Communications gap

Woody Hall protesters maintain order

By Sue Roll
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Demonstrators marched through the Vietnamese Studies Center at Woody Hall several times Thursday but remained orderly and left the building when officials and police warned them of arrest. Most of the action was verbal because few students were willing to risk arrest.

Plans for nonviolent civil disobedience by the Southern Illinois Peace Committee were called off apparently because few students were willing to risk arrest.

The demonstrators appeared to be disunited, with some for nonviolent disobedience and others for more violent action. Most appeared to want to show their opposition to the center by their presence in People's Park across from Woody Hall.

Approximately 200 students marched through the center at about 10:45 p.m. chanting, "Power to the people. Off AID!"

Next they attempted to form a human chain around the building. About 80 persons participated.

At this point, the crowd, officials and police began to get uneasy.

Edward Hammond, dean of student relations, warned them that they were in violation of the interim policy on demonstrations and state criminal statutes.

A woman yelled across the street to the group, telling them that all they were succeeding in doing was raising tuition. "Hurray for the jerks," she said, referring to the demonstrators.

Some in the crowd replied that tuition was high because of the center.

After several attempts at quieting them, Hammond gave them five minutes to disperse or be subject to arrest. "I have given you every right and opportunity that is guaranteed you by the first amendment," he said.

Hammond said there had been four complaints that the demonstration was disturbing classes.

The demonstrators spoke with Hammond and they agreed the demonstrators could remain if they were quiet.

The crowd decided to have a peaceful march to Lawson Hall to gain more supporters. They marched around Lawson, past Morris Library through University Center and to the Chancellor's Office at Anthony Hall chanting and singing. "All we are saying is give peace a chance."

Many demonstrators dropped out of the march and only about 150 returned to People's Park.

At about 1 p.m. a small group entered Woody Hall and went to the office of H.

B. Jacobini, director of the center.

About 20 people were jammed near the office doorway. Tom Dempsey, chairman of the SIPC, demanded to see a copy of the University's annual report to AID concerning the center which contained financial information about the allocation of funds and expenditures of the center. The AID grant is a major source of funding for the center.

Members of the group hurled insults at Jacobini but he remained outwardly calm.

Hammond and Thomas L. Leffler, security officer, were in the office at the time, with Hammond mediating between the group and Jacobini.

Jacobini told Dempsey that the information he wanted was available in Morris Library. Dempsey said it was not and demanded to see the report.

Jacobini said it was not in his jurisdiction to distribute the report and that this should be obtained through Ralph Ruffner, systems vice president and University grant officer.

Hammond said he had told Dempsey he had arranged to get this information from Ruffner. Later Hammond said the report would be available at noon in People's Park Friday, adding that a different financial report was available in the library and would contain the same information as that contained in the University's report.

Coroner to hold statement on drowning until inquest

Jackson County Coroner Harry A. Flynn said Thursday that a statement made by Edward J. Shea, chairman of physical education for men, on the apparent drowning of Huey W. Harrison in University School swimming pool Monday, will not be released until an inquest is held.

Flynn said he received a copy of Shea's statement Thursday but could not release any information until the inquest, perhaps in a week or 10 days when an autopsy has been made.

The coroner said he wanted to get "all sides of the student's death" before releasing further information.

T. Richard Mager, SIU legal counsel, said the University is conducting an investigation into the death of the 19-year-old student and no statements will be released until it is completed.

Harrison's body was found at the bottom of the shallow end of the swimming pool Monday after a swimming class. According to Troy Edwards, assistant dean of the College of Education, Shea and Irving Spigle, associate professor of instructional materials, were swimming in the pool at the time Harrison's body was discovered.

Funeral services for Harrison will be at 8 p.m. Friday at the Compton Hills Baptist Church, 3141 LaSalle St., St. Louis, Mo.

Orderly protest

The group was unsatisfied with Jacobini's explanation but left the office to tell the remaining demonstrators what had happened and to decide what should be done next.

The crowd began to disperse at 2 p.m. Shortly after that it began to rain and most of the remaining demonstrators left the park.

A quiet group of approximately 50 persons gathered at people's park Thursday night. The 7 p.m. gathering seemed to be somewhat disorganized. They started marching on the same route as Wednesday night but broke up at the Brush Towers complex at about 8:30 p.m.

There was no visible damage to the center from the day's events and no arrests were made.

Chuck Berry to headline outdoor concert

By Teresa Hunt
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Chuck Berry, original recorder of such greats as "Memphis," "Nadine," "Sweet Little Sixteen" and "No Particular Place to Go," is heading an outdoor concert to be held from 6 p.m. to 1 a.m. Saturday behind the Newman Center.

The concert is being sponsored by an informal committee of persons interested in establishing weekend activities. The committee was organized by University Services to Carbondale.

Use of the Newman Center facilities was donated by the Rev. William Longust, director of the Newman Center.

Funds for the concert have been raised by a committee consisting of Neal Eckert, mayor of Carbondale; Bill Schmidt, city manager; Harry Klein, manager of Discout Records; Bob Thomas, a government major; Bob Piper, a senior and Steve Hoffman, owner of Eastgate Liquor Mart.

Additional funds are still needed to pay Chuck Berry. Klein and Thomas said Fifty-cent donations will be requested during the concert. Klein said that any profits collected will be used for further weekend activities.

John McCaffrey, student body vice president, said that booths will be set up on campus Friday to collect money for the concert.

The Carbondale Chamber of Commerce has endorsed the event and has sent a fund raising letter to all of its members. Thomas said.

Landlords, faculty members, restaurant owners, liquor store and night club owners, individual citizens and city banks have contributed money for the concert, he said.

"The most assistance we have received is from the Bank of Carbondale and Bill Taylor," Thomas said. Taylor is overseeing the concert account. "Without them it wouldn't have come off. We haven't had one person who we asked to contribute refuse us," he added.

The University, through Edward Hammond, dean of student relations, has contributed a lot of resources for the concert, Thomas said.

Harry Larimore, director of the park district, is providing portable sanitary facilities for the concert area.

Everyone is invited to bring a picnic supper and eat from 6 to 8 p.m. Music will begin at 8 p.m.

Three local bands will share the billing with Chuck Berry.

Since the concert is within city limits, beer drinking will be allowed, Klein said.

Thomas said anyone wishing to make a contribution to the concert or further weekend activities can make their check payable to Alternative '71, Bill Taylor, Bank of Carbondale.

Camille, Peters hit with formal complaint

By Chuck Hutchcraft
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A formal complaint has been filed with the Campus Judicial Board against certain Action Party members for allegedly using a student government project as a campaigning device.

The complaint, filed Wednesday by Cheryl Weber, Westside dorm senator, recommends that George Camille, student body president-elect, and Jim Peters, vice president-elect, be barred from taking office.

The complaint further recommends that Action Party be removed from the voting ballot until fall quarter 1972.

The Judicial Board will decide Monday whether to act upon the complaints.

Miss Weber charged Action Party members with distributing Venereal Disease Kits just prior to the election and using the student government project to campaign for the Action Party.

A similar complaint filed with the student government elections commission lodged charges against Mic Kawula, Action Party chairman, Dennis Kosinski, eastside nondorm Action Party senator, and Dave Maguire, University Park Action senator.

In this complaint Miss Weber accused these three persons with alleged "misuse of student government funds and misrepresentation of a student government project for the concern of their campaign in the April 28, 1971 election."

The elections commission dismissed the complaints Wednesday for lack of sufficient grounds. Kathy Maddock, elections commissioner, said if the complaints were taken to the Judicial Board the elections commission would recommend to that body that they be dismissed.

According to Miss Weber, Camille's and Peters' names were printed in one of the two booklets contained in the VD kit. She said this was done to win votes for the two men.

The last page of the booklet reads "A very special thanks to the following without whose help none of this could be done: Senator George Camille, Senator Jim Peters, and the members of the Health and Welfare Committee."

In the complaints filed with the elections commission, Miss Weber said Kosinski and Maguire "called a meeting (mandatory) on April 22 for the purpose of assembling the VD packets with great urgency for their distribution."

Miss Weber said, "The packets were distributed at Neeley and Mae Smith with intent of furthering political goals. Witnesses of this are available."

The name of Bob Prince, Eastside nondorm senator and chairman of the Health and Welfare Committee, was left out.

"Dave Maguire and Dennis Kosinski specifically knew of the note of gratitude prior to the distribution of the kit. Mr. Kosinski, editor, (of the pamphlet) did, I contend, use student government funds for his own private interests," Miss Weber said.

Kawula, chairman of the Action

Party and one of those accused by Miss Weber, when asked of the complaints filed said, "It just seems to me that they're sore losers."

Camille's and Peters' names, Kawula said, were included in the booklet, "because they actually helped."

Prince had "nothing to do with it," Kawula said. "In fact he didn't offer to help at all."

Kawula said the VD kit would have not come about without the help of Camille and Peters. Both are members of the Finance Committee and both were responsible for appropriating funds for the project, Kawula said.

Kawula denied that the kit was used to campaign for the Action Party

Minorities allotted seats

U-Senate nominations are sought

The student government ad hoc nominating committee is accepting recommendations for student body representatives to the Provisional University Senate, student body vice president John McCaffrey announced Thursday.

The deadline for submitting recommendations is 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Anyone wishing to do so may make recommendations. Persons making recommendations should submit them to nominating committee chairman Louis Martin, University City chairman.

Martin said letters are being sent to all campus organizations asking them to submit recommendations.

The ad hoc nominating committee was part of a University Senate candidate selection process submitted to Chancellor Robert Layer and approved by the Student Senate.

Two weeks ago Layer set a 10 day deadline for student government officials to work out a method agreeable to the Campus Judicial Board to select two student body positions to the University Senate—one regular and one alternate position.

The Campus Judicial Board last quarter, in the case Scherschel vs. Student Senate, ruled that student body representatives chosen by the Student Senate were not representative of minority groups on this campus. The board also ruled the Student Senate chose the student body representatives who would represent minority groups.

The plan submitted to Layer, calls for the formation of an ad hoc nominating committee consisting of one person representing Black Student Union, Small Group Housing, University Park and the Foreign Students Association. Four student senators are also on the committee.

The plans also ask that representatives presently serving on the University Senate be allowed to continue until the beginning of fall quarter 1971. By that time the plans call for the Student Senate to have established permanent selection process of student body representatives.

Those persons making recommendations should place them in Martin's mailbox located in the student government office on the second floor of the University Center.

All candidates must be in good standing, at least a second quarter freshman and attending summer school, according to McCaffrey.

Martin said the nominating committee will make its final recommendations to the Student Senate May 11.

2 bombs hit coast sites

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Bombers struck Thursday at a utility company substation and an oil refinery 450 miles apart in the latest of a long series of explosive attacks on big businesses in California.
The newest targets were a Pacific Gas & Electric Co. substation near this San Francisco Bay area city and a Standard Oil of California refinery in East Los Angeles.

A pipe-type bomb planted at an unmanned substation 10 miles west of San Jose knocked out a 60,000-volt regulator and temporarily stopped electric service to parts of nearby Los Gatos, Los Altos, Big Basin and Davenport.

At the refinery 450 miles to the south, a bomb on an empty railroad tank car hurled debris from the car through the metal walls of a nearby warehouse and smashed 200 windows. Deputies said the bomb apparently was made of sticks of dynamite.

Late Wednesday night a fire bomb scorched the front of a bookstore in the town of Chico in the upper Sacramento Valley.

Another bomb the previous night broke glass in the Chicago branch of the Bank of America, and a fire bomb fizzled out at an Air Force recruiting station.

There were no injuries in any of the incidents.

Antiwar activities end in nation's capital

WASHINGTON (AP) — The capital's weeks of antiwar protests reached a straggle end Thursday with a thousand demonstrators still in jail and their efforts to jam the city's traffic a failure.

Only 50 young people, outnumbered 10-1 by police, showed up for one last outcry at South Vietnam's embassy—the tag end of 20,000 who were here earlier in the week.

As the antiwar people left the city, their leaders promised to regroup and return in the summer.

Meanwhile the Rev. Carl McIntire made plans for his "Patriots March for Victory" Saturday, billing it as "our answer to Haiphong's hippie harangues."

His rally is to be near the Washington monument after a march up Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol. There, he said, "anti-Communist and pro-victory leaders" will speak to the crowd by radio from points around the globe.

These, McIntire said, will include President Chiang Kaishek of Nationalist China, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky of South Vietnam and Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

He also called for picketing of the Federal Communications Commission

"to give us freedom to identify the victory-constructors, the freedom-constructors, and the surrender-constructors," McIntire, a fundamentalist radio evangelist from Collingswood, N.J., had had a running battle with the FCC.

Courts were processing the last 1,160 people of the 12,000 arrested this week. The last were taken into custody Wednesday in a demonstration on the Capitol steps.

A court order cleared the temporary prison compound at a sports arena of the remainder of 7,000 demonstrators arrested in the stall-the-traffic attempts Monday when police abandoned normal procedures in making wholesale sweeps. The 2,300 arrested Tuesday at the Justice Department were fined and processed through courts that operated on a 24-hour basis.

Those arrested at the steps of Congress, charged under a statute that bars demonstrations there, faced fines of $100 or 100 days in jail.

The city returned to normal Thursday as police barriers were removed from the sidewalks in front of the White House, the only tell-tale signs being scratch marks on the concrete from police horses' hoofs.

Police report 39 arrests during Champaign protest

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Police at the University of Illinois said they arrested 39 persons Thursday for failing to leave a lobby where they conducted a sit-in at a protest against Marine recruiters on campus.

The arrests were made ten minutes before the three recruiters were scheduled to leave the campus. Those arrested, mostly students, were among a group of about 200 persons conducting a sit-in at the student union where the recruiting booth was set up.

The sit-in began shortly after noon. Authorities said the demonstrators were warned at least four times to disperse. Shortly before 3 p.m., university police approached each of the demonstrators, saying they would be arrested if they did not leave. Those that disobeyed the police order were escorted singly to a waiting bus and taken to the Champaign County jail.

Police said they would be charged with disorderly conduct or interference with an institution of higher learning.

The sit-in resulted from a noon antiwar rally. The first speaker at the rally told the crowd that the Marines should be stopped from recruiting on campus.

The demonstrators then moved from one section of the union to the recruiting booth. Police said they commandeered an elevator and impeded the flow of traffic in and out of the building.

U.S. withdrawal depends on Hanoi agreement

PARIS (AP) — The United States has told Hanoi there can be no negotiations on a total American withdrawal from Vietnam without a corresponding agreement for withdrawal of North Vietnamese forces.

U.S. negotiator David K. E. Bruce challenged North Vietnam's Xuan Thy at the 112th weekly session of the Vietnam peace talks Thursday to clarify a hint he dropped last week that Hanoi might envisage a tacit understanding on mutual withdrawal of its own as well as American forces.

In reply, Thy reverted to the long-standing Hanoi position rejecting any mutual withdrawal, tacit or otherwise.

President Nixon's "Absurd demand for a mutual withdrawal" placed the American aggressor on the same footing as the Vietnamese people fighting against aggression, Thy said.

The meeting in effect snuffed out the faint hopes raised last week of a possible dialogue between the two sides.

Bruce expressed interest in a remark made by Thy at the 111th session that a negotiated settlement, including the total withdrawal of American forces, would permit "all military men to return to their homes."

"If this means that you are now prepared to withdraw North Vietnamese forces from South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, then I believe we can make serious progress here toward an honorable and lasting negotiated settlement," Bruce said.

Since the talks opened more than two years ago, Hanoi has never wavered in its refusal even to discuss the concept of mutual withdrawal, arguing that Vietnamese forces are "at home" anywhere in Vietnam while American forces are not.

Bruce also rejected as a "sham" another hint dropped by the Communist side last week. The Viet Cong foreign minister, Mrs. Nguyen Thanh Binh, in effect offered a ceasefire affecting only American and Communist command troops, leaving South Vietnamese forces engaged in attack.

Bruce repeated that the United States is ready to accept an immediate ceasefire affecting all forces.

"Your own cease-fire proposal is a sham," he told Mrs. Binh and Thy across the 30-foot circular table. "It means you are ready to go on killing your neighbors—the South Vietnamese, Laotians and Cambodians—as long as it suits your purposes, that is as long as your demands are not met."

At the end of the five-hour meeting, Bruce told newsmen: "At today's session we sought to make it clear that the United States is for negotiating peace and Hanoi is for continuing the war. We made it clear that we are prepared to withdraw all our forces in accordance with an agreed timetable as part of an over-all settlement."

Bruce said he reiterated Nixon's offer to complete a mutual withdrawal within 12 months, but "Hanoi wants to keep its forces where they have no right to be."

Farms may be lost

Floraville folks oppose airport

FLORAVILLE, Ill. (AP) — At least one resident of the seemingly doomed farming community of Floraville is not disturbed that the town is within the boundaries of a proposed new commercial airport.

Ten-year-old Luanne Kirbles said she "wouldn't mind" the airport being built. "I'd just as soon move someplace that's a little more exciting," she said.

Some of Luanne's elders agreed, but the attitude of others ranged from outrage to resignation in the wake of Wednesday's announcement the area had been recommended as a site for the new airport. "This time we're fighting to the end," declared Mrs. Conrad Kolmer, whose husband and son operate a 450-acre farm in the area. "The dumb farmer seems to get everything shoved down his throat whether he likes it or not."

"They've condemned our land for highways, for industry, for the levee. Well, we're tired of it," Mrs. Kolmer said.

"I'm pretty much resigned to its coming," said Bob Voris, editor and publisher of the Waterloo Republican.

"But," he added, "it really depends on how much opposition we can muster. People stopped the Miami Airport and it appears they have stopped the Alaskan pipeline. Maybe they can do it here."

Another newspaperman, Managing Editor Robert Kettler of the Waterloo Times, takes a different view. He said he thinks "the silent majority deep down favors it coming here."

One Waterloo resident, unemployed laborer A.J. May, was vocal about his approval. "We don't have any work, no home construction, nothing," May said.

He said only 16 of the 80 members of the union local have work, and they had to go to St. Louis, May said. Union members gathered 1,800 signatures on a petition favoring the airport.

Another petition circulator, pharmacist Ronald A. Langhans of Columbia, took the view that most of the airport construction jobs would go to outsiders.

Langhans, who gathered 4,000 signatures on an anti-airport petition, said the project would "cause us to lose our identity."

The druggist said he doubts the airport can be stopped, but "at least we may be able to control the growth through our protest."

Unlike little Luanne Kirbles, 90-year-old Mrs. Mary Boeker, Floraville's first telephone operator, thinks the community's charm is its lack of bustle and activity. She said many of the town's younger people moved in from nearby industrial communities.

Mrs. Boeker said when she moved to the community in 1910 it had two stores, two taverns, a blacksmith, a creamery, a church, the telephone office and "even a doctor."

Today, one general store, a church and about 30 homes lie about one mile east of the end of one of three proposed runways.

"If the runways don't wipe us out, the noise will," one resident observed.

To put Page in agency is insult to intelligence

To the Daily Egyptian:

Ray Page—who was a basketball coach before being in state office—is slated for appointment to Assistant Regional Coordinator of the Environmental Protection Agency. The appointment of such a man to high position with the Environmental Protection Agency is an insult to our intelligence and must be overturned. Please write your senators and William Huckelshaus, 1626 K St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20460.

If you are interested in having your ideas enacted into environmental law, please attend the Illinois Planning and Conservation League meeting May 8 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at 750 S. Halstead, Chicago. I.P.C.L. is the Illinois conservation lobby. If you are interested in the meeting, contact me at the student government office.

Amtrak has improved region's train service

To the Daily Egyptian:

On Saturday, May 1, Amtrak began its life with a full head of steam. All across America the new railway passenger system began its program to improve train travel. That branch of the system that concerns us most here in Carbondale is the trains that run to Chicago. I rode the northbound "City of New Orleans" to Centralia on Saturday, and I am pleased to report that the Amtrak system is a definite improvement. I was greatly impressed by the cleanliness of the equipment and also was pleased to find that ample food and beverage service was available.

A parlor car has been assigned to the "Shawnee," the train that leaves in the early morning for Chicago and then departs Chicago for Carbondale in the late afternoon. For the passenger who can afford it and demands more comfort, the parlor car offers seats that are more comfortable, that swivel and recline and that offer the feeling of more luxurious travel. Truly this is a higher class way of traveling.

I can only hope that the Illinois Central, in cooperation with Amtrak, will continue to make this first impression a lasting one.

Students question use of binoculars by police

To the Daily Egyptian:

We have reason to believe that there are members of the amateur astrologers club in the SIU police force.

After the rain on Tuesday, April 27, around 11:30 p.m., we decided to go for a walk. Strolling along the SIU parking lot on Grand and Wall, we sighted a parked SIU patrol car. We thought nothing of it as we stopped to observe the sky. Glancing back at the patrol car, we also noticed the two policemen stargazing. Uh, one with binoculars in hand in the immediate vicinity of Brush towers. Star gazing? So all you stars out there in Brush Tower land, keep a sharp eye on the SIU parking lot, for it is truly written Big Brother is watching you.

Reader dislikes looks of new headline type

To the Daily Egyptian:

I can't tell you how beautiful the new headline type is on your editorial pages. It puts a quiver in my stomach similar to that experienced the morning after a good drunk.

I believe an editorial page should be bold and clear, not pretty and flowery. When I turn to the editorial pages now, I lose any desire I ever had to read them. I hope you'll soon change back to the old bold print headline type.

May hurts only system that can enlighten him

To the Daily Egyptian:

I wish to express my feelings concerning the letter written by Jim May. I believe his ideas about the tuition hike are very wrong. He is very mistaken about demonstrators being from just the lower classes. They come from all classes of society.

Also, his ideas about raising the tuition in order that minority groups cannot attend the University are infuriating. If anyone is anti-American, it is he for not believing in equal rights for everybody.

Personally, I think the tuition hike is a terrible thing. It is unfair that students who want an education may have to drop out of school because they cannot afford it.

It is very unfortunate the educational system, the one institution that could bring him from darkness to enlightenment, is the very system he is trying to destroy.

Opinion & Commentary

EDITORIALS—The Daily Egyptian encourages free discussion of current issues through editorials and letters on these pages. Editorials, labeled Opinions, are written and signed by members of the student news staff and by students involved in journalism courses and represent opinions of the authors only.

LETTERS—Readers are invited to express their opinions in letters which must be signed with name, classification and major, or faculty rank, address and telephone number. Letters should be typewritten, and their length should not exceed 250 words. Letter writers should request the generally accepted standards of good taste and are expected to make their points in terms of issues rather than personalities. Acceptance for publication will depend on limitations of space and the timeliness and relevance of the material. Unsigned letters will not be accepted, and authenticity of all letters must be verified by the Daily Egyptian. It is the responsibility of the Daily Egyptian to determine content of the opinion pages. Other materials on pages four and five include editorials and articles reprinted from other publications, syndicated columns and articles, and interpretive or opinion articles authored locally.

Recent tornado reports show need for change

To the Daily Egyptian:

This past week I tuned into WSIU for the latest weather bulletins. The Daily Egyptian and WSIU radio publicize that WSIU radio is responsive to the college community. I believe that this statement is not true.

Weather bulletins were broadcast in the following manner: "Tornado sighted by the public at Steelville heading east at 20 m.p.h." The broadcaster gave no reference as to the location of Steelville, or any other populated area, in terms of Carbondale. Is it north, south, west or east of Carbondale? If I was told that the hamlet was west of Carbondale, then I would have cause for alarm.

That Thursday I went to the WSIU radio station. I asked the three newscasters in attendance where Thompsonville and Steelville were located. Only the sports announcer knew. He admitted that this knowledge was acquired by traveling to local sporting events in order to cover them.

I believe that WSIU's unwarranted assumption that "everyone knows the local geography" is unfounded. Furthermore, the newscaster should define tornado sightings in relationship to Carbondale. In other words, the coverage as it stands is not adequate or at all complete.

Since WSIU's listening audience is largely composed of University related (geographically transplanted) individuals, I believe that reasonable concessions be made to this audience in terms of reporting weather bulletins. As it stands WSIU's weather bulletin reporting policy does not serve the majority of its listening population.

New rail system offers passengers last chance

To the Daily Egyptian:

The nostalgia has worn down, people have given farewells to old friends and Amtrak has been given the green light after a last minute hope to sidetrack it for six months. Amtrak now has the responsibility to operate the 184 passenger trains in its system at a profit. Maybe a few remarks at this time would be adequate.

Letter verification

For the protection of all letter writers, authorship must be verified. Contributors are asked to bring letters in person to the Daily Egyptian or, if mailed, correct address and telephone number should be included. Letters will be withheld until authorship is verified.

Dan Wright, Miami News

Amtrak is met with mixed feelings and attitudes by some people and met optimistically by others. Its job is going to be hard, long and aggravating. It can be made easier if it will follow simple rules and standards that the railroads have so long ignored. Amtrak is the last chance that the American people have to ride passenger trains. Many fine ones may be gone, but if Amtrak holds to its promise and makes trains like they used to be, it shall have met half its goal. The best equipment is expected to be over all lines shortly, and quicker timetables are proposed.

To make average train service, Amtrak must maintain the schedules, in other words, be on time. For a lot of passengers this would be benefit enough. The trains must be appealing through advertising and equipment and keep up the standards that have been promised. Prices should be lowered, student discounts offered to attract the young, scenic routes to attract the elderly, and good service, in the tradition of Super Chief, Panama Limited, and California Zephyr, to attract the average traveler. If Amtrak can do this, it shall have succeeded in making passenger service enjoyable, appealing and profitable.

The beginning of Amtrak looks pretty good, and in the future hopefully the service can be further improved and attract passengers to again give the American people what they have so long been without—decent passenger chance. So good luck, Amtrak, and may these pessimistic people be surprised, and your promises kept. This is the last chance—it must work.

What kind of world?

Public supports busing verdict

By Harry S. Ashmore
Los Angeles Times Syndicate

In its recent ruling on school busing, the U.S. Supreme Court parted sharply with the Nixon administration, which through the Justice Department had pleaded for a so-called "neighborhood school" pattern that would effectively have eliminated districtwide racial balance as the test of effective integration. Political interest was enhanced by the fact that this was one of the first decisions of magnitude to be handed down unanimously by a Supreme Court now visibly divided on social issues by the advent of two new Nixon appointees.

In this case, by way of calling attention to its landmark nature, the Nixon-appointed chief justice, Warren Burger, not only managed to pull his brethren together but wrote the opinion himself. The intended effect was to emphasize the uncompromising manner in which the new Supreme Court was upholding the basic principle, enunciated in 1954 when Chief Justice Earl Warren led a unanimous Supreme Court, in declaring racial segregation unconstitutional in public education and, by implication, in all other public activity.

Research projects help teachers, not students

To the Daily Egyptian:

This letter is addressed to the "higher up" in corridors of the psychology department, with the hope that they may alter what has long been one small problem of the University (many small problems yield one big mess).

It has been your policy to have students in GSB 201C participate in research projects. These activities are supposed to "be a valuable addition to your information about the study of behavior" (from Syllabus and Laboratory Manual for Introductory Psychology). I have now participated in three of these projects, and I have not gained any knowledge or information about anything. As I see it, these tests are used for professors and graduate students doing research, and they just tear apart the unknowing minds of the students. All I have found is a cheap way for your department to obtain patsies for your experiments. Students are stepped on and being taken advantage of in many of the General Studies courses and it has to stop.

If you are that hard up for subjects or facts, might I suggest either you go out and take surveys or, instead of having these mandatory, you make them extra credit. Whichever, please put an end to this poor excuse for our knowledge.

In the years since that far reaching pronouncement, the new public policy has been shored up by rulings dealing with every area of activity carried on, supported or regulated by any official body. And the reach now extends well beyond, into such once private areas as housing and employment.

The vast structure of legal segregation has been systematically dismantled in the Southern states. Now Chief Justice Burger's opinion carries a strong implication that the Supreme Court is prepared to subject the de facto segregation common outside the South to the same test when appropriate cases come before it. In the context of his sweeping language, there can be little doubt how that action will come out.

The ruling by the high court and the mild public reaction to it emphasizes the remarkable extent to which the most inherently controversial public issue to confront the American people in a century has been effectively neutralized.

When Chief Justice Warren handed down the 1954 ruling, he was labeled a communist, billboards across the land called for his impeachment and there were abortive efforts at nullification, serious enough to warrant dispatch of the U.S. Army into the South to uphold the high court's rulings.

Today the general principle of racial integration, in private social relationships no less than formally public affairs, can be identified as conservative doctrine, upheld by the Establishment and condemned out of hand only by the far left and far right. There remains, of course, an indefensible and widespread disparity between the declared public policy and the general practice.

Although in some important areas discrimination is markedly diminished, the black minority continues to be especially disadvantaged by the recession and its cutback in employment and public services. But, as the high court's ruling makes plain, these are aberrations now where once they were the product of a settled constitutional dictum that permitted second-class citizenship to be defined and enforced by law.

To the more militant black leaders, and their white supporters, this massive shift in public policy has not yet produced acceptable practical results. So the radical line these days rejects the traditional goal of integration and calls for a return to separatism—demanding wholly black communities empowered to order their own affairs without reference to the white majority.

But even in the face of this provocation, the nation, at large, has put the old passions behind it, made a long stride toward racial equality and accepted a commitment to move ahead. Any measurement of prevailing attitudes, black and white, leaves little doubt that the public policy reaffirmed by the Supreme Court has effective majority support. The law, as the late Scott Buchanan used to remind us, can be a great teacher.

Provides shelter from elements

Domes seen as low cost housing

By Kathleen Goetz
Student Writer

Consider a triangle with equal sides and angles. Take 20 such equilateral triangles. Arrange them in an orderly pattern with five triangles around each vertex to make a basic geodesic structure—the dome. Anchor the structure, inhabit it and feel protected in the cradle of one of man's most efficient shelters.

The dome, dubbed "environmental valve" by its inventor, SEU's R. Buckminster Fuller, provides maximum protection from a minimal number of materials. Like the eggshell, it is nature's way of protecting man from the elements.

The dome is structurally integrated, each triangle dependent on the next for support and stability. According to Dale Klaus, administrative assistant to Fuller, if pressure is exerted at one point of the structure, the burden is equally distributed over the entire form. The dome is one of the most stable structures man has ever built.

Besides its proven resilience, the dome offers aesthetics unavailable to homeowners of the past. Its round floor space and triangular doors and windows encourage imaginative furniture and layout design. The optional wall-story partitioning makes the dome an individual's haven.

Patented in 1954, the dome has only recently been recognized by American architects as a low-cost housing prospect.

The economy of the home-dome was overlooked by early owners who used glass and expensive building materials to ornament their structures. Even Fuller's own home at 407 S. Forest in Carbondale is needlessly overstructured, using shingles, siding and extraneous materials that add nothing to the building's structural integrity. The idea is simplicity.

Elimination of exploitation of natural resources is a basic asset of dome building, and its future acceptance will be invaluable to later generations, said Klaus.

"The ideal is to take home building out of the craft trades," he said recently. "The aim is institutionalized housing mass produced and stamped out on a production line."

Klaus said that carpenters, plumbers and bricklayers have "priced themselves right out of the market" making home-buying needlessly expensive. Do-it-yourself dome-building will help cure the problem.

Geodesics Manufacturing of Davison, Mich., is a popular manufacturer of home-domes. The company offers a do-it-yourself dome, 30 feet in diameter, containing 1100 square feet of living space, for $3200. The cost covers the expense of the shell only. Wall and floor partitioning are optional to the buyer.

The average dome takes from 60 to 100 hours to erect by a maximum efficiency crew of three unskilled laborers.

Its low cost has already made it a favorable first home for young married couples.

Before its development as a housing unit, domes were used as greenhouses, pool covers and picnic shelters. Institutional domes have served as churches, offices and gymnasiums since the building of the Kaiser dome in Moscow in 1959.

Aged prepare themselves for November conference

By James Cary
Copy News Service

WASHINGTON—For 20 million older Americans the future holds too much loneliness, poverty, sickness and boredom.

Beginning in May, thousands of them will sit down at conferences in every state to try to develop some broad principles that will help shape a better world for their twilight years.

For these delegates that will be the beginning of a process that will culminate in the second White House Conference on Aging in Washington, beginning the week of Nov. 22.

The first conference held 10 years ago is claiming major achievements. Among them are the Medicare and Medicaid programs, establishment of schools to train workers in geriatric problems in 50 universities and professional institutions, and establishment of an administration on aging in the federal government and units on aging in every state.

The problems faced by the upcoming conference may be even greater.

On April 1, 1970, there were 20,049,592 Americans 65 years of age or older—one in every 10 persons. The number is increasing at a rate of 900 a day, $3,000 a year.

More than 70 per cent of those over 65 have joined this age group since 1961.

One-fourth of them are poor, with incomes below the poverty level. Nine of every 10 receive Social Security benefits—an average of $117 a month. About two million are receiving public assistance. Private pensions provide only about 5 per cent of the older population.

Prospects are that these problems will increase. Present trends point toward thousands or even tens of thousands of the elderly to begin living on into their 90s and 100s.

To explore the problems, challenges and solutions this rising curve poses is the task of the White House conference.

Under the direction of John B. Martin, U.S. commissioner on aging, a series of forums, hearings and meetings are already under way. The state level conferences will follow, then 14 technical committees will take over to plan the

McClelland sets senior recital

By University News Services

Linda McClelland, trombone, of Oshin, will present her senior recital at 8 p.m. May 13, the School of Music has announced.

Miss McClelland will perform "Andante pour Trombone et piano" by A. Tchebelyne, "Morceau Symphonique" by A. Guilmant, "Andante et Allegro" by J. E. Baert, and "Sonatine" by W. Huchison.

To be performed in the Old Baptist Foundation Chapel, the program is open to the public without charge.

best ways to deal with the issues involved.

They will deal with such subjects as income, employment and retirement, nutrition, housing, transportation, education, rates and activities, and the spiritual well-being of the aged.

In one sense these problems of the aged are relatively new. Until this century few Americans lived so long. Most worked until they died, were extremely old, feeble or both.

It is Martin's belief that as more Americans live longer, the United States may not be able to afford to let such a great segment of its population remain unproductive.

The massive nature of the problems involved is self-evident.

The conference reports that research done to date indicates that very few older people know much about proper nutrition, yet nutrition may have a direct bearing on the rate at which people age. The brain syndrome usually described as senility is often believed a result of malnutrition.

Although home ownership is the most common asset of the elderly, poor housing remains one of their major problems. Eight million, or 40 per cent, are poor or near poor and most of them are inadequately housed.

Transportation is a major problem because sooner or later most older people give up driving and America has geared its transportation efforts of the last 30 years largely to highways and the automobile.

Public transportation likewise presents problems because it is designed primarily to getting people to and from work, leaving few conveniences for the elderly in nonrush hours.

To fill the long and lonely hours of retirement it has been suggested that there be more employment of the aged as teacher aides, in giving love and companionship to institutionalized children and in beautifying parks and roadways.

One astounding finding is that one-fifth of the people 65 and over cannot read and write well enough to deal competently with the modern, complex world.

New peace movement hopes to gain support of young voters block

By Rich Hughes
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A different sort of movement will start at SIU next week. It will be concerned with peace in Vietnam—but not with marching, sitting-in or stopping the government.

"We're not out to raise hell," said Paul Armetta, coordinator of Young Voters for Peace (YVP) at SIU. "We want to show the public and the politicians that there is a mass of people under 21 who may have a definite effect on who becomes President in 1972."

Young Voters for Peace is a national organization, headquartered in Portland, Ore. During May, YVP hopes to gain the support of at least one million of the eight million students on the nation's campuses.

Armetta stressed that YVP is a nonpartisan movement, concerned primarily with the voting strength of young people.

"Some of the polls have said that the under-21 voter will have little or no influence on future elections," Armetta said, "but we plan to prove them wrong." He emphasized that one million votes, one way or the other, could have made a crucial difference in the 1968 elections.

Young Voters for Peace is radical only in its approach to gaining support. Armetta said. At SIU, YVP will utilize what Armetta termed "a media-oriented campaign."

An ad will be placed in the Daily Egyptian from Tuesday through Friday next week with a coupon which will state:

"I, as a recently enfranchised voter, hereby pledge to exercise my right to vote only in favor of candidates for national political office who make solemn and public commitment to:

1—Insist upon withdrawal of all U.S. military personnel from Indo-China by a specified date in the immediate future.

Science papers read at meeting

Dr. D. W. Slocum, associate professor of chemistry, last week read two papers at the 161st National Meeting of the American Chemical Society held in Los Angeles.

The first paper, co-authored by W. E. Jones and C. R. Ernst of the Department of Chemistry, was entitled "Fundamental Studies of Substituted Ferrocene Systems III. Electronic Effects in the Alkyl Ferrocenes." This paper dealt with advances in the knowledge of electronic effects in certain ferrocene systems.

The second paper, "Oxygen Directed Metalations: The Benzene and Ferrocene Systems," co-authored by C. A. Jennings and B. P. Koonovitsky, revealed new insight into the utility and mechanism of the directed metalation reaction.

Felines placed in cages in the interest of science

SAN FRANCISCO (CNS)—Scientists near San Francisco have placed six male cats in one cage and six female cats in another with the hope that they will scratch away at each other in the interest of research into human behavior.

Dr. Benjamin Hart, of the University of California's School of Veterinary Medicine, said the research centered on "the role of the brain and hormonal mechanisms" in feline aggression.

Experimental detection technique solves crimes

DALLAS (AP)—Police here are using a new metal trace detection technique to help solve burglaries and crimes of violence.

Investigator Gonzalo Gonzalez says the process, which involves a $50 ultraviolet lamp and a special alcohol compound, has already proved accurate although it is only in the experimental stage.

2—Insist upon the exercise of Congressional authority over decisions affecting matters of war and peace.

Armetta explained that interested persons should clip out the coupon, fill in the necessary information and drop it in one of the boxes which will be made available on campus, or mail it to the philosophy department in care of Dr. Paul A. Schupp.

"Our new young voters have got to demonstrate that they will be a voting power in future elections," Armetta said. "If you believe in the democratic form of government, this is a rational approach to using that system."

Armetta said donations to YVP have gone "pretty well" so far. "We've received donations from everybody we've asked," he said. "Donations will be used to cover the expenses of the advertisement, he explained.

Armetta expressed some concern over the willingness of young voters to get involved with matters of national importance.

"We know that the American people want to get out of Vietnam," he said. "The only question in our minds is how many of the new voters will take the time to clip out the coupon and return it to us."

The national goal is one million signed coupons," Armetta said. "That's a lot of kids on a lot of campuses. Every campus must do its share, and every student should do what he can to promote the cause."

There is power in numbers—and not just in the number of people marching somewhere. One million dedicated voters can change some minds in Washington, if the people there are aware of them. Young Voters for Peace plans to make them more aware than ever.

Davis urges stronger aviation security rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Benjamin O. Davis, director of civil aviation security, has called on airlines and airports to tighten ground-security measures, saying airport safeguards are so lax that jetliners are highly vulnerable to criminals.

The retired Air Force general said inadequate protections presents opportunities not only to common criminals but also to the mentally disturbed individual, the revolutionist, the person intoxicated or on drugs, or the youthful vandal. Such an individual Davis said, "without much effort or intelligence, has ready access to aircraft at most airports in the United States."

His remarks, released Wednesday by the Transportation Department, were made in a speech here last week.

Davis mentioned these incidents: At Chicago—during the last week of March an investigator assigned to test the effectiveness of cargo security measures wandered all over a $24 million 747 jumbo jet, taking pictures, without once being challenged.

At Los Angeles—an off duty customs officer and his wife likewise recently roamed through a parked 747, without a challenge.

At Rochester, N.Y., also recently—some intoxicated individuals rummaged through three parked 727 jets, apparently looking for liquor stores. They did no serious harm.

EPA urges lower auto emissions

WASHINGTON (AP) — William D. Ruckelshaus, administrator of Environmental Protection Agency, warned auto makers today they must make every effort to reduce the level of auto emissions by 1975.

"The low emission car of the future may be a more expensive car," he said. "It may not equal today's car in road performance. But this is a price that may be necessary if we are to have and preserve a healthy environment for ourselves and our families."

Ruckelshaus issued the warning as his agency opened hearings of efforts of the auto industry to curb air pollutants.

The Clean Air Act approved by Congress this year requires automakers to reduce emission of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbon and nitrogen oxides by 90 per cent by the 1975 model year. Ruckelshaus also has the option of extending the deadline for one year if it proves impossible to meet the standards by 1975.

Ruckelshaus, however, said, "If any member of the industry could meet the act's deadline for compliance, all applications for a suspension will be denied."

Draft extension debated

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate opened debate on extension of the draft Thursday as antiwar forces mapped plans for a major drive to force total U.S. withdrawal from Indochina by the end of 1971.

Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, warned that "failing to renew this induction authority, whether by vote or by inaction caused by extended debate, would be calamitous."

Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said, however, he thinks the draft measure is a proper vehicle for the McGovern-Hatfield amendment to bar funds for U.S. forces in Southeast Asia after Dec. 31. Mansfield also said he might renew his proposal for a sharp reduction in U.S. troops in Europe.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and a leader of the antiwar forces, called a meeting for Friday afternoon to consider alternative courses.

He told reporters he favored bringing up the McGovern-Hatfield amendment on the draft bill "if it has a good chance of success."

He declined to say if he thought there were enough votes in his committee to approve the amendment. He said any decision would likely be deferred until hearings end May 27 on various proposals dealing with Vietnam.

Mansfield, meanwhile, in a Senate speech called again for a terminal date on U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia, saying it could lead to the release of U.S. prisoners held by North Vietnam.

"If a termination date is not set," he said, "then we are confronted with the paradoxical situation which results in more and more American casualties, perhaps more and more POW's and more and more of a determination on the part of North Vietnam to hang on to the POW's."

Sen. George D. Aiken of Vermont, senior Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee, expressed hope President Nixon's next troop withdrawal announcement Oct. 15 "is the latest we would be able to announce a definite date for the withdrawal of our forces from Indochina."

If the McGovern-Hatfield amendment is brought up on the draft bill, it probably would come after the Senate has considered a series of riders dealing with the draft itself.

First, the Senate will vote on a proposal by Sens. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., and Harold E. Hughes, D-Iowa, to limit the draft extension to one year, an effort rejected by only two votes in the House and believed to have a good chance of success in the Senate.

Schweiker, a longtime advocate of an all-volunteer force, has said that liquidation of the draft extension to one year now would pave the way for its elimination in the 1972 election year.

Besides extending the draft for two years, the bill before the Senate would authorize President Nixon to end deferments for college undergraduates, set limits on draftees and overall military troop strength and raise military pay by approximately one billion dollars.

Senate gives OK for girl pages

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Rules Committee sanctioned today the appointment of girl pages in the Senate. The committee's approval included a proviso that sponsoring senators must be responsible for the girls' safety pending construction of a dormitory for them. The action by the committee, after it had put off a decision for months, is subject to Senate approval.

The committee, on voice vote, approved, with amendments, a resolution introduced earlier this week providing that the appointment of a Senate page shall not be denied because of sex. Chief sponsors of the resolution are Sens. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., and Fred R. Harris, D-Okla., who want to appoint 16-year-old girls as pages.

The committee broadened the resolution to make the ban on sex discrimination apply to Capitol police, elevator operators and post office employees as well as Senate pages.

Reverend to try Belfast peace plan

By George W. Cornell
AP Religion Writer

A roving American leader of "Jesus marches" and "Jesus festivals of love," the Rev. Arthur Blessitt, this weekend raises his call for "peace through Jesus" from the barricades of religiously embattled Belfast in Northern Ireland.

"A lot of people may think it's kooky," he says. "But the times and the situation demand extreme measures. Paul said we must be fools for Christ's sake."

With a tall cross made of two wooden branches, one from each side of the zone of conflict between Irish Protestants and Roman Catholics, he plans to stand vigil at the barbed-wire barrier between them, summoning them to mutual prayer.

"The key to getting right with one another is Jesus," he says. "We must throw down the hate. Love your enemies, Jesus said."

Blessitt, 30, a Southern Baptist involved in the spreading "Jesus movement" among youth and in various unusual religious demonstrations, says he's not sure what will happen in the Irish trouble spot.

"It may be either a revival of love or Blessitt's funeral," he said in an interview in New York before flying to London and thence to Ireland.

"But it couldn't make things worse and the need is worth the price," he added.

Starting Friday noon, he said he will fast and pray for three days, asking "people, preachers and priests from both sides to come and join us in prayer, to get the hatred and bitterness out, to start a real revolution of life through Jesus Christ."

He also hopes to organize a "Jesus peace patrol" to have up and down the streets, calling persons on both sides of the prolonged and often violent conflict to seek reconciliation through a common Lord.

The unconventional effort is in the style of many of Blessitt's activities in the last three years, since he started a mission on Los Angeles' Sunset Strip to purge it of flesh pots and dope business.

He has drawn some of its former night-life participants into his work, and also has staged festivals, rallies and marches at scores of campuses.

Last fall, he walked across the country, dragging a big wooden cross, evangelizing along the way, and pasting up "Turn on to Jesus" stickers.

"Young people are starving for the message of Christ," he said. "The only problem is that we don't have enough people presenting it to them."

Concerning his Belfast venture, he said it first was suggested to him by a joking remark by a British film crewmember who said:

"Since it works on Sunset Strip, it might even work in Belfast."

Blessitt said he meditated about it and then when some college students cited the Northern Ireland conflict between Christians as an obstacle to believing in Christ, he said he felt moved to go there.

Although the conflict mainly involves political and economic factors, it is drawn along religious lines, and Blessitt says it is fed by "religious prejudice that has to be overcome."

"Jesus' answer is not hate and killing but brotherhood, respect and dignity," he said.

America may be poisoning itself

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States may be poisoning itself with "a myriad of potentially toxic substances," the President's Council on Environmental Quality warned Thursday.

It urged passage of legislation proposed last February to fight "this growing national problem," in a report on the increasing use and disposal of substances that may be and in many cases are already known to be harmful to human health or the environment.

Adding impact to the warning was an announcement from the Food and Drug Administration advising the public to stop eating swordfish because of mercury contamination. Council Chairman E. Train learned of the FDA move from a newsmen at his news conference on the council's toxic substances report.

Mercury was only one of the substances cited in the council's report.

At least 13 other metals used commercially are potentially dangerous to health and the environment, it said: arsenic, barium, beryllium, cadmium, chromium, copper, lead, manganese, nickel, selenium, silver, vanadium and zinc.

The council also was worried about synthetic organic compounds—chemicals often used in dyes and pigments, flavors, perfumes, plastics, synthetic rubber, detergents and wetting agents.

Terry Davies, a council senior staff member, said that many other substances might have toxic effects now unknown.

A bill proposed by President Nixon last February would authorize the government to ban the use or distribution of substances harmful to health or the environment.

The council urged its passage.

While mercury has received a lot of publicity, the report said that a wide variety of substances, including some which are actually vital to life in small amounts, may be toxic in large amounts, or in particular chemical compounds, or in the presence of other substances.

As examples of synthetic organic compounds causing concern, the report mentioned DDT, the closely related chemicals called PCB's, and a waste product called ONCB.

Act I of student's play read

Students from the SIU Department of Theater read Act I of a student-written play, "I'm The Kings Men," Thursday at the Student Christian Foundation.

Linda Flinn, senior, Freyer West Frankfort, wrote the play. She classified the play as "semi-absurdist." The play dealt with the relationships between individuals and how they manipulate people to achieve their own ends. It accented how artificial the games people play are and the futility involved in trying to win them.

Readers for Act I were Jeff Coan, Malcolm Rothman, John Wood, Lou Bedford, Sara Parks, Darlene Petz and Carol Gaede.

Step against pollution

Ogilvie OK's bonds sale

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie signed legislative authority Thursday for state sale of up to $200 million in anti-pollution bonds and closed a divisive chapter in the 1971 Illinois Legislature on a note of harmony.

Democratic and Republican legislative leaders watched the signing ceremony on bills Rep. Ben. Hyde R-Chicago, called "a giant step toward purifying the waters of Illinois."

Partisan differences over details were compromised Tuesday, and final legislative clearance was achieved earlier Thursday on the program to help local governments fund sewage treatment construction.

The legislation is expected to aid building up to $750 in plants with the state paying up to 25 per cent of each.

First advertising for bids on the first $100 million of bonds will start Monday, but first money for distribution probably will not be in hand before late June.

Some local governments have gone ahead with construction, said William L. Blaser, head of the environmental protection agency, gambling that state aid and federal help would come.

Others have been marking time, he said, until assured of state help.

Federal funds may pay up to 55 per cent of the total cost.

When the first $100 million in state funds is reduced to $10 million, another $50 million in bonds may be sold. Again, when that total is reduced to $10 million, another $50 million may be sold.

Blaser said about 600 projects are awaiting approval.

Office life reveals dramatic comedy

NEW YORK (AP) — You can win an Oscar in Hollywood or a Tony on Broadway, but there is no nationally recognized award for acting in an American business office.

This is a shame because if there is any real center of drama in U.S. life it is the average office, full of shabby green desks and bilious-feeling people, each desperately playing the role of his choice to the hilt.

For example, they all display the talent of a Barrymore even in getting on stage. If you just pause and see how some of the people in your own office come to work each morning, you are likely to find familiar some of the following characters in the cast.

"How do you do you do you do you do?" sing out Mike and like the office drunks, as they enter arm in arm. They have had a pick-me-up already at a bar down the street. Because of the theory that there's safety in numbers, they do their drinking together. By 10 a.m., each will have stolen $5 from the petty cash drawer, and they'll be back at the bar, stool to stool, having a drink during coffee break.

The femme fatale, the boss's secretary, an antique adventure in fading mascara, writes her name ruefully in the dust on her desk. As she tugs off her gray-white gloves she notes there's a hole in another finger, sits down primly and says fatalistically, "Oh, well, one hell at a time."

Busted Ben, the office gambler, jauntily whistling alternate strains of "Dixie" and "Tea for Two," posts himself just inside the door at 8:57 a.m. and tries to borrow money from all who enter. If he's lucky, he'll be phoning in the first bet of the day to his bookie by 9:12.

The office wolf-his hair turned to silver and his claws to rest, still tries to make points with every new girl who joins the firm. He likes to reminisce about how much fun it was to rustle a bustle in the old days.

The sage—he was here before the building was finished, standing by the water cooler and whispering to every corner. "Whatever you're doing, I wouldn't do it if I were you. It'll only get you in trouble." There is some truth to his philosophy. He has never missed a day's work or done a day's duty, but for 41 years the treasurer has always spelled his name right on the paycheck.

The gossip—"Have you heard that?"—she mutters at 9:01 a.m. Heard what? It doesn't matter really. But at 5:29 p.m. half the office staff has spent all the work day trying to find out whether what she said was fact, hearsay, or conjectural rumor.

Formal hearing panel to rule on Allen case

By Steve Brown
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A formal hearing into charges of misconduct made late in March by Leland G. Stauber, assistant professor in government, will begin as soon as a hearing panel is established.

The charges, leveled against philosophy instructor Douglas M

Kappa Karnival expects 6,000

Marvin Evans, publicity chairman for the Kappa Karnival said Thursday he expects 6,000 to 7,000 people to attend Karnival events this weekend.

Sponsored by Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, the "Kappa House Uprising" began Thursday night at the fraternity house, 112 Small Group Housing.

"To see all the work that those involved with the Karnival have done would surprise many people," Evans said.

"The Karnival has never been one person, but many. We receive our pleasure from seeing the people who attend the Karnival have a nice and enjoyable time from our efforts." And there is, he continued, "None" for the Karnival to be strictly for one group of people because it attempts to appeal to all groups of peoples as long as they want to have a nice time.

A dance will be held at 8 p.m. Friday in the University Center, featuring Al Waples, disc jockey for KWK radio. St. Louis, Waples is expected to give away some records at the dance. Admission is $1.50.

"Wild Gypsy Thang," will follow the dance at the University Center Friday and will be held at the Zodiac Club and Bonaparte's Retreat, 213 E. Main St. Admission is $1 for each dance or $1.50 for both. Evans said both dances will be held at the same time.

Allen, stem from incidents at a lecture given by I. Milton Sacks, visiting professor of government, March 2.

Stauber charged that Allen made statements encouraging disruptive behavior.

The question of a formal hearing came up in late March and at that time Chancellor Robert G. Loyer said a report given to him by Edward H. Hammond, assistant to the chancellor for student relations, indicated that Allen did not violate the "Interim Policy on Demonstrations."

Stauber said that Loyer clarified his position on the matter and that he (Loyer) wrote to the Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Roger Beyler stating that he was free to deal with Stauber's complaint.

Beyler said Thursday that a letter from the chancellor to him, dated April 13, stated that the previous letter from the chancellor had explained that the conclusion that there was not apparent grounds for a hearing applied to alleged violations under the "Interim Policy on Demonstrations."

Beyler said the chancellor's second letter stated that this "should not be construed to curtail your authority or prerogatives as dean under the Board Statutes."

Stauber said he had sought the hearing, and that Don Beyler had "reacted to my demand."

He said that a three man Faculty Hearing Committee will be appointed by the Liberal Arts and Sciences Council. He also said three persons had been selected but that it was not known if they had accepted the positions.

Stauber said that the charges to be heard are essentially the same as those in his original complaint.

Stauber said that the charges are not based on a code of ethics, but that he plans to use statutes of the University in presenting his case to the hearing panel.

Allen said that he plans to speak with an attorney before making any comment on the matter.

Steelmakers raise prices

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (AP) — Two steel corporations, Republic and Armco, have matched the 6 1/2 per cent price increase of the biggest steelmaker, U.S. Steel, on items used in autos and appliances.

As Armco announced its increase Thursday, several hours after Republic, Secretary of the Treasury

John B. Connally said in Washington he was very much disturbed about U.S. Steel's action. The industry and its work force "have to keep in mind whether they are pricing themselves out of the world market," Connally added.

At the same time, Connally said wage and price controls are not necessary.

New black faculty group meets with Layer

By John D. Towns
Daily Egyptian Special Writer

Spokesmen for the newly organized Black Faculty and Staff Council assured Chancellor Robert G. Layer in a meeting Wednesday that the objectives of the group are not to establish a separate black community within the University.

Layer has expressed concern that some black students, faculty and staff seemed to want to separate themselves from the white community.

However, Gossie Hudson, assistant professor in history and chairman of the council, told Layer the group's objectives are to serve as a vehicle to provide representation, influence and inputs into the total University system on behalf of the black University community.

"We don't want tokenism and we don't want numbers. We should have proportionate representation," Hudson said.

He said the number of black professors and instructors alone is indication of the need for such a council.

"We want it to be understood that we as faculty and staff people are a force of the total university system," Richard Hayes, recorder of the council, said. "We are not encouraging or engaging in activities that would separate us out of existence from the University. We intend to be a functional part of this system while at the same time working in the best interest of black people."

Hayes said the council feels that with the number of black students on campus and the number of racial tones that exist in the area, there is a need for a recognized Black Faculty and Staff Council which other black people, students and community people as well, can look to.

"It will not only enhance our efficiency in representing the University in other ways, but it will also enhance the University to attract black students as well as black professors to the campus," Hayes said.

Layer said, "I have to agree with you. I think you need it, but the problem seems to be how? How do you get adequate representation?"

Benjamin Shepard, assistant professor in zoology, who is vice chairman of the council, asked Layer what system he would recommend.

"The hare system," Layer replied. "A voting system that would do it without race. Other avenues would be separate identification without numbers."

The hare system is similar to a system of block voting. Layer also proposed the system of representation by identification or proportion.

Black festival meeting planned

A meeting for potential participants of the Black Unity Festival will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Lawson Hall 141, according to Adele Jones, festival coordinator.

Miss Jones said attendance is mandatory because a time has to be set for scheduling rehearsals.

"We need to discuss the type of performance and the number of times the participant will appear in the festival," Miss Jones said.

Those unable to attend are asked to call Miss Jones, Milton Hill or Samory Rashad at 453-5731.

The festival will be held May 21-22 at Attacks Park.

Clarinet recital set for May 14

James Gay, of Staunton, will present his senior clarinet recital May 14, the School of Music has announced.

To be presented at 8 p.m. in the Home Economics Auditorium, program works will include "Second Concerto" by C.M. von Weber, "Sonata" by Paul Hindemith and "The Cracked Vase" by William Whisendunt, SEU music composition student from Marion.

The recital is open to the public without charge.

Personal representation.

Hudson said the group wants to be functional and "personally I would prefer it without getting into numbers and even without identification, not that I'm ashamed of the identification, but there are many conceptual reasons why I do not want to go identification. I do not want to separate off and truly separate on the basis of color."

Shepard pointed out that the council could serve several functions, while at the same time providing a service to the University.

"For example, the black Ombudsman Office is vacant and will hopefully be filled by a black," Shepard said. He said the council feels that it would be good and wise if the people involved in filling that position should get in contact with the council and give serious consideration to it.

Shepard said recruiting black students and black faculty could also be a role of the council. "We could give some real input into getting black faculty, and we should be concerned with that because it is embarrassing the number of black faculty that is here. This group should be involved through the chairmen of the departments."

Hayes told Layer that the council had earlier sent him a letter telling him of the group's formation and stating its purpose and goals. Layer said he had not seen the letter and was unaware of the group's purpose.

Hayes told Layer that the council had earlier sent him a letter telling him of the group's formation and stating its purpose and goals. Layer said he had not seen the letter and was unaware of the group's purpose.

Hayes told Layer that the group

Cuban preachers

resuming duties

RUSCHLIKON, Switz (AP) — Two Baptist pastors from Cuba, the first allowed to go abroad in the last five years, told a meeting here that the majority of Baptist pastors who had been imprisoned have now been released and have resumed preaching.

The Revs. Manuel Salom and Humberto Dominguez, of the Baptist Convention of Western Cuba, said the Cuban churches now can hold worship services as often as they wish within their own buildings, but not outside them.

There are about 16,000 Cuban Baptists, the ministers said.

had assumed he had received the letter and the meeting Wednesday was established on that basis.

"The first goal of the council is to get recognition through your office and to encourage the Office of the Chancellor to be supportive of the organization," Hayes said.

Layer said he thought the group wanted some appreciable kind of representation.

Hayes said he didn't think the appreciable representation was important in order for Layer to make a decision. As long as he knows there are a particular number of black people who feel a certain way about a situation, he can make a decision.

"If that's all you are asking for, then it seems to me that it's a simple matter. For somebody to recognize the group, or everybody to recognize it, if you like, but I thought you were interested in something more than that. I thought you were interested in some kind of proportional representation," Layer said.

Layer questioned the amount of black faculty and staff that the council represented and said he hopes that the council will provide evidence on the amount of people it represents.

The council and Layer agreed to meet again.

Mail delivery slowed by cut train service

In case you haven't noticed, mail delivery on the SIU campus has been an hour late, both mornings and afternoons, since May 1.

This delay comes as a result of implementation of Amtrak, formerly Railpax, according to Richard L. King, manager of the campus mail service.

Because the number of trains coming through Carbondale has been reduced as a result of Amtrak, the U.S. Post Office Department will no longer transport any mail by rail, King said.

According to Carbondale Assistant Postmaster Dayton Howerton, one new truck route has been added and another extended to carry mail into Carbondale.

Howerton explained that much of Carbondale's mail comes into the post office at one time, rather than at staggered intervals, as was the case when the mail was carried by rail. As a result, processing of the mail takes longer and delivery is delayed, Howerton said.

Egypt rids itself of archaeologists

By Derek Matfield
Copley News Service

CAIRO—An innocent victim of the Middle East crisis has been the archaeologist in Egypt. However academic and apolitical, however preoccupied with the past, he has nonetheless been forced to bow to present-day politics. And to the newer monuments of the missile age.

Because of Washington's diplomatic break with Cairo and its relationship with the Israelis, American archaeologists have had to pull out of Egypt—leaving their work at Hierakonpolis, north of Aswan on the western bank of the Nile, and at Abydos, north of the colossal ancient monuments of Luxor and Thebes. Italian experts have found tools in the Fayum, south of the Nile delta—the prehistoric birthplace of Egyptian farming.

For security reasons the Egyptian government has closed down all archaeological sites other than those around Cairo, Luxor and Alexandria. The main reason becomes quite clear at Saqqara, an ancient burial site 20 miles southwest of Cairo, where a team of British archaeologists is still working—but is watched closely by Russian technicians based at SAM-2 and SAM-3 missile sites about three miles away.

One American project has survived everything—the six-day war of June 1967, the diplomatic break and the Soviet military buildup. Physicists from the University of California's Lawrence Radiation Laboratory at Berkeley have been working with a team from Cairo's Ein Shams University on a scientific search for possible hidden chambers in the Second Pyramid at Giza, 10 miles from Cairo—using cosmic rays to explore the pyramid's three million cubic feet of rock. Ironically, the work is now threatened by a more proverbial restriction—lack of funds.

This Joint United Arab Republic-United States of America Pyramid Project was set up in 1966 after an international survey of scientists and archaeologists pooled a general agreement that the use of cosmic rays on this sort of job was feasible. The detection equipment was built at Berkeley from funds made available by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. The Smithsonian Institution contributed traveling expenses to enable the American and Egyptian teams to study in both countries.

The cosmic ray detector and accompanying "time resolution system" and digital translation equipment were installed in the spring of 1967 in the "Belzoni Chamber" of the Second Pyramid—the monument's only discovered chamber, first opened up in modern times by the Italian engineer and self-styled archaeologist, Giovanni Belzoni, in 1818. Then the project's first big obstacle was encountered: the actual work was scheduled to start, of all times, the following June. It was not until early 1968 that the repercussions of the six-day war had subsided enough for the project to continue.

Since then the physicists have "explored" 19 per cent of the pyramid, and though there have been two exciting "false alarms" they have come up with nothing but solid rock. And, with the equipment now being modified to sweep the rest of the pyramid, the $1 million has run out and the project has had to be saved from collapse by being incorporated into the normal work of the physics faculty at Ein Shams. The American team, led by Prof.

Luis W. Alvarez at the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory, is confined to home base with no funds to take any active on-site part in the project.

The Second Pyramid has defied tradition, and it has resisted all attempts by modern archaeologists to find out why this should be. Built by King Chephren during the 4th Dynasty some 4,000 years ago, it stands between the Great Pyramid of his father, King Cheops, and the much smaller one built by his successor, Mycerinus. These three great monuments, which popularity has made the most famous in Egypt, tower over the Sphinx—which itself is said to be a portrait of Chephren.

While only one burial room, the Belzoni Chamber, has been located in the Second Pyramid, the Great Pyramid has an underground chamber, Grand Gallery, King's Chamber and Queen's Chamber, and two chambers have been found in the pyramid built by Chephren's grandfather, King Snefru, at Dashur, southwest of Giza. Taking into account the competitive splendor of Egypt's royal tombs, it is difficult for the archaeologist to reconcile this with King Chephren's apparent modesty. His pyramid is certainly smaller than that of King Cheops, but he built it on higher ground so that it actually appears to be taller.

Perhaps he also cheated inside—for centuries, explorers have been using the pick and shovel method to try and find out. Even gunpowder was used in the early part of the last century to blow holes in the pyramids, but no hidden passageways were uncovered.

Head of zoology department will resign post soon

B. University News Services

Harvey I. Fischer, chairman of SIU's zoology department since 1955, will resign that position July 1. Fischer said he will remain as a professor in the department, with research and graduate studies responsibilities.

Fischer, 54, is best known for his definitive studies of the Laysan Albatross, the great trans-oceanic flyers of the Pacific more familiarly known as "goosey birds." Since the late 1950s, he has made regular research trips to the birds' ancestral breeding ground on Midway Island to compile data on goosey bird behavior, reproduction and life history.

Fischer said his decision to step down was hastened by lingering effects of a 1969 accident in which he suffered a smashed spinal vertebra after falling from a ladder while trimming a tree.

No replacement has been named.

Senior to give trumpet recital

Charles Catterton will present his senior recital on trumpet at 8 p.m. May 14 in the Home Economics Auditorium, the School of Music has announced.

U-Center seeks public help with dog problem

It appears that officials at the University Center feel their establishment is going to the dogs.

According to a news release issued by Frank Ickis, University Center Public Information Officer, officials at the center are asking everyone to help keep dogs out of the building.

The statement says that the dogs are a health hazard. It adds that some persons who use the center are afraid of dogs. The statement said that in all cases, the dogs "are degrading to the center's atmosphere."

The statutes of the Illinois Department of Public Health Division of Food state that animals are not allowed in areas where food is served. The statement points out that the officials at the center have the "inherent power to remove any dog from the center upon request."

Action may be taken forcibly, but the University Center Administration would prefer to see the public solve the problems on their own, the statement concludes.

Only restriction: enjoy yourself

Class builds dirt castles at a farm

By Jim Bass
Student Writer

When the instructor told us to stand in the middle of the room, close our eyes and walk around, I started to wonder. When the instructor told us that later in the quarter the class might go out to a farm and build castles in the dirt, I started to worry.

However, when we were told by the instructor to buy a coloring book and crayons, I checked my schedule to see if I had gotten into a University School kindergarten class by mistake.

"Nope," I said to myself. "If this is the right class, the right section and the right time, then what the heck's going on?"

The answer is GSC 343, an art class for, nonart majors. It's a do-your-own-thing course that lets you do anything creative. The "un-class," as it was unofficially titled by one student, has only one restriction—and that is to enjoy the class.

The class is very unstructured with the curriculum being determined by the student. The student may work alone or with the group. One of the class' major goals is to develop creative awareness that will be retained after the course is over, said Ruth Bauman, one section's instructor.

Each section of GSC 343 is different because of the different instructors and students. While one class may start with a group project of paper construction, another section might begin with sensitivity games to sharpen one's senses. At any time a student may decide to work on his own rather than with the group, thus giving a person freedom to do anything he wants, if he feels his creativity is being curbed.

Some of the class' group activities are redesigning a coloring book, doing earth work to create something artistic out of a farm field, listening to guest speakers, watching other instructors demonstrate the different media and then doing something creative such as paint, sketch or maybe cut a linoleum block."

On the whole, student reactions are not varied as to why they like the course. On student said, "I'm able to be myself and I don't have to do anything except please myself. We've done a variety of interesting things including a lot of thinking, without someone else telling you what to think about...."

Another student just said, "Oh! Wow, two hours out of the class day I can relax."

Alcohol calculator introduced

By Illinois Information Service

A pocket-size calculator, designed to stimulate persons to think more about the problem of drinking and driving, will be offered to Illinois residents by the Governor's Traffic Safety Coordinating Committee (GTSCC).

The calculator, called the Drink-Drive calculator by the GTSCC, will be mailed free to any Illinois resident who writes to Drink-Drive Calculator, Box 3007, Springfield, Ill. 62706.

The GTSCC membership considers the calculator to be a sensible, educational approach to this continuing problem.

"The best advice is still 'When you drink, don't drive,'" said Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie, GTSCC chairman. "But despite years of repetition of this phrase, the problem is still with us."

"A reasonable description of how each drink affects a person of a specific body size is a realistic and educational approach to the problem. We consider the calculator an educational tool for the driver before he starts drinking, when he is thinking clearly," Ogilvie added.

Equipped with circular scales, the calculator can be operated simply. A person first finds his body weight on one scale, and then matches the figure with a number representing one-ounce, 86-proof alcohol drinks on a second scale. He then reads an approximate percentage of body alcohol content in a top window. This percentage figure is based on drinks in one hour. However, a second window provides information concerning a two- to six-hour period of drinking.

In Illinois, one tenth of one per cent body alcohol content means that a person is legally under the influence of alcohol, Ogilvie said. However, the Drink-Drive Calculator indicates that any person over five-hundredths of one per cent is in the danger zone and should not drive.

On the back of the calculator is a clear statement of its accuracy and intended use. "This calculator is only a guide and not sufficiently accurate to be considered legal evidence. The figures you calculate are averages. Food in the stomach affects the rate of absorption. Medications, health and psychological condition are also influential factors. Remember, the best idea still is 'When you drink, don't drive'...."

Conservation workshops scheduled

By University News Services

Workshops in outdoor education and conservation education have been scheduled between June 14 and July 9 by the Department of Conservation and Outdoor Education, each carrying four hours college credit.

Paul Nowak, department chairman, said the outdoor education workshop, to be held June 14-25 at SIU's Outdoor Laboratory east of Carbondale, will focus on developing philosophy and strategies for implementing school curriculum outside the school building. Field experiences will emphasize methods and techniques for working with children outdoors.

The conservation workshop, to be held at the same location June 28 to July 9, will strive to acquaint teachers and administrators with ecology and conservation.

Nowak and two faculty members, Robert Christie and Clifford Knapp, comprise the teaching staff. Classes will meet from 8 to 11 a. m. on Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8 a. m. to 4 p. m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Room and board fees at Little Grassy Lake are $75 per workshop. Campsites are available nearby. More information can be obtained from Nowak.

Funds released to rebuild fort

By Illinois Information Service

Rep. C. L. McCormick, Vienna, announced Wednesday that Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie has released $548,000 for the reconstruction of historic Fort Massac, including the construction of a museum and the redesigning of Fort Massac State Park.

McCormick said the funds were appropriated to the Illinois Department of Conservation by the 1970 session of the General Assembly for use during the current fiscal year ending June 30. The money is payable from the General Revenue Fund.

The original fort was constructed on the Ohio River by George Rogers Clarke, he said, and its reconstruction will incorporate its original historical features which, according to McCormick, will make it a valuable addition to the state's memorial system.

Band presents concert May 17

Ecology fight led by small groups

By John Dunker
Copley News Service

Environmental problems are so great, the forces of destruction so powerful. What can I possibly do for the cause of conservation?

You hear this plaint of dismay and frustration all over the land these days as thousands of Americans, concerned about widespread destruction and depletion of air, land, water, timber, wildlife and aesthetic resources, wonder how individual concern can be of any use.

And yet, the conservation achievement in this country has been a record of individuals and small groups fighting and persevering against seemingly great odds, saving a bit of virgin timber land here, a stretch of wild river there, preserving an ancient swamp or a scenic valley that would otherwise have been drained and filled or inundated or scarred by dam and highway builders.

What can you do?

At Big Sur, Calif. Mrs. Nathaniel Owings became aroused over attempts to remove state protection for the graceful sea otter, once hunted almost to extinction and now enjoying a resurgence along the California coast because of conservation laws. She formed Friends of the Sea Otter, mailed out 16,000 folders calling for political action on behalf of these animals. They enlisted so much support for the endangered otter that bills to liberalize their kill have been temporarily shelved.

But Mrs. Owings and her friends know that fighters for environmental issues can never sit back and bask in victory. They are now mustering support to defeat the bill if and when it comes up again in the Legislature.

In Minnesota a few hard-driving conservationists, in cooperation with the State Department of Conservation, stopped construction of a

SIU historian awarded grant

Howard W. Allen of SIU is one of three U.S. historians who was awarded a grant by the National Science Foundation to do an in-depth study of American voting patterns during the past two centuries.

The collaborative effort will try to identify and explain those points in U.S. history when voters switched parties or otherwise realigned themselves politically. Election data will be related to historical trends.

Other collaborators are Jerome Chubb of the University of Michigan, Walter Burnham, Washington University, and William Flanagan of the University of Minnesota.

Allen, an associate professor at SIU's Carbondale Campus, received a $6,000 grant for his part of the two year study.

He has degrees from the University of Chicago and University of Washington and has been on the SIU faculty for nine years. He was graduated from Dahlgren Community High School and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. O.E. Allen of Dahlgren.

'Message bottles' go 6,000 miles

SYDNEY (AP) — Two message-carrying bottles launched by Japanese school children came ashore in Australia after drifting perhaps 6,000 miles in less than 14 months.

The identical bottled messages said they were launched by the Sea Science Club of Yatsu High School, Japan and that the children were doing a special project on tidal currents.

One bottle was picked up on Gerringong Beach, 80 miles south of Sydney, the other at nearby Mullumbidgee Beach.

huge jet airport on the edge of the 23,000-acre Carlos Avery Wildlife Refuge. Backers of the airport said it was vital for aviation progress.

Conservationists said that progress was not so imperative that it had to destroy one of the nation's finest preserves for ducks and a wide variety of other wildlife. Air pollution, jet noise, fuel spills, drainage of wetlands and the resultant buildup of business and industry around the port would, they claim, have ruined the refuge.

A similar battle waged by a national coalition of conservation groups killed plans, at least temporarily, to build a huge, $250 million, 20-square-mile jetport next to Everglades National Park, only park of its kind in this country and one of the few such preserves in the world.

A San Diego housewife, Mrs. Beatrice Evanson, was disappointed to find that harbor development plans provided for high-rise motels, marinas, restaurants and cocktail lounges but little in the way of park facilities or public access to the water. With the help of a few friends, she gathered 20,000 names on a petition to have the port provide a public park on its new Harbor Island motel and marina complex. Port commissioners were so impressed by her pleas for water-side open space that they budgeted $275,000 for what is now beautiful, seven-acre Spanish Landing Park. Plans are to enlarge it, too.

Most inspiring is the battle by a very small group of conservationists to save some of the unique Indiana dunes from complete obliteration by steel mills, highways, airports and other industrial development.

Dismayed by public indifference to the beauty of these majestic dunes, Dorothy Buell formed a Save the Dunes Council in 1952 and began a long fight to preserve these natural wonders for the future.

The council's most prominent political ally was former Sen. Paul Douglas, who contributed money to the cause and tried to establish a Dunes National Park. Lined up against the conservationists have been some local congressmen, the state highway department, land speculators, aviation interests, big industrialists and the Army Corps of Engineers. In 1963 the Bethlehem Steel Co., indifferent to pleas from all over the country, leveled much of the dunes area to make way for a steel mill.

Friends of the dunes have given liberally of money, time and effort, often traveling to Washington at their own expense to testify before congressional committees. They staged meetings, printed literature, and beat a path to political doors in the Indiana Legislature.

Finally, in 1966, their efforts paid off. The federal government approved acquisition of 5,000 acres for a Dunes park, but then became parsimonious with money needed to buy it and allowed part of the area to slip away to private developers. While some of the lake coast has been purchased for park purposes, much more may fall victim to rising land prices. Buoyed by partial victory, friends of the dunes continue their fight against developers and speculators who would convert the entire Indiana lake shore to industrial uses.

Local efforts such as these are taking place all over the country as individuals and small groups fight to save their environment from exploitation, indifference and neglect.

John R. Senger, a biology teacher in Lewes, Del., led a successful one-man crusade to keep a stretch of unspoiled Delaware Bay beach and dunes dunes from being converted into an industrial park, also to keep a sewage disposal plant from being built in Cape Henlopen State Park, from whence great volumes of effluent would have been poured out into adjacent recreational waters without sufficient treatment.

Stranger contacted every householder in Lewes, issued literature, called a public meeting, and got state and local officials to take a second look at the ecological damage they were planning.

Two students at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., Greg Fernet and Alan Crossley, were so concerned about environmental neglect that they made a 14-week evangelistic trek along the Mississippi from Minnesota to the gulf, talking at 75 high schools about individual responsibility for clean streets, clean air, and clean water. After their talk at one Mississippi school, students organized a community cleanup campaign and collected eight tons of bottles and cans.

Mrs. Sylvia Troy, executive vice president of the Save the Dunes Council, expressed the spirit of the volunteer conservationist while testifying before a House committee in Washington.

"We have learned to never give up," she said. "No matter how grim the situation appears, we continue informing the public and arousing support for our cause. We try to find strong political allies. We try to remember that selfish interests do not always have to win the day."

MSAC schedules annual Buffalo Tro dinner

In days gone by, Indians would kill a buffalo and throw it on an open fire for their food. Today, sirloin steak is thrown on wood chips heaped in a pile on the ground. This is called a Buffalo Tro.

The Buffalo Tro, sponsored by the SIU Married Student Advisory Council, is an annual event for married students and their families. Larry Axt, chairman of the MSAC, said the Buffalo Tro has been scheduled for 4:30 p.m. May 22 at Evergreen Park.

The menu will include sirloin steak, two kinds of potato salad, cole slaw, dinner rolls and a beverage. Participants must provide their own dinnerware. Tickets are being sold at the Married and Graduate Students Office, 615 S. Washington. Evergreen Terrace and Southern Hills maintenance, and University Trailer Court No. 14 and No. 18.

Tickets are $1.50 for adults and 75 cents for children under 12. Last day to purchase tickets is May 15.

But they're willing to admit that radio doesn't get as much attention as it once did.

That's what you might call a blessing-in-disguise.

The radio of the '70s doesn't make your home into a foundation for an antenna mast. It did that in the '30s.

Now, when there's a power failure your TV set will tell you it happened. Your radio will tell you why. Many stations have emergency generators, and your radio probably is powered by a tiny battery that weighs a few ounces and lasts for many months. Radio batteries of the '40s lasted about six playing hours, and weighed more than a pound.

It was probably in the '50s that a few whimsical drivers learned to read newspapers during traffic jams. But then, of course, car radios weren't a near-standard.

Now the radio people bring you Mont Crowley, Coffee with Larry and The Variety Show with Nancy Adams. Programs and hosts that give attention instead of commanding it.

We're just one of several thousand stations that like it better that way. This is National Radio Month in the 51st year of U.S. broadcast casting.

It's also a time when we remind ourselves that you're not "with us" anytime. Instead, we're with you.

Moon dust affects earth life forms

By University News Services

Dust and core samples from the moon have yielded mysterious substances that make earth plants grow faster and kill virulent germs, according to a NASA scientist.

James B. Beal, scientist at the Space Administration's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., said that lunar material brought back by Apollo 11 astronauts "easily killed two very virulent germs that are very hard to kill by earthly antiseptics."

Beal said that pinpointing the unknown ingredient and extracting from it an antiseptic for hard-to-cure diseases would "rank with the discovery of penicillin."

Speaking at the SIU conference of "Mankind in the University," Beal also said experiments at the Houston Manned Spacecraft Center reveal that moon dust "produces an astonishing effect on certain plants, making them grow bigger, stronger and greener than the same plants grown in the best fertilizer agriculturalists have been able to create to date."

Beal called space the "most complex problem man has ever put his mind to" and argued that dividends of space research will "lead to many useful benefits for all mankind."

He cited some of the payoffs to date:

—Earth Resources Satellites that will be able to pinpoint potential crop failures, check on plant diseases, forecast floods, spot fishing grounds, monitor underground coal mine fires, and even help archaeologists find lost cities in jungles or under water;

—"Other satellites that will act as 'global control towers' to eliminate air traffic control problems, locate sinking ships, and provide three-week local weather forecasts."

—New non-flammable fabrics and coatings developed as a result of the 1967 Apollo cabin fire. Beal said NASA has developed a paint so fireproof that it extinguishes itself when ignited; —Portable gauges that can measure thicknesses of material (such as highway pavement) by sending buried metal strips in the material. Potential application, said Beal, is a gauge that could detect large metal objects on airplane passengers—guns or grenades—but wouldn't be triggered by small items like keys or cigarette lighters.

—High purity carbon forms that are compatible with all body fluids and tissues and can replace other metals for surgical implants;

—An infrared "sight switch" activated only by eye movement, allowing a paralyzed person to operate a motor-driven wheelchair;

—A helmet permitting studies of brainwave patterns without using past-on electrodes as in the common electroencephalogram (EEG);

—A theory, demonstrated in space research, that the normal process of cell division in the human body is controlled by patterns of ion concentration on the surface tissues of cells. It could explain, said Beal, the connection between uncontrolled cell growth and the spread of disease, the two main features of cancer.

Sidewalks come and sidewalks go, but excavation goes on forever or so it seems at SIU anyway. This new trench is temporarily replacing the sidewalk south of Morris Library, so that new pipes can be installed in the new Life Science Building—and, of course, new sidewalks will be next. Professor gets state office

Oliver J. Caldwell, professor of higher education at SIU, has been named to the Curriculum Advisory Committee in the office of Michael Bakalis, state superintendent of public instruction (OSPI).

Caldwell said he would report to Earl Morris, director of curriculum development in the OSPI. The committee's purpose, he said, is to help develop inter-cultural education at the secondary level in the state.

Caldwell used the theme of inter-cultural developments in the curriculum in a convocation address April 26 at Alice Lloyd College in Pippa Passes, Ky., where he spoke on the topic, "Know Your Neighbor." His talk also included a defense of American activities in world affairs.

WSIU-TV examines changes since last May

An examination of the changes which have taken place in Carbon-dale and on the SIU Campus since the student disorders last May which closed the school will be presented in a week-long series of television programs beginning Friday night on WSIU-TV, Channel 8, and WUISI-TV, Channel 16, Olney.

The series, titled "One City," will not be a recap of the disturbances but rather will be a look at the social and legal consequences since that time and the possible results for the future, according to the series coordinator Byron A. Bartlett of the SIU Broadcasting Service.

The "One City" series begins with "The Session" on Friday night at 7:30 p.m. which will present a concert by the rock musical group Magma Crunch. Following at 8:30 the program "Observations" will feature a conversation with Judge Peyton Kuncie of the Illinois First Judicial Circuit who presided over court actions which resulted from the demonstrations. He will be interviewed by WSIU news and public affairs director Ed Brown.

The weekly feature "Kaleidoscope" on Tuesday at 9 p.m. will feature a number of guests from the "Alternative 71" organization.

Throughout the week, short features on "One City" theme will be seen daily at 5 p.m.

Study in Italy offered this fall

By University News Services

SIU is offering a unique independent study program in Italy this fall.

A cooperative venture with the Experiment in International Living, a non-profit international educational institution headquartered in Putney, Vt., the program features home stay with Italian families, tours, and concentrated studies which enable participants to "do in Italy as the Italians do."

The Experiment program, recommended to qualified students of art, foreign languages, and music, will offer 20 to 24 hours of credits through individually-designed, and department-approved independent study programs. The experiment scheduled for fall costs approximately $1,600, and winter—$1,700.

Prime-time reduction to bring T.V. repeats

By Jerry Bush
AP Television-Radio Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — If you've wondered what the network prime-time cutback will bring in the fall you can get a preview this summer.

Most of the new shows the networks will broadcast in the summer months are cut from the same patterns stations will use to fill in their nightly half hour of prime time.

The networks will rely heavily on low-budget musical variety and repeats of series from past years, just as will the stations. The Federal Communications Commission ordered the cutback to encourage more diversified programming.

A major exception is the six 30-minute dramas CBS will run on Sundays in August and September: the British-made "Six Wives of Henry VIII."

Each play has a different wife of the British monarch as a central figure, and Keith Michell, current in Broadway's "Abeard & Heloise" as Henry VIII from an exuberant 18 to a wily tyrant of 36.

The Public Broadcasting Service is joining in the third season.

bringing out five new series and all new programs in four continuing shows. William F. Buckley Jr. moves his "Firing Line" to CBS on Sunday, May 23.

ABC's new shows are "It Was a Very Good Year," a musical review of the past with Mel Tormé, on Mondays; "NFL Action," highlights of pro football on Wednesdays; and the British singer Val Doonican on Saturdays. The network will revive "Love On a Roof" and "The Immortal" on Wednesdays.

CBS will overhaul its Sunday schedule several times, with an ice show series—as yet untitled—and movies running before "Henry VIII" comes in Aug. 1. Two sets of pilots that didn't make it as series, "Suspense," "Playhouse," and "Comedy Playhouse" go in at the same time as the British show.

"Newcomers," featuring new talent, replaces Carol Burnett on Mondays and CBS revives "Cimarron Strip" on Tuesdays and "Lancer" on Thursdays.

NBC has trumpeted Al Hart in "Make Your Own Kind of Music" in Don Knotts on Tuesdays and Des O'Connor returns for the second year with a series of English-made Music Hall shows.

Nixon asks for legal help for poor people

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon asked Congress Wednesday to set up an independent Legal Services Corp. which he said is designed to make federal legal help for the poor "immune to political pressures."

The quasi-public agency, similar to the Public Broadcasting Corp. would take over a service which Nixon said is "surrounded by controversy"—provided by the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) for the past six years.

The proposal is somewhat similar to legislation introduced in March by a bipartisan group of Senate and House members, but there are some major differences.

Under Nixon's plan, those lawyers given full-time grants would not be permitted to engage in outside law practice and they would be limited in lobbying activities.

However, the President said the legal problems of the poor are of sufficient scope that we should not restrict the right of their attorneys to bring any type of civil suit.

The congressional proposal would permit lawyers to take part in both criminal and civil cases for the poor but Nixon asked that they be limited to civil suits.

Nixon said the legal services program under OEO—has grown swiftly in six years so that now more than 2,000 lawyers work for the poor in 900 neighborhood offices handling a million cases a year.

But he said, "much of the litigation initiated by legal services has placed it in direct conflict with local and state governments."

Nixon said the primary mission of the Legal Services Corp. should be to review and approve applications for funds authorized by lawyers with the decision up to the corporation's hired president.

Catch-alls and carry-alls

First it was long hair, then beads, now it's bags. Guys around campus are finding the knapsack or bag a practical carry-all, something their sisters have known a long time. These handy items range from inexpensive laundry bags, to army-style knapsacks, to expensive Swiss backpacks costing from $50 to $75. But whatever the style and cost, an over-the-shoulder pack makes the toting of books—and anything else a guy may feel he needs for a day on campus—a lot easier. And it can leave the hands free, which is handy if you happen to be on a bike or on crutches. (Photos by John Lopinot)

Fighting explodes in Cambodia again

SAIGON (AP) — Heavy ground fighting broke out Thursday in eastern Cambodia, ending a lull in the Indochina war.

Tank-led South Vietnamese troops, under a cover of air and artillery strikes, clashed in a daytime engagement with about 400 North Vietnamese near the town of Sraol, a few miles inside Cambodia.

Saigon headquarters claimed 72 North Vietnamese were killed and it announced that South Vietnamese losses were one dead and six wounded.

The new Cambodian fighting was followed by heavy strikes by the South Vietnamese air force against a North Vietnamese troop concentration 15 miles from the Cambodian border town of Kandol Chrum.

In other action Wednesday, U.S. helicopter gunships killed five enemy soldiers in an area 52 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital, the U.S. Command said.

U.S. helicopters are lending heavy support to the 22,000 South Vietnamese troops still deployed in Cambodia, flying more than 300 support missions on Wednesday alone.

Some 300 miles to the north, U.S. B52 bombers returned in force to the A Shau Valley sector.

Twenty of the eight-engine bombers hammered suspected North Vietnamese troop concentrations and bunkers inside the jungle valley and six miles north of it.

Another three-plane formation of B52s struck in the much-battered northwest corner of South Vietnam.

As they have daily since April 21, the bombers hit again at one of Hanoi's major infiltration corridors that crosses into South Vietnam just below the demilitarized zone.

As the war pace quickened, President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam announced a 24-hour cease-fire to mark Buddha's birthday anniversary on Sunday.

South Vietnamese forces will hold their fire from noon Saturday until noon Sunday Saigon time and will be joined in the cease-fire by United States and allied foreign troops.

Saigon is 12 hours ahead of Eastern Daylight Time.

Where do our housing fees go?

By Dave Budler
Student Writer

A matter of growing concern for nearly 5,600 students living in University residence halls is how their housing fees are spent. The increase in housing costs for fall, has prompted many students to examine how their money is used.

According to Samuel L. Rinella, director of Housing Business Services (HBS), the largest segment of each student's dollar goes to pay salaries and wages.

The salaries of food service, maintenance and student personnel use 26.2 cents of each dollar.

Reduction of the debt payment for the construction bonds of the residence halls takes one quarter per dollar. SIU still owes more than $32 million for residence halls on the Carbondale campus.

Food production, including all food purchases, is a major expense totaling 15.5 cents of each dollar.

The other costs include: 9.5 cents for heat, telephone, and utilities; 4.5 cents for laundry and housekeeping supplies; 2.5 cents to pay room and board of resident teachers and resident fellows; 8.7 cents for administrative salaries and office personnel; and 8.1 cents for building and equipment maintenance.

The annual cost to single students for University housing has increased from $795 in 1965, to $1,041 for the current year. An additional increase of $84 to cover rising costs has been approved for next year, according to Rinella.

Housing operating expenses have jumped from $2,687,977 in 1965, to more than $5 million in 1970. Next year's budget exceeds $8.2 million, according to Robert Maurath, assistant housing director.

Rinella said additional housing expenses are a result of higher prices for all commodities and repeated pay increases.

"We'll have an eight to ten per cent increase in food costs for next year," Rinella said. "Salaries will increase four to five per cent, too."

A large concern of housing areas is the number of meals served by the various food services. During 1969-70, 2,118,333 meals were served. This is nearly double the meals served in 1965.

Brush Towers was the most expensive area to build, according to Rinella. The 1970 acquisition value of Brush Towers was $12,536,008 for 1,632 students or $7,676 per student. Thompson Point had the lowest per student cost, $6,456, for 1,247 students with a value of nearly $9 million, according to HBS's annual report.

Rinella said a prime concern of housing areas is a continuation of major maintenance objectives each year.

During 1970, Rinella said seven major projects were completed at Brush Towers, six at Small Group Housing, seven at University Park and 13 at Thompson Point.

Rinella said that even with increasing costs the projects would be continued on a yearly basis, with Housing Business Services working in conjunction with the various area student governments to determine priorities.

Rising prices cause blow to inflation fight

WASHINGTON (AP)—Led by increased costs of industrial commodities, the rise in wholesale prices quickened in April, the government said Thursday. This handed the Nixon administration's fight against inflation a temporary blow.

The Labor Department reported that its wholesale price index advanced by three-tenths of one per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis.

The news was particularly bad for the White House because the key industrial commodities index, one of the best measures of inflation, increased by four-tenths of one per cent. Seasonally adjusted, the rise in industrial prices was even higher, five-tenths of one per cent.

A spokesman for President Nixon's Council of Economic Advisors called it a bad month for wholesale prices. But he added the council does not believe it meant a "break" in the pattern of improving prices.

The acceleration in wholesale prices followed a slackening of prices in March, when the wholesale price index rose by only two-tenths of one per cent.

Treasury Secretary John B. Connally told newsmen that while "I hated to see the wholesale price index go up, I don't think we should pay too much attention to it."

He said the index still remains at about the average of the first quarter and he added the administration thinks it is winning the battle against inflation.

Not reflected in the April statistics was a decision by U.S.

Steel Corp. to raise prices by more than 6 per cent on a broad range of products. That price increase will be reflected in next month's report.

The wholesale price index usually foreshadows increases in the cost of living, although the consumer price index has slackened in recent months.

Dollar pressure eases up abroad

LONDON (AP)—The pressure on the dollar eased somewhat in Europe on Thursday. Top monetary authorities searched for ways of stemming the flood of American money that is undermining European economies.

American tourists in countries like West Germany found it a bit more expensive to take taxi rides or to eat at restaurants. However, things were a little less expensive for Americans in Britain, whose pound sterling lost value in the selling wave of dollars.

In some places tourists found it difficult to exchange large amounts of dollars for local currencies.

The West German mark rose to nearly 20 cents over the official price of about 27½ cents.

The British pound sterling fell from $2.42 to $2.41½.

West Germany which has borne the major part of the battering, was seeking a solution that would involve joint action by the six Common Market countries. Informants said, but was reported to be meeting strong resistance from some of its partners, mainly France and Belgium. Other market members are Italy, Netherlands and Luxembourg.

Trading in dollars was greatly curtailed with a number of national banks, including those in West Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands, maintaining their refusal to buy dollars.

American tourists, however, were experiencing little difficulty in changing reasonable amounts of dollars although in some cases they were having to take a big discount. Some taxi drivers in West Germany were offering only three marks for a dollar. This meant a loss of 16 cents on a dollar for the tourist.

Tourists weren't obliged to change their dollars with the taxi drivers, though, and American Express and other travel agencies across Europe said they were cashing travellers' checks without limit at only minor discounts.

The dollar crisis stems chiefly from a deficit in the U.S. balance of payments—meaning the United States is spending more abroad than it is taking in from foreign customers. Another cause is that the high price of U.S. goods sends buyers to cheaper markets.

One effect of the run on the dollar in Europe is that some European currencies are rising in relation to the dollar, thus making European goods and vacations more expensive for Americans.

Second Thoughts

Tim Ricci newest Saluki

This is the time of year when college coaches do a lot of sweating, don't sleep well and bite their fingernails.

Wednesday of this week signaled the first day prep athletes could sign national letters of intent, the official document linking athlete and university.

For Paul Lambert, a very small portion of that sweating, poor sleep and fingernail biting came to an end late Thursday afternoon when West Frankfort basketball star Tim Ricci signed with the Salukis.

Ricci is the second signer for Lambert who is recruiting his first SIU team since becoming head coach last summer. Joe Meriwether, a 6-9 product of Phenix City, Ala., was signed Wednesday by coach Paul Henry and Harold Bardo, a member of the SIU faculty.

Elmo Ricci, Tim's father, said his son was signed by Bill Brown, SIU assistant athletic director. The inking ends speculation the younger Ricci would enroll at the University of Illinois.

Named Southern Illinois Player of the Year by the Evansville Courier, Ricci chose SIU because the people were friendlier, his father said.

"Up at Illinois, he didn't think they were very friendly at all," the elder Ricci stated. "They offered him a scholarship and everything but he didn't think they talked to him very much and came back from his visit not very excited."

It's a relief

"But after his visit to Southern last weekend, Tim really felt the people there were friendly and interested."

The elder Ricci said he hadn't realized how much pressure an athlete is under while being recruited until he saw how his son reacted. "Tim had moments where he didn't feel too good and was edgy, waiting to see what would happen with the various schools. I think it's a relief for him to get signed."

Ricci had an outstanding senior campaign this past winter, averaging over 23 points and 12 rebounds per game.

In addition to his Player of the Year award, Ricci was named to at least three All-State teams sponsored by Illinois newspapers.

Other schools that expressed interest in the West Frankfort athlete were Georgia Tech, Tennessee, Missouri, Murray State, Kansas and Kansas State.

The last mentioned school, you may remember, is the present haunt of Jack Hartman, former SIU basketball coach. Lambert and Hartman have locked horns on more people than just Ricci this season.

It's still a tossup whether Marvin Seabloom, a strongboy from Elgin-Larkin, will choose Southern or Kansas State.

Goodbye, Bernard

For sure, one player sought by the two schools is no longer in doubt.

Larry Odell, columnist for the Southern Illinoisian who has trouble praising anything done by Lambert, made references in his Thursday column that Hartman had "gone one up on his old school."

Odell was referring to Kansas State's signing of Bernard Robinson, a 6-3 guard from Atlanta, Ga. Robinson is one of the best players in Georgia and was sought by many schools. Going to Kansas State isn't the worst move Robinson will ever make.

Odell, however, failed to mention all the facts behind Robinson's inking at the Big Eight school.

Hartman pulled off a real swift one getting Robinson. You might say he's getting two-for-one.

The other half of the deal is Larry Cart. Who is Larry Cart? He's Robinson's high school coach.

For some strange reason, Cart has been offered and accepted a position as a staff member this summer at Hartman's basketball camp, according to sources who wish to remain unnamed.

Now isn't it odd that has happened. Of course, Cart will get something for his work. These jobs usually have a monetary incentive attached.

Perhaps Odell has a good reason for missing those facts. After all, Odell does title his column "Doggin' it."

Saluki baseball returns today

The SIU baseball team will open a three-game series with Illinois State at 3 p.m. Friday on the SIU home diamond.

Southern, 2-1 in the Midwestern Conference, will try to improve its position in the league and enhance its chances for an NCAA playoff berth. Illinois State is 2-4 in conference.

The Salukis must be considered as an at-large team for the district playoffs since automatic qualification hasn't been granted to the new league.

"Most of the time, (at-large) teams are selected on the basis of their record," said SIU coach Richard "Itchy" Jones. "But our league officials have recommended that they would like the champion to be selected."

The Salukis will be returning home with a 25-6 record after three weeks on the road including a 2-2 win over small-college rival Evansville Tuesday.

Steve Randall, with a 7-1 record and 1.58 earned run average and left-hander Dick Langdon are the probable starting pitchers for two of the three games against the Redbirds.

Best at AAU nationals

By Fred Weinberg
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa — It's not quite the University of Michigan's Crisler Arena but the Kennedy High School gymnasium is the scene of one of the nation's top gymnastics meets.

Nobody thought too much about the Amateur Athletic Union's national championship four weeks ago, when all the attention was at Ann Arbor, Mich., and the NCAA championships. That meet is all but forgotten now.

Strange things are happening. NCAA still rings champion Charles Ropiequet of SIU is in a four-way tie for tenth place in that event.

And SIU's Tom Lindner, who placed fourth in the NCAA all-around but didn't even qualify in the side horse, now holds fourth place in that event.

Freshman Gary Morava, stands in second place in the floor exercise competition.

Illinois would win telephone track meet

By Ken Stewart
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

If a telephone meet were held between the SIU and Illinois track teams, the Illini would take it 87-78.

The best times this season for each team would be compared and points allowed accordingly.

Telephone meets have popped up the last few years among junior colleges—particularly in swimming—to cut traveling costs.

But Alexander Graham Bell's invention will be put aside when Illinois visits McAndrew Stadium Tuesday night in what SIU coach Lew Hartzog calls "the greatest track rivalry in the state and one of the best in the nation."

Field events will start at 7 p.m. and running events at 7:30 p.m.

In real live meets anything can happen, including the Salukis breaking a long string of dual victories by Illinois.

The Illini are 11-0 in dual competition stretching across two years going into a meet with Michigan Saturday.

The Salukis won't be any pushovers. They have a winning streak going themselves, four victories and no defeats.

That is a big rebound from a poor 1-3 dual meet record last year including a loss at Illinois.

Hartzog said the meet may be neck-and-neck going into the final event—the mile relay. Whoever takes that event takes the meet, he conjectured.

"There can't be any mistakes going down to the wire," Hartzog said. "It could cost either team the meet."

"Of course, they get up for us and we get up for them," he added. "We had the best workout here this week since I came to Southern."

"I didn't have to prod the kids at all." Both teams have made some costly mistakes this season.

The Salukis' 440-yard relay team has dropped the baton four times.

Illinois had to take a seventh place finish in the Big Ten Conference indoor championships after its two top distance men—Lee LaBadie and Rick Gross—collided in the mile run.

The spill cost Illinois some precious points and hurt the team psychologically. The Illini are co-favorites with Indiana to take the outdoor crown.

Saturday SIU and Illinois will be compared in field events. Tuesday, an analysis of the running events will be presented.

Gymnasts in stiff competition ternoon gymnastics compulsory round of floor exercise, still rings, and side horse.

Ropiequet may be the best collegiate rings man in the nation but the AAU meet is not restricted to college performers.

And the man who will have to fall in the optionals for Charlie to win is a graduate student at Kent State, Sakato Hamata. He threw a 9.65 compulsory routine and Ropiequet and Lindner both threw 8.95.

The other nine scorers are mostly in the 9.0 range and cannot be considered serious competition for Ropiequet who threw a 9.6 optional to win the NCAA championship four weeks ago.

"I don't think a tenth of a point makes that much difference with two rounds to go," said Ropiequet.

"But I'll probably have to throw a 9.9 to win it," he added, only partially in jest.

The top 15 men in each event qualify for Friday's optional exercise.

Lindner and former SIU gymnast Mark Davis threw 9.25 and 9.1 in the compulsory routine, respectively, on the high bar in the early part of Thursday evening's session.

The session was still in progress late Thursday night making final placings unavailable. However, both gymnasts' scores should be high enough to qualify them for the Friday session.

Davis, whose last year of competition for SIU was 1976, is the only American gymnast able to execute a triple flyaway dismount. Should he qualify for the optionals, he has indicated he will throw the spectacular dismount Friday.

Hawk's win

CHICAGO, (AP) — The Chicago Black Hawks roared to a 2-0 Stanley Cup series lead Thursday night, stopping the Montreal Canadiens, 5-3.

The series moves to Montreal for the third game this Sunday.
