put aside to pay delinquent Medicaid bills and improve primary and secondary education, Hawkins said no one has suggested this money come from SIUC.

Arvid said his piece "Aspergillum" shows the evolution of the moth world amongst the trees. The moth is a common and has a natural camouflage on the artwork, Siblik said. "The pieces of the show are arranged aesthetically — we spent a lot of time deciding where each work would go," she said.

"People should come to the gallery with a little sense of curiosity and not having to feel comfortable without having to rush through," she said. "If you come in and rush around, you are not going to have much of an experience."

Sun index, awareness keys to avoiding overexposure

The Baltimore Sun

Know your skin.

That’s the first step when determining how to use the information from the National Weather Service’s new ultraviolet radiation index, says Dr. Kenneth Judd, a dermatologist. The index is intended to help people avoid overexposure to thesun, which contributes 200,000 to 1 million new cases of skin cancer each year, according to the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

“The sun index is helpful,” says Judd, who’s on staff at the Greater Baltimore Medical Center. “But you need to know what type of skin you have and how to protect it by using a combination of common sense and sunscreens.

The index ranges from minimal to very high, and suggests the length of time—given different skin types—a person may stay in the sun before overexposure occurs.

For instance, a low index of 3-4 means fair-skinned people can spend 15 to 20 minutes in the sun without protection. People with darker skin can remain out for 75 to 90 minutes before facing sun damage. Parents need to take special note of how long their children are exposed, says Dr. Stephen Feldman, a Greater Baltimore Medical Center pediatrician.

“About 80 percent of all overexposure occurs before the age of 18,” Feldman says. “Why? Because kids are out in the sun for much of the time. People usually don’t think of kids playing baseball as something that can cause sunburn. But they age.”

Regardless of age, skin type or exposure, winter is more dangerous, particularly in certain times, says Dr. Rita Jampel, a Baltimore-area dermatologist.

“From about 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., the rays are most damaging,” she says, adding that the index can change throughout the day as the weather changes.

GI Joe celebrating 30 years

Los Angeles Times

Maybe it was the uniform. Maybe it was the way Joe could be carried. Or the battle scar across his battle-worn chest.

“When we were kids, we really got off on that stuff,” recalled Vincent Santelmo, 33, who received his first GI Joe at age 3 and now boasts of being the nation’s foremost authority on the miniature man of war. “It was the cool toy to own.”

But it was more than a toy. Joe, as his fans refer to him, symbolized the changing values of the time. He reflected 1950s patriotism and yet was the first doll for boys, a socially acceptable counterpart to Barbie. Joe allowed boys to clown over clothes. He allowed them to accessorize, even if it was with grenade launchers and daggers.

And this summer, Joe turns 30. A reissue of the original figure will arrive at stores in late August. At the same time, thousands of fans and collectors are expected to board the U.S. aircraft carrier Intrepid in New York Harbor for a weekend convention. Christie’s will mark the occasion with an auction of vintage Joe paraphernalia.

Santelmo, for his part, is finishing a comprehensive book on the anniversary. As author of a previous 450-page tome, “The Complete Encyclopedia to GI Joe” (Krause Publications, 1993), he believes that the occasion calls for reflection.

“Back then,” the New York City collector said, “there was this mystique about GI Joe.”

The mystique originated in Hollywood. In 1962, an independent toy designer approached Hasbro Inc. about producing a figure based on a television show called “The Lieutenant.” Hasbro balked at tying its fortunes to a show that could be canceled before the toy had a chance to become popular.

But company president Merrill Levine, liked the idea of a doll—something he and his top executive, a Korean War veteran named Don Levine, liked the idea of a doll—added. They used a wooden sculptor’s mannequin to develop an 11-inch prototype.

“The concept of doing a doll for boys in the early 1960s was a big risk,” said Kirk Bootz, a vice president at the Pawtucket, R.I., toy company. “What parent would let his son play with a doll?”

Hasbro executives insisted on calling their new toy an “action figure.”

They chose its name from the 1945 Yugoslav Meridian film, “The Story of G.I. Joe.” Accessories were designed with anxious fathers in mind.

“We had an engineer who would go to the National Guard armory here in Rhode Island and bring back weapons so they could be measured and duplicated,” Bootz said.

“One day he came up Route 95 with a hook and an M-16 in the trunk of his car and he got stopped for speeding. The cop never looked in the trunk. But the whole time, the engineer was sweating bullets. Literally.”

After all this, Hasbro still had to gird New York stores into giving the toy a seat run. GI Joe hit the shelves on Aug. 1, 1964, and sold out within a week.

When the father came around the corner, a man was stopped in front of his with his left hand down her pants.

The father yelled and chased the man, who went through the breezeway between Pulliam and Wesson and disappeared.

The incident is described as aggravated criminal sexual abuse.

There is no physical evidence. The suspect is a white male, 5 feet, 6 inches to 6 feet tall, between the ages of 20 and 24, with sandy brown hair.

He was last seen wearing a black tank top with the words L.A. Gear printed in gold on the front, black shorts and white tennis shoes.

WARREN, Mich.—By its very name, the General Motors Technical Center should be the model of a high-performance workplace, a place where skills equal job security. It is not.

After nearly a year of negotiations and a five-day strike, GM and the United Auto Workers union have agreed to a joint study of one of the most significant workplace issues facing the nation today: Can a worker acquire enough skills to achieve job security in a world of global competition?

The short-term answer at the tech center has been “no.” Last month, workers there went on strike to press GM’s promise of shifting highly skilled design jobs to lower-cost outside shops, where people work when they’re needed and generally don’t have benefits or job security.

The committee is seeking solutions that both workers and management can live with. Its job is to look at both the technical processes and the systems that GM uses to design its cars and trucks in an economy where ideas and parts come from around the globe and technological change is so rapid that expensive new equipment can become obsolete overnight.

LPGA golfer hit by stray bullet

SYLVANIA, Ohio—The red wound on the left side of Bethinda Mc., golfer Kim Williams' neck is no more than half an inch long. The purple bruise, the size of a fist and mostly hidden by her white blouse, spreads out toward her throat from just below her right collarbone.

These are the spots where a bullet sliced into her body Saturday night and where it remains today.

"I'm not afraid to beat the bushes, players point and a coaches point," some things over. I look at the store in Niles, Ohio, while playing under par and only two shots off the lead in Youngstown when play was suspended because of thunderstorms Saturday afternoon.

Williams said Tuesday at a news conference at the Ladies Professional Golf Association's Summer-travel Committee.

As a religious person, she said she feels lucky to be alive, to be able to walk, to be able to discuss playing in this week's $500,000 tour event, even though she is still sore from the shooting and weak from her medication that she hasn't tried one practice swing.

"I've never been out worked or out hustled by anyone," he said. "I have bills I have to pay, but I don't do it. It must be the pressure of this paper's boldness for World Cup because she is over half of what she needs to cover the game ticket.

CITY OF SYLVANIA, Ohio—The red wound on the left side of Bethinda Mc., golfer Kim Williams' neck is no more than half an inch long. The purple bruise, the size of a fist and mostly hidden by her white blouse, spreads out toward her throat from just below her right collarbone.

She's said doctors told her she could leave the bullet where it is, lodged against her esophagus, because it could cause more damage to take it out. She said she intends to play this week and where it remains today.

Williams, 31, was shot as she walked toward a Phar-Mor drug store in Niles, Ohio, while playing in the Toledo Classic last weekend.

Police originally believed they were investigating a drive-by shooting, but according to Holway Township Police a man has told authorities he might have shot Williams as he and a friend were target shooting on his property in Holway, Ohio, nine-tenths of a mile from the drug store. No arrest has been made.

"The caliber bullet that is in me (2 millimeters) is what he was shooting," Williams said.

In fact, Callahan said when he was hired for the job at Eastern, he moved to the Charleston area a month before the position took "My two biggest rules are to be years. to its first winning record in three seasons.

"I don't sense any problems under the new coach and Riggs resigned the position at mid-season and guided the Salukis to their first winning record in three years.

"I do not sense any problems (with keeping Henderson as coaching position)," Callahan said. "I think he and I need to go out and take some things over. I look at the situation as an asset more than a hindrance."

Callahan did not offer the names of candidates for the third coaching position, but said he does have three potential prospects in mind.

was great fun in a theme park at the post-Soccer's way of illustrating its way into the bloodstream they gave me.

And the game? I don't think so. I've never watched enough soccer to know what's going on. "I know it's pretty exciting," Williams said.

Callahan steps up to plate for SIUC

By Grant Deady
Sports Editor

The faces stop SIUC athletics continued to change Wednesday as Dan Callahan was named head coach of the Saluki baseball team after helping lead the Eastern Illinois program for the past six seasons.

Callahan joins first-year Saluki football coach Shawn Weaver to point two of SIUC's high profile athletic squads in a different direction this fall.

"I want to bring Saluki baseball back to respectability," Callahan said. "My goal is to bring things back to at, or near, the top."

The 35-year-old Callahan is a baseball journeyman who boasts experience ranging from being a pitcher in the San Diego Padres' system, Seattle Mariners organizations to assistant coaching for the Red Sox and A's in the Cape Cod Baseball League.

A native of Springfield, Ill., Callahan began his coaching career at Springfield Lanphier High School in 1982 after receiving his bachelor's degree in 1981 from Quincy College. In 1985, he joined the SIUC baseball program as a graduate assistant coach under Ichcy Jones while working towards a masters degree in educational administration.

After earning his M.S. in 1987, Callahan took over the Eastern position before being chosen from four finalists for the SIUC job.

"It is nice to be back," Callahan said. "I know that's sounding like a cliche accepting a job, but this time I really mean it. I was flattered to be one of the four finalists, but in this instance, second place was not what I wanted."

Callahan edged Saluki interim head coach Ken Henderson, John A. Logan's Jerry Halstead and Austin Peay State's Gary McClure for the position.

"I've never been out-worked or out-hustled by anyone. I'm not afraid to beat the bushes, make a home visit, go to a game or bring a kid on campus."

— Dan Callahan

Callahan edged Saluki interim head coach Ken Henderson, John A. Logan's Jerry Halstead and Austin Peay State's Gary McClure for the position.

SIUC Athletic Director Jim Hart said all four finalists were capable of getting the job done, but returning someone who helped SIUC win 112 games from 1985-1988 under the legendary coach Jones is a plus.

"We had a great search, from 50 or 60 applicants down to the final four," he said. "It was a difficult decision and we feel real fortunate and pleased to bring someone back who was here under Ichcy Jones."

Callahan said he learned more from Betsy in three years than any one person and returning to the Missouri Valley Conference will give him the opportunity to utilize the opportunities offered by the major collegiate program.

"When you talk about the MVC, you talk about the SEC and Pac10 conferences too," he said. "That's good baseball, that's big league baseball."

One of the first tasks facing Callahan will be to try and sign some of the blue-chip prospects that have yet to commit to a school. Recruiting, though, is something Callahan said he will not leave up to his assistant coaches alone.

Salukis gain experience at Festival

By Bill Kugelberg
Sports Reporter

A pair of SIUC athletes made their respective marks on the U.S. Olympic Festival recently while taking progressive steps toward being recognized at the international level of competition.

Rob Siracusano, 3-meter diver, and Christel Jefferson, women's basketball player, recently participated at the festival and despite being involved in a memorable athletic experience, their respective results were different.

Siracusano, who keeps taking gigantic steps toward a place on the 1996 Olympic diving team, won a bronze medal in the 3-meter competition with a score of 632.35.

The senior diver from East Meadow, N.Y., finished behind 1992 Olympian and 1991 World Champion Kent Ferguson, who won his second career Festival title, and Ken McMahon, who was a member of the 1994 U.S. Goodwill Games team.

Siracusano's next competition is July 13-17 at the Atlantic Trials at the Rec-Plex in St. Louis.

Unfortunately, Jefferson didn't fare as well as Siracusano. A member of the festival's North women's basketball team, her squad went 0-4 while Jefferson averaged 1.8 points a game.

Despite the team's finish, Jefferson said she learned from the experience.

"Playing in the festival will make me work harder when I come back and play at SIU," she said. "Because of the tough competition coming up, it will make me get better in my game."

While mostly a beach player in the tournament, Jefferson shot 3-for-10 from the field, including a 3-point basket, and averaged 14 minutes of playing time per game.

Jefferson's best game included six rebounds, two steals and five points.

She said playing with a team of different players will add another dimension to her ability.

"I was playing positions I am not used to playing. It will be great when I come back because I will be better," she said.

The North squad dropped its opening game, 76-67 to the South, and subsequent games, 99-86 to the East, 89-82 to the West and 92-89 against the East.

Jefferson became the sixth SIU women's basketball player to suit up for the Olympic Festival. During the '94 season, Jefferson started 11 of the last 12 games for the Salukis in place of Rockey Ransom, who suffered a knee injury in mid-season.

Jefferson, a junior, finished second on the Salukis team in assists, 59, and blocks, 14.

Fan knows what he likes, it's not soccer

By Steve Jacobson

I apologize. It must be my fault. Soccer is in the eye of the beholder, and I don't behold it.

I have been to the Museum of Modern Art and seen what has been identified as honest-to-goodness world-class art. There were these two parallel sticks—lengths of wood I might get at the lumberyard to build bookshelves or something. They were painted green—a very regular green. And if I was painting them I was painting them just like the uprights in my garage.

So I may not know art, I know what I like. And I am also supporting it. So who am I to tell them what's wrong with soccer? This is the world's game, the real sport of kings, and the World Cup is the world's greatest sports spectacle. OK, I won't begin to tell the world it's a mistake.

So I may not know soccer, I know what I like. And I like the world's favorite game except mine. I don't get it.

I have sat next to fellow Newsday reporter John Jeanousse in street level bleachers of a half-baked sun. I have enjoyed talking soccer with him over dinner. I have read the works of George Vecsey, who used to write this place. They like soccer, Jeanousse said I should have seen the RomaniaArgentina game; it was the best thing he'd ever seen. And he has seen stuff I really liked.

I have interviewed American players; they seem to be a decent lot, pretty much like players in any sport I've covered. They did a good job of establishing themselves as in the same league as the team of the game.

An official from Armenia told me that the visiting world will go home thinking America put on a wonderful Cup. None of that awful holier-than-thou, good hospitality, great competition.

For those people who like that sort of thing, it's been just the sort of thing they like. The Soccerfest surrounding the Rose Bowl...
