Syria, PLO demand Israeli withdrawal

Zapnews

DAMASCUS — Any Middle East peace pact not based on Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories "is doomed to failure," Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) said Sunday.

The official Syrian News Agency (SANA) said the statement came after talks between Syria's Foreign Minister Faruk al-Sharaa and his Palestinian counterpart Faruk Kaddoumi on the eve of a resumption of peace talks in Washington.

It said the Palestinian delegation presented its observations on a draft agenda reportedly reached by Jordan and Israel, and its repercussions on prospects for Palestinian-Israeli talks.

Report: Baker planning final tour of Middle East

Zapnews

JERUSALEM — James Baker, who as Secretary of State was considered the driving force behind the Middle East peace process, is reported to be planning a final tour of the region's capitals before Bill Clinton takes over as president, Israel radio said Sunday.

The radio did not source what it called "unconfirmed reports" of a scheduled Baker visit but a spokesman at the Israeli foreign ministry hinted that preparations for such a visit were being made.

The two delegations agreed to contact "Jordanian brothers for consultation and clarification," SANA said. In Amman, PLO officials said Jordan had agreed to modify the draft.

They said Jordanian Prime Minister Zeid bin Shaker gave assurances to senior PLO envoys that Amman would discuss the

"We have no details about it, not yet," said the spokesman who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Baker left the State Department earlier this year to head the "ailed re-election campaign of President Bush and was replaced by his long-time deputy Lawrence Eagleburger. A final shuttle tour could help overcome possible inertia in the negotiations which diplomatic observers fear could be bogged down until Clinton's inauguration in January.

newspaper Akhrouk as calling on Washington to resume the direct talks with the PLO which were interrupted in 1990.

The PLO sent two delegations to Jordan and Syria Thursday in an effort to persuade the Jordanians to amend the draft.

On the Damascus talks, SANA said Syrian and Palestinian views were "identical on the need for adopting a unified Arab stand that would stick to international legitimacy and to a comprehensive solution based on U.N. resolutions as well as the principle of exchange of land for peace."

SANA added: "The two sides have expressed their deep faith that any peace accord that does not

Engineering opposed to GE hour increase

By Chris Davies
Administration Writer

The General Education Committee's recommendations for SIUC's general education curriculum could mean more GE hour requirements for engineering students, but engineering faculty oppose the recommendations.

The GE Committee met with College of Engineering faculty Friday to discuss the recommendations by the committee to improve SIUC's GE curriculum. The committee and faculty also discussed the possible effects the recommendations could have on the engineering degree programs.

Juh Wah Chen, dean of the college, said he is satisfied with the present course requirements and feels it would be difficult to add hours.

"We don't want any additional hours added to the present curriculum," he said. "Students already take four to five years to finish the program; this would only add to that time."

The evaluation and recommendations of the committee are mentioned in the Lilly Report which was distributed June 25.

In the report the committee says the newly proposed program will emphasize sound knowledge, effective communication and reasoning skills and imaginative and critical perspectives on the diversity of human experience.

Pete Carroll, chairman of the GE Committee, said the committee's

Japanese freighter departs France under heavy protest

By Zapnews

CHERBOURG, France — A heavily armed Japanese warship began its escort of the plutonium-laden Japanese freighter Akatsuki Maru on Sunday in international waters off the French coast.

The freighter, carrying 1.5 tons of the highly radioactive material, set sail for Japan on a secret route late Saturday from Cherbourg, France, amid worldwide protests. The voyage will take nearly two months.

French radio said the vessel, which has a double hull and two independently operating propellers for safety reasons, would also be monitored by a U.S. satellite and American warships to prevent a possible terrorist attack.

A Greenpeace ship pursuing the Akatsuki Maru was struck early in the morning by the Japanese escort but not damaged, a spokesman for the environmental organization said.

The spokesman said the escort had tried to cut off the Solo several times to hinder pursuit. The Solo broke through a French navy

Stock market gains ground after election

By Vincent S. Boyd
Business Writer

The stock market gained ground in a fairly busy week, rebounding with a round of selling that followed the presidential election, a stock market analyst said.

James Fitzgerald, a marketing analyst for Harris Securities of Carbondale, said investors were still cautiously appraising the outlook following Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton's victory in the presidential election Tuesday.

"Hopes have been rising of late that the economy has picked up momentum heading into 1993," Fitzgerald said.

Michael Haywood, an administrator in the College of Business and Administration, said many companies had a rise in stock prices because of the nation's anticipation of Clinton winning the election.

"People were looking forward to Clinton becoming our next president," Haywood said. "His balancing the budget in Arkansas finally hit home with people and its effect trickled down to the stock market."

He said the attitudes of people on Clinton and the economy will have a positive impact on business.

"The success of business is heavily dependent on how consumers feel about the economy," Haywood said. "Clinton has given the people a reason to think positively."

After the close of business Wednesday, the Dow Jones industrial average had dropped 29.44 points. Industry analysts said investors cashed in that day on recent market gains based on the expectations of Clinton's victory.

Bears maul SIUC with big first half

By Jay Reed
Sports Writer

Southwest Missouri State head coach Jesse Branch said turnovers can cause the dam to burst.

Saturday, the Salukis were unable to patch the dam and Dawg-paddle their way to safety as they committed four turnovers in a 51-12 loss in front of 10,782 fans at Plaster Field in Springfield, Mo.

SIUC turned the football over three times in the first half, and Southwest Missouri State scored on its first six possessions. The Bears jumped out to a commanding 31-0 half-time lead. The Bears shut out the fifth-best I-AA offense in the first half for the first time this season.

The 39-point loss was the worst a Saluki team has suffered since a 52-7 loss to Eastern Illinois in 1986.

"We have had a bit of a porous defense for the last five ballgames," Saluki head coach Bob Smith said.

"When that happens, sometimes you get a little tense on offense. The offense feels as if 'we have to do it on every single down' and I think that was our downfall in this ballgame."

SMSU head coach Jesse Branch said not playing last week gave the Bears time to prepare for the Salukis and allowed the Bear offense to score at will.

"They threw a lot of different defensive schemes at us and our players made the adjustments," Branch said. "The open date helped us out today."

The SMSU offense racked up 385 yards rushing on 65 attempts against the worst rushing defense in I-AA, while spreading the wealth to six different players.

Jerry Terry rushed for 105 yards, Jonah White finished with 77 yards, Brian Moore had 58 yards, quarterback Cleveland Antione finished with 54 yards and Andre Jackson had 43 yards.

Saluki wide receiver Billy Swain put the Salukis on the board and his name in the record book when he caught a one-yard touchdown pass from Scott Gabbert with 7:06 left in the third quarter.

Swain's catch made the score 38-6 and gave him the record for career touchdown receptions with 12.

SMSU added two more touchdowns and Justin Roebuck caught a 20-yard pass from Scott Gabbert to close out the scoring at 51-12.

Anthony Perry inched closer to the 1,000 yard plateau as he gained 94 yards on 18 carries leaving him only 106 yards short of becoming the first Saluki to rush for 1,000 yards since Byron Mitchell attained the feat in 1985.

Spikers split MVC matches

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

After a Missouri Valley Conference road trip this weekend, the SIUC spikers return home with a split.

The Salukis lost to Southwest Missouri State Friday and then beat Tulsa soundly, Saturday.

SMSU edged out the Salukis in what seemed to be a defensive struggle that ended up in loss for SIUC. The Bears won the match in four games 15-4, 12-15, 15-7, 15-11.

The Salukis led the match in blocks with 15 compared to SMSU's 8. Senior middle blocker Dana Olden poked a punch in the Bears offense blocking 10 shots with six block assists and four block solos.

Senior middle blocker Stacy Snook, sophomore middle blocker Deb Heyne and freshman outside hitter Heather Herdes picked up three block assists each in their efforts.

Meanwhile, SMSU was giving its own defensive show as they racked up 71 digs to SIUC's 55.

Amy Russell led the Bears with 17 digs followed by Kris Oglesby with 14. Dee Singleton and Karlin Sander tied with 12 digs.

Leading the Salukis defensive effort in digs were Olden with 12 and freshman outside hitter Beth Diehl.

JAPAN FEARS CLINTON'S TRADE POLICIES — Fears are widespread in Japan that President-elect Bill Clinton may pursue protectionist trade policies, thus worsening Japan's already tense economic relations with the United States. The United States continues to run a huge trade deficit with Japan, and some Japanese fear that the continuing U.S. economic slowdown may force Clinton to impose sanctions on Japanese goods as a way to protect American jobs.

SERBS SEEK MUSLIMS — The Serb guards strode menacingly into the crowded basement room in the middle of the night and called out the names of seven men. It was a virtual "Who's Who" of leading Muslims and Croats from nearby Prijedor: Muhamed Cehajic, the elected lord mayor of the city of 112,000; two gynecologists at the Prijedor hospital; the owner of a cafe and art gallery; a state prosecutor; and two others. Aside from one Croat, all were Muslims.

TALKS HEAD OFF TRADE WAR — Trade ministers and other European Community officials called Saturday for a quick resumption of talks with the United States aimed at heading off a transatlantic trade war that could further cripple the struggling world economy. There was no indication that the European Community was willing to change its position on farm subsidies, the issue that triggered a U.S. decision this week to impose punitive tariffs on $300 million worth of European agricultural exports.

PROTESTOR HECKLES YELTSIN — Eyes blazing with anger, hands fingering a miniature red flag protruding from the pocket of his workman's smock, Vladimir Smolysk stood in the shadow of the Kremlin Saturday and shouted "Down! Down!" every time the name of Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin was mentioned. "Traitors of socialist ideals have come to power - traitors of all ideals of humanity," said Smolysk, 57, a subway electrician.

GUERRILLAS WREAK HAVOC — Leftist guerrillas Saturday killed 26 police officers guarding an oil field in southern Colombia and set off 11 bombs in the capital, causing one injury but no deaths. About 300 rebels belonging to the Simon Bolivar Coordinating Front used automatic weapons and grenades to attack 32 police officers guarding the Orito oil field in the jungle near the border with Ecuador, officials reported.

ARTS SEEKS FEDERAL FUNDS — Can an arts organization be too successful - or too narrow in scope - to deserve federal funds during hard economic times? That question was raised this weekend at a meeting of the National Council on the Arts, the advisory body to the National Endowment for the Arts. At issue: Three organizations dealing with design arts that are among 19 prospective grant candidates in that category.

U.S. PURCHASES IRANIAN OIL — After shunning Iranian oil for years because of political sensitivities, major U.S. oil companies recently have become some of Iran's biggest customers and are now purchasing Iranian crude at an annual rate of more than $3.5 billion, according to oil traders, industry officials and analysts. The U.S. purchases amount to about one-fourth of Iran's total oil exports and mark a major shift in the international trading practices of some large U.S. oil companies.

CABINET LOCKED IN STALEMATE — Officials from two Cabinet departments remained stalemated Saturday over how best to revise the nation's food labels, and are not expected to meet the Monday deadline for issuing the final proposals. The Food and Drug Administration, part of the Department of Health and Human Services, has been locked for months in a battle with the Department of Agriculture over how much information the new labels should contain.

A mistake was found in the Nov. 4 issue of the Daily Egyptian, in the story "Swimmers gain insight, experience." The quote, "They're going to be top five by the time the season is over," refers to the Northwestern woman's swim team, not the Salukis.

Married pair awarded Alumni Achievement

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

Patricia and Richard Hunsaker

For the first time ever, two people were awarded the SIUC Alumni Achievement Award in the same year. And they just happen to be married. Richard and Patricia Hunsaker were given a plaque during a luncheon in commemoration of their services to the University in the Student Center as part of the Homecoming festivities Oct. 9.

Patricia Hunsaker said they especially were honored because the award was given to both of them.

"When I got the phone call, I thought it was about a committee," she remembered. "They asked me if we were going to the Homecoming luncheon. I said we weren't sure if we were going, but when I found out the luncheon was being primarily held in our honor, I said we would certainly be there."

Richard Hunsaker said the luncheon was attended by the members of the SIUC Alumni Association's board, deans of various colleges and their daughter, Rachel, who recently graduated from SIUC with a degree in film and photography.

Patricia Hunsaker said she was very surprised by the unusual nature of the awards ceremony.

"We have been involved with the association for so long, but for the two of us to be awarded at the same time, that was very unusual because that has never happened before," she said.

Patricia Hunsaker served as the first women president of SIUC Alumni Association in 1982. Her husband was president of the association from 1968 to 1969. The Hunsakers also served on the association's board for a number of years.

City Council to decide on seats in spring election

By Jeremy Finley
City Writer

Two seats on the Carbondale City Council will be decided upon in a spring election for four-year term councilmen.

Beginning Nov. 4 registered voters of Carbondale who wanted to file as candidates for the April 20, 1993 election could find nominating petitions and election information in the City Clerk's office.

The nomination petitions, signed by at least 70 to 80 people, must be filed between Dec. 7 and Dec. 14 in the City Clerk's office. A primary election will be held Feb. 23, 1993 if more than four candidates file for city council membership.

City Clerk Janet Vaught said councilmen John Yow and Keith Tuxhorn are up for re-election because their four-year terms are up.

"It's up to them if they want to run for re-election," she said.

Vaught said people have three main duties as members of city council.

"They must attend at least two council meetings a month, they must serve on at least two committees and set policies for the city," she said.

Yow said he already has begun circulating petitions for his re-election.

"I feel that being a life-long resident of Carbondale, I owe it to the people to represent them," he said.

Yow said he has served on the council for eight years and worked in the city code enforcement division for 20 years.

"I feel like I have learned enough of city government in my years," he said. "I'm the high vote-getter both times I've run, and I hopefully will be again."

Tuxhorn had no comment on whether he would run for re-election.

Fear of income tax halts education bill

DOUBT ABOUT INCREASED INCOME taxes blurred the vision of education as a fundamental right last week when a crucial education amendment to the state constitution was rejected.

The amendment received the support of 57 percent of Illinois voters, but did not get the 60 percent needed to pass. The margin of 3 percent shows that the majority of Illinois residents are ready to make education a top priority.

The stubborn minority of Republicans and the rich who struck a blow to education by opposing the amendment show that some are still unwilling to pay for greater educational opportunities out of their own pocket.

The education amendment would have forced the state to increase education funding to the 50 percent or more it is supposed to provide.

Article 10, section 1 of the Illinois Constitution clearly declares education to be the "primary responsibility" of the state, yet the state's share of education funding has dropped significantly in recent years, from 42 percent in the 1986-87 school year to 33 percent in the recent school year, according to state board of education statistics.

The rest of the money is taken from local property taxes, which means schools in wealthier districts will have more educational opportunity than poorer school districts.

POLITICAL ANALYSTS SAY the amendment did not pass because of a lack of clear language — it does not specify how education funding would be increased.

Opponents of the amendment feared a graduated income tax would be implemented to make up the difference. This fear of taxation hit the wealthy the most, because the tax, which was not even proposed, would force those with higher incomes to pay more taxes.

Opposition to the amendment came mostly from Republicans and residents of the suburbs of Chicago — groups which contain a high number of rich people.

The graduated income tax was only a proposal, and was not included in the language of the education amendment. But the opponents of the amendment, through assumptions and guesses, elevated the fear of taxes within the minds of voters so that many felt like a vote for the educational amendment was a vote for a graduated income tax.

Support for the amendment was concentrated in Chicago and in Southern Illinois areas — which contain poor, economically depressed schools that would gain the most by the amendment.

The education amendment would not be necessary if state lawmakers held to their promises to ensure that local school districts would not carry the burden of funding. These promises already are included in the Illinois Constitution, and the state should be legally mandated to keep its word.

It is unlikely that the amendment will pass again in its current form, because of the newly elected Republican-dominated Senate.

The failure of the education amendment to pass means one less option is available for schools suffering from the financial crunch. Ultimately, Illinois residents will have to decide if they think education is more important than an increase in income tax.

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted directly to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Letters to the Editor

Tipper T-shirt wearers ignorant of Gore's view

My letter criticizing the man wearing the Tipper Gore T-shirt generated a broadside of responses. Many thought I objected to free speech. I do not oppose the First Amendment, however crudely exercised. But your right to protest free speech doesn't compel me to agree with what you say. My letter, like the shirt, expressed disagreement. I said I was tired of sleazy political speech. "F--- Tipper Gore is sleazy political speech; I object to it."

Nor do these critics understand Tipper Gore's views. Had they bothered to read her 1987 book, they would know she advocates a self-imposed rating system by record companies like that used by movies. She says, "Censorship is not the answer." The problem is not access to rock music by patriotic connoisseurs like my critics. It is exposing children—pretense and young teens—to lyrics which are about hate, violence (especially violence toward women), explicit sex, and suicide. Example? "I'll either break her face/Or take down her legs/Get my ways at will/Go for the throat/Never let loose/Going in for the kill" (Modley Crue). Or do the wearers of the T-shirt still depend on mommy and daddy to buy their records?

Violence toward women is a more important social issue than putting up with warning labels. Should my critics, their friends, relatives, or lovers become victims of violence (a likely possibility), they may reach that conclusion. Perhaps not. But at least anyone whose focus of political concern is so self-centered ought to see a country where there is real censorship.

Party school image insult; posers less attractive now

The DE stated in the article regarding Playboy, that SIU being listed as one of the top partying schools is an insult to the majority of serious students.

However, the 200 girls that went to get their picture taken for Playboy obviously don't feel this way.

The way I see it, is that they would like the partying school atmosphere to go on, because without it, chances like taking their clothes off for money would not occur.

The thing that keeps running through my mind is how would the parents who send their kids to school on their hard-earned money feel about their daughters exploiting themselves for the world to see. I do not think they would approve.

I wonder if these girls think that this will heighten their self-esteem or make them feel more attractive because they got their picture in Playboy.

I feel this makes them less attractive no matter how beautiful they think they are.

I do not know the actual amount of money David Chan is paying for the pictures, but from the different stories I have heard, it is not a lot. I just wonder how much more money it would take for these girls to have sex. —Mark G. Smith, junior, administration of justice

Posing nude in Playboy takes courage, pride

This letter is written in regard to Andrew J. Ensor's letter I debated whether or not to honor his letter with a response. Instead, I have chosen to honor the women who had the courage to give SIU their support in the April issue of Playboy Magazine.

Mr. Ensor chose to label a woman who possesses high self-esteem has the courage to show her body and her pride in her body to an entire nation.

A student posing nude (or even clothed, which two of my friends have done) will not change SIU's party image.

You have the right to choose what University you attend. Apparently, you chose to come to SIU. Therefore, if you can't accept the party school image then you obviously chose the wrong school to attend.

Mr. Ensor's first sentence was the only one that was an intelligent statement. Perhaps it should remind him what he wrote: "I write in protest over the visit of Playboy Magazine."

Well, I'm writing in protest of his letter. Instead of protesting the visit, he attacked the women who are proud to be a Saluki and are not embarrassed by or ignorant of the school's image. I would like to applaud every woman who had the courage to try out and congratulate the women who were chosen. —Kimberly McMillan, sophomore, psychology/administration of justice

Watch gay, limp wrist make fist

Another example of "man's inhumanity towards man." Hmm, how do I approach this brother? Maybe I should start by answering his rhetorical question "how does a state constitutional amendment condemning homosexuality violate civil rights?"

Any law that encourages institutions and individuals to morally belittle, perhaps even coercively eliminate, any non-threatening characteristic of another individual is a violation of civil rights. Mr. Striegel's contrast between Americans and gay/lesbian/bi rights is not morally, rationally, or constitutionally sound. Neither skin color nor sexual preference have any influence on one's civic character. Rights are fundamental to all humans, and they cannot be abrogated by any subcategorization.

Mr. Striegel should have avoided using his religion for the justification of the rights of some but not of others. According to the Old Testament, the cursed sons of Ham, the people of Kush (i.e., Black Africans) were to be slaves of Shem and Japheth. American slaveholders and Afrikaaners often quoted this passage. I do not accept this as "divine truth." I take it that Mr. Striegel worships the jealousy vengeful Jehovah, and not his so-called son, Jesus, the compassionate teacher.

A few miscellaneous things: his comparison of a gay/lesbian/bi man or woman to a cross-dressing space alien is what is sick, not any peoples' mutually-consenting sex lives. Contrary to Mr. Striegel's hypocritical assertion, gay men and women are not being tolerated. Anyone on a crusade to eliminate homo/bisexuality must truly fear, despite the denials. Is he afraid that someone he thinks is inferior may feed him when he is hungry or clothe him when he is naked?

Finally, if he thinks the gay wrist is limp, watch it make a fist. There will be no more going back "in the closet." —Michael Schaefer, graduate student, history.

Party image of little effect on career

This is in response to two separate articles which appeared in the October 27th issue of the DE concerning Playboy's effect on the school. Professors, as well as students, have spoke of Playboy's ranking of SIU as detrimental to the college and to student's chances of obtaining meaningful careers upon graduation from SIU. We'd like to address a simple question concerning both articles. First, does the ranking inhibit the professors ability to teach effectively? Second, does the ranking inhibit the student's ability to learn and therefore express tangible abilities to employers upon graduation? The answer to both questions is no. An employer will not simply look at a student's place of graduation and say, "I'm sorry, but we can't hire you because your school is a party school." He will interview you, assess your personality, abilities, and transcript, and then make his decision. The notion that "party" students will affect "good" students is ridiculous.

Secondly in response to Mr. Ensor's letter about "respect for those who have made SIU a place worth coming to." You showed little to no respect toward the women who will be in Playboy. These women will be representing our school in a national magazine and you proceed to call them names such as sluts and bimbos of which they are undeserving. If you would like respect we ask you to please show some.

SIU is a learning institution, but extracurricular activities make up a large part of every student's life. College is what one makes of it. We applaud the women who posed in Playboy and encourage them to stay involved, after all isn't that what college is all about? —Kevin M. Beachler, freshman, business and Steven W. Lamis, junior, finance/business management

Attitudes to T-shirt, gays promote division, violence

In the last several weeks, I have seen a number of letters to the editor which promote attitudes of division, distrust, and hatred. First, here were the letters regarding the young man with the "F— Tipper Gore" t-shirt. Then on 10/21/92, there was the letter regarding homosexuality. On both sides of the t-shirt incident were cries of injustice. One side argued that such a statement against Tipper Gore was inherently violent. The other side argued that the actions of Tipper Gore (regarding censorship) were inherently violent (to the rights of citizens).

The second issue, the letter regarding the "normalcy" of homosexuality, suggested that the "perversion" of homosexuality is unjust because it is violent against our society's "moral" way of life. The letter itself was inherently violent because it suggested that "we" all would be better off if these "perverts" were not around.

The problem with the attitudes promoted is that they are inherently violent. Violence against a group because they do not hold the same values promotes division, distrust, and hatred. I propose that this promotion is leading our society to ruin. Although I believe such attitudes are a function of the environment we are socialized into, we have an obligation (especially in an educational setting) to be critical of such attitudes. I am not suggesting censorship of those attitudes, for to deny their existence is to deny our responsibility. I am suggesting that we promote dialogue, and progressive communication, to rid ourselves, as a society, of the attitudes which promote violence, division, distrust, and hatred. —H. Paul LeBlanc III, graduate, speech communication

Keys to avoiding hatred, fear are understanding differences

I sincerely hope that Brad Striegel does not represent the future of our justice system. As a member of the white, heterosexual male community that dominates this culture, I understand how easy it is to be insensitive to other groups of people.

It is very difficult to understand and accept people and practices that are different from our own. However hatred and oppressive legislation only serve to propagate insensitivity and conflict.

We must understand that homosexuals are people. They are not something to fear, an object or a word on paper, but real people.

teachers, co-workers, friends and family. When Mr. Striegel says he wouldn't care "if every gay person in the world dropped dead at once." I think we all have to realize that he is talking about people we all know and care about.

This letter is not intended to attack Mr. Striegel or to instigate a war of words. It is merely written as a plea for understanding. To understand that there are many differences between all of us in this country and hatred and fear can only cause more pain and trouble for us all.

Understanding and acceptance are the keys to our future. —Martin Brief, graduate student, photography.

Bible explains future of gays: against norms

This is in response to the letter that Heather Burrow wrote in response to the article on homosexuals in the DE. Heather, I'm glad you're a fine Christian woman who feels deep concern for homosexuals rights, maybe you should read Romans chapter 1. (It's in the Bible).

I also would like to thank you for solving the nature vs. nurture controversy with one fell swoop of your pen.

It's nice to know that after 4 years of study in biology and evolution that personal lifestyle choices are all genetically implanted and that we are all walking machines not responsible for our own choices.

Tell me, O genius English major, if I choose to date a woman of color that I should be granted minority rights? It is against the norm of society.

The choice of one's mate or dating partner should not be a qualifier for minority status. It should not be the basis for discrimination either.

I believe that homosexuals are people with rights, but they do not deserve preferential treatment in an "Affirmative Action" style. If the gentleman that wrote the article is a latent homosexual because he dislikes gays, does that make you a latent "gaybasher" because you don't like him? —Roy Eggensperger, graduate, anthropology

Police Blotter

Douglas S. Kimmel, 23, of No. 4 Rolling Acres, reported that someone broke into his locked car between 7:10 and 7:15 p.m. Saturday, Carbondale Police said. Kimmel said a Nintendo and game cartridge were taken for an estimated loss of $200, police said.

Police said someone entered the locked car of Pam D. Cannon, 21, of Allen 3, by unknown means while it was parked at Checkers, 760 E. Grand, between 10 p.m. Friday and 12:15 a.m. Saturday, Cannon said her leather coat and wallet were missing. Loss is estimated at $480, police said.

Police said Ray A. Pugh, 24, was arrested at his house at 703 N. Allen in Carbondale at 5:36 p.m. Friday. He was arrested under a Jackson County warrant for felony murder and aggravated discharge of a firearm and was taken to Jackson County Jail, police said.

Pierre L. Tucker, 21, of 2511 S. Illinois Ave., said someone entered his house between 1 p.m. Thursday and 3 a.m. Friday, police reported. A jacket, TV and microwave were reported missing. Estimated loss is $450, police said.

On Thursday morning, the U.S. Department of Labor reported that initial claims for state unemployment insurance dropped 16,000 in the week ending Oct. 24. "Anytime there is a decrease in people seeking unemployment benefits, it's a good sign for the employment market," Fitzgerald said. "Although it is too early to call, the outlook does look pleasant."

As a result of the positive news, the Dow Jones average was at 3,243.84 at the close of business Thursday, up 20.80 points from Wednesday.

On Friday, the labor department released its monthly report on employment conditions.

According to the report, there was an increase in non-farm payroll employment in October, which was limited by the conclusion of federally sponsored summer jobs for young people.

Fitzgerald said the department's report is a sign of better days to come for the economy.

"The economy is continuing show improvements," Fitzgerald said. "If this trend keeps up, there will definitely be happier days in 1993."

At close Friday, the Dow Jones average had dropped 3.78 points, trimming its gain for the election week to 13.78 points.

Fitzgerald said the small decrease in points is common after a large-scale gain such as that on Thursday.

Clinton sidesteps advisers in choice of transition team

The Washington Post

When President-elect Clinton sat down with his transition planners on Wednesday afternoon for their initial post-election briefing, the first palace coup of his budding administration was already well underway.

Clinton was still bone-tired after a final, 29-hour campaign swing and a long night of victory parties and few hours sleep. He had barely begun to think about the next steps. But his transition advisers wanted him to move quickly.

They presented Clinton with a massive briefing book, and urged him to get the process going immediately by naming campaign chairman Mickey Kantor, a partner in a powerful Los Angeles law firm, as "transition director, with former deputy secretary of state Warren M. Christopher as transition board chairman.

But the weary Clinton wasn't buying. It was all too tidy for a man who likes to null his options and make his own decisions. He was in no rush, Clinton told the transition advisers, to do anything until he felt more rested.

Whether the advisers realized it or not, that was a signal that Kantor's appointment was in big trouble, ambushed by an angry campaign team that had never worked well with him and who now believed his law firm was giving the appearance of wanting to cash in on a Clinton presidency.

The campaign team got to Clinton first. "They were hot," said one person who saw it unfold. "They just chopped his legs off."

On Friday, after two days of damaging reports about the intrigue and fighting among his top advisers, Clinton moved to put the issue behind him, naming Christopher as transition director and appointing Washington lawyer and civil rights leader Vernon E. Jordan Jr. as chairman of the transition board.

But the episode provides an early insight into a Clinton presidency, from how he likes to make decisions to the lines of power that are forming to the symbols and signals the president-elect hopes to send the country as he shapes the first Democratic government in 16 years.

One Clinton adviser described the uproar as "just a little bit of unpleasantness" in a campaign that has weathered far more serious crises.

That may be correct, but it also represented a clash of competing interests and cultures that could be replayed throughout a Clinton presidency, given the Arkansas governor's disparate networks of friends and advisers who are at odds on matters both of policy and of political style.

Clinton's rebuff to Kantor surprised his friends within the Democratic establishment. To them, Kantor was one of the true Clinton loyalists, devoted to both the president-elect and his wife, Hillary, with whom he had been friends for more than a decade.

They also objected to his portrayal in the press as what one friend called "a greedy, avaricious, corporate lobbyist thirsting for power." From his friends' vantage point, Kantor would do nothing to tarnish Clinton's presidency and never sought the transition directorship for himself.

"He's been through an unbelievable two days," one Democrat who talked to Kantor during the week said on Friday. "He's fine ... but he was damned angry" by the roughing-up he received in the press.

But there was another view of Kantor inside the campaign: that of a man who lacked the management skills to run an enterprise as far flung and hard headed as Clinton needed.

The tension between Kantor and the rest of the campaign's top staff dated back months. Although he carried the title of campaign manager, Kantor had no day-to-day responsibility for running the campaign and had an uneasy relationship with James Carville, the top strategist, George Stephanopoulos, the communications director, Eli Segal, the chief of staff, and others.

He worked out of an office along the corridor of power in the Little Rock headquarters, but his was an oasis of serenity surrounded by the explosive energy of Clinton's aggressive and irreverent team of operatives.

Country singing star Alan Jackson rocks the jukebox at SIUC arena

By Lynelle Marquardt
General Assignment Writer

Concert Review

Country star Alan Jackson rocked more than the jukebox last Thursday night as he performed to a crowd of 5,851 at the SIUC arena.

Jackson brought the fans to their feet as he bounded on stage wearing his trademark white hat and crooned the first few songs while two large screens displayed pictures from his infant to high school years.

The screens gave everyone in the arena a close-up view of Jackson during the concert and showed some of his videos.

The audience roared with delight during the video "She's Got The Rhythm (And I Got The Blues)," Jackson's first single off his new album, "A Lot About Livin' (And A Little About Love)."

In addition to the screens, the colorful light show dazzled the audience with its designs and motions.

Jackson mixed his toe-tapping, faster songs with some slower songs about love and heartbreak in a way that kept the show moving at an energetic and entertaining pace.

Fans seemed to enjoy songs such as "I Don't Need The Booze (To Get A Buzz On)" and "She Likes It Too," because of the fun lyrics and upbeat music.

His performances of the slower songs "Here in the Real World," "Tonight I Climb The Wall" and "If It Ain't One Thing (It's You)" were both heartfelt and touching.

Jackson also performed country sensation Randy Travis' hit, "A Better Class Of Losers," a song he and Travis co-wrote.

The highlight of the show was Jackson's performance of the hit song "Don't Rock the Jukebox," when a 15-foot jukebox gently rocked behind the band throughout the song.

The fans demanded Jackson come back on stage for an encore by screaming and stomping until he returned to perform a song called "Mercury Blues."

But audience members already were hyped because of an energetic show by Diamond Rio preceding Jackson's appearance.

Diamond Rio exploded with energy as members danced and honky-tonked to a variety of country songs.

From its contemporary hits to the best of bluegrass, the group kept the fans on the edges of their seats.

The crowd danced to songs from Diamond Rio's self-titled debut album, such as "Mirror, Mirror," and enjoyed the song "In a Week or Two," from their second album, "Close to the Edge," which was released in October.

The song "Meet In The Middle" was the highlight of Diamond Rio's performance, as the band encouraged the audience to sing along with the refrain.

Diamond Rio's bluegrass songs were entertaining and very well done so that the whole audience could enjoy them, not just bluegrass fans.

The members of Diamond Rio truly appeared to enjoy performing and seemed to light up the stage with their charisma.

Members of Diamond Rio talked about Carbondale's partying reputation and how great the audience was several times throughout the show, delighting the fans who remained on their feet after the performance until Diamond Rio also came back for an encore.

The combination of Jackson's more traditional country style and Diamond Rio's contemporary edge drew a large number of fans of all ages to the arena.

Reorganization in Congress

Changes in House may translate into problem resolution

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—A Democratic president and the biggest freshman class in 44 years have prompted a full-scale reorganization of Congress and raised the likelihood that some of the nation's most divisive issues could be resolved after years of stalemate.

Thirty-two spots have opened up in two "hot" House committees—Ways and Means, which proposes taxes to pay for the government's business, and Appropriations, which decides how to spend the money. Experienced members are ready to abandon other committees for the chance to win one of these plum assignments.

Legislative logjams on critical issues—legislation guaranteeing women the right to abortion, imposing gun control and campaign finance reform—could give way after years of gridlock. The balanced budget amendment, narrowly defeated this year but still a popular idea, is likely to get a fresh look.

In the House, leaders must carefully cultivate 110 freshmen whose displeasure could cause older heads to roll. Democratic chieftains are meeting with incoming members three times this week to learn their desires.

At the same time, however, leaders have a rare opportunity to impose party discipline, and the Democratic leadership is expected to deliver the message: Good committee assignments can be obtained, but loyalty on tough votes will be demanded in return.

The Senate will have at least 11 new members, four of them women. Democrats failed to win a filibuster-proof majority, but will have the weight of a Democratic White House behind them for the first time in 12 years. Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole of Kansas will become the most powerful Republican in government.

Scarcely had Tuesday's election results become known before the congressional job stampede began. Retirement, death or defeat had left three House committees without chairmen and 11 committees without ranking minority members. Dozens of subcommittees lost chairmen or ranking members.

The Appropriations Committee, which dictates spending in every aspect of government life, has a perhaps unprecedented 19 vacancies and will experience a top-to-bottom change as congressional leaders adjust to the new political realities in Washington.

With a member of their party in the White House, House Democratic leaders will attempt to shape spending and tax legislation to accommodate the new president's economic proposals. The Appropriations Committee, which for years has prided itself on its independence and bipartisanship, will be under increased pressure to embrace the new Democratic agenda.

Rep. Jamie L. Whitten, D-Miss., 82, who has tenaciously clung to the appropriations Committee chairmanship despite health problems, will be forced aside by the Democratic caucus and likely be replaced by Rep. William H. Natcher, D-Ky., according to congressional sources.

Although Natcher is a year older than Whitten, he is in good health and has proved able and responsive to the Democratic leadership in steering 13 spending bills past House shoals this year.

Democrats say privately that the only question remaining is whether Whitten will be allowed to retain the chairmanship of the rural development and agriculture subcommittee, a post the 51-year veteran has held almost continuously since 1949.

Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla. is interested in jumping to Appropriations and displacing Whitten on the subcommittee, according to several sources.

Ex-Czechoslovak leader Dubcek dies in Prague after car accident

The Washington Post

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia—Alexander Dubcek, 70, the Czechoslovak Communist leader whose 1968 efforts to introduce "socialism with a human face" were crushed by a Soviet invasion, died Nov. 7 in Prague.

Mr. Dubcek, who suffered multiple injuries in a car accident Sept. 1 near Prague, the Czechoslovak capital, died of "failure of vital organs," according to the official state news agency CSTK.

Dubcek was a beloved figure to many Czechs and Slovaks for his role in the brief period known as the Prague Spring. The Soviet invasion in August 1968 forced Dubcek from office, and to Moscow in chains. He returned home, but suffered more than 20 years of ostracism and public disgrace at the hands of the Communist hard-liners who succeeded him. Soviet troops remained in Czechoslovakia for the next 23 years.

Dubcek, however, lived long enough to see his tormentors toppled during the "Velvet Revolution" of November 1989. The fall of communism also marked Dubcek's return to political life, and he played a highly visible, if not decisive, role in the street demonstrations and tense negotiations that ended four decades of Communist rule. Crowds that gathered in Prague's Wenceslas Square in those tumultuous weeks looked up to a balcony one cold evening to see Dubcek dance a jig with soon-to-be President Vaclav Havel as the nation's hard-line Communist rulers agreed to surrender power.

After the fall of communism, Dubcek served two years as chairman of the democratically elected federal parliament. Despite the poor showing of his Slovak Social Democratic Party in June elections this year, he remained an influential figure at home and abroad, and an important power broker on the Slovak political scene. He had been mentioned as a possible candidate for the presidency of the independent Slovak state that probably will come into existence in January.

Since 1989, Dubcek had been criticized by right-wing anti-communists for failing to stand up to the Soviet invasion two decades ago, and for what some said was his less-than-forceful stewardship of the federal parliament in recent times. But the courtly, silver-haired Dubcek was respected by many others as a stabilizing force during the often chaotic first two years of democratic rule.

Bush officials considering aggressive final measures

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—With its window of opportunity quickly closing, senior officials in the Bush administration are considering whether to move aggressively to push through last-minute policy measures or to opt for a caretaker operation until President-elect Bill Clinton takes over.

The debate is not an idle one among political losers whose opportunities for shaping government policy are about to end. In both foreign affairs and domestic policy, President Bush, although a lame duck, still has a number of significant opportunities. Forceful action could present Clinton with a series of faits-accomplis that would be difficult to reverse.

Included are issues as intensely emotional as improving relations with Vietnam and as politically difficult as allowing British Airways to buy a major stake in USAir—a step Clinton has opposed.

In addition, the Pentagon is considering a risky major foreign policy initiative to send aid to the troubled former Yugoslav Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina through Belgrade, a move that could saddle the new President with a military operation from which it would be difficult to withdraw.

And, apparently with Clinton's blessing, the State Department is pressing ahead with efforts to move the Middle East peace talks forward without waiting for the new administration's senior leadership to take over.

Not since Jimmy Carter replaced Gerald R. Ford in the White House 16 years ago has there been a comparable transition period. When Bush took over in 1989, he was slipping into a White House in which he had played a part for eight years as vice president under Ronald Reagan. There were few issues on which the outgoing and incoming administrations had serious disagreements.

And in the period between Carter's defeat in 1980 and Reagan's inauguration, the Iran hostage crisis kept Carter deeply involved until the last minutes of his term in the most pressing business of the presidency—to the point of catching only cat naps in the Oval Office on at least one night.

Outgoing Bush team vows to press for solid Middle East peace results

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—With Israel and its Arab adversaries warily edging toward peace after almost half a century of conflict, the Bush administration intends to increase pressure on both sides to obtain some concrete results before President-elect Bill Clinton takes over.

Administration officials say they are determined to avoid the lame-duck syndrome when it comes to Middle East affairs, vowing that until Clinton's inauguration 10 weeks from now, they will press hard for progress on what could be the most important foreign policy accomplishment of President Bush's tenure.

Both Arab and Israeli spokespersons say they, too, want to avoid a post-election lull in the negotiations, which began more than a year ago in Madrid. Since then, relations between antagonists, who once would not speak to each other at all and spoke about each other only through clenched teeth, have evolved into regular meetings where civility has become standard.

Gearing up for the final push, Dennis Ross, the top Middle East strategist for former Secretary of State James A.

Baker III, returned to the State Department on Friday to join Assistant Secretary of State Edward Djerejian at the top of the U.S. mediation team. Djerejian has been alone in the job since August, when Ross followed Baker to the White House in an attempt to revive Bush's re-election campaign. Ross resumed his post as the department's chief of policy planning.

After a brief pause for the election, the talks resume Monday in Washington. In separate but parallel negotiations, Israel is bargaining with Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and the Palestinians.

U.S. officials say the Djerejian-Ross team has two objectives for the transition period:

The first is to nail down emerging agreements between Israel and Syria and between Israel and Jordan on the subjects to be addressed in an eventual peace treaty, and to nudge Israel and the Palestinians toward a compromise for limited self-government for the Palestinians living in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The second is to bring Clinton's Middle East team, once it is named, up to speed so the talks will continue without a major break after Jan. 20.

Even before all the election returns were counted Tuesday night, Bush pledged that his team would cooperate with Clinton. "I want the country to know that our entire administration will work closely with his team to ensure the smooth transition of power," he said.

But just how smooth has yet to be worked out.

"We could say let's stamp our position on things, and let Clinton unstamp it," said a senior White House official. Or, he said, the rest of the administration could follow Bush's command, in effect putting major and minor policy decisions on hold.

"That will be debated next week," he said. "The general posture of being aggressive versus not making waves will be debated."

But, while some policy measures working their way through government are important enough to warrant direct involvement by Bush or senior aides, many other issues do not rise to that level—a reality that gives lower-level officials power to act forcefully in the final days even if top members of the administration advocate a low-key approach.

This weekend, senior administration figures are, for the most part, still recuperating from their losing campaign effort.

We're looking for seniors who like working with all kinds of hardware.

Careers in data processing, accounting, actuarial, and auditing at State Farm.

At State Farm, we understand the concept of "work" Believe it or not, we also understand the concept of "play."

That's because we don't think you can be really outstanding at the first without having an appreciation for the second. Which is exactly why a career at State Farm in Bloomington could be the ideal place for you.

You'll work for one of the country's most respected companies on the most advanced computer equipment in the industry. You'll be challenged and stimulated. You'll be rewarded with excellent pay and benefits. You'll make your classmates very envious.

What's more, you'll also have time to appreciate the finer things in life. That's because Bloomington isn't just a great place to start a career, it's a great place to live, to enjoy, to start a family (if, indeed, you're ready to start thinking about that). In addition to the community's pleasant neighborhoods, inviting parks, and other recreational facilities, you'll find the universities that offer a host of cultural and social activities to take advantage of.

If you're a senior with a math, accounting, data processing, or computer science background, come talk to us at your college placement office. We're looking for people who are motivated and outgoing. People who enjoy challenges on the job — and away from it. After all, you're not just looking for a great job. You're looking for a great way of life.

World affairs pose major challenge for Clinton

The Washington Post

With the transition clock ticking the political life out of the Bush administration, other nations are adjusting their hopes, expectations and in some cases their actions to America's choice as president of a youthful Southern governor intent on rebuilding the U.S. economy.

Having campaigned as "a different kind of Democrat," President-elect Clinton now finds himself in a different kind of world—one that increasingly questions the direction and force of U.S. leadership in world affairs.

"The world is accustomed to America taking several months off every four years for an election and then getting back behind the wheel and starting to drive again," a British banker observed last week after the election. "But this time there is a real question of whether America is strong enough to take that wheel in hand again. That's the difference."

"America has a tradition in foreign affairs of leading or leaving," added a Japanese diplomat. "There seems to be little in the way of a middle approach, which is probably what is needed today."

A survey by Washington Post correspondents around the world suggests that the long and bitter U.S. campaign, in which a weak economy undermined an internationally experienced incumbent, has itself contributed to a spreading impression abroad that Clinton will preside over a more inward-looking, economically troubled United States with a diminished interest in leading the post-Cold War world.

Foreign officials, opinion-makers and citizens fastened in the campaign's home stretch not on a victory by Clinton but on the spectacle of Bush failing. That contributed to an initially anxious reaction abroad.

But in the days since the election, many people abroad seem to be taking a second look at the vigor and skill that Clinton and Vice President-elect Gore demonstrated in winning and finding reason for hope that the United States will rebound under a new team.

"Clinton and Gore belong to the successor generation," a German official said. "This generation is falsely blamed as being more interested in domestic affairs than in foreign policy. To the contrary, they are the exchange generation—the people who did the Rhodes and Fulbright scholarships. They are internationalists."

The sense that things will at least not get worse under a democratic administration was echoed in other capitals, including Moscow and Tokyo. Japan—which is due to announce what will probably be a record trade surplus with the United States about the time Clinton is inaugurated—seems less nervous with Clinton than it would be with most Democrats. "What we have heard from Mr. Clinton sounds like he is a believer in free trade," said Jiro Tanahashi, vice minister of Japan's powerful Ministry of Trade and Industry.

Clinton seemed to acknowledge the mixed texture of a world greeting him with both anxiety and hope when he stepped forward in Little Rock, Ark., the day after his election to declare that no foreign nation "should doubt America's resolve" or forget that President Bush has full power until Jan. 20.

Clinton's quick response sought to reassure anxious allies and to deter the United States' adversaries from testing him before he has had a chance to shape his own agenda, his aides said.

But the Washington Post survey suggests that there will be no moratorium on dramatic change during the 78-day transition—an eternity by the standards of most governments today—or during Clinton's promised action-filled first 100 days in office.

Achieving power on a domestic mandate, Clinton divulged remarkably little during the campaign about the specific steps he would take to change the United States' posture in the world, and his foreign policy advisers gave no sense to foreign officials who stayed in constant touch during the campaign of any new architecture Clinton would impose on foreign policy.

But a series of individual tests and challenges "will soon force him to come to solutions that will end up having universal application," one adviser said, in effect connecting the dots into what the rest of the world will see as a unified policy.

Middle East policies, peace concerns for new president

The Washington Post

Expectations in Israel are that Clinton will want to devote little time to the Middle East early in his term and will appoint a special negotiator to run the talks begun under Bush. Officials in Jerusalem point out that Clinton opens his presidency in relatively placid circumstances for the Middle East, with no strain on the West's oil supply, peace talks under way, Iraq's military in ruins and a rebuilding Iran still exhausted militarily and economically.

Clinton's biggest eventual challenge in the region may be reconciling his declared support for democracy and human rights with the growing strength at the ballot box or in the streets of Islamic fundamentalist parties. The political systems of Algeria, Jordan, Tunisia, Sudan and to a lesser extent Egypt and Morocco already face serious pressures from fundamentalist forces. Many Arab rulers are worried the United States is gradually moving to accept the fundamentalists as the wave of the future, says Ghassan Salameh, a political scientist from Lebanon. "Unless the new president reviews in depth the administration's policy, we might soon enter an era of many Irans. ... Does Clinton encourage free elections, when an Islamic triumph is expected or not?"

Iran suggests it wants better relations with Washington but is not willing to make any concessions on its part to achieve it. "The Republicans have done all possible against Iran, leaving nothing more against it to be done by the Democrats," Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Mahmoud Waazi said recently.

How Clinton sees the opportunities and the challenges of the Persian Gulf, the major source of the United States' imported oil, remains unclear. It seems he will be no more focused on it at the beginning of his presidency than were his three immediate predecessors—all of whom saw their authority severely damaged by events and entanglements in the Gulf before they left office.

Trade relations with China concern for Clinton camp

The Washington Post

Diplomats—and some of Clinton's advisers—expect one of his first foreign policy pronouncements to deal with China. He repeatedly criticized Bush in the campaign for "coddling" Chinese dictators and ignoring the democratic revolt crushed by force in 1989. Clinton reportedly will attempt to lay down markers for Beijing to avoid a confrontation in June, when China's most favored national trade status will be up for review.

Clinton's dilemma, specialists on China say, will be to find ways to show he is tough on China without killing the economic dynamism and entrepreneurial spirit that is flourishing in the country's southern region and elsewhere. More than 25 percent of China's $83 billion in exports this year is due to go to the United States.

The president-elect's task is also complicated by the extreme misgivings voiced by Japan and Britain about isolating China.

London fears retaliation by Beijing against Hong Kong, while Tokyo is concerned about instability producing chaos and breakdown in its large neighbor.

Russia will use the human rights appeal to seek U.S. support for protecting Russian minorities in former Soviet republics. Israel is concerned about renewed pressure on its policies in the occupied West Bank and Gaza occupied territories. Zaire, Sudan and Indonesia are among Third World nations that make the list of countries where human rights could develop as a problem with Washington.

But in general the end of the Cold War and the collapse of the bipolar structure of global alliances appears to have made human rights a less salient issue in determining the United States' involvement with erstwhile allies and adversaries. Clinton indicated during the campaign that he would make human rights a factor, but not the overriding factor, in dealing with foreign nations.

Approach to NAFTA treaty important for world trade

The Washington Post

Clinton's insistence that he will concentrate on rebuilding the U.S. economy is endorsed by the country's main trading partners, who fear that continuing economic decline will encourage protectionism and isolationism here.

Other nations are busy analyzing the qualified endorsement Clinton gave to the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) that Bush negotiated with Canada and Mexico, which still must be approved by Congress.

They are looking for clues whether the new administration will entertain the idea of using NAFTA to pursue a hemispheric strategy of trade and investment that could contribute to the formation of rival trading blocs, or will instead commit itself to preserving free trade in the international trade system known as GATT.

President Bush's defeat was keenly felt in Latin America, which expected him to emphasize the Americas as an economic unit. Mexican Commerce Secretary Jaime Serra Puche felt compelled to add to his friendly message of congratulations to Clinton on Wednesday a warning that NAFTA, in Mexico's view, "will not be subject to any renegotiation."

American media gives foreigners bad impression

Newsday

Ray Borner is not a name burned into the memories of American basketball fans. In Borner's own words, to Americans, he's an "unknown person (who) doesn't matter."

Considering the events of the last week, all foreign basketball players are unknown persons who do not matter—at least in the eyes of the American media.

Borner is the Australian who last January said if he had the choice of playing in the Olympic gold-medal game against the U.S. and Magic Johnson, he would prefer to sit out the game and accept a silver medal. He was worried about an on-court accident that could result in the human immunodeficiency virus being transmitted to him.

That position subjected Borner to considerable ridicule in the U.S. There was little, if any, sympathy for his fears.

The Dream Team was insulted. When the Americans reached Barcelona, several members vowed to embarrass the Australians on the court if the two teams met, which they did not.

But something peculiar happened in Barcelona. Borner, who was reached Thursday at his home in Keilor Downs, Australia, said only one American journalist asked him about the controversy during the Olympics. Borner's position in that interview was that he had been educated about HIV and that the Australian team had decided to play against Magic if the two teams were forced to meet.

"I've certainly been educated about the disease since I first spoke out," Borner said. "But only one person asked me about it."

The apathy toward the issue of HIV being transmitted during a game was pervasive during the Tournament of the Americas and the Olympics. Publicists for the Dream Team say they do not remember any U.S. journalists initiating stories on the possible dangers to foreign players. There were many stories before Johnson's appearance in the All-

Star Game in February, but once that game ended, the stories appeared rarely, if at all.

It wasn't until NBA players—notably, Karl Malone and Gerald Wilkins, who were quoted last Sunday in The New York Times—expressed fears that the issue suddenly became legitimate.

Borner was surprised to learn that when NBA players and NBA executives, including Phoenix Suns General Manager Jerry Colangelo, began saying the same things he said almost a year ago, there was sympathy and understanding for their concerns. To Borner, it says a lot about the American media.

"They've basically said that Magic's a god, which in America he's viewed that way," said Borner, a 6-foot-9, 253-pound forward. "People that don't matter dared to go against him, and so we were criticized. But now that some people that aren't quite on the same respected basis, but still are very highly regarded—like Karl Malone—have got the same questions about the disease, suddenly it's all right."

It's an ugly thought for Australians and other foreigners. The message from the American media, to be blunt about it, is: "It's all right to bleed on the foreigners; but don't bleed on the home team."

Arizona upsets Huskies; Colorado bounces back

Zapnews

ARIZONA 16, WASHINGTON 13

Steve McLaughlin kicked three field goals to lead 12th-ranked Arizona to a 16-3 upset victory over top-ranked Washington in a Pacific 10 Conference game. The loss snapped Washington's 22-game winning streak and will likely move idle Miami of Florida into the number one spot in the country. The Huskies fell to 8-1 while Arizona improved to 6-2-1.

McLaughlin missed a 51-yard field goal in the final seconds of Arizona's 8-7 loss at Miami on September 26th. Quarterback George Malauulu scored on a one-yard run with 48 seconds remaining in the game to seal the win. McLaughlin kicked field of 34, 20 and 30 yards. Travis Hanson kicked a 24-yard field goal in the third quarter for the lone Washington points.

The Huskies, who were averaging 29 points per game, were shut down by the Arizona defense. The Wildcats held Washington star running back Napoleon Kaufman to 50 rushing yards. Arizona's Billy Johnson gained 99 yards on 21 carries. Malauulu completed 5 of 12 passes for 54 yards and rushed for 37 more yards. Washington's Mark Brunell completed 25 of 41 passes for 243 yards and one interception.

COLORADO 28, OKLAHOMA ST 0

Lamont Warren had a pair of touchdown runs for Colorado as the 16th-ranked Buffaloes rebounded from a loss to Nebraska to defeat Oklahoma State, 28-0, in a Big Eight contest. Warren scored on runs of two and 15 yards to help Colorado (7-1-1, 3-1-1) build a 14-0 halftime lead. Kordell Stewart threw a nine-yard touchdown pass to Michael Westbrook in the third quarter and Koy Detmer added a four-yard scoring strike to Norm Barnett in the fourth. Colorado was trounced by Nebraska, 52-7, last week. Oklahoma State fell to 4-5 and 2-3.

MICHIGAN 40, NORTHWESTERN 7

Elvis Grbac threw three touchdown passes to Derrick Alexander to lead fourth-ranked Michigan to its 19th straight Big 10 Conference victory, a 40-7 romp over Northwestern. The win was also the Wolverines 20th in a row against the Wildcats. Grbac, who entered the game ranked second nationally in passing efficiency, completed his first three passes for 152 yards and two touchdowns. He connected with Alexander on a 32-yard strike to give Michigan a 7-0 lead just 72 seconds into the game and the duo later teamed up on scoring plays of 57 and two yards. Grbac threw a 65-yard pass to Amani Toomer on Michigan's next possession and the Wolverines (8-0-1, 6-0) grabbed a 14-0 lead on Tyrone Wheatley's 14-yard run just 6:35 into the game. Northwestern registered its only points a little over three minutes later as Len Williams hit Lee Gissendander with a 42-yard touchdown pass. Michigan answered back with 4:47 left in the opening quarter as Alexander hauled in the 57-yard pass from Grbac. The Wolverines scored a second-quarter safety and took a 30-7 halftime lead as Grbac found Alexander from two yards out. Grbac completed 7 of 14 passes for 205 yards before leaving the game early in the third quarter. Wheatley carried 23 times for 143 yards Michigan backup Todd Collins threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to Mercury Hayes to cap the scoring with 2:07 to play in the game. Northwestern dropped to (2-7, 2-4).

Baseball's expansion entering final stage

The Baltimore Sun

Baseball's expansion process will enter its final stage today, when the Baltimore Orioles and the 25 other existing major-league teams submit their 15-man protected lists to the Florida Marlins and Colorado Rockies for a week of intense study.

It will not be a particularly happy day for the youth-oriented Orioles, though they probably had an easier time than some clubs narrowing their roster for the Nov. 17 expansion draft.

"A good part of the list was pretty easy to put together," said club President Larry Lucchino, "but the last several passes were very difficult and required a massive amount of effort. Nothing we do is more important than protecting the talent we have in the organization."

The process lasted months and included a series of organizational meetings and mock drafts. The Orioles would assemble a hypothetical protected list and then conduct a hypothetical draft. Then they would change the 15-man list and draft again...and again.

"We would look at what we might lose in each situation and see how sick to our stomachs we got," Lucchino said.

The result was an organizational consensus that never will be made public, but the makeup of the confidential list may not be as hard to figure out as it was to formulate.

Owners to vote on fate of Giants

Zapnews

ST. PETERSBURG — Tampa Bay baseball fans should learn soon whether the San Francisco Giants will be moving to St. Petersburg's Suncoast Dome by the start of next year's major league baseball season.

A Tampa investment group has offered Giant's owner Bob Lurie $115 million dollars for the team, but that offer was countered with an offer by a California group that hopes to keep the team on the west coast.

Owners of major league baseball's other teams are preparing to vote in which offer to accept. Because the major league hierarchy is known to frown on team relocations, most observers are giving St. Petersburg only a slim chance of landing the Giants.

NFL first half unpredictable

Newsday

One of the most refreshingly unpredictable NFL seasons began its second half Sunday afternoon. In the meantime, here's a look at the best and worst of the first half:

Most valuable player:

NFC—Emmitt Smith, Dallas Cowboys running back. Smith leads the league with 896 rushing yards and nine touchdowns. The Cowboys will go as far as he takes them. AFC—John Elway, Denver Broncos quarterback. With Elway, the Broncos are 5-3 and leading the AFC West. Without him, they're nowhere.

Best defensive player:

NFC—Wilber Marshall, Washington Redskins linebacker. Last season, he blossomed into a superb all-around player. This year, he's even better. AFC—John Offerdahl, Miami Dolphins linebacker. With a healthy Offerdahl, the Dolphins got off to a 6-0 start. After he suffered an abdominal muscle pull, they're winless in their past two games.

Best offensive player:

NFC—Smith. He has accounted for 85.3 percent of the Cowboys' rushing total of 1,051 yards. By comparison, Rodney Hampton of the Giants' total of 1,266. AFC—Barry Foster, Pittsburgh Steelers running back. Barring injury, Foster will break Franco Harris' team record of 1,246 rushing yards. He already has 865 yards to lead the conference.

Best coaching job:

NFC—Dennis Green, Minnesota Vikings. Green has the 6-2 Vikings in first place after an 8-8 season. AFC—Bill Cowher, Steelers. Pittsburgh was 7-9 last year. The Steelers are 6-2, in first place and thinking about Pasadena.

Worst coaching job:

NFC—Jerry Glanville, Atlanta Falcons. The Falcons reached the Analysis

NFC divisional playoffs last year after a 10-6 regular season. They'll be lucky to reach 8-8 this year. AFC—Bruce Coslet, New York Jets. After a 5-0 preseason and talk about an AFC East title, the 2-6 Jets are the most disappointing team in the NFL.

Rookie of the year:

NFC—Ricky Watters, San Francisco 49ers running back. Watters is technically in his second season, but because of an injury, he was never on the active roster last year. For all practical purposes, we're calling him a rookie. And for all practical purposes, he has resurrected the 49ers' running game with 612 yards. AFC—Steve Emtman, Indianapolis Colts defensive tackle. Within three years, this guy will be regarded as the best lineman in football.

Best game:

Pittsburgh's 21-20 comeback win over the Oilers Nov. 1 at Three Rivers Stadium. Neil O'Donnell threw two touchdown passes in the fourth quarter and Houston's Al Del Greco missed a 39-yard field goal in the final seconds.

Worst game:

Colts 6, Jets 3, OT. Blechch!

Biggest upset:

Giants 24, Redskins 7. What?!

Player missed the most:

Keith Jackson, former Philadelphia Eagles tight end who signed with the Dolphins. Think Randall Cunningham misses Jackson just a little bit?

Player missed the least:

Joe Montana, 49ers quarterback. Young is the highest-rated passer in the NFL, and the 49ers are 6-2 with a legitimate shot at the Super Bowl.

Rising stars:

Vikings second-year running back Terry Allen, who leads the team with 547 yards and seven touchdowns. Vikings third-year defensive tackle John Randle, who has seven sacks to make fans forget about Keith Millard. Favre, who just might be the best from the Class of '91 quarterbacks. Dolphins second-year linebacker Bryan Cox, who has 10 sacks.

Falling stars:

Raiders running back Marcus Allen, who has been taken out of Art Shell's three-back rotation. Cunningham, who has taken a seat on the bench for a week—or will it be longer? Bengals quarterback Boomer Esiason, who is third from last in the AFC ratings.

Comeback player of the year:

NFC—Chris Doleman, linebacker, Vikings. He already has nine sacks after getting only seven last season. AFC—Mark Bavaro, tight end, Cleveland Browns. After his Giants career was left for dead because of a knee injury, Bavaro made it back this year.

Most improved:

NFC—Cleveland Gary, running back, Rams. After running for only 245 yards last year, he already has 663. AFC—Cortez Kennedy, defensive tackle, Seattle Seahawks.

Best quote:

From Giants linebacker Pepper Johnson, who said after a 13-10 loss to the Raiders Oct. 4: "We just lost to a bunch of ducks, so what category does that put us in?"

Worst quote:

From Giants Coach Ray Handley, who said during training camp: "It is not the job of a head coach at this level to motivate."

Teams most likely to reach Super Bowl (in order):

NFC—49ers. Cowboys. Vikings. Eagles. Saints. Redskins. AFC—Steelers. Bills. Dolphins. Broncos. Chiefs. Oilers.

conference-leading 4-0 after Northern Iowa's 21-15 loss at Eastern Illinois.

SIUC has lost five straight, while the Bears have won three straight.

"This win turned out to be real important for us," SMSJ head coach Jesse Branch said. "Our destiny is now in our own hands."

The Salukis are idle Saturday and return to McAndrew Stadium Nov. 21 for the season finale against Indiana State.

Cowboys whip Lions, 37-3; Minnesota improve to 7-2 with 35-7 win over Bucs

Zapnews

EMMITT SMITH rushed for three touchdowns and Lin Elliott kicked three field goals as the Dallas Cowboys whipped the Detroit Lions, 37-3.

Smith scored twice in the final three minutes of the first quarter as the Cowboys continued to pull away as they avenged last season's 38-6 loss to Detroit in the NFC playoffs. The Cowboys, who improved their record to an NFL best 8-1, also snapped a three-game losing streak against the Lions (2-7).

Smith ran seven yards to give Dallas a 7-0 lead with 2:38 left in the opening quarter. Elliott had kicked a 30-yard field goal but a holding penalty on the Lions gave Dallas new life and Cowboys' coach Jimmy Johnson elected to take the points off the board.

The Cowboys padded the lead with a pair of third-quarter touchdowns. Aikman moved Dallas 75 yards in four plays on the opening possession and Smith went over from the one to tie his own club record of 12 rushing touchdowns in a season. The drive was highlighted by a 57-yard Aikman to Michael Irvin completion.

ROGER CRAIG rushed for a pair of touchdowns and the Minnesota defense accounted for two more scores as the NFC Central Division leading Vikings routed the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, 35-7.

The Vikings improved to 7-2 with the victory, their second straight. Minnesota has won nine of the last 11 meetings between the Vikings and the Bucs, including the last four.

Craig opened the scoring with a five-yard run midway through the opening quarter and the Vikings took a 14-0 lead less than two minutes later as Carlos Jenkins recovered a fumble by Tampa Bay quarterback Steve DeBerg and returned it 25 yards for a touchdown.

The Viking defense has scored four touchdowns in their last two games. Jenkins and Jack Del Rio each returned interceptions for touchdowns in Minnesota's 38-10 victory over Chicago Monday.

Offensively, both teams struggled with SMSU outitting the Salukis .163 to .090.

SIUC coach Sonya Locke said the SMSU match did not show a great hitting performance from either team.

"We had to play hard to win that second game," Locke said. "We didn't sustain the way we played in that game for the win. We had six block solos and 18 block assists while they had only one block solo and 14 block assists, and that was good in our favor. But, they outdug us by more than 20 digs."

Russell and Singleton led the Bears' offense with 12 kills each while Olden with 13 and Heyne with 12 led the SIUC attack.

Saturday, the Salukis traveled to Tulsa where they handed the Golden Hurricane their 21st loss on the season, sweeping them in three games to win the match 15-9, 15-11, 15-3.

SIUC more than doubled the Hurricane's performance both offensively and defensively. Tulsa was outbid by the Salukis 45 to 20. SIUC also outdug them as well 29 to 12.

Locke said the hitting was definitely the deciding factor in the game.

"Tulsa has the tools for a good team," she said. "They just make a lot of mistakes, and we capitalized on that. I still think they're going to a good team."

Leading the Salukis to a .458 hitting percentage were Olden and Heyne with 12 kills each on the night. Herdes racked up 8 kills in the Saluki victory.

Olden also led SIUC in digs with 11. Diehl and sophomore setter Kim Cassidy each picking up 3.

Monika Tupholme led the Hurricane effort with 8 kills and three digs followed by teammate Sarah Von Wald who picked up 4 kills and also collected three digs.
