University already in compliance with ruling on religious support

By Kristi Debority Daily Egyptian Reporter

A decision handed down by the Supreme Court stating registered student religious organizations can accept student activity money is drawing national controversy, but SIUC is already practicing the ruling.

A document from USG stating its Christian Ministries, Reverend Ross Hodel, said the university had already changed its policy to allow funds to go to the Newman Student Organization for the Newman Student Organization's activities for the first time in years.

"Neither resolution was voted on," said Charlotte West, SIUC associate athletic director. "It's probably because we are in a religiously conservative area and it's not just a one time status report but a continuing process to examine athletics and how the money is spent.

"We do not provide ongoing structure to examine athletics and how the money is spent," said Charlotte West, SIUC associate athletic director.

Thailand fastest growing car market - Bangkok, Thailand - While Thailand is at least the estimation of Detroit's Big Three automakers—it's one of the region's fastest-growing economies where people and cars are abundant, it's also the place where the roads are among the most congested in the world. Last year, the 28 million residents of this Southeast Asian nation registered 485,000 new vehicles and a number of experts expect that number to continue growing in line with the country's 15th-largest vehicle market, Thailand was second only to the United States in sales of one-ton pickup trucks.

TRUMAN'S CEMETERY RESIDENT CONTROVERSIAL - POTSDAM, Germany - Controversy over President Harry S. Truman's presence here 50 years ago is being fuelled. The squabbles centers on Truman's lakeside residence on Branson's peninsula, which attracts tourists from around the world, the World War II Allies and won the seeds of the Cold War War in the 1950s and 1960s. The University of Missouri, Columbia, and the World War II Memorial have been in the spotlight amid the controversy, with the Truman's presence here 50 years ago being a focal point.
CIPS installs animal guards to protect its power lines
By Alan Schpekt
Daily Egyptian Reporter
A few wild animals will avoid electrocution and some power outages will be avoided as a result of new equipment being installed by the Illinois Natural History Survey, CIPS officials said.

CIPS is installing " Guthrie Guards" on several distribution transformers to prevent animals such as raccoons, birds, and snakes from coming in contact with properly grounded parts of the transformers. George Sheppard, a public affairs representative for CIPS, said.

Sheppard said this contact blows fuses and causes power outages while electrocuting animals at the same time.

"The Guthrie Guard is ruined after its encounter, Jerry Guthrie, The stainless steel and plastic guards work much like an electric fence.

Sheppard said that when the animals get close to an energized area, they receive a harmless static shock from the guards that turns them away from the dangerous area.

He said the device is attached to the top of a transformer and builds up a static charge from an electric field generated by the transformer.

Sheppard said four cases of all power outages occur because animals blow fuses on transformers.

He said the guards will save CIPS money, since there will be fewer power outages.

"When the power's out, we're not making any money, " Sandy Green of the CIPS office in Carbondale said several of the guards are already in place in the Carbondale area.

Sheppard said the devices have been found to be durable and effective, and that CIPS plans to install many more.

Runaway campers pick hitchhiking over camp
By Carey Jane Aherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter
If people see kids hitchhiking on Carbondale road and they are looking for a ride, please do not pick them up, asks Katy McCullough, director of the Spectrum Wilderness Course.

McCullough said the Spectrum camp at Touch of Nature has had four campers attempt to run away this month, totaling six attempts, because one camper ran thre times.

"But everyone has returned to the camp," McCullough said.

Last week, three juveniles ran away from the camp and hitchhiked to Centralla, which is about 85 miles away from the camp. Two other campers attempted to run away on Monday, but soon returned to camp.

"When kids run away, they try and hitchhike," McCullough said.

She said people need to understand that they are putting themselves at risk by picking up runaway campers.

McCullough said the Spectrum camp offers a Wilderness Stress Challenge Program for at-risk youth.

She said the kids who attend the camp are 14-18 years old and are considered at risk of failing at home, in school or in the community at large.

She said some of the campers are ordered by a judge to attend or some are on probation, some are wards of the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services and some are private referrals.

She said there are a wide range of kids, "McCullough said.

She said runaways are pretty common, but not many of the kids who go to the camp already have the behavior of a runaway because of their problems.

"McCullough said the camp is very challenging, and there are a lot of problems with behavioral problems. She gave the example of a camper throwing down his backpack.

McCullough said one of the campers is to eliminate self-limiting behavior.

"It is not a lock-up type of program, " McCullough said. "We don't physically force kids to do anything."

She said the camp is not a boot camp. It does not have a gate, and the campers are not locked in.

"McCullough said McCall seems to be the one who will pay.

McCullough said the kids who attend the camp are 14-18 years old and are considered at risk of failing at home, in school or in the community at large.

She said if the camp loses control by picking up runaway campers.

Trials are no place for entertainment

TOO MUCH MEDIA EXPOSURE CAN OFTEN become too much of a good thing. The O.J. Simpson trial is just one example of how the media can turn a court case into a daily entertainment event. Viewers will not have to witness such a spectacle in the case of Susan Smith, a 23-year-old South Carolina woman soon to go on trial for killing her two sons. It has been ruled that no cameras are to be allowed in the courtroom. Not to infringe on anyone’s rights, but just because it is wise one.

Although the First Amendment is a justifiable argument in the defense of allowing cameras in the courtroom, the media should not be allowed the opportunity to turn the court system into an entertainment forum—such as the Simpson case. No one is advocating removing the press from the courtroom all together. However, the right to a fair and impartial trial has remained strong since the beginning is the covering of certain events have overshadowed the trial itself. For instance, would Marcia Clarke’s haircut have made national a trial? The right to a fair and impartial trial has remained strong since the beginning is the covering of certain events have overshadowed the trial itself. For instance, would Marcia Clarke’s haircut have made national

THE PURPOSE OF THE COURT SYSTEM IS TO provide a fair trial. The purpose of cameras is to provide the public with a basic understanding of how the legal system works—not to provide chances for the media to turn a trial into a daily circus. Take into consideration what’s at stake here. People’s lives are at stake and the media has allowed us to go into the courtroom and witness the maneuvers of the trial without even considering the consequences.

Juries are not allowed to view anything pertaining to the trial. They cannot watch the trial in the news or read it in print. So perhaps the trial has been a fair one so far due to these circumstances. However, due to the media, it seems court trials have once again become entertainment. For instance, would Marcia Clarke’s haircut have made national significance? No one is advocating removing the press from the courtroom all together. However, the right to a fair and impartial trial has remained strong since the beginning is the covering of certain events have overshadowed the trial itself. For instance, would Marcia Clarke’s haircut have made national significance?

Unfortunately the trial has had other ill fated events as well. Ninety-two days of testimony alone have had an adverse effect on everyone involved. Ten jury members have already been dismissed since the trial began. The only thing that has remained strong since the beginning is the coverage of the trial and all that surrounds it. In fact it has been growing from the start and it appears it will not stop until a verdict is reached.

IT IS ESSENTIAL TO PROVIDE THE PUBLIC the opportunity to witness how the legal system works with the aid of modern technology. The right to free speech is a justifiable argument in terms of covering a trial. The right to free speech is not what needs to be considered in instances such as the Simpson case. No one is advocating restricting the press from the courtroom all together. However, the media should not be allowed the right to cover only certain aspects of a trial that do not pertain to it—such as a haircut or the private lives of those involved. If nothing good comes from the Simpson trial, at least it has shown how the media can adversely affect a court case. It should remain a trial—not an ill fated attempt at entertainment on behalf of criminal acts.

Vietnam relations, long time coming

By Robert A. Manning
Special to the Los Angeles Times

South China Sea, where Beijing has made bold nationalist claims. Specifically, it has occupied territories in the Spratly Islands that are claimed by Vietnam, Malaysia, the Philippines, Taiwan and Brunei, while refusing offers to negotiate a solution. There have been occasional military clashes with Hanoi over the Spratlys; earlier this year, Beijing occupied a reef that is well within the Philippines 200-mile economic zone, triggering a wave of nerves with Manila.

The Beijing-Manila dust-up led the Clinton administration to issue an unusually strong statement condemning the use of force, defending freedom of the seas and urging a negotiated solution. Normalizing relations with Vietnam, complete with military-to-military ties and a port-access arrangement, as the United States has with other ASEAN states, would signal to Beijing that Washington’s desire for a peaceful solution in the Spratlys is more than rhetoric.

There is also a strong economic case to be made for relations with Vietnam. Since 1987, Vietnam has pursued market-oriented reforms in some areas, bolder than those in China. The reasons China’s reforms are impressive are that it has become the world’s second-largest rice exporter, enjoyed an annual growth rate of 8 percent since 1991 and has attracted some $10 billion in foreign direct investment. U.S. firms, highly competitive, especially in telecommunications, electronics and oil, are eager to get into Vietnam’s booming market of $71 billion. Currently, U.S. exports and investment are dwarfed by those of Asians and Europeans. In no small measure because U.S. companies are playing with one hand tied behind their backs. Without tax and trade treaties, insurance and finance programs that must await full diplomatic recognition from Washington will put U.S. policy back in step with trend in the region. While the United States has obstructively pursued cloister of the war experience, Asia and Vietnam have entered a new era. Symbolic of its integration into the region, Vietnam will officially join the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) this month. The six-nation group has become America’s fifth-largest trading partner. Yet, one ASEAN is welcoming former adversary Vietnam with open arms is the China factor. China’s emergence as a major economic and military power has been underscored by its aggressive behavior in the

Censorship idea gets mixed reactions from SIUC students

By Christi C. Harber
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC students have expressed mixed feelings about federal politicians' recent statements concerning the entertainment industry. Senator Majority Leader Bob Dole criticized the movie business because of its hardness and violence, and President Clinton enforced a measure Monday to introduce a related electronic device that would block young viewers' access to certain television programs.

Several students said the responsibility for children's behavior and viewing habit was not on television, so television should not be blamed for negative influences.

Woody Spencer, a senior in advertising from Chicago, said he thought the government should make censorship for television optional instead of mandatory.

"I'm sure people do not blame television for what their children do. These parents have control over their children," Spencer said.

Gregory Brewer, a senior in radio and television from Chicago, said he feels parents need to supervise their children and stop waiting for the government to take control.

"What if I was a child, if my parents did not want me to watch something, they made sure I did not watch it," Brewer said. "They took responsibility for me."

Amy Riddle, a junior in radio-television, said her parents did not keep her from watching or reading anything.

"Censorship is not American," Riddle said. "My parents raised me to know the difference between right and wrong, and because they did, they did not have to censor me."

Not all students disagree with the idea of censorship. Shawn Lampel, a senior in psychology from Chicago, said he supports limiting children's viewing as long as it does not cut into free expression.

"It is a good idea as long as adults can watch what they want," Lampel said.

Some students strongly opposed the idea of censorship for any age viewer on the grounds that it limits a person's constitutional rights.

Walter Pella, a junior in marketing from Peoria, said, "If the government is not giving people a chance to choose the programs they want to watch, it is citizens of the United States' choice to watch whatever they want, whether it is reality or violence."

Keshia James, a junior in business management from Peoria, said she does not believe censoring what children can watch is going to change anything.

"What is the purpose for the government censoring programs now? It is almost too late," James said. "If they censor television, next it will be movies, radio, magazine and so on."

salaries have kept up with inflation, from fiscal years 1990 to 1995. SIUC's weighted average faculty salary was below the lowest paid major field's national average salary, according to a survey by the Office of Institutional Research at Oklahoma State University. According to the survey, Performing Arts is the lowest paid field at an average salary of $35,131 in fiscal year 1995. As of fiscal year 1995, the average monthly salary for SIUC faculty was $2,248, with professors making the most at $6,311.

Two resolutions were drafted for consideration by the board.

A resolution submitted by Mr. David Downey and Mrs. Lucy Stump, both IBHE members, advocated the continued state funding of athletic programs within the current mission of the individual universities.

Mr. Roy Bruce of the IBHE, in his resolution submission, requested that each community college and university involve the full campus constituency in the development of statements of purposes and goals for intercollegiate athletic programs. In other business, the IBHE decided to reconsider the affordability issue of athletic fees as it relates to students.

Yeltsin hospitalized for worsening heart condition
Aides do not expect a long stay for the Russian president

Los Angeles Times
MOGSCOW—Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin was hospitalized Tuesday for a worsening heart condition, but aides said that his condition was not serious and that the 64-year-old Siberian would spend "not more than a few days" in the hospital.

Yeltsin, who has a history of heart trouble, is reputed to be a heavy drinker and has behaved erratically in public recently. He suffered an exacerbation of cardiac ischemia," a Kremlin statement said.

Such ischemia, better known as coronary heart disease, involves a constriction of the blood supply to the heart. Although Yeltsin was hospitalized at least once before for heart problems, in 1987, this episode appears to be the most serious health setback for the silver-haired leader since he became Russia's first elected president in 1991.

Political analysts said it could pressure Yeltsin not to seek re-election when his term expires next June.

Yeltsin was rushed to the Central Clinical Hospital on Tuesday morning after suffering chest pains at home. But by afternoon, aides said that he was conscious and that the pains had passed. Ivan P. Rybkin, chairman of Parliament's lower house, reported that Yeltsin was in "satisfactory" condition, and aides insisted that the Russian president will go ahead with a scheduled trip to Moscow on July 10.

Western physicians said the Kremlin's health reports were so vague they warranted a shed little light on the severity of the Russian president's condition.

"They're either being coy," said Dr. George R. Guy, an emergency room specialist at the American-run U.S. Global Health clinic in Moscow. "Ischemia has a broad range ... it means the heart is being deprived of oxygen," but gives no clue as to the extent of the problem because the constriction could be partial or complete, he said.

Although traders on global exchanges reacted with alarm to the Russian president's illness, as a result bolstering the U.S. dollar, in Moscow the streets and stock markets were calm.

The Russian media gave matter-of-fact reports on Yeltsin's condition. The 8 p.m. newscast on state-owned television devoted only 30 seconds to his hospitalization.

Still, Yeltsin's illness was announced promptly indicating that the Soviet tradition of news blackouts in the event of a leader's illness or death has reseeded. In the most infamous of all Soviet episodes of such "shh" control, Russians got the "tip of the 1982 lid of bull" saying leader Leonid Brezhnev when state television changed its regular programming without explanation and began running World War II movies and Beethoven concerts. The death was not announced until the following day.

Arkady A. Popov of the Presidential Analytical Center said the announcement within hours that Yeltsin had been hospitalized showed a new candor in the Russian leadership and an understanding that to try to hush up the incident would only backfire with rumor and speculation.

Nevertheless, speculation abounded—most of it concerning Yeltsin's drinking. Yet in a sign of vestigial caution, no Russian journalist spoke the word "alcohol" or "drinking." Alexander Minkin, a columnist at the Moskovsky Komsomol newspaper, explained away Yeltsin's indisposition simply by noting that on Monday there was a birthday party for Sergei A. Flisnov, the president's chief of staff.

Russians are famous for overindulging in birthday merriment. Yeltsin "has Siberian health. He is healthy enough to be able to cry at our funerals," Minkin said. "Don't worry. It is a very temporary problem. The president will be fine tomorrow."

Gun violence acceptable to some

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON—More than a few dollars' worth of guns are sold each year in the nation's capital, police and government sources said, but for-profit dealers and gun advocates insist that it is not acceptable to shoot people who are "disrespect[ing]" their homes or "overindulging in birthday toasts." A government-commissioned study released Tuesday.

The proportion of people willing to use a firearm rose to almost two out of three when illegal drug dealers were asked whether it was "okay to shoot someone who hurts you."

The survey results presented at the Annual Conference on Criminal Justice and Evaluation provided additional evidence of the link between guns and the cultures of drugs and gangs in American cities.

National Institute of Justice Director Jeremy Travis said he had been taken aback by the findings. "I'm surprised by the extent to which people in the inner cities involved in criminal behavior are living in a war zone where they frequently experience gunfire threatening fire, and where it is commonplace and widely available," he said.

The survey, conducted in 11 cities, included extensive interviews with 1,418 people under age 24. Asked whether they needed a gun for protection in their neighborhood, more than 70 percent of the respondents said they did, with that figure rising to more than 90 percent among adult women. Among those selling illegal drugs in the past year, the figures were close to 60 percent, and among admitted gang members it was higher.

The research was conducted by Scott Decker, professor of criminology and criminal justice at the University of Mississippi, and Susan Pennell, director of San Diego's criminal justice research division.

The project, part of a 23-city investigation into patterns of drug use, was ordered in October by Attorney General Janet Reno to gather information about the extent of illegal firearms use.

Decker said he found striking the nonviolent murders that suggested many young people were both victims and perpetrators of violence.

Almost eight out of 10 admitted gang members told researchers that they had been shot at, an experience reported by 65 percent of those who had sold illegal drugs in the past year.

Bosnian Serb infantry attacks area guarded by Dutch peacekeepers

Los Angeles Times

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina—Defying threats of NATO bombardment, Bosnian Serb infantry attacked the southern edge of the U.N.-declared "safe-haven" town of Srebrenica on Monday and fought with Dutch peacekeepers deployed to the town's last line of defense.

The rebel Serbs, who have been advancing steadily on the U.N.-protected Muslim enclave for four days, then issued an ultimatum, warning that Srebrenica must be cleared of all people within 48 hours.

The ultimatum applies to more than 40,000 mostly Muslim refugees, government army troops and all U.N. peacekeepers, said U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Gary Coward, who termed the nationalistic Serb challenge "completely unacceptable."

If Srebrenica falls to the Bosnian Serbs, it will mark the first loss of one of six government-held pockets created to give refuge to tens of thousands of Muslims driven from their homes in the brutal ethnic warfare that has ravaged Bosnia for more than three years.

It will represent another blow to U.N. credibility and promises to unleash a humanitarian disaster.

U.N. officials said they considered calling in warplanes from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to back up the Dutch peacekeepers in their clash with Bosnian Serb troops, but declined to do so.

On Sunday, the top U.N. officials in the Balkans, in a letter to Bosnian Serb army commander Gen. Radko Mladic, warned air strikes would be called if the Serb rebels attacked the Dutch force, an elite team positioned along the southern perimeter of Srebrenica to block the nationalist Serb offensive.

Whether the U.N. can stop the Bosnian Serbs from overrunning the U.N.-designated "safe" areas has become the latest test of the beleaguered, crippled peacekeeping mission, whose future is under debate now in the world's capitals.

"The U.N. is determined to protect the enclave," Coward said Monday night.

But the mission has seen its ability to fulfill any of its mandates from guarding "safe havens" to delivering humanitarian aid, eroded steadily by Bosnian Serb defiance and ineptitude from the U.N. political leadership to calm and not inflame the tense Bosnian situation.

Through much of Monday, Bosnian Serbs fought with government troops off the southeast corner of the Srebrenica enclave and pounded the town with artillery and tank fire, U.N. officials said.

They also battered Zepa, a second U.N.-protected enclave, with heavy machine gun and mortar fire. A U.N. observation post manned by Ukrainians was attacked.

Activist’s detainment presents various challenges for Chinese authorities

The baton hand

According to China’s foreign ministry, the detention of U.S.-based activist Wei Jingsheng for 10 years on criminal charges is nothing more.

"The case is just a criminal case. It is not related to U.S.-China relations," foreign ministry spokesman Shen Guofa said Tuesday.

But since China’s detention on June 19, after his crossing into China from neighboring North Korea, evidence has been mounting that the case is more than a straightforward criminal case— and that Chinese authorities have been clearly divided on how to treat him.

"This is a blessing and curse for China," said a Chinese diplomat. "On the one hand, it has been given a stick to beat the United States, but they’re not united on how to use it."

Wu might have seemed a godsend for China’s leadership.

With Wu in custody, the government had an opportunity to go to the Clinton administration for help in drafting new UN resolutions. Wu was a complicating factor in the United States— and China’s entry was to say nothing.

Although an agreement with the United States calls for diplomats to be given access to arrest WU, the Chinese government did not admit that Wu was in custody for four years.

Chinese authorities seemed to concede that they were violating the agreement, by refusing to allow United States diplomats to enter with similar visas.

They said that when two Chinese diplomats were killed in 1993 in the United States, U.S. law enforcement officials failed to notify Chinese diplomats as they should have.

Finally, U.S. diplomats were allowed to meet Wu on Monday, three days after he was detained.

Faults found in diagnosis, treatment of Lyme disease

The Washington Post

Lyme disease is a multisite illness, and misdiagnosis is common, according to a study of 146 children referred to a University of Connecticut pediatric specialty clinic.

The study, published last week in the Journal of the American Medical Association, found that only half of the patients surveyed were correctly diagnosed when 25 percent of those correctly diagnosed had received incorrect treatment.

To determine the frequency of errors in the diagnosis of Lyme disease, a tick-borne infection most commonly associated with physicians. Henry M. Feder and Margaret S. Huest reviewed all the records of patients referred by doctors to the clinic in Farmington. Patients come from all over Connecticut.

Feder and Huest discovered that of diagnosticians and over 50 percent of physicians believed to have Lyme disease in fact did not, while 25 percent were accurately diagnosed. The remaining patients were either antibiotics were treated with drugs indicated for the eradication of Lyme disease.

In several patients believed to have Lyme disease who did not receive (blood tests failed to confirm it). The physicians were allowed to diagnose other diseases including gastritis, an antibiotic reaction, recurrent sinusitis, or any number of care exposure and talking to specialists, a form of rheumatic fever that affects children.

The authors noted that the most common error in diagnosis was recommendation and use of intravenous antibiotics for patients who did not have post-Lyme disease syn- drome.

expected from other schools.
"Don't think that it is too out of the line," he said. "The only thing that a way to get our athletes to have historically done better than the average."

At other Illinois schools, the gap is comparable. At Illinois State University, the women's sports program has a 2.68 cumulative GPA while the men have a 2.44. At Western Illinois University the gap is closer with a 2.81 GPA for the women's teams and a 2.55 for the men's teams.

"This is not something new,"- Auld said. "We are not doing anything different here."

Juldy Aud, SIUC women's ter-toms, said there is a great con-tion to how her team's GPA ranks among the other sports teams at SIUC.

"I definitely do (pay attention), and it's a great motivator for us at the beginning of the season," for us to finish in the top one or two spots.

Aud said academics play a large role in her team's success.

"I have backed off of girls that don't meet the standards that I would consider them to," she said.
"When I recruit a player, I want to see her stay at SIUC and to see her graduate."

New York Mets: Decline
confuses players, coaches

By Marty Noble

NEW YORK.—Potentially not realized.

The Mets are on the verge of a decisive improvement, they now know they cannot have a successful season. Ultimately, they have a successful second half—of that.
The realization hurts it

The only time Mantle's easy-going spirit slipped was when reporters asked how he felt about the victory, finally restoring all such questions. "I don't do that," he did not finish, but in admitting once again that he had hastened his own decision.

Wearing a baseball cap and a black windbreaker suit, Mantle mumbled often and his eyes sometimes shone wetly as he spoke of the beginning of the season, for he had historically done better than the average. At Illinois State University, Mantle was met with, Whitey Ford and Billy Martin, for men's teams.

"Every family's fondness, and his determination to how her team's GPA r.mks Auld said. "That's one of my goals and now, with the worst record in the National League, are a reason-for the Mets: despite solid numbers, the offense too often has been inadequate. Too many strike-outs, too few extra-base hits was especially true for the team making strength. And the addition of Buller, to hit, the poorer-hitting of understudy catcher Jeff Kent said last week.
"We never imagined anything like this." Those who recall their visions of late. April and early May are stunned when they caucasian in the the last six weeks. "I don't see it," caught catcher Handsley said Sunday.
"We thought we were on the verge of gaining some momentum. Instead, the Mets have taken many steps in the wrong direction.
"A year ago, defense unquestion-ably was the team's greatest strength. And the addition of Butler in center, the poor-throwing of understudy catcher Kelly Stinncu and the dozens of ground balls that have reached the outfield because sturer

According to SIUC athletic department records, men's sports teams for both women's and men's sports teams in regards to the cumulative grade point averages of their athletes.

After the 1995 spring semester, the women's sports cumulative GPA is 2.96, and the men's GPA is 2.78. In addition, five of the top six cumulative GPAs belonged to women's sports teams. The women's tennis team led the field with a 3.30 GPA, followed by women's golf and volleyball. The highest men's finish was men's tennis in fifth place.

Nancy Bandy, SIUC assistant athletic director, said the reason why student athletes do better in the classroom is hard to quantify all out.

"I don't think there is one reason as to why women do better than men," Bandy said.

Brian Bartelz, academic advisor in the SIUC athletic department, said he sees no difference in the ratio of women-to-men athletes that seek help in his office because of their class. "You could say that more males are coming in because there are more male athletes," Bartelz said. "But based on some kind of percentage, there's no difference at all.

Bartelz did say the lack of professional sports for women could play a role in pushing men to do their best in school.

"Women know that competing at the level ends for them after college," he said. "Graduating then means everything to them.

Bartelz added SIUC's difference in men's and women's GPAs is not anything that should not be seen GPA, page 11

After playing at 3 other levels, Diehl to enter final season

By Cynthia Sheets

With 10 years of experience under her belt, senior volleyball player Beth Diehl looks forward to her final season in a time to come in on success.

"I'm really excited at the opportunity to play with the team, because I have been playing with for so long," she said. "We can do as well as we want to this season, and I don't know if I will ever have this opportunity again.

Diehl said she and her teammates are a close knit bunch, as the seniors said. "We are a close knit bunch, as the seniors said. We can do as well as we sound a sk-cp. the whole team was two different things.

friends.

"It's always a healthy competition between the two of us, but I got to a higher level of skill faster than she did because I started at a younger age.

Diehl has been an outstanding role model for her teammates, as she was given the Flo Hyman award both her freshman and junior year.

The award, set up by SIUC volleyball coach Sonya Locke, recognizes a pre-season team member that exemplifies hard work and dedication.

The biggest highlight of my volleyball career at SIU would have to be when I received the Flo Hyman award as a freshman," she said. "After two weeks of hard work, I was always a healthy competition, and didn't think too much.

"It was really nice to know that my team believes in me."

Locke said Diehl had been involved with injuries ever since her Sophomore season, but has worked to become a well-rounded player.

"I just pray that she doesn't get hurt this year," Locke said.

As Mantle, 14 times an all-star, spoke about his past troubles and his future hopes, the first players for tonight's 66th All-Star Game were arriving for early practice at The Ballpark at Arlington, 25 miles away.

Shaky and frail and looking every one of his 63 years, Mantle said with a smile that he would rejoin his friends at the bar. "Women know that competing at the level ends for them after college," he said. "Graduating then means everything to them.

"One of the things I wish I had was to try and try back all the blessings he has received."

"I never will be able to pay it all back, but as soon as I get to feeling better I'm sure going to try."

It was a most poignant day for Mantle's public appearance since the life-saving, and, in some quarters, controversial, liver transplant he received on June 10, ended a career that was always like a party day.

Later, he told a story of P-ring Mantle said to a friend, "I sold this, I sold it."

"For one of the things I wish I had was to try and try back all the blessings he has received.

"I never will be able to pay it all back, but as soon as I get to feeling better I'm sure going to try."
