Marshall Tucker's sound is fresher, often jazzy

By John Amber Student Writer

With eight strong albums completed, including a recent "Greatest Hits" collection, the Marshall Tucker Band is back orce again with "Running Like the Wind Wind," but net without a few changes No longer can you find the band on the Capricorn recording label; gone too is producer Paul Hornsby, who has helped with every Marshall Tucker album up to now. The band has transferred its now. The band has transferred its alliance to Warner Brothers, and Steward Levine is now behind the controis. controis. Fine, you're thinking, but how do they sound? If you're afraid that the Marshall 'tucker Band' has' changed' its' style drastically, and are now into classical music or Gregorian chants, relax. The band is still comprised of the same six talented musicians from Spartansberg, S.C., but when first listening to its new album a few changes are annarent. The album, a few changes are apparent. The band's approach to its music is fresher, more mellow. Toy Caldwell's composing nd arranging has a more preci edge to it, sometimes bordering on jazz. Marshall Tucker has always been known for its fast-cooking instrumentals and heavy-breathing rhythm section. but producer Levine keeps it down io a small roar, without restricting either Caldwell or Jerry Eubanks from doing what they do best: jam. A horn section led by Sieve Madaio, Gary Herbig and Gary Grant provides some good brass oomph, and Chuck Leavell augments the sound with his own personal touch on keybardt keyboards. The band's lyrics seem to lag in The band's lyrics seem to lag in certain places, especially on Side Two with Tommy Caldwell's "Melody Ann" and George McCorkle's "My Best Friend." which, musically, are as tight as any song on the album. But with lines like "So?" m singin' this here song for Melody Ann-And I'm so doggone prond that I'm her man-And she's all mine-My Melody Ann." well, Tommy Caldwell could think of a more articulate way of serenading the love of his life. serenading the love of his life. McCorkle redeems himself, however, with "The Last of the Singing Cowboys," one of the better cuts on the album. Doug Grav's bitter-sweet vocals and Steve Madaio's silky horn arrangement can almost make one visualize the hapless old cowhand, singing for beer in a rundown saloon.

But the record's most captivating moments happen during the flute and sax solos of Jerry Eubanks. Eubanks has never sounded better on the flute. especially on the title track, when his cool and breezy fills swirl and tease around Toy Caldwell's guitar and through the main chorus.

A few changes here, a few there; it doesn't make much difference in the long run. That's why I think "Running Like the Wind" is such a fascinating album; the band has made enough alterations to keep its following in-terested without having to give up what the fans expect

Supertramp apes Bee Gees

By Terri Tangesy Staff Writer

Staff Writer A very tan man wearing makeup and cowboy boots walks up to the podium. The audience, full of crew cuts and coke spoons, becomes hushed. It is time. "And, the winners of the Bee Gee sound-alike contest arritrirrie..." he says (and for a moment, the tension is unbearable). "Supertramp in Breakfast in America' " Screams, applause, hoots, whistles: mannequins go maniacal. maniacal. "Breakfast in America" is true to the

Ree Gees tradition; it is a commercial gem. It is fun, happy, beat-heavy music with those "cute" high-pitched vocals. It is also number three on the top 100

It is also number three on the top too albums list. But "Breakfast in America" is a Supertramp album, so it is disap-pointing. Supertramp has been an in-strumentally-bent, clectric-but-good English band, but they have taken these jazz roots and are walking on the disco side. "Breakfast in America" is not disco,

"Breakfast in America" is not disco, but it teeters on the very edge (i.e. you can dance to it, but you don't have to be wearing a horiscope medallion at the time). It doesn't go so far over the edge; it lacks the signature, monotonous, bang - your - head - against - the - wall beat (who do we thank for this?).

The music is up-beat and motiva-tional: party music. And, like its title, "Breakfast in America" is to be "Breakfast in America" is to be digested only once in a while. But it isn't greasy, it's just a little too sweet. Side One is bucered with "hits."

Side One is bucked with "mis." "Gone Hollywood" is the lead cut, a hit single, and the song for which the B.G. award was given. Not unironically, the title perhaps explains the delivery. Following is "The Logical Song." another cut with big air play in the Catherdelearen I⁴ traine huw and the contowing is the Logical Song." another cut with big air play in the Carbondale area. It's nice, loud, and the best part about it is a tremendous tear on the saxophone by John A. Helliwell. The music that follows on Side One is music a radio listener has probably heard already but can't recognize by the titles. "Goodbye Stranger," the third cut, is another of the simple, easy-listening tunes that requires no thought "Breakfast in America," the title cut, is a bit too "nice." There are too many is a bit too "nice." There are too many "la la la's" and inane precocious preppie vocals for it to do anything to listeners but make them want to bounce up and down. However, when Supertramp forgets about being nice and plays their in-struments, the album is quite listenable. On Side Two, "Child of Vision" is a good example of traditional Supertramp, albeit simplistic Supertramp. "Just Another Nervous Wreck" makes up for stupid lyrics by ending with some fine rock of rock of the supertramp. rock 'n' roll.

Powerful live Dylan album shows evidence of maturity

By Mike Reed

Staff Writer Bob Dylan just can't seem to do anything right in the eyes of many people these days.

When he released the introspective "Blood On The Tracks in 1974, he was even though just a few months earlier he was blasted for losing personal contact with his music in order to embark on a highly electric rock four with The Band.

Less than a year later the release of "Desire" brought a new wave of protest. This time the wretched Dylan had forsaken his "rough-edged and un-compromising style" in favor of slick production even though the album contained an abundant amount of the type of social commentary his detractors said he was no longer able to write. Then in 1976, Dylan really gave the critics something to shoot at when his ragtag Rolling Thunder Review burst raging running humber neview burst into living rooms across America — the "Hard Rain" television special. "Now what the hell's he doing, they asked, "These guys are dissusting." Doesn't Dylan know you can't turn a bunch of filthy hippies loose on prime-time television in the 1970s and except it to work. Dylan has obviously fallen behind the times," they charged. "He needs a producer—someone who can fill out his IVTICS

veedless to say, last summer, when he got a producer and released "Street Legal," the album was said to utilize too many instruments and voices, and Dylan was accused of selling out to current trends because he didn't sound just like he did in 1965

I preface this review of Dylan's Japanese import album "At Budakon" in such a manner not because it really matters that the Mr. Joneses of the world have chosen to "criticize what they can't understand" or even because Dylan's recent material needs to be defended against those who "speak too while the wheel's still in spin." It's just that in most cases such arguments are either written because "Dylan shooting" has become vogue among media critics in the last five years or because those same writers don't think Dyian has the right to do what they have done-change. At any rate, this "live" two-record set

At any rate, this live 'two-record set is among the most consistently powerful records Dylan has ever released in-cluding 'Blonde in Blonde' and 'High-way 61 Revisited,'' if I may be so bold-and the sound quality is the best I have ever heard on a 'live' record.

Dylan's growing maturity as an artist is much in evidence throughout the album and his confidence and professionalism sceme to be more than enough to make up for whatever album urgency his older songs may have lost (as on "The Times They Are A (hangin." for example).

That's not to say "At Budakon" is without it's faults though. Dylan has taken a lot of chances by rearranging 22 of his most famous compositions for his of his most famous compositions for his Japanese tour, and no one can be ex-pected to like every one of them. But for every mistake ("Maggie's Farm" breause it's too brassy and "Ballad Of A Thin Man" because it's too campy) there are several songs that remain as vital as ever in their new form ("Like A Rolling Stone." "Blowin' In The Wind" and "Just Like A Wornan." to name a few)

On "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right" and "Knockin" On Heaven's Door," Dylan relies on an effective reggae beat

to reach yet another generation of listeners, while on "Simple Twist of Fate" and "Going, Going Gone" he completely rewrites his lyrics to show that his days of self-pity are over for good

Occasionally. Dylan is even able to improve his songs as on "I Want You" which is slowed down to emphasize lyrics that aren't nearly as absurdist as they seemed on "Blonde On Blonde."

Throughout the album, Dylan displays an uncharacteristic ease with his audience. On "Is Your Love In Vain?," which hadn't been released in Japan when the concert took place, he jokes about his problem with bootleggers saying, "Here's an unrecorded song see if you can guess which one it is This album represents qu

This album represents quite a departure for Dylan both stylistically and spiritually, and anyone who thinks Bob Dylan isn't Bob Dylan unless he sounds like his first greatest hits package would be well advised to avoid At Budakon

On the other hand, if jou've come to accept Dylan as one of those rare en-tertainers who pleases others by pleasing himself and not vice versa, you will understand and appreciate his need to grow. After all, "He that is not busy being born is busy dying.

Woman awarded $850.000 for botched belly button

The jury of four men and two women deliberated two hours in state Supreme Court in Manhattan before awarding the money to Mrs. O'Hare

Mrs O'Hare claimed she awoke 'in extreme pain'' following the operation by Dr. Howard Bellin at Manhattan's Midtown Hospital on Nov. 8, 1974.

28 Sailing Club members frolic off Florida coast

By Gerry Bliss Staff Writer

While many SIU students frolicked on the beaches of Florida during spring did their own kind of frolicking. They break. 28 members of the Sailing Club did their own kind of frolicking. They rented four sailing schooners, cruised off the Florida coast and visited the islands of Romit and Curry Kern in the Bemindi and Gum Key in the Rahama's Bahama's. The trip, which lasted seven days, was one full of intrigue according to Jim Miller, a member of the club who organized the excursion. "It was a very romantic and very appealing type of vacation. Everybody had more than just a good time. For many of the people who went, it was the first time they had ever seen the ocean. I can't begin to describe what it was like." said Miller, a senior in philosophy.

For Miller and the 27 other people, the trip was a vacation they il never forget. From an outfitter in Miami, the club rented a 44-foot CSY (two jubs and a main sail), a 33-foot offshore boat named "The Southern Cross," a 38-foot Morgan "Magoo" and a 32-foot Irvin which was dubbed "Ryidoso." The club owns nine 14-foot flying inning which as destrict 14-foot flying juniors which are docked at Crab Orchard Lake.

Instead, he seems to have succeeded where explorer Ponce de Leon failed in his search for magical waters that would bring eternal waters

After a few months in the Florida sunshine, his keepers say, Bronx was no longer old and creaky. In-deed, he began to cut a dashing figure among the lady aardvarks of Crandon Park Zoo.

"Just that he bred in captivity is rare indeed," said Curator Bill Ziegler. "We don't know to what we should attribute the rejuvenation except that we really don't know how old is old for an aardvark."

Bronx is now 22, believed to be an ardvarkian record for life in captivity. He has outlived most of his mates and many of his offspring.

"In 1970 when we got him we thought he was old," Ziegler said. "At the Bronx Zoo they had estimated his life expectancy by using his size and metabolism rate. but it wasn't conclusive." Ziegler said Bronx's longevity may have something to do with the Miami climate, which is close to that of Bronx's native Africa.

Meanwhile. Bronx is enjoying the balm: days with 201, his newest acquaintance, and their daughter, Amelia.

The outfitter provided each boat with its own captain and a full galley, in-cluding icebox. The galley was to come in handy for those members who did spear fishing. Such seafood delicacies as lobster, conch and dolphin were caught and eater and eaten.

The trip didn't begin quite as suc-cessfully as it ended. The club rented a bus to go from Carbondale to Miami and along the way encountered three flat

After spending the first few hours getting over sea sickness, some of the members went snorking to explore the mamber autiful coral reefs that he in that part of the Atlantic Atlantic ments as "The Complete Angular." which was said to be a favorite spot of Ernest Hemingway, and "Crazy Greg's End-of-the-World-Saloon."

Miller said that at "Crazy Greg's," a drink was served that could probably top any drink in Carbondale. Called a "Gomeay Smash." it consisted of two shots of coconut rum, two shots of rum and two shots of apricot brandy. Miller said "Crazy Greg's" has a tradition in which everyone signs his name on the rafters. All the club members, however, put their membership cards on the rafters, he said.

After having a "crazy" Bemindi, the "Southern C time on Bernindi, the "Southern Cross" and "Ryidoso" went on ahead to spend a day on the island of Gum Key. The "Magoo" and the 44-foot CSY, which was named the "Lark." stayed at Bernindi because the "Magoo" broke a steering cable and Cross had to wait for a part to be flown in from Miami.

When the "Southern Cross" and the When the "Southern Cross" and the "Ryidoso" returned to Bernindi to rejoin the group, all four boats got stuck at Bernindi for an extra day because of 20-foot waves and a 35-knot wind. On the following day, the group braved the still rough seas and returned safely to Miami in seven hours, although it normally takes 14 hours

After arriving back in Miami, Miller said all of the members wished they didn't have to come back to Carbondale.

"It was hard to get upset about anything after spending a week on Bemindi," Miller said. The weather was perfect and there was no rain. It was a very relaxed atmosphere. Everybody

Miller said two of the more interesting experiences the group had during the trip were being approached by drug peddlers on Bemindi and having one of the boats boarded by U.S. Customs agents upon arriving back in Miami. He also described the island natives as "very open and very nice." The trip, which cost each person $250, almost didn't take place Miller said. He said he began organizing the trin in late

A young farmer bends to examine the branches of a cut-back strawberry bush and predicts mentally, "The fruit will inpen late this year," and decides to finish mulching now that the wind has settled. Today, the 23-year-old puts in hours planting and planning toward taking over the business in the so-called tradition of the "father-son" agreement—with a twist, of course. Although the legally binding agreement has not been put to paper yet, Donna's work is gradually buying off the business from her parents. Striped bass nearly flooded

By Susan Fernandez Staff Writer Flooded fish?

Flooded 11sh? Well, not exactly. But the fisheries research lab and striped bass facility, located at Gorham along the Mississippi River bottom, was nearly flooded because of this springs' snow melts and rainy weather.

According to Bruce Tetzlaff, a researcher at the facility, the flood gates in Gorham have not been opened, and they won't be opened unti' the Mississippi River level drops, which may not occur for some time, he said. "The Mississippi has to drop about 16 feet before the Gorham gates will be opened. When they will open depends on how much rain falls and prevents the river level from going down." Tetzlaff said. The 1°b can be reached only by boat. boat.

To prevent the rearing facility from being flooded, Tetzlaff said that 19 tons of sand were poured into 1,100 sand bags to that a retaining wall could be built to prevent flood water from seeping into the lab where 34 tanks house about 500,000 bass fry

500,000 bass fry: Tetzlaff credited 11 other fisheries researchers and students for building the retaining wall that prevented the flooding of the $250,000 facility. However, the food supply for the fry water, which reduced the temperature required for raising food, covered the floor of the shed required for raising food, covered the floor of the shed. The fry, which are fed live brine shrimp that are about one to two hun-dred fiftheth of an inch long, must have a readily availab's food supply that is inexpensive and small. The fry are less than a half-inch long when they arrive at the facility acce sering. TatTaff said than a half-inch long when they arrive at the facility each spring. Tetzlaff said. They have voracious appetites: they double tixeir weight every three to four days, according to Tetzlaff. When they are a day or two old, the fry are flown in from a fish hatchery in South Carolina. After growing to a length of 4 or 5 inches, they are stocked in Rend Lake and Lake Springfield during June and July, Tetzlaff said. While they are very young, the fry need exact environmenial conditions that the lab is able to provide. If the temperature is uso w. n or too cool, if the light they receive is too intense, or if low-level pollutants are present in their revirons, they might die, according to Tetzlaff.

"They are light and temperature sensitive. Things like sait, sulphate and softened water are pollutants to the fry. They're raised in orange light because that reduces the intensity and keeps the insects away," Tetzlaff explained Bob Sheehan, a doctoral candidate in fisheries, said that the fry are stocked in Southern Illinois lakes because they help control the population of large shad in the lakes. Large, gizzard shad occupy the open-water portions of a lake. When the sirrpec bass eliminate the large, gizzard shad, the number of smaller shad in-creases. Largemouth bass and crappie are then better able to eat smaller shad, according to Sheehan. Crappie and largemouth bass are two of the most sought after fish in Southern Illinois

Consolidated Edison in New York donated the facility atter it built it and contracted with SIU's fisheries biologists to do some research for them, according to Tetzlaff.

The site also has the facilities needed for hydroponics research "Hydroponics is the combination of raising fish, which in turn provide nutrients (through their feces: for growing plant protein." Sheehan said.

The .:sh are maintained on a diet that will allow them to convert their food into nutrients needed by plants.

The hydroponics tanks were flooded. However, no research was being con-ducted this spring. Tetzlaff said. Hydroponics research has been con-ducted in the past, Tetzlaff said.

These long tanks hold fry fish until they have reached the fingerling stage.
