Board OKs law school tuition hikes

By Jerianne Kissel
and Theresa Livingston
Staff Writers

SIU-C law students who opposed a 51 percent tuition increase lost their case to the SIU Board of Trustees when it approved the increase Thursday.

Tuition rates for SIU-C's School of Law will rise 51 percent, or $33 against the government raise prices on Aug. 1. There were 12 abstentions.

The legislators ordered the Council of Ministers to submit a new proposal acceptable to the 15 republics.

In a vote on another aspect of economic reform plans, the parliament approved a law for a common tax rate of 45 percent for most state-owned businesses as well as the fledgling private and cooperative enterprises.

On the controversial bread price plan, however, the Supreme Soviet ended two days of fierce debate by voting 319 to 33 against letting the government raise prices on Aug. 1. There were 12 abstentions. The legislators ordered the Council of Ministers to submit a new proposal acceptable to the 15 republics.

In appearances before the Supreme Soviets, Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov had argued increased prices could cut down on the waste of bread and save scarce foreign currency spent on importing 42 million tons of grain per year.

Ryzhkov also said with a budget deficit estimated at $144 billion for 1990, the country can no longer afford subsidies that keep bread prices low.

The government wanted permission to triple bread prices that currently are so low at 40 cents a loaf that farmers feed bread to their cattle. In all, subsidizes food cost the government at least $160 billion annually.

The legislators rejected both the economic arguments and promises that those on fixed incomes would receive compensation for the increases.\n
"It is a defeat for the government and also for the Supreme Soviet," said legislator Alexander Kraiko. "Parliaments cannot shrink from difficult, unpopular decisions."

Vincent ready with two N.L. blueprints

CLEVELAND (UPI) - Baseball's rush toward expansion Thursday by releasing a timetable to place two new National League franchises on the field by 1993.

The committee will visit potential sites early in 1991 and then make its final recommendation for the two new sites by Sept. 30, 1991. A 16-player draft from NL clubs is expected to be held in 1992.

The Mets totalled 43 runs and 57 hits in the three games — all New York wins and all contributing to the Cubs' June swoon.

Jones at 10-1

Locked in at 10-1 for the last two games, the Cubs' left-handed pitcher has been the best in the majors with a 1.61 ERA this month with three saves.

"My hands aren't tied. I got pitches," Zimmer said after Wednesday's doubleheader loss to the Mets, about time some of them start getting somebody out.

Defensive star

Lefty canters the workhorse of the pen, has a 7.63 ERA, giving up 13 runs in 15 1-3 innings in six of 14 games. And he even played outfield, making two separate relief appearances in Wednesday's seventh inning of Game 1 Wednesday.

"That's the first game I've been embarrassed in baseball, the way I've used Lanzer," said Zimmer, who apologized to the right-hander.

"I don't want to be a big deal," said Locke, a native of Philadelphia,Pa., "I want to be the other pitchers, and I don't want to be treated any more or less."

Task

"I'm a coach. I don't want them to see me just as the lad," said Locke, 31, who was a star on Georgia's women's team in 1983.

"He talked to me, talked to me," said Locke's pitching coach when she received the offer to work on Pitino's coaching staff.

"It threw me," she said of the call from Kentucky. "I hope this works out, but I'm not sure if it does, that's great.

"The time Locke is on the proving ground in the National League is to learn the system, the way pitching is done."

"She will be involved in all phases of the game," Pitino said.

"She's the only one of all the coaching responsibilities that needs to do more for athletes beyond graduation," he said. "We would like to see them go on to situations where they can be happy and successful."

Summer camps in full gear

Roughly 270 youngsters from economically disadvantaged families from the exurban area of the Carbondale campus are attending a free, six-week summer camp on the SIU-C campus.

Supported by the NCAAs, the university and the community, the camp provides sports and recreation for children aged 10 to 16 in 10 different sports through the Carbondale Area Aid or the Department of Children's Rights.

The camp is open to anyone qualifying economically who live in the exurban area of Carbondale. The camp began June 11 and runs through July 14.

Activities offered include seminars on drug education, careers and nutrition along with sports ranging from badminton to swimming.

"They get a chance to do things they normally don't have," said Kathryn Hollister, director of intramural recreational sports.

The camp began in Carbondale two years ago and now can take in 300 campers living for free in Carbondale.

"It's been challenging to reach out and inform people out there," Hollister said, "particularly the rural makeup of the area as the main reason.

More participants will come into the camp as the word spreads, Hollister said.

Jones teaches tricks of his trade

By Tricia Lynch

The first step for any baseball player on his way to the big leagues is success in college.

Taking that step with SIU-C baseball coach Rich "Thee" Jones at Saluki Baseball Camp is reassuring.

Jones, a former minor league coach, has collected four Missouri Valley Conference Coach of the Year awards.

More than 70 Salukis signed professional baseball contracts, said Jones.

"They are the fundamentals of baseball at camp. The first session of the 18th

Military troops keep order after deadly demonstration

BUCHAREST, Romania (UPI) — The military clamped down on the Romanian capital Thursday with the help of government supporters, guarding the state television station and government offices against renewed protests by anti-communist demonstrators. The official news agency Rompres said four people died and 60 were hospitalized in fierce battles Wednesday and early Thursday between riot police, government supporters and the anti-government demonstrators in the bloodiest day of violence since the revolution that overthrew Nicolae Ceausescu.

Liberian negotiators report no progress

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (UPI) — The two sides in the Liberian civil war called for an end to the random killing of civilians as talks to find a solution went into their third day Thursday, with no news of progress. “Both sides strongly condemn the killing, harassment and destruction of property of innocent, unarmed civilians as such acts will not benefit either side, since there can be no winners in this fratricidal war,” a statement by Liberian government and guerrilla negotiators said.

FBI blames terrorists for bomb explosion

MIAMI (UPI) — A bomb exploded Thursday at the Cuban Museum of Arts and Culture causing extensive damage but no injuries, and the FBI said the attack was the latest in a series of terrorist bombings apparently committed by a group of anti-Castro militants. The museum, which has been at the center of a political controversy within Miami's Cuban community, was evacuated by the suspected explosion, which occurred at 1:09 a.m. EDT, said FBI special agent Paul Miller. The FBI classified the bombing as a terrorist act. Miller said no arrests have been made for the bombings.

Official says anti-drug effort shows impact

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A report that the price of cocaine is up shows that anti-drug efforts in this country and Latin America are having a “real impact,” drug policy chief William Bennett said Thursday. “We are beginning to have some very positive effects on the flow of cocaine — some real impact is occurring,” Bennett said following a report in The New York Times. Bennett, at a news conference with House Republicans to announce a new bill, said he could not “vouch” for the figures cited by the Times because he did not know what they were counting.

Budget constraints cause project freeze

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney extended a freeze Thursday on $7 billion worth of new military construction projects and was expected to make a decision next week on canceling a “substantial number” of projects. The project freeze had been scheduled to expire Friday. Cheney first imposed the project freeze Jan. 24, citing planned U.S. force changes and budget constraints.

Louisiana passes bill to outlaw abortion

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — The Louisiana House of Representatives voted Thursday to pass an bill that would outlaw all abortions in the state except where a mother's life is endangered by a continued pregnancy. The legislation now moves to the Senate, which is considered likely to pass it with little or no changes. It is unclear whether Gov. Buddy Roemer would sign the measure into law.

‘A Toby Show’ adds spice, magic to Cinderella tale

By Anns Feyman
Staff Writer

A fairy tale will spin its magic this weekend at The Stage Company Theater children's production of “A Toby Show,” based on the story of Cinderella.

The theater's fifth production for children is reminiscent of the traveling tent show theatres that were popular in the early part of the century.

The main character, Toby (Pete Houman) is an wise-cracking comic bop acting as storyteller and “fairy godfather.” He is a lovable character with his sloppy clothing, shock of red hair and engaging smile. He wears such down-home phrases as “hold your horses,” “dam soonin'” and “tuckered out.”

Cinderella, the unfortunate step-child, goes by the name Cindy. The cruel stepmother (Barbara Farris) forces Cindy (Jeanne Dorsett) to be the family servant. Toby describes the stepmother as being so rich she has a dentist for every tooth.

The family name is Van Underquire. During the play the name is misspoken and becomes Van Underground.

Instead of the prince making his grand appearance on a white horse, he arrives via airplane, but because he is dressed in goggles and flying gear, he is not recognized by the Van Underquire daughters. Unfortunately, he is mistaken for the handyman.

He is forced to help Cindy in the kitchen where he becomes smitten with her beauty and charm. But in order to inherit his fortune, the prince must marry one of the Van Underquire daughters.

Director Jo Ann Hensley, who also directed the first Stage Company production for children, “Bumpetitskin,” said there is a difference in directing a play for children than one for adults.

“The most important thing to remember and be tuned in is the kids like.”

Much has changed since Hensley's first children's production. In the beginning, the company was directed for costumers and paint over old sets. This year, however, Archibald McLeod, who produced the SIU-C Theatre Department for years, designed the contrasting red and white set which illustrates both the tent and living room.

The play is broken up with the addition of old, variety numbers performed between acts. A barber shop quartet, a tap dancer, a keyboard solo and magicians add additional entertainment.

“A Toby Show” will be performed Friday at 7 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday at 2 and 7 p.m. All seats are reserved and cost $2.

Mother's dream of a degree becomes reality

By Karen Radius
Staff Writer

A May graduate on SIU-C has more to boast about than a civil engineering degree.

Shirley Rehana, 46, attended her graduation ceremony May 12, with her husband, mother, and six children.

This was not Rehana's first time on the SIU campus; she majored in chemistry and played alto saxophone in the Marching Salukis Band while at the University 30 years ago.

She postponed her education to get married and have a family. In 1977, she started working full-time at a dress factory to assist the family income. She was a dress inspector for three years, but always knew she was capable of more.

"I knew I had the ability to do something else," she said.

In 1980, she enrolled at John A. Logan College in Carterville as a part-time student. She continually made education a larger priority in her life.

"All six of my kids were between kindergarten and high school when I started back to school," she said.

Her academics continued, but slowly because family was always the highest priority. However, after five years of part-time schooling, Rehana took on an even tougher challenge. She quit working full-time and became a full-time student. She declared pre-engineering as her major.

"I eliminated the careers that didn't interest me and that was what was left," she said.

The Illinois Department of Transportation in Carbondale hired Rehana for 4 summers as a student engineer after she received an associate degree in the spring of 1986. For two of those summers, she worked outside in field construction. She inspected road-building projects and helped design plans for highways.

In the interim, she enrolled, for the second time, at SIU-C. As a result of working for IDOT, she chose civil engineering as her discipline.

Unlike some other non-traditional students, Rehana said she felt comfortable at SIU-C.

However, being a non-traditional student did not affect Rehana's goals. She said everyone in her classes was very nice.

Even with a rigorous class schedule, Rehana did not allow her scholastic career to become all work and no play.

"I took music, horseback riding and swimming for fun. You need a balance," she said.

Rehana has since moved from being a student engineer to working for IDOT as a professional civil engineer, since January.

911 emergency line worth every penny

A CHILD is alone with an elderly relative or a young friend. Tragedy strikes through a heart attack, a stroke or another unexpected illness. The victim has little chance of survival if proper care is not given within minutes.

The young child—or anyone faced with a life or death situation—knows what to do in an emergency, hopes it is not far away. Jackson County, however, lacks the system to provide the simple yet very important 911 emergency telephone system. County officials are as near as they have ever been to installing the much-needed service.

AN ALABAMA firm and Jackson County have entered into a contract so that 911 service will be provided if county residents vote to approve in a November referendum. This service is needed. It is a shame the University has its own 911 system and county residents faced with emergencies must rely on either very good memorization or strategically placed emergency phone numbers.

The Jackson County Board ad hoc committee considering the system has noted that county residents might not approve the system if it has a $2 a month surcharge for each telephone. Hambric & Associates, the Alabama firm recommended by the committee, has not yet determined a cost for each line but estimate the system could be installed for less than $1.50 a month.

FOR PEACE of mind and the important safety factor 911 systems provide, $2 is a small price to pay.

Traditionally, this country has devoted tax dollars for services that may not directly help every member of society. For instance, taxpayers—who or not they have children—pay for the public education of this nation’s hope for the future.

Shouldn’t tax dollars be spent for the local safety of citizens? Though Jackson County residents have not been exposed to tragic stories of people dying when it could have been prevented, a 911 system was available, a need exists. No one should have to die in their home when help can be only three digits away.

Political liberty brings economic risks

By Guy Wright
San Francisco Examiner

After his rock star reception here, Comrade Gorbachev went home to bash reality—empty store shelves, ethnic riots and an inept trying to tear itself apart along its dotted lines.

He took nothing tangible with him, just President Bush’s promise to be helpful.

Bush was being prudent. This is no time to go home. But it’s also no time to over-commit. Conditions in the Soviet Union are too uncertain.

Widening the scope to include Eastern Europe, the timing of our help is all-important. If we rush in too soon, we may find ourselves backing the wrong horse. If we wait too long, inflation euphoria may give way to pocketbook despair.

When the Berlin Wall came down, most of us didn’t realize how much Wall it would be for communist nations to switch to free enterprise. There is no manual of instructions. It hasn’t been done before.

Millions who grew up in welfare states still do not realize that with political liberty comes economic rocking.

Seeing that Gorbachev scrapped plans for similar shock treatment and opted for slower change. Even so, bread prices in Russia are due to triple at the end of this month. Smaller floats have ignited rebellions.

With a higher price for bread, eventually it will occur to someone to open a bakery, and in that way, abundance will gradually replace scarcity. But in nations with little memory of private enterprise, that process will take a long time.

Meanwhile, there is likely to be economic hardship in Eastern Europe. Until private production goes rolling, prices will rise faster than wages. And the closure of inefficient government factories will put thousands out of work—this in nations that avoided unemployment by hiring three men to do the job of one.

The situation will be ripe for soap-box charlatans who claim to have all the answers. And it wouldn’t be the first time that Europeans have traded their freedom for empty promises.

There is also a different kind of danger. Right now Eastern Europe is being overrun by western businessmen with blank contracts at the ready. They fill the benches in major cities; travel experts are advising tourists to stay away this summer.

Among them are non scoundrels for factory sites in a vast pool of cheap labor. The re-emerging nations of that region can benefit from new industries. But there is a danger that they may be turned into corporate colonies by giant conglomerates based in the United States, Japan and Western Europe.

Given these concerns, what should this country do? We no longer have unlimited foreign aid to give, and most of it is spoken for. The Israeli lobby howled when Sen. Bob Dole suggested shifting just 5 percent of Israel’s aid package to Europe.

President Bush has proposed a Citizens Democracy Corps to go over and advise on how self-governments and free enterprise work here. So far, that idea hasn’t caught fire, and maybe it’s just as well.

Whatever form of government and economic system the East Europeans choose it should grow out of their own culture, not a Yankee blueprint.

A world economic summit is scheduled to convene in Houston next month. Maybe the experts will have some answers.

Strawberries

You pick 'em; you eat 'em

Bad strawberry picking weather and a bumper crop of berries this season left Blue Berry Hill farmers in a jam.

Strawberry season at the Blue Berry Hill Farm in Cobden reached its peak around Memorial Day weekend, but because of the poor weather many farmers did not come out to pick. By then, the weather became nice, the berries were frozen or overripe, said owner Charles Stadelbacher.

"A lot went to waste because of the rain," he said.

March and April brought rain and freezing temperatures, causing berries to freeze while still in the Cool Blueberry field hinder the picking season, he said. Despite the weather, strawberries still proved to be a good crop.

"We had a right good season considering the weather," he said.

The strawberry season has officially come to an end, but the Blue Berry Hill Farm is open for picking on a day-to-day bases.

"We are in the patch, see what you can get," Stadelbacher said. "There's still some berries left here. You just have to work a whole lot harder," he said.

Terry Orzechowski and his daughter Gloria Orzechowski, 7, of Meisha pick some of the last strawberries left in Cobden before the season comes to an end. Above, Richard Petty of Cobden takes a break from marking the best spots for picking in the strawberry fields. Right.

Supreme Court upholds use of sobriety test checkpoints

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court, finding local efforts to combat drunken driving a Thursday upheld 6-3 the constitutionality of sobriety checkpoints.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist, ruling; in a Michigan case, balanced the goals of the widely used tactic against the impact on motorists of police checks and concluded the stops do not violate the Constitution’s ban against unreasonable search and seizure.

Rehnquist noted the “magnitude of the drunken driving problem” and said that reports of “death and devastation on the nation’s roads are legion.”

“Conversely, the weight bearing on the other side—the measure of the intrusion on motorists stopped briefly at sobriety checkpoints—is slight,” he wrote.

Rehnquist said there is little concern that the stops will “generate fear and surprise” among motorists.

“The ‘fear and surprise’ to be considered are not the natural fear of one who has been drinking over the prospect of being stopped at a sobriety checkpoint, but, rather, the fear and surprise engendered in law-abiding motorists by the nature of the stop,” he said.

Rehnquist was joined in his ruling by Justices Byron White, Sandra Day O’Connor, Antonin Scalia and Anthony Kennedy.

“I do not dispute the immense social cost caused by drunken drivers, nor do I slight the government’s efforts to prevent such a tragic loss,” he wrote. “Indeed, I would hazard a guess that today’s opinion will be received favorably by a majority of our society, who would willingly suffer the minimal intrusion of a sobriety checkpoint stop in order to prevent drunken driving.”

Michigan Attorney General Frank Kelley said he is pleased with the ruling to uphold his state’s right to operate sobriety checkpoints on its roads and highways.

Congress may order apology

By Kitty Dumas
Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — For the second time in two years, Congress may order an official apology and restitution to thousands of U.S. citizens for wrongs done them in wars hot and cold.

In 1988, Congress approved an apology and $1.25 billion in reparations to Japanese-Americans who were forced from their homes and interned during World War II.

Now, lawmakers are weighing similar redress for victims of radiation-related illnesses who lived downwind of the open air nuclear tests conducted in Nevada in the 1950s and 60s, or who worked in the uranium mines of the West from 1941-71, gouging out raw nuclear material.

“President Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev have declared the Cold War over,” said Rep. Wayne Owens, D-Utah. “I don’t believe that it can be over until we have paid the debts to the civilian victims of that insidious, undeclared war, people who were unknowingly conscripted and who gave the ultimate for our national security.”

Fatal accident in Illinois
leads to investigation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A consumer group Thursday asked the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, a federal agency, to investigate Ford Aerostar minivans after an Aerostar accident last weekend left two dead in Illinois.

The Center for Auto Safety said the Nokomis, Ill., wreck, and a death of a 57-year-old woman and a 17-month-old infant “were the result of ‘classic’ sudden acceleration,” in a letter from Douglas Nelson of the watchdog group to Michael Brownlee, director of NHTSA’s defects investigation office.

“The Aerostar has had some reported incidents of that,” Nelson said. “It’s obviously not the fault of the owner.”

Authorities Thursday examined the mini-van with representatives of the Ford Motor Co., the driver’s insurance company, Country Casualty and a St. Louis, Mo., firm specializing in accident reconstructions, acting Nokomis police Chief Pat Carter said.

The driver, Ruth Yarbrough, 73, of Nokomis was driving her husband’s 6-month-old Aerostar mini-van when it slammed into a picnic pavilion Sunday at Nokomis Memorial Park, claiming lives and leaving the driver and five others injured.

Flag controversy rages on hill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress used Flag Day to open an election year debate on a constitutional amendment to bar flag desecration with charges that Republicans are politicizing patriotism.

But House and Senate Republicans, joined by a few Democrats for press conferences, rallied on both sides of Capitol Hill, proclaiming a debate on cultural values prompted by an overwhelming need to protect the national symbol from burning, which the Supreme Court has decided is constitutionally protected.

The exchange of rhetoric—both political and substantive—was preliminary to the battle that will be fought out on the floor of the House and Senate, where supporters must muster a two-thirds vote before the amendment can go to the states. Thirty-eight states must ratify it for the simple 20-word amendment to be added to the Constitution as the 27th amendment.

Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas argued that burning in World War II, who angered Democrats Wednesday by saying 30-second campaign commercials against amendment opponents could be effective. He defended his remarks Thursday, telling a crowd outside the Capitol that "we're not looking to do anything for anyone.

We believe this is the right way to go. We tried a statute and it didn't work."

House Republican leader Newt Gingrich of Georgia, who was joined by a House and Senate group of several Republicans, veterans groups and a member of the Republican National Committee, told reporters that "for those of you who believe that our friends on the left are pained about free speech, this is a debate about cultural values."

There are Democrats and Republicans on both sides of the issue, but the partisan rhetoric has come with the promises of Republicans to turn the matter into a major campaign issue. Sen. Robert Kerrey, D-Neb., a Vietnam War veteran who was awarded the Medal of Honor, accused President Bush in an emotional speech of using the American flag as a "political tool" and of trying to divide the country.

At the White House, Bush declined to be drawn into commenting on Kerrey's address. Rep. Lane Evans, D-Ill., who enlisted in the Marine Corps at the age of 17 during the height of the Vietnam War, said the flag "represents the freedoms embodied in the Bill of Rights. But ship away at the Bill of Rights and we ship away at those freedoms."

Flag protection differs throughout the world

United Press International

To burn an Iranian flag is to desecrate the name of Allah and the punishment would be along the lines faced by Andrew Rudolph. While in Italy it's legal to burn a flag but against the law to insult a head of state.

If the United States were to adopt a constitutional amendment banning the desecration of the Stars and Stripes, it would be joining company with a number of countries from the Soviet Union to South Africa that have similar laws, according to an informal poll conducted Thursday by United Press International correspondents around the world.

But there are many other nations that have no laws against burning the flag, and other countries with laws on the books that don't entail punishment.

"There is no offense to damaging it in any way," a Home Office spokesman in London said of Great Britain's distinctive red, white and blue Union Jack. The same goes for Australia's modified Union Jack, according to officials there.

Japan also has no law against desecrating its white and red flag that depicts the rising sun, although when a flag was burned recently in Okinawa the suspect was charged with destroying public property.

In other countries, flag burners face more serious consequences. A number of fundamentalists in Iran have burned American flags to protest the United States, but dissidents who oppose the ruling clergy have never been known to burn Iran's green and orange flag, which contains the name of God, or Allah. To do so would be blasphemy, the same charge leveled against Rudolph when he was sentenced to death by assassination for his novel "Satanic Verses."

Libya doesn't have a law against burning its simple green flag, or laws against anything for that matter. "The problem with Libya is that there are no written laws or lawyers but the so-called popular committee would immediately sentence to death anyone found guilty of burning the Libyan flag," said an expert well connected with the North African country.

The Soviet Union and most East European countries have laws that require two to four year prison sentences for flag desecration, although authorities in East Europe turned a blind eye when pro-democracy demonstrators cut the communist symbol out of national flags waved during protests.

In East Germany, the people would dream of desecrating their flag these days—it's much too valuable. Souvenir hunters have been snatching up the banners.

Betsy Ross hounded by rumors

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Did Betsy Ross really live and work at 239 Arch Street? Are they really her bones buried in the courtyard?

Did she really stitch the first American flag?

As Americans celebrated Flag Day Thursday, controversy still dogs the former Philadelphia resident who school children remember as a patriotic seamstress.

"For some reason she gets a lot of knocks against her," said Bill Carr, assistant director of the Betsy Ross House. "I don't know why they pick on her. There's many historical stories that are questionable."

More than half a million tourists each year visit what they believe is the house that Rossrented in the city's historic district.

But she may actually have rented the adjacent row house that was torn down years ago. Carr said the two houses were virtually identical in construction and layout.
Exxon refinery fire causes increase in gasoline prices

United Press International

An Exxon Corp. refinery fire that will temporarily take about 4 million gallons a day out of the nation's gasoline supply sparked a rise in U.S. gasoline prices Thursday and helped drive down the price of U.S. crude oil.

The fire "seemed to be the impetus for the rise in gasoline prices," said a Tokyo dealer out of the market," said Bob Murphy, vice president of Sheraton Lehman Houston International Energy Desk in New York.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, July delivery unleaded gasoline contracts ended the day up 1.27 cents to 60.12 cents a gallon.

On the U.S. Gulf Coast cash market, promps delivery unleaded gasoline jumped 1.7 cents to 60.7 cents a gallon while gaining 1.5 cents on the New York Harbor spot market to 65.65 cents a gallon.

The benchmark West Texas Intermediate crude for July delivery ended the day on the Merc down 45 cents from Wednesday's close at $17.13 a barrel after trading as high as $17.92 a barrel.

Volume was a heavy 105,579 contracts.

Les Rogers, an Exxon U.S.A. spokesman in Houston, said a crude distillation unit handling 190,000 barrels per day of crude daily has been shut down as a result of a fire Wednesday night at the company's huge Baton Rouge, La., refinery.

"It should be back in operation in less than a week," Rogers said, adding about half the unit's crude is refined into gasoline.

The damaged facility is one of several distillation units at the refinery, which has an output of more than 400,000 barrels a day, the spokesman said.

When news of the Exxon shutdown hit, gasoline prices were already higher because of a strike at Brazil's state-owned Petrobras oil company called to protest a government plan to dismiss 354,000 public employees in budget cuts.

Petrobras refineries export gasoline chiefly to the United States.

Crude prices, which have been under heavy pressure as a result of the glut in world supplies, were apparently further hit by the Exxon news.

The loss of a 190,000-barrel-a-day outlet in a market already oversupplied with crude "didn't help," Murphy said.

"It may have been a coincidence, but crude prices, which were up earlier, moved down around the time news of the Exxon shutdown hit the market," Murphy said.

The global crude glut was further documented by European inventory figures compiled Thursday by Eurol and Sheranon Lehman Houston.

"They show current European crude stocks at 43 million barrels—"the highest since our records began," said Peter Gignoux of Shearson's London office.

On the U.S. Gulf Coast cash market, prompt delivery crude WTI rose fell 45 cents to $17.10 a barrel.

On the European spot market, Britain's widely traded North Sea Brent rose 14 cents to $16.09 a barrel.

The United Arab Emirates' Dubai light—the key OPEC crude from the Middle East shipped mainly to the Far East—gained 25 cents to $13.83 a barrel.

law school, borrowed money because he was certain as students pay it back," O'Brien said. "Even at the current levels, student loan debt isn't going to go back that far. People taking jobs in the area won't have the type of income necessary to pay back their student loans."

timber sale in the Fairview Church area in Jackson County. The area in question is a 661-acre tract.

Tom Hagerty, a spokesman for the U.S. Forest Service in Harrisburg, said the forest service was sued for an improper timber sale in the Fairview area in April.

"The finding was that the forest supervisor exercised proper discretion in allowing a fair commercial timber sale to proceed. We are taking 144 acres of trees in order to preserve the visual quality, not tearing the forest apart and turning it into something ugly," Hagerty said.

But, Joe , of one of RACE's founders claims that the forest service is not taking the trees for visual quality.

"Group selection is what they're 'using as an excuse to develop the technique that has written on the forest service's face that they're not doing group selection. It's a small patch clear cuts. Saying they're doing it for visual quality is just a joke," Glisson said.

RACE claims that the group selection process represents an illegal procedure that was not outlined in the National Environmental Policy Act. This is a law that requires land managers to account for the environmental effects that are expected from timber harvesting and devise ways to not cause drastic effects.

Hagerty said the forest went through all the necessary procedures required for the act.

"The timber sale was examined from every required angle and it did not satisfy RACE and hence their lawsuit. We're just glad we were upheld," Hagerty said.

Glisson and RACE, however, feel that the forestry service failed to regard certain subjects that needed to be taken into account. They don't have any idea what's out in the forest and they're required by law to protect certain species and count those species every year to be sure that they're protected. They've never done any of that," Glisson said.

RACE plans to appeal the decision. But the group claims that if the courts say the Forest Service must recognize the need for these measures. They do not have the funds to follow through with the decision.

representation in that election by a slim margin. They cast 125 votes for representation and 121 votes in favor of no representation.

The tally in that election was confirmed for the Supreme Court of Illinois and the Illinois Education Association (IEA-NEA).

Additionally, one vote cast in that election was uncounted for on the master list of eligible University employees who participated in the election.

Only 245 employees were marked as having voted for the 246 ballots received.

Robert Heflin, executive director of the IELRB, said both sides have 10 days to hold a re-election before any formal changes were filed.

William J. O'Brien, the University's executive director of personnel services, said, while he was pleased the "long, arduous process" is over with, he was "ecstatic" about the high percentage of voter turnout.

"The candidates who ran (for the election) aren't as important as the fact that people turned out to vote," Capie said. "We're extremely happy that they decide to let their opinions be heard. It indicates they take the matter seriously."

Many of the employees voted in this election than the previous one. In the May election, 78 percent of the 520 employees eligible voted in the election, while 85 percent took to the polls this time.

Capie said, while challenging accepted practices is healthy, the University must put the push for unionism merely pointed out the "sound, healthy relationship" between the staff and the University administration.

Still, a dominant theme of the day was whether the country should change the Constitution—limiting the Bill of Rights. In June, two Supreme Court rulings that said flag desecration was a protected form of free speech.

Bush, who has led the drive for the amendment and has been criticized for using the flag as a political weapon against Democrats, quietly and solemnly honored the flag at the black granite Vietnam Veterans' Memorial.

Arriving at 6:35 a.m. EDT, the president, uniformed Marines and National Park Service rangers replaced the memorial's flag with one Bush carried to the event from the White House.

But the president, who last year used the two jima monument as a backdrop when he began his push for the flag amendment, did not mention the constitutional change as he viewed the names of the 58,156 Americans lost in the Vietnam War.

A later Flag Day proclamation from Bush said the flag was "a symbol of the freedom with which we have been blessed; it is a banner we raise with a duty profound sense of pride and reverence."

In May, Justice John Butterbrook, pastor of the Northside Church of Christ, flew a large flag in the group's defense position to signify the danger he believed was facing the flag because of the Supreme Court rulings. "The flag is a symbol of all we hold dear," he said.

In Philadelphia, a Flag Day ceremony was held at the home of Betty Ross, who, according to legend more than fact, created the first flag. And in Cleveland, Ron Semen, organizer of the city's Flag Day ceremonies, vowed: "We will respect the law but we will not rest until we, through legal means, can protect the flag."

On Capitol Hill, the rhetoric was hot as lawmakers stayed locked in a politically tinged fight over the amendment.

Even with the increase, SIU's law school union will remain less than the current rates charged by law schools of similar character, such as that of the University of Illinois and Northern Illinois, Petit said.

O'Brien disagreed with Petit's comparison, citing urban placement opportunities for graduates of other state law schools.

The rate for full-time law students will climb from the present $921 per semester to $1,398 in August 1993. Out-of- state students will continue to pay three times the in-state rates.

Gabor drops cop-slapping appeal

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (UPI) — Zsa Zsa Gabor has decided to drop her appeal against arresting her for striking a motorcycle cop and will serve three days in jail, her lawyer said Thursday, the first anniversary of the slap heard around the world.

"She's planning to drop her appeal and will serve her 72-hour sentence within the month," attorney Paladino said Thursday. "She's just tired of it and as Zsa Zsa says, you can't fight city hall."

"In her heart, she's innocent. She just wants to end it and go on with her life and put it behind her.

Flag sales soar on 213th birthday of Stars, Stripes

United Press International

American flag sales soared on Flag Day, the 213th birthday of the Stars and Stripes, reflecting the public's emotional response to the issue of flag burning, industry leaders said Thursday.

Bob Rosenthal, president of Atlas Flags in Tucker, Ga., said 1990 "has been a monster year," with sales up almost 25 percent over last year.

Atlas manufactures and ships flags to dealers and individuals across the country, Rosenthal said. "From what I understand, around the country it's been the biggest flag year in the past 25 years," Rosenthal said.

"As people get a little older, they grow more patriotic," said Rosenthal. "Guys my age and older are getting more nostalgic about the flag."

Greg Wold, a flag dealer in Kansas City who is president of the National Independent Flag Dealers Association, said American flag sales have been up since the 1980s.

Wold said his 3-year-old association has about 70 members. "Everyone in general is seeing double-digit increases in sales," Wold said. "Sales have ranged from around 9 percent to 11 percent. The 1980s were the biggest decade in the history of the flag industry. There was just one event after another that pumped up patriotism. We've just had phenomenal sales for about the last 10 years."

"As best I can tell, everyone was outraged that the Constitution could be used to protect someone who was doing such a disgusting thing as burning an American flag," Wold said. "But when calmer heads prevailed. Now people realize that 99 percent of the American public loves the flag and shows their respect for it. It's only a small minority that want to burn it."

"Before it was kind of a negative reaction. People were buying flags to spite the burners. Now they're buying flags just to display it in a respectful manner."

Besides, 72 hours isn't going to kill her.

Paladino said Gabor, 72, a former Miss Hungary, still has to formally notify the Superior Court appellate division that she is dropping her appeal.

Gabor's lawyer, Harrison Bull, could not be reached. Deputy District Attorney Eden Fox, who prosecuted Gabor, said he welcomed the news and did not believe Gabor's appeal in City Hall had "any substance to it anyway."

After a celebrated three-week trial that attracted worldwide attention, Gabor was convicted last September of slapping Beverly Hills motorcycle officer Paul Kramer after he stopped her $110,000 Rolls-Royce Corniche for an expired registration tag on June 14, 1989.

Municipal Court Judge Charles Rubin sentenced Gabor to three days in jail, but allowed her to delay serving the jail term pending appeal. If Gabor does indeed drop her appeal, she will be allowed to serve her term in the jail of a local municipality rather than in her Harbison county facilities, Paladino said.

Atlanta (UPI) — A second AIDS patient Thursday underwent a controversial blood-heating treatment amid skepticism about the procedure's validity.

The AIDS patient, identified only as a 38-year-old man named Tony from Chicago, began the two-hour procedure Thursday morning at Atlanta hospital officials said.

"The choice seemed rather simple to me. I had no other options available," the Chicago patient said during an interview with Atlanta hospital and AIDS researchers.

Meanwhile, Georgia health officials said they planned to revoke the hospital's license because of numerous violations, including several patient deaths, unrelated to the AIDS treatment.

A state health official said it is unlikely the hospital will be able to make necessary changes to keep the facility from being closed next month because of dozens of violations involving at least 20 patients. Eight of those patients died, although some were in advanced stages of cancer. It was unclear whether any of the eight suffered from AIDS.

The controversial AIDS procedure is called hyperthermia and has been studied as an experimental treatment for cancer.

With the patient under general anesthesia, the therapy circulates the blood through an apparatus similar to a dialysis machine and heats it from the normal 98.6 to 115 degrees. The blood is then funnelled back into the patient's body.

Catherine West, director of the University of Chicago's Center for AIDS research, said the procedure had been free of AIDS virus since the procedure, and he said his cancer "virtually disappeared." When the procedure was performed on Crawford, the heated blood passing back into his body caused his temperature to rise to 108 degrees, Alonso said.

"As a scientist, I have to be skeptical until we see more cases in the literature," said Dr. Harold Katzen, chief of infectious diseases at Atlanta's Mercer University School of Medicine. "But we want to be hopeful. I pray that what is being done is working because right now we have no potential cure.

After Crawford was treated, Mathilde Krim, a virologist and co-founder of the American Foundation for AIDS Research, said she was encouraged by the result, but 'believed the virus was only suppressed, not eliminated.'

Crawford, who was first diagnosed as having AIDS in October 1989, tested negative for the AIDS virus a week after the hyperthermia and said his blood remains AIDS-free three months later, doctors said.

"His sarcoma shrunk and as a byproduct, the HIV (AIDS virus) viral culture has been negative for three months," Alonso had said.

But Alonso stressed it was too early to fully evaluate the effectiveness of the therapy. Tests of Crawford's spinal fluid and a lack of AIDS symptoms that commonly afflict the brain, such as dementia, indicated the virus was not lurking in brain tissue, he said. But no tests have been conducted to determine if the virus remains in Crawford's bone marrow.

High school students at risk for AIDS virus - CDC survey

Atlanta (UPI) — Many high school students are at risk of contracting AIDS, as a result of having sex with multiple partners and using intravenous drugs, a government survey said Thursday.

Forty-nine percent of students administered at secondary schools nationwide last year showed that between 7 percent and 40 percent of the students in each sample indicated they are sexually active, according to a survey conducted by theCenters for Disease Control at the lowest prices

1989 study was a compilation of questionnaires administered to between 303 and 10,279 students aged 14-17 at each of 30 states, 10 cities and two U.S. territories between February and May 1989.

The report did not supply the raw numbers of students who indicated they are sexually active in the risk behaviors for contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Government officials, however, said the behavior is common enough to warrant a warning that high school students are putting themselves at risk for contracting the AIDS-causing human immune deficiency virus or HIV.

"We consider this the most important part of the article is that it provides evidence that a large number of high school students in states and cities throughout the nation—and not just in the high-risk urban areas—are at risk for HIV infection because they have sexual intercourse, particularly those having sex with multiple partners," said Laura Ramey, the CDC researcher and report author.

The surveys also were used to determine students' knowledge about transmission of AIDS.

Between 32 percent and 75 percent of the samples knew HIV cannot be transmitted by donating blood. Between 22 percent and 67 percent knew AIDS cannot be transmitted by kissing, sharing toilet items, or insect bites, and between 44 percent and 55 percent knew it is transmitted through shared needles.

Most students—93 percent to 99 percent—knew AIDS virus can be transmitted by sharing needles to inject drugs. Between 74 percent and 92 percent of the students knew the virus can be transmitted by having sexual intercourse without a condom.
WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States is sending a forensic expert to Malaysia to examine seven barrels of bones that Vietnamese boat refugees claim are the remains of some 30 American soldiers, the Pentagon said Thursday.

"The remains are now in the custody of the U.S. Embassy in Kuala Lumpur," said a Pentagon spokesman, Lt. Cmdr. Edward Landquist. "We will conduct a preliminary examination of these remains in Malaysia.

"If warranted," he said, "any or all remains will be brought to the U.S. Army’s Central Identification Laboratory in Hoholulu for further analysis.

A forensic expert from that laboratory was being sent to Malaysia for the preliminary examination, he said.

A boat carrying nine Vietnamese refugees who left their homeland May 30 was discovered earlier this week on a beach at Kota Tinggi, in the southern state of Johor, Malaya, with a leak.

Aboard the boat were seven barrels of bones that the refugees claimed were the remains of U.S. servicemen from the Vietnam War. The 52-foot-long vessel had "USA remains in my boat" and "This boat has USA army remains" written across the sides, said Malaysian Deputy Police Superintendent Roshan Dahlan.

In addition, the refugees turned over U.S. military identification "dog tags" that they said belonged to the remains.

"We received 27 dog tags and one piece of paper with dog-tag information," Landquist said. "A preliminary review indicates that none of these 28 names were those of missing Americans."

He said the tags were probably lost by American soldiers during the war.

Alcohol ban at World Cup

ROME (UPI) — A World Cup alcohol ban, inspired by fears of soccer rowdies invading restaurants and taverns, was enforced by the establishments dry, putting the focus on the Italian dining experience.

Cagliari, on the island of Sardinia, located "the way last week by making game-day sites of beer, wine and spirits illegal. Offenders in other World Cup venues quickly followed suit.

Now, angry restaurant owners are threatening to close their establishments in protest. They claim that they are serving customers and are not violating any laws.

"We're talking of more than a million euros," said one owner.

In Europe, the World Cup expansion allows 10 privately owned franchises in each city. Owners will reap a share of the proceeds from concessions and alcohol sales at World Cup venues.

However, some owners are unhappy with the decision. "Business was down anyway by 85 percent during the last Italy game on Saturday," said Mr. Bolognini, whose association represents 1,800 restaurants in the Eternal City.

The ticklish problem is how to tactfully steer a long-time client away from the "illegal" local while wine in favor of freely available mineral water will be repeated in coming days at all 12 World Cup cities until the July 8 final in Rome.

With violence already flaring in Milan among West German hooligans and the island of Sardinia an armed camp because of the foul of England fans, Interior Minister Giorgio Gava is convinced the alcohol ban is the only way to preserve public order among the boom-fueled fringes of the soccer crowd.

The problem of dealing with the ban will face Milan restaurants on Friday, when sales become illegal prior to the game between West Germany and the United Arab Emirates.

Half of the ticklish problem already is solved — the UAE's mainly Muslim supporters aren't allowed to drink alcohol anyway.

But restaurants in Italy's high-priced northern business capital are worried about a massive loss of business on the day.

With high-class establishments like the Biffi Scala and Savini — where an average diner costs around $300, including wine — out of the price range of all but the most seasoned hooligan, the city's restaurant association is threatening to shut down in protest.

Manager fired after setting fire to uniform

ANAHEIM, Calif. (UPI) — A Little League manager who was dismissed along with his coach for setting fire to a uniform to rival his team's colors apologist Thursday and called the incident "a joke" that went away.

"I know it's a sick gag now, but at the time we thought it would be funny," said Randy Pangborn, 38, a special education teacher at South Junior High School in Anaheim and a member of the Little League's Yankees.

Pangborn said he and his coach, Mark Leuenberger, were dismissed Wednesday night by the Anaheim Hills Little League board for the incident that occurred before a game Monday evening.

Robert Jackson, district administrator for 18 Little Leagues in Orange County, said some parents were "pretty upset" by the incident. He declined to confirm the dismissals, but said the board "took appropriate action."

"We're very concerned with the safety of the children," Jackson said. "Coaches are supposed to be out there teaching and coaching. If they do stuff like this, they don't belong in Little League."

Burning a Little League uniform "is like burning a Picasso or a Rembrandt," Jackson said.

Pangborn, who was briefly suspended two weeks ago for making rude remarks to an umpire, said the latest incident "was blown out of proportion" and denied any of the children were endangered or threatened by the incident.

"It was supposed to be done as a joke and I'm greatly sorry for what happened," he said. "I'm in the process of getting the names and addresses of the parents on the opposing team and sending them a personal apology."

Witnesses told the Los Angeles Times that Pangborn was trying to motivate his team before their game against the undefeated A's at Crescent Intermediate School.

During warm-ups, witnesses said Pangborn and Leuenberger propped up a green and yellow jersey, similar to those worn by the opposing team, on the pitcher's mound with a snake.

to pay $20 million in franchise fees 20 years ago, but today's NL owners will reap a considerably larger windfall.

"Right now we're still in the talking stage — and I know it's cheap," said Frank Smith, chairman of the Washington D.C. Baseball Commission, who is still sitting at the table later.

Some owners are laughing all the way the bank because they'veumped the competition. We were talking about $50 million as a franchise for the last time we made our presentation in 1986. Now, we're hearing reports of $100 million. That kind of money, would narrow this field very quickly."

Other clubs expressing interest in bidding an expansion franchise are Oakland; St. Louis; Minneapolis; Vancouver, B.C.; Sacramento, Calif.; Columbus, Ohio; Charlotte, N.C.; New Orleans and East Rutherford, N.J.

The 1992 NL Expansion Draft will be held on May 25. The rounds of selections and each existing club will be allowed to protect more players as the rounds progress. Overall, each expansion club will select 36 players and each established NL club will lose 20.

According to expansion guidelines released Thursday, a baseball-only facility is preferred but not required, with minimum capacity 35,000. Vincezio said an open-air stadium with natural grass also is preferred.

"If a city is selected that does not have an appropriate major-league facility at the time, we would permit play for a year or two in an existing stadium," said Danforth, referring to the use of an acceptable minor-league stadium. "We have no intention of dragging our feet on this. The dates in the timetable are end dates. If we can do it faster, we will."
