Bill to help universities install fire sprinklers

SIUC should receive grant, to upgrade old fire systems

Lindsey J. Mastis
Daily Egyptian

The state may not have money to burn, but it's more than willing to shell out extra money to prevent the University's buildings from going up in flames.

A bill proposed in Springfield could give SIUC a grant to upgrade its older fire systems and install sprinklers where they are needed.

Rep. John Shimkus, D-ILL, co-sponsor of the bill, said the five-year matching grant program would help put fire sprinklers in dormitories and Greek houses that were built before sprinklers were required. Priority is given to institutions that are unable to fund placing sprinklers on their own.

Ed Jones, director of University Housing, said SIUC should qualify for the grant.

"With the way the state budgets or even the national budgets are, the only thing you hear are bad things about budgets, so I'm thinking everybody's going to be in need," Jones said.

Shimkus said grant money could be used for similar fire systems. This would help prevent potential injuries, and death during a fire would also be covered.

"The debate is the old buildings," Shimkus said. "It's very costly to put in sprinklers so we'll help there, but it's less costly to just hang up fire extinguishers."

"I would hope that the University would have the best quality safety equipment that they can in essence afford. And if the water-base is not necessarily helpful in electrical fires, I would think there would be a need to look at somehow doing it as quickly as possible having ABC type."

Last year, the DAILY EGYPTIAN pointed out that dormitories in Thompson Point had only Class A fire extinguishers. Class A extinguishers contain water and are approved for use on small paper or wood fires. If a Class A extinguisher is used on an electrical fire, the person holding the device could be electrocuted.

Some floors in Brush Towers had both Class A extinguishers and multi-purpose extinguishers. However, the multi-purpose devices were behind breakable glass, whereas the water-based devices were out in the open.

Jones said the University has replaced extinguishers that needed to change.

"If we look at the kind of fires that you might

Price murder trial underway

Burke Wasson
Daily Egyptian

A man charged in the March 2001 shooting death of a 21-year-old SIUC student began his jury trial Monday at the Jackson County Courthouse in Murphysboro.

Teron C. Price, 23, of Tammis is being tried for fatally shooting Marcus S. Thomas, a junior in psychology from Matteson, during an attempted robbery outside Thomas' home in the 300 block of East College Street.

Price was charged by the Jackson County state's attorney with two counts of first-degree murder and attempted armed robbery. If found guilty, he faces 20 to 60 years in an Illinois correctional facility.

During the trial, Jackson County 5th Circuit Court Judge E. Dan Kimmel said he anticipates the jury will have heard enough testimony to reach a verdict today.

Price was arrested in April in Gary, Ind., after he had been wanted in connection with Thomas' death since August 2002.

According to previous police testimony at Price's May preliminary hearing, Price was accompanied by two of his cousins, Maurice D. Carter and Jeremy Clark, during the attempted robbery.

Carter, 22, testified Monday he, Price and Clark originally planned to rob Thomas' home of money and marijuana.

Carter is serving a four-year prison sentence at the Menard Correctional Facility in Chester for armed robbery in connection with Thomas' death.

Carter said the three cousins met March 16 at a family member's home within walking distance of Thomas' home. He said Price was carrying a sawed-off .22 caliber rifle while they walked to the residence.

Carter said he stood on the corner of a street near Thomas' home and acted as a lookout while Price and Clark walked up to the residence's front deck and knocked on the door. He said he heard glass breaking behind him, aimed around and saw Price and Thomas wrestling on the porch.

Carter said Clark stood nearby and did nothing.

Carter testified he saw Thomas jump over a railing on the deck and then heard a gunshot. Carter said he ran as soon as he heard the shot and continued to run as he heard more gunfire. He said he did not see who was firing the shots and was unaware that anyone was hurt.

He testified he saw Thomas running down a street and then caught up with Price and Clark and ran with them in another direction. Carter said the three of them never chased Thomas and did not discuss the situation during the rest of the evening.

Carter said he did not discuss what happened with anyone until he was arrested in August 2001 in connection with the incident.

Thomas' body was shot once in the lower back in the early morning hours of March 17, 2001, and found on the living room floor of an apartment in the 300 block of South Marion Street.

According to Carbondale Police, residents living between Thomas' home and the apartment where his body was found reported hearing gunshots at about 3 a.m. and seeing someone run down a street yelling for help. A blood trail stretched from Thomas' house to about 100 feet down the street.

Carbondale Police Officer Aaron Burrill testified Monday he was called to the apartment and found a black male later identified as Thomas with no shirt and no shoes, lying on his stomach. Burrill said he noticed a bullet lodged in Thomas' back as well as dried blood around the gunshot wound and on his face. The officer said he attempted to rouse Thomas

City Council to make decision on march in street

Parties say conclusion can be reached, but where will be debated

Jackie Keane

Making each step a shout against violence, the Women's Center is seeking to shout even louder by marching in the street for this year's Take Back The Night March.

As the march nears, the Carbondale

City Council must decide to grant the Women's Center's request for this year's annual walk to take place in the street rather than on the sidewalk.

The group will set a precedent in the community if the demonstration takes place in the street.

The City Council meeting will take place at 7 p.m. tonight at the Student Center Ballroom B. It is open to the public.

Camille Dorff, executive director at the Women's Center, said the reason they want to walk through the street this year is to increase the impact of the march.

"We have reached a level of involvement with violence with women, violence in schools that we feel this needs to be an issue brought to the streets," Dorff said.

Also, she said the new mayor and City Council members were additional precursors that have made it time to bring it to the streets.

The march has taken place in Carbondale for more than 25 years.

According to Dorff and Councilwoman Maggie Flanagan, the march in Carbondale took place in the street during the early '80s.

"I remember years ago we were on the street," Flanagan said.

But according to city records and Mayor Brad Cole, there has never been a march in the street except for the Lights Fantastic Parade and the SIUC Homecoming parade.

Each of those parades, according to Cole, draws a crowd of more than 10,000 people.

Last year, more than 100 people participated in the march to take back the night.

"It is a community event now, and when people see them walk down the sidewalk, it makes for a very impressive show," Cole said. "The issue is paying attention to ending violence against women and women's rights. I don't think this should get into the sidewalk or the street."

It will be a journey from the Interfaith Center to the Carbondale Town Square, walking down Illinois Rt. 51 in hopes of promoting community awareness against violence.

In order for the march to take

NATIONAL NEWSExperts fear ease of getting false ID is invitation to terror

WASHINGTON (KRT) — Two years after the nation was shocked to discover how easily the Sept. 11 hijackers obtained official identification cards, such as state-issued IDs they never should have received, experts say such documents are still too readily available to terrorists who could use them to facilitate more attacks.

While there has been progress since the attacks in making certain identity documents, such as Social Security cards, harder to get, experts say there has been alarming backsliding in other areas.

Increasing numbers of local governments, including Cook County and Chicago, have begun accepting Mexican identification cards, called matricula consular, as proof of identity.

The county is also considering recognizing similar cards from all other Latin American nations including undocumented immigrants. Nations' consulates issue the cards to their citizens living abroad.

Last month, California legalized the issuing of driver's licenses to undocumented immigrants. Critics worry that the new law allows immigrants to present proof of their identities that can be difficult if not impossible for state

pastor and herself at church

ATLANTA, Ga. (CNN) — A woman opened fire at an Atlanta church before services started Sunday morning, killing her mother and the minister before committing suicide.

Congregants of Turner Monumental AME Church said Sheila W. Chaney Wilson, 43, was agitated when she came to the church, in the Kirkwood neighborhood on the city's east side.

Wilson apparently shot the Rev. Johnny Clyde Reynolds after he greeted her and was walking away with his back to her, said Atlanta police spokesman Sgt. John Quigley. Police believe Wilson then shot Jennie Mae Robinson once in the head before turning the gun on herself.

One woman in the sanctuary at the time fled after the first shot was fired, and the other took cover behind a pulpit, Quigley said. He said an assistant pastor came in after hearing shots and found the three bodies on the floor.

Assistant Pastor Christy Miller said the pastor had just finished teaching Sunday school and was walking through the sanctuary when he stopped to talk with Wilson and Robinson, 67.

INTERNATIONAL NEWSU.S. troops train an Iraqi army with new ethic, allegiances

KIRKUSH, Iraq (KRT) — Last week, the first batch of graduates in Iraq's new army started over as foot soldiers along with nearly 700 other new recruits.

"All those years were for nothing," said Abdulla, who marched with the recruits Saturday. "I was an officer. Now I'm a soldier."

If army professionals such as Abdulla can swallow their pride and join a new force, Iraq stands a chance of rebuilding its army out of the ashes of the one that was disbanded, despite the current difficulties.

On Sunday, hundreds of men claiming to be former Iraqi soldiers converged on a U.S. base in central Baghdad and in the southern city of Basra, demanding financial help in a second day of violent protests.

But even as the men clashed with U.S. and British soldiers, U.S. trainers working with recruits in this remote desert base 60 miles northeast of the capital are seeking to create a fighting force loyal to a country and not a regime controlled by one man.

Israel strikes on suspected terrorist camp in Syria

JERUSALEM (KRT) — Israel struck deep inside Syria Sunday in retaliation for the suicide bombing of a Haifa restaurant that killed 19 Israelis and wounded 55 on Saturday.

Israel said its warplanes bombed a terrorist training camp used by groups including Islamic Jihad, the organization that claimed responsibility for the Haifa attack.

Syria protested, saying the attack was on a refugee camp, and Islamic Jihad denied that it had any training camps in Syria.

The pre-dawn raid on the camp about 14 miles from the Syrian capital of Damascus was the first Israeli airstrike on Syrian soil in 20 years, raising fears that the Palestinian-Israeli conflict could spill over into regional hostilities.

By retaliating in Syria, instead of Ramallah, where Palestinian President Yasser Arafat has his headquarters, Israel sidestepped domestic pressure to deport Arafat.

Last month, the Israeli cabinet voted to "remove" because Arafat says he is complicit in terror attacks.

Man robs Short Stop

Police have no suspects

Lindsey J. Mastis
Daily Egyptian

A suspect armed with a knife entered the Veach Short Stop on 1123 E. Walnut St. at 10 p.m. Sunday, took a cash drawer and fled on foot, police said.

Police describe the suspect as a black male, about 6-foot-1 with a slender build.

He was wearing a dark colored sweat suit with a bandana over his face.

Jurhee Veach, Short Stop supervisor, said there were no injuries. The two women working at the time were at the end of their shift.

"It was scary for them, but no one even came close to getting hurt," Veach said.

"He didn't come close to either one of the women with the knife... he just shoved it."

The suspect demanded money, but Veach said he did not take very much.

She said the suspect appeared to be wearing some sort of Halloween wig.

Police said the suspect has not been located, and they are continuing their investigation.

Man of peace, faith returns from Iraq to speak with Carbondale

One man speaks about 40-year commitment to non-violent solutions

Nicole Sack
Daily Egyptian

An audience at the Interfaith Center received a first-hand account Sunday of what life is like in Iraq. Gene Stoltzfus, director of the Christian Peacemaker Teams, returned from Baghdad in mid-September after participating as an independent observer and an advocate of non-violent solutions in Iraq for six weeks.

"Baghdad is a very insecure city today," Stoltzfus said. "There has been a complete breakdown in security."

Stoltzfus explained while most Americans may be familiar with the safety risks facing U.S. troops, there are also safety risks concerning Iraqi citizens. While he was in Baghdad, Stoltzfus said he worked with Iraqi families whose sons and daughters had been picked up and detained by U.S. forces.

"People would come asking if we could get information on their relatives," Stoltzfus said. "These families had no reliable information on their relatives for one or two months."

Stoltzfus said his group had authority in Baghdad because the Iraqis were very informed people and were aware that churches around the world had discussions about the legitimacy of the war.

The Christian Peacemaker Teams is an organization that consists primarily of Mennonites, Brethren in Christ, Church of the Brethren and Quakers, as well as other Christians working for peace.

Stoltzfus said when Iraqis were captured, they were taken to the Baghdad International Airport, a place now used by U.S. forces as an interrogation center.

He shared a story of one Iraqi doctor and his three sons who were misidentified by U.S. troops. After a three-hour shootout, the troops told the doctor they had made a mistake and were sorry. The troops then took his three sons in for questioning.

The incident Stoltzfus described happened in July, and the sons are still being held today. According to Stoltzfus, there are about 8,000 detainees in Baghdad and between 8,000 and 20,000 detainees in Iraq.

Besides trying to help families acquire information about their missing loved ones, Stoltzfus also spoke with Iraqis to understand how they viewed current U.S. occupation.

When he first arrived in Baghdad, his goal was to speak with at least two Iraqis a day. After his six-week stay, he had spoken with teachers, religious leaders, shopkeepers, family members and students.

Stoltzfus said one generalized theme he found was Iraqis asking, "How did this come to be?" Stoltzfus said initially most Iraqis wanted to see if U.S. involvement could work in Iraq.

"I heard people say, 'Let's see if this thing will bring good. Let's give it a chance,'" Stoltzfus said. "Then they saw a complete disintegration of security in Iraq."

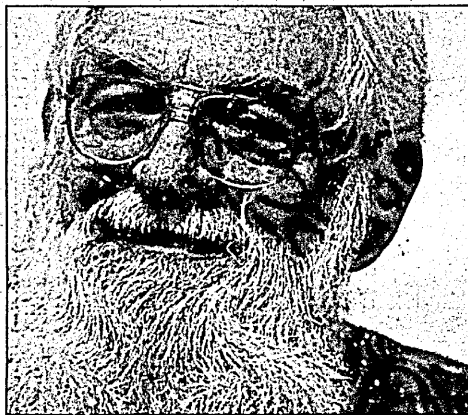

The other issue Stoltzfus found was Iraqis asking, "Why won't the Americans talk to us?" He said many Iraqis he spoke with thought the rebuilding of Iraq would be a democratic experiment.

"They didn't find that," Stoltzfus said. "Under Saddam, people disappeared; under the U.S., people disappeared. Under Saddam, there were state-sanctioned killings. And under the U.S., there have been state-sanctioned killings."

Stoltzfus said Iraqis are now feeling a sense of discouragement.

"It's only been six months," he said, "but that is what they experience now."

As Stoltzfus' presentation continued, audience members took the opportunity to ask him their unanswered questions regarding Iraq. Linda Dick of Cobden wanted to know how

DEREK ANDERSON - DAILY EGYPTIAN

After spending six weeks in Iraq as an independent observer, Gene Stoltzfus, director of the Christian Peacemaker Teams, returned to the United States to give a first-hand account Sunday night of the situation at the Interfaith Center. "I heard people say, 'Let's see if this thing will bring good. Let's give it a chance,'" Stoltzfus said. "Then they saw a complete disintegration of security in Iraq."

many Iraqis have been killed. While the U.S. Department of Defense keeps stringent records of American casualties — to date, there have been 320 U.S. troops killed — there is no centralized agency in Iraq that keeps records of war casualties.

"I don't think anyone keeps track," Stoltzfus said. "Neighborhoods have their own figures on how many have been killed in that area, but that can vary from village to village."

Also, he said there is no way to know how many Iraqis have been tortured or killed in detention centers.

"There is no way to get that information, except from those who come back," Stoltzfus said.

Curt Wilson, another audience member, wanted Stoltzfus to address any media bias he encountered since returning from Iraq.

Stoltzfus said that while he was in Iraq, the news he encountered on the Internet was fairly accurate in comparison to what he was experiencing first hand.

"It wasn't too bad," Stoltzfus said. "The Chicago Tribune had some very critical articles. But the television coverage was not very illuminating."

As Stoltzfus concluded his presentation, he said the United States would not be able to finish what it has begun in Iraq, at least not without the help of the United Nations or other countries.

"The Americans cannot bring a solution to Iraq — not even with their most noble constitution writers, it cannot be done," Stoltzfus said. "The Americans in the Arab world have used up all their chips in the support of Israel. There is no more in the bank. I'm not talking about money, I'm talking political chips."

SIUC'S Army ROTC students put practical skills to use with a weekend field-training session

story by JENNIFER RIOS

Instead of spending a typical weekend hopping from bar to bar or attending various house parties, SIUC's Army ROTC students spent their weekend in the midst of the wilderness improving their rifle skills, navigating their way through the woods and developing their leadership skills.

"No one comes out with the idea of missing a weekend," said Justin Gadberry, a senior cadet in public relations. "We all have fun, work hard and learn a lot."

The Army ROTC conducted its annual fall field training this weekend at the SIUC police range. Students put their knowledge to the test as they experienced situations that are not taught in the classroom. The senior cadets helped set up the exercises and prepared the younger cadets for the event. The 48-hour training began Friday when the ROTC members marched to the police range and ended Sunday after a final leadership session. Both the Carbondale and Marion National Guard units helped supply the ROTC with equipment for the weekend.

The cadets set up a campsite, which included tents, a bathroom area, a smoking area and a storage unit for artillery, food and extra supplies that were guarded at all times.

The actual training began Saturday morning with weapons qualification using an M16 rifle. Students were instructed on how to use the rifles and then worked to qualify as a marksman, sharp shooter or an expert depending on their individual skills. Lt. Col. James Shutt, a professor of military science, said 56 cadets were trained in basic rifle marksmanship and 22 cadets qualified in the 25-meter course.

After rifle qualifications, ROTC members embarked on a wilderness expedition in search of specific points they were given to plot on a map. The seniors taught six classes on land navigation before students set out on the event with a compass and a map in hand. They were required to find three of the five designated locations within a four-hour time period, which meant climbing through tall grass, fields, uphill and through muddy terrain.

"The idea of land navigation is to use all resources available, not just your compass," Gadberry said. "By using all the features around you, you can pretty much always figure out where you are going.

The juniors were required to complete the task with a partner as preparation for a leadership camp they will have to complete later this year. The sophomores went through the training as a group accompanied by Sgt. Wallace. He added guidance and instruction since this was the first time many of the cadets had actually completed land navigation.

"It's like the pictures at the mall; you have to blur your eyes to see," Wallace said. "Some students pick it up quickly, and others take a while to see what's going on."

The event concluded at noon Sunday after the completion of a leadership quick-reaction course, which is designed to force students to act quickly through a variety of obstacles and problems.

"This is a basic exercise in leadership that not only builds skills but confidence and leaders as well," Shutt said.

Shutt encourages students who have any interest in the army to look into the Army ROTC on campus.

"The ROTC is a great thing that offers the best leadership training in the world," Shutt said. "It is one of the few departments that guarantee a job after college."

Reporter Jennifer Rios can be reached at jrios@dailyegyptian.com.

Moving to the Music

The 2003 seventh annual Music in Motion marching band competition brings high schools from across Illinois to compete in music, marching and color guard story by RACHEL LINDSAY

The Waterloo Marching Bulldogs faced the opposite side of the football field and practiced their song one last time before turning to face the judges. The audience chuckled as a third of the band members and most of the color guard laid on the field as if they were asleep.

Suspense grew as the two drum majorettes took their places on raised platforms in front of the band and began to conduct. The field slowly sprang to life, and the soft music grew in intensity as the color guard, waving their flags and arms as they crept past, "woke up" band members.

The Marching Bulldogs' antics were part of their strategy to win the seventh annual Music in Motion high school band competition Saturday. From as early as 8 a.m., members and parents of the Marching Salukis and Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, the SIUC music fraternity that pioneered the idea seven years ago, lugged equipment, directed buses and generally prepared for the coming competition.

"It's a lot of work," said Erica Travelstead, a senior music major from Herrin and student coordinator of the competition. "Some of the work starts back in the spring."

As early as February, Travelstead and others began working with the University bands office to coordinate the event. Vast amounts of work went into making the student-run event a successful recruiting tool. According to Travelstead, planners reserve McAndrew stadium, order trophies, arrange for parking, secure judges and staff and filled out enormous amounts of paperwork, among other tasks.

"The delight about this thing is the fact that it is so student-run," said Mike Hanes, director of bands for SIUC. "They are the people with all the major responsibilities — it's a monster of a thing to do in one day."

Out of the several hundred bands invited, 15 took the field Saturday. The first band performed at 10:30 a.m., and four bands played every hour after that. Waterloo took the field shortly before 2 p.m. with an original show, written and coordinated by Nathan Sickmeier, the Waterloo High School band assistant. The piece, centered on Sickmeier's nighttime experiences, had a sleep theme; colored flags reflected each movement of the work.

"[There is] a lot of theater, as you can see," Hanes said. "It's not just marching and playing anymore."

Color guard members dressed in brown, wispy shirts and black leggings swirled flags splashed with purple, silver and black around, "waking" band members as they played "Waking in the Mist of a Nighttime." Flag colors changed with the music to bright orange and yellow as "Waking to a Beautiful Day" was played.

The next movement, "Waking Up Late," used greenish-blue flags, while white gauze and teddy bears changed to angry red flags during "Deep Sleep/Late Awakenings." The performance finale used multi-colored flags, and band members stepped off the field to loud applause.

Bethany Keim, 17, captain of the Bulldog color guard, said she felt good about the guard's performance, though the show was more difficult than anything they had done before.

OUR WORD

SIUC needs textbook policy

Each semester, students are forced to spend hundreds of dollars on textbooks for their classes. Sometimes a single book costs more than most students earn in a week. What's worse is that instead of simply requiring one textbook, many professors require two books and maybe even a lab book.

Such a huge tab at the local bookstore is great for some aspects of the Carbondale economy, but it is bad on students' already-indebted pocketbooks.

Students do have choices when buying books: We can swipe our Visa, spend a large chunk of our grant check if we are lucky enough to get one, take out extra loans to cover them or spend our leftover loan money on books or spend the money we saved while working a summer job. Some lucky students have parents who can and will pop for books. Although picking from these options is like choosing the lesser of the evils, they are all better options than the alternative, which is not to buy a textbook at all.

Looking around the classroom, it seems evident that not all the students have the required text. It is probably even clearer to the professor when he or she grades exams. Still, many students creep by without ever buying a book. Maybe they do so by reading a reserved copy at the library or borrowing a classmate's book. Maybe they just review the notes. Or maybe they cross their fingers and just see what happens.

Maybe it is time that everyone in every class got the required textbook.

That is basically how it is at Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville.

There students pay a book fee of $6.50 per credit hour for their book rental. It is a requirement and is averaged into tuition, so students don't feel the pain as sharply as we do. Plus, a student taking 15 credit hours only pays $97.50 for book rental. We don't think anyone could prove they pay less than $100 for all the textbooks required in all of their classes.

According to Mary Robinson, director of University Center at SIUE, she gets very few complaints about their system. Instead, she has found that students, parents and even professors are grateful the school implements such a policy.

"They respect the fact that we are attempting to save students money," she said. "And the students just love it."

Under their policy, a professor must teach out of the same textbook for three years unless special permission is granted to change books. This allows SIUE to stay in the black with textbook rental and saves students loads of money.

Robinson said a few professors complain about having to keep books that are a few years old, but she said most understand why they are required to do this.

We know SIUC could not change to such a policy overnight, but it is obvious that some professor could keep an edition for longer than just the current year. Some professors already do this and even go so far as to admit most new editions only have minor updates. They realize the savings students receive by being able to buy a used book and by being able to sell a used book back to the bookstore — even if it is for just pennies on the dollar.

We do think, however, that the administration should look at the policies enacted at our sister school and at other universities, including Eastern Illinois University.

Adopting such a policy at SIUC would initially cost the University an immense amount of money, but Robinson said she thinks that within five years, the University would see its investment back. And they would have done their students a huge favor.

Clearly, if such a policy were enacted, local bookstores would suffer. But under the system at SIUE, local bookstores can still exist — and thrive — because it does not have a book rental policy for graduate students and it does not provide workbooks and other specially required books.

Above all, SIUE and Eastern both provide a valuable and appreciated service to their students. It saves students money, and it improves the quality of education attainable because everyone has a book from which to study. And Robinson said it even attracts students to SIUE — with continuous declining enrollment rates, that is certainly something of which the administration at SIUC needs to take notice.

Taking a closer look at the ACLU

senior, microbiology

The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) has long since paraded itself as being the defender of the First Amendment. It may seem like a noble cause until you take a closer look at what exactly the ACLU has been up to the past few years. The following is a well-documented and frightening list of recent ACLU activities:

- The ACLU supports the "right" of NAMBLA (North American Man-Boy Love Association) to encourage its members to engage in sexual intercourse with young boys. NAMBLA then instructs them how to get away with it legally.

- This, of course, is criminal, and the First Amendment does NOT support this type of speech. Worldnetdaily.com tells of a case where two members of NAMBLA stalked, attempted to molest and finally murdered a 10-year-old boy. One of the culprits wrote in a diary that he turned to NAMBLA's website to gain psychological comfort for what he was about to do.

- In 1998, in the case Virginia v. Black, the ACLU supported the right of Barry Elton Black, a Ku Klux Klan leader, to burn a 25-foot cross in a public demonstration. The ACLU supported the Ku Klux Klan, saying that even "hate speech" should be protected under the First Amendment.

- In 2000, the ACLU used the courts to prevent the Boy Scouts from leasing park space from the city of San Diego. Acusandiego.org quotes Linda Mills as comparing the Boy Scouts to the Ku Klux Klan. Apparently, in Linda Mills' mind, the Boy Scouts, which teach to its young members respect for God and nature and to have a solid moral foundation, is on the same level as a hate-filled, racist organization.

- Just recently, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, with the urging of the ACLU, has found reciting the Pledge of Allegiance unconstitutional because of the words "under God." It should be obvious to any fair-minded person that the word "God" does not endorse any particular religion. According to a CNN/Gallup poll, 84 percent of Americans disapproved of the court's ruling.

All of this begs the question, "What is the goal of the ACLU?" The answer is quite obvious: to promote a radical, left-wing agenda (with the notable exception of the extreme right-wing KKK) at the expense of everyday Americans.

The ideals that the ACLU has embraced are absolutely unconscionable. In the preceding list, which is far from exhaustive, the ACLU has supported the "rights" of child molesters and racists while trampling on the rights of the Boy Scouts and schoolchildren.

The ACLU is waging a full frontal assault on America, and it is way past time that clear-thinking Americans unite to put an end to these atrocious proceedings.

It is now obvious that the ACLU is not only an opponent of traditional American values but is a downright enemy. What is worse is it advertises itself as being on our side. And that makes it the worst kind of enemy.

Coming out doesn't happen overnight

One of my best friends is an obvious homosexual.

When we go out, he smears glitter all over his face. This earned him the not-so-creative yet effective nickname "Glitter Boy."

I am convinced that when he was born, he popped out of the womb holding two pink sparklers as he sang "I'm Coming Out." I don't think revealing his sexual orientation was much of an issue in his life.

As for the rest of us, coming out may be a greater ordeal. The closet can be a cold, dark and lonely place. There can be heightened, irrational fear and loathing pinching at the back of your brain as you wonder what to do next.

How will everyone respond?

Will friends, family, coworkers or the world reject me?

If so, will I be able to support myself financially or emotionally?

What if I don't like Cher?

The factors can be seemingly endless, which is why there is no standard step-by-step guide for coming out.

A 14-year-old boy in the Bible Belt would certainly live in a different world than a 45-year-old man in San Francisco.

Despite all of the possibilities, there are some fundamentals to coming out that can and should be practiced across the board.

First of all, know who your allies are. You're going to need a support system of some sort. At many points, you'll want at least one person with whom to talk things through.

Sure, they may not have answers for you, but it is healthy to freely vent instead of sweating everything out like a bad hangover. Plus, it just feels good to have someone in your corner.

Of course, you will have to run the risk of telling people you're gay. But stop and think about it. You should have a good idea who will be cool with your sexuality.

It's probably not a good idea to tell your hardcore religious right-wing elderly grandmother with the heart condition, but maybe you could tell one of your open-minded friends.

If you're still not sure, there are

How about ... no

BY ED VILLAREAL
e_vil120@hotmail.com

plenty of resources. Get a counselor, stop by a Unitarian church, or call a hotline. Just find somewhere and someone safe.

Second, have reasonable expectations. Don't assume that you come out of the closet and everything is sunshine and lollipops.

Coming out is a process, not a single step. You not just say, "I'm gay" and receive a big pink fun-pack filled with a homo-handbook, condoms, rhythm and an autographed copy of "The Immaculate Collection." There are consequences for our actions, good and bad. It all comes with growth whether you want it or not.

The last and most important thing to remember is to take your time. Give yourself the opportunity to process what is going on and how you plan on dealing.

The right time will come and you'll know it. There's no fire.

Great, now I'm thinking of firemen. I felt very much alone when I first came to terms with my sexuality. I was surrounded by friends and family who would not have understood. But I waited for things to fall into place. I ended up experiencing the most frightening, miserable, amazing, liberating, joyous event of my life. I am a better person for it and will never be the same.

I don't know who scheduled National Coming Out Day in the same week with National Depression Screening Day, but they should be fired. Yes, coming out will spend your emotional spare change. But being open and free is nowhere near as depressing as the heavy solitude of the closet.

How about no appears every Tuesday. Ed is a junior in speech pathology. His views do not necessarily reflect those of the Daily Egyptian.

Free speech does have consequences

Rush Limbaugh resigned from his analyst position at ESPN because of statements that he made Sept. 28, 2003.

There are many components to the Limbaugh episode. First and foremost, ESPN hired Limbaugh because they wanted Limbaugh's radio audience. ESPN knew he was provocative and thought he would add spice to the show. ESPN knew Limbaugh was controversial, and they knew he is extremely conservative.

If ESPN believed Limbaugh was not going to be himself because he was in a different location than his familiar spot on the radio, it would be akin to believing a skunk won't stink because he is in church.

Bottom line: ESPN should have expected Rush to eventually have a... outburst.

Limbaugh regularly played the theme song "Movin' on Up" from the Jefferson's television show before he discussed former Illinois Senator Carol Mosley-Braun.

Additionally, in a response to a caller who said, "Black people need to be heard," Limbaugh responded, "They are 12 percent of the population; who the hell cares."

The second component to the Limbaugh situation is the actual opinions that he gave.

To paraphrase him, he said Donovan McNabb never was that good and that he is overrated. Second, the media has been soft on McNabb because the media is desirous of a black quarterback to do well.

The main problem with his assessment of McNabb is that his statements are not based on fact.

Yes, McNabb is struggling so far this year, but in the past McNabb has played very well.

As a Chicago Bears fan, I watched McNabb destroy the 13-3 Bears in 2001.

I am sure if you talk to the Bears team after that game, they will not agree with Limbaugh's assessment.

Moreover, McNabb had a great year last year. McNabb was sent to the Pro Bowl by his peers, not by the media.

If Limbaugh has or had evidence that the media is overly kind and cheerleads for black quarterbacks, then he should produce the evidence.

I agree with McNabb who stated on ESPN that "if [Limbaugh] wanted to criticize me or believes I am overrated that is fine; he has a right to his opinion, but why bring race into the issue?"

Having my say

BY LENIE ADOLPHSON-LANG
lenieadolphson@hotmail.com

This leads me to the biggest problem with Limbaugh's statements, which is his introduction of favoritism by the media as it relates to race.

Race is not or should not be an issue when assessing performance. As a columnist I criticize people who I disagree with on a regular basis.

Yet, the ethnicity of the people I criticize is not relevant to the debate. Bringing ethnicity into a debate distorts and detracts the argument.

There are athletes of all races who are puffed up by the media — some deservedly, but others who do not warrant the excessive attention.

In any event, Limbaugh was wrong to inject race into an issue without hard evidence. Finally, what I find very disturbing are two issues that have arisen from the Limbaugh outburst.

Limbaugh made a speech in Philadelphia Thursday in which he cast himself as the victim of the "Liberal media."

However, it was not the Liberal media who made the comments. Limbaugh bemoaned the fact that while there is supposed to be free speech in America, it's not really totally free.

I disagree with him. There is free speech in America, but there are also CONSEQUENCES for speech. Ask the Dixie Chicks about consequences.

Moreover, Limbaugh knew what happened to Jimmy the Greek, Al Campanis, John Rocker and others who made insensitive and inappropriate comments.

The second comment that he made, which is equally disquieting, is that most Americans agree with him and his assessments on race.

This statement, if true, is more alarming than any comments he made about McNabb or the media.

Having my say appears every Tuesday. Lenie is a senior in history. Her views do not necessarily reflect those of the DAILY EGYPTIAN.

LETTERS

Does columnist's ideals represent younger generation?

DEAR EDITOR:

What irony!

A recent arrival to this country knows a great deal more (and also cares a great deal more) about the principles upon which this country was founded than an American studying law at an American university (see opinion pieces by Mr. Bharthapadi and Mr. Smith in the DAILY EGYPTIAN Monday).

To what extent does Mr. Smith's thinking represent the young women and men of this country? If his thinking is so bereft of idealism at his young age (no hint of concern for fairness and justice) what will he be like in five to 10 years when he may be serving the power he seems to be sucking up to...? Another foot soldier for the forces of repression?

Take advantage of Carbondale culture

DEAR EDITOR:

I am aware that Mr. Villareal has brought to our attention the sentiment of experiencing culture outside one's own in his article last week. I only would like to gently nudge our students and faculty to do so again. We are quite fortunate that Carbondale attracts so much diversity, especially due to its somewhat rural location.

It seems imprudent that people fail to take advantage of the richness of cultural opportunities available to them. I attended the Indian Dance Festival Friday, and I was not shocked to learn that my 2-year-old daughter and I were a couple of the handful of non-Indian attendees. That was fine by me, as my purpose there was to learn about people that I knew little about.

Everyone there was very warm and welcoming; they seemed pleased that my daughter was there to explore as well. I had several questions about the prayer rituals of Puja, their lovely traditional clothing and the delectable food they were offering. All of my questions were answered with kindness and sincerity.

I would like to thank everybody for making me feel so comfortable. As I stood back and observed the swirling, vivid colors of the women and children and the spruce debonair of the men, I became completely spellbound.

Though I did not get out there and dance myself (my daughter was getting hard to handle at that point), I now know that next time I would like to attempt to try. I will be met with familiar faces and outstretched hands. I feel honored to have been there. What a beautiful culture.

CHARLES D. TENNEY DISTINGUISHED LECTURER SERIES

STORY MUSGRAVE

Astronaut, physician, poet, philosopher

Former astronaut Story Musgrave speaks at SIUC

Daily Egyptian

He has performed surgery. He has piloted more than 160 types of aircraft. He has done groundbreaking medical research. He has piloted space shuttles. He has parachuted from high-speed aircraft. He has been around the world, literally.

He is former astronaut Story Musgrave.

Musgrave, who was one of the astronauts on the maiden voyage of the space shuttle Challenger and leader of the team that fixed the Hubble Space Telescope, has done much during his life. Now, he will share those experiences at SIUC, kicking off the Charles D. Tenney lecture series at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Center Auditorium.

"Story Musgrave has a resume that most of us can only make up," said Frederick Williams, director of the University Honors Program.

Williams called Musgrave a Renaissance man, saying he has "not dabbled but excelled in the arts and sciences."

In addition to his wide range of experiences, which also includes serving in the United States Marine Corps, Musgrave has earned a bachelor's degree in mathematics and statistics, another bachelor's in chemistry, a master's in physiology and biophysics, a second degree in business administration and a doctorate in medicine.

"If anyone on our planet deserves a title of respect, it's Story Musgrave," Williams said.

Musgrave, who has made six trips into outer space, will also talk about the effect pollution has on the environment and how those effects can be seen from outer space. According to Williams, Musgrave will not only talk about the environment, he will show it in a slide show. His lecture will be followed by a question-and-answer session and a reception.

"He's going to put on a show that will knock our socks off," Williams said.

According to colleague Larry Hickman, director of the Center for Dewey Studies, Musgrave is everything his resume suggests.

"He's intensely interested in what's going on around him," Hickman said.

Hickman, who met Musgrave at a philosophy meeting, said he was very pleased Musgrave was coming.

"Despite the fact he's a very highly educated person, he's very friendly, very approachable and he really loves to interact with people," Hickman said.

A breakfast, limited to 20 honors students, will take place Wednesday morning. The students will be able to ask Musgrave about his life and discuss issues they find relevant.

"I hope we have a big turnout," Hickman said, "because I think anybody who's interested at all in any of the many, many things that Story talks about and is knowledgeable about will have a great time at his lecture."

"We felt from our practices that we really improved and really got together from this past week, and we were going to go out there and tear it up," she said.

While the next band prepared for its performance, some members of the Bulldogs prepared to leave for a prior engagement in Waterloo. Those who left would not know until Monday what they had placed. Maggie Restivo, a member of the Bulldog color guard, said she wished she could stay for the judging and the Marching Salukis' performance.

"Every year they do something different," she said. "They always look like they're just rocking out and having a lot of fun with it."

According to Tom Bough, director of the Marching Salukis and assistant director of bands for SIUC, the competition is a major recruiting tool for the Marching Salukis.

"So this is really a big thing," Bough said, "and the number of students involved in marching band — and doing it at a competitive level — gets higher and higher [every year]."

Travelstead agreed, saying she believes the annual competition helped increase the number of band members twofold from last year.

"There are kids in the band now who have told me this is really big for them when they get to watch the Marching Salukis perform," she said.

Only two bands performed after Waterloo: Murphysboro and O'Fallon high schools. According to Restivo, 17, Murphysboro is Waterloo's archrival. The Marching Salukis took the field last for a showcase exhibition, Magical Mystery Tour, in front of thousands of high school students and their parents. According to Bough, the students provide a captive audience for the Salukis' performance.

"It's just really a great weekend to kind of showcase all of SIUC," he said.

As the Marching Salukis performed, the competition results were tallied. Each band was judged in four categories — auxiliary, percussion, visual and music — and trophies were given for best percussion, auxiliary and performance in their respective classes based on school size — AA, A, B or C. Best of show for the three categories was given as well.

Drum majors from each band filed onto the track. Trophies were handed out for Classes C and B. Waterloo drum majorettes Kristy Maag, 17, and Elise Mullins, 17, waited patiently for Class A winners to be announced. Best percussion and best auxiliary came and went. Fourth, third and second places were announced before Waterloo was named first place. The drum majorettes smiled and waited patiently for the announcement for Music In Motion Best of Show.

"And the 2003 Music In Motion Best of Show goes to the Waterloo Marching Bulldogs!" the announcer said.

The Waterloo drum majorettes accepted the large trophy as the crowd cheered their victory. They ran off the field whooping for joy.

"Oh my God! It's awesome," Maag cheered.

Maag said despite her director's optimism, winning best of show never occurred to her as a possibility.

"Waterloo rocks. We're the best!" band members cheered in the hallway. Those who left earlier would probably get a call before Monday to celebrate the victory.

have, you would want to have fire extinguishers that meet that demand," Jones said. "Students' first responsibility is to leave the building. It is the fire department's job to fight fires."

Shimkus said in the past, federal and state government passed legislation that made exceptions to some of the safety requirements that were mandatory for the public. Because of government funding, schools were also sheltered from public safety requirements. Now only 35 percent of dorms have sprinklers or other fire control devices.

Shimkus said the grants should give universities the incentive to make fire safety modifications to buildings, but individual universities are responsible for placing multi-purpose fire extinguishers in student housing.

"I do believe that you should have the best equipment to provide safety for the students and if that's ABC, then that's ABC," Shimkus said. "That's something you would not want to see anywhere, especially when people are in institutions to improve themselves and get into society and be a positive influence in society."

place down the highway, permission from the Illinois Department of Transportation is required."

According to Doriff, IDOT has approved the request, and now it is the city's decision. She said that because this is a community event, it constitutes walking in the street against any type of violence.

"There is not one of us in our community who is not touched by violence in some shape or form," Doriff said.

According to Cole, allowing the march to take place in the street would require $3,500 in expenses to pay for overtime police officers and state workers to block off traffic and make a detour route. He said it would take 15 to 18 officers.

Walking on the sidewalk requires one or two additional squad cars at the event, but he does see room for compromise.

"We're working with the city on trying to come to an agreement that shows the importance behind this type of event and acknowledge this as a community-wide event without producing an extreme hardship on the city financially and resource wise," Doriff said.

Doriff said she does understand the city's concerns and is willing to work with the city on some sort of compromise.

Flanagan said she feels marching in the street is an easy request that the city should be able to accommodate.

"It is not as if we have 100 rioting women. We have 100 people walking peacefully," Flanagan said. "We can make this work. Everyday a woman is raped, beaten. This is something we can't keep pushing under the rug."

and discovered he had no pulse.

Burrill said he immediately notified Carbondale Police and the Jackson County Ambulance Service for assistance.

He said there were no signs of forced entry to the residence as the apartment's tenant had left the door unlocked.

Carbondale Police Sgt. Paul Echols, who supervises the department's forensic science unit, testified Monday that officers found a bloodstained, partially torn T-shirt along a fence near the South Marion Street apartment building. He said officers also found a bloodstained dollar bill and a trail of blood droppings behind the building.

Echols said he was present for Thomas' autopsy and saw a .22 caliber bullet removed from his back.

Police have not yet recovered a weapon in the investigation.

Carbondale Police Detective Mark Goddard testified Monday that he found a .22 caliber shell casing three days after the shooting between two boards on Thomas' wood front porch.

Jackson County State's Attorney Michael Wepsiec, who is prosecuting the case, told the jury the county has evidence to show Price was involved in the robbery. Wepsiec said that according to Illinois law, if anyone dies during a forcible felony attempt, even if the death was accidental, anyone directly involved is guilty of committing first-degree murder. Wepsiec said Price is no exception.

"He may not have had the intent to kill Marcus Thomas," Wepsiec said to the jury. "But Marcus remains dead today."

Jackson County Assistant Public Defender Margaret Degen, who is defending Price in the trial, reminded the jury that Price sits in trial as an innocent man and that he has to be proven guilty beyond reasonable doubt.

"Terror doesn't have to prove anything," Degen said to the jury. "That's up to the state's attorney."

Price is being held at the Jackson County Jail in Murphysboro.

The trial is scheduled to reconvene at 9 a.m. today at the Jackson County Courthouse.

How Globalization Affects the United States

SUMMARY

Globalization has arrived. People in one country are more likely to be affected by the economies of other countries. Globalization is producing fundamental changes in business. In today's marketplace, the same companies are suppliers to each other, customers for each other, and competitors. The effects of globalization are complex. It increases economic growth and living standards, but widespread poverty occurs in the midst of prosperity. As a result, globalization creates both winners and losers.

Daily Horoscope

By Linda C. Black

Today's Birthday (Oct. 7). This year, take on a project that's so big, you don't know how you'll complete it. You won't complete it, by the way, but that's OK. It could turn out to be your life's mission.

To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Today is a 6 - Neither your hopes nor your fears will turn out exactly as you expected. Take care of your obligations before one of them becomes overdue.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today is a 6 - Pace yourself. There's a lot to be done, and you're good at figuring out how to do it all. Don't follow somebody else's lead if you're the one with the most common sense.

Gemini (May 21-June 21) - Today is an 8 - Advise a partner to keep a lid on startling revelations. An older person isn't in the mood to be disrupted yet. And you're still gathering goodies from that authority figure.

Cancer (June 22-July 22) - Today is a 7 - Work takes precedence over pleasure for at least one more day. The trick in this situation is to not feel picked upon. And don't let yourself drift. You could make a mistake that would make things worse.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) - Today is a 7 - Don't let a disagreement about money mar a precious moment. If there's a problem between them, there'll be a way to fix it.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) - Today is a 6 - You're so busy working, you won't have much time to devote to someone else's problem. Luckily, if you're organized, it won't take very long.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - Today is a 7 - You have an aversion to listening to arrogant taskmasters with definite agendas: In this case, however, there is a wrong way to respond, and you don't want to go there.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Today is an 8 - Your intuition is working well, so it's likely that you'll be in the right place at just the right time, when somebody else needs help. Provide tough love, not money.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is a 6 - Someone you thought was a gentle soul may be quite volatile. Don't drop any bombshell information irresponsibly.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Today is a 7 - Continue to investigate, even if you're coming up with more questions than answers. Your curiosity will lead you to a higher level.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Today is a 7 - Travel is going to be easier for the next couple of weeks, but money could be in short supply. No problem. You'll find a way.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - Today is a 7 - The more you dig, the more (sometimes uncomfortable) facts you reveal. It's always good to know the truth, but it isn't always pleasant.

Saluki women's tennis shines at MVCs

Soswa leads SIU men in Louisville

Todd Merchant
Daily Egyptian

Tana Trapani still feels some discomfort after missing more than a year with a hip injury, but one wouldn't notice by looking at her performance so far this fall.

The redshirt junior from Murphysboro picked up her second first-place finish of the young season this past weekend at the Missouri Valley Conference Individual Championships in Springfield, Mo.

Trapani, who won the flight three singles title two weeks ago at Evansville, snagged the flight four title at the MVCs by defeating SMS' Ala Alvarez, 6-1, 6-0, Sunday.

Trapani also teamed with senior Alejandra Blanco to take the flight two doubles title with an 8-5 victory over Illinois State's Laura Gravino and Ashley Maxwell. It was also the tandem's second title in as many tournaments.

"They click, they make a very, very good doubles team," SIU head coach Judy Auld said of the Trapani/Blanco combo. "They're very strong; they know what the other person's gonna do. They just click very well on the court, and I think that they bring up each other's game."

"They felt in the final match they didn't play their best tennis, but they played very smart."

The pair is now 23-4 since first teaming up three years ago.

Another doubles tandem that is starting to show plenty of promise is combo of Zoya Honarmand and Zuzana Palovic. The two finished second in flight three Sunday after taking the flight three title at Evansville.

Palovic also took home the title in flight six singles, her second of the season, after defeating Illinois State's Maxwell 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

The Salukis' Nos. 4, 5 and 6 players — Trapani, Honarmand and Palovic — have now combined to win five of a possible six titles in the first two tournaments of the fall, which bodes well for the dual matches in the spring.

"The thing that will win a lot of matches is your depth," Auld said. "You can have good No. 1 and 2, but if you don't have that depth you won't win a lot of matches. I think that we proved that we're strong 1-6."

The top of SIU's lineup, although not playing poorly, has not fared quite as well. Blanco, her younger sister Maria and Jessica Knitter have combined for a record of 7-6 and no flight championships.

The elder Blanco is 2-3 this fall and is still adjusting to playing at the No. 1 spot, according to Auld.

"Alejandra holds her own on the court. She played a really good match that first round against (Creighton's Katie Chiu), and to be honest that match could have gone either way," Auld said. "It's just a hard position to play, and I think, though, that she started getting used to it last year, and I think it may just take awhile to get going."

"I think sometimes at the MVC tournament she just wants to do so well that I think she sometimes puts more pressure on herself."

The Salukis will be back in action when they play host to the Saluki Invitational Friday and Saturday at the University Courts. The tournament field will include Northern Illinois, Eastern Kentucky, Valparaiso and Eastern Illinois.

It will only be the team's third tournament of the season, but Auld thinks that it has already shown to the rest of the MVC that it will vie for the league crown in the spring.

"I think we're definitely in the top four team in the conference," Auld said. "I think we've come back really strong this year and proved that we're definitely a team to contend with."

Louiseville Invitational
Lukas Soswa once again led the way for the SIU men's tennis team as the junior took the flight C consolation championship in Louisville, Ky., by defeating Illinois-Chicago's Sean Kreymborg, 8-3.

It came a week after Soswa won the flight C championship at the Kentucky Invitational.

Soswa also teamed with Bojan Ilievski to finish second in flight B doubles after falling to Bradley's Wil Lofgren and Alex Roby, 8-6, in the final.

In flight B singles action, Ilievski lost in the quarterfinals, while in flight A senior Peter Bong fell in the semifinals to Louisville's Jeremy Clark, 6-4, 6-2.

Alexandru Nomicos (Flight A), Tomas Gonzalez (B) and Julian Angel Botero (C) all lost in their respective second round matches. Nomicos and Botero lost in the Flight C doubles semifinals to Dayton's Kevin O'Connell and Rex Cabrera, 8-4, while Bong and Gonzalez fell in the Flight A first round.

The Saluki men will return to the courts Oct. 16 when they travel to Tulsa, Okla., for the five-day ITA Mid-America Regionals.

finished last in the United States in SAT scores for the second straight year, a fact that was evident inside Turner Field.

The late-arriving fans must have gotten lost trying to navigate their rusty old pick-ups out of their mobile home parks.

The man sitting about a dozen rows below me was just one example. He was not exactly a picture of urban sophistication in his NASCAR jacket and Confederate flag bandana atop his head — inside of which was probably little more than an opium and a partial memory of how to do the tomahawk chop.

How smart can a group of fans be when it needs constant reminders? The neon sign atop the scoreboard demonstrating the tomahawk chop was apparently not enough for the Braves fandom. A screen below the neon sign also displayed a hand doing the chop sometimes and a pair of hands clapping at other times.

It makes one wonder whether Braves fans would have been able to remember how to clap or do the tomahawk chop without the visual demonstration.

The Braves' tomahawk chop has to be the worst cheer in sporting history. It's bad enough that it enrages Native Americans, but it was also nipped off from Florida State. The FSU band's version is even played over the public address system throughout the game, replete with the bandleader's whistle blowing.

As Cubs fans, we don't need any signs or piped noise directing us to get excited. We don't need a flashy pre-game video introduction to our team; we already know our team.

And Cubs fans can fill up their own stadium without the help of the opposing team. But even if Braves fans had somehow summoned up the passion of Cubs fans and lit the road, most would never make it to Wrigley — they'd be thrown from the beds of their pick-ups en masse somewhere in the Appalachians.

And you can expect south Florida's roads and gas stations to be packed with Cubs fans heading to the big non-descript stadium in Miami this weekend, where they'll surely out-cheer the opposition once again.

Almost a mirror image on paper of SIU, Tennessee-Martin (2-15) lost six key seniors from last season's NCAA tournament team. This year's Skyhawk squad is dominated by nine newcomers — eight of who are freshmen.

But the similarities end there, according to Locke.

"Our tempo tries to be faster than what they typically run," Locke said. "They have veteran outside hitters, which is different from what we have, and they have a veteran right side, which is different from what we have."

Gone are All-OVC first-teamers Rachel Ahlers and Lindsey Vicknair, but UT-Martin is left with a little more in the tank than the Salukis, who lost all six of their starters after late season's second-place finish.

Two All-OVC tournament performers return for the Skyhawks from last season — senior outside hitter Jamie Fitzwater and junior outside hitter Leigh Reiniche.

Reiniche currently leads the Skyhawks with 222 kills, and just behind her is Fitzwater with 219 and a 226 hitting percentage.

While Hann sees this game as a chance for the Salukis to get back in the flow, Locke is expecting the Skyhawks to put up a fight just as good, if not better, than any MVC team would.

"We don't see it as a break at all because Tennessee-Martin is very comparable, or has been in the past, to teams in our conference," Locke said. "We just see it as another opportunity to get better on the court."

Potential Saluki Shaw expected to decide soon

Shaw made last official visit to SIU last weekend, others sign elsewhere

Ethan Erickson
Daily Egyptian

As many potential recruits verbally commit to SIU's opponents, Matt Shaw, perhaps SIU's most important recruiting target, is expected to make his decision soon, according to a recruiting website.

Shaw, a 6-foot-6 forward from Centralia, visited SIU this past weekend.

It was the final of his three official visits.

He previously visited Stanford and Saint Louis.

Shaw is a versatile workhorse of a forward who plays for one of the nation's most storied high school programs in the Centralia Orphans, where he averaged 18 points and 10 rebounds per game last season.

He was unavailable for comment Sunday and Monday.

"I think we're in a position with a couple kids and we feel good about it," SIU head coach Matt Painter said of his recruiting efforts.

"We might get them and we might not. You never know, and if we don't, we just gotta keep working and then try to sign somebody in the spring."

Two other big men whom SIU was recruiting have verbally committed to Missouri Valley Conference foes.

Everette Pedescieux, a 6-foot-6 forward, has chosen to attend Northern Iowa according to published reports.

The Robbinsdale, Minn., native visited SIU in September and is the second big man from Minnesota to pick another MVC school over SIU.

Patrick O'Bryant, a 6-foot-11 center from Blaine, Minn., verbally committed to Bradley last week.

Carbondale Community High School senior Justin Dentmon, a 6-foot-1 point guard, has verbally committed to Illinois State, according to a report in the Bloomington Pantagraph.

Dentmon averaged 17 points, nearly eight assists and four rebounds for the Terriers last season.

Dentmon will join fellow Southern Illinoisan Dana Ford, currently a sophomore, of Egyptian High School in Tammis on the roster of first-year head coach Porter Moser's Redbirds.

Despite the fact that many of the players SIU was recruiting have chosen against spending four years in Carbondale, Painter isn't overly concerned.

"The one thing you don't do in recruiting is get nervous," Painter said. "You try your best. Sometimes you get guys. Sometimes you don't get guys, and I think the time guys get nervous and you get butterflies is before actual games."

"Even though it concerns you, you can't worry about it. You try your best. You work hard at it. And sometimes you work your butt off and you don't get any kids, and sometimes you get lucky on a couple."

Salukis jump up to No. 8 in the nation

Sambursky named Gateway Conference player of the week, Koutsos nears record

Zack Creglow
Daily Egyptian

The SIU football continued its rapid progression up the polls, moving into the No. 8 spot in both the USA Today/ESPN and Sports Network/CSTV polls.

The Salukis jumped one spot ahead of conference foe Western Kentucky in both polls, and Western Illinois stayed firm at the No. 2 position. No. 11 Iowa moved up to the No. 11 spot after defeating SIU's next opponent, Illinois State.

McNesse State continued its stranglehold on the top spot in both polls for the second week in a row.

Sambursky named player of the week

Sophomore quarterback Joel Sambursky was named Gateway Conference player of the week for his gutsy play in SIU's 37-14 win over Indiana State. The right-hander threw for 173 yards on 12-of-20 passing for three touchdowns.

The crafty quarterback also scrambled for 33 yards and a touchdown.

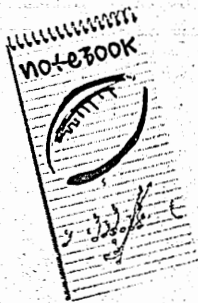

On the season, Sambursky has thrown for 689 yards and seven touchdowns to only two interceptions.

He has a 167.09 rating that is tops in the Gateway by nearly 20 percentage points.

If he continues his pace, he will end the season with 1,516 yards and 16 touchdown passes, which would easily surpass his solid freshman numbers.

Koutsos nears all-time Gateway rushing record

After accumulating 91 tough yards on the ground against an Indiana State squad that at times had as many as nine players in the box, Tom Koutsos edged closer to breaking the Gateway career rushing record.

The senior needs just 144 yards to surpass Eastern Illinois' Willie High as the No. 1 man on the list. With his role expanding for the Salukis as starting running back Muhammad Abdulqadir battles a bruised knee, look at the Western Illinois game on Oct. 18 as a possible date when the record may fall to "Touchdown Tommy."

Redbird players reinstated

The four Illinois State Redbird players who were suspended from the squad on Sept. 29 were reinstated last Wednesday by ISU coach Denver Johnson.

Senior defensive end Ray Robinson, senior wide receiver LaMonte Jones, sophomore wide receiver Ramon Barber and redshirt freshman running back LaShawn Bullock were arrested on Sept. 28 for an off-campus altercation, but none of them were charged. Johnson and ISU Athletic Director Perk Weisenburger determined none of the players broke any team policies.

While the others got off scot-free, senior running back Tristan Davis was dismissed from the team because of the incident and faces charges of mob action and battery. Davis was fifth on the team in rushing with 81 yards in five games.

ROBERT LYONS - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Saluki tailback Tommy Koutsos stays aware of defenders while he runs down the field Saturday. Koutsos ran the ball 30 times, picking up 91 yards along the way.

Salukis tops overall in Division I-AA offensively

The SIU offense currently dwarfs all Division I-AA teams with an average of 47.6 points per game, nearly five points more than Nicholls State, the No. 2 team in the nation.

Western Kentucky is the No. 2 scoring offense in the Gateway, averaging 37 ppg.

The Saluki defense motto of "worst to first" is still holding true five weeks into the season.

SIU is the top overall defense in the conference, allowing just 8.4 points a game, placing it third in the entire nation.

It also ranks in the top spot in the conference and second in the nation in yards allowed, surrendering just 226.6 yards a contest.

Florida State to start against Miami

Brett Malone
FSUView & Florida Flambeau
(Florida State U.)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (U-WIRE) — Here's a quick history lesson.

In 1951, under the leadership of Don Veller, Florida State headed to Miami to face one of its first major college opponents. The Tribe suffered a 35-13 loss. FSU would lose four more times before finally beating the Hurricanes in 1958. Throughout the 1960s, Florida State would show a slight dominance, taking four out of six in the series. During the 1970s, the Seminoles stumbled but continued to claw their way back into the series, winning six out of the 10 meetings between the two teams. Two of those wins came under current head coach Bobby Bowden.

Miami became the more dominant team during the 1980s, winning seven out of 10. In 1991, it was the infamous "Wide Right 1." In 1992, it was deja vu for the Seminoles as a last-minute field goal sailed wide right and Florida State's run at a national championship was derailed for a second straight year. From 1995 to 1999 the Seminoles proved to be too much, winning five in a row over Miami. In 2000, the curse of the field goal kicker struck again. The result was "Wide Right III." In 2002, with a chance to put an end to the wide right curse, Xavier Bettis lined up for a 43-yard field goal only to watch it miss wide left.

The game will be broadcast on ABC during its primetime Monday Night Football slot. Representatives from both schools, as well as members of the ACC, are excited about the announcement.

This will be the first time the teams have met for a home opener since 1988. That year the Seminoles lost to Miami 31-0 for FSU's only loss of the season.

With both expected to be in the top 25 and vying for a national championship, the success of the season would depend heavily on the outcome of this first game.

They're everywhere

How many Cubs fans will you find inside the Golden Galleon gas station after midnight on a Wednesday night?

If it was last Wednesday around 12:10 a.m. in Montecle, Tenn., the answer is nine.

There were my two traveling companions and I, the father and son and the three college-age guys and their female comrades in the gas station on top of the mountain in east Tennessee.

Cubs fans turned Atlanta and roads all over the South into a miniature Chicago, including this small gas station next to the Waffle House off I-24, about 160 miles northwest of Atlanta.

They were everywhere we stopped on our 450-mile sojourn to Georgia for game two of the National League Division Series.

A group appeared Wednesday afternoon at our lunch stop, a Chick-Fil-A in Murfreesboro, Tenn., and cars with Illinois plates piloted by Cubs hat-wearing drivers were everywhere between Carbondale and Turner Field.

Sure, there are some jackasses among us, like the guy sitting several rows in front of me in the upper deck running up and down the aisle with a Cubs towel on his back and invoking the ire of the Braves faithful, or shall I say unfaithful.

Or the obnoxious group of fans mentioned by Atlanta sports radio hosts who were amazed they didn't get pummeled.

But even with the bad apples, Cubs fans are still much better than Braves fans — both in fanaticism and intelligence level.

This place is not exactly a bastion of enlightenment. Georgians recently

Salukis rattle Schiff in win

SIU defensive line gets to Indiana State QB early, often

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. — Late in Saturday afternoon's game against No. 8 SIU, Indiana State quarterback Jake Schiff was in pain.

After failing to convert on a third-down play in the fourth quarter, Schiff gingerly walked off the field and, instead of taking a seat next to his offensive teammates on the bench, he sat on the water table and dropped his head.

He remained in that pose until he slowly walked back to the huddle. Before that sign of movement, one could not tell if he was still alive or not. One cannot blame Schiff for hanging his head after the beating he took in the Sycamores' 37-14 loss to the Salukis.

The redshirt freshman spent more time lying on the turf at Memorial Stadium than running on it, a result of the Salukis' defensive line dominating the line of scrimmage.

On seemingly every play, Indiana State's offensive linemen were getting beaten, and SIU's defenders were getting to unload on Schiff.

Saluki defensive linemen ended the game with 14 tackles and two sacks, with seven different players recording at least one tackle.

The sacks came from defensive end James Fields and defensive tackle Linton Brown with a third coming from cornerback Melvin Vance. Jeff Jones sacked Schiff in the closing seconds of the first half, but it was waived off as Jones was guilty of a facemask penalty on the call.

All the pressure clearly rattled the young quarterback, and that is exactly what the Salukis wanted to do.

"I think at the beginning of the game, we set the tone when the defensive line was just busting through and making plays," SIU linebacker Royal Whitaker said. "Throughout the game he just played real timid, and that's what we wanted."

Schiff's statistics for the game make it look like he did not have too bad of a day. He threw for 176 yards on 11 of 32 passes and a touchdown. But he was intercepted twice and sacked three times, losing a total of 27 yards.

SIU head coach Jerry Kill was pleased with the play of his defensive linemen but said they still had work to do.

"They played pretty hard, but I think we had two bad series as a defense, and that's something we got to get cleaned up," Kill said.

Fittingly, Schiff spent his final play of the game on the ground.

On a fourth-and-21 with just less than five minutes remaining in the game, Schiff was pressured and knocked to the ground yet again following an errant throw.

As the teams cleared the field, Schiff remained kneeling as his whole body seemingly went limp.

He eventually picked himself up and struggled to get to the sideline where he and the rest of the Indiana State offense would remain until the final buzzer sounded.

The buzzer not only signaled the end of the game, it signaled the end of Schiff's beating.

SIU volleyball back in action tonight at Davies

Hann predicts victory over visiting UT-Martin

For a team that has lost its last five Missouri Valley Conference matches by way of sweep, the SIU volleyball team is rather confident.

So confident that freshman outside hitter Haley Hann predicted a victory in tonight's match with Tennessee-Martin, the defending Ohio Valley Conference champions.

"We're going to win," Hann said.

Hopefully this self-assuredness resides in the rest of the Salukis (3-13, 0-6) as they desperately need to get on track in today's 7 p.m. tilt with the Skyhawks at Davies Gymnasium.

Off to their worst conference start in school history, even head coach Sonya Locke admits the young Salukis have progressed slower than expected, but she has seen improvement.

"I think our progress is slow, but I have seen some progress, and that's a plus for anybody with a young team like ours," Locke said. "We are just going to keep pushing them to get better and to be more disciplined."

The Dawgs have repeatedly shot themselves in the foot with rookie mistakes, hitting a combined .151 and committing 411 errors compared with their opponent's 255 hitting percentage and 338 errors.

But SIU finds solace in the fact that it knows it has what it takes to get the season turned around.

But more importantly, the Salukis want to.

"We are definitely working a lot harder in practice; we're not down at all," Hann said. "We know that we have the talent, and we know we can do it."

Locke has been pleased with her team's effort in the MVC, noting it has put up a good fight despite facing more experienced teams night in and night out. She is confident that in time, it will be her Salukis manhandling inferior and inexperienced opponents.

"I think that because they are in the learning stage there is a level of frustration that still exists that doesn't really allow them to flow as well as we would like, but that's going to get better with time," Locke said. "Any time you are learning something, you are going to make mistakes. You just have to try to stay disciplined to get yourself to the point where you are in a flow and not struggling anymore."

The Salukis have to look no further than tonight's opponent to find a team with similar struggles.
