It's Superman:

Metropolis celebrates 25 years of the Man of Steel.

Dawg Days

A lot of people say that summer is when Carbondale is at its best. Much of the sentiment may be derived from the fact that so many people leave town when summer arrives. Last year's enrollment fell by more than 11,000 from the spring to summer semester. That's a hefty number in a small city like Carbondale.

"Summer's the best of the three," said Jason Hamblin, a recent marketing graduate from Island Lake who has stayed in town for the past three summers. "Summer seems more laid-back. The people are friendlier."

Besides the laid-back vibe, traffic decongestion and shorter lines, the Carbondale area in itself shines during the summer because of its natural beauty. Just when the temperature becomes the most conducive for spending time outside, the Shawnee National Forest begins roaring with life that remained calm during cooler weather.

As Hamblin and two friends recently monitored the Weather Channel to plan a potential day water-skiing at nearby Kinkaid Lake, they all agreed that summer is more fun than any other time at SIUC.

"There's less stress," said Ryan Chesek, a junior in business management from Wauconda, as he watched the weather with Hamblin.

"And more beer gardens," chimed in Anthony Wynn, a senior in radio-television from Paducah, Ky.

Despite the large drop in population, one of Carbondale's most popular events, the Sunset Concert Series, takes place during the summer. The free shows, sponsored by the Student Programming Council, the Student Center and the Carbondale Park District, are a 20-year tradition in the city. The alternating shows at Turley Park and on the steps of Shryock Auditorium average about 2,000 and 2,500 people, but audiences have swelled to 5,000 people. The 21-and-older crowd is allowed to bring alcohol, but glass and kegs are banned. Minors risk a stiff fine if they drink.

Carbondale shines brightest when 10,000 students leave town for the season.

The lineup for this year's 7 p.m. concerts follows: The Stuart Martz Band will play its Celtic Rock on Thursday at Turley Park. Martz is a pal of the Drovers, who have a solid fan-base in Carbondale, but says his band "is totally different from the Drovers, but in the same record bin."

Jimmy Johnson continues the series with blues on June 26 at Shryock Auditorium. The series returns on July 3 to Turley Park for a Motown performance from the Rhythm Rockers. Reggae is featured on July 10 when One People visit the Shryock steps. On July 17, the Tom Andes Quartet will perform jazz at Turley Park. The July 24 series finale features acoustic pop from Vertical Horizon.

In addition to bands at bars and the usual Carbondale entertainment options, summer has a few other big events.

McLeod Theater in the Communications Building opens its summer season June 20 with "Joseph and his Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." Other performances are scheduled for June 21, 22, 26, 27, 28 and 29. "Noises Off" begins on July 5 and runs on July 6, 10, 11, 12 and 13. "The Man of La Mancha" opens on July 18 with other performances on July 19, 20, 24, 25, 26 and 27.

McLeod Theater also will feature the world-premiere performances of two plays written by SIUC students. Amy Wells' "A Woman's Place" runs on July 21 and 28. Helen Prien's "Resurrection" is slated for July 22 and 29.

For the "gear-head" lurking in everyone's psyche, the Du Quoin State Fairgrounds will host the Street Machine Nationals from June 27-29. Tens of thousands of people will file into this town 20 miles north of Carbondale to drink beer, look at thousands of cars and soak up the atmosphere. Adult tickets are $9 in advance and $12 at the door. Children's tickets are $5 and $7. Those who do not own a car can still look at nicer vehicles all weekend on U.S. Route 51 and state Route 13 when the Street Machine crowd comes to Carbondale to cruise the Strip.

Murphysboro's Riverside Park Bluesfest will light up the city on July 19. This year's bill includes headliner Lonnie Brooks, "Big" Mike Griffin, Steve Pecaro and the Tone Kings and St. Stephen's Blues with Martin "Big Larry" Albritton.

Corrections

In Thursday's story, "Food court promises options," the story should have stated that the Marketplace is open during the construction of the new food court. Located near the south end of the building, the Marketplace is open from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and serves three meals a day.

SUPERMAN MAY HAVE CHANGED FOR GOOD, BUT METROPOLIS BELIEVES THEIR HERO WILL RETURN

Truth, justice and tradition

MELISSA JAKUBOWSKI
DE MANAGING EDITOR

It could be a bird. Maybe even a plane. But Superman? Early this spring, Superman received a serious makeover. A blue electric suit has replaced the old one, and his powers have changed. Some even are saying he is acting more like the Man of Sparks than the Man of Steel.

But while fans across the world are left guessing if he ever will put on those famous blue tights again, the residents of Metropolis, Ill., remain unchanged in their opinion that the Man of Tomorrow will return to the man of the past.

The 7,000 citizens of that Illinois town always have had a special correlation with the Man of Steel. In the comic book series, Superman resides in the fictional city of Metropolis, N.Y.

"For years, when a kid would mail a letter to Superman, it would come here," said Dan Milam, Superman Celebration event planner. "It just made sense to officially adopt him."

After Metropolis, a city about 70 miles southeast of Carbondale, made Superman its "hometown hero" 25 years ago, the city was put on the map with comic book fans everywhere.

A direct derivative of this mix of fantasy and reality is the Superman Celebration, a street party and festival that started in 1979. The 19th-annual celebration runs this weekend and marks the silver anniversary of Metropolis as the hometown of Superman.

Becky Lambert, chairwoman of the celebration, said the celebration appeals more to the die-hard Superman fans than those who recently have picked up the comic.

"Fans who attend the celebration aren't interested in the new, violent characters," she said. "People who attend the festival are interested in tradition — things like the cape, truth, justice and the American way."

Lambert, who catches chuckles when she wears her Superman sweat suit outside of Metropolis, said most residents don't feel hokey about the city's unbridled passion for its hometown hero.

"We are proud of Superman and who he is," she said. "Superman is part of the American way. He's up there with baseball and apple pie. We were disappointed when DC Comics made him into a terminator."

Some events planned for the 50,000 fans whom are expected to attend the Celebration this weekend include a dinner and auction on Saturday and a classic car show on Sunday. A Comic Collector Show will also be held on both Saturday and Sunday.

The city also has George "Goober" Lyndsey from the "Andy Griffith Show" set to perform a comedy show at 8 tonight and Noel Neil, Lois Lane in the original television show, is set to put in a personal appearance.

While some new events are planned, old favorites, such as the annual Superman appearance, still are scheduled. Lambert said Superman will not don the new costume for the appearance and the statue will not be repainted.

"The comic book people can do whatever they want, but I really don't think the new Superman will last," she said.

Flash and trash the con in Con Air

JASON ADRIAN
DE MOVIE REVIEWER

If you've ever seen a movie based on an intriguing preview or an exhilarating commercial and then were let down with the actual mediocrity that makes up the full-length feature, you're not alone.

One such flick to have its trailer slip past my normally attentive garbage detector and peak my interest was "Con Air," directed by Simon West.

The muscular Nicholas Cage plays Cameron Poe, a paroled ex-Army ranger thrown in prison for accidentally killing a thug while defending his then-pregnant wife from three drunken louts.

During his trip home, about 10 convicts accompany Poe on a militaristic jumbo airplane designed for prisoner transport. Two of the most vile criminals alive, Cyrus "The Virus" Grissom (John Malkovich) and Nathan "Diamond Dog" Jones (Ving Rhames), coordinate an interesting breakout, and the convicts quickly take command of the plane.

For whatever reason, Poe forgoes his chances to leave the plane and uses his extreme combat tactics as he turns into the likely action hero.

The movie holds true to the previews for about 90 minutes with "how did they do that?" special effects and eye-popping stunts. But even with your suspension of disbelief well intact, much of the remaining action is truly hard to digest, especially as the plane tries to land in downtown Las Vegas. Instead of crying for more, you'll be looking at your last kernels of lard-laden popcorn and saying "puh-leeze."

Malkovich is brilliant, and I wish there was more for him to work with. But what really got to me was Cage's awkward performance, which had him sounding like Forrest Gump as he warbled the typical action movie one-liners.

So if you're in the mood for great action sequences, go see "Con Air," but this is one that can wait until you've already rented everything from the "new releases" section.

- * Don't bother waiting
- *** Wait three years to see it on TV

CD Capsules

Yo La Tengo
I CAN HEAR THE HEART...
Matador — 1997

Since 1985, this Hoboken, N.J., trio has used what it calls the "inspired amateur approach" to create nine albums of blissful, Velvet Underground-influenced pop rock. The concept has served the band well, but just one trip through "I Can Hear the Heart Beating as One" reveals that Yo La Tengo are anything but amateurs.

Like other YLT albums, the songs on "I Can Hear the Heart Beating as One" vary from soft, folksy tunes that focus on drummer Emily Hubley's soothing, pastoral voice to loud, guitar-drenched numbers swelling with feedback. All of the 16 songs, however, have a delicate vibe that unifies the album. This is the strength that makes YLT's sound its own. Even as singer/guitarist Ira Kaplan (who, incidentally, is married to Hubley) churns out squealing feedback over a guitar drone and a pounding drumbeat, a delicate and melodic feel cuts through the noise. This loud sensitivity shines at its brightest on "We're an American Band," (which is not a Grand Funk cover). Kaplan's guitar swirls and drones through fuzz boxes for three minutes over his gentle, whispery vocals before bursting into a three-minute feedback session. Even though Kaplan holds nothing back during the last three minutes, the steady melody and the sensitivity conveyed by the vocals are never lost. It sort of sounds like Sonic Youth reverently writing folk songs.

YLT also drifts into experimentation while rarely falling prey to self-indulgence (the 11-minute "Spec Bebob" is an exception). The end product is 67 minutes of pop songs that require more chops and ingenuity to create than any mere amateurs possess.

Son Volt
STRAIGHTAWAYS
Warner Bros. — 1997

As the leader of Son Volt, Jay Farrar has taken a lot of heat for his hesitance to break new ground with his music.

"Straightaways," the band's latest offering, continues Farrar's foray into making music that has been made before. After veering away from punk influences during his last years with Uncle Tupelo, Farrar has delved into straight '70s rock mixed with equal doses of traditional country and folk. It's been done before.

But there has never been a rule that requires good music to incorporate new ideas. What matters more are the songs. Sadly enough, "Straightaways" also falls a little short in this respect, too. The "rockers" Farrar wrote for the album just aren't as catchy as the radio-friendly "Druva" single from "Trace." There are some gems, though. "Picking up the Signal" is propelled by a solid Farrar-style riff and — going against his tradition of despondent lyrics — actually sounds hopeful. "Cemetery Savior" is another winner, with its rolling guitar work.

The album's slow, mournful country songs rarely work. Farrar's cryptic lyrics do not always blend with the traditional songwriting, and the music sometimes drags along too slowly. The main exception of this bunch is "Way Down Watson," a heartfelt lament on the demolition of an old hotel in the historic Souldard area of St. Louis. "Put whiskey on the wounds/salt the glass and say good-bye," he grieves to a lone acoustic guitar and harmonica. "No feel-good scenes to bring ya back/just fallen brick and broken glass."

For the most part, Farrar's writing sounds less inspired than on "Trace." Hopefully, that will change with his next crop of non-groundbreaking songs.

POP
Island — 1997

This is a message for all U2 fans past and present: There will never be a "Joshua Tree II." U2 made this all too clear when its Zoo TV tour kicked through just about every major city in the entire world and marked the future of rock 'n' roll as the band's main inspiration.

Bono recently said on "The Late Show" that U2 is simply trying to "kick rock 'n' roll's arse into the 21st century," and that's exactly what their latest release, "Pop," sounds like its trying to do.

The first three songs on the album sound so far away from the first three songs on "The Joshua Tree" that die-hard fans from the band's birth are screaming "sell-out" like it's a bad thing. If the techno-pop of "Discotheque" or the anarchic "Mofo," where Bono plausibly discusses his own fathering capabilities ("Trying to find the father of my two little girls"), is selling out, then I'm buying. I didn't even like U2 until "Achtung Baby" came out, and it not only blew my mind, but made me dizzily scream for more.

More is exactly what Bono, the Edge, Larry Mullen Jr. and Adam Clayton offer with "Pop." The subjects of God, religion, sex and death all are covered brilliantly and objectively and are the focus of the album.

Whether it's tongue-in-cheek irony ("The Playboy Mansion") or straight-up proclamations ("Wake Up, Dead Man"), each member brings his ideas to each track. This keeps the lyrics and music unified better than with any of U2's other material.

The band will bring its PoPMart tour to St. Louis on Nov. 8 at the TransWorld Dome.

Ginuwine
THE BACHELOR
Sony — 1996

Although Ginuwine's "The Bachelor" was released earlier this year, it's still steamy enough for summer.

The LP's first single, "Pony," was on heavy rotation at most urban radio stations and video shows to the point of overkill, but it deserved it.

Straightforward lyrics such as "If you're horny, let's do it! don't come around that often." The second single, "Tell Me Do U Wanna," is following that same freaky tip, and is played every 15 minutes on a certain local radio station (but what on that station isn't played every 15 minutes?).

Some of the best is yet to come. "Only When Ur Lonely," "Lonely Daze" and "Hello" are all nice slow- to mid-tempo ballads with a good touch of bass. These songs do sound a bit mournful — as if Ginuwine found out being freaky doesn't pay — and could use some remixing.

But after what happened to the "Pony" remix, maybe they should be left alone. If you haven't noticed any similarities to a certain "Artist" by the "U's" in the song titles, then the remake of "When Doves Cry" should certainly ring a bell. As an "Artist" fanatic, I admit that I turned about two shades of purple when I first read the title. I usually oppose any artist that dares to recreate pure genius, but Ginuwine actually does a pretty good job. The Artist Formerly Known as Prince never gave the original a bass line. Not that people noticed; it was a tight song without one. Ginuwine adds one here, and if you bump this one really loud, it works. It's not better than the original, just different. That's good.

Swan Song

Show to bring laughter, enthusiasm to audience at the Stage Company this weekend.

TRAVIS AKIN
 DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A swan who struggles with his inability to sound like the other trumpeter swans finds he can accomplish great things in The Stage Company's production of the "The Trumpet of the Swan."

The show opens tonight at The Stage Co., 101 N. Washington St.

The play features music, physical comedy and a cast full of witty children and adult characters in the story of Louis, a trumpeter swan.

The play is based on E.B. White's book of the same name.

Former Carbondale resident Joseph Robinette adapted the book to the stage, and Roger Petrich wrote the music.

Louis was born without the ability to make the noise that distinguishes all trumpeter swans from other swans.

His father steals a real trumpet for him, and Louis wants to find a way to pay back the trumpet's former owner. In the process, Louis begins playing the instrument and becomes famous.

Director Catherine Field said the production is primarily a children's show, but she has made sure the show appeals to adults.

"Some jokes will go over the children's heads," she said. "As a parent, I have found that if I enjoyed a program, my children enjoyed it more. I kept that in mind."

Field said that many of the children involved in the production are acting for the first time, and that the audience can expect to see a great deal of energy and enthusiasm as a result.

Having children in the production has helped actors such as Tim Miles (Louis) to see theater from a different perspective.

"I have never worked with children before," he said. "Children have no fear. I am amazed at their capacity for instant imagination."

Doug Larson/Daily Egyptian

WATCH OUT: Becky May "Cygnus" (on the nest) gets attacked by Tessa Maruszczak "bobcat" in a rehearsal for The Stage Company's production of "Trumpet of the Swan."

The fact that it is a children's show sparked Jane Klucker's (Mrs. Hammerboham/Mrs. Brickle) interest in the production.

"I really enjoy doing theater for children because afterwards you get to meet them," she said.

She said children will be interested in the play because it is a fast-paced production full of physical comedy. Just seeing a man dressed as a swan playing the trumpet is a funny sight, she said.

Field wanted to stress physical comedy, intentionally casting children in adult roles and adults in children's roles to add to the humor.

More than anything, she wants the children in the audience and on the stage to see how theater can be a reflection of everyday living.

"I heard the most wonderful quote: 'Theater is life, movies are art, and television is furniture,'" Field said.

"This show has touching moments and is cheerfully unpredictable, just as life itself. I want the children to appreciate it like they have just seen a little bit of life on the stage."

Irish trio to perform at Turley Park

TOUR STOP: Band brings Celtic stylings here before playing at Chicago's Navy Pier.

JASON ADRIAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The Stuart Martz Band will bring a traditional Irish/Celtic sound with a rock edge to Turley Park on June 19 for the second show in the Sunset Concert Series.

Martz (guitars/vocals/fiddle) is an Irish-American who grew up listening to traditional Celtic music in D.

He describes his power trio as a "traditional" band with a heavy rock-rhythm section.

John Wright plays bass, acoustic guitar and mandolin, and lends backing vocals, while Matt Jacobs handles percussion for the band.

The Bodhran, a traditional Irish percussion instrument, is a big part of Jacobs' arsenal. He also uses drum loops and samples to give the band a modernized twist.

The band doesn't always perform hybrids of modern and traditional Celtic music, however.

Some of the trio's songs definitely have a more traditional influence than others containing more rock elements. That facet marks the band as a unit that does not want to be disconnected from its core inspiration: Celtic music.

The Minneapolis-based unit will be playing songs from their debut album "Threesome Reel"

(Narnian/Atomic Theory/Rounder International Records). Martz also released a solo album, "Collected," in 1991, and has appeared as a guest artist/arranger on many other Martz said he still believes Drovers fans will find the same appeal in his trio, however.

Martz's guitar playing has been compared to that of Dire Straits frontman Mark Knopfler.

He has a couple of impressive gigs on his resume, including opening for guitar great Richard Thompson, who has remained a friend since the show.

The Stuart Martz Band's tour takes them through Milwaukee and Carbondale, and will wind down for a show at Navy Pier in Chicago on June 21, where a crowd of between 7,000 and 8,000 is expected.

So go check out what's even closer to Irish tradition than U2. Be ready to rock, and bring your Guinness.

Camel Fair mixes commerce with chaos

TRADE-IN TIME: Shoppers test drive their selections before purchasing them.

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

PUSHKAR, RAJASTHAN, INDIA—The Pushkar Camel Fair is Rajasthan's version of a statewide used-car swap. Each year, roughly 16 trillion camels get traded in for new and improved models.

Recently, however, the focus of the fair has changed a bit.

The Indian Tourism Authority issued a mandate to perk up the camel swapping because, apparently, the hundreds of tourists who come to the fair each year were getting bored.

The first event was the Strongest Camel Contest.

It was supposed to work like this: A camel would sit down on its haunches and about 20 guys would pile on and yell at the animal in Hindi (the camel's native tongue) to stand up.

The camel would struggle to stand and, one at a time, the men would drop off until the camel could get up.

An official would count all the men still on board and the camel with the most would be declared the winner.

Simple enough.

The problem was, after everyone climbed on, no one was sure who'd dropped off when.

Eight different people, each claiming to be the official, would assert that the camel belonging to their cousin was the real winner.

Clearly, instant replay was needed in this sport.

Between events, several professional advertising camels, with billboards strapped to their sides, paraded around the field. I suppose you might call these Super Model Camels: long legs, big humps and styled tails.

Next came the Getting-Your-Camel-Away-

From-The-Watering-Trough Event.

This would be known in the West as "showing up at the starting line." You'd be surprised how many contestants don't make it, partly because they have to be there at a certain time.

Some riders simply have no idea what 4 p.m. means; reverence for the clock is not a big priority here.

These minor contests were, of course, merely precursors to the big event, The Camel Race.

The camels stood at the starting line (or close to it, anyway), hoof to hoof and hump to hump. Seconds, perhaps minutes, of rigorous training had prepared them for this moment.

A gun was fired. The riders all shouted highly motivational phrases at their camels, then, when that didn't work, they began whipping them with sticks.

They were off. The riders did everything they could to get their mounts turned around but by the time they did, the rest of the pack had grabbed a 30-meter lead.

Throwing caution to the wind and, for that matter, the rules, the four wayward riders decided to cut across the infield and catch up with the pack on the final turn.

It would have been a brilliant cheating strategy if every single person in the grandstand wasn't watching them.

As the lead pack neared the final turn, the four thirsty camels drew up on a perpendicular course. You could see the horror in the lead riders' eyes when they looked up and saw the four camels closing in on them.

The nine speeding camels collided. In one tangled, out-of-control mass of heads, humps and hooves, they emerged on a new trajectory toward the trees to the left of the grandstand, where I happened to be standing.

The chaos lasted about two minutes. Once the 11 injured spectators were carried away, I was surprised that the festive mood returned.

No one was seriously injured, just a few cuts and bruises.

Par for the course, I'm told.

PARK

Clark was impressed with the number of options the park has for campers.

"I noticed they cater to a lot of individual people," she said. "They have places for people with RVs, youth camping and places for tent camping."

As people pitch their tents or hoop-up their recreation vehicles, campers are in the company of explorers including George Rogers Clark, who ostensibly passed through the park on a journey to Fort Kaskaskia in 1778.

The Cherokees also may have used the land as a hunting ground on the Trail of Tears in the late 1800s.

The park then eventually came under the ownership of Emma Rebmman, a school teacher and the Johnson County school superintendent.

She opened the park to visitors on Sundays and charged 10 cents for admission.

In 1949, Rebmman sold 140 acres to the state of Illinois.

Reynolds said Rebmman preferred the old English spelling of "cliff" and gave the park the name Ferne Clyffe.

The name also comes from the many ferns that grow in the park.

Ferne Clyffe State Park includes country bicycle trail, passes by the park, and bicyclists often camp at the park.

The park also attracts visitors from other countries.

Hetty Sloots, a secretary from the Netherlands living in Evansville, Ind., visited the park last week with friends from her home country.

"It is a different world," she said. "The rock formations, the beautiful trees and the little stream make it all very special."

She said she enjoys being close to nature and the chance to get away from city life for a while.

While the park is a favorite for visitors all over the world, residents of the neighboring town of Goreville do not mind the tourists passing through the town to go to the park.

Valerie Moore, a clerk at the Goreville Mini Mart, along Route 37, said the town, which has a population of 978, appreciates the tourists.

"The railroad was what made the town, and when that ended, the town almost died," she said. "The park is what keeps it going."

ROCKY WAY: Unique rock formations throughout Ferne Clyffe State Park add to the scenery of the trails.

Hiking, hidden waterfalls, unique geological features draw students to this state park.

TRAVIS AGIN
DE OUTDOORS EDITOR

A slight breeze cools the air at Ferne Clyffe State Park, and the canopy of trees above the trail sways with the wind. Farther ahead on the trail, the faint sound of water can be heard trickling down the rocks to the stream below.

All around are scenic bluffs with breathtaking views of the tops of the forests in Shawnee Hills, and at every turn there seems to be a new attraction to explore at Ferne Clyffe, about 30 minutes from Carbondale on Illinois Route 37.

The sense of adventure the park provides is what attracted Melissa Clark, a recent graduate in mechanical engineering from Washington University in St. Louis, to the park last week. "It is a little more rustic than some places," she said. "There are some hidden places, and it seems like there are lots of places to explore. The waterfalls are some hidden treasures that we sort of stumbled on."

The park has 10 trails that range from difficult five-mile treks to leisurely quarter-mile strolls.

Bill Reynolds, the site superintendent, said the trails attract people to the park year-round.

TRAIL BLAZING:

The hiking trails at Ferne Clyffe are a popular location for SIUC students, Southern Illinois residents and their pets to exercise in a natural environment.

HOOK AND LINE: Terry Page of Makanda enjoys just one of the many recreational opportunities that the 1,100-acre park has to offer.

"Hiking has become one of the biggest attractions," he said. "Even in the winter, when it is half-way decent weather, you see people hiking."

Reynolds said one of the advantages of the park is that a person does not have to go on a rigorous trail to view some of the sites.

"Some of the shorter, easier hikes are the ones to go on to see the some of the unique geologic features," he said. "The Blackjack Oak Trail is a mile hike, and it has three places to stand and look at the forest in Shawnee Hills."

But hiking is not the only feature the park has. Ferne Clyffe also offers different types of camping, picnicking, fishing, repelling and hunting.

Crab Orchard to issue stickers to generate revenue

TAKE NOTICE: Refuge to collect fees to support future projects.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A new user fee program at Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge will make enforcement easier and direct more money to the refuge, wildlife officials say.

The new program goes into effect on July 1. Fees have been charged before, but enforcement often has been lax, ranger Neil Vincent said.

"The fees have been there, but we had not really began enforcing it until the last couple of years," he said.

The new program will require visitors to the refuge, which includes Crab Orchard Lake, to purchase $15 annual sticker for cars or boats. An annual car and boat pass will cost $25. Non-motorized boat permits will cost $15 per year. A family sticker providing access for all the vehicles within one family will cost $30. Visitors also may buy five-day stickers for $5 per vehicle.

The refuge offers fishing, hunting, hiking and horseback riding.

Using stickers as proof of fee payment will make enforcement easier because rangers will know which vehicles to stop. Under the old system, the passes were not as prominently displayed.

Neil said the rangers will stop people without stickers and inform them about the fees before issuing citations.

Deputy Refuge Manager Charles Holbrook said people should not depend on leniency the first time they are pulled over without a sticker.

"That doesn't mean that everyone who is stopped will get a warning," he said.

Holbrook said that refuge officials have directed most of their resources to enforcing offenses such as drunk driving and destroying property.

The old entrance fee program allowed the refuge to keep 30 percent of the collected fees. The remaining revenue was directed to a nationwide land acquisition fund. Under the new program made possible by changes in federal law, Crab Orchard will keep all of the money raised by the fees.

72 funds will be used for projects such as renovating boat docks, improving existing boats and expanding parking areas.

Neil said the Golden Access Card that has been issued at no cost to people with permanent disabilities will not be affected by the new fee program. The Golden Age Card for people 62 and older costs $10 and allows them to receive 50-percent discounts on usage fees.

FEES

- The annual fee for vehicles and boats with motors is $15, and each additional boat is $5.

- The annual fee for boats with no motors costs $7.50

- Five-day permits for a vehicle cost $5.
