Transit head expects IDOT funding

By Brad Bushaw
Staff Writer

A study crucial to the development of a Carbondale mass transit system will receive an official promise of funding today by the Illinois Department of Transportation, according to mass transit officials.

In a meeting with IDOT officials at 3 p.m. today in the Student Center, Undergraduate Student Government mass transit coordinator Marvin Tanner said he expects to receive a document promising $32,000 for a feasibility study.

After consulting several firms that specialize in feasibility research, Tanner said the study could cost as much as $40,000 but IDOT's offer would be sufficient.

Before IDOT offered financial assistance, the University and the City of Carbondale offered to pay for the study.

The feasibility study was requested by the University for justification of a $15 student fee increase over a five-year period. The study also was demanded by IDOT to see if the proposed mass transit system was eligible for federal matching funds.

Tanner and mass transit adviser Dave Madlener said they did not fear that students would lose control as a result of IDOT's funding of the study.

Madlener said IDOT would inform the Saluki Mass Transit Board of Directors, an 18-member panel that will oversee the operation of the proposed transit system, of its actions and seek "phase approval" throughout the feasibility study.

Madlener said if IDOT or the City of Carbondale indicated they were attempting to take control of the system, the mass transit system "would drop the whole idea of an increased student fee in their (IDOT's or the city's) laps."

Madlener and Tanner also expressed concern that Carbondale would use part of the $15 increase in student fees for road repair.

"The students and the University bear the largest financial responsibilities," Madlener said, and suggested the city pay for road damage caused by the transit system by an increase in the Motor Fuel tax.

Dukakis' workers want truth told

Pair says negative ads cause doubt

By Scott Perry
Staff Writer

Setting the Michael Dukakis record straight is the most important item of business in the final days of the campaign, Dukakis campaign workers said.

Jodi Lyons and Sandy Horrigan, both of Massachusetts, are spending the final days of the 1988 campaign in Southern Illinois, hoping to dispel the doubts among voters that Dukakis isn't the man to run the United States.

Both say there is doubt among the voters because of negative advertising on the part of George Bush.

"He (Dukakis) recognizes there are many economic and social issues to deal with and didn't want to divert his time from these issues to talk about these things (raised by Bush advertisements)," Lyons said.

"His initial goal was to tell the people what he would do when he became president. Unfortunately he's had to spend a lot of time taking on these accusations."

Among the leading issues in Southern Illinois is the myth about Dukakis wanting to take away everybody's gun, Horrigan said.

"No one's trying to take away their guns," she said. "It's just something people hear and don't know isn't

Medical tuition hike sickening

By Jackie Spinner
Staff Writer

The cost of saving lives is going up and nobody knows that better than University medical students.

The Board of Trustees raised medical students' tuition by adding $2,149 to the spring semester bill for a $7,136 total — a 43.1 percent hike.

"The students feel like they have been misled, since many of the students came expecting to pay the amount SIU advertised," Graduate and Professional Student Council President Trudy Hale said.

Hale received calls from the medical students expressing their discontent and asking her to speak at the Oct. 13 board meeting.

She relayed the students' message to the board and said that although the board still raised tuition, speaking to the board brought attention to the problem.

Medical student Mike Comerford said students came to the University because it is a clinic-based school and the price tag was less than other medical schools.

The goal of the clinic-based school is to encourage the graduates to practice in rural areas, Comerford explained. That is not possible if the students take on a larger amount of debt, he said.

Assistant Dean of Students John Record said that from a dollar-and-cent perspective, it is important for SIU-C to compete with the University of

Journalism school faces accreditation

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

A sight-visit team from the National Accreditation Council is inspecting the School of Journalism today through Wednesday.

"I feel much better about it now than I did six months ago," Walter Jaehng, director of the journalism department, said.

Jaehng's confidence stems from nearly a year of preparation.

"You do the best you can to prepare yourself," he said, noting the advance work his department has put forth on a preliminary report on curriculum and management that was sent to the team two months ago.

The accreditation team will interview journalism students and faculty as well as the dean of the College of Communications and Fine Arts.

Other University organizations that do business with the journalism department also will be interviewed.

The investigation will cover 12 standards set by the national organization of academic and professional journalists.

Practical work facilities (the Daily Egyptian), curriculum and public service are a few of the standards taken into consideration.

Jaehng said he expects the School of Journalism to receive full accreditation.

SIU-C has one of the 90 fully accredited journalism programs in the country, according to Jaehng. There are 253 other programs that either have provisional or no accreditation.

Even if the department was to be demoted to provisional accreditation, Jaehng said that journalism majors would not suffer in the job market because of it.

Jaehng said that even if a provisional accreditation rating could prevent the University from further cutting the department's budget, the School of Journalism would still suffer the mandatory budget cuts given to every University department.

Jaehng said the final accreditation results will be released in April.

The Doors' Jim Morrison's spirit comes to life

Poet and keyboardist give audience insight into former singer's life

Jim Morrison may not be alive, but his spirit definitely came to life through the music of former Doors keyboardist Ray Manzarek and the words of Obie award winning poet-playwright Michael McClure.

The event, which was billed as "An evening of poetry, music and the spoken word," delivered just that to the receptive crowd of about 300 gathered in the Student Center Ballrooms Thursday evening.

A Review

McClure, a beat poet-playwright from San Francisco began the evening with recitations from his poetry as well as the writings of the Doors' legendary lead singer.

McCLURE'S POETRY ranged from intense political commentary on Central America shown in his piece, "Platinum Fur," to delicate inflections of a haiku titled, "I've Gotta Soul That's Burning."

Manzarek, providing original musical accompaniment, warmly caressed the audience with every note he played and received enthusiastic applause at the end of each piece.

The two men took time during the show to talk about themselves and their relationship with Jim Morrison and the Doors and to answer questions from the audience.

MANZAREK FONDLY recalled his days as keyboardist and composer for the California rock band, which was active during the late 1960s and early 1970s. He recounted love-ins and protests when the group performed in San Francisco during the era

Former Doors keyboardist Ray Manzarek urged students to exercise their right to vote, saying "you need to become brothers and sisters and band together," during a break in music and poetry recitation.

He urged young people in the audience to exercise their right to vote by saying, "I've got twenty years on you people, and that's why you need to become brothers and sisters and band together so we can save this (expletive omitted) planet!"

Probably the two most asked questions posed to Manzarek during the evening were, "Is Jim Morrison really dead?" and "Did Morrison really expose his penis to a Miami audience at a 1969 Miami Doors concert?"

MANZAREK SAID that though he never saw Morrison's body, he believes that the rock star is dead. Morrison is believed to have died of a heart attack in Paris in July, 1971.

Of the Miami controversy, Manzarek said he "never saw Jim expose himself, because if he had you would have remembered."

During the second half of the show McClure spoke about meeting Morrison during a recording session and discovering the vocalist's talent for poetry.

McClure said he encouraged Morrison to publish his work, which he eventually did. He said the two had spent time touring the country listening to other poets and sharing their work.

"Snakeskin Jacket" as well as a tribute to the late singer in which Manzarek incorporated a melody from the Doors classic "Riders On The Storm."

The atmosphere created by the two artists provided the audience with food for the mind, as well as a fresh, unique approach to music and poetry.

The evening concluded with one of McClure's pieces titled, "The God I Worship Is A Lion." Manzarek's fiery contribution was the icing on the cake, releasing a boisterous round of applause from the appreciative fans.

After the show, the two artist's signed autographs.

DOES IEA HAVE POLITICAL CLOUT?

Here's what some knowledgeable observers have said:

* In 1984 the Associated Press ranked IEA as the second most powerful legislative lobbying group in Springfield. Only the Illinois Medical Society ranked higher. IFT did not appear among the top ten lobbying groups.

* On March 17, 1988 the Joliet Herald News reported the following about IEA's legislative influence:

"Among all the competing interests that help shape educational policy at the state level, none possesses as much clout as the Illinois Education Association...its lobbyists - it has six, more than any other education lobbying organization - are considered among the most persistent and effective in the business."

* Gail Liebeman, Assistant to the Governor for Education, was quoted (Joliet Herald News) as saying that "IEA is viewed as very powerful. They're very effective lobbyists...They follow the issues, they know what they're talking about, they do research."

* Harold Seamon, Executive Director of the Illinois Association of School Boards, acknowledged that IEA has "an enormous amount of influence over the Legislature. They have just reached a different level of sophistication from the rest of us." (Joliet Herald News).

* The St. Louis Post Dispatch (November 26, 1984) quoted Senator John Maitland (R) of Bloomington as saying, "In a committee hearing, if 17,000 people testify in support of a bill and one IEA representative testifies against it that bill goes nowhere." (No doubt he exaggerates.)

* A 1986 study of educational policy making in six states found that in Illinois, IEA "wields more influence than any other education interest, including the General Assembly" (Joliet Herald News).

It's high time SIU-C save BAS program

WHILE ENROLLMENT among black students continues to increase at SIU-C, it seems ironic that University administrators are determined to dismantle the Black American Studies program.

The BAS program is a valuable one, offering the University community insight into the rich and diverse cultural history of black Americans. But this insight was compromised in 1983 when two faculty members in the BAS program were let go and two general education courses were cut from the curriculum by administrators.

FOR FIVE years, administrators have been showing concern for the ailing BAS program, but, so far, no solutions have been forthcoming.

This snubbing by University administrators, which implies that people of African ancestry have not made significant contributions to American and world history, can almost be considered a supremacist attitude. In a University that ranks in the top ten in the nation for the number of foreign students enrolled, this is most unfortunate.

THE UNIVERSITY must understand that the world should not be dominated by the intellectual tradition of Western Europe. Blacks, women and other minority groups have made significant contributions to the American culture, especially in the past few decades.

Students should be given the opportunity to study these major contributions, especially since it can serve to enrich specializations in areas such as administration, business, education, law, the humanities and social sciences, which lately have been influenced by minority groups.

IN AN ERA when discrimination, in all its forms, again is at the forefront of the American conscience, the University cannot afford to send students into the world unprepared to compete in a culturally diverse society.

Discrimination is born when people do not understand the differences between cultures. The BAS program is one way to effectively combat this ignorance.

BASA, black students will continue to struggle

The Black American Studies Association needs to clarify some things. Although Mr. Seymour Bryson might be hurt that we did not contact him this semester, he failed to remember that working in his so-called system left the black students of this campus without several proposals from BASA for this semester, or perhaps any other semester.

Mr. Bryson does not wish to talk to a group of students because he feels that we have a one-sided view. Speaking for myself, I can't say that I am one-sided at this point in time, and Bryson's actions do not make me doubt my feelings on the matter for one minute.

Some administrators probably hope that BASA will call it quits, but, as you can see by our actions this semester, that's just not possible. I'm sure that this administration can add two courses to the GE curriculum.

The classes will provide black students encouragement to complete their education, promote a feeling of pride that cannot be obtained through any other given history course and can be used toward course requirements.

There is also no need to change the subject matter, because it seems as though the administration would like BASA to become "American Studies." Of course, that will never be acceptable.

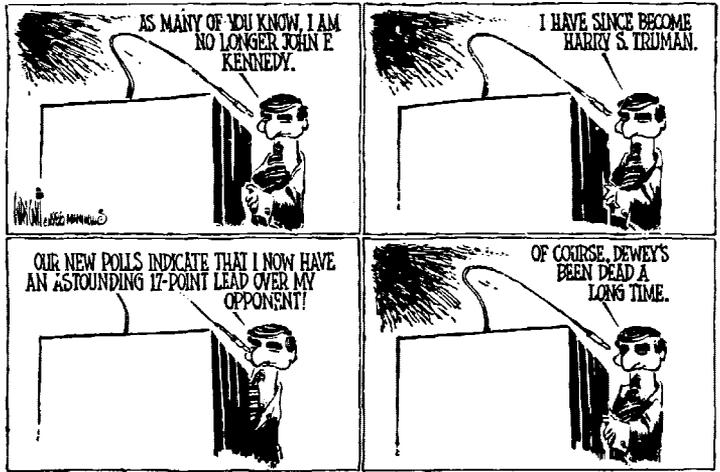

I, along with BASA, will continue the struggle. — Derrick B. Hobbs, junior, engineering technology.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board, whose members are the student editor-in-chief, the editorial page editor, the associate editorial page editor, a news staff member, the faculty managing editor and a School of Journalism faculty member.

Letters to the editor may be submitted by mail or directly to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 500 words. Letters of fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters submitted by mail should include the author's address and telephone number. Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Viewpoint

The intelligent, well-informed voter should be rewarded with extra vote

By Richard Goldstein
Staff Writer

WALKING THROUGH the Student Center the other day, my senses were assaulted by an obnoxious blue display with an American flag reading, EXERCISE YOUR RIGHT, GET OUT AND VOTE.

Despite its intrusion, I couldn't help but admire the directness of the advertisement. It advocated no political figures. Only an unobtrusive credit to the SIU College Republicans marred the purity of the message.

"Do your duty as a citizen of one of the few representative democracies in the world, the sign seemed to say. And vote — preferably Republican — but vote.

My patriotic musings were rudely interrupted by the person walking through the Student Center with me, Chris Wentling. "I don't think people should be pushed into voting," he said.

I IMMEDIATELY leapt into my you've-got-a-duty-to-vote-if-you-live-in-this-country mode.

Not an appropriate response.

I asked him what he was talking about. Signs telling people to vote isn't forcing anyone into the polling booth.

He explained: "I don't want anyone voting who doesn't know what they're doing. If people have to be reminded over and over to vote it means they don't bother to learn anything about what they're voting for. I don't want people like that canceling out my vote."

Good point.

Here's a dilemma: government of the people by the people for the people presupposes interested people. But, since only about half of those eligible to vote in a presidential election actually do, one might assume that interest is lacking.

AS MY FRIEND pointed out, it's not voting that counts, but intelligent voting. In the final days before the election the public is subjected to a mass media barrage — not only from the candidates, but from the media pleading for them to vote. From newspaper editorials to Music Television, the tune may be different, but the song is the same: "Vote."

A reason often voiced by those who do not vote is that their vote is but one of millions, and the outcome of the election will be unaffected. The equally inane response by the "vote or else" crowd of which I was a member until recently is elections are sometimes won in a precinct, county or what have you, by a handful of votes. "You can make a difference," they cheerfully conclude.

I FIGURE I've got a better chance of winning the lottery than of casting a vote on Tuesday that will actually decide whether some politician is employed or unemployed.

What is needed is not the media telling us to vote, but something that will spur citizens of this country to become politicized.

Here is my suggestion.

To encourage potential voters to educate themselves about the people who are going to run their country for the next few years, short quizzes could be offered about pertinent issues of the campaign and the political system in general. As an incentive to do well on the quizzes, an extra vote could be given for each correct answer.

THE QUESTIONS could be developed by a federal commission and included with the voting ballot. Local commissions also could be empowered to develop questions relevant to the local races.

A system such as this would promote education of the electorate and tap the American competitive spirit. The day after an election people could not only ask each other "For whom did you vote?" but "How much did you vote?"

But alas, when you walk into the voting booth on Tuesday there will be no reward for your knowledge of the issues, or the candidates. Yours will be but one vote among many.

And for those of you who won't be voting on Tuesday — it doesn't matter what you think anyway.

Legal drugs would benefit society

To follow up on Scott Parker's letter on the legalization of drugs, I also feel this would benefit society. The bad side of drugs is its abuse and the criminal element inherent to them. All users are not abusers, to assume otherwise would be erroneous.

With legalization, we could help eliminate the criminal element. Total legalization would be foolhardy. Heroin and cocaine's physical harm has proven deadly. Marijuana legalization is possible, though there should be restrictions. It should be legal to grow cannabis for personal use. It grows naturally and is directly tied to freedom of enjoyment of property.

Sale of marijuana and its transport on state roads should be illegal, thereby limiting its use to private property. This wouldn't limit marijuana to homeowners and exclude apartment dwellers. With today's indoor cultivation technology, a plant can be grown in the space of a closet (at minimum cost).

This might eliminate growers on government lands armed with uzi's terrorizing hikers, and the people who inadvertently perpetuate their existence. Instead, users money would go to companies that sell efficient growth systems, stimulating their development. The fact that this money stays in our economy, adding to our GNP, demonstrates a benefit to society. — Robert Borst, junior, business administration.

Final suspect in kidnapping taken into custody in Florida

By Mark Barnett
Staff Writer

The last suspect in a Marion armed robbery and kidnapping was taken into custody Saturday by officials in Florida.

Joe S. Johnston was taken into custody by Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. police officers at 2:45 a.m. Saturday, Williamson County Sheriff's Department officials said. Johnston is one of three men accused of robbing the Lake of Egypt Supermarket, Route 4, Marion, and kidnapping a Creal Springs woman on Oct. 18.

Johnston did not turn himself in, but he was taken in without incident, a Williamson County Sheriff's Department official said.

Johnston, Kenneth D. Gravatt, 23, and Michael W. Gravatt, 19, are accused of robbing the Lake of Egypt Supermarket during the night of Oct. 18. The men robbed the supermarket and kidnapped Michelle Sisk, 28, of Creal Springs, and forced her to go along with the men in her vehicle, police said. Unharmed, Sisk returned Oct. 20 to Marion on a Greyhound bus. Police said the men put Sisk on the bus in Memphis, Tenn.

The Gravatt brothers face criminal charges in Broward County, Fla., before extradition from Broward County, Fla. to Williamson County. They were taken into custody Oct. 23.

Johnston does not face any charges in Florida, and it is "highly possible" Johnston will face charges in Marion — pending extradition trues." Both said it was believed by Dukakis that the public would look at these ads and ask questions. But that wasn't the case.

Now Dukakis is trying to make up ground and get the true information out to the voters, they said.

"It becomes very hard to do when everyone is paying attention to negative advertising," Horrigan said.

Horrigan said it is especially rough when the ads are lies and you have to go on the defensive to get the truth out.

Another issue played up but not supported was the furlough issue, Lyons said.

"The Ricky Horton issue was an unfortunate incident, but it was not Michael Dukakis' fault," Horrigan said.

Lyons said the program that allowed the occurrence was started by a Republican governor and continued by Dukakis.

Lyons also said she disagreed with the way the advertising made it look as if Massachusetts is the only state with a furlough program.

"Every state has a furlough program, including Illinois. But people were led to believe it was something unique to Massachusetts."

Both women blamed a lot of the controversy on the media and disliked the polling process.

"The press three weeks ago said George Bush had won," Lyons said.

Lyons said it was wrong for the media to do this, saying "it takes away from a person's right to vote."

"The media needs to recognize the power they have and understand people are listening to what they say."

Horrigan said the press should act as a source of information and not as deciding body.

College students should take a special interest in the election, Lyons said, because Dukakis is "very, very supportive of education."

Lyons said students should vote for Dukakis because he wants to make it easier to afford school.

Dukakis has proposed a plan where students will have an entire lifetime, if needed, to pay off their loans. The payments will come directly out of the person's paycheck and the size of the payments will be based on how much that person makes.

Horrigan said the Republicans have placed a lot of emphasis on getting back at those students who don't pay back their loans, which in turn hurts those who have every intention of paying them back.

Horrigan said students need to remember that Bush was part of the administration that "massacred" federal funding for higher education.

Lyons said Dukakis also will place much emphasis on elementary education, saying "he recognizes quality education has to begin back in elementary school."

Elementary school also would be a starting place, under a Dukakis administration, to inform children about the harmful effects of drugs, Horrigan said.

But to set the proposed programs in motion, there needs to be money, and both say a lot of the money can come from supplies already at their disposal and without a tax increase.

Lyons said Dukakis has been an effective handler of money during his terms as the governor of Massachusetts, and said many of his programs can be run at the federal level.

Horrigan said that under Dukakis a program may be started, similar to one in Massachusetts, designed to get people off welfare.

She said it takes money to get started, but in the end it has been proven to "get people off welfare and keep them off welfare."

MEDICAL, from Page 1

Illinois medical school. "There may be perceptions that lower cost indicates lower quality and equal cost will eliminate that level of perception," Record said.

Both Record and Comerford said the increase will not hinder students from coming to SIU-C, but the students may have to take out more expensive loans.

The resources are there for the students most of the time, Record said.

"Students weren't happy with the increase, but they have reacted with a significant amount of understanding," he added.

Southern Illinois "deserve a congressman who knows enough about defense to keep America strong."

Poshard was unavailable for comment.

Poshard and Kelley have received much praise for having a "clean" campaign, but Poshard campaign manager Jim Wilson said he was unhappy with the recent attack on Poshard by Kelley in his advertisements.

Wilson said the Poshard camp has been running a very positive campaign with no reference to Kelley in any of their advertisements.

Kelley, however, has been using his commercials to attack Poshard, Wilson said.

In one commercial, Kelley takes issue with House Speaker Jim Wright, and Poshard's connection with him.

Kelley said as a representative, the first vote one will have to make is for the speaker.

Kelley disagrees with the naming of Wright to the position of speaker because of the recent accusations that Wright has been unethical in the way he does business.

"Jim Wright runs the House like the dictator of a banana boat," Kelley said during his press conference.

Among the leading differences Kelley says there is between the two candidates is the way each of them hopes to bring jobs to Southern Illinois.

Kelley wants to continue with many of the Reagan ideals such as low taxes, tax incentives and less government regulations.

Kelley is against the raising of the minimum wage, something Poshard is for, saying it would throw many Americans, including Southern Illinoisans, out of work.

Kelley said he was pleased with the campaign and that he felt the momentum was there to take him to Washington on election day.

Lap swim to help Heart Association

Fund raiser to provide research money

By Phyllis Coon
Staff Writer

A dip in the Recreation Center pool Nov. 13 will mean research money for the American Heart Association, the Recreation Center's aquatics program director said.

"This is the fifth year we have co-sponsored Swim For Heart," Amy Peters, aquatics program director, said. "The heart association chose this event as a fund raiser not only to raise money but also to give people an opportunity, to exercise while helping out."

Swim for Heart will be from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m., she said. To register or to obtain additional information, swimmers should contact the Recreation Center, she said.

Two years ago about 30 people participated in the event, Bill McMinn, assistant director of facilities at the Recreation Center, said.

"That was the year we raised more money than any other aquatic facility in the state," McMinn said.

Last year, however, only 20 people participated in the event, Peters said.

"This year we are trying to get groups more active," Peters said.

One group that always has been active is the Saluki Masters Swim Club. The club is composed of people 19 years old and older who want to improve their swimming skills or participate in swim meets, McMinn said.

Swim for Heart participants collect pledges for the number of laps they can swim in an hour, Peters said.

"Last year we raised about $600," Peters said.

A majority of the participants are students, faculty and people related with the University, Peters said.

There is a large turnover in the students who participate from year to year, McMinn said.

"But we do have a core of individuals who return every year," McMinn said. "One problem is you don't find a significant number of individuals who swim long distances like this."

Swim for Heart is one of several fund raisers the American Heart Association sponsors, he said.

"No matter how many people you can get to participate you're never satisfied and always want to see more people participate," McMinn said.

Audience to choose ending of 'Mystery of Edwin Drood'

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

The audience shall deduce whodunit when "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" hits the Shryock stage at 8 tonight.

The Tony Award winning musical-comedy is billed as the only play in theater history that lets the audience vote on the ending.

Rupert Holmes, who wrote "The Pina Colada Song" in 1979, won three three tonys for "Drood," including best original score and best musical of 1986. This was an unprecedented achievement for a single person.

Charles Dickens died in 1870, before he could finish writing the mystery novel, leaving the identity of Edwin Drood's murderer forever unknown.

In adapting the stage version, Holmes overcame this obstacle by letting audiences choose the guilty party, thereby picking up where Dickens left off.

"EVERY PERFORMANCE is different," according to Joe Leonardo, who is directing the national tour production of "Drood."

"There are 840 different versions of the play that can potentially be performed from night to night," Leonardo said in a phone interview from his office at Temple University in Philadelphia.

"There are eight murder suspects to vote on, and the audience gets to choose from among 21 different combinations of lovers as to who the hero and heroine will be," the director said. "They also vote on the secret identity of one of the detectives," he added.

AFTER THE audience votes, a large sign reading "Murderer for Tonight is..." is set up backstage so that only the actors onstage can see it, according to Leonardo.

Holmes said, "The audience is intrigued; the cast is terrified."

The actors are supposed to be prepared for any plot twists the audience decides, but Leonardo recalled a humorous incident that occurred during the original Broadway run of "Drood," when an actor playing Rev. Crisparkle was voted murderer during one performance.

"He had never been chosen before and hadn't looked at his lines in six weeks. He nearly went hysterical, running around backstage, screaming, 'Give me a script!'"

"IT'S REALLY a thrill for audience members to be active participants in solving the murder," Leonardo said, "because each of the main suspects drops a clue somewhere along the line that they're the culprit."

Leonardo described "Drood" as a musical within a musical. The outer frame of the play, set in London in 1870, depicts a troupe of bawdy music hall actors attempting to stage a musical version of Dickens' unfinished story.

"This spices up the comedy in the play and adds a wonderfully satirical element to it," Leonardo said.

One egotistical actor interrupts the show with frustration at having to leave the performance when his character exits the play for good.

Another actor is too drunk to go on and has to be replaced by the blustery impresario of the Music Hall Royale.

ACCORDING TO Leonardo, these intrusions don't take away from the dramatic narrative, but actually add a sense of 19th century whimsy to the musical.

Leonardo said that "Drood" strikes up the right balance between musical comedy and melodramatic romance, enabling audience members to actually care about the characters.

AUTHOR-COMPOSER Holmes has blended rollicking, up-tempo music hall production numbers such as "Off to the Races" and "Don't Quit While You're Ahead," with gorgeous character ballads like "Moonfall" and "Perfect Strangers" to create a well-rounded score, Leonardo said.

"Drood" promoters have promised a few surprises for tonight's performance and advise careful attention to the actor portraying the town crier.

Tickets for the performance are on sale for $12 and $14 at Shryock Auditorium box office from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

'88 presidential race: Barbs, blunders and boring

By Robert MacKey
United Press International

WASHINGTON — So what did you expect from "The Wimp" vs. "The Smartest Clerk in the World?"

The 1988 presidential race between Republican George Bush and Democrat Michael Dukakis was heavy on scripted barbs and negative attacks and light on issues and specifics.

To many Americans, it was just plain boring.

The campaign started slowly, picked up a little in the summer with the televised glitz of the Democratic and Republican conventions, attracted interest with the fall debates and then sputtered to the Nov. 8 election.

In poll after poll, large numbers of undecided American voters indicated the problem was with the candidates themselves; there was little enthusiasm for either Vice President Bush or Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis.

The race contained no single dramatic event to influence voters, no "October surprise" by either candidate, no emotionally charged issue.

Instead, it revolved around a series of minor events and incidents: Quayle, Pearl Harbor anniversary, Pledge of Allegiance, furloughs, liberal.

All these were of Bush's doing, whether good or bad, and in three months he was able to turn a 17-point deficit to Dukakis in public opinion polls into a double-digit lead.

In short, Bush took the offensive and made the news.

It was not the way the campaign was supposed to go.

In the spring and early summer, Bush trailed Dukakis by double digits and held an "unfavorable" rating among a large number of respondents.

Bush was seen as "a wimp," a derogatory tag placed on him years ago, and as a weak "yes man" to President Reagan, who held few convictions of his own and who failed to oppose the secret sale of weapons to Iran for hostages.

In addition, he had a reputation for making gaffes and stumbling over speaking lines.

Bush looked like easy pickings. Besides, the governor with the Groucho Marx eyebrows was doing well.

Dukakis piled up a lead in the polls while there was still public interest in his race with black preacher Jesse Jackson for the Democratic nomination and while Bush had the GOP contest wrapped up.

A week before the Democratic National Convention opened in Atlanta July 18, Dukakis made what was hailed as a bold stroke to broaden his base and appeal to Southern and conservative voters:

He chose conservative Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas as his running mate — a renewal of the successful 1960 Boston-Austin axis of John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson.

But there was a problem.

Dukakis failed to inform Jackson, his chief rival for the nomination and a potential vice presidential candidate, before announcing Bentsen would be his No. 2 man — a slight that led to discord between the two camps.

The next day, an angry Jackson, the most powerful

Campaign light on issues, specifics; voters lack enthusiasm

black political leader in American history, broke off negotiations with the Dukakis campaign over party platform planks and a unified Democratic convention appeared in doubt.

Top officials of the two camps scrambled and met in Atlanta for days, finally reaching agreement under which Jackson would back the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket in return for giving him a bigger say in the campaign and party apparatus.

At a three-hour meeting the day before the convention opened, Dukakis — whose steely demeanor and confidence is often taken for arrogance — and Jackson sealed the deal and ensured a successful party gathering.

In Atlanta, Dukakis watched as Democrat after Democrat in the convention ripped Bush on prime-time television.

Texas Treasurer Ann Richards set the party tone with a humorous, stinging speech in which she chided Bush for being "born with a silver foot in his mouth."

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., led Democrats in taunts of "Where was George?" to questions about Bush's whereabouts during the Iran-Contra aid scandal and in administration dealings with Panamanian Gen. Manuel Noriega, indicted for drug trafficking.

Dukakis, little known outside New England, then delivered a thoughtful and forceful acceptance speech that mixed jabs at the Reagan administration with promises of "a better America."

The son of Greek immigrants, Dukakis portrayed himself as "the product of the American dream" and hit on a theme of family values while talking tough on drugs, crime and defense.

"We are going to win because we are the party that believes in the American dream," Dukakis said. "This election isn't about ideology; it's about competence."

It was a line that Bush would later turn against the Democrat in arguing the election was about ideology: conservatism against "tax-and-spend" liberalism.

Still, Dukakis was heralded for the speech in which he appeared to soften his image as an unemotional "technocrat" — one of his biggest problems in the campaign. He had been called "the smartest clerk in the world."

In one of the first polls taken after the convention, a New York Times-CBS News survey, showed Dukakis leading Bush by his largest margin, 50 to 33 percent.

But if July was Dukakis's month, August became Bush's.

Bush first overtook Dukakis, 46 to 40 percent, in a CBS News poll Aug. 19, the day after Bush's acceptance speech.

The Quayle issue continued to bound Bush.

The Republicans immediately took the offensive in Quayle's hometown, Huntington, Ind., and enlisted residents in booing reporters at a rally referred to by the press as "The Huntington Massacre."

Questions persisted and Quayle cut short his Midwest campaign Aug. 21, returning to Washington for two days of planning and coaching.

The next day Bush defended Quayle's military record before the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Chicago and got a rousing reception — so enthusiastic that Quayle was flown in to address the VFW that night.

Hostile questions about Quayle's military and college records died, but new ones were raised about his qualifications for office. But polls showed Quayle was not a major detriment.

By late August, the race was considered a dead heat.

Boistered by polls, Bush said he would not agree to more than two debates, both to be held by Oct. 17, well before Election Day. Dukakis would reluctantly agree.

CAMPAIGN, from Page 8

portraying him as a tax-and-spend, soft-on-crime liberal. Dukakis was slow to respond.

Bush implicitly questioned Dukakis's patriotism, criticizing him for vetoing a Massachusetts bill requiring teachers to lead students in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Dukakis was slow to respond. He first explained he vetoed the bill after the state Supreme Court advised him it was unconstitutional. Only weeks later did he accuse Bush of questioning his patriotism.

Bush attacked Dukakis over a former prison furlough program in Massachusetts that allowed murderers out of jail for weekends. Bush cited the case of murderer Willie Horton, who terrorized a Maryland couple while on weekend furlough.

Dukakis was slow to respond. He counterattacked weeks later, noting that a prisoner on a California state furlough program under Gov. Ronald Reagan killed a person while out of jail.

Bush criticized Dukakis for being "a card-carrying member" of the American Civil Liberties Union, and took a boat ride in polluted Boston Harbor to complain about Dukakis's environmental record.

Dukakis, again, was slow to respond.

While Dukakis offered federal proposals for day care, national health insurance and cheaper college education and housing, Bush was hitting him for opposing the death penalty and favoring gun control and abortion.

Polls were moving in Bush's favor. A Washington Post-ABC News poll Sept. 6 showed Bush climbing to a 51 to 43 percent lead.

Dukakis started striking back Labor Day weekend with a patriotic immigrant theme at New York's Ellis Island.

Dukakis accused Bush Sept. 9 of "attacking my patriotism" on the pledge issue and said it reminded him of the anti-communist crusade of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis. "The American people can smell the garbage," Dukakis said.

In mid-September, Dukakis began talking tough on defense and even took a ride in an Army tank — a scene the Bush campaign would later ridicule in political ads.

Bush stumbled Labor Day week, stunning the American Legion convention in Louisville when he declared Sept. 7 to be Pearl Harbor Day — three months early. "I just got messed up," Bush said later.

Of four polls the week of Sept. 12, two showed Bush leading and two showed Dukakis ahead. But the "unfavorable" rating of Bush was declining and Dukakis's was rising.

***

The first debate, Sept. 25, saw sharp attacks from each side. Bush used the word "liberal" seven times and Dukakis accused Bush of making so many promises as to be "the Joe Isuzu of American politics."

Bush tripped on one question, saying he was against abortion but conceding he had not "sorted out the penalties" for women. Polls showed most people thought Dukakis won the debate; Bush was more "likeable." It was a wash. The only vice presidential debate, Oct. 5, focused on Quayle's qualifications.

Three times he was asked what he would do if he had to assume the presidency in an emergency. Quayle replied he would pray and call a Cabinet meeting and noted he had as much congressional experience as John Kennedy.

In what became the most famous line of the debates, Bentsen looked sternly at Quayle and said, "Senator, I served with Jack Kennedy. I knew Jack Kennedy. Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine. Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

The campaign revolved around a series of minor events incidents: Quayle, Pearl Harbor anniversary, furloughs, liberal.

Bentsen won the debate going away, according to polls, but Bush continued to lead Dukakis.

The second presidential debate Oct. 13 was seen as Dukakis's last chance to turn the campaign around. It was lackluster, noted for Dukakis's unemotional reaction to a question of whether he would seek the death penalty for a man who raped and murdered his wife.

An NBC News-Wall Street Journal poll after the debate showed Bush leading Dukakis by his largest margin ever, 17 points.

***

In late October, Bush warned his staff against overconfidence and vowed to continue his attacks as if he were 10 points behind.

Dukakis complained of "negative campaigning" and "lies" by Bush and launched a national television blitz, giving lengthy interviews to the networks.

But polls showed Dukakis trailing badly and he began talking — like Walter Mondale four years earlier — of staging a Harry Truman-like upset. Few believed he could do it.

***

Rumors that Dukakis had undergone psychiatric treatment in 1973 and 1978 were first circulated on handbills at the Democratic convention by followers of political extremist Lyndon LaRouche.

But the mental health rumors were forced into the public domain when Reagan was asked at a White House news conference Aug. 3 if Dukakis should release his medical records.

"Look, I'm not going to pick on an invalid," Reagan joked, a remark for which he later apologized.

The damage was done. Bush did not directly jump into the debate, but forced the issue by releasing a summary of his health record.

Dukakis, whose campaign earlier denied the rumor, was forced to deal publicly with the allegations.

***

Evidence that the campaign was turning rough came on July 30 when Dukakis, who had been careful in the past not to directly attack Reagan, was asked in Louisville who was responsible for the Pentagon procurement scandal.

"There's an old Greek saying," he replied, "the fish rots from the head first."

Bush angrily called it "a cheap shot" and launched an offensive Aug. 4 on foreign policy, charging Dukakis supported the nuclear freeze, was weak on defense and his "liberal" policy would make the world "more dangerous."

Dukakis stumbled on two fronts the very same day.

He damaged himself by reversing positions, first telling reporters he supported the nuclear freeze and then saying the freeze idea had been superseded by progress in arms control talks.

This came as he spoke in Philadelphia, Miss., on the 24th anniversary of the murder of three civil rights workers. Dukakis failed to mention the slayings and only briefly spoke of civil rights to his all-white audience — a slight that did not go unnoticed by Jackson.

Bush kept up his attacks, citing Dukakis's lack of experience in foreign affairs and See CAMPAIGN, Page 10 charging he was on the "very, very far liberal fringe."

 Dukakis hit back, charging Bush "doesn't have what it takes to lead this country" based on his role in the Iran-Contra scandal and with Noriega.

Polls showed Bush closing the gap on Dukakis.

Meanwhile, Bush was trying to raise public interest in what promised to be a ho-hum GOP convention. He said he would pick his vice president by himself, without his advisers, and tell all on arrival in New Orleans.

Little did he know what he would wrought.

The selection of Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., surprised many people, within even the leadership of the Republican Party. The 41-year-old was chosen over Senate GOP leader Bob Dole of Kansas and other experienced men and women.

Within hours, the first critical news stories of Quayle's background surfaced. Quayle was not prepared for the strong line of questioning and did not handle his first television interviews well.

Quayle — a military 'hawk' in the Senate — was questioned as to whether he had used his wealthy family's influence to get into the Indiana National Guard in 1969 to avoid the draft and possible combat duty in Vietnam.

He blurted out that "calls were placed" to get him into the guard but later denied using family influence and said he only joined the guard because he wanted to go to law school as quickly as possible.

Fueled by this, reporters questioned him about how he got into law school with mediocre grades and about a link to a 1980 congressional sex scandal in which he went on a golfing weekend in Florida with lobbyist Paula Parkinson and two other congressmen.

He denied any wrongdoing. But rumors grew, and there was speculation Bush might dump Quayle from the ticket on the day of Bush's acceptance speech and replace him with Dole.

The option was never considered, Bush would say later.

The qualifications of the vice presidential nominee would remain an issue in the campaign, but Bush dampened the immediate brushfire with an acceptance speech to the convention that few thought he had the ability to make.

Appearing forceful and dynamic, the vice president praised Reagan but made it clear to the prime-time television audience that he was his own man.

Bush, never stumbling and in a punchy delivery, pledged to continue the "peace and prosperity" of the Reagan years but also promised "a kinder, gentler nation" for the less privileged.

It was called Bush's best speech ever.

The national conventions were over. In their speeches, Dukakis succeeded in appearing emotional and caring. Bush had come across as forceful.

The general election campaign moved into high gear, not waiting for the traditional Labor Day start in early September.

Dukakis could be expected to keep sounding the "America can do better" theme he set in Atlanta. But the chief question remained with Bush. Was it a one-shot performance? Could the 'new' Bush maintain the forceful image?

To the dismay of Dukakis's aides, it appeared he could.

Word processing made simple.

Word processing made simpler.

Talk about manual labor. The only thing more complicated than most word processors is their instruction manuals.

You can wade through hundreds of pages of "user interfaces" and "output fonts" or try something far simpler: The Smith Corona PWP 3 Personal Word Processor.

Using PWP 3 is truly an exercise in simplicity. Our easy-to-follow Tutorial DataDisk teaches you that moving blocks of text is a snap, deleting words is a cinch and inserting words is effortless.

In fact, PWP 3 is so incredibly simple to use, you can pick it up in practically no time.

That way, you can spend more of your time writing. And less of your time reading about writing.

BI-PARTISAN COMMITTEE FOR ELECTION OF JUDICIAL CANDIDATES GILBERT AND WATT

P. O. Box 3040
Carbondale, Illinois 62902

Co-Chair:
Eugene C. Hunter
Charles C. Hines

Treasurer:
Donald R. Mitchell

JUDGE JOHN PHIL GILBERT
REPUBLICAN
PUNCH #139

JUDGE DAVID W. WATT, JR.
DEMOCRAT
PUNCH #148

Dear Jackson County Voter:

The Bi-Partisan Committee for Election of Judicial Candidates Gilbert and Watt solicits your support and vote on November 8th for Judge John Phil Gilbert and Judge David W. Watt, Jr. Never before in the history of the First Judicial Circuit have there been so many Independents, Democrats and Republicans joining together for the election of Judicial Candidates.

Judge Gilbert is running for the office of Circuit Judge At Large in the First Judicial Circuit. The First Judicial Circuit includes the following counties: Alexander, Jackson, Johnson, Massac, Pope, Pulaski, Saline, Union and Williamson. Judge Watt is running for the office of Jackson County Resident Circuit Judge.

Due to the lack of overall experience and legal ability, as evidenced, among other things by the STRONGLY NOT RECOMMENDED rating Beadle and Isaacs received from the Illinois State Bar Association Judicial Advisory Poll, Democrats are supporting the Republican John Phil Gilbert and Republicans are supporting the Democrat David W. Watt, Jr. Independents are doing likewise.

Judges Gilbert and Watt have received endorsements from business men and women, labor leaders, educators, professionals, farmers, and former judges, all of whom have recognized their exceptional qualifications and experience. Both Judge Gilbert and Judge Watt received "RECOMMENDED" ratings from the Illinois State Bar Association Judicial Advisory Poll and both consistently received high scores for judicial integrity and legal ability.

Please join us in supporting the election of Judge John Phil Gilbert and Judge David W. Watt, Jr. Remember, vote for Republican Gilbert and Democrat Watt on Tuesday, November 8th.

Sincerely yours,

Bi-Partisan Committee for Election of Judicial Candidates Gilbert and Watt

Democrats favored to keep control of Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Entrenched Democrats, well-heeled and well-organized, are headed for control of the 101st Congress in Tuesday's elections, but a number of senators from both parties are battling for political survival.

Under the gun are Sens. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., Ch'c Hecht, R-Nev., David Karnes, R-Neb., Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., and possibly Sens. John Melcher, D-Mont., Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., and Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.

But overall, the 27 senators seeking re-election are favored in most states with indications that the Democrats will hold their 54-46 majority and maybe increase it.

Democrats, who now control the House 255-177, are certain to retain their majority. If there is any shift in numbers, it will be small and probably favor the Democrats.

Incumbents are running in all but 27 of the 435 districts and almost all of them can look forward to another two-year term. Two years ago 96 percent of the incumbents won their races.

Karnes, at 39 the youngest member of the Senate, is considered the sitting senator in most trouble, consistently trailing Democratic former Gov. Robert Kerrey in Nebraska, sometimes by as much as 20 percent in the polls.

But Chic Hecht, a little-known first-term Republican, who was considered even more vulnerable than Karnes at the start of the campaign, has come from far behind in his campaign against popular Gov. Richard Bryan in Nevada. The race is considered a dead heat.

Weicker, the liberal Republican maverick, has dispatched opposition from the right and the left in previous campaigns in Connecticut but polls show him no better than an even bet against state Attorney General Joseph Lieberman.

Lautenberg, a first-term senator, led Pete Dawkins, former Heisman Trophy winner, Rhodes Scholar and Army general, most of the way in the polls but his edge has become increasingly smaller in the final days of the campaign.

Melcher, running against Republican former farm broadcaster Conrad Burns in Montana, Wallop pitted against Democratic state Sen. John Vinich in Wyoming and DeConcini, matched against Keith DeGreen, a businessman, in Arizona are considered long shots for upsets.

The election battlegrounds could be the six open Senate seats, vacated by retiring senators in Virginia, Wisconsin, Washington, Vermont, Mississippi and Florida.

The Florida News-Paper poll of 1,000 registered voters released Sunday showed Democratic Rep. Buddy Mackay and Republican Rep. Connie Mack in a virtual tie, with Mackay leading 44-43 percent and 13 percent undecided.

The race between Republican former Sen. Slade Gorton and Rep. Mike Lowry in Washington is also considered extremely close and the Mississippi battle between Republican Rep. Trent Lott and Democratic Rep. Wayne Dowdy is still there for the taking.

But in Wisconsin, Democratic millionaire businessman Herb Kohl has opened a sizable lead over state Sen. Susan Engelleiter; Former Gov. Chuck Robb has wrapped up Virginia against Republican Maurice Dawkins; and Republican Rep. James Jeffords is a lock the race against U.S. Attorney William Gray in Vermont.

Cornhusker Marching Band shows conservative values

Students 'not like the kids of 20 years ago ... not rebellious'

Editor's note: The St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently sent reporters around the country to gather interviews with ordinary voters who will help choose the next president. This is one story in a series.

By Kathleen Best
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

LINCOLN, Neb. — When the University of Nebraska's alumni came home this fall to Memorial Stadium, the Cornhusker Marching Band played them a medley of hits by the Beatles.

But unlike the Beatles, not all of these young musicians want to change the world.

"In my class, if you asked us if there were serious problems with the way things are run, we'd say no," said Julie Duensing, a junior alto saxophone player. "We're not like the kids of 20 years ago. We're not rebellious."

They are, by and large, Republicans. Like Ms. Duensing, many will be voting Nov. 8 for George Bush, the GOP nominee.

ROBERT MIEWALD, acting chairman of the university's political science department, said students like Duensing reflected a major trend toward conservatism on college campuses across the nation in the past decade.

"These people grew up in the Reagan years," he said. "They want a job and security. They want to be like Mom and Dad — have a house and a car, two kids and a dog."

That more or less describes what Duensing, an articulate 20-year-old, is seeking.

After she finishes her degree in music education, she dreams of finding a job teaching music in a junior high school, settling down in a California suburb and getting married.

"I WANT security and stability in life," she says.

She grew up in a solidly middle-class family in Lincoln and still lives at home. Although neither of her parents went to college, there was never any question that she and her sister would: It was expected of them.

She gets good grades in school because that, too, is expected. Her two music scholarships require her to maintain at least a 3.5 average on a 4-point scale. And she must do it while carrying a 14-hour class load, giving private saxophone lessons and spending at least another 10 hours a week rehearsing for the marching and concert bands.

SHE DOESN'T mind the hard work. It's part of the ethic she grew up with, something she adopted just as she adopted the party of her father when she turned 18.

"Republican to me means conservative," she says. "And conservative means a trend, going along the same line. I wouldn't want to see a president go in who will make drastic changes."

She trusts Bush to stay the course, generating jobs for her and her classmates and holding down the taxes they will one day have to pay. She thinks his running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, will help remind Bush of the needs of younger people.

"BUSH DOES seem old-fashioned," she said. "If Quayle is there working with him, maybe they could combine their ages and thoughts." She says both men seem to share the values important to her — family, friends and opportunity.

The slim, fresh-faced blonde with a penchant for blue jeans and university sweatshirts blends in easily with her Marching Cornhusker colleagues.

Most come from the small towns that dot the flat Nebraska plain, many from high schools with fewer than 300 students.

For them, traditions are important, wearing red to football games, building crepe-paper floats for homecoming and crowning the homecoming court.

"THE KIDS in band are skeptical of new ideas, and any kind of change is hard to implement at first," said Jay Kloecker, the marching band director.

His students, he said, are not idealists but fatalists.

Their revolution is the Reagan revolution. And their anthem is a reggae-style song that Bush has used for his own campaign. "We call ourselves the 'Don't Worry, Be Happy' band," Duensing said.

Bush, Dukakis campaign for last-minute votes

Final 48 hours find candidates hitting key states

Republican George Bush and Democrat Michael Dukakis, campaigning furiously in the final 48 hours of their long and sometimes tortuous drive for the White House, each drove for the hearts of average Americans Sunday as new polls gave mixed signals about how quickly the race was tightening.

Both men began the last push to Election Day in Colorado, where Dukakis, pressing his newfound populist theme, also played on voter doubts about Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle, mocking the prospect of the Indiana senator being put in charge of a crisis situation.

"Think about it," Dukakis yelled to a boisterous rally of about 15,000 in Westminster, Colo. "It gives you the chills doesn't it."

BUSH, MEANWHILE, argued in Colorado Springs that President Dukakis would be a risk to further economic growth and American leadership around the world.

"I ask you to cast a vote for peace, for prosperity, for continued unique American leadership," Bush told hundreds of cheering supporters at a breakfast. "I ask you to give me a mandate from the mainstream of America."

Both men concentrated Sunday on the West, where the biggest prize of the election — California and its 47 electoral votes — is very close, although appears to be leaning to Bush.

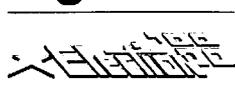

Meanwhile, new polls — taken nationally and in other key battleground states in the past few days — showed Dukakis had made some headway since last week, but gave conflicting signals about whether his momentum had slowed. Given the lead Bush held going into the weekend, the task in the final days for Dukakis was a difficult one.

THE BEST news for the Massachusetts governor came in a new NBC poll which gave Bush a five-point lead, 48 percent to 43 percent. That was down from the nine-point, 51-42, edge the same poll showed two weeks ago.

However, a new survey from CBS and The New York Times placed the GOP vice president ahead by nine points — 52 percent to 43 percent. A CBS poll Friday had placed Bush ahead by seven points. A Cable News Network poll conducted at the same time and released Saturday gave Bush a 49-40 edge.

The differences in the polls might be explained by the margin of error in the surveys, although both the candidates and their top advisers Sunday aggressively put their own spin on the numbers.

BUSH, DECLARED Dukakis, "is slipping and sliding," we're rocking and rolling."

"If we get our vote out, we will win the state of Colorado and I will go on to be the next president of the United States," countered Bush, exhorting his supporters to vote Tuesday.

Dukakis campaign chairman Paul Brontas would not discuss specific states, but said the race was growing close "in most of the major battleground states — many of them becoming dead heats and many of them we're starting to move ahead." However, some aides conceded that Dukakis still had considerable ground to make up on the vice president.

BUSH AIDES have said they expected the race to tighten in the final days and Bush pollster Bob Teeter, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," said internal polls gave the vice president a lead in the vicinity of eight to 10 points. He also claimed Bush was solid in states totaling 230 to 245 electoral votes — just under the 270 Electoral College votes needed to win.

Because of the Electoral College system — under which the winner of a state captures all of that state's electoral votes — if Dukakis is to score an upset Tuesday, he must perform well in the nation's industrial heartland.

However, going into this weekend, almost all of those states, including Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Pennsylvania, were favoring Bush or considered dead heats — forcing Dukakis to run from coast-to-coast to try to pull off a late comeback win.

Movie contrasts hope, reality

Good acting makes 'Everybody's All-American' effective

By Kathleen DeBo
Staff Writer

"Everybody's All-American" has few surprises but touches the heart anyway. It is an unabashedly sentimental look at the contrast between youthful hope and mature reality.

Anyone who saw the previews for the film knows almost exactly where the plot will go. It is a movie about football hero Gavin Grey, played by Dennis Quaid, and his wife Babs, played by Jessica Lange, and how they deal with the reality that old football trophies will not pay the bills.

Two minutes into the movie, viewers know Gavin's nephew Cake, played by Timothy Hutton, will fall in love with Babs.

Some critics have complained that Cake has little to do with the plot. In fact, he is a focal point for the audience. The film is about heroes and beauty queens and most people are neither. Cake represents an ordinary human being. He is the one who wants Babs and wants to be Gavin.

Film Review

The characters go through hard times. Viewers know Gavin will be humiliated and unhappy as a football hero past his prime. Gavin gets old but cannot adjust easily to humdrum family life.

A close family friend dies and the Greys lose the money they had lent him. Yet viewers know Babs will muster her long-disused brain cells to save family finances.

The film is not sad, however. The Greys will overcome all the hardships and the audience knows that despite everything their marriage will succeed.

The whole philosophy of the film is summed up in its promotional slogan "Their life story is a love story."

The film does not do anything unexpected; on the other hand, what it does, it does well.

The film covers twenty-five years, from the late '50s to the early '80s. The detail of the periods are impressive. The early '70s bell-bottom pants cause one to shudder. One scene includes tacky curved coffee table of the '70s. The budget for the sets probably matches the annual income of some third-world nations.

The acting is excellent, though some of the pseudo-southern accents are just a little too stereotyped to be real.

Mostly, the movie aims to tug at the heart, and it succeeds. Audiences know what to expect but good acting and terrific nostalgic details make the movie effective.

Race for judgeships in 1st District a challenge of reform, experience

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

Reform will challenge experience Nov. 8 in two races for judgeships in the First Judicial Circuit.

The husband-and-wife team of Ron Isaacs and Norma J. Beedle will square off against David W. Watt Jr., an associate judge in the First Judicial Circuit since 1982, and John Phil Gilbert, a circuit judge since January 1988.

Gilbert, who was appointed interim circuit judge by the Illinois Supreme Court after the retirement of William H. South, is now seeking election to the post. Beedle is challenging him.

Watt, a Murphysboro Democrat, is running for the seat vacated by Judge Bill F. Green.

Isaacs and Beedle, Carbondale attorneys, entered the race upon discovering Watt and Gilbert were running unopposed.

"I think we've made the political system healthier by giving the voters an informed choice," Beedle said.

"Even if we don't win, we've already had a victory in at least creating public interest in the race," she added.

A write-in campaign, initiated during the March primary, garnered the necessary support for Isaacs and Beedle to become judicial candidates.

In their campaign, the couple has challenged Canon 7 in the Code of Judicial Conduct, which says that candidates for judicial posts cannot voice personal opinions on issues concerning the judicial campaign.

"Any lawyer can look at the canon and see that it's too vague. It's unconstitutional," he said.

Isaacs, a 1987 graduate of the SIU-C School of Law, is a Republican who expressed concern that courtroom rules and procedures have become more important than justice in contemporary courts.

"Through questioning techniques, artful lawyers can interrupt and control what witnesses say," he said.

Of the two candidates, Watt is recommended by the recent judicial poll taken by the Illinois State Bar Association.

Watt has 20 years legal experience in Southern Illinois, including six on the bench.

Watt advocates building more jails if Illinois law continues to make it easier for prosecutors to prove guilt.

Neither Watt nor Isaacs rules out supervision as acceptable punishment for drunk driving offenders, but Isaacs said that in most DUI cases, supervision is too lenient a punishment.

Watt replied, "As a judge, I haven't had a DUI case come before me in 10 months. That's about as long as my opponent's been a lawyer."

In the Isaacs-Watt race, only Jackson County residents will be able to vote since the vacant judicial seat is for Jackson County Circuit Judge. In the Gilbert-Beedle race for Circuit Judge at-large, voters in nine Southern Illinois counties may cast ballots. The counties include Massac, Pope, Williamson, Union, Pulaski, Johnson, Jackson, Alexander and Saline.

Beedle, a former St. Louis prosecutor, has practiced corporate law in Des Moines, Iowa as well as international law in London, England. She is a Democrat, but voted in the Republican primary earlier this year.

Beedle stated her idea of judicial reform: "We need to renew the people's confidence that the judicial system is going to work and be fair. There should be an equal enforcement of penalties for everyone, regardless of a certain person's status. If they're a law breaker, their status should not affect the outcome of the decision, otherwise the people will lose faith."

Beedle said that a stricter enforcement of penalties should apply to contract as well as criminal law.

Gilbert, a Republican, has 16 years law experience in Southern Illinois, including one year as chairman of the Illinois State Board of Elections.

He, like Watt, was favored over his opponent in the ISBA Judicial Advisory Poll.

Gilbert said his 10 months on the bench have assisted him greatly toward accepting the responsibilities of circuit judge.

Veterans' recognition week focuses on MIAs and POWs

By John Walbiay
Staff Writer

"You are not forgotten" is the message being sent out for veterans' recognition week to honor all veterans, but specifically those listed as missing in action and prisoners of war as a result of the Vietnam War.

"The big thing is to accomplish awareness of the MIA's and POW's," Jim Willis, member of the SIU Veterans' Club, said.

Veterans' recognition week is Nov. 7 through 13.

Willis said the reason for the special attention to the MIA-

POW situation is because of the lingering sentiment felt throughout the veteran community.

"The MIA-POW issue is a sore spot with veterans," Willis said.

Along with the issue of returning servicemen from Indochina, Willis said another concern is to get the student population at SIU-C to realize what this may mean to them.

He said many don't realize they could be put in the same situation in the future.

"They don't realize they could be stuck over there and be forgotten just like now," Willis said.

Currently, 2,404 servicemen and civilians are still missing and unaccounted for in Indochina. Of that, 104 are from Illinois, six are former SIU-C students.

There are events scheduled the entire week in the Student Center with a joint procession by military and veterans groups at 3 p.m. Friday that will begin on the sidewalk north of the parking garage.

The procession will move throughout campus and return to the flag pole for a brief ceremony. At the conclusion of the ceremony, black and white balloons will be released in honor of MIA's and POW's.

Administrative intern programs to help give women experience

By Nora Bentley
Staff Writer

The administrative internship program is being revived through the University Women's Professional Advancement Committee, Uma Sekaran, chairwoman of the committee said.

The program was started in 1982, but in 1984 was ended because of various reasons.

The program will be announced before Christmas break and applications will be taken in the beginning of February, Sekaran said.

A selection committee will be formed to choose the candidates and selection of two interns will be made in March, Sekaran said.

The program is for women from the faculty, civil service staff, and the administrative professionals staff who show the potential to be successful in administrative positions, Sekaran said.

Interns will spend half of their time at an office learning administrative skills and the other half at their regular jobs. They will be placed in areas where they will gain the most experience, Sekaran said.

The president will pay for 50 percent of the intern's salary so the department won't be paying for time the intern isn't working, she said.

consistent as oncourt communication this season.

"They competed pretty hard in some of those come-from-behind situations in the first game," Hunter said. "Their ability to compete was one of the more outstanding parts of what they displayed tonight."

The Salukis rallied to tie three times during the first game. The most crucial turnaround came with the Salukis down 14-12 and victimized on a questionable call by first referee Art Bowden.

characteristically slow whistle by stomping to the sidelines and shouting niceties at him that burned some of the more tender ears in the stands.

Bowden responded by slapping a yellow card on Hunter, and the Salukis themselves responded to the additional penalty with driving spikes by Nina Brackins and Teri Noble that tied the score at 14.

"After an emotional scene, one that could have been a potentially distracting scene, they came back and displayed some steadiness," said Hunter, who added that her outburst was not intended to fire her team up, but was her reaction to an intolerable situation.

"I'm not the kind of coach who wants her players on an emotional roller-coaster, up high one minute, down the next," Hunter said. "I was purely and totally very, very concerned with what we could expect (from Bowden) for the rest of the match."

Though Hunter took care of that particular problem, the Salukis' inability to carry out an offensive attack to the middle of the Northern Iowa defense was more pressing and could have lasting results.

"We were pretty predictable down the pike," Hunter said. "It was a combination of things. We haven't had exceptional ball control and our setter's decision not to run enough middle attack caused us to get more conservative."

Sue Sinclair, the team's setter, was in agreement after the match that she should have run the middle attack more. But she added that the defensive breakdown was the key to the match.

"What broke down was blocking," Sinclair said. "When that went down so did our back court play. We'd panic as soon as we lost the ball and had to go into serve-receive."

Turning both things around will mean the difference between winning and losing this weekend's matches against Indiana State and Illinois State.

Though the team needs to win just one match to ensure a spot in the tournament, Sinclair said it will be necessary for team morale to win two and enter postseason play with a winning record. The Salukis are 11-12 overall, 5-2 in the Gateway.

"It would be tough going in knowing we had lost to everyone else in the tournament," said Sinclair, anticipating that Northern Iowa, Southwest Missouri and Illinois State also will qualify.

That is why beating Indiana State and Illinois State is so important.

"For confidence's sake," Sinclair said, "We'll need to win both."

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Southwest Missouri coach Jesse Branch couldn't help but smile.

His team came through, giving them a chance to take second in the Gateway Conference.

"We really feel happy with the chance to finish second, which was where we were picked to finish," said Branch after his team's 28-24 win over SIU-C on Saturday.

"We also have a chance to win three in a row, which we have never done since I have been here," said Branch, in his fourth season.

The Bears went with sophomore DeAndre Smith at quarterback, instead of usual starter junior Darryl Patton.

Smith finished the game with 124 passing yards, 114 yards rushing and a one-yard touchdown run early in the fourth quarter that sealed the Bears' comeback win.

"L'Andre got out of a big hole when he ran for the touchdown," Branch said.

"That really helped. He has started to execute much better."

Branch said he was very pleased with the sophomore's performance, especially since Smith had not practiced all week because of a bruised shoulder.

Saluki coach Nick Rhoades said the touchdown was the beginning of the end for SIU-C.

"When their quarterback scored, it was a real turnaround," Rhoades said.

Branch said the Salukis' passing attack was unexpected, and took some adjustments on his team's part.

"We made several adjustments offensively and defensively," he said. "Defensively we did a good job stopping the pass we hadn't seen come out of Southern Illinois.

"You have to give them credit, they tried to do something unusual. It was a big surprise to us because we hadn't practiced it for a snap all week."

did a couple of things and the defense confused us a bit."

Rhoades said the errors are costly parts of learning the game. "You don't do things like that and expect to win," Rhoades said. "Scott did some good and bad things. He got very rattled in the second half."

Harmke said the turnovers show the inexperience of the Salukis and dictate their need to improve.

"I think it just shows our youth or inexperience or whatever you want to call it. They (Southwest) are the ones who took advantage of the occasion. We have a lot to learn about what to do."

The Salukis relied heavily on Gabbert's arm for the game, as the freshman racked up 230 yards passing, hitting 19 of 31 attempts. They also compiled 130 yards rushing.

"It was an adjustment based on our personnel and Southwest's strength up front," Riley said about the Salukis' tendency to almost abandon the wishbone for a game. "They have been doing a blitz defense and bouncing in and out of formation. We tried to make them line up, and had some success. It all comes back to individual errors. We dropped some critical passes."

Rhoades said the Salukis were looking to vary their offensive look.

"We just felt like we had to mix it up. We tried to take advantage of the ability we had and move the football, but their stuff eventually got to us."

Defensively, the Salukis were without the services of linebacker Kevin Kilgallon, who was out with a shoulder injury, and saw limited play from linebacker Tyrurne Johnson, who is having knee problems.

"We had both starting linebackers out, but we still should have won the ball game," defensive coordinator Jim Tompkins said. "We didn't play well. We didn't have the intensity we have had the last three weeks. We made a lot of hitting mistakes which we thought we had worked out from earlier this year."

Another injured player added to the constantly growing list was halfback Garrett Hines, who suffered a possible fracture of his right arm early in the first quarter.

Rhoades said the Salukis must now buckle down for the final two games of the year and try to finish strong.

NIU wins over unbeaten WIU

By United Press International
Adam Dach rushed for 142 yards and one touchdown Saturday leading Northern Illinois to a 16-6 victory over Western Illinois, routing Western's perfect record.

Elsewhere in state action, Arkansas State came out ahead of Illinois State 28-10 and Eastern Illinois blanked Western Kentucky 6-0.

At De Kalb, Ill., Western committed five turnovers as they fell to 9-1. Northern improved to 6-4.

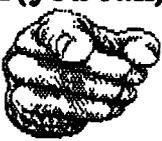

A 33-yard field goal by John Ivanic gave Northern a 3-0 lead in the first quarter. The Huskies went ahead 9-0 in the third quarter on a 1-yard dive by Dach to cap an 86-yard, 15-play drive that consumed 8:01. Ivanic's point-after-attempt sailed wide right, snapping a point-after-kick streak of 40.

Northern took a 16-0 lead in the fourth quarter after Kevin Cassidy intercepted Western quarterback Paul Singer, who completed 22 of 44 passes for 248 yards. Eight plays later, Milton Hammuck ran 2 yards for the TD.

Western averted a shutout on its next possession when Singer connected with Steve Williams on a 5-yard TD pass with 14 seconds left in the game to cap a 71-yard, 11-play drive. The run conversion by Singer failed.

Western, which was held to only 46 net yards rushing, committed two interceptions.

Tae Kwon Do isn't just fighting

Student learns to respect life through discipline

By Megan Hauck
Staff Writer

First you learn respect, then you learn to fight. And when you think you know both, you'd better think again.

"I didn't like bowing to everyone and showing respect," Henry Lee Waller Jr., a second degree black belt in Tae Kwon Do, said. "Me being black and bowing to people — it was always drilled to me to keep your head up and don't be subserviant."

"Bowing shows the other person that you respect his life and rights as he should respect yours. It shows discipline and good will and good sportsmanship."

—Henry Lee Waller Jr.

Waller, a graduate student in telecommunications, began Tae Kwon Do in 1979, a time when blacks were still getting used to their civil rights, he said.

These days Waller understands the respect he had once rebelled against. After winning the Midwest Tae Kwon Do Championships Oct. 16 in Kansas City, Mo., Waller has more respect than he knows what to do with, and it's all directed at him.

"Bowing shows the other person that you respect his life and rights as he should respect yours."

"It shows discipline and good will and good sportsmanship."

Waller said respect is the etiquette of the martial art, and it's well deserved.

"I could walk down the street and just start beating up someone and they wouldn't know how to stop me," he said. "You show respect so they don't try to take your head off."

Waller competes in about five tournaments a year. The tournaments include both fights and forms, a sequence of movements judged by their preciseness and form.

The 6-foot, 185-pound Waller competes only in the fighting aspect of the tournaments and has won about 35 awards over a nine-year span, he said.

"I don't like to do forms. It's all politics. It's who you know or whether they like you that gets you a win."

"There's not too much of that involved in fighting. You either win or lose, and there's usually not a question about who wins."

A former football standout in high school, Waller said he enjoys Tae Kwon Do more than other sports because Tae Kwon Do is an individual effort.

"Football was my first love," he said. "I wanted a football scholarship, but my coach didn't think I was good enough."

"You don't have to depend on a coach or a team in Tae Kwon Do."

Waller said Tae Kwon Do has become a way of life to him.

After learning the fundamentals of the sport at the House of Discipline in Feoria, Waller said he began to progress past the level of instruction he was offered. He has been training solo for about six years, he said.

"Once I'd learned everything I needed to know, it was just a case of putting everything together."

Waller's workouts include weight lifting and running about three miles daily. Sparring and practicing kicks on punching bags makes up the rest of Waller's 18- to 20-hour a week routine.

Herrin at home for Benton game

By David Gallanetti
Staff Writer

BENTON — For the men's basketball team, it was the first intrasquad scrimmage of the new year. For head coach Rich Herrin, it was a trip back home.

Friday night's exhibition in front of some 1,500 spectators marked the return of Herrin to Benton High School, where he coached for 25 years before coming to SIU-C in 1985.

"I look up at the rafters and remember how difficult it was to win some of this," said Herrin, referring to the banners hanging from the ceiling, proclaiming the feats of Benton basketball.

While coach for the Rangers, Herrin won 55 major championships, 21 being regional championships. His teams appeared in the Sweet 16 on 10 occasions and in the Elite Eight seven times. Herrin's teams also won 11 South Seven Conference titles.

For his efforts, Benton High School changed the name of the gym to Rich Herrin Gymnasium on Dec. 6, 1982.

"It took me six years to win (a conference title) here," Herrin said. "It takes a long time to build a program. We are making headway."

The trip to Benton carried a double meaning for Herrin, as it provided an opportunity to visit with his brother Ron, now the head coach at Benton.

"Ron and I are very close," the Salukis' coach said. "It is a real nice homecoming. I get to see a lot of old friends and I think the players like to play here."

Rich Herrin said he often consults his brother regarding basketball strategy, and the reverse also applies.

"Anytime Ron sees something wrong, he'll mention it to help us out," Rich Herrin said. "I don't really see (Benton) play much, and I am restricted about where I can go."

"We talk basketball all the time," Ron Herrin said. "I probably watch the Salukis more than he watches us, but if it works on the college level it will work on the high school level. The players are just as sophisticated in high school."

"We talk about the little things like timing. We have constantly talked basketball ever since we both started coaching."

Ron Herrin said he hopes his brother's success at Benton carries through his stay at SIU-C.

"I just like to see him do well," Ron Herrin said. "I'm glad to see SIU has got some better talent and are much deeper. I think they will be exciting."

Illini ruin Indiana's rose bowl hopes; 21-20

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (UPI) — Years from now, long after Jeff George and Mike Bellamy graduate from Illinois, their last-minute touchdown connection to beat Indiana 21-20 may still be remembered as The Play.

For now, it is simply a matter of survival. George's 5-yard TD toss to Bellamy with 26 seconds left in the game kept the Illini alive in the race for the Big Ten championship.

Illinois and Michigan State, both with 4-1-1 Big Ten records, are a game behind conference-leading Michigan, 5-0-1. The Illini play the Wolverines at Ann Arbor, Mich., Saturday. Michigan State plays at Indiana Saturday.

But that's Saturday. Now,

Illinois can savor its victory over the Hoosiers before a crowd of 66,201, most of whom left Memorial Stadium and missed the dramatic conclusion that saw Illinois score two touchdowns in the last two minutes.

"This is one of the greatest comebacks I've experienced," said Illini Coach John Mackovic.

"We were pleased since it is an early season meet and as young of team as we have," said Ingram. "I think they responded real well."

Diving coach Dave Ardrey said he was especially pleased with the first-time collegiate performances of two of his divers, Laine Owen and Michelle Albrecht.

"We are right where we want to be," Ardrey said. "I was not disappointed at all, they performed great."

Ardrey said the two divers lost by only 6 or 8 points each competing against older divers that were expected to beat them by a larger margin.

Ardrey said the performance adheres to the team's schedule set for the NCAA finals in April.

"Other teams just shoot for the conference, our plans are laid for a little farther."

The team's next meet is Nov. 11 at top-ranked Nebraska, who is expected to provide more competition.

"Nebraska will be a real change in pace for us. We have to step it up and take our performance and intensity up a level," Ingram said.

Men's swim team takes Western Illinois by storm

By John Watblay
Staff Writer

The men's swimming and diving team set six meet and pool records to take first place Saturday at the Western Illinois Relays in Macomb.

The team, which won the event for the second straight year, outscored second-place Western Illinois by 64 points.

"We were the stronger team going in, and it turned out that way," Doug Ingram, men's and women's swimming coach, said.

The team set records in the 300-yard butterfly relay, the 800 freestyle relay, the 300 breaststroke relay, the 1,500 freestyle relay and the 400 individual medley relay.

Three standouts for the men's team were Chris Gally, Eric Bradac and Harri Garmendia. Gally set a record for a split time in the 300 butterfly relay of 50.7 seconds. Gar-mendia set a split time record in the 400 individual medley relay of 54.60. And Bradac also set a split time record in the 1,500 freestyle at 4:37.06.

The men divers also won their portion of the competition with first-place finishes in both the 1- and 3-meter springboard competitions to contribute to the men's overall team scoring.

The women's swimming and diving team finished 14 points behind first-place Illinois State with a team total of 128 points. Western was third with 92 points.

Volleyball team zapped by Northern

By Lisa Warns
Staff Writer

The women's volleyball had a commanding three-game victory over Drake on Friday, but second-place Northern Iowa put the Salukis Gateway hopes on hold by defeating SIU-C in three games on Saturday.

SIU-C's fourth-place record is 5-2, 11-12 overall. Northern Iowa is 6-1, 19-9 overall.

"We're not finished yet," Coach Debbie Hunter said about the race to Gateway

Conference semifinals.

This weekend, Southwest Missouri moved into first after defeating Illinois State. Southwest Missouri is 7-1, 20-6 overall. Illinois State slipped to third (5-1, 20-7 overall).

In all three games against Northern Iowa, the Salukis had to come from behind. They captured brief leads but the Panthers repeatedly pulled ahead to win, 16-14, 15-13, 15-9.

"We competed hard in come-from-behind situations," Hunter said. "Our blocking was the weakest part of the game. It needs improvement."

The Salukis had only four team blocks.

The key to Northern Iowa's win was that it only had seven hitting errors and produced a .393 hitting percentage.

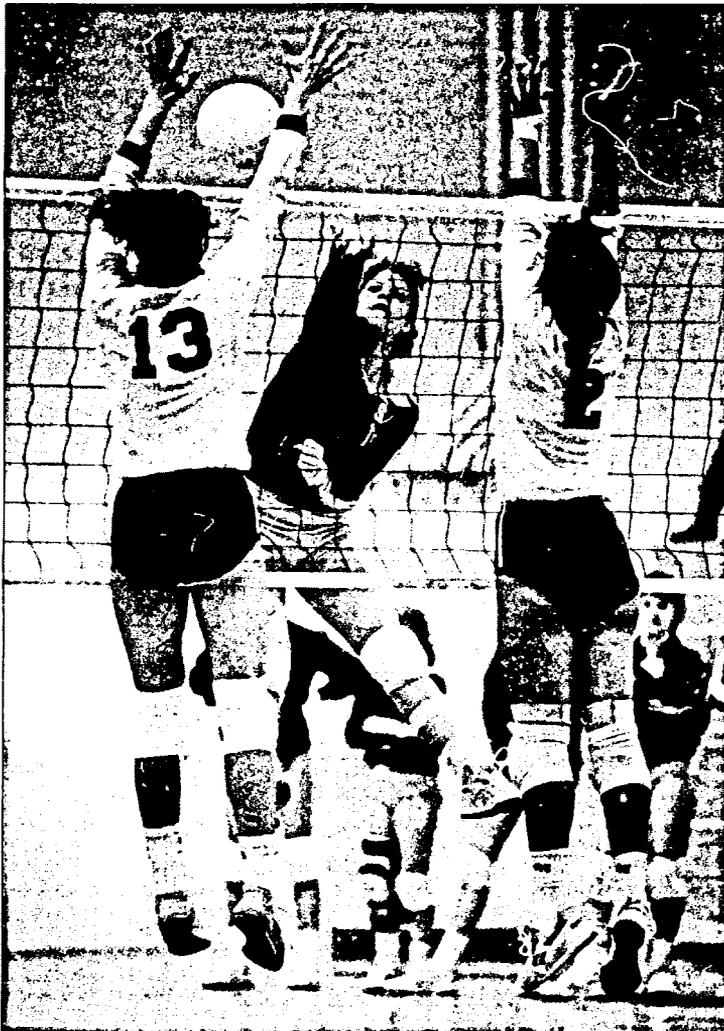

Northern Iowa coach Idrage Ahrabi-Fard said the Panthers' offense was the major reason for their win, but added: "SIU-C could have won every game."

"Our game got more conservative," Hunter said. "We were not running enough middle attack."

Hunter added, "We need to get our middle attack re-established. We didn't come close to using all our offensive choices."

Gateway race top objective for 5-2 spikers

The women's volleyball team has abandoned sometimes fanciful pursuit of the Gateway regular season title so it can concentrate on the matter at hand — simply qualifying for the conference tournament.

To the team's credit, it did not give up its efforts to win the remainder of the matches on the conference schedule and thus earn the right to hold the four-team playoff.

But after Southwest Missouri — a team that had beaten SIU-C earlier in the season — defeated previously undefeated Illinois State on Friday night, the Salukis should have realized that getting the top seed was a lost cause and started to focus on the coming opponent.

But it took a three-game drubbing Saturday by two-time defending champion Northern Iowa to drive the lesson home.

Perhaps it was the reality of the Salukis' fourth-place standing in the Gateway that gave Coach Debbie Hunter reason to be optimistic after the loss.

It certainly wasn't her team's offense, which stalled in the third game managed only two spikes for point. It wasn't the defense, whose blockers left gaping holes at the net and forced the back row defenders to scramble and roll in vain.

But Hunter saw her players flash signs of desiring to be competitive, an element that has been almost as in-

Southwest Missouri slips past Salukis, 28-24

By David Gallanetti

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — If all football games were called after the first half of play, the Salukis would have no trouble winning. But for Rick Rhoades and Co., the final 30 seconds are becoming killers.

After taking a 17-10 lead into the locker room at halftime, SIU-C was outscored 18-7 in the final two periods en route to a 28-24 loss to Southwest Missouri on Saturday.

"We had chances to put it away on more than one occasation and couldn't do it," Rhoades said. "I wasn't pleased with any aspect. We had the opportunity to win and just didn't get the job done. This is not an easy time."

The loss drops the Salukis to 4-5 overall, 2-3 in the Gateway. The Bears improve to 4-5 overall and 3-2 Gateway.

Action in the fourth quarter featured two critical turnovers that led to the Salukis' demise.

With 11:57 left in the game and the Salukis up 24-22, Bear quarterback DeAndre Smith fumbled the ball on Southwest's 10-yard line and SIU-C left tackle Shannon Ferbrache recovered.

On the first play of the Salukis' drive, freshman quarterback Scott Gabbert tried to hand off to fullback Chuck Harmke, but fumbled and the Bears' Derrick Jackson recovered.

"We ran an outside veer and I tried to force it," Gabbert said. "I should have given it to the fullback."

Offensive coordinator Fred Riley said the Salukis have to learn from those types of mistakes.

"We ran the option and tried to pull the ball but goofed up," Riley said. "When we gave it back to the fullback, it hit his hip and dropped. We have to learn some lessons from those kinds of mistakes."

With 1:38 left in the final period and the Salukis on Southwest's 30-yard line, Gabbert threw and interception into the hands of cornerback Bill Baird.

"It was trying to force it too much," Gabbert said. "They
