World leaders speak of peace, change

Israelis seek full peace in Middle East

Avnon

By Angela Hyland
Special Assignment Reporter

Israeli leaders now earnestly are seeking full peace with neighboring countries and Syria holds the key to its conceptualization, the Israeli consul general said.

Arthur Avnon spoke Wednesday in Wham Auditorium to about 50 people about the progress and hopes of Israeli leaders for the Middle East peace process.

For 100 years, a situation has existed in the Middle East which has forced children to grow up learning skills they never should have to develop, Avnon said.

Young adults run through narrow streets with guns chasing people their own age, Avnon said even his golden retriever learned to dash into a sealed, air-tight room at the sound of an air raid siren.

Republics to feel 'ripple' of South Africa

By Emily Priddy
International Reporter

As the South African government prepares to change hands, its actions will have a global ripple effect, an ambassador from Zimbabwe says.

A. B. Midzi, Ambassador of the Republic of Zimbabwe to the United States, discussed the political and economic implications of majority rule in South Africa as part of Africa Week '94, sponsored by the SIUC African Student Association.

Midzi said resolving years of tension caused by oppression of blacks through apartheid policies in South Africa will impact surrounding nations and countries around the world.

2 recent bomb threats alert police

By Katie Morrison
Administration Reporter

Radio/television professor K.S. Sitaram was 15 minutes into his lecture Wednesday when two police officers entered his class in Lawson Hall, alerting him the building had received a bomb threat.

Sitaram said the threat interrupted his class schedule, but he dismissed his students anyway.

"You have the lives of so many students in your hands," he said. "What if there really was one (a bomb)?"

Frank Eovaldi, SIUC police shift sergeant, said calls were made Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning concerning bomb threats at Lawson Hall.

Three bomb threats have been made this year including and one at Quigley Hall on the morning of March 24 and two at Lawson Hall. Eovaldi said although each threat is taken seriously, threats have not materialized into actual bombings at SIUC in recent years.

SIUC Vice President for Academic Affairs James Tweedy said he believes more bomb threats occur around final exam time.

According to the SIUC Police department, in the last five years, threats reached a record high of 28.

Blackmun's liberal voice to be replaced

By Doug Durso
General Assignment Reporter

Although Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun is retiring, local law officials say President Clinton will appoint someone who mirrors Blackmun's opinions.

Blackmun, who will retire at the end of the court's 1993-1994 session, possibly is best known for his authorship of Roe vs. Wade, the decision that legalized abortion in 1973.

SIUC law professor Thomas B. McAfee said while Blackmun was perceived as leaning toward the liberal side, he was moderate on most issues.

McAfee said Blackmun was a liberal voice on fundamental rights and right to privacy issues.

McAfee said Clinton has a couple of options but will probably select someone with moderate to liberal views.

"My guess is he will appoint someone who is not that different from Blackmun," McAfee said.

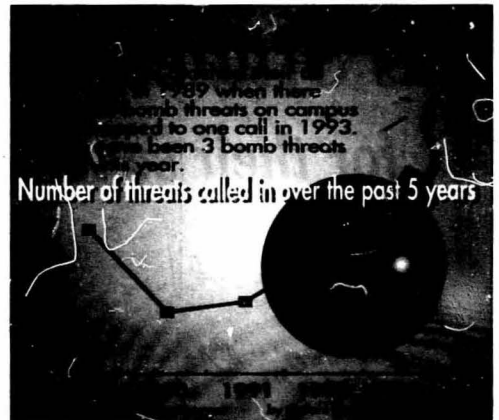

McAfee said Clinton is under pressure because of his health-care package and crime bill, and he probably will try to push a judge who is moderate rather than a strongly liberal judge.

Clinton is a moderate democrat so the appointment will not have to be ultra-liberal as long as the judge has Clinton's basic philosophy, McAfee said.

"Clinton will try to appoint a judge who will uphold the Roe vs. Wade decision," McAfee said.

McAfee said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine is a possibility for the position because he is well-known among legislators.

SOUTH AFRICAN WHITES STOCK SUPPLIES — JOHANNESBURG, South Africa—In the white suburbs of this city, supermarket shelves are beginning to suggest Moscow rather than the "mink and manure belt," the South African term for wealthy neighborhoods where fur coats and show horses are status symbols. Panicked by the approach of all-race elections, whites are stockpiling canned tuna, candles, water purification tablets and electric generators in preparation for black-majority rule. To prepare for Arrageddon, white shoppers are stripping supermarket shelves of items such as matches, candles, cooking oil and long-life milk.

RETURNING REFUGEES CREATE PROBLEMS — VARIES, Bosnia-Herzegovina—Zijad Eskic, this town's Muslim deputy mayor, is feeling a lot of unwelcome international pressure these days and is distinctly nervous. European and U.N. monitors are pressing him, he says, to allow the return of Croat residents who fled the town as Muslim forces stormed in last November. The "right of return" is a main provision of the accord Bosnia's Muslims and Croats signed last month in Washington, under which they agreed to share power in the 30 percent of the former Yugoslav republic left them by more powerful Serb forces after two years of three-sided warfare. But as the story of Vares painfully illustrates, the return of refugees may well prove to be the Achilles heel of the accord.

LATINO LEADER INVOLVED IN CONSPIRACY — THE WASHINGTON POST —The president of the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), one of the nation's largest Latino organizations, was indicted Tuesday in connection with an alleged amnesty scam involving thousands of illegal immigrants. Federal prosecutors charged that Jose Velez conspired along with three Taiwanese immigration consultants to "create and supply" false documents and statements to federal immigration officials "so that applicants who were not legally entitled to reside and to work in the (U.S.) could fraudulently obtain the right to do so."

MORE POLICE COULD EQUAL LESS CRIME — WASHINGTON—In a law enforcement experiment of unprecedented cost and ambition, President Clinton and Congress are about to gamble almost $9 billion on the proposition that thickening the thin blue line will ease the sting of crime in big cities and small towns alike. Fulfilling one of Clinton's most specific campaign promises, Congress is poised to approve a massive new matching grant program that will help communities deploy 100,000 new police officers through the end of the century. That would represent a dramatic 16 percent increase in the roughly 600,000 police on America's streets—and offer a lifeline for mayors scrambling for the funds to respond to public demands for tough measures against crime.

NEW BUILDING OPENS UP DESIGNING DOORS — THE WASHINGTON POST —Architect Henry N. Cobb has unveiled an elaborate model of what will be one of the most ambitious contemporary architecture projects in Boston—a new U.S. courthouse to be constructed on a pier in Boston Harbor. The planned courthouse is so grand that Robert Campbell, the architecture writer of the Boston Globe, speculated that Cobb hoped the building would rival the award-winning design by his partner, James Ingo Freed, for the Holocaust Memorial Museum.

POSTAL SERVICE MISUSES NEW EAGLE LOGO — WASHINGTON—Postmaster General Marvin T. Runyon has had his share of problems lately, what with slow mail, rising red ink and a pending rate hike. Now, Runyon is catching more flak over his new, $7 million logo for the Postal Service. Members of Congress want to ban the logo—Runyon calls "the sonic eagle"—and, to make matters worse, it seems postal workers are now misusing the new image. Runyon's staff in the corporate relations office recently published a cautionary note, warning postal facilities to use the "corporate signature" (read logo) properly.

GPSC officers elected, new views expressed

By Marc Chase
General Assignment Reporter

The Graduate and Professional Student Council elected three new officers Wednesday night for the 1994-1995 school year.

Officers elected were: Patrick Smith, law school representative, president; Jason Matthews, law school rep., vice president of administrative affairs and Laura Halliday, current GPSC rep., vice president of graduate school affairs.

Smith and Matthews ran unopposed because both of their opponents dropped out of the race before the elections on Wednesday.

Smith, who was originally opposed by Representative Kirsten Bonde, said as president of GPSC he plans on conducting his job tactfully and professionally.

"I expect to dispatch my office in a professional manner," Smith said. "That means no petty politics or back-stabbing. I won't go out yelling at administrators or student leaders, and I have no problems in telling the SIUC administration that some of their proposals just won't work or be accepted by students."

Smith said he plans on voicing GPSC's disapproval of tuition and fee hikes, such as the proposed 13 percent tuition increase and the athletic fee increase, to the University's administration and the SIUC Board of Trustees.

Matthews said his most important responsibility as vice president for administrative affairs will be the allocations of money the council gives to registered student organizations.

Matthews said the council could more efficiently allocate fees by giving money to umbrella organizations that are affiliated with smaller organizations. This way, the RSOs themselves can decide which organizations need the most funding.

Halliday, who was opposed by Representative Monty Peerbhai, said although she is new to SIUC this year, she is experienced in student government issues and ready to represent the council before the administration.

Unions dispute employment

Workers argue use of part-time summer help

merican News Service

BENTON—Two Southern Illinois University at Carbondale employees from Franklin County who traveled to Springfield to protest what they call discrimination say the trip was a success.

Terry Patyski of Valier and Jim Hewlett of Royalton were among 10 service employees to represent the 116 union members at a House Subcommittee for unemployment hearing. They were protesting an 11-year-old law which makes them ineligible for unemployment compensation during breaks from school.

Both men said efforts to change the law last year never made it past the subcommittee, but this year members of the committee, Democrats and Republicans alike, said they would support the measure.

"We did some good," Patyski said. "If we hadn't, it would have died right there."

Hewlett, who spoke on behalf of local 878 of the Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said members of the committee weren't terribly receptive to the employee's case, until they explained that temporary summer workers are being hired by SIU while regular employees are being laid off.

With that presented, he said the subcommittee sided with the workers.

"They gave us a commitment to vote for it," Hewlett said.

The conflict is based on a 1983 measure supported by President Ronald to exempt 'academic' employees from being able to draw unemployment benefits during school breaks. In 1990, the federal government changed the regulations to allow individual states to make the decision. Illinois has never reverted back to the pre-1983 standard.

The current law, which affects all non-certified, non-tenured employees of public education institutions, states that employees are ineligible for unemployment compensation "during an established and customary vacation period of holiday recess, if the individual performed such service in the period immediately before such vacation period or holiday recess and there is reasonable assurance that the individual will perform such service in the period immediately following such vacation period of holiday recess."

Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-DuQuoin, Tuesday submitted a bill to change the law. It was accepted by the subcommittee, Hewlett said, and could be acted on by the full House next month.

Hewlett said he and others representing workers at Western Illinois and Illinois State Universities spent about 30 minutes each explaining to the subcommittee about the hardships of trying to make end meet during school breaks.

He said they explained that unemployment is the worker's second choice.

"We're not wanting a hand out, we're just wanting an opportunity to work," Hewlett said. "If they restore our unemployment, SIU will give us the work."

The Illinois Department of Employment Security estimates that it would cost $20 million per year to extend unemployment to workers like Patyski and Hewlett.

However, Hewlett said, that figure would be lowered as the regular employees take summer work.

He said he told the subcommittee that 91 of his local union's 116 members are willing to take summer work, and those who aren't shouldn't get unemployment benefits.

Homosexual acts no different than straights

By Angela Hyland
Minorities Reporter

Hundreds of SIUC students saw homosexual acts Wednesday, but few took notice.

As students walked past the Student Center Roman Room Wednesday, many glanced at signs taped to walls and propped up against benches.

"Come one, come all! See homosexual acts right here," one sign stated.

The activity taking place beneath the sign, however, attracted few students' attention.

Students lounged in chairs, sipped at sodas, and talked with friends. All wore blue jeans, indicating support for homosexual rights.

Group member Michelle Malkin said she believes most students thought homosexual activities referred only to sex acts.

"I don't think they believed the jeans were going to stay on," she said.

Group co-director Heath Karch said the signs which urged students to "witness gay men reading" or "see lesbians studying" more accurately reveal activities which

Gays show support for film showing

By Melissa Edwards
Entertainment Reporter

Experimental artist Heather McAdams brought her quirky brand of filmmaking to SIUC last night as part of the "Visionary Works" series.

McAdams showed six short films and her award-winning film "Meet Bradley Harrison Picklesimer" to a half-full Student Center Auditorium.

McAdams, a filmmaker, painter, performance artist and cartoonist displayed a range of emotions in her films. The first, "Scratchman I" demonstrated McAdams' found footage style to perfection.

It is simply an official-looking man talking (although his voice is never heard) while flashes of light zip and wiz around, and through him.

The second film, "Space Cadets" is made from an old army film. McAdams uses other people's footage and combines it with music to give a unique, and often funny finished product.

The third, entitled "Black Coffee" an almost MTV like video of a '30s song of the same title. She said the film is making fun of the seriousness of the song.

McAdams said the fourth film, "Fetal Pig Anatomy," is not a pleasant film.

"It's kind of psychotic," she said.

Showing various disturbing scenes and an even more distressing soundtrack, it is not a film that McAdams said she shows often.

Her final two short films, "Dear Amy," and "Better Be Careful,"

Neighborhood co-op growing at healthy rate

By Paul Eisenberg
Business Reporter

Second in a series of four

Fat-free pasta sauce, unbleached coffee filters and potato milk may be hard to find at grocery stores, but there is one Carbondale store that offers those items plus hundreds of other organically grown or produced foods.

The Neighborhood Food Co-Op, on East Jackson Street has been offering a healthy selection of foods in Carbondale for five years.

The store is not a grocery, it is a non-profit cooperative, run entirely by its members.

Jane Reh, who places product orders for the store, said business has been good, and membership has soared to over 900 households.

"We've had steady growth for about four or five years," she said.

Reh said most of the produce sold at the Co-Op is grown without the use of chemical fertilizers or insecticides, normally found in most supermarket produce.

Other products offered by the Co-Op include biodegradable cleansers, shampoos and conditioners not tested on animals, and even "tree-free" paper made from hemp and straw.

"We also offer spices that are not soaked in radiation, organically-grown coffee beans and fat-free crackers," Reh said.

In addition to the packaged food, the Co-Op offers fresh-baked breads and pastries cooked in the store.

Vern Crawford, who bakes all the Co-Op's breads and pastries, said he uses the best ingredients in town. He can usually be found in the back of the store mixing up dough.

"We have fresh bread ready at about 3 p.m. every Monday Wednesday, and Friday afternoon, sour-dough bread once a week and cookies and doughnuts regularly," he said. "I make 40 different recipes that appear at various times during the month," he said.

The Co-Op also features many locally produced products, including clover honey made in Steelville, wildflower honey from Union County, toys made in Carbondale (by Crawford), drawings by local artists, and cassette tapes and compact discs by area musicians.

While the products in the store are largely vegetarian oriented, (the chicken broth sold there contains no chicken), members can order meat or seafood from the store's major distributor.

Carbondale resident Gwen Shields does all her shopping at the Co-Op.

"I buy the organic produce, the baked goods — the bread is fantastic — health and beauty aids, and water here," she said. "It's got everything I need."

She also said she loves the organic coffee, and the Co-Op is the only place in town that has it.

Act good beginning, more input needed

ON THURSDAY, MARCH 31, PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON signed a bill that will attempt to better the quality of public education in the United States.

The Goals 2000 Educate America Act will provide $1 billion in federal funding over two years, for states and school districts that participate in the program.

To cut the meat to the bone, the law essentially sets objectives that may seem a little unrealistic. In fact, some of the goals are rather questionable in terms of its objective and its implementation.

It is encouraging that the current administration is taking an interest in the area of education. However, the Bush administration set goals too. But it never allocated adequate funding to support these goals. An unfunded mandate, is just that, an idea without the backing to become a reality.

AS ENACTED, THE LAW ESTABLISHES EIGHT national goals for all students and schools by the year 2000:

- All students will start school ready to learn.
- The high school graduation rate will be 90 percent.
- Teachers will have access to programs for the continued improvement of their skills.
- The United States will be the first in the world in math and science achievement.
- Every adult will be literate and possess the skills to compete in a global economy.
- Every school will be free of drugs and violence.
- Every school will promote involvement of parents in their children's education.

AS THEY STAND, THESE OBJECTIVES SEEM LIKE fine social goals, but the question of whether they are educational goals is unclear. Education has clearly been a problem in the United States for a long time now. Perhaps this is what the federal government should work on -- the basics.

To have a high school graduation rate of 90 percent is admirable. You can keep kids in high school, but the bottom line is can they learn?

Why does the United States have to be first in the world in math and science achievement? It would be more appropriate for ALL high school graduates to be able to read and write when they do come out of school. Do our kids understand and learn, or is being No. 1 the most important thing?

The goal of every school being free of drugs and violence is indeed a noble one. But how is this possible when we do not have a society that is violence and drug free? The violence prevention program will provide $3 million for any community, 5 percent of which can be used to buy metal detectors. Metal detectors? Seems like the federal government is giving up the battle on violence before it has even begun.

EVEN IF THESE PROBLEMS ARE SOLVED, Illinois still would have to address the methods of funding the local education system.

In Illinois, some of the poorest districts spend as little as $2,200 per pupil annually, while the richest often spend as much as $12,000 per pupil. This $10,000 discrepancy is one factor that must be addressed by the state when Illinois receives its funding for Goals 2000.

Women defiled in class

During a recent Contemporary History class discussion of the women's liberation movement, nearly all of the men in the class had a uniform response to the female students' remarks: they ignored us. As the women attempted to take advantage of a rare classroom opportunity to express the things that concern us, the men laughed at our problems and openly discussed other things among themselves. Their disrespect was so overt that one man even got up and walked around the room, collecting notes for an upcoming exam, as one woman offered examples of our oppression.

I am appalled to have had such a degrading experience in a college classroom. The women of the class were defiled by those men; they screwed us out of our right to feel safe when expressing ourselves in a classroom discussion. Is the same fear that many of us feel, walking alone at night, a defense mechanism that must be in use in the classroom? Apparently so.

Although some of the male students were quite considerate in sharing their views, the majority of the men made it quite clear that they do not deserve my respect because they cannot give me or other women the respect that we deserve.

Since these men refuse to listen to women in class, here's how it is: feminism means equality. It has nothing to do with sexual orientation and is not limited to a single-issue such as reproductive rights. A heterosexual pro-life person has just as much place in the feminist movement as any other human being. It's true, as with any mass movement, there are different lines of belief within the movement, but the idea is for everyone to respect each other. If this version of equality is still a joke to the man in my class, they can keep laughing; I'm not listening anymore.

Students get ripped-off by book stores

In reply to the article "USG pushes book rental system", its about time!! as an engineering major, I spend over $300 each semester on books. Some of them will be used again, but the others are just money taken out of my pocket. When it's time to sell back the books 710 and University book store completely rip us off. Its ridiculous!! If I could rent my books with an option to buy, I would have some extra cash every semester to use towards other college necessities.

I hope senators John Shull and Jami Bathon continue to write bills like this and stay active in USG

—Dennis Dewey, junior, engineering

Tuition proposal unreasonable

Over the past 10 years, the cost of attending a state university in Illinois has continued to rise. State schools, including SIUC, have continued the trend of ever-rising college costs. Tuition is only the first cost of attending college. Other associated costs include: room and board, athletic fees, and health service fees. At SIUC, there is a strong possibility that the cost of these associated fees will all rise.

The SIUC Board of Trustees (BOT) have proposed a 13% increase in tuition over a 2 year period. The Illinois Board of higher education recommended only a one year, 3% increase. The BOT proposal is unreasonable. Believing the BOT's proposal to be ridiculous, undergraduate Student Government (USG) passed a resolution in opposition to the increase. John Shull, USG Presidential candidate and Jami Bathon, USG Vice Presidential candidate, both with the Progressive Party, wrote and submitted the bill. At least Shull and Bathon have the knowledge and motivation to stand up for the students, something that the other presidential and vice presidential candidates for USG lack.

I am optimistic that USG's resolution in opposition of the tuition increase will persuade the BOT to look for a more reasonable alternative. Hopefully, the Progressive Party will win the upcoming USG election so that John Shull and Jami Bathon can continue their fight and students at SIUC will feel assured that student government will take a stand against any unreasonable, illogical, and ridiculous increase in tuition and fees.

in 1989 and decreased to 12 in 1990. Threats made a comeback in 1991 with 14 called in and increased again with 23 in 1992.

Threats dropped as low as 1 call in 1993.

From 1989 to 1993, only one arrest was made, in 1991.

Twede said shortly after he arrived at SIUC in 1966, a bomb threat actually was carried out in the Agriculture Building.

"It went off in the wee hours of the morning, so luckily no one was hurt," he said.

After a threat is made, police are sent to the building targeted and people in it are notified, Eovaldi said.

"We tell people they have an option to leave — that's department policy," he said. "People usually leave."

Although it is difficult to find the people who call in bomb threats, the police follow up on each call Eovaldi said.

The SIUC Police department declined comment on what callers say and what the procedure is once the person is on the phone.

University Ombudsman Director Ingrid Clarke said students guilty of making bomb threats face the consequence of getting arrested and the turning the case over to authorities.

"A bomb threat is so blatantly illegal that it is turned over to the police," Clarke said.

State Senator Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin, said Blackmun is a bright man and his decisions have been fair.

"His famous Roe vs. Wade decision was fair because it took into account feelings from both sides of the issue," Dunn said.

Dunn said he cannot tell who Clinton will appoint to the supreme court, but it will probably be someone who is moderate.

Clinton would look for a moderate judge so he can please the most people for his reelection campaign, which is not a bad approach, Dunn said.

Terry Hopkins, circuit judge for the 2nd Judicial Circuit in Franklin County, said no matter who Clinton appoints, the court will have a younger look.

Blackmun is 85 years old so the new judge will probably have different perspectives on the problems of living in today's society, Hopkins said.

Hopkins said he feels whoever Clinton appoints will have an open mind and have the ability to change, unlike previous administration appointments which have preconceived ideas on topics.

Hopkins said the new Supreme Court Justice should also have practical experience and knowledge of the everyday working of trial court.

Harry Haynsworth, dean of the law school, said Blackmun was widely respected and acclaimed for his fairness and balance.

"Judge Blackmun has always been an independent thinker in his decisions," Haynsworth said.

Haynsworth said he expects Clinton to appoint a judge who has the same philosophies as Blackmun. Senator Carol Moseley-Braun, D-Chicago, said in a press release she was saddened to learn of Blackmun's retirement.

"His legal intellect, experience and balanced approach will be sorely missed by the people of this country," Braun said.

Braun said his commitment to individual rights made him a great judge.

"When Justice Blackmun wrote, 'Few decisions are more personal and intimate, more properly private or more basic to individual dignity, than the decision a woman' he not only upheld the basic Constitutional guarantee of individual liberty, he gave women control over their own bodies," Braun said.

Braun said few people have contributed to the advancement of law like Blackmun.

Blackmun was appointed to the Supreme Court in 1970 by President Nixon.

He was a republican when he was appointed but has evolved to a moderate-liberal position.

Early candidates for the bench position are Mitchell and Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt.

"The situation in South Africa as it is today is a situation which raises concerns the world over, but particularly so for Africa and South Africa," he said.

"What we expect to happen is once South Africa attains peace and stability and the economic situation bounces back (from political disruption), it is bound to have a ripple effect on the area."

With the government in transition, the African National Congress, the Pan-African Council and white South Africans who have long disagreed on policies such as apartheid, will have to cooperate for the good of the nation and surrounding countries who depend on South Africa's geographic position and mining industry for economic stability, Muzi said.

"We feel that the time has come for the various groups in South Africa that are in conflict to work together," he said. "South Africa in terms of the region is an economic giant. Those countries that border South Africa depend, to a large extent, on South African ports."

Dele Omosogbon, president of the African Student Association, said Muzi's visit reinforces SIUC's reputation as a center for international education.

"SIUC is becoming increasingly popular as a center for international education," he said.

"This is another confirmation of that."

Association member Siddig Fageer, a graduate student in economics from Sudan, said the current global economy makes the situation in South Africa significant for SIUC students from all nations.

"(We are) talking about (a) global economy, so everything that happens in every country in the world will definitely have an effect on other parts of the world," Fageer said.

4.8 earthquake hits California

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—A magnitude-4.8 earthquake shook much of Southern California Wednesday, causing a few cracks in buildings near the epicenter and sending some rocks onto a highway.

No injuries were reported in the 12:01 p.m. tremor, which scientists at the California Institute of Technology and the U.S. Geological Survey said was outside the aftershock zone of the 1992 Landers and Big Bear earthquakes and therefore was a separate seismic event. It was also unrelated to the Jan. 17 earthquake in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley.

Wednesday's jolt, centered between Lake Arrowhead and Big Bear, about 80 miles east of Los Angeles, occurred within five miles of the San Andreas fault.

A REVISIONIST CHALLENGE TO THE U.S. HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

By Bradley R. Smith

This ad does not claim "the Holocaust never happened." Those who say it does want to muddy the issue. This is what the ad does claim. The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum displays no convincing proof whatever of homicidal gassing chambers, and no proof that even an individual was "gassed" in a German program of "genocide."

The question, then, is not, "Did the Holocaust happen?" The question is: If there were no gas chambers, what was the Holocaust?

This Museum promotes the charge that the Germans murdered the Jews of Europe in homicidal gassing chambers. It therefore has a moral obligation to demonstrate that the charge is true. Those who contend it is more important to be sensitive than truthful about whether or not the gas chambers existed debate America's old civil virtues of free inquiry and open debate, and they betray the ideal of the "justice" itself. For the benefit of whom?

What are the facts?

The Museum's "proof" of a gas chamber at Birkenau is a plastic model imagined by Polish artists. A plastic copy of a metal door displayed as "proof" of a homicidal gas chamber at Majdanek. And, incredibly, the Museum has simply dropped the Auschwitz gas chamber, the basement room visited yearly by hundreds of thousands of tourists in Poland.

There is no mention of the alleged gas chambers at Buchenwald or even at Dachau, where after World War II American G.I.s and German civilians were gassed and more than 300,000 victims were "assured and buried."

The notion that eyewitness testimony given under highly politicized and emotional circumstances, is prima facie true, was refuted by the Israeli Supreme Court when it acquitted John Demjanjuk of being "Ivan the Terrible." The Israeli Court found that eyewitnesses who testified that Demjanjuk operated gas chambers "could not be believed."

Deborah Lipstadt argues in her much-praised Denying the Holocaust that revisionist "deniers" should not be debated because there can be no other side to the gas chamber story. This is what revisionism displays its strength. Revisionist theory, resting only on facts, can be debated. Extremist theory, having fallen into the hands of cultists, must be "denied."

It is not even Winston Churchill in his vast history of World War II, or Dwight D. Eisenhower in his memoirs, made reference to homicidal gassing chambers. How do the Holocaust lobby and its Museum exist?

Intellectuals who do not believe that intellectual freedom is worth the while on this historical question should challenge those who believe it's worth the while on an historical issue. Then they should explain their answer to the rest of us.

The Operation and Technique of the Museum

The Museum's exhibit technique is a mixture of amateur stagecraft and dishonest omission. Example: the first display confronting visitors beginning the Museum tour is a wall-sized photograph of American soldiers looking at corpses straddling on a pyre. The context in which you see the photo suggests that the dead pictured in it are murdered Jews. The caption, however, says "did they die of typhus or did they die of typhus during the last terrible weeks of the war." Autopsies made by Allied medical personnel found inmates died of disease. Not one was found to have been "gassed." All such relevant information is omitted from this exhibit. We don't even know that the dead pictured in the photograph are Jews. Unable to judge the significance of the photograph, and not wanting to believe the Museum would mislead you, we are led to accept the false and manipulative suggestion that it somehow "represents the 'genocide' of the European Jews."

Call the Museum! Find Out For Yourself!

I'm willing to be convinced I'm wrong about the gas chambers. Authentic physical remains of wartime-generated documents would do the trick. I say the Museum displays neither. CALL THE MUSEUM AT 1-800-441-1113 OR 618-536-3388. The telephone number is (202) 486-0400. Ask which (SIUC) Museum exhibits display proof gas chambers actually existed. Have this (or any) newspaper publish the result. Then I'll see what's so special about the gas chambers. Special displays imply that to investigate the gas chambers, visitors in the high-tech world will be harmed by the presence of this hypothetical museum. Free inquiry with benefit from the exactity the research it opens on all. In any case, why should it not?

COMMITTEE FOR OPEN DEBATE ON THE HOLOCAUST (COOH) is not a membership organization and is not affiliated with any political group or organization that goal is to promote free inquiry and open debate, without which intellectual freedom can not exist. To those who ask, "Why challenge the Holocaust Museum?" we reply: Why not challenge the Holocaust Museum?

We are the only ones pointing out the falsehoods and misrepresentations surrounding the Museum and the lack of integrity of those who represent it. Every intellectual who visits the Museum, and particularly historians, should point out these facts to you - get someone else. Only COOH's Only COOH's does it. Challenge the taboos, and challenge the Museum.

Help us monitor this growing national controversy. Clip this story from your campus and off-campus newspaper, and send them to us. Include the name of the paper and its date the story ran. In return, we'll update you on the continuing controversy. Address: information to:

For the sake of saving lives, however, Middle Eastern leaders must look beyond historical and legal claims on territory, he said.

To end an war does not erupt after a treaty is signed, Avnon said. Israeli leaders must achieve a full peace settlement with neighboring countries, not merely a set of conditions in which fighting no longer occurs.

homosexual students commonly engage in.

This is not the image Karch said he believes most people thought of when they heard that homosexual acts would take place.

"The first thing that comes to mind is doing the bump and grind," he said.

Karch said the event was organized to let students know the true agenda of homosexuals.

Karch said many people believe homosexuals will cause to the moral downfall of society.

"We simply want equality — nothing more," he said.

During a presentation Karch titled, "The true homosexual agenda," he presented a list of goals group members would like to see in the United States.

Demands included the right to equal housing, health care, employment, recognition of domestic relationships, inclusion in anti-discrimination policies and the right to keep and raise our own children.

Karch said he believes many of these demands only can be achieved by writing letters to legislators and organizing politically, but the best way to let people know about the true agenda is to let people know that homosexuals are ordinary people.

"The most powerful weapon we have against the religious right and homophobia is coming out," he said.

If more people were aware how many of their friends and neighbors are homosexuals, they would not hold so many false stereotypes, he said.

As Karch addressed the group Wednesday wearing a pink t-shirt which read, "closets are for clothes," he said he believes he is doing his part.

once again good examples of her unusual, and somewhat warped sense of humor.

Both are sending messages of the filmmakers' strength, and immaturity.

McAdams also presented "Meet Brad'cy Picklesimer," a documentary of a drag queen in Lexington, Ky.

Alternately silly, serious, and sad, it was well received by the international gay and lesbian community.

"The gay and lesbian community is very organized (about distributing movies) — that's part of the reason for my success," she said.

"They extended my resume by half a page."

McAdams, currently teaches at the Chicago Filmmakers and is a cartoonist for the Chicago Reader and the New York Press.

Retiring justice is last liberal, court needs new leadership

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Justice Harry A. Blackmun, a slight and solitary man, is the last traditional liberal voice on the Supreme Court.

His opinions ring with unabashed passion.

But unlike his onetime ally, retired Justice William J. Brennan Jr., he has not been a leader or consensus-builder, something observers believe the court now needs. The court has been in such flux in recent terms that a new justice—particularly one who fills the leadership void—could have influence well beyond a single vote.

The balance of power has shifted wildly from term to term. A fresh voice could seize an opportunity for leadership, particularly if the appointee were less the bold liberal Blackmun has become and more the politician who could influence the conservative centrists on the fence: Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy and David H. Souter. In recent years, Blackmun has been a liberal touchstone.

'Seventh Moon' shines as winner in bar's semifinal battle of bands

By Melissa Edwards
Entertainment Reporter

Ringed ears and cheap beers were the order of the evening as Sound Core presented the semifinals of the Battle of the Bands Tuesday night at T-Birds.

Three bands, Fulcrum, Seventh Moon and Thieves and Whores competed for the top spot and a chance to participate in the finals.

All of the bands said they participated in the battle to gain recognition.

But only one band could move on to the finals, and in a very close contest, Seventh Moon came out on top.

The next battle semifinal will be Tuesday, April 12, with the finals following Tuesday, April 19.

The first band, Fulcrum, composed of Mike Parker, Dan Graff, Steve Newson and Frank Ross, started the evening with a thrash metal style that set the tone for the evening.

The band's heavy sound had the sparse audience swaying, but their stage presence did not seem to inspire fervid devotion.

Fulcrum never deviated from the ear-drum destroying sound, which bass player Parker said was influenced by the metal band Entera.

The second band to take the stage was Seventh Moon. Composed of Jon Wolff, Stephen Wilson and Jamie Hand, its unusually heavy bluesy sound attracted more audience involvement than Fulcrum.

covers, but bass player Jon Wolff said the band's favorites are originals like "Felix's Man."

"I don't want to sound like I'm preaching or lecturing - we leave it up to people to interpret (the music) themselves."

- Tom Corry
Seventh Moon band member

"That's what we all knew (when they first played together), but we'd like to get rid of the covers and do only original songs," he said.

The final band to play was Thieves and Whores.

It also had a metal sound but tempered it with quieter, mellow songs.

Band members Tom Corry, Scott Bella, Dean "Mad Scientist" Daubbs, Ted "Shred" Peters, and Mark Hughes, whose sound was influenced by Iron Maiden and Queensryche, also suffered from a lack of audience support.

But the few people who were determined to hear them were dancing and slamming to their heart's content.

Corry said the band tries to play positive songs to make people feel good.

"I don't want to sound like I'm preaching or lecturing — we leave it up to people to interpret (it) themselves," he said.

Toxic crayons pulled from stores

By Aleksandra Macys
Health Reporter

Children are notorious for putting items in their mouths, but one product may cause irreversible brain damage if ingested and is being recalled from stores.

Millions of crayons imported from China, containing levels of lead that can be harmful to children if ingested, should be thrown away or returned for a refund, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said.

The commission banned three crayon brands Tuesday presenting a lead poisoning hazard to young children who might eat or chew on the crayons. It urged parents to either throw the crayons.

Eight other brands containing lead were recalled, but levels would not produce lead poisoning, some CPSC officials said.

Banned from the market are:
■ 12 Jumbo Crayons

- Safe 48 Non-toxic Fun a Toys "R" Us Kid! Crayons
- 12 Crayons, Glory and 18 Crayons That Paint.
- Recalled from the market are:
- 64 Crayons School Quality, No. 8064
- 64 Crayons, CR 64-64 CT
- 8 Crayons, No.5 CL 850
- Fun Time 72 Crayons, No. B541
- 64 Crayons, Kidz Biz
- 64 Crayons, SKU51-02600
- Feido, 12 Crayons, No. CC8812.

The commission reported the largest selling brand in the United States, Crayola, contained no detectable lead.

Crayola spokesman Brad Drexler said the company makes extreme efforts to ensure its products are safe for children.

Under federal law, all art materials must be reviewed by a toxicologist for chronic hazards.

Pam Umlaus, a nurse at SIUC health service said lead poisoning can cause chronic and irreversible effects, with long term ingestion.

Symptoms usually occur in young children within one to five days. Symptoms include vomiting, unsteady gait, altered consciousness and in some cases, unusual eating habits such as craving dirt or sand, Umlaus said.

If exposure persists, seizures, comas, brain damage and retardation may occur.

The effects of lead may be reversed when exposure ends, but many times it is difficult to know a child has been exposed before damage occurs, Umlaus said.

Stores such as Wal-Mart, K-Mart, Kroger, Hooks Drugs and Dollar General do not carry the banned or recalled crayons.

Kay-Bee Toy and Hobby Shop in the University Mall in Carbondale and Toys "R" Us in Marion refused to comment about the ban or recall.

Doctor-assisted executions questioned; ethics debated

By Snyeryl Stolberg
Los Angeles Times

When it was over, the convicted murderer lay lifeless, an intravenous line still plugged into his vein.

Ten minutes after William Andrews succumbed to the poisonous concoction injected into his arm, Dr. Robert Jones performed a task from which, he said, he would never recover. He entered the chamber of death, checked the condemned man's vital signs and confirmed that he was dead.

The medical director for the Utah State Prison system did not witness the July, 1992, execution. But his limited role so troubled him that he decided never again to have anything to do with a state-ordered killing.

As a prison doctor, Jones sits at the uncomfortable intersection of medicine and criminal justice.

His dilemma highlights an ethical debate that is raging in the medical community: Should doctors, who take the Hippocratic oath not to harm their patients, take part in carrying out the death penalty?

When state laws and regulations require physicians to be present at executions, should the physician comply?

SIUC graduate combines writing, news to create award-winning work

By Dean Weaver
City Reporter

An SIUC graduate said he grew up in California wanting to be a disc jockey, but decided to turn to news and is now being honored for his choice.

Gary Hart, assistant news director for WCIL 101.5 FM and 1020 AM, was voted "best reporter" in downstate Illinois by the Illinois Associated Press Broadcast News Association.

Hart will be honored at the Illinois News Broadcasters Association convention April 30.

Hart graduated from SIUC in 1984 with a degree in radio and television and said he attended SIUC because the manager at the station he worked at as a senior in high school said SIUC was the college to attend if he wanted to be a newscaster.

Hart has reported for WCIL since August of 1990 and says he enjoys his job covering city government and Jackson County courts.

"I like the writing the best. It is challenging to take a long meeting with a lot of paperwork and cut it down to make it interesting," Hart said.

Hart said he always had an interest in news, and he has always admired Walter Cronkite.

Before working at WCIL, Hart was the only news person at WRAJ in Anna for five years.

He is currently one of four reporters for WCIL, which airs ten live newscasts each day on FM and five or six on AM.

Hart said he regularly works a 9 to 5 shift, but must always be ready to cover a story.

Hart said one of the best reports he ever did was during a bad storm in Anna.

Hart

"The storm began at 4 p.m. and lasted until 10 a.m. the next morning," he said. "Somehow our transmitter stayed up, and I gave updates every eight to ten minutes after calling area police and listening to the 'canner'."

Hart said the tough days occur when there is little news and when his voice is not good enough to read the news report aloud.

Although he enjoys news broadcasting, Hart said he would like to get more involved with writing.

"I do freelance writing for a radio broadcasting magazine 'Radio World' and write jokes for comic strips such as 'Frank and Ernest,'" Hart said.

WCIL News Director Joey Helleny said he is glad to have Hart as a reporter.

"This station has been fortunate to have some very talented people, and Gary is certainly one of them," Helleny said.

Beth Hart, Hart's wife, is assistant news director for SIUC's radio station WSIU, and she previously was a WCIL reporter.

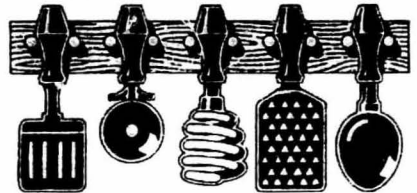

Beth said her husband's curiosity makes him a good reporter.

"He likes to learn how things work and is particularly good with science stories," she said. "He is good at describing things so the listener understands."

WCIL Reporter and Morning News Anchor Mary Jane Dwyer said Hart's newscasts are interesting because his personality comes through.

"Gary is an intelligent and creative person with a unique sense of humor," Dwyer said. "His newscasts are good technically because he uses accurate background sounds."

Dwyer said Hart's best stories tend to be the ones relating to business and agriculture.

Executive to lecture on business

By Angela Hyland
Minorities Reporter

When business executive Ralph Moore was in high school, he wanted to come to SIUC because he said it had an image as a party school.

"My high school counselor told me not to waste my time because I was not going to graduate," Moore, a 1971 SIUC graduate, said.

Moore said he did not take school seriously until his sophomore year in college.

"In high school, I flunked out of accounting, flat out," he said.

He was unsure of what he wanted to major in, but had no intention of ever taking another accounting class.

Moore not only majored in accounting, however, but graduated with honors. He is now president of Ralph G. Moore and Associates, Inc., a full-service management advisory and information systems services firm.

Moore is the final visitor in this semester's College of Business and Administration's Executive in Residency Program.

Michael Haywood, director of minority programs, said the program allows students to learn about the business world in a way classrooms and newspapers never could communicate.

When students are able to see people whose dreams have come true, it makes it seem more likely they could achieve their own aspirations, he said.

He added that Moore's willingness to take a week off of work to speak to students and administrators shows he value executives place on this link, as well.

Moore will speak at 10 a.m. Friday in Rehn Hall, Room 108.

Western images of Jesus cause doubt, speculation

Although in churches and the rest of the media world, Jesus Christ is shown in the form of a Western European caucasian some psychologists and Christian ministers see this portrayal as historically incorrect and potentially misleading.

Anthony Smith, a psychologist and lecturer in Black American Studies said the caucasian image can be psychologically harmful to non-white children.

"Children see a deity that doesn't look like them and that says to their subconscious that you can never be like the deity," Smith said.

"Our children also begin to see people who aren't like them but are like the deity and that begins the seeds of inferiority. It has been well documented how the media can influence the mind, so in a sense that is the highest level of influence."

Smith said if the image creates inferiority for one group, it may affect others adversely as well.

"It could possibly cause those who do look like the deity to have an inflated sense of importance," he said.

Smith said the Bible says that Jesus looks carnelian, olive and bronze and it uses other dark colors to describe him in Revelations 1:12-17.

"I'm more inclined to believe that Jesus was of a darker color. What is important is that each group of people sees God in a greater image," he said. "Realistically the image won't be abolished, so those of us who are unlike the media's image should seek to make a more accurate representation, like that stated in the Bible, which is more like us than unlike us."

Ronnie Chua, a Christian Protestant from Singapore, said he never looks at the image of Jesus as an actual representation.

Media messages influence society's ideals

Media images are fed to society whether they be rich or poor, black or white; most of these messages are fashioned to achieve a certain goal and affect all of us in some way, shape or form, assistant professor Larry Collette said.

Collette, of the Radio and Television Department, said the media creates and enforces images for the consumption of society.

"The media can create certain images in the minds of people. The more we see them, the more it tends to be a reinforcing agent," Collette said. "We see a variety of images all sending their own message. We selectively pay attention to certain images and messages."

Collette said people define social reality based on information they receive from the media.

"If we see prime-time portrayal of certain professions, it reinforces our ideas about what that profession is like. Some researchers say that we cultivate our social reality from the media," he said. "We depend on the media to learn about the outside world and we use the media to compare our reality with the reality of other people."

Stereotypes reinforce mainstream concepts

Collette said one of the most powerful things the media can do is create images.

"We can see that media creates powerful images through political figures and brand name products, and I think we can expect to see this with historical figures as well," he said.

Collette said the media often can affect what people think about groups that are ignored by the mainstream.

"The media do have the ability to create stereotypes. What is important to consider is the degree that people consider it to be a reflection of reality," Collette said.

"Advertising can be tailored to many different demographic groups whether it be age, ethnicity, gender or any socio-economic category."

Alice Tait, a professor in the Journalism

Department at Central Michigan University, said African, Hispanic, Asian and Native Americans are either portrayed negatively or ignored by the mainstream media.

"Hispanics, Asians and Native Americans tend to be in an invisible stage. In that stage we do not see them at all or very little," Tait said.

"The second way they are presented are in subservient roles."

Overall, the media has not created thorough mainstream images of minority groups, Tait said.

"The media does not paint an authentic picture of AHANA (African, Hispanic, Asian and Native Americans)," she said. "If you show a particular group fitting into certain roles it doesn't show the diversity of that group."

Tait said the potential impact of poor media images of minorities could be detrimental to people's views.

"The media makes people important or unimportant in accordance to how they are presented," Tait said. "If you see someone as negative then their importance to society is seen only in that way. If a group is not presented in the media then that may suggest that they are unimportant in the society -- insignificant."

Collette said this is the nature of the media which can be seen in advertising and entertainment across the board.

In a majority of American households, the television is on about seven hours per day. In addition to television, media affects people in a number of ways, according to A.C. Nielson Co.

The Nielson Co. also reported people spend more leisure time consuming mass media, such as reading, watching movies or television, and listening to music, than any other leisure pursuit.

"African, Hispanic, Asian and Native Americans are not shown largely in roles that regulate society. At best, African Americans are shown in positions that enforce social norms like police or firemen," Tait said.

Connie Martinez, left, an undecided major junior from Chicago, and Leticia Molina, right, a senior in paralegal studies from Puerto Rico, dance to salsa music performed by La Orquesta Borinquen. Many SIUC students tasted salsa music, which has Hispanic, African, Caribbean and jazz influences, at the Student Center Wednesday afternoon.

"They seem to be having a great time," he said. "Whether they're one culture or not, they're having a good time."

Wednesday marked the band's first Carbondale appearance, Vazquez said.

"The band's been together for two years, and we've been doing the community college and university scene in Chicago," he said. "We've never been out here (before)."

Stephanie Johnston, a junior in anthropology from Springfield, spent an hour listening and dancing to the band's blend of Hispanic, African, Caribbean and jazz influences.

Johnston, who spent last spring in South America, said she enjoyed the opportunity to hear salsa music in Southern Illinois.

"It had been a while (since I heard live salsa music)," she said. "They don't usually have salsa bands here."

Johnston said music can bring students together to learn about another culture.

"I think it helps bring in new ideas and new cultures," she said. "(It can) give (students) an idea of what people in other parts of the world are like."

The event was sponsored by Student Development Multicultural Programs and Services and the Student Programming Council, George said.

Although the weather outside was wet and chilly, salsa band La Orquesta Borinquen warmed up the Roman Room Wednesday afternoon with their spicy brand of music as part of the SIUC Multicultural Day Celebration.

Shirley George, an SIUC Student Development and Multicultural Programs and Services employee, said about 300 students stopped to listen to the seven member band from Elgin throughout the afternoon.

George said students from different backgrounds can discover shared interests through music.

"They (students) are learning that we really can get together, and we have something similar that we enjoy — the music," she said.

Organizers intended to have the celebration in the Free Forum area and include a multicultural fashion show and performances by a Native American dance troupe, but the rainy weather forced participants indoors, where space constraints limited the number of activities, George said.

Arturo Vazquez, music director and trombone player for La Orquesta Borinquen, said music is an ideal way to cross cultural boundaries.

"(Music) is the universal language," he said. "You might not understand my Spanish, but if you listen to (my) music, you understand what's going on."

Carbondale musician Buddy Rogers, who played saxophone with the band as a special guest, said students seemed to enjoy the music regardless of their ethnicity.

Workday goal: Put 'prairie' back

By Stephanie Moletti
Environmental Reporter

SIUC students are helping to return Illinois to the prairie state it once was through restoration workshops, which will turn parts of the state back into the flat fields of tall, waving grass and native plants, so passers-by can almost imagine the covered wagons and sun bonnets of the early 1900s.

Todd Bittner, a member of the executive board of the Southern Chapter of the Illinois Native Plant Society and Restoration Projects Manager at SIUC, is coordinating volunteer groups through SIUC and the society to help restore natural areas.

Less than one half of 1 percent of Illinois is still prairie, so the management programs are important, Bittner said.

The society is dedicated to preservation, conservation and study of the native plants, vegetation and biological communities of Illinois, Bittner said.

"People look outside and say 'that's great, it's nature,' but there is no biodiversity left," he said. "You see trees in the woods and think that's the way it's supposed to be, but we're changing nature."

The Southern Chapter has worked with the society for almost a year, helping to restore Illinois Department of Conservation land holdings, he said.

April 9 is the DeSoto Prairie Restoration Workday, sponsored by the society. Volunteers will spend the day cutting out non-native plants which are competing with the native plants, Bittner said.

"Historically these areas haven't been properly managed, so the native plants are out competed by the non-native evasive plants," Bittner said. "This is dramatically changing the natural communities."

Bittner said the Illinois Department of Conservation owns so much land that needs to be managed, and the volunteer program helps the state for free.

"These are high-quality areas and are top priority to the state, because they are great representatives of the natural community," Bittner said. "The state has management plans written up for these areas, but don't have the money to follow through."

because mankind is destroying the areas, he said.

The group sponsored restoration workshop days for nature preserves at Brown Barrens, west of Jonesboro, Fults Hill Prairie, northwest of Carbondale and Berryville Barren—over the past year.

"There has been tons of enthusiasm and it's been very successful. With each work day we get more and more volunteers," Bittner said. "We're expecting a good turn out, but the more people the better."

Students interested in participating in the workday should bring work clothes and boots, a lunch and water. The group will depart from Life Science II parking lot at 8 a.m. Saturday. For more information or questions call Bittner at 453-3231 or stop by Life Science II room 405.

The prairie is located two to three miles north of Jonesboro and runs between the railroad tracks and Route 51.

Those interested in becoming a member of the chapter to take part in field trips, meetings and speakers, membership for students is $8, Bittner said.

Multimedia game aims for adults

Newsday

NEW YORK — In the far northern reaches of the city, in a plain brick building between Broadway and the Hudson River, a dozen men and women are creating a glittering and oddly disturbing world.

It is the world of Dieter Haas, a sardonic 35-year-old German at an elite Ol Rashedeh Academy, a suave and worldly Saudi developer. Renate Antozzi, a beautiful Italian filmmaker. Takeshi Mori, a 25-year-old Japanese cyberpunk entrepreneur. And you.

Dieter and his associates, and the world they inhabit, all exist inside computers. They come to you — or is it better to say you go to visit them? — through the electronic alchemy of CD-ROM, the "multimedia" that seems to be — and soon probably will be — everywhere.

But Dieter and his pals are not flat, insubstantial creatures, nor Pac-Man writer larger and better. When Dieter moves through his world, lights and shadows play across his face. When he smiles, your flesh creeps. It isn't so much that he merely looks human, although he does to a remarkable degree. Dieter is scary because he seems shrewd, ruthless, a bit cruel, possibly evil.

Yoni Koenig helped make Dieter what he is. Koenig is lead animator at Eidolon Inc., the company that is creating this world, that is laboring to bring it to market this spring. If all goes as planned, you will be able to buy it soon in your local computer store: Look for a box labeled Millennium Auction.

Millennium Auction is a computer game. Its creators hope that it is different enough to succeed in a marketplace that is awash in computer games: It is not an action game aimed at 12-year-olds, nor a battle simulator, nor a wargamer's strategy game.

tation, but as a cultural representation of God.

"The image of Jesus doesn't bother me because we do not worship the image," Chua said. "You can make whatever image you want, but the Bible says to worship God in spirit and in truth."

David Swartz, assistant minister of the Door Christian Fellowship, said the color of Jesus is irrelevant.

"I don't believe that the color of Jesus matters. It's not an issue when you stand before God," Swartz said.

"When I gave my life to Jesus I didn't think of him as a man, I thought of him as a savior and a mediator." Dale Crall, director of Chi Alpha Ministries, has studied the Bible for over two decades and said a Caucasian image of Jesus is only a symptom of the problem — Just getting rid of it will not bring people to the root of the problem.

"First it is real important to recognize that Jesus was all things to all men; however, I would say that if you look at the ancient men of God and none of them are dark-skinned, then they have no meaning, no significance and no heritage — they are meaningless," Crall said.

"When you study the history of the Bible you realize that dark-skinned people of the world have been denied their heritage," he said.

"If we take from people their identity and their heritage, we also rob them of their future."

Crall said through his study of the Bible he respects more the contribution of dark-skinned to civilization and religion.

"We need to teach more accurately the tremendous contribution to civilization that was given by dark-skinned people of the world," he said.

"I don't think that any children will ever have an inferiority complex if they are taught their true contribution."

Crall said he believes that whites are guilty of a racism that is very, very subtle that they don't realize they have. "I think that racism in America will never have a solution unless corporate leadership among whites of political and religious arenas acknowledge the sins of our forefathers to the forefathers of our other brothers and sisters and begin to recognize that we have prejudice ideas in our belief systems," Crall said.

Darrell Jenkins, a member of Chi Alpha Ministries, said he views Jesus as a human being and not just as the caucasian depicted in most media images.

"In terms of Jesus' color, I just think of him as a person living in Israel having olive, dark skin," he said.

"It doesn't have an impact on the personally. My personal relationship transcends color."

The Muslim American Mission, headed by Imam W.D. Mohammed, has issued propaganda speaking out against the depiction of Jesus as a Caucasian and poses a serious question to America.

"What would happen if people would sit in churches throughout the world for centuries with the image of an African-American man as savior of the world before them? What would this do to the mind of the world's children?"

"What would happen to the world's children put under a figure of a particular race present: pitiable, and in Pain — the Savior, of all men? Civilized nations should want that their religions be also civilized." — Imam W.D. Mohammed.

Counselor learns from experience

By Angela Hyland
Minorties Reporter

When budget cuts eliminated Asian-American activist Reiko True's counseling position last year, she thought she was helpless to save her job.

Instead, she turned the situation into a learning experience on how to organize for Asian-American rights.

True will speak at 7 p.m. tonight in Faneer 1326.

Her lecture is titled, "Asian Americans Learning to Lead and Organize."

Although many opportunities existed to reduce spending, True said administrators chose what they thought would be the easiest way to cut costs.

"They thought I would be very easy prey, that I would not take action, that I would not fight back," she said.

At first, True said she was willing to settle into the lower position.

Friends in the California Asian-American community, however, insisted she take a stand and fight for her job.

True said she had never been active in fighting for equality until the community made her realize she should take a stand not just for her own sake, but for all Asian Americans.

"Sometimes you need to mobilize, sometimes you need to be political," she said, "but always, at the same time, you need to be responsible."

True said the entire community rallied behind her, organizing petition drives and voicing concern about the loss of her job.

An administrator approached True about the community protests and told her if she actively participated in these activities, she could be fired.

"That was a complete shock to me," she said.

"I'd always thought if you were competent and worked hard, people would respect you. That's not necessarily the case."

Within three months, however, True had her job back.

"They decided I was valuable, after all," she said.

Macy Lai, President of SIUC's Asian American Coalition, said minority women face the double struggle of sexism and racism.

Lai said she was racially harassed during her first job as a counselor after college.

"The abuse started four months after I took the job," she said. "After that, it just got worse and worse."

Lai said her supervisor not only required more work from her, but verbally abused her when she did not meet his expectations.

Lai said he never would scream at her or insult her unless they were alone in his office, so she could not prove harassment.

Lai said before she took the job, she had not realized the extent to which racism still existed.

"The abuse started four months after I took the job. After that, it just got worse and worse."

Refuge officials prepare projects; clean-up still on

After News Service

MARION — Tuesday's public meeting at the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge was set up to discuss an aspect of Superfund cleanup work at the Refuge.

Instead, a variety of activists used the time to promote a variety of environmental agendas, including nuclear waste, possible water contamination at the federal prison and, of course and the long-feared solid waste incinerator at the Refuge.

The meeting was ostensibly set up to entertain questions about the Miscellaneous Areas Operable Unit, in which investigators have been locking for toxic materials at selected sites on the Refuge.

In fact, Refuge officials and project consultants spent an hour explaining where they are at on the $1.5 million project, one of four of its kind at the Refuge.

In the other three Superfund projects, researchers are looking for PCB's and toxic metals.

The research has been taking place primarily on the old industrial areas of the refuge, officials say.

Horseback trails could lead to dead end

American News Service

MARION—Horseback riders plan to kick up their heels in Marion Saturday bucking the Shawnee National Forest's plan to close down several trails.

James McVicker, an organizer of the protest, said he expects at least 1,000 horseback riders to join in a 10-mile ride from Carbondale to Marion, along New Route 13.

McVicker said he hopes the massive event will get the public's attention concerning the forest's plan to close down some of its more beautiful trails to horseback riders.

"They are closing down all the real scenic trails," McVicker said. "We don't like this idea and we want to make everyone aware of it."

Glenn Wankel, forester for the Shawnee National Forest in Vienna, said the move to close down the trails in question are part of a management plan to protect endangered plants and species in the forest.

Wankel noted, nonetheless, that the trails that are being close are some of the most beautiful.

Wankel explained that the trails in question were never formally designated by the forest service, instead horseback riders started the trails on their own years ago.

"It's a very small percentage of all the trails in the forest, way less than 5 percent," Wankel said. "It just happens that these are some of the real prettier sites."

McVicker said none of the trails should be closed. He accused environmentalist for bringing the trails under fire.

"A lot of people come to Southern Illinois to ride those trails," McVicker said. "A lot of tourism will be lost."

McVicker said participants in Saturday's protest will carry signs on horseback, some will ride in horse-drawn wagons while others will walk.

"In some ways, it is almost going to be like a parade," McVicker said. "It's going to be big and many people really just want to watch us go by."

State police and local police are working to make the ride go smoothly.

Marion Police Chief Ron Safford said Williamson County Parkway in Marion will be closed from 10 a.m. until 12 p.m. to accommodate riders.

One lane along New Route 13 will be closed to traffic for the 10-mile ride.

"This is going to be a nightmare for the state police," McVicker said. "But I hope it gets some attention and the trails stay open."

Streisand property given to charity; Malibu estate gives singer tax break

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—The asking price for Barbra Streisand's Malibu estate went up by millions of dollars just before she gave it to a conservation agency, raising questions about an appraisal of the property and the size of the tax break she may get.

When the gift to the Santa Monica Mountains Conservancy was announced in November, Streisand's agents said the property had been valued at $15 million.

If the IRS accepts that as the fair market value, Streisand will be able to avoid being taxed on as much as $15 million in earnings.

However, the appraisal of the property commissioned by the conservancy failed to mention that the property had gone unsold at a price of $11.9 million—which would normally set the top limit of its value.

The discrepancy may involve an unusual instruction the appraiser said he received.

Admittedly to keep his assignment confidential, the appraiser said he did not consult local real estate agents or officials—although experts say such contacts are a key element of appraisal research.

Instead of the $11.9 million the report cited only a listing of $9.5 million—a price that took effect last August, just days before the appraiser was hired.

The appraiser, Edward P. Reilly, declined an interview request, saying, "I was aware of the $19.5 million listing—that's as far as I'm going to go.... I just don't want to get involved."

Susan Keenberg, Streisand's business manager, called Streisand's conduct "impeccable" and said she was not trying to gain an unfair tax advantage.

"Her whole reason for doing what she did was to make a beautiful and generous gift to the state of California," Keenberg said.

While declining to discuss specifics of Streisand's tax situation, Keenberg said, "The IRS will be the final arbiter of what is right, and she (Streisand) will abide by whatever decision is made."

The Internal Revenue Service is not required to accept a taxpayer's view of the value of her gift, even if supported by appraisals.

"The measure of the deduction is the fair market value, and the fair market value is what a willing buyer would pay a willing seller," said Rob Giannangeli, public affairs officer for the Los Angeles district office of the IRS.

Streisand's 22.5-acre retreat in Ramirez Canyon features four houses and a caretaker's residence. Conservancy officials said the complex, to be called the Streisand Center for Conservancy Studies, will serve as an environmental research and conference center.

When the donation was announced, conservancy executive director Joseph T. Edmiston described it as one of the three most important gifts of land in the Santa Monica Mountains in the past 50 years, along with the 186-acre Will Rogers estate and the oceanfront holdings of Leo Carrillo.

It's a "splendid piece of property for the use of the Santa Monica Mountains Conservancy, whether its value is $15 million or $10 million," Edmiston said this week.

The property had been on the market since the late 1980s.

Price in better frame of mind entering Masters

The Hartford Courant

AUGUSTA, Ga.—Nick Price may not be playing quite as well as he was a year ago, but his psyche is much improved entering the 58th Masters at Augusta National Golf Club.

And much of that centers on his no longer taking beta-blocker, Inderol, that he took for a seven-year period until 1989 because of blood pressure problems.

Price still has to take medicine, but it doesn't drain his energy as he said Inderol did.

Mac O'Grady said seven of the top 30 players in the world take some form of cal n-influencing drug before they play.

Beta-blockers are supposed to affect the limbic system in the brain that controls fear and anxiety. Past negative traumas are his.

The drugs are not illegal or against PGA Tour policy.

"I don't believe for one minute that players take beta-blockers," Price said in response to O'Grady, who is helping two-time champion Seve Ballesteros with his swing.

"I think (Inderol) did more harm for my career than anything else," Price said. "It keeps you at a constant level—you don't get too high or too low—and you don't have any energy, so I had trouble sleeping, because I hadn't expended any energy. Now I feel more like a human being."

Price is now more concerned with being better prepared for the first major championship of the year than he was in 1993.

"I just didn't handle all the attention of being a favorite after winning the previous major (PGA Championship)," Price said. "I was sort of in a transition stage of getting up the next rung on the ladder. The golf part was really easy, but handling everything else was a little difficult."

"But that's something that comes with time. I handled things much better at the U.S. Open, British Open and PGA, so I'm not that upset about missing the cut at The Players Championship."

Price, 37, the 1993 PGA Tour Player of the Year, said a cold contributed to shooting 73-76 in his TPC title defense two weeks ago. But Price, who missed the Masters cut last year, earlier won the Honda Classic in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., tied for second in the Nestle Invitational in Orlando, Fla., and is 11th on the Tour money list ($290,316) in four starts.

the Blue Devils' 76-72 national championship loss to Arkansas Monday, likely would have been a lottery pick a year ago. But he stayed and played as a senior. Laettner started at Duke for four years. Ferry, too. Bobby Hurley, Alaa Abdelnaby, Mark Alarie, Johnny Dawkins. They all stuck it out. And now, Parks, the 6-foot-11 junior who scored 14 in Monday night's loss.

The program lost a pair of players to transfers a few years ago —Billy McCaffrey to Vanderbilt and Crawford Palmer to Dartmouth—but nobody has left early for the NBA since Mike Krzyzewski's orgy of Final Fours began in 1986.

It has to be one of the reasons Duke has been so good for so long. Is there another major college basketball power that hasn't been affected by the NBA's early-eligibility rule? The Blue Devils have continuity in a world that doesn't allow for it.

Parks isn't the pro-ready player at the end of his junior season that Hill was a year ago. Still, Parks would be a late first-round pick if he came out now. Instead, he enrolled in summer school last Thursday morning before the Blue Devils boarded their bus to Charlotte, N.C., for the Final Four. He has four classes in the summer, and his school schedule already is set next fall.

"I'm already ready to get started on next year," Parks says. "I just enjoy going to school there. I know you may get a lot more perks at a lot of other schools. When you go to Duke, you're a regular student if that's what you want to be. And that's what I wanted to be. If you want to be a regular student, you go there."

"We take our own classes. We get our own books. We do our own schedules. We do everything. But in return, Coach K gives us a lot of freedom. We don't have curfews. We don't have study halls. It's up to us to take care of business. But in return, he doesn't treat us like kids."

NBA teams chose underclassmen with the first four picks in last year's draft. And since then, the NCAA has liberalized its eligibility rules. Now, an underclassman can enter the draft and then reclaim his college eligibility within 30 days if he isn't happy with the team that chooses him or the contract it offers.

That doesn't faze Parks, who will be the focus of Duke's games next season now that Hill has used up his time with the Blue Devils.

"These guys know that they can improve in our program, that we'll try to make them take on even a different role their senior year," Krzyzewski says. "Even though they were great as juniors, their role will expand as a senior. One of the things that the seniors in our program do is to become leaders. And how do you learn about that, unless you're put in that position? So that's probably the main thing that they could learn and take on to the next level by staying."

losses have been Taylor and his investors.

When Taylor entered the National Football League in 1981, his abilities made him one of the game's leading players almost overnight. The same can be said for his entry into the business world. Professional sports have a long history of athletic immortals allowing promoters to exploit their names and in part their wallets. A look at Taylor's business activities suggests that he may be falling into the same trap.

Taylor tapped loyal LT fans for his latest business venture in November when he sold $5 million of stock units in a small startup company called All-Pro Products.

From an offering price of $5 each, the units shot up to 11—the first day. By the end of the month, some buyers were paying as much as 16. Recently, though, the price was down to 11.

It was Taylor's name, augmented by hard-selling brokers, that powered the stock. There isn't much else in the company—just a stalled effort to sell an "isotonic sports beverage" plus plans to develop computer games. There are no products ready for sale. And since Taylor also has aspirations as a movie star, his commitment to All-Pro is limited to 15 hours a week. All-Pro's prospectus describing the company to potential investors prudently promises nothing, and warns that a lot could go wrong.

But what the prospectus doesn't say is that unlike his pro football record, in which he was a perennial all-star, Taylor's business career has been less than stellar. His ventures have left behind a long trail of unpaid debts, litigation and irate investors.

"I've made my mark in football, and I can always look back and say, 'Yes, I was one of the best that ever played the game,'" said Taylor, sitting in the Manhattan law office of All-Pro's lawyer.

"When it comes to this business world, I want to be able to look back at something and say, 'You know what? I put that product out right there. I started the development of that product.' And I want something I can be proud of," Taylor said.

Taylor said his earlier misadventures resulted from trusting the wrong people. He said he's looking for skilled business managers because, after all, "What do I know about running a big, multimillion-billion-whatever company? Nothing. ... It's not what you know, it is who you know, and I can get into any door I want to."

Esplin said getting his swing back after a dismal '93 was as much a mental chore as it was physical.

"I believe I can hit this year whereas last season my confidence wasn't there," he said. "I worked a lot on my backside hitting, but just knowing I can hit and believing in my own talent was a big part of it."

Hitting is not the only area where Esplin is excelling, as he posts a .970 fielding percentage for the Dawgs.

Esplin attributes his defensive success to his offensive struggle during last season.

"I wanted to contribute somehow last season because I lacked offensively," Esplin said. "My defense really improved and has carried over to this year."

Esplin was red-shirted after his season ending injury in the fourth game of the '92 season, which gives him another year of eligibility despite this being his fourth year at SIUC.

Having four years of experience under his belt throws Esplin into the role of being a leader for the younger players in the program.

Riggleman said one of the reasons Esplin has become a leader is his ability to perform in crucial game situations.

"Right now he's giving us some great leadership and that's why he's hitting in the three hole," he said. "Dan performs well under pressure and that sets a good example for the rest of the team."

Being a sideline cheerleader, though, is not the type of leader Esplin said he sees himself as because to him, actions speak louder than words.

"I'm not a 'rah, rah' guy out there," he said. "I try to be a leader for the team on and off the field through my actions."

When it comes to the big leagues, Esplin follows his north side of Chicago roots by supporting the Cubs, but claims his major league idol is Philadelphia Phillies' bad boy, Lenny Dykstra.

If Esplin continues to put up numbers similar to the ones Saluki fans are enjoying this season, being drafted into the pros may be a reality.

"I'd love to get drafted and playing in the majors is my ultimate goal," he said. "But right now I just have to keep playing hard and help SIUC win."

The Dawgs game with Eastern Illinois was postponed on Wednesday due to rain, but SIUC (14-11) will resume action today at Murray State.

Quinn McClure led the Salukis at 162 (85-77) with Jason Stille 163 (85-78), and Chris Pytell 164 (84-80) right behind him. Sam Scheibel, who entered play leading the Salukis in scoring average (76.2) struggled with a 172 (81-91) score. The final Saluki to compete, Steve Irish, was sick during the competition and finished at 95 before withdrawing.

Shaneyfelt said the weather has been bad all season and although the Salukis had to suffer through the weather again, playing always has its benefits.

"Anytime you play you learn something," he said.

"This time you need to learn how to play the ball in the wind."

The Salukis have played a lot of golf lately and Shaneyfelt said the team might need some time off before resuming competition next Friday and Saturday.

"We are just going to work at it hard," Shaneyfelt said. "I try to keep them motivated to play, but it's real hard to motivate yourself when you're having bad luck."

The Salukis will head to Pekin next Friday and Saturday to compete in the Bradley Invitational.

"These will be two very important and hard matches for us," said head coach Judy Auld. "I believe that Southwest is the strongest team because they have great depth and solid in all six singles positions. Wichita State has five strong players. Illinois State is a team you can't overlook."

Wichita State (10-4, 3-1) has won the last 12 meetings and owns a 14-2 advantage over the Salukis. The last time SIUC defeated the Shockers was in 1984 when the Salukis squeaked by with a 5-4 decision.

"All the schools from here on out are beatable," Auld added. "It's up to us rather or not we do it. We've played some very strong programs as well as regionally ranked teams like Miami of Ohio, Drake, Central Florida and others this season. Hopefully, we'll use that type of competition as a tool to better ourselves."

Southwest Missouri (7-7, 1-2) has dropped the last two contests and trails in the series 5-12. The Bears were swept by the Salukis in 1993 with a 5-4 defeat at home and 5-1 loss at the MVC Championships.

Illinois State (2-12, 0-2) played the spoiler at the 1993 MVC Championships when they upset SIUC 5-3 in the opening round. The Salukis, who were seeded third in the tournament, ended up fifth of nine teams with a 3-1 record.

"Our 0-3 conference record is a bit deceiving," Auld said. "In those three losses we were without two of our top six singles players and a walk-on got thrown in at No. 6 singles."

"This is not a do or die weekend but it is important in determining what seed we'll be when it comes to the draw. Many of the conference schools are in the middle of the pack and we can only help our cause in the seeding if we post a successful weekend."

Esplin leading Dawg's offensive run

By Grant Deady
Sports Reporter

Dan Esplin knows all about fighting through adversity. Two years ago, the Saluki baseball left-fielder collided with teammate Jason Smith during a game with Iowa and suffered a lacerated kidney. The injury put Esplin out for the season and left the Lake Forest native wondering if he would ever return to the diamond.

"It (the injury) was definitely the low point of my career," Esplin said. "Coming back was like starting from scratch. I had to re-learn everything, including the basic muscle movement."

Esplin returned for 1993 in strong fashion, finishing second on the team with 28 runs batted-in while starting 48 of the team's 51 games. Against Illinois State, Esplin had three hits in a 7-6 win over the Redbirds and belted a game-winning homer against Louisville.

But Esplin's average fell off the table compared to his freshman campaign when he hit a solid .292, as the lefty only turned in a .238 average in 164 trips to the plate.

The 1994 season has showcased the return of the show-stopper who came to SIUC from Lake Forest High School as a first team all-star.

Esplin is hitting a scorching .337 (32-95) through this season's first 25 games and boasts a team-high 29 RBI's. Tuesday's 15-14 Saluki win over Kentucky also saw Esplin hit his team-high fifth home run of the season, a two-run rocket to right-centerfield that bounced off the Wildcats' scoreboard.

The junior leads SIUC with a .568 slugging percentage and is fourth on the squad with five doubles.

"Dan is really a nice hitter and has worked hard in the offseason," Saluki head coach Sam Riggelman said. "Hitting is not a skill you walk in and out of and he's done a good job of coming back."

After two disappointing road losses to Marquette (2-7) and Miami of Ohio (0-9), the Saluki women's tennis team will be coming home this weekend to host Illinois State, Southwest Missouri State, and Wichita State in league action at the University Courts.

SIUC (6-11, 0-3) will begin a five-match homestand this Friday that will end its regular season before participating in the Missouri Valley Conference Championship. The Dawgs will be looking for its first MVC win on the year.

The Saluki women will host the Wichita State Shockers in a lone conference match up Friday, and then will play Southwest Missouri State first Saturday before going against Illinois State.

SIUC will be looking for a little bit of payback this weekend as the Salukis went 7-2 in league action last year, but suffered its only two MVC losses of the 1993 season to Wichita State and Illinois State.

Conditions lead to 13th for golf team

By Chris Walker
Sports Reporter

Last season the SIUC men's golf team struggled to a 12th place finish in the Annual Diet Pepsi Shocker Golf Classic.

Monday, the Salukis finished in a three-way 13th place tie, but the conditions may have had a lot to do with it.

Sixteen teams enjoyed 70 degree weather and calm winds during practice rounds Sunday, but Monday, the teams teed-off into winds that SIUC head coach Gene Shaneyfelt said were blowing consistently 30-35 m.p.h. and gusting at as much as 50 m.p.h.

The poor weather worsened on Tuesday as 40-degree weather, 25 m.p.h. winds, and rain, changing to snow, caused the cancellation of the third round. The teams were able to get two rounds in Monday which were used to decide the final scores.

Texas Wesleyan took the classic edging Arkansas-Little Rock by three strokes. The Salukis finished at 661, 24 strokes off of the pace.

'Strawman' already has a brain, needs sense

He's been called one of the most gifted baseball players of our generation and been compared to Mickey Mantle and Willie Mays, but the name Darryl Strawberry does not conjure images of a talented baseball player.

Instead, the mention of Strawberry, brings one thing to mind.

T-r-o-u-b-l-e.

Strawberry announced he has a substance abuse problem Monday night and said he will immediately enter a treatment center. This announcement came after a mysterious disappearance from a spring training game Sunday.

Should this recent development be a big surprise to the Dodgers or fans of the sport? Hardly. A brief glance at the outfielder's resume is all it takes to see that "The Straw" has more than a few flaws.

Strawberry has been treated for alcohol abuse before and admitted hitting his first wife. He was eventually arrested for threatening her with a gun.

Besides his latest disappearing act, recent woes for Strawberry include an IRS tax investigation. The IRS claims Strawberry owes taxes on income received from autograph signing sessions.

But maybe he's just a problem off the field. Maybe he's a great influence in the clubhouse—not

Strawberry fought with former Mets manager Davey Johnson and teammate Keitt Hernandez. The incident with Hernandez occurred as photographers were trying to take a team photo during spring training.

So what were the Dodgers thinking when they signed Strawberry to a five-year, $20 million contract? They were counting on the production he had given the Mets.

After breaking into the league in 1983, Strawberry went on to average 32 homers and 92 RBI's in eight seasons. But in the last two years with the Dodgers, Strawberry has given them just 10 homers in 75 games played.

And this season almost is sure to be a bust as well, as no one knows whether Strawberry can kick whatever habit he has, when he might do it, or if he can even produce once he is back.

Still, being the classy organization they are, the Dodgers said they will support Strawberry and continue to pay him while he is on the disabled list.

All this after Strawberry appeared upbeat and confident that this was his year in an interview with ESPN's "Up Close" host Roy Firestone. Strawberry claimed he was blinded by a light during a religious service and had become deeply committed to God.

Now he is committed to a clinic, carrying the baggage of wasted potential with him.

Parks to stay at Duke for last year

By Michael Krisley
The Sporting News

Another Duke junior will become another Duke senior next season. Cherokee Parks, as Grant Hill did before him, and as Christian Laettner did before him, and as Danny Ferry did before him, will finish his four years as a collegian.

Just another oddity from this unlikely little basketball factory in Durham, N.C. Just another reason Duke has played in seven of the last nine Final Fours.

The status quo: The big-dollar bait dangled by the National Basketball Association hooks most of the college game's top-line players before their days of readin', writin' and 'rithmetic are done. Nineteen underclassmen applied for the draft a year ago, a trend that isn't going to change and, in fact, probably will quicken in coming seasons. Already this year, California's Jason Kidd and George Washington's Yinka Dare have announced their intentions to leave school early.

The anomaly: They don't leave Duke. Hill, who finished with a 12-point, 14-rebound performance in
