Debit system roadblocks tumbling

could begin working on card system after ruling next month.

Kirk Mottram
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

After six years of setbacks, the University is set to install a debit card program pending the approval of federal banking legislation.

The system would allow SIUC students and faculty to purchase their books, wash their laundry and order pizzas, all with a swipe of their student identification cards.

Larry Juhlin, associate vice chancellor for Student Affairs, said SIUC's debit card system has met several roadblocks. Initially, there was opposition from area banks.

"The banks really wanted to run our (debit card) system," Juhlin said. "They complained to the President (then John Guyon). That's why we didn't start the system six years ago."

However, Joe Kesler, president of First National Bank, 509 S. University Ave., said he looks forward to working with the University.

He said the bank's only concern is that "students are given a maximum choice: where to spend their dollars and where to bank, so it's not an exclusive situation."

About two years ago, negotiations between the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce, city banks and the University ended in a settlement, giving SIUC the power to operate its own on-campus debit system.

Now, only federal legislation, expected to be ruled on by the Federal Reserve Board in July, stands in the way of the debit program.

"As soon as a decision is reached, we can begin," Juhlin said.

The debit card used by other state universities, such as Western Illinois University, was designed for reasons of convenience, said Donald Wilson, vice president for University services and board treasurer.

"The idea was to have a universal card for everything," Wilson said.

Under the system, students and faculty would deposit money in accounts monitored by the Student Center check-cashing office.

The money would be transferred to student and faculty identification cards, with which they could make purchases. The transactions would be automatically deducted from their debit balances.

The debit card also could be used at local businesses opting to accept it.

A 1995 state law allowed local businesses to accept university debit cards.

Juhlin said the program will not cost too much because it would use student identification cards, and interest earned from student deposits will help finance the debit card

Blumenberg

FOND MEMORIES: Alumni recall Richard Blumenberg's passion for teaching that inspired their own successes.

Kelly E. Hertlein
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Family and friends will remember SIUC's Richard Blumenberg at a memorial service this afternoon, and SIUC alumnus Tom Blomquist says students, especially, have fond memories of the late professor.

"Teaching his students gave him genuine joy," Blomquist said. "He was a phenomenal professor."

Blumenberg, 62, died Wednesday of leukemia.

Blumenberg came to SIUC's Department of Cinema and Photography in 1970. He became a full professor in 1981.

Blomquist said Blumenberg encouraged students to succeed.

"It is amazing when you think of the number of students who went through his class and how many of them have gone on to be successful," Blomquist said.

Blomquist speaks from experience. He is a television writer and producer working for CBS, producing TV dramas "Walker Texas Ranger" and "Christy."

Blumenberg's achievements did not stop in the classroom. He served as acting dean of the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts in 1993, and he was acting chairman of the Department of Cinema and Photography in fall 1996.

He was associate dean of the College of Mass Communications and Fine Arts from 1991 to 1992.

Blumenberg also wrote the textbook, "Critical Focus: An Introduction to Film," a text explaining history, theory, production, criticism appreciation and aesthetics of film.

Mike Leary, a 1974 graduate of SIUC and senior producer for Foote Cone Belding in Chicago, remembers Blumenberg bringing incredible enthusiasm to his lectures.

Program's director to retire

CHANGING GUARD: Black American Studies director helps select replacement.

TAMEKA L. HICKS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

When Tony Hood was on the verge of dropping out of school two years ago, his psychology professor gave him direction and showed that he cared.

Now that Hood's former professor, Robert Guthrie, is retiring, Hood realizes that he is not only losing a good professor, but also a true friend.

Guthrie, the director of Black American Studies and a psychology professor, announced last June that he will retire from SIUC on July 1.

"I hate to see him leave because many students looked up to him, especially me," said Hood, a senior in community health from Chicago. "When I was having problems, Guthrie was there."

Guthrie said he has enjoyed working in the College of Liberal Arts and meeting some of its finest students.

But, as much as he cares for SIUC and the College of Liberal Arts, Guthrie is going to return to his home in San Diego.

"Everything that I planned to do, I did it," Guthrie said. "It's time for me to retire."

When Guthrie arrived at SIUC in 1991, the College of Liberal Arts and its former dean, John Jackson, helped him develop the Black American Studies program's overall quality.

"While we're a small program, John Jackson was the most supportive of Black American Studies," Guthrie said. "I was very appreciative of that support."

Windsurfers take to the water

PRACTICE: New club members struggle to keep afloat.

MIKAL J. HARRIS
DE FEATURES EDITOR

Struggling to maneuver a fluttering sail that is more than three times her size, Geneva Richendollar squats as she tries windsurfing — on dry land.

A light wind blows, and Richendollar's legs tremble with the effort to keep the sail balanced and upright.

"I can't hold it," she says, laughing. "This is hard. It's heavy."

Nearby, two other students look on as instructor Art Shirley verbally guides the novice windsurfer Saturday afternoon at Evergreen Lake near Evergreen Park.

SURFING

•Those interested in learning how to windsurf can contact Art Shirley at 985-4981, or go to the SIUC Windsurfing Club Website at www.siu.edu/windsurf.

"It takes a little time to get the skills down, and you learn to compensate for wind shifts over time," he says to Richendollar. "The wind changes all the time. Get a hold of the front of the mast and the boom. Let the sail flutter like a flag."

Richendollar, a senior in exercise science from Centralia, adjusts the rainbow-colored sail attached to a surfboard-like platform. She soon will be practicing those skills on the water.

Shirley, a Carterville resident and certified windsurfer, offered beginning windsurfing instruction last weekend to promote interest in the newly formed SIUC Windsurfing Club.

Shirley became interested in the sport while pursuing another water activity.

"I'm a member of the sailing club, and I learned about windsurfing there from a guy who was a certified instructor in the club," he said. "We just started the windsurfing club last semester, and hopefully we'll start accumulating more equipment as we grow."

Music students fail for cheating

BUSTED:

Twenty students violate Student Conduct Code.

TAMEKA L. HICKS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

When Gina Galassini read a letter stating she would get a failing grade in the music course she took in the spring, she did not complain or even get upset.

In fact, Galassini says, she was not surprised, because she was one of about 20 students who paid a fellow student $20 each to change their exercise scores on a computer program assignment.

Galassini, who graduated with a bachelor's degree in cinema and photography in May, said she was not concerned about her grade on the computer program assignment because she thought she had a solid A in the class.

The exercise program was worth 30 percent of the final grade in Music 104, "Aural Skills."

"This (class) is the king of frustration," Galassini said. "To do the program, it takes a long, long time, and because I had so many other classes in my major, it wasn't priority. I was an A student without Guido (the computer program)."

The Guido music computer program is a Microsoft-formatted disk with listening exercises that students must complete by the end of the semester. Students plug earphones into the computer and identify sounds in the exercises.

Daniel Mellado, who taught one of the three sections of the class last semester, said that after the 11th week of class, professors thought students were cheating because students turned in lab exercises weeks before the end-of-semester due date.

Professors of the class began cross-checking the dates on some students' disks and found evidence of cheating.

"It wouldn't surprise me if this had happened before in my 18 years at SIUC," said Mellado, an associate professor in the School of Music.

Street festival to promote economic activity

DOWNTOWN: Two-day event to appeal to families and students.

BRIAN EBERS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Carbondale business owners and city officials anticipate a boost to the downtown economy powered by a new street festival this fall.

Carbondale Main Street, a community downtown revitalization group, is working with the city to finalize details for the new festival, tentatively set for Sept. 25-26 in the parking lot behind 710 Book Store, 710 S. Illinois Ave.

The festival will feature an amateur barbecue cook-off contest and a number of bands.

Barbara Parrish, Main Street member, said the wide spectrum of events should appeal to everyone.

"We're going to have a barbecue cook-off contest for about 20 contestants along with many other events that will cater to families and students," she said.

Main Street members applied for a temporary liquor license for the two-day event. On June 5, the Carbondale Liquor Advisory Board voted 6-1 in favor of recommending that City Council members issue Main Street the license.

The city has not scheduled a vote on the matter.

The one advisory board member to oppose the request was Larry Juhlin, associate vice chancellor for Student Affairs. He said problems may arise at the festival from the sale of alcohol.

"To me, history has told us that it's not going to work," he said. "I'm afraid of what is going to happen after the event is over at night."

Main Street has been planning the festival for more than one month, Joel Fritzier, program manager, said.

Fritzier said the festival's goal is to promote economic activity near South Illinois Avenue. The proceeds from the festival will go toward future Main Street events. Fritzier said Main Street expects a profit of more than $10,000.

"Our first interest is restructuring the downtown area," he said.

The University will not sponsor festival

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. Clinton asks country to come together

President Clinton warned that the United States risks a return to racial segregation in higher education more than 30 years after the civil rights revolution.

Clinton sounded the alarm bell Saturday in a widely awaited speech that launched a yearlong look at ways of solving racial problems and bringing the country's diverse population closer together.

"Can we become one America in the 21st century?" he asked an estimated 22,000 people attending an outdoor commencement ceremony at the University of California at San Diego under hazy skies.

Drawing on his own experience as a son of the South who witnessed the civil rights upheavals of the 1960s to end segregation policies at universities and elsewhere, Clinton acknowledged that "history reminds us that it will be hard" to breach the racial divide.

Suicide rates increase for Chinese students

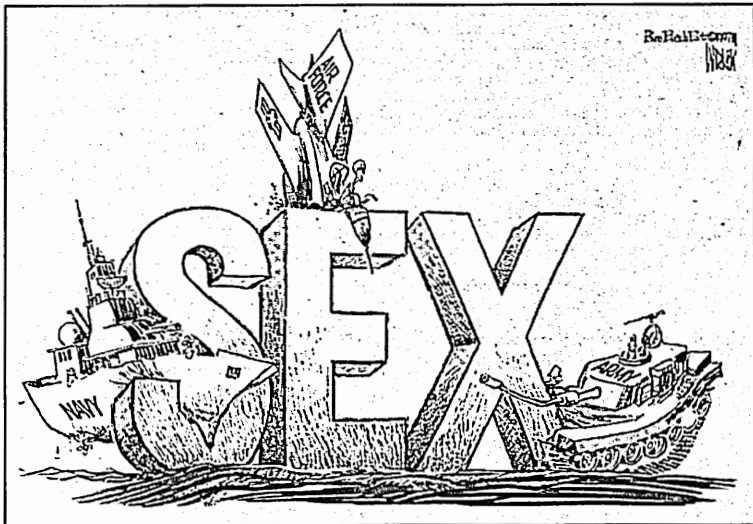

Suicide has become the leading cause of death on China's university campuses as economic reforms put increasing pressure on students to succeed.

Beijing Medical University Researcher Fang Mingzhao ("Fang Meeng-chow") says the increase has also been fueled by the growing number of sexual relationships among China's youth.

Fang says a study of Beijing's seven top universities and one community college found the suicide rate had skyrocketed, surpassing traffic fatalities as the leading cause of death.

Although he admits pressure on the average student has increased, Fang believes many of the suicides could have been prevented with proper counseling.

'Rear view' to America

America's most common communication medium is the bumper sticker. Bumper stickers are everywhere. One can make a case that they rank right up there with baseball and apple pie as symbols of American popular culture. Above all, they are a popular medium of communication and self-expression. That's not bad for a medium that has been around only since the 1960s. Bumper stickers are platforms that offer a "rear" view of America's tolerant — some would say relativistic — values. As such, they are a natural extension of the very American value of freedom of speech and expression.

And boy, are they expressive! A bumper sticker can be a soapbox, a megaphone and a non-verbal bully pulpit. Bumper stickers can be poetic, funny, literary, insulting, annoying and yes, downright idiotic. As I walked around the SIUC campus and drove around Illinois, I saw so many bumper stickers that I decided to start a collection.

Here is a sample of some bumper stickers I saw in Illinois. I will confine myself to those I found interesting, profound or penetrating: "Invest in the U.S., buy a senator."

Thank God that retired Sen. Paul Simon is no longer in the Senate. With all the cash-for-access hue and cry going on in Washington, that bumper sticker is right on the money.

Though Newt Gingrich, Bill Clinton, Rush Limbaugh and other politicians are the natural subjects of countless bumper stickers, the most graphic bumper stickers deal with women and women's issues.

Consider the following bumper stickers: "Partial birth abortion is murder!" screams a bumper sticker. "Hands off our bodies!" retorts another. "U.S. out of my UTERUS." "Stop playing politics in women's uterus" and "Get your rosaries off my ovaries," chimed others. And then there was this one about Hillary Rodham Clinton: "Want good health care — lobotomize Hillary Clinton." Talk about invasive, and penetrating, bumper stickers!

The next set of bumper stickers are profound. "The one who dies with the most toys wins." That was on a car with California license plates. A car with Illinois license plates had this rejoinder: "The one who dies with the most toys still dies." I liked the next two: "Stop violent crime, shoot back," and "Defend your right to keep and arm bears." The poor creatures!

A lot of bumper stickers deal with drugs. "Just say 'no' to drugs," states one. Another one screams, "Dare to keep cops off doughnuts!" Some deal with the environment. "Frankly my dear, I don't want a dam." Others deal with life itself: "Question reality" and "Why be normal?"

My favorite bumper stickers deal with AIDS and driving. "AIDS kills, love carefully," states one. The second one is a gem: "Drive carefully, 90 percent of people are caused by accidents." I definitely will remember that every time I get behind the steering wheel.

Bost commended for vote

Dear Editor

Congratulations are in order for our state representative, Mike Bost, because of the courageous stance he took against the overly powerful Springfield political machine that, fueled by the Chicago liberals like House Speaker Mike Madigan, D-Chicago, wanted to increase our taxes a whopping 25 percent. It would have been the largest income-tax increase in Illinois history — all in the name of "education reform."

It is amazing to me that Gov. Jim Edgar and the Democrat-controlled House believe the only way to accomplish substantial education reform is to raise our taxes. Sure, our property taxes would be lowered, but think for a minute.

What does that mean to us in Southern Illinois, where property values are substantially lower than the property values of our friends to the north? It means that we will save an amount of money that is substantially less than the amount that we will pay from our paychecks. Have we also forgotten that our salaries, on the whole, are less than those in the upper two-thirds of the state?

Education reform for all of Illinois' children can be accomplished without sending more of our money to Springfield. We must have forgotten the balanced budgets of the last couple of years where education, not prisons or law enforcement or state salaries, but EDUCATION has been the winner. All without raising our taxes.

It seems that every state that borders us, as well as almost every state in the Union, whether it has a Democratic or Republican governor, has finally learned that education can win without raising taxes. Illinois needs to learn a lesson fast.

We have the funds for education. Our economy grows by $1 billion a year. We need to a ourselves where our tax money and economic growth money is going.

Don't be fooled by the rhetoric coming from Springfield.

Package liquor store cap about restricting trade, not drinking

WHEN THE CARBONDALE CITY COUNCIL votes tonight on whether or not to lower the city's cap on package liquor licenses from eight to six, it will pass judgment on a debate that has been raging in small towns across America since the mass-retailing movement began more than 100 years ago.

The nationwide issue is whether or not smaller is better — whether or not local merchants stand to become the victims of unfair competition by large-scale merchandisers, and, by extension, whether or not those small-scale dealers should be protected by their local governments.

Carbondale's issue is whether or not representatives of new (and possibly big) businesses should be able to apply for the two package liquor licenses that probably will expire on July 1, the end of the license year, because their holders are not expected to seek to renew them. The ordinance before the City Council tonight would lower the cap to six, reflecting the loss of those two liquor stores.

CLEARLY, THE PROPOSED ORDINANCE IS not anti-liquor. But it would restrain competition, thus solidifying the profit margins of existing liquor stores. City government should not enact an ordinance that would favor small business at the expense of growth.

Owners of Carbondale's other six liquor stores want the lower cap so much that they have hired an attorney to speak for them. Granted, they have a valid fear of big business entering Carbondale and selling alcohol at lower prices than they are able to offer.

That fear is nothing new.

In the late 19th century and early 20th century, Sears, Roebuck & Co. and other large discount houses were under fire from small-town retailers threatened by the corporations' lower prices. In several small towns, mail-order catalogues were collected and burned in protest. Within the last decade, voter referenda and city governments, supported by independent retailers, have prevented Wal-Mart from opening stores in Maryland, Massachusetts, Ohio and elsewhere — citing potential harm to local businesses as the reason.

THE ARGUMENT AGAINST BIG BUSINESS IS an appeal to romanticism. People easily swayed by emotional arguments come to the knee-jerk conclusion that faceless corporations must be subdued to ensure the survival of mom-and-pop stores everywhere. But just as there are places for businesses such as Pomona General Store and Rosetta News in a world full of Wal-Marts and Barnes & Nobles, there are places for Old Town Liquors and Pick's Liquors.

A Carbondale liquor store can stay open, even if it is threatened by big business, by doing what any small retailer must do to compete these days: provide helpful service from an intelligent staff, a selection of products that matches its consumers' tastes, convenient hours and the lowest prices possible. Old-fashioned business sense, not a protective ordinance, will keep local liquor stores open and their customers happy.

"Our Word" represents the consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board.

Council to decide on liquor licenses

COMPETITION: Cap likely to stay at eight.

ALICE JOHNSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The Carbondale City Council probably will not decrease the number of available package liquor licenses at tonight's meeting because some council members say there is no reason to do so.

The council will consider an ordinance lowering the city's cap on package liquor stores from eight to six because two of Carbondale's eight package liquor stores will not seek renewed licenses at the end of the license year, June 30.

Councilman Larry Briggs said the only effect of lowering the number of package liquor licenses would be lowering competition for liquor store owners.

"(Having the cap remain the same) would be better for the economy and town overall," Briggs said. "I think the bigger issue is who is going to apply (for the licenses)."

Councilwoman Maggie Flanagan said there is no support in the community for decreasing the number of licenses.

In a prepared statement, Councilman Michael Neill stated that he could not support the ordinance.

"I cannot support restraint of trade for the purpose of protecting certain businesses in Carbondale from outside competition," stated Neill, who cannot attend tonight's meeting.

The two licenses will be available July 1 because Times Square Liquors, 1702 W. Main St., is closed, and Walgreen Drug Store, which is moving from University Mall, 1201 E. Main St., to the corner of Walnut and Wall streets, is not expected not to seek a license renewal.

Greg Pick, owner of Pick's Liquors in Lewis Park Mall, said he will not attend the meeting because it would have no effect on the vote.

"You can't fight these guys anyway. They do what they want," he said. "You can't fight city hall."

In May, Pick and four other liquor store owners hired an attorney to ask the council to reduce the number of licenses.

At the June 3 City Council meeting, the Undergraduate Student Government, the Graduate and Professional Student Council and the Carbondale NAACP opposed the ordinance.

At that meeting, the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce recommended "that City Council in fulfillment of its regulatory responsibility not use its power to issue licenses in restricting businesses in the community."

City Manager Jeff Doherty said lowering the number of liquor licenses might improve Carbondale's image and help decrease underage drinking.

However, he said, that is not guaranteed, and there are no compelling reasons to pass the ordinance.

In other business, council members will consider a 21-year-old entry age for package liquor stores.

In April, the Liquor Advisory Board recommended that the ordinance not be adopted.

Mark Robinson, vice president of the LAB, said a liquor-store entry age is not needed because parents have the responsibility to forbid their children from liquor stores.

Darrin Mann, an employee of Old Town Liquors, 514 S. Illinois Ave., said many people under 21 enter the store to buy cigarettes, chips and other non-alcoholic items.

The council also will consider a request by the Center for Comprehensive Services (CCS) for a permit to establish a center for persons with spinal cord and brain injuries.

If approved, the center will be located at the site of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority house, 520 S. University Ave., and at the site of the Sigma Nu fraternity house, 516 S. University Ave.

Eight students were planning on living in the sorority house in the fall, and 16 students were planning on living in the fraternity house in the fall.

Briggs said the location is not appropriate for the center.

"To put it in an area that is known for its party atmosphere is just asking for problems," Briggs said.

Flanagan, however, said the location offers advantages.

"CCS has always been a good neighbor," Flanagan said. "They employ a lot of people."

The Carbondale City Council is scheduled to meet at 7 tonight at City Hall, 200 S. Illinois Ave.

CHEATING

exam in May, about 20 students suspected of cheating on the program were handed letters requesting confessions.

The letter informed students that cheating is a violation of the University Student Conduct Code and if they confessed, their only punishment would be failing grades in the course.

Robert Weiss, director of the School of Music, said that all 20 students admitted to cheating.

Mellado said a student confessed that he learned to break into the school's computer program from an SIUC graduate. The student then provided the professors with the names of students whose scores he changed.

The student, who did not want his name published in the Daily Egyptian, would not comment.

School of Music officials said they do not plan to take any further disciplinary action against the students, besides posting failing grades.

Weiss said he was surprised that cheating occurred in the school. He said most students did not realize the extent of their actions.

"I'm not trying to excuse them," Weiss said. "In today's world, people talk of hackers, and (the students) just did not put it in the same light."

Mellado said students in the class probably thought paying $20 was an inexpensive and easy way to save hours in the computer lab. He said the course is like learning a foreign language for some students because they must train their ears and learn to identify scales, chords and harmonies.

"If someone comes into the music program with a weak background, they have to spend a lot of time improving their aural skills," Mellado said. "We don't have the time in class to bring everyone up to the same level."

Galassini said good students as well as struggling students paid to have their course work changed because of their frustration with the computer program.

"If anyone took the time to look at the grades, they would see that there were a lot of good students who were cheating," Galassini said.

As an effort to prevent future computer break-ins, Weiss said the school will conduct an orientation program at the beginning of the school year to address the Student Conduct Code and the penalties of academic dishonesty.

Mellado said the School of Music also is redesigning the music computer program.

"This makes us re-evaluate our program, and we have to re-evaluate our students," Mellado said. "We have to ask ourselves questions about the type of students who are in the school, SIUC and the world at large."

Graduate School begins review

REVIEW AND IMPROVE:
Committee will study the effects of decentralizing.

WILLIAM HATFIELD
DE POLITICAL EDITOR

An internal review team and two out-of-state university officials will evaluate the role of the Graduate School dean and determine how a decentralized budgeting and management system would affect the school. Sarah Blackstone, vice chairwoman of the Graduate Council and an internal review team member, said the internal review began Monday. Both teams will consider whether or not decentralizing the Graduate School would benefit the University.

In July 1996, a steering committee was formed to develop a new budgeting system for SIUC and SIUE that would allow most fiscal decisions to be made at the departmental level rather than at the central administration level.

The new system could be in place within two years.

If the Graduate School is decentralized, its grant and research functions will be performed by academic departments.

Blackstone said eliminating the Graduate School would not be cost effective because departments would have to hire more employees to do the Graduate School's administrative work.

"We will ask if there is sense in decentralizing the Graduate School and if it makes things easier," Blackstone said. "I think, however, that most colleges don't want to or can't accomplish all the things that need to be done."

"If the Graduate School isn't operating as it should, we will look at other answers rather than just pulling it all apart."

Blackstone said any recommendations made by the review teams will be made to Chancellor Don Beggs and John Jackson, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost, for consideration.

The external team, which will review the Graduate School in July after the internal review is complete, is comprised of Tom Collins, vice president for research at Oklahoma State University, and George Walker, vice president for research and dean of the graduate school at Indiana University.

John McKillip, Graduate School associate dean, said both reviewers are employed at universities that have decentralized budgeting and management systems. He said they were chosen in part for their experience with decentralization.

John Preece, chairman of the Graduate Council and a review team member, said the review will focus on the whole Graduate School and not just the possible decentralization of it.

"I expect the entire organization of the Graduate School to be viewed critically in the way they function and how we can improve upon that," Preece said.

Blackstone said the review also will consider separating the position of Graduate School dean and associate vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and research. John Yopp now serves in both positions.

Preece said, however, that the positions likely will remain together.

"I am not aware of any effort to split those titles," Preece said. "Research activities are a major part of graduate education, so it makes a lot of sense to keep those combined."

federal banking legislation would make the program too costly, said Jeff Duke, identification card and campus vending director.

Under federal Regulation E, which is banking legislation dealing with electronic funds transfers, institutions using debit cards must provide customers with monthly balance statements.

"That means every time 35 cents for a stamp, and the envelope, for a $7 statement," Duke said. "It's not cost effective to do that."

The Federal Reserve Board is expected to rule on an amendment to the regulation that will strike the balance statement line from the legislation, allowing the University to proceed with its debit card program.

Councilwoman Maggie Flanagan and Sally Carter, owner of Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave., about how students can get involved in planning the festival.

"I would like to see as much student participation as possible in the planning process," Vingren said.

SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs said he respects the Main Street Program for its intentions and initiative in sponsoring an event that will capture the diversity of the Carbondale area.

"I hope that people will participate and participate responsibly," Beggs said.

Jan Paratore, dean of students and associate vice chancellor of Student Affairs, said she is concerned about beer sales.

"As a resident of Carbondale, I'm concerned because of the history here," she said. "It's a concern."

Joshua Kappelman, a senior in political science from Ottawa, said he was glad to hear of the festival. In his two years at SIUC, he said he has noticed a decline in the number of events directed toward students and the community.

Fritzer said attendance is expected to reach about 1,500 people per day.

SURFING

Shirley said the club has about 10 members. Usually offering the lessons for $20 an hour, he is giving new members a bargain for the summer.

"Right now we're doing it free for club members — just $5 for initiation and a $5 fee for the club," he said.

During the lesson, Richendollar and the two other new windsurfers practiced their skills on the lake, sometimes falling in the process.

Hui Du, a second-year graduate student in microbiology from China, splashed into the water repeatedly, but said he was not nervous about learning the sport.

Du did not have the chance to windsurf or practice other outdoor sports in his native city of about 11 million people.

"I come from a crowded city, Shanghai has more people than the entire population of Illinois," he said. "It feels good to be able to get close to nature with things like windsurfing. I'm not nervous at all. It's interesting."

The transition from land to water was not easy for Richendollar, who shared Du's fate as she made her own ripples in the lake.

"My feet were sliding in my shoes and I didn't feel like I had any balance," she said. "I've skied since I was young and stuff, but this is a lot different. It definitely takes a lot of practice to maneuver. Lots of practice."

But soon, Richendollar was able to make her way along the shore, using the light breeze to guide her along as she windsurfed — until she splashed again.

And although Matt Irvin did not place any high expectations on himself for his first lesson, he also was able to windsurf Saturday.

"My goal is to get this down so I can at least turn around on the water. That's enough for today," he said.

But Irvin, an unclassified graduate student from Centralia, found his windsurfing lesson to be a good bargain.

"It was $10 to join the club," he said. "If you tried to rent this stuff and go and get instruction somewhere, it would be a lot more than that."

And although Irvin also fell into the lake often, Shirley said all three beginning windsurfers were doing fine.

"At first you don't know how to react to things, then you learn and adjust. Then you only fall in once in a while."

provost, said Guthrie brought stability and stature to the program, and will be missed as its director and a psychology professor.

"He translated his standing as a psychologist into good academic values into his leadership roles in Black American Studies," Jackson said. "He is an outstanding psychologist, leader, teacher and good friend. I will miss him on all accounts."

Jackson remembers Guthrie's compelling keynote address before a packed auditorium during Black History Month last February.

Guthrie addressed and defined the changing face of racism in America using his own experiences, and spoke about how far the nation has come.

"He delivered an outstanding address for young people," Jackson said.

Nikki Wilson, a junior in psychology from Maywood, said she especially will miss Guthrie as a professor. She was looking forward to having him as an instructor in future psychology classes.

"He was the only professor I had who could keep me interested throughout the class," Wilson said. "He's such an intelligent and easy-going person at the same time. I'm a little upset he's leaving because he is a good professor and is so easy for students to talk to."

Guthrie received his bachelor's degree in psychology in 1955 at Florida A&M University, a master's degree in psychology in 1961 at the University of Kentucky and a Ph.D. in psychology in 1970 at the USA International University in San Diego.

When Guthrie announced his retirement, he became the head of the search committee to find his replacement. After eight months of searching, the committee chose the Rev. Joseph Brown as the new Black American Studies director.

"(Brown) has experience in this area and is very well trained for the position," Guthrie said. "Besides, he has a vision of what he wants for the program."

Brown said he has big plans for the program but they will not be revealed until he starts his position on Aug. 15.

"I do have a vision for the program," Brown said. "I plan to bring all the normal qualities to the program, the professional administration and personality aspects."

Brown has taught at Xavier University of Louisiana, the University of Virginia and Creighton University in Nebraska.

Brown received a bachelor's degree in philosophy and letters in 1968 from St. Louis University. He also earned his master's degree in Afro-American Studies in 1983 from Yale University and a Ph.D. in American Studies in 1984.

From July 1 to Aug. 15, the acting director will be Oladele Omosogbon, a professor of Black American Studies.

Hood said Guthrie is someone from whom he can receive advice at any time.

"You can never find someone with professionalism and devotion, dedication and charisma at the same time," he said. "It's hard for someone like me to look up to a person. And the best thing about him is that he knows who I am."

so we could watch 'Citizen Kane.' He seemed to be like a kid on Christmas morning, eager to teach us about the film industry," he said. "I marveled at his curiosity and because of him, I became interested in film."

Blumenberg inspired his students, but he was a filmmaker as well. He wrote and co-produced the feature film, "America First," which was shown at the Edinburg Festival in Scotland. Festival director Murray Griger called the work "a very important film, which all of Europe should see."

He seemed to be like a kid on Christmas morning, eager to teach us about the film industry. I marveled at his curiosity...

STEVE FAIRCHILD
1972 GRADUATE AND EMMY NOMINEE

With his own talent in the field, Blumenberg's teaching ability soared above the rest. Steve Fairchild, a 1972 SIUC graduate and Emmy nominee for his documentary film "Who Will Teach for America," remembers Blumenberg not only as a professor but as a friend.

"Dick, as his friends refer to him, was funny and a dear friend," he said. "He was always there for his students. We could sit at his home and have a soiree after hours and just talk."

Fairchild also has fond memories of Blumenberg's teaching. "His passion defined what a teacher really is," he said. "He loved an argument and felt he could always learn from a student."

Because of Blumenberg's accomplishments in the University Film and Video Association, there is a screenwriting award presented in his name yearly.

"Richard Blumenberg passes on an era. He is the cornerstone of the profession," Blomquist said. "He will really be missed. There are not many like him."

Campus centers for women still debated

SEGREGATION? Argument continues over whether centers benefit or hinder women's rights.

KNIGHT-RIDER/
TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES

CHICAGO—Vanessa Martin, 22, had suffered a lifetime of physical and sexual abuse. And, she says, the wounds were still fresh when she entered Northwestern University in fall 1993.

Martin tried therapy at NU and at nearby Evanston Hospital, but she says she still felt as if she was trapped in a hole.

Walking back to campus from one of those counseling sessions, she discovered NU's Women's Center — an event she now says changed her life.

"At Northwestern, the Women's Center is like a little-known secret," says Martin, who will graduate from the university's journalism school next month.

"The Women's Center was able to provide me with the resources I needed to work through the tough issues."

As NU's Women's Center commemorated its 10th anniversary in May, students at the University of Chicago protested the absence of a similar center.

For nearly two months, about 150 students helped pitch a makeshift "women's center" pup tent each day in front of the school's administration building.

But when just about any student was asked what they thought about the protest, the answer was along the lines of "I don't really care."

"I don't think anyone really cares," said

Jamie Karnik, a fourth-year history major. "I don't think anyone has a problem with building a women's center, but there's no resentment because we don't have one, either."

That disparity between apathy and activism epitomizes the nationwide ambivalence about women's centers on college campuses.

Some say the centers are necessary safe-houses for women at traditionally male-dominated universities.

Others call them gravy atop campuses already brimming with women's resources, including rape and sexual harassment counselors, health services, lesbian organizations and self-defense programs.

And a few such as Betty Friedan, credited by many as being the founder of the modern feminist movement, say women's centers are reminders of a time when women students remained segregated from men.

"I'm surprised to hear this is coming so late to U. of C.," Friedan said during a recent visit to the campus. "For me, a women's center is almost obsolete now."

That battle began in earnest more than 25 years ago, about the time the women's movement and the fight for equal rights were in full swing. But the first women's center opened its doors well before that.

It was 1959 when the University of Minnesota began the Continuing Education for Women Office, giving the K site the Riveters, who were forced out of the workplace after World War II, a chance at new careers, says Jessica Morgan, coordinator of the Minnesota Women's Center.

Over the years, the center's focus shifted more to career and personal counseling.

And in 1992, it moved to a new location, hired a director and adopted a new mission: to improve the campus climate for female students and focus on the retention of those students.

"Research shows that people who stay here and do well have a connection to the university," Morgan says. "That's one reason to have a women's center."

But women's center opponents say the places are yet another way of marginalizing women.

"Other buildings get labeled as men's buildings by default," says Elizabeth Davenport, director of the office for women's issues at the University of Southern California.

Since the opening of the first one, women's centers have cropped up just about everywhere.

Nearly 400 campus and community women's centers are registered with the National Association of Women's Centers, based in Sumner, Maine, but center administrators estimate there are about 1,000 such institutions around the country.

They range from domestic violence shelters to career counseling services to grass-roots political organizations, says Mary Ann Haxton, an NAWC staff member.

There's no shortage of resources for women at the U. of C., students say.

A handout several pages thick lists myriad health services, harassment complaint deans, lesbian groups and crisis hot lines.

What the protesters are seeking, they say, is a one-stop resource center for women's needs.

"We have plenty of services all over the place at the U. of C., and that's the problem," says Andrea Schlesinger, a third-year public policy major organizing the women's center protest.

"If you're a woman in the middle of the night and something's happened to you, you don't want to look through an index. This would be a space where women could go to understand what's happened to them."

One administrator calls the U. of C. protest an "effective symbolic presence" but says no decisions have been reached on the status of the women's center.

"It's important to say whether the existence of a women's center would make a difference," says Kathryn Stell, deputy dean of students. "That would depend on how it's handled."

Comparisons between NU and the U. of C. in terms of women's resources are not valid, Stell says, because the climates at the two schools are so different.

"Northwestern has a huge active fraternity culture and a Big Ten football team," she says. "Those are important factors with respect to the incidence of sexual violence and where they take place. Any reasonable discussion of sexual violence at NU versus U. of C. should take that into account."

Statistics show, however, that U. of C., a school with about one-third fewer students, actually had more reported cases of sexual assault than NU in recent years.

From 1994 to 1996, NU's Evanston campus logged five instances of forcible and non-forcible sex offenses. Forcible assault is defined as one in which weapons or threats are used.

At U. of C. there were seven reported sexual assaults from 1993 to 1995.

And campuswide fear was heightened last December and January when two highly publicized rapes occurred near campus. Some attribute the numbers to U. of C.'s inner-city location.

"People say this isn't a campus where rape happens," says Renee McGary, a 20-year-old art history major.

"Because two women were raped and were brave enough to report it doesn't mean they were the only two raped all year. There are tons of rapes that aren't reported. A supportive atmosphere with a trained counselor is really important."

Husband and wife win lottery, keep racing

LUCKY NUMBER: Couple had sold everything but the race car before winning.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

EL MONTE, Calif.—“When we win the lottery, we’re going to....” How many times have you heard someone say that?

Followed by, “take a trip around the world,” or “buy a place in Hawaii,” or....

Kenny and Marylou Smith of El Monte hit it big in California’s Super Lotto, winning $22.8 million in 1994. Now, every Sept. 17 until 2014, they get a check for $883,217 from the state of California.

And so they’re off to see the world? Nope. They formed Quick Pick Motorsports and bought race cars for Kenny to drive.

“We’ve always gone racing,” said Marylou, the registered owner of the No. 43 Chevrolet her husband drives in Winston West races, and the No. 43 Ford he runs on smaller California tracks. “It’s what we’ve always wanted to do, so why stop now?”

No argument from the family driver. “If it wasn’t for the race cars, I’d go nuts,” Kenny Smith said.

Kenny was racing—and winning—at Saugus Speedway the night his numbers—16, 18, 28, 30, 34, 37—came up.

At the time, there was a “For Sale” sign on the Ford Kenny was driving in what he feared was his farewell to racing. That night he won the trophy dash, a heat and the main event, clinching the track’s Pro Stock championship.

“We’d refinanced our house (and) had sold everything, we could, except the race car,” Smith recalled. “We were six months behind on our shop rent and about to have our home foreclosed.”

The Smiths were at work the following morning and hadn’t bothered to check the numbers on the tickets Marylou had bought.

“Monday morning, I was ordering parts,” Kenny said. “It was about 10:35 when someone said, ‘Did you hear about the guy in Azusa who won $22 million and hasn’t shown up to claim it? Did you buy tickets?’ I said, ‘Yeah, we get five bucks’ worth every week.’

“Then Marylou got a call from Callahan’s, asking if we’d checked our numbers.

“There was a Lotto guy there who said the winning ticket came from their place. He said he wanted to know if it could be ours. The tickets were in my pocket, so I handed them to Marylou. She’d bought 10, so they started reading her the numbers. When she heard the sixth number—it was on the very first series—she started jumping up and down, screaming. I told her to calm down, I was trying to talk to a customer.

“She said, ‘Listen to this guy on the phone.’ I closed the window, told the customer to wait a minute (and said), ‘I think we won the lottery.’

“(The man on the phone) read the numbers off again—I was just numb. You know, you can’t believe it. You keep checking and rechecking and rechecking some more.”

Then the Smiths indulged themselves, hiring a stretch limo and wearing matching T-shirts from Callahan’s when they turned in their ticket at the state lottery office in Whittier.

“We were blessed, truly blessed,” Marylou says.

Winning all that money is nice, and the Smiths aren’t complaining, but there have been some dark moments too.

“After we’d paid off all the bills and taken a few days off, I had to get back to work to have something to do,” Smith said. “One hot day, I finished a brake job and was all sweaty and greasy. I handed the customer the bill and he said, ‘You gonna charge me that? With all the money you got?’ I kept hearing so much talk like that that I closed up the shop.”

Smith then opened a race garage, where he and four or five other car owners worked on their equipment. But as with his repair business, he found that some people were looking for a free ride.

The Smiths’ answer was not to move from their roots next to the El Monte airport, but to add a story to their tract house and build a three-car racing garage in the back yard.

“We thought about moving, but we’ve lived in the same house since 1971 and we just didn’t want to leave,” Marylou said. “So we turned a $125,000 tract house into a $350,000 home.”

Upstairs are an office for Kimberly, a game room-museum with a shrine to Richard Petty’s No. 43 for Marylou and a plush place for Kenny to relax after working on his cars.

RACE

Mitchell, a junior in architecture from Moline, had problems in the downhill, too. With a 5:14 finish in the downhill and a 34:33 second finish in the timed trial, Mitchell failed to place in the top three spots.

The competitiveness of the field gave Mitchell a good feeling about the race.

“I felt this was one of my better races, but the competition was fierce,” Mitchell said.

Brooks said he would have to single out Mitchell’s performance as the most impressive.

“Chad usually never beats me, but he did today,” Brooks said.

Brooks, a senior in art from Dixon, said he was too aggressive on the course, which caused him to run off the track a couple of times.

Brooks finished with the timed trial in 34:41 seconds, and the downhill in 5:25.

“I was out of control at times and took some jumps too aggressively,” Brooks said.

The SIUC Bike Club will be competing in the next series of races at Castlewood in two weeks and plans to gain experience along the way.

“We plan to use these races as training sessions for the upcoming season,” Mitchell said.

FLOOR

games are televised.

“When ESPN came and televised one of our games they commented on how ugly the floor was on camera,” West said. “We think that the lighter color and more attractive look will have more of an appeal for television.”

The construction, though, has displaced some of the summer basketball camps.

The camps that regularly would be in the Arena have been relocated to Davies Gym, the gym in Pulliam Hall and the Recreation Center.

“The enrollment was the same and none of them (the camps) had to be canceled because of construction,” said Steve Yarbrough, director of the Division of Continuing Education. “We did have to work with other departments, like Intercollegiate Athletics, to make room for some of our camps, which resulted in a tighter schedule.”

He said the work on the new floor may help the summer camp program and the University.

“In the long run it will be worth the inconvenience,” Yarbrough said. “The summer camps are a way of really attracting potential students and by them knowing about the new floor it makes the campus even more attractive.”

Court getting makeover

NEW LOOK: Coaches say floor will improve safety, recruiting.

DANNIELLE WEST
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Thirty years of Saluki basketball have deteriorated the SIUC Arena floor, but for the first time since the Arena was built, it is getting a new one.

Beginning this season, the Salukis will be playing on a maple-wood floor that will be more technologically advanced than the previous one, which was laid in 1964 when the Arena was built.

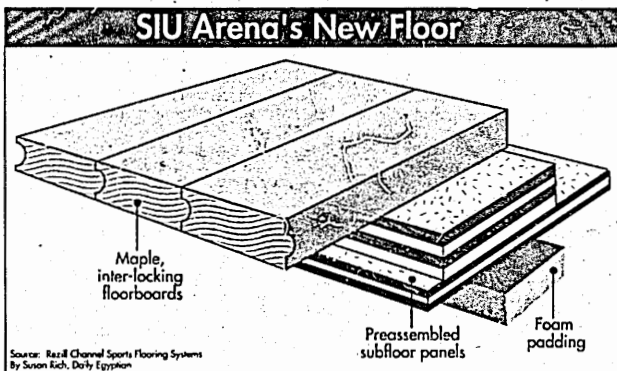

Men's basketball head coach Rich Herrin said the floor is something the basketball program has needed for years.

"The floor was tough to play on due to the physical stress put on players in games and in practice," he said. "The new floor has a better cosmetic appeal for recruiting, is a better working surface and is better for practicing."

Construction on the floor began three weeks ago and will continue until about Sept. 5. The job of removing the floor and laying a new one will take three to 12 workers.

The floor is part of a $2.8 million renovation plan for Saluki athletic facilities. A $600,000 contract to install the new floor was awarded to Keifer Brothers General Contractors of Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The new floor's support system is a layer of padding beneath two layers of plywood.

The old floor was set over a one-half-inch layer of cork. With time, the cork compacted and turned to dust.

Assistant athletic director Charlotte West said the old floor's decaying cork became a safety hazard.

"We had a big problem with athletes having shin splints and other leg and ankle problems, probably resulting from the lack of padding under the floor," she said.

Safety is not the only benefit of removing the old floor. Job foreman Jim Tolbert said the new floor will make the SIUC Arena look better. "There will be a floor box for the scoring table to fit into," Tolbert said. "We also are rewiring the scoreboards and scorekeepers' tables. There will be no visible wires from the scorekeepers' table, and it is wired to handle television and radio equipment."

He said it will be about 40 years before the new floor needs to be replaced.

West said having the floor look nice will help the basketball program when Saluki

SIUC cyclists compete in St. Louis

ROUGH RACE:

SIUC Bike Club enters Missouri events to prepare for season.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC Bike Club member Todd Johanson was pleased with the results of his first race Sunday performance, although a broken chain forced him to coast to the finish line.

"I felt I was racing pretty good until my chain broke halfway through, but racing for the first time, I enjoyed myself," Johanson said.

Johanson, a sophomore in electrical engineering from Auburn, competed in the beginners' division of the Touring Cyclist Series races Sunday in St. Louis.

The series of races took place at Castlewood Park and are scheduled every two weeks until the fall cycling season begins.

Johanson finished in six minutes, 38 seconds in the downhill.

"They let racers go at a minute interval and I never knew my position in the race," he said. "I liked chasing people instead of racing against the time."

Johanson was joined in the 80-cyclist event by SIUC Bike Club members Dru Brooks, Mark Glivinsky, Chad Mitchell and Courtney Alexander.

They competed in the more-advanced sport division.

The judges will release the complete results of the race today. Standings of the SIUC participants were not available.
