Path of Hurricane

SIUC law student LizeL Gonzalez remembers receiving a phone call last Saturday from her family in Miami, and it was not good news.

Hurricane Andrew was on its way. The storm hit Miami shortly before dawn two days after Gonzalez was contacted by her family. In its path of destruction, Andrew left at least 15 people dead and billions of dollars in damage.

After crossing the southern tip of Florida, Andrew has regained strength and is heading for the Gulf of Mexico. The hurricane was expected to strike land again somewhere between Pascagoula, Miss., and Vermillion, La. Tuesday, forecasters at the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables reported. The storm, with sustained winds of 135 miles an hour and an 8-foot tidal surge, came ashore at Homestead, devastating the 3,600-acre Homestead Air Force Base on the southern tip of Florida between Everglades National Park and Miami.

“The hurricane hit around four or five in the morning,” Gonzalez said. “My brother put wood on all our windows but my family was lucky—there was no damage to houses on my block.”

But a couple of blocks down the street the trail of Andrew was evident. Houses were left standing but without roofs, sheds had been blown away and trees had been uprooted. Gonzalez said.

CANADIAN PROFESSOR SHOOTS TWO DEAD — A university professor in Montreal ran amok Monday, shooting dead two of his colleagues and injuring three other faculty staff members. The man took several hostages during the shooting at Concordia University’s Engineering Faculty but was later arrested after one of the captives managed to overpower him. The identity of the Soviet-Jewish scientist has not yet been officially released.

ISRAELIS DISCUSS PLANS FOR PEACE — The new Israeli government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, in its first appearance at Middle East peace talks, told Syria and other Arab countries Monday that it was willing to discuss withdrawing from some occupied Arab territory in exchange for real peace. A senior Israeli negotiator hinted that Rabin was even ready to consider a territorial compromise over parts of the Golan Heights for the safety of the Jewish state.

BOSNIAN RELIEF EFFORT LEFT TO U.N. — The United States, Britain and France have decided to abandon temporarily plans for a counteroffensive by the Allied forces to deliver humanitarian aid to Bosnia, diplomats here said Monday, and instead will keep the relief effort under U.N. authority. The decision reflects the reluctance of the major Western powers to commit substantial numbers of ground troops to the embattled region.

ALLEN REFUSES TALKS WITH FARROW — Woody Allen said Monday that before any settlement can occur Farrow must completely withdraw charges that he molested their 7-year-old daughter, Dylan. “Look, the whole thing is absolutely unbelievable,” Allen said he told the 47-year-old actress during their weekend talks. “One way or the other, I will be exonerated.” Allen, who has resolutely avoided publicity, has granted interviews in recent days.

BUSH LEADS CLINTON IN ORANGE COUNTY — President Bush is leading Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton in California’s Republican bastion of Orange County, but by a margin so narrow that his statewide campaign remains in trouble, a Los Angeles Times Poll has found. Bush leads Clinton in Orange County 49 percent to 42 percent — even though Republicans hold a 20-point lead in registration over Democrats in the county, 54 percent to 34 percent.

ANIMAL SACRIFICE BANNED BY LEGISLATION — The Board of Supervisors has approved controversial, if watershed, legislation forbidding the killing of animals solely for the purpose of ritualistic sacrifice. Supervisor Carole Migden authored the original legislation, which sought to ban all animal sacrifice in San Francisco, alter she had heard that someone attempted to burn a dog at a Circles. More than 1,000 animals are killed in sacrifices each year.

ANDREW COULD HAVE BEEN WORSE — It may come as cold comfort to the hundreds of thousands of South Florida residents, but Hurricane Andrew—for all its fierce wind and rain—was a relatively compact storm that under slightly different circumstances could have dealt a far more catastrophic blow. Hurricane experts said the season’s first hurricane apparently caused less damage than many had feared from a storm packing wind gusts of up to 160 mph. state

NEW BUSINESSES INCREASE SIX PERCENT — Secretary of State George Ryan says the number of new businesses started in Illinois was up six percent in the first six months of 1992. Ryan reported that more than 15-thousand businesses were registered between January and June in the state. Not all of the new business starts had risen only one percent over each of the previous two years.

Jobless increase in county, state

By Vincent S. Boyd
Business Writer

A report on an increase in the unemployment rate in Jackson County may be misleading because of SILC and construction jobs, said a labor market economist.

According to the data compiled by the Illinois Department of Employment Security, unemployment in Jackson County as of June 1992 was 9.8 percent, up 2.5 percentage points from the June 1991 figure.

Charles V. Vessell, labor market economist for IDES, said the increase is consistent with other counties on the down swing of a major construction season.

"Williamson County is g sea through the same lave as Jackson County," Vessell said.

Vessell said a major factor in the fluctuation of unemployment figures is mall construction. Both Williamson and Jackson Counties had mall construction or reconstruction going on in 1991.

Another misleading factor for Jackson County is SILC employment.

Underpass could ease Carbondale traffic

By Jeremy Finley
City Writer

Students rushing to class may no longer find the major obstacle of passing trains with plants under way for an estimated $6 million railroad program designed to make traffic run smoother through Carbondale.

The Railroad Reallocation Project will create an underpass on Mill Street for cars to run beneath the railroad tracks, unblocking congestion in the city, said Clarence G. Dougherty, vice president for campus services.

Dougherty, who has worked on making the project reality, said the underpass is needed because of the central location of the railroad.

Though the project is not finalized by the Carbondale City Council, Dougherty said the future for the underpass is almost a certainty.

Dougherty said the underpass will allow easy access to the University. Larry Miles, city engineer, said the underpass will begin on the east side of Illinois Avenue, go under the tracks and work into Freeman Street.

Miles said that even though the plans are in an early stage the underpass should be a part of Carbondale soon.

Funding will come from SILC, the railroad associations, the Illinois Department of Transportation, Carbondale and the federal government, he said.

A Chicago consultant firm will produce a study and discuss it with the funders at a meeting at the end of the week, Miles said.

G. Dougherty, executive director of CBDC said she is currently in negotiations with several individuals who are looking to establish businesses in Carbondale.

“We have people interested in starting businesses here,” Foy said.

“There is a possibility for a new establishment within the next six months,”

Doherty said the possibility of future businesses, coupled with the new University Teletrack, an off-track betting parlor, will help keep the unemployment rate down.

The rate of unemployment for Illinois in June 1992 was 8.7 percent, up from 7.3 percent in June 1991.

With major change, communication vital

THE UNIVERSITY IS WORKING to stay afloat with the continuing economic recession and is searching for new ways to cut costs. After the student population increase of about 37 percent for some students, Benjamin A. Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, devised his own proposal to streamline SIUC's colleges.

The plan may have to be reviewed by deans and directors along with more specific directives for the respective departments. He asks that the educational mission of the University be augmented and that superfluous classes and programs be eliminated.

NOW IT IS in the hands of the deans and directors to decide what classes are no longer as important to their department so the programs and graduates of those programs will not be impaired quality. But all students, faculty members and staff members must be made aware of these changes through the planning and approval process.

If not, the entire University community will be caught off guard and smooth adaptation will be difficult.

Shepherd contends that the University “must continue both development and quality enhancement of its multidisciplinary teaching and research efforts.” Teachers could pay more attention to fewer classes that would remain if the proposal is passed.

But if the cuts in faculty equal or surpass the cuts in classes, professors will have to take on the responsibility left behind. Another threat of a ranking increase work loads would defeat the purpose of a proposed plan. Faculties should be made aware of this as soon as possible so they can prepare for their workload.

In REPORT submitted by the faculty’s 21st Century Task Force, force members contended that some programs are not appropriate for elimination and should be reorganized. This reorganization will put additional responsibility on the department chairpeople and faculty. The plan also could have some promise if it eliminates currently enrolled.

SHEPHERD’S PROPOSAL follows the Productivity Report’s Elimination of Instructional Units Proposal by calling for an evaluation of the remaining classes and faculty within the departments.

The evaluation can help determine the areas where more funding is needed or programs that should be reduced. It is in the best interests of the students that departments be evaluated to eliminate wasted tuition dollars.

But students are concerned with wasted time as well as wasted money. In the process of making these cuts, students may not get much warning. Students who have yet to decide on their major should not be left in the dark about long-range work loads and tuition money if a class they have scheduled or a major they were leaning toward is removed or closed off suddenly to anyone not already enrolled in the major. They also must be informed.

SHEPHERD’S PROPOSAL DEFINING THE University to a higher level of efficiency by bringing together the budgetary and program components. But his proposed changes also will change a school from a wide range of programs to a specialization with always quality. Students, faculty and staff need to be updated frequently as changes arise. In addition, provisions must be made regarding all affected within drastically changing programs.

Student perceived abouterror, blames University Housing

This is the start of my final semester at SIUC. Although I expected the stress of classes, I believe I was to a pleasant learning experience. These hopes were quickly dashed on August 22. The day moved into Thompson Point.

I had reserved my room, 116 Warren, way back in January, shortly after the start of the spring semester. However, when I arrived, I discovered that my room was already occupied by two students, due to a typoing error on one of the occupant’s check-in cards. I know that I deserved the room I reserved in January; I had priority over everyone else. The occupant who was not supposed to be there was given every last thing, and this was already occupied by two people. I feel completely worthless. No one expected the stress of classes. I, Residence Life, cared about my students, due to a typing error.

If you live in Jackson County or on or before October 6, 2002, you are eligible to vote in the November election. Two forms of I.D. are required, but only one must have your current Jackson County address. Acceptable I.D.s include driver’s license, checksbook, visa or passport, lease, student I.D., utility or credit card bill, or a piece of mail. People living outside of Jackson County should check with their County Clerk to see what I.D.s are acceptable for registration.

In Jackson County, there are a number of convenient locations and hours for registering to vote. The Carbondale City Clerk’s office at 609 E. College is open from 8 a.m.

Public transit, faculty raises anger student

Here is a juicy fact to help the latest crop of pigeons to see through the latest round of tuition hikes, rent increases, campus housing, curriculum cuts and class shortages — and O.A. for Jack’s cigarette money smoke.

In 1989 or '90 SIUC received over a million dollars as your share (education) of the skim from a $700-smillion lottery pot.

The faculty, with the full blessing of Petal and Guyon, promptly elected to stick it in their pockets as a raise with no provision for future student enrichment.

That fat, bedraggled ben has been coming home to roost ever since.

Trey Squander allocated money on consultant fees for other line — no public transit line exists without hefty subsidies. Kill it, or the local monopoly game will pick you and your parents’ pockets.

Prof. Bill Hall and the DE staff to present articles on Blackburn College, a student body that utilized its own talents and received hands on experience building it.

Instead, this University hires outside architects and union scale tax cuts to drain a larger portion of tax dollars instead of utilizing the School of Engineering and Technology with a student choice of submitted plans most appropriate to avoid any more Fenner monopolies.

Russian newspapers resolve money problem

The Washington Post

MOSCOW— Shortly after the failed Kremlin coup a year ago, a revolution took place at Izvestia, Russia's leading newspaper. Journalists there voted to fire their chief editor, a Communist Party flunky. The resident government censor was shown the door, as were dozens of KGB agents operating under journalist's cover.

Now, a year later, they have begun to appreciate one of the axioms of professional freedom of the press. In the West, in a capitalist country financially dependent on the press to attract advertising and to survive without outside help. Journalism is a business.

But it also had the paradoxical effect of making virtually every newspaper in the country financially dependent on the state. When price controls were removed at the start of this year and the cost of newsprint rose 20 percent, editors suddenly discovered they were unable to survive without outside help.

Information Ministry responded by allocating 2 billion rubles (about $20 million at the free-market exchange rate) to subsidize the press. So far this year, Izvestia has received about 132 million rubles, roughly equivalent to its monthly budget.

"The economic crisis has given the now democratic government a means of controlling the news media that was not available to the old regime," said Pavel Voschanov, a former press secretary to Russian President Boris Yeltsin. "Newspapers depend on the authorities for paper, production facilities, and journalistic freedom to carry on.

"During the Soviet period, Izvestia journalists were always ready to write "double journalism"—writing opaquely, between the lines. There are still people who are ready for any kind of compromise in order to keep their positions intact," said Golembiovsky, who was elected chief editor a year ago.

The struggle between Izvestia and Khasbulatov came to a head last month when parliament passed a resolution laying claim to the paper's lavish editorial offices and production facilities in the center of Moscow. Legislators argued that the property was illegally taken over by the Izvestia editorial board last year and rightfully belonged to the Russian parliament: as the "successor" to the Soviet parliament.

During the debate, the speaker accused Golembiovsky of "waging war against the Russian parliament" and deliberately "fanning hysteria and psychosis." He added that it might not be a bad idea if half the major newspapers in Russia were forced to close down. By threatening to confiscate Izvestia's property, Khasbulatov had discovered the weakest link in its defenses. Without its immensely valuable premises on Pushkin Square, less than a mile from the Kremlin, Izvestia would have little chance of making a profit. That in turn would vastly undermine the financial independence of the most respected newspaper in the country.

Last weekend Yeltsin stepped into the dispute on Izvestia's side. Presenting himself as the guarantor of the freedom of the press, he signed a decree awarding the disputed property to the Izvestia publishing house.
Nurse-midwifery program serves local hospital

Trained midwives offer alternatives to expectant moms

By Rebecca Campbell
Health Writer

Midwifery conjures up images of a time long past. Movies often depict midwives as old wrinkled village women coming to houses in the middle of the night to deliver babies by the light of a blackened oil lamp on the bedside table.

The art of midwifery and the technology of modern medicine have met in Southern Illinois. Three certified nurse-midwives began practice at St. Joseph's Memorial Hospital in Murphysboro on Aug. 1. They also see patients at the Southern Seven Health Department located in Ullin and the Cobden Migrant camp. CNM Angie Reidner said.

Historically, midwives helped pregnant women through childbirth. Today, certified nurse-midwives are registered nurses with two years of advanced training in midwifery, Reidner said.

Sister Francine Scouster, a CNM and director for the midwifery program, said she has been seeing patients since May. The first birth at St. Joseph's by a midwife is scheduled for September. Each of the two full-time CNMs can deliver up to 10 babies a month at St. Joseph's, Scouster said. The CNMs see expecting mothers from the time they discover they are pregnant through labor and delivery. They also provide follow-up exams and annual check-up services.

Women can become candidates for midwife services if they are 16 or older and have no major medical problems. Patients younger than 16 years old are accepted only at the discretion of a CNM and a consulting physician, because of the higher risk of problems in teenage pregnancy.

"It's a new concept in this area," Scouster said, "so we try very hard to take only low-risk patients." If everything is normal a woman may never see a physician, Reidner said.

Even women who have had Cesarean sections previously may be able to have a normal delivery with a midwife if they have a low transverse cervical scar, she said. A low transverse cervical scar is commonly called a "bikini cut" and is a vertical cut across the lower abdomen. A woman who has a horizontal scar will always require a Cesarean section, Reidner said.

Women with major medical problems such as diabetes or high blood pressure, as well as women who develop problems as the pregnancy progresses, would be referred to a physician, Reidner said.

Four physicians serve as backups for the midwives and take over if special medical care, such as a forceps delivery or a cesarean section, is needed, Reidner said.

Certified nurse-midwives are able to provide services usually available only with physicians. They are registered nurses who have received a masters degree in nurse-midwifery, Reidner said.

Betty Schlatter, coordinator for the midwifery program at the University of Illinois-Chicago, said students receive advanced training in the female reproductive anatomy, obstetrics and midwifery. Regulations include having physicians in a backup capacity and delivering babies at the hospital, Schlatter said.

Wellness Center helps students with major life changes, anxiety

By Karen Freitag

Wellness Center

“Nothing endures but change. It is not possible to step twice in the same river.” Heraclitus long ago (c. 500 B.C.) demonstrated that change is an ongoing phenomenon. What is different today is the pace at which change occurs. Today’s pace can be overwhelming.

Students new to SIUC experience major life changes. In a short time period, they establish a new home, develop new relationships, and experience increased educational demands. Remaining students and faculty also respond to new demands such as budget cuts, new technology, reorganisation, and increased workloads.

Researchers have discovered that too much change can make people sick. Thomas Holmes and Richard Raye found that the amount of change a person experiences is a significant predictor of future illness. Inability to handle change can result in fatigue, pain, insomnia, anxiety, and depression. Too much change without sufficient adapting styles can affect academic and work performances.

In their work on managing change, Cystah Scott and Dennis Jaffe suggest that people can develop the skills to become “change resilient.”

Since external changes are often beyond a person’s control, it is important to recognize and adapt to change. There are some changes that can be influenced and others cannot.

Scott and Jaffe report that change resilient people gain skills to achieve success in new directions. Individuals who are “change hardy” listen to others focus on where they can make a difference and offer positive solutions.

The SIUC Student Health Program Wellness Center provides workshops and consultations to help individuals practice self-care and illness prevention.

Wellness Center programs assist students in coping with changes in their lives. Changing health habits such as beginning an exercise program, cutting back on smoking, and stopping smoking can be accomplished with support and guidance from consultants on campus.

In today’s fast-paced society, becoming change resilient is good medicine.

Carbondale, said a certified nurse-midwife has more training in obstetrics than a general practice physician.

Klam said nurse-midwives learn physiological treatments without the use of medication and doctors may intervene with a medical treatment earlier than a midwife because that is the way doctors are trained.

A nurse-midwife will spend two years studying obstetrics, she said. A general practice nurse spends six months of training. Lay midwives, who may or may not be registered nurses but have no formal training, are illegal in Illinois but certified midwives are not. Certified nurse-midwives, who practice in accordance with regulations set up by the American College of Nurse Midwives, must complete two years of training at an accredited school and pass a national exam, Reider said.

One difference between CNMs and doctors is that the personal service patients receive from nurse-midwives. Reider said nurse-midwives are able to spend more time with patients during office visits than physicians often do because they take a limited number of patients, she said.

The first visit usually lasts an hour, Reider said, and subsequent visits are usually 20 to 30 minutes long.

Klam agreed that physicians are not able to spend the amount of time with each expectant mother that a nurse-midwife can. "She (a nurse-midwife) can spend more time with a patient and be with a patient through most or all of labor. She functions essentially as the nurse and physician," he said.

The CNMs' "labor sit" with the expecting mother, giving massages, helping with breathing techniques and staying with the mother for the duration of her labor and delivery, Reider said.

Another difference between nurse-midwives and physicians is that physicians focus on correcting a disease, and nurse midwives focus on disease prevention, Schlatter said. CNMs spend more time on prenatal education and support of the mother during labor, she said.

The better educated the mother is, the more able she is to stay healthy, Reider said.

Reider said CNM fees are comparable to a physician but fees are paid by insurance companies and also by Medicaid, a medical plan for low-income Illinois residents.

Schuster said Medicaid pays 70 percent of what physicians get paid for the same services. Because of the limited number of patients taken by each CNM she is concerned about the effect this scale will have on the program. "I'm not sure we can survive," she said.

Landowners who farm on lands with a potential for soil erosion and surface or groundwater pollution are sent a questionnaire asking if they would be willing to participate in the program.

Kraft said a project tries to find out if farmers are interested in placing parcels of farmland in the program and which incentives are most effective in encouraging their cooperation.

Kraft and Dick Esses, a professor of political science at Northern Illinois University, are working on a long-term study to determine if farmers' participation in a program encouraging farmers to set aside land for conservation purposes.

Kraft said the program is one of the first regulatory attempts to reduce soil erosion and enhance water quality.

Researchers plan to study effect of chemicals on water supplies

By John Rezanka
Environmental Writer

SIUC researchers will use funds from a $750,000 federal grant this year to study the effects of agricultural practices on groundwater and surface water supplies.

John Yopp, associate vice president for academic affairs and research, said the purpose of the research is to promote safer agricultural practices and inform the public.

Two of the research projects conducted by Brian Klubek and She-Kong Chong, professors in the department of plant and soil sciences, study the effects of agricultural chemicals on water supplies.

Agricultural chemicals from fertilizers and herbicides can pose a potential health threat if ingested by humans.

Klubek’s and Chong’s project at the Agronomy Research Center deals with the effects of soil tillage on the movement of three commonly used herbicides.

Klubek said the purpose of the experiment is to determine if different methods of tilling farmlands affect herbicide movement in surface runoff and groundwater.

Chong said tilled and unttilled plots of soil are treated with herbicides and exposed to rainfall during the experiment. Runoff water is collected in troughs at the end of the plots, and water moving through the soil is collected in underground pans.

He said the contents of the troughs and pans are analyzed to determine the extent of herbicide movement through the soil.

Chong and Klubek said they will be starting a similarly-designed project this fall that examines the movement of nitrates through soil.

The experiment will be conducted on 40 to 5 acres of land on a local farm.

Klubek said the purpose of the experiment is to determine whether or not agricultural runoff and drainage on fertilized cropland contribute to nitrate pollution in water supplies.

Klubek said nitrification and herbicide contamination has been reported in well-water studies conducted in Iowa.

He also said the studies in Iowa do not necessarily apply to Southern Illinois because of its unique geological characteristics.

To determine the impact of agricultural chemicals on the Southern Illinois water supply, studies have to be conducted in the area.

“There is no research done on the Southern Illinois region in particular,” Klubek said. “There is a highly agricultural area that uses large amounts of fertilizer and pesticides.

“We are trying to find out what’s going on,” Klubek said. “Right now we don’t know. Hopefully, we can find out the real story.

Steven Kraft, a professor of agricultural economics, is involved in two other projects funded by the grant.

Kraft’s project study the effects of agricultural policy and regulations on farming practices.

Kraft and Christopher Lant, a professor of geography, are working on a new project designed to discover the most effective and efficient ways of encouraging farmers to participate in the Conservation Reserve Program. The program’s purpose is to protect ground and surface water quality.

employees from the Illinois Department of Public Aid and about 315 in the Department of Children and Family Services.

A union representative said the elimination of two positions at the Jackson County Public Aid office may open up the possibility of fraud, error and delayed client service unless remaining workers can make up the additional work. Barbara Brumfield, staff worker for the labor union representing Public Aid employees in Southern Illinois, said the elimination of two positions at the Jackson County office.

She said the intake specialist is in charge of determining the eligibility of potential clients for Public Aid.

The income maintenance specialist balances the client's income with expenses the client owes, such as medical assistance.

"When the employees are laid off, a larger workload is placed on those who continue working," Brumfield said. "This will open up the possibility for more errors and fraud to slip through the system."

"Without verification by a full-time staff, anyone who attempts to fraudulently defraud the system will have a much easier time doing so," she said.

Offices in sparsely populated Southern Illinois counties, such as Perry, Union and Jefferson counties, are expected to lose at least one county employee, each, whereas Jackson, Williamson, St. Clair and Madison counties as a whole stood to lose at least 27.

Robin Pitts, field worker for the labor union representing DCFS workers, said Southern Illinois DCFS employees are concerned about the fate of the children after the layoffs — mainly to cause information regarding those who will be laid off has not been made available.

"There are employees in licensing and day care that we think will be laid off, but no one knows for sure," he said.

"We are worried. Are these children going to be defrauded," because we don't know who'll be laid off," he said.

Spokesman Dan Egler said Governor Jim Edgar initially planned on allowing a greater share of the state budget for DCFS, but the General Assembly voted in favor of distributing funds to state and local governments for needs such as street and sidewalk maintenance.

Edgar proposed a budget $19 million more than what was approved by the Legislature for DCFS.

That decision resulted in consolidation and layoff plans and the resignation of department director Sue Sater because of the belief that DCFS could not operate with such insufficient funds, Egler said.

DCFS spokesman Ed McNamara said the initial 365 positions to be eliminated at the department made an effort to eliminate the jobs of 188 managerial and 187 service-related employees to make a "half-and-half" proportion between those laid off.

McNamara said in Southern Illinois, 47 employees are to be laid off.

In addition, a southern regional office in East St. Louis will be eliminated in the St. Louis and Marion regions.

County offices will remain in operation despite the consolidation, he said.

Welcome to Dawg Bytes, a weekly column which will appear in the Daily Egyptian on Wednesdays. Stay tuned this semester to learn how to make computer connections on campus work for you. Computers can seem a bit overwhelming at times, but don't worry. The Dawg will lead you through it.

Computers. They help college students turn out professional papers, analyze budgets and provide brief diversions with a wide assortment of games. Yet, much of what Computing Affairs accomplishes on campus isn't so apparent. Staffers work behind the scenes to help various academic and support units maintain their computer complex. This week we look at how SIUC's Computer white team helps make life easier for students, scholars and loans.

Q. I am registered for full classes at SIUC. Like many students, I receive financial aid and/or loans. In the past, my classes were canceled if I didn't pay the minimum due or obtain a cancellation waiver through the Financial Aid Office. Is this better now? Will it be the same this year?

A. No! SIUC just improved the process for issuing cancellation waivers to make it easier for students to rely on financial aid and loans—about half of the student body.

Here's how it works: Cancellation waivers are now automatically issued to students pre-registered for an upcoming semester AND whose financial aid package will cover a semester's charges. Charges include tuition, fees, books, housing, parking and library fines, laboratory fees and other miscellaneous charges.

To qualify, the financial aid package must be processed before the semester's first bill—that was July 10 for this semester. Some 5,600 registered students qualified this fall for an automatic cancellation waiver and were notified on their July statements that their classes were not canceled. SIUC mailed a separate letter to those students to remind them that their times will remain on file.

Financial Aid developed the falling improvement with help from many University offices. Computing Affairs and other college notices helped eliminate paperwork wizardry, and the system will remain in effect.

Q. Amazing. How did this happen?

A. Computing Affairs tackled the problem head on at the request of Financial Aid. Sang Thi Do, a top computer programmer working under the direction of manager Frank Soboly, spent months designing a new system that makes students' lives easier and improves staff productivity.

Q. I'm not eligible for a cancellation waiver because I do not have enough financial aid. How do I keep my registration from being canceled?

A. You must pay at least the minimum amount requested on the first bill you receive for the semester.

A. Yes. With the new cancellation waiver process in place, the number of phone calls fielded by the Financial Aid Office at the semester's start is expected to drop significantly. As students get in the habit of applying early for financial aid in order to ensure automatic waivers, last-minute calls should drop—freeing up the phone lines for people with other inquiries.

Q. Support I have registered for full, have financial aid and a waiver, but now choose not to attend fall semester. How do I withdraw?

A. Simply fill out the withdrawal form included in a letter Admissions and Records recently sent to your billing address. Then mail it back to SIUC. You may also withdraw in person. Undergraduates must go to the Office of Student Life, Barracks 7-40, behind Faner Hall; graduate students must go to the Graduate School Office, Woody Hall, 108-B. The deadline for withdrawing classes and getting a refund is Friday, Sept. 11.

Q. It's not registered yet for fall semester. But I had my financial aid processed by July 10. I received a letter from SIUC saying I can register without making a payment. This sounds wonderful, but is it true?

A. Believe it! Changes to the prepayment waiver process provided automatic waivers to more than 1,300 students who had not pre-registered for this term. The Financial Aid Office sent notices to those who qualified.

Q. I am not yet registered for fall and did not file a financial aid application early. But, I have financial aid now. Can I still get a prepayment waiver?

A. Yes, provided your financial aid covers all your University charges for fall. See the Financial Aid Office and apply for the waiver now.

The Dawg's Tip: If you have not already filed a financial aid application, plan to do so before spring semester. It must be processed by Dec. 11 to qualify for an automatic cancellation waiver for spring semester. For the 1993-94 academic year, plan to register early, fill up your financial aid, and then register by the end of January, Dec. 1, 1992, and sit back and let the computer do the "Woody Say, registration!"

Hurricane Andrew survivors recall terror of five-hour ordeal in Miami hotel lobby

MIAMI — At the Dadeland Marriott Hotel, 600 people, some newborns and others nearing 90, lay terrified on the balcony room, listening to Hurricane Andrew smash window overheard.

"The chandeliers were swinging; the floors were absolutely rocking," said Lisa Martin, who followed hundreds of others to the windowless hallway to wait out the predawn hurricane.

Around the hotel, in this southern corner of Miami near Coral Cables, Andrew hit hardest, blowing off roofs, toppling gas pumps, lifting boats from the water and dumping them on land.

Randomly, the hotel's 11th and 24th floors were devastated. Windows shattered, and walls caved; some rooms were blown halfway into the hallway.

"It was like something in a movie," said Tracey Martin, 18, here with her mother, Lisa, from Port Washington, N.Y. "We were all lying on the floor, everybody quiet, even the babies. It was eerie. You could hear the crashing and crashing up above. The wind blew the door to the balcony open when we were all lying there. It was frightening."

Even 12 hours after Andrew knocked out power and normal life at the Marriott, the Martins and hundreds of others wandered through the dark, humid hotel. There was no place better to go.

No power meant no air-conditioning, no food, no flush toilets.

Sima Siodarz, 80, was one of those who could not go anywhere. She had taken refuge here from her home in Coral Gables. She lay now, as she had for more than 15 hours, on white blankets and pillows, her wheelchair at her feet.

The road to her home was impassable.

"It's very uncomfortable," she said in Spanish. "It's hard. It's very devastating. Everything is broke."

Her daughter, 60, said she was glad they had come. "Even though we were locked inside this big building, it was so scary," she said. "People were trying to shut one of the doors, and the wind was sucking them out of the room like a vacuum."

All around, people pulling blankets and pillows behind them, aimlessly looked for a comfortable spot to sleep. There was nothing else to do — no television, and the bar was closed. With every fast-food restaurant and grocery store closed for miles, money meant little. There was no food, ice or water to buy outside.

On the Martins' floor in the Marriott, the 24th, rooms had been pushed largely into the hallway. Tracey Martin called the University of Miami. Monday was to have been her first day there.

Only Sunday, she had moved all of her belongings into Mahoney dormitory. Now she was hearing on the phone that her dorm had been damaged and that many of the clothes and items inside rooms had been soaked by the unrelenting downpour.

"This hasn't been a smooth transition to college," Tracey said. "I want to go home."

No problem. Stenstrom is right-handed. Besides, there's nothing wrong with a little time off to recharge the batteries, right?

"I don't feel like I missed out on too much," Stenstrom said. "It's the same offense as we had under coach Green. Besides, they didn't give us the whole package.

By now, Stenstrom has been well-drilled on Walsh's system.

"He's very smooth, very knowledgeable, and he has a maturity about him that's very unique," Walsh said. "I think he's adapting very well."

Stenstrom has always been a quick learner. He had to be to play under El Toro's complicated offensive schemes.

"Some kids take a year or two to catch on," said Bob Johnson. "Some come from Texas, where they didn't do a lot of throwing, where they didn't read any defenses, where they don't have all the passing leagues. He started from square one."

Vincent as baseball's MVP: Most Visible Personality

By Joe Gergen

Newday

With each succeeding day, it is more apparent that there is but one outstanding candidate for baseball's MVP. That's Most Visible Personality, not Most Valuable Player. Consider a commentary on 1992 that the figure in question has yet to swing a bat or throw a pitch.

In a season in which declining attendance has been offset by an increase in the time of games, stretching the entertainment value to the breaking point for a diminishing number of customers, Bay Vincent has become a lightning rod for the problems that plague the sport. As a result of several rulings and growing hostility from a body of owners in both leagues, the commissioner and his powers are emerging as the most significant story of the year. That is not a positive development for the man or for baseball, which sells no tickets to management maneuverings.

The latest escalation in the war of faxes guarantees that the focus on field activities will be diminished just as the sport begins its stretch run. Acting at the request of their employers and in contradiction of Vincent's wishes, the two league presidents scheduled a special meeting of owners Sept. 3 for the express purpose of discussing the commissioner's status. At the session in Rosemont, Ill., just outside Chicago, Vincent's critics are expected to threaten.

commissioner cannot be fired, nor can his powers be diminished, during his term of office.

However, the agreement also gives the league presidents permission to call a joint owners meeting if the commissioner fails to schedule one five days after being requested to do so.

Bobby Brown, the American League president, and Bill White, the National League president, scheduled the meeting after asking Vincent to do so—at the urging of a majority of owners—one week earlier.

The commissioner has obviously received counsel to the effect that we don't have the right to hold a meeting, but the Major League Agreement says we do," Autry said, adding that Vincent won't be missed if he doesn't attend, although the commissioner normally chairs any joint owners meeting.

"I don't think it was our intention for him to attend in the first place," she continued. "Under the terms of the agreement, when the owners meet to elect or re-elect a commissioner or evaluate his performance, as we are doing in this case, that person is excluded from the meeting.

Vincent has hired Brendan Sullivan Jr., a Washington attorney, to represent him in case the owners take an "inappropriate action." He wrote in his letter Thursday to the owners that he will not resign and will not leave if illegally voted out.

A National League owner said Sunday that it is the hope of more than 20 owners that Vincent can be "influenced to step down. If not, he said, "We will have to decide if we have the heart for a legal fight."

Autry said she "could not assume" that a vote on Vincent will be taken at the Sept. 3 meeting.

"I think it's more a situation where the clubs want to discuss what's happening and the commissioner's role and come to some conclusion," she said.

O'Malley agreed. He said Monday that Vincent's possible absence "would not be a factor." He added that he could not "prejudge" the possibility of a vote on the commissioner.

"I think it's a situation where the timing is right for a frank discussion," he said.

Baseball to try out walk-on athletes

The 1992-93 baseball Salukis are looking for a few good men this week as they hold tryouts for walk-ons for this season.

The team will hold a organizational meeting 5 p.m. Aug. 27 at Alt Martin Field for all those who are interested.

Assistant baseball coach Kea Henderson said they are looking for quality athletes that can assist the team.

"Down the road we hope that the walk-on can become a contribution to the team," Henderson said.

Henderson said that in the past the Salukis have had good success with walk-on recruits.

Former Saluki ace Al Levine was a product of walk-on recruitment. Levine has gone on to the major league level playing for the Chicago White Sox farm team.

"We are looking for those that are interested in baseball," Henderson said.

The Saluki's opener is Aug. 31 against Murray State.

The Salukis opened the season 1-0 after a 14-1 win over the Bluefield Bluegrass.

The Salukis will now begin the season with a four-game series against Eastern Kentucky.

The game is set for 3:30 p.m. at Alt Martin Field.
Walsh finds contentious in Disneyland

Los Angeles Times
ANAHEIM, Calif.—There he was, the sophisticated, urbane Bill Walsh, winner of three Super Bowl rings and countless coaching accolades. There he was, Cary Grant with a whistle, sitting on a Disneyland park bench earlier this week with Goofy on one side and a member of the three little pigs on the other. If only the San Francisco 49ers could see him now.

But this is the new Walsh. The content Walsh. "This is the happiest and most excited I've been in my career," he said. "Not about being seen with an oversized Disney pig or a Goofy dressed like a referee. That was public relations. That was putting on a happy face for the sponsors of Wednesday night's Pigskin Classic at Anaheim Stadium, which features seventh-ranked Texas A&M against Walsh's 17th-ranked Stanford Cardinal.
