SIUC paychecks may be affected by budget crisis

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

SIUC civil service employees may miss a paycheck because of the state budget crisis, an SIUC official said.

James A. Tweedy, vice president for administration, said not having a state budget in place could stop the University from issuing paychecks for some employees.

"The first group hit would be the civil service employees paid semi-monthly on July 16," Tweedy said. "Only those paid from state accounts would be affected, but that includes most of them."

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees sent a letter to Gov. Edgar urging him to pass a temporary budget to meet the state's payroll if a final budget agreement is not reached in the next two days.

Henry Bayer, AFSCME Council 31 executive director, said he thinks Illinois lawmakers owe it to state workers to pass a temporary budget.

"The comptroller's office has informed us that it will have no choice under state law but to delay the paychecks for nearly 10,000 state and university employees if a state budget is not in place by Friday," Bayer said.

"We also said that within one week the paychecks of tens of thousands of additional state employees will be delayed.

"If it becomes clear that a final budget agreement cannot be reached before the July 9 deadline, we believe it is the responsibility of the leaders of this state to pass a temporary budget containing funds for the comptroller to issue paychecks on time for the next payroll period."

Pam Brandt, SIUC's director of personnel services, said paychecks have been delayed before.

"The last time this happened, people did not get paid," Brandt said. "But the local banks offered no-interest loans to people who had their checks direct-deposited with them."

Rick Davis, a spokesman for Illinois Comptroller Dawn Clark Lutsy, said the last time paychecks were delayed for University employees was in 1991.

"Two years ago, lawmakers were unable to agree on a budget," Davis said.

"We missed a couple of payrolls, but they settled it on July 19, and on the next day, we made the money available," he said.

Aid for striking miners: Banks to offer supported loans to help strikers, area economy

By Shawna Donovan
Special Assignment Writer

State Treasurer Patrick Quinn is making the financial burden of a prolonged strike easier on area union miners and local businesses.

Only ten area banks are working with Quinn to offer loans to area striking miners. Only the miners, who are customers of those banks, will be eligible for the state-supported loans.

Under the agreement, Quinn will deposit state funds in the participating banks. Banks will offer low-interest loans which union miners can pay back on a scheduled basis.

Marj Heperlin, spokeswoman for Quinn, said the treasurer has used this procedure before.

"Treasurer Quinn used funds to help out Caterpillar strikers in Peoria last year," she said. "An economic disaster can be as devastating as floods and other natural disasters."

"It is an impact on the whole community," Heperlin said. "Banks will work with their striking customers who need assistance paying bills."

Heperlin said an estimated $1 million will be distributed to the ten banks.

Local banks also will offer low-interest loans to area businesses

State lawmakers turn to President seeking help for flood-stricken areas

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

Illinois lawmakers have begun asking for state and federal money to help flood-ravaged victims of Southern Illinois.

Gov. Jim Edgar persuaded Illinois senators Paul Simon and Carol Moseley Braun to ask President Clinton to declare 12 counties in the state federal disaster areas.

Simon's spokesman Dave Carle said the two senators contacted the president to ask that he expedite Gov. Edgar's request last Tuesday for the presidential declaration.

"Senators Simon and Moseley-Braun sent the request to the White House," Carle said. "They asked President Clinton to keep their request for federal assistance in Illinois on the front burner and to act promptly on it."

If the president grants the declaration, federal assistance can include temporary housing, grants, low-cost loans to cover uninsured property losses and other programs to help individual and business owners recover from the effects of the disaster.

Clinton said in a press release last week that his administration will work together with midwesterners facing rivers that have not yet crested.

Last week, Edgar declared 15 counties along the Mississippi and Rock Rivers as state disaster areas.

Southern Illinois farmers hit hard by flood

By Sean L. N. Hao
General Assignment Writer

The rising tide of the Mississippi is likely to weigh heavily on Southern Illinois farmers, say officials at the Illi tension Bureau.

The river that has left several riverbank cities flooded since last week now endangers the crops and livelihood of area-farmers.

Glen Seeber at the Murphysboro branch of the Jackson County Extensions office, which provides assistance and advice to Illinois farmers, said Jackson County's low lying areas along the Mississippi River will probably flood within the week.

"The Jackson County towns of Grand Tower, Jacob, and Gorham are the most likely to experience flooding," he said.

Lorna Kirvey, at the office, said top land around the Cache and Big Muddy Rivers are likely to flood as the Mississippi swells area-rivers.

"These lands will suffer the same problems similar to the ones experienced in the low lands of Union County," she said.

Kirvey said farmland in the Union County basin has been in trouble for months.

"Most farmers had not completed planting before the latest round of flooding because much of the land still had not dried," she said.

Kirvey said water inside the levy did not get a chance to drain fully.

"The levies were only open for one week before

Carbondale to get health care services

By Tracy Moss
Special Assignment Writer

Shawnee Health Service will begin providing Carbondale with additional health care services this fall but the possibility of a permanent community health center will depend on the availability of funds.

Shawnee Health Service and Development

Corporation of Carterville signed an agreement with the city of Carbondale to lease space at the Burma C. Hayes Center, 441 E. Willow St. in order to provide health services for the north-east section of the city.

The agreement will negate a $90,000 lawsuit filed by the state against the city for taking state funds for a health clinic that had already closed. The health clinic, that used to be in the Hayes center, closed in 1985 when federal funding for the service ended.

George O'Neill, director of Shawnee Health Service, said his agency will transfer some of its services to the Hayes center, but a full service health center is not possible at this point.

Former SIUC baseball star goes pro

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

From little league on, many baseball players dream of getting the call to play in the big leagues. An ex-Saluki received that special call Tuesday morning.

Sean Bergman, a former standout pitcher at SIUC, has been pitching in the Detroit Tigers organization since he was a fourth-round pick in 1991.

Bergman had been doing well at Class AAA Toledo, going 8-5 with a 3.19 ERA in 15 starts. In 98 2/3 innings, Bergman gave up 88 hits, walked 44 and struck out 76. Before dropping his last start on Thursday, Bergman had strung together four consecutive victories.

Bergman was scheduled to pitch at home Tuesday, but was relieved of his duties by Detroit GM Jerry Walker.

Walker instructed Bergman to get on the 1 o'clock flight from Toledo and join the Tigers in Minneapolis, where Detroit is playing the Minnesota Twins.

Don Bergman, Sean's father, said he always envisioned his son in the bigs.

"I knew he had the tools ever since 7th or 8th grade," Bergman said. "Fathers have tunnel vision, so ever since then I thought he could do it."

Bergman

Don Bergman said his son's reaction was typical of players who get the call they have been waiting for.

"He was excited as hell," Bergman said. "This is what baseball players work their whole life for, it's a life-long dream come true."

Dave Miller, the Tigers' director of minor league operations, said Bergman replaced left-handed reliever Bill Krueger on the Tigers' roster. Krueger was placed on the disabled list.

Don Bergman said it will be hard for Detroit's coaches to send his son back to the minors.

"He has to perform, but he is such a competitive kid I think they will have a hard time deciding to send him back," Bergman said.

Webber's forward future could be good as gold

The Sporting News

Isiah Thomas shook his head and wondered aloud. How could anyone, much less Orlando, pass on Chris Webber?

"Shock," said Thomas after the trade that sent Webber to Golden State.

"It's a shocker. What does he bring to the Warriors? Defense, rebounding, shot blocking, scoring, intimidation, attitude. He has won every place he's been, and I don't see this level being any different." Neither does Golden State.

But exactly how good Webber becomes depends almost entirely on how good he wants to be. Few NBA power forwards possess the bundle of skills that Webber brings to the league.

Check the roster: Chicago's Horace Grant, Portland's Buck Williams, New York's Charles Oakley, Houston's Otis Thorpe, Atlanta's Kevin Willis. All front-line starters and yet all of them fall short of Webber in one area or another.

Webber automatically finds himself in the elite company of Larry Johnson, Derrick Coleman and, in the minds of some, even Karl Malone.

"I really like Coach (Don)

Nelson and I've been a fan of Tim Hardaway, (Chris) Mullin and Billy Owens," Webber said. "I just hope they get a bigger player than me because I'm not a center."

That, too, could determine how fast and how high Webber rises. To even approach Malone's level, Webber will have to at least match Malone's intensity, which rarely drops minute to minute much less game to game over the NBA's grueling regular-season schedule.

Webber also will have to show the nightly toughness that defines Johnson's game and the long-term desire that has carried Grant and Williams.

Though solid as a collegian, few would confuse Webber's approach with that of the league's top power forwards.

Talent, as Webber will soon find out, is only one ingredient in the NBA superstar mix.

And if the Warriors force him to roam the paint and play opposite David Robinson, Hakeem Olajuwon and other established centers, the process will be harder for Webber than it was for any of his newer contemporaries.

All of which will go a long way in establishing Webber's ultimate star quality.

NFL expansion race finally involved with politics

The Sporting News

It was bound to happen. Politics has heated up the NFL expansion race, which should be determined by the end of this year.

Maryland Gov. William Donald Schaefer — looking out for the Baltimore bid — criticized a recent endorsement by the NAACP for the Charlotte, N.C., expansion group, Richardson Sports, Inc.

In the wake of racial discrimination lawsuits directed at the Denny's restaurant holdings of Charlotte Owner Jerry Richardson, the NAACP signed minority hiring agreements with Richardson's companies.

It wasn't the agreement that bothered Schaefer. It was the public statement made by NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Chavis.

"The NAACP is going to work hard ... to send a clear signal to the NFL that we want a franchise in Charlotte, and we want it under Jerry Richardson," Chavis said at a news conference.

After Schaefer labeled that statement as a "slap in the face" — Baltimore and Charlotte are considered to be neck-and-neck behind St. Louis — the NAACP backpedaled, slightly.

"No one really focused on the notion that Baltimore was competing for a franchise," says Fred Rasheed, the NAACP's economic development chief. "There was never any mention (in writing) by the Charlotte interest or us about endorsing the application for a franchise."

Raiders need head start for next season

The Sporting News

It now seems appropriate that the Los Angeles Raiders are first to open training camp in the NFL. They might need the head start.

The mystique of the Raiders doesn't seem such a mystery anymore. It's the weirdness of the Raiders that keeps our attention.

Al Davis, the club's managing general partner, might be going through an identity crisis. Or maybe it's the stark reality that being a Raider doesn't carry the honor it did years ago when this proud franchise truly dominated and/or intimidated the NFL.

Really, right now, what do you think about the Raiders?

Davis once took pride in the fact that he could lure a $500,000 player to the Raiders for, say, $350,000. In the recent free-agent run, the Raiders had difficulty enticing any talent, though Director of Football Operations Steve Ortmayer duly noted that the organization was trying to be "fiscally responsible and loyal to the other players on this team."

In other words, the Raiders realize that out of the new collective-bargaining agreement a group of Haves and a group of Have Nots are sure to be born. And management doesn't want to create a team of envy and greed. This is something to watch in the next two years as a system of salary inequities will create divisions in the locker room.

On the other hand, some Raiders

Pakistan's most populous province, Punjab, is in such a state of chaos that it has no budget to pay its bills, its governor has been barred from his office and government bureaucrats don't know whose orders to follow.

RECESSION HARMS POPULARITY OF LEADERS — Less than four years after basking in the collapse of their communist foes, the leaders of the seven major industrial democracies now stand scorned by electorates dismayed by their failure to guide the world out of recession. None will be able to speak with the credibility of strong public support. Even though polls show fewer than half of Americans approve the performance of President Clinton, he ranks ahead of his peers.

HEART DISEASE DEATHS DECREASE IN U.S. — For those who bypass red meat and butter, meditate each morning and lace up the Nikes after work, things are looking good. Heart disease death rates have plummeted 40 percent in the past decade. And within the next five to 10 years science may add four new strategies to its heart-disease prevention arsenal. The drop in death rates so far is partly attributable to a decline in smoking, better control of hypertension and improved diets and exercise habits.

DRUG CONVICTIONS CROWD NATION'S JAILS — During its ongoing war on drugs, the United States has taken a great many prisoners, about 900 of whom are here, serving 20- and 30-year sentences. From county jails to state penitentiaries to federal correctional institutions such as the well-manicured, medium-security facility here, the United States has never had more people incarcerated, nor more inmates doing time for drug offenses. The question authorities now face is: Who are these people, and should all of them be jail? Attorney General Janet Reno has expressed growing concern that overcrowded state prison systems are releasing murderers and rapists, to make room drug offenders.

Bicycle registration advised

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Police Writer

SIUC students who have had their bikes stolen are one step closer to recovering them if they are registered said the coordinator of parking and traffic.

The spring semester alone has claimed a loss of 38 bicycles, seven of which have been recovered. Of the seven recovered, five were registered with the university.

Last year, 95 bicycles were stolen and 23 of the 31 bicycles recovered were registered.

Marilyn Hogan, coordinator of parking and traffic, said students should register their bicycles as soon as possible.

"It will help you relocate it if it is stolen," Hogan said. "If someone does take a bicycle and is stopped with it, the registration number will help the police find the owner faster."

Theresa Nesler, statistical clerk for the SIUC police department, said registration does not prevent theft, but it will aid in finding the owner of the bike.

"It is very beneficial for a student to register a bicycle," Nesler said. "In the event that a bike is recovered, it is the only way of verifying ownership of that bicycle."

Hogan said the purpose of registration is two-fold.

"One, it helps the police identify the bicycle if it's stolen," Hogan said. "Two, the decal helps the police when they write parking tickets."

Hogan said identifying the owner of an illegally parked bicycle is

Farms continuing despite budget cut

By Candace Samolinski
Administration Writer

SIUC University Farms continues to offer services to the Carbondale community despite budget constraints.

Anthony Young, associate dean of research in the College of Agriculture, said budget cuts initiated last August will go into effect in the upcoming year.

"The cuts will affect the farm and some people will be laid off during the winter months," Young said. "I do not believe any facilities will be shut down, but productivity may be decreased."

The cost of the farm's operations are covered by an experimental farms account and a University Farms account. The experimental farms account is privately funded and receives about $300,000 to $350,000 a year. The University Farms account is funded by the state in the amount of about $190,000 a year.

University Farms generated nearly $1.4 million in outside funds for research in 1991 and more than $4 million from Pakistan and Zambian projects.

A planning document submitted by Benjamin Shepherd, SIUC vice president and provost, last August suggested the farms would have to scale down. The streamlining will take effect in the coming months.

The University Farms spans about 2,000 acres of land west of campus and offers a wide variety of hands-on experience for both students and the general public. It employs between 10 and 12 full-time workers and 35 to 40 student workers.

Elden Shaffner, farm manager, said few people know the informational opportunities available at the farms.

"The farms offer a chance to get familiar with animals and procedures," Shaffner said. "A lot of people do not realize the types of things we have here, it would be great if we took a bigger role in public service."

James McGuire, dean of the College of Agriculture, said he would like to see an increase in public service between the college and the community.

University Farms has several centers including: livestock, dairy, a feedmill, agronomy and horticulture facilities. Tours of the centers are given to the public once or twice a year.

"Our main purpose here is teaching and research but we do host tours," Shaffner said. "We give the tours to between 1,200 to 1,500 children from preschool age to the sixth grade."

SIUC works with the Jackson County Extension Service in Murphysboro to provide public services.

The service provides area farmers with information about agricultural issues but has been forced to scale back because of a lack of funds. Young said SIUC will help to pick up some areas the service can no longer provide.

"We have worked with the extension service in the past and will continue to do so in the future," Young said.

Glenn Seeber, unit leader for the service, said restructuring began a

Prof's legacy offers leadership example

SOME INDIVIDUALS MANAGE TO SERVE as role models in many areas.

Roye Bryant, a professor emeritus at SIUC, died at 89 Monday, but his involvement in SIUC student leadership lives on. At a time when many students are struggling to manage jobs, schoolwork and extracurricular activities, finding a role model who has done all of those things seems difficult.

But Bryant, who received his bachelor's degree from SIUC in 1930, served in a leadership capacity as a student and beyond. He was involved in campus politics, president of the Forum Debate Club, Socratic Literary Society president and a vice commander of the old Sigma Alpha Pi fraternity, the only fraternity SIUC had at the time.

He also served as editor in chief from 1929 to 1930 when the SIUC campus newspaper was a weekly called "The Egyptian."

Proving that leadership calls for good teamwork, Bryant said one of the most important lessons he learned as student editor was that, if you need help, make sure that help is dependable.

BUT BRYANT'S LEADERSHIP ABILITIES extended beyond his involvement as an SIUC student.

His 1972 retirement ended his 46 years in the education field, 22 years as an Illinois public school administrator and 24 years at SIUC as placement director, acting dean of home economics and an assistant to the chancellor.

Bryant contributed to Carbondale and Edwardsville campuses as a director and organizer of the Placement Center in 1950, according to Robert O' Daniell, Alumni Services director from 1951 to 1984. Bryant also received the Southern Illinois University Alumni Achievement Award in 1979 for distinguished service to the University and the Alumni Association.

Bryant's belief that every rock should be climbed while leaving no stone unturned resulted in achievements that continue to inspire.

Letters to the Editor

U.S. retaliation against Iraqi plotting exemplifies poor U.S. justice system

I am writing in response to the letters of Timothy Kane and Edna Hane (DE, July 2).

I reject the idea advanced by President Clinton and endorsed by these two writers that the U.S. retaliation against Iraq for the alleged assassination attempt on ex-President Bush is "how civilized nations behave," — Clinton's phrasing.

The missile attack on Iraqi intelligence building is not an example of how the American justice system is supposed to proceed.

The accused must be given a trial in which they are granted legal counsel for their defense. In this case, a few international cops (U.S. intelligence) received information and passed it on to the chief (the president) who gave the "go ahead" to fire into the home of the suspects. This is American justice?

The accused must be given a trial in which they are granted legal counsel for their defense

(Maybe this would be the case in the tradition of Hoover's FBI, but not in the legal tradition.)

If this missile attack was morally justified, consider many U.S. government buildings long since leveled. Mr. Hane, would you have sanctioned Castro bombing the CIA headquarters? You must, given your own logic.

And let us end this constant finger-pointing at Saddam Hussein as if he were the only Iraqi.

I certainly would have been angry at Bush if I were the old pal he doublecrossed, but this doesn't mean that Saddam Hussein ordered an assassination.

And finally, if Bush or Clinton wanted Hussein dead, he would be dead. Right now, though, he's just being a mischievous little puppet that is more appealing to American oil interests than his potential successors.

Were all of the 288 killed in the missile attack guilty?

When my government commits vile, arrogant atrocities like this one, I dream, as did Malcolm X, of "the chickens coming home to roost." — Michael Shaefer, graduate student, history

Opinions from Elsewhere

Los Angeles Times

The U.N. Security Council's orders were clear and emphatic. Iraq, after its defeat in the 1991 Persian Gulf war, was required to destroy its stocks of ballistic missiles and chemical and biological weapons, and its facilities to build nuclear weapons. To make sure there would be no revival of banned weapons production the council also ordered a long-term international monitoring program.

The Iraqi regime has always resisted the monitoring plan. Resistance has now become defiance. This week a U.N. team left Baghdad in frustration after seeking for more than a month to get Iraq to permit surveillance cameras to be set up at two former missile test sites. The Security Council had already warned of "serious consequences" if Iraq refused to allow the cameras.

If Iraq's government has learned anything in the last few years it should be that defiance of the United Nations isn't cost-free, and that its many strategic targets can be reached by sea-launched cruise missiles. Earlier this year Iraq threatened to interfere with U.N. inspection flights over the country. In response, a factory in Baghdad linked to the nuclear weapons program became the target for U.S. Tomahawk cruise missiles Jan. 17. And just 10 days ago an intelligence complex in the capital was attacked by U.S. missiles, in response to evidence of official Iraqi involvement in a plot to kill former President Bush.

How to respond to Iraq's latest challenge almost certainly will be a key topic at this week's G-7 conference in Tokyo. President Clinton has described the situation as "quite serious." Washington's view is that no new Security Council authorization is needed for any further military strikes. Certainly, though, Clinton should work hard to enlist other countries in any new military mission, reminding his colleagues that the confrontation is not just between the United States and Iraq, as Baghdad would have it, but Iraq and the United Nations. That's "Nations," plural, a point the president should take care to emphasize.

Native American contributions deserve respect

I would like to express appreciation to sportswriter Dan Leahy and to the DE for the June 25 article, "Derogatory Sporting Mascots Infringe on Rights."

Given the amount of misinformation that exists about Native Americans (through revisionist accounts of American history and through the "Indian" stereotypes perpetuated by Hollywood and sports teams), it was refreshing and reassuring to read your article which demonstrated considerable reflection as well as the ability to this issue with clear eyes.

For too long, racism against Native Americans has been alive and well in U.S. sports arenas and gymnasiums.

The fact that the use of "Indian" names by sports teams may not be malicious in intent, but is rather the result of misunderstanding and cultural insensitivity, makes this issue that much harder to understand and remedy.

Having sports teams which call themselves the "Indians," the "Braves," or the "Redskins" insults Native Americans and promotes stereotypes which are anti-educational and racist.

Contrary to popular opinion, the use of these names does not honor the ancestors of today's Native Americans, but instead creates further misunderstanding and division between Native and non-Native people.

One of the biggest barriers

Native American children face when interacting with non-Indian persons is the false information most non-Indians hold about what being "Indian" entails.

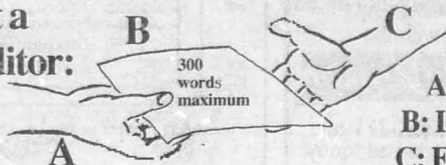

Native Americans are not the relics of the past which the stereotypes and wooden "Indian" statues imply.

After 500 years of being subjected to theft, racism, and attempted genocide, Native Americans and their cultures continue to live and persist today.

It is time we honored their place in, and contributions to, the "modern" world.

"This declaration will allow us to marshal state resources to fight the flooding and help victims rebound from damage caused by the swollen waters," Edgar said.

Edgar's declaration helped fund 500,000 sandbags, coordinate relief efforts and monitor sanitary conditions and the general public health.

Both senators said they would support the expansion of the request for assistance to include counties on the Rock River, Cook County and others in northeastern Illinois that experienced flooding from heavy rains in June.

"We have been advised that damage surveys are continuing in others, and additional counties may be added after the assessments are completed," Simon said.

Sen. Jim Rea, D-Christopher, said he is keeping an eye on what is happening in Southern Illinois and is ready to offer any assistance needed.

"We are keeping an eye on the situation," Rea said. "We have made it known we will help in any way possible. At some point, depending on the severity of the problem, we could have the areas affected declared a disaster area."

Rea also said there are many ways flood victims can be helped.

"One thing about this is that there are multiple types of needs when something like this happens," Rea said. "The good thing is that there are a lot of resources to be tapped and we are ready to do that."

the gates had to be closed, for the latest flooding."

Charles Willman, Extension Educator for Randolph County said water that has gathered inside the levees in his county cannot be released until water levels drop to 25 feet or less.

"The river is at 37 feet and rising," he said. "In the '73 flood the river crested at 43.5 feet and we expect more this time."

Willman, said the levees in Randolph County are still intact.

"We're very concerned about the future of the levees," he said. "We have our fingers crossed, and are watching the weather reports as they come in."

Willman, said a levee built by farmers in Jackson County has broken and flooded over 600 acres of prime farmland.

"That was the most productive land in Jackson county last year," he said.

Union County farmland near the Mississippi is not expected to be very productive this season.

Kirvey said farmers in the area are only able to use about a quarter of their land.

"Only 20 to 30 percent of the 35,000 acres of bottom land in Union County has been planted," she said. "Even if we were able to harvest all that's left, we're only talking about a 10,000 acre yield."

The Mississippi is expected to crest at its highest point along southern banks within the week.

Kirvey said that land and crops under water risk disease as well.

"The longer seepage water stays on the land the higher the risk of crop disease," she said. "So farmers that have planted are not guaranteed a crop."

Willman said he did not know when farmland being flooded now will be replanted.

"Farmland inside and outside the levees has been flooded and will probably remain wet and unusued at least until August," he said.

Lyle Solverson, chairman of the agribusiness and economics department said the effects from the flooding will not be far reaching.

"The excess rainfall probably won't effect the future crops," he said. "The major effect will be on prices, some farmers will do well and some won't, depending on where the land is."

Prices for corn have risen from $6 to over $7 a bushell within weeks.

Kirvey said most Union County farmers along the Mississippi will not be reaping large profits.

"A lot of farmers sold sizeable portions of their crops at a contracted price earlier in the year," she said. "What's left probably won't make a sizeable difference and several farmers will have problems paying off their bills."

"The wet weather has also lowered the test weight and quality of the wheat being brought to market," Kirvey said.

"We are not planning to develop a full-fledged community health center," he said.

"We just don't have the resources to just open up a health center at this time, but we will be working cooperatively with organizations to see what we can do," he said.

O'Neill said his agency will look into securing local resources or grant funding to sustain the services.

"The source of funds sought depends on what type of services are offered," he said. "There is no single source for funds."

Shawnee, a nonprofit organization funded through various sources like grants and federal agencies, will fund all of the services offered at the Hayes Center, O'Neill said.

Mayor Neil Dillard said the city will not be providing any direct funding for the services.

"The city will provide the space at no cost and will upgrade the equipment and renovate the Hayes Center," he said.

O'Neill said before service can begin, the space needs some new ceiling tiles, new paint on the walls, plumbing repairs and city officials must decide what services need to be offered.

"We will provide mainly preventive health services at the Hayes Center," he said.

The resources for the service will initially be supplied through transfers from other Shawnee services.

"We hope to shift case managers from our Shawnee Alliance for Seniors program to the Hayes Center," he said. "We also hope to shift a limited amount of services from the adolescent health care program."

O'Neill said ultimately he will meet with community leaders and representatives from organizations like the Concerned Citizens Council to discuss what services will be provided.

"Initially the agency will provide blood pressure screening on a regular basis and possibly a mobile mammography unit from Memorial Hospital," he said.

An information and referral program for pre-natal care, especially for teens between 12 and 21, could be offered if sufficient funds can be located, O'Neill said.

affected by the strike so they may stay open until the local economy recovers.

Steve Reimer, president of UMWA Local #2161, said the assistance program is a good idea.

"We appreciate all the help we can get," Reimer said. "Local economies are impacted because they depend on the coal miners for business."

"They have had to cut back as much as we have," he said.

Reimer said the miners, who have been on strike since May 10, are having difficulty in making payments on mortgages and outstanding loans.

Michael Howell, executive vice president of Charter Bank, said the bank has always had a commitment to area coal miners.

"We have been doing this for some time. Our commitment is to the customers and area businesses," Howell said. "We are here to see what we can do to help striking mine workers out in their financial crisis."

"We hope this will be a short strike," he said. "We hope the company and workers can get back on their feet soon."

Area banks include Charter Banks in Sparta, Anna, Steelville, Carbondale, and Murphysboro, Du Quoin National Bank, Du Quoin State Bank, Herrin Security Bank, Magna Bank of Illinois in Sparta and Security Bank of Mt. Carmel.

Lack of communication may spread strike

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Selective strikes against the nation's major coal producers could spread unless the companies return to the bargaining table and deal with the question of job security, the president of the United Mine Workers of America warned Wednesday.

A month after the UMW began a series of strikes against members of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association (BCOA), the dispute has turned into a stalemate with no end in sight. There have been no contract talks since May 3, and efforts by federal mediators to bring the two sides together have been fruitless.

Approximately 14,000 UMW members have been on strike in six states against selected mines at BCOA member companies since May 10 in a union effort to pressure the companies back to the bargaining table. At an appearance Wednesday in Washington, UMW President Richard Trumka warned that "there could be more on strike before the end of the summer."

The job security problem involves the increasing number of BCOA companies such as Peabody Coal

Co. and Consol Inc. that have created nonunion companies to open new mines when the union mines have exhausted their coal supplies.

In the 1988 contract with the union, BCOA member companies agreed that three out of every five jobs created at their new mines would go to UMW members. But the companies insist that the union miners would have to become nonunion workers.

Trumka insists this flies in the face of efforts to promote workplace cooperation and serves as a disincentive for union miners to be more productive.

Japanese women admire First Lady

The Washington Post

TOKYO—What everybody in Japan seems to know about Hillary Rodham Clinton — and it isn't much — is that she used to enjoy a higher income than her husband.

"She can make much more money than Mr. President! In Japan it's almost impossible to do that," marveled 31-year-old career woman Naomi Fujinaga, referring to the period — apparently famous among young professionals here — when Bill Clinton was governor of Arkansas, making $35,000 a year, and Hillary was a corporate lawyer earning four times as much.

"Even if a woman has a super career or gift, great talent or education, even if she has everything, she could not make it up to that top level," Fujinaga went on in serviceable English, a few hours after the Clintons stepped off Air Force One and plunged into the arcane business of economic summitry at this week's confab of seven industrialized nations. As the G-7 summit gets underway, it's clear that some Japanese of a certain age are intensely curious about the American first lady and the thoroughly modern impulses she seems to represent. Tuesday night in the bustling Akasaka Mitsuke neighborhood near the Japanese Diet — where office ladies and salary men converged in sidewalk gridlock as they dashed into the subway and crowded into bars — males and females both seemed intrigued by Hillary Clinton as a symbol of equality between the sexes.

A recent poll on "sexual equality" conducted by the Japanese prime minister's office showed that the Japanese gender gap still is a grand canyon, with significantly more women than men believing that men are treated better in the home, at work, in politics and every other area of society. But Mrs. Clinton seems to demonstrate that, at least in the United States, it doesn't have to be that way.

"Japanese people want to know very much about her," said television producer Yoshitsugu Tanaka, whose documentary "The Challenge of Hillary" appeared the other night on C-NET, the Japanese affiliate of C-SPAN. "And I think Japanese women, especially, like her," added Tanaka, whose film portrays Hillary as a woman who breaks the gender mold.

Study: U.S. lacks sufficient trauma equipment for treatment of youths

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—The United States is ill-equipped to provide adequate emergency medical treatment for children, and widespread improvements are needed, according to a study released by the Institute of Medicine.

Injuries from accidents are the No. 1 killer of children younger than 14 and disable tens of thousands of children every year.

About 21,000 children and young people died from injuries in 1988, the latest year for which statistics are available, according to the study by a panel of experts convened by the Institute of Medicine.

The Institute, a committee of the respected National Academy of Sciences, provides health policy advice to the government and other decision-makers.

The release of the study comes at a time known in the field of emergency medicine as "trauma season," the start of summer, when youngsters are out of school, out-of-doors, on playgrounds and on bicycles.

Those who design trauma services for children "cannot presume they are simply little adults," the study said, because special anatomical, physiological and developmental differences exist between children and adults that must be taken into account when treating youngsters.

important because of the hazard it causes.

"We don't want people parking anywhere," Hogan said. "People can fall over and get hurt."

Hogan said a registered bicycle can be identified by its registration number if it is found anywhere within the state of Illinois.

"We have a lot of students that register with the city because they live within the city and that's fine," Hogan said. "But we don't register non-students."

Students can register their bicycles at Washington Square D between 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Family housing activity program flourishes

Jeff McIntire
General Assignment Writer

Families living in Evergreen Terrace have a chance to meet with each other and participate in activities as part of a summer recreational program.

When Jamie Corr, community aide for family housing, arrived in 1988 to take over the recreational program, she became the program's first full-time director after its being run by a part time graduate student.

Corr said the purpose of the program is not to provide day care or to babysit, rather to instill a sense of community in Evergreen Terrace.

"The purpose of this program is to build a sense of community through recreational, educational, social and cultural activities," she said. "My goal is to offer quality programs for the residents and their families."

The program is run by a staff of 24 students, including 16 paid student workers, five field work students gaining credit in their majors, and three volunteer students.

The activities are centered around weekly themes and include a conservation club, a tots club, a reading club, and arts and crafts activities.

The program is funded by the Campus Housing Activity Fund and the funds are allocated activity by activity instead of the month or year.

The family housing recreational program provides a variety of activities each day centered around a weekly theme.

Last week, the theme was the Fourth of July, and the games and activities were based on the national holiday and on red, white and blue.

Debbie Good, a field work student at the program, said she likes the program.

"I think it's really good because of the activities it has for the children and the adults alike," she said. "It's fun for us, too, because we sometimes get to play with the children when we're not working on a program."

Rondi Anderson, an Evergreen Terrace resident, said she appreciates the variety of activities.

"I like it because it can serve children of all ages," she said.

Her daughter, Rebecca, said she enjoyed a Father's Day activity in which the children could buy gifts for their fathers for prices no higher than one dollar.

"I got my dad a key holder and some shaving cream," she said. "I really liked the shopping day."

Kay Riesch, a student worker, said the program serves the population of Evergreen Terrace well, but could be improved with more usage by the residents.

Riesch also suggested making the program more self-sufficient, such as converting garden space on the premises into a swimming pool.

"There is still a lack of transportation to Carbondale, so I think we should make the program more self-contained," she said.

Study: income, education crucial factors in life span

The Washington Post

Education and income are among the most important factors in determining when a person will die, according to a study published Wednesday in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Researchers found that Americans who are less educated or have low incomes suffer substantially higher death rates, adjusted for age, than those who are better educated or better off financially. And although overall U.S. death rates have declined substantially in the past 30 years, the gap between socioeconomic groups has widened.

The study, by Gregory Pappas and three others at the Federal National Center for Health Statistics, is one of several published in the Journal Wednesday suggesting a strong correlation between ill health and social deprivation or lack of education.

"Access to health care is clearly part of the problem," Pappas said, "but we also have to begin to appreciate the importance of prevention."

His study suggested that "it may be that people of higher socioeconomic status have adopted healthy lifestyles more rapidly," including increased exercise and reduced drinking and smoking.

Vicente Navarro, professor of public health and sociology at the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health, said that not only do poor people often have less access to care, their diets are often inadequate in both quality and amount. In addition, many live in overcrowded housing where disease spreads more readily and where insecurity, tension and violence are more prevalent. He said poor neighborhoods have higher rates of disease, drugs and alcoholism, and stress can lead directly to health problems such as cardiovascular disorders.

Leroy Schwartz, pediatrician and president of Health Policy International, said earlier studies suggest that low-income and poorly educated people may use health care (especially preventive care) less, even when it is available to them.

Dino-sized meal on heavy side

Los Angeles Times

McDonald's restaurants are offering dino-size meals as part of a promotional tie-in with the summer blockbuster film, "Jurassic Park." The meal includes a triple cheeseburger, a generous helping of fries and a 16-ounce Coke.

The challenge is how to eat like a dinosaur without ending up looking like one. The dino-size meal contains 1,250 calories—about 530 calories each for the triple cheeseburger and fries and an additional 300 for the soda. How much is that? It's nearly 60 percent of the calories women should consume daily, and 40 percent of what is recommended for men.

It's your bucks, not Starbucks: In its summer catalogue, Starbucks, the Seattle-based coffee company, is selling a "CARE sampler" for $18.95.

"Every time one of these unique samplers is purchased," the catalogue states, "two dollars goes directly to CARE," the international relief organization. "Together with our annual grant, your two dollars will help to fund vital programs for children's health... and education."

In the catalogue, Starbucks offers three other samplers for $16.95 each. A Starbucks spokeswoman confirmed the donation to CARE accounts for the $2 price difference from the non-charity samplers.

The spokeswoman said the coffee company is rewording the text in its upcoming catalogue to make it clear that the customer, not Starbucks, is making the donation.

Romantic comedy sleeper of summer

By Karen Ham
Entertainment Writer

Movie Review

When a radio call-in show creates cross-country infatuation, it makes the classic romance "Sleepless in Seattle" a diamond in the rough in the summer of action thrillers.

"Sleepless in Seattle," starring Meg Ryan and Tom Hanks as potential lovers who may never meet, has managed to steal the limelight from big hitters "Cliffhanger" and "Jurassic Park," mainly by appealing to a wider audience, especially with its PG rating.

The romantic comedy, reminiscent of "When Harry Met Sally," tells the story of Hanks, an unsuspecting architect named Sam, who recently relocated to Seattle with his 7-year-old son after the death of his wife.

His son, Jonah, played by newcomer Ross Mallinger, calls a radio psychologist to get his dad a girlfriend.

Ryan's character, Annie, a Baltimore journalist, hears the call-in show while driving to meet her fiancé, an unappealing man named Walter.

Hanks' two-hour radio conversation sparks public interest and he is deluged with thousands of letters from interested women.

Ryan becomes infatuated with Hanks' situation and decides to stalk him out, flying from coast-to-coast under the guise of official business for her job.

The film manages to hit all of the emotional buttons in both women and men.

The classic film "An Affair to Remember" is the common thread that binds the separated parties together.

Ryan, stealing an idea from the movie, asks Hanks to meet her at the top of the Empire State Building on Valentine's Day.

After a few twists, turns and near misses, all ends well.

Hanks, an unlikely romantic lead, puts in an emotional performance but does not lose his wry comic touch.

Unfortunately, Ryan's performance was stereotypical of previous roles, portraying a love-struck woman who can not tell heads from tails.

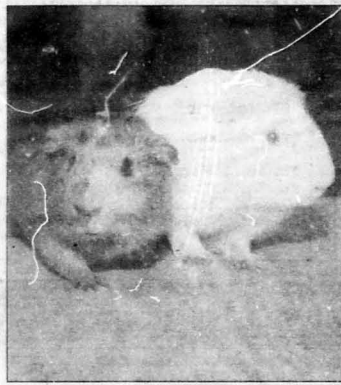

A strong supporting role by Rosie O'Donnell ("A League of Their Own") and brief scenes with Rob Reiner ("When Harry Met Sally") add to the humor. Hanks' real-life wife, Rita Wilson plays a supporting role as Hanks' friend from back home.

Overall, the film is a highlight of the summer.

The unique story is well directed in the classic romance vein by Nora Ephron.

The music is stylistically the same as that used in "When Harry Met Sally." Incorporating the big band sound of Harry Connick Jr. adds to the romantic emotion of the film.

"Sleepless in Seattle" is playing at the AMC University Place 8 Theaters, 1370 E. Main.

players will tell you they'd take less money to play elsewhere, which might explain why Davis was a staunch opponent to the new agreement.

More alarming is the fact that, whereas the team used to be a haven for veteran players, it is now no more than a transfer point.

Ronnie Lott played out his two-year contract and fled to the New York Jets when he became a free agent, where he is getting more money than he would have with the Raiders.

Marcus Allen felt like a prisoner in silver and black. He couldn't wait to escape.

The latest episode involves Eric Dickerson, who sought refuge in Los Angeles last season. We would be over-simplifying things if we called Dickerson a bust. He did rush for 729 yards last season, playing mostly in the first halves of games.

He and Davis apparently had worked out an agreement that allowed Dickerson to seek employment elsewhere via a trade. The Raiders would depend upon Nick Bell and Gaston Green for the running game.

Last week, Dickerson struck a tentative agreement with the Atlanta Falcons for $1.3 million a year. Only then, Dickerson says, did Davis give him the option of staying with the Raiders for the same salary.

Dickerson chose the Falcons. Did you get that? In 1993, a future Hall of Fame running back wanted to be a Falcon instead of a Raider, and money wasn't a factor.

The Falcons and Dickerson expected the trade to be consummated by last Friday, but Davis suddenly became unavailable by phone. This is not so unusual. Davis has many strengths, but pulling the trigger isn't one of them. Either way, the Raiders had agreed to take a conditional sixth-round draft choice (a better pick if Dickerson rushes for more than 1,000 yards) from Atlanta.

So in changing their backfield, they got nothing for Allen and a sixth-round pick for Dickerson. But they gave up a fourth-round pick for Green and still have the underachieving Bell. Maybe they look smart in the end. Right now, you wonder.

they look just like they did a few weeks earlier.

Expecting results too quickly is a common problem for people unaccustomed to exercise programs, said John Massie, sports medicine coordinator.

"People tend to expect too much, too soon," Massie said. "It usually takes six weeks or longer before you see results. Don't get frustrated."

Travis Hicks, a body builder who placed fourth in last year's Mr. SIU competition, said that how quickly results are seen depends on the individual.

"Everybody's body is different," Hicks said. "In body-building, I'd say it takes about six months before you really start to see results."

Hicks stressed the importance of a healthy diet when working out.

"In preparation for a competition, 75 percent of how you look is from dieting correctly," he said. "You have to really watch the calories. For a competition I usually take in between 1,200 and 1,500 calories a day. During the off-season though, I usually take in from 3,000 to 5,000 calories a day."

"The biggest thing to getting the results you want is to be consistent," Hicks said. "You can do all the other stuff like buy the high-protein diet supplements and take vitamins, but you must be consistent."

"Eventually, the hard work does pay off," said Hicks.

"I've been at this for four-and-a-half years," he said. "Weight lifting helps to give you self-confidence."

Miller said Sean was the top starter at Toledo, and learned to pitch effectively under pressure in his time there.

Bergman also was a go-to man during his career with the Salukis. In 1990, he dominated the MVC with an unblemished 5-0 mark in league play. Bergman was the only starting pitcher to go through the league undefeated.

Bergman had a 9-3 record overall and led the squad in starts (14), strikeouts (62), and innings (96 2/3).

Bergman's outstanding 1990 campaign led to his selection as a 1991 pre-season 1st-Team All-American by Collegiate Baseball magazine.

The pre-season hype may have proven a little much for Bergman, as he struggled through a sub-par year.

Bergman led the team in innings pitched (105 2/3) and strikeouts (99), but he managed only a 4-6 record and a 4.09 ERA.

SIUC head coach Sam Riggelman said the off-year might have been caused by Bergman's expectations.

"Sean was under a lot of pressure, he knew every pitch was being scrutinized by the scouts," Riggelman said.
