SIUC freshman Matt Mueller will not bother to check out one of his favorite bars on the Strip this weekend.

"We already had gotten to 'em about the new signs on the front door" - a sign that says he will no longer be able to hang out there.

Or at least until Mueller turns 21.

Frankie's Bar and Grill, 204 W. College St., raised its entry age to 21 Tuesday in an effort to stop underage drinking at the bar, said Kevin DeWitt, the bar's manager.

At a March 5 meeting, the Liquor Advisory Board reviewed a list of bars arrest for underage possession of alcohol since July 1. Frankie's topped the list with 30 arrests.

Following the meeting, Frankie's took procedures to stop underage drinking at the bar, DeWitt said.

Despite limiting the number of drinks a legal age person could purchase and having extra bouncers to watch underage drinking, police still found underage drinking at the bar, he said.

"After much consideration, we decided to have a 21-plus entry age," DeWitt said. "Frankie's appreciates patronism of all our customers, including 18-and-up age groups and regrets not offering the same entertainment we have in the past."

DeWitt said he has received mixed opinion about the change of the entry age.

"A lot of our regular customers will be cut out, and they might be angry, but other people say it's great," he said.

DeWitt said he does not expect a decrease in business.

"Of course I'm concerned, but I think we'll 'continue to do pretty well,'" he said. "We regret that we had to change, but we'll see an increase daily I think."

Bill Stark, a senior in architecture from Chicago, shares DeWitt's optimism about the continued success of the bar.

Stark said he went as often as twice a week to Frankie's during his first two years at SIUC, and started going again this semester because of the bar's dance floor.

"The bars on the Strip have been packed, and Frankie's has that dance floor," he said. "There's no other place on the Strip that you can go and dance."

Stark said Frankie's might experience slow business this week, but more patrons should see BUDGET, page 5

Plan will cut services, 50 related jobs

By Tracy Moss

Administration Writer

Challenged with a 10-percent budget cut, University officials in the Office of the Vice President for Administration took off to cut 50 positions, 60 student jobs and many campus services, bringing the total layoffs to almost 200 since 1991.

Students will be affected most by the elimination of two SIUC police officers and one clerical support staff in security. The result will be longer response times for both emergency and non-emergency calls, no service for unlocking motor vehicles and a reduction in parking enforcement.

William Capo, associate vice president of administration, said the office has survived the past few years by cutting costs in areas besides personnel and services.

"The idea has been to do more with less, but now we must do less

Clinton swimming in pool of funding problems

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - Sounding more combative than conciliatory, President Clinton Wednesday defended the use of public funds for swimming pools in his $16.3 billion stimulus package, noting scornfully that even the U.S. Senate has a pool with taxpayer money.

Clinton declared that he would fight to save as much of his jobs-creating program as he can, despite solid Republican opposition that blocked pre-Easter approval of his plan in the Senate.

White House and Cabinet officials focused their lobbying on five GOP senators in hopes that they would abandon a filibuster and help Democrats pass most of the president's package when the Senate returns on Apr. 19. Clinton indicated that he may go on the road to stump for his jobs program while Congress is taking its spring break.

Clinton exoriated some Republican opposition "spurious" and rejected GOP criticism that part of the funds would be used to build swimming pools or other recreational facilities. "I mean, the Senate's got a swimming pool, doesn't it?" Clinton asked reporters. "And it was built with taxpayers' money and somebody had a job building it.

"If you put people to work in a city or a suburb or a small town building a city park that gives people-kids-the chance to have recreational opportunities in the summertime and you create jobs doing it, is that a waste of money?" the president asked.

Undersecretary Clinton's jab at Senate priorities. White House Communications Director George Stephanopoulos told reporters later that the Senate actually has two swimming pools, not just the one cited by the president. Asked how much he was willing to cut the stimulus package to move it through the Senate, the president replied: "No more than I have Saluki distance runner Cathy Cokely was selected Missouri Valley Conference athlete of the week, following her strong performance in the 10,000 meters at the SEMO/ION Relays last weekend.

Cokely, a junior in psychology, won the 10,000 meters at the meet and placed third on the SIUC all-time list.

"I was very excited," said Cokely. "I feel very good that day, and the weather was nice." Cokely said that the cold weather at the meet was beneficial to her and the other long-distance runners.

"She can run just an awesome race," SIUC coach Don DeNoon said. "She was totally in control. She was confident from the beginning that she would win the race." In her past two weeks, Cokely has set two SIUC top-five marks in two events, and her mark in the 10,000 meters is top in the MVC.

Future of Michigan Fab 5 uncertain as NBA draft beckons

Zagros

Michigan's Fab Five could lose some members to NBA draft. It's difficult to say what effect the team's loss to North Carolina in the NCAA title game Monday night may have on the players' decisions to turn pro or keep their collegiate eligibility.

A theory circulating prior to Monday had Chris Webber, Jalen Rose and possibly Jimmy King turning pro if the Wolverines went the national title, but returning now because they want to finish their education. And what about Rose? The sophomore is determined to return or declared himself eligible for the draft. "You never know what the future might bring," the 6-8 guard said. "It's time to take care of this. Right now isn't the time to think about it."

That time is coming quickly, though, as players try to guess where they fit into the NBA's June draft. This is generally regarded as a thin draft, partly because of all the stars who came out early a year ago--Shaquille O'Neal, Jimmy Jackson, Harold Miner and Tracy Murray. Webber would be a high pick in any draft, thick or thin. Rose's stock isn't as high.

With all the attention on the decisions of Michigan's shaven-headed duo, a handful of other players were lost in the shuffle. King, a sophomore, turned in a superb defensive effort in the tournament. And few people bothered to ask Carolina's 7-foot Eric Montross if he ever considered leaving school early. "Oh, I'll be here," Montross said after Monday night's game. "He's a great guy, another senior, who repeatedly has said the same thing: "Even if none of these players turns pro, the draft will still produce some big names, Jamal Mashburn, a junior who declared himself eligible for the draft, solidified his status by see DRAFT, page 15."

NATIONAL STUDENT EMPLOYMENT WEEK
Freshman learns firsthand about racial tensions

By Joe Littrell

Police Writer

An SIUC freshman said he has a different view of racial tensions on campus after a Saturday attack.

According to SIUC police reports, Stuart Byers, an 18-year-old major from Carbondale, was walking back to his Thompson Point room at about 12:45 a.m. when he and a visiting friend were confronted by a group of four black males outside Puhlmann Hall.

"We heard them say 'You white boys better run. We don't like white boys,'" Byers said.

Byers and his friend, Mark Niemczyk of Springfield, did not think much about the threat but walked faster anyway, he said. A black female, apparently with the group, told the two the threat was serious and they better leave.

One of the group members jogged in front of him, Byers said, and when Byers tried to walk around him, he was punched in the face. Niemczyk fled the scene.

"Byers, who had stumbled off the sidewalk, saw that he was bleeding. "This guy came up and said 'Are you going to run now?'" Byers said.

According to Byers, someone struck him in the face again, even though he was attempting to ward off the blows. Byer was able to flee the scene, and the attackers left in a different direction.

Byers walked toward the library with Niemczyk upset, and yelling racial slurs, he said, when another black male stopped in front of him and asked him what happened.

Byers said the man, who never gave his name, told him not to judge all blacks by the attack.

"I think he understood where I was coming from," Byers said.

According to Byers, the man had been in the library and accompanied him to his room to wait for the police. Byers gave his statement to SIUC police, who told him there was "a lot of racially motivated stuff going on around campus and we had to be careful."

Samuel Jordan, director of SIUC police, would not comment on the statement, saying that he did not know if it had been made and would need more of the specifics of the case to make a statement.

Byers, was treated for his injuries at Memorial Hospital of Carbondale, where he received stitches in his upper lip.

Now, Byers, wonders about his safety on campus as well as off. Byers said.

State border dispute waste of time, funds

A CENTURY-LONG DEBATE was quieted when Kentucky and Illinois finally reached an agreement as to where the border between the two states exists.

The argument was not worth the expenditure of time and money the two states spent to arrive at that settlement.

With the agreement, the two states now will spend even more money to pay for a U.S. Geological Survey. The survey will construct a digitized map that will accurately represent the 1792 low-water mark.

NORMALLY STATES DRAW the border at the halfway point on a river, but when Kentucky became a state in 1792, its charter claimed full rights to the waterways.

Since that time, the path of the Ohio River moved farther into Kentucky territory, resulting in a loss of land for Illinois and a gain for Kentucky.

Kentucky fought to keep every square inch of the Ohio, staking claim to it, bank to bank. It claimed it should control the river up to the new riverboat into the Illinois territory, resulting in a loss of land for Kentucky.

WHEN METROPOLIS PLANNED the opening of a riverboat casino, Kentucky reignited its fight to keep sole possession and brought the border dispute to a head.

Gorman threatened to confiscate casino equipment if the Ohio's claim were to be upheld. This would not allow casino gambling. The gambling on the riverboat may have posed a threat to Kentucky's own gambling industry — horse racing.

EVEN THOUGH THE RIVERBOAT will hurt Kentucky's gambling industry, the state will see some gain in its economy. Of the 800 people hired to work on the riverboat, 23 percent were from Western Kentucky.

The two states should have been working together to create economic development and tourism, rather than squandering time and money over the border dispute.

IF EVERYTHING GOES as Illinois has planned, the riverboat will keep on its track bringing in revenue for Illinois. Kentucky's horse industry may stand to lose some money because gamblers will have a choice to spend their money elsewhere.

Their horses will have to keep up with our boats on our track.

Letters to the Editor

Persecution leads to Archie Bunker lifestyle

This is the largest group of homophile bigots I have ever been around. I transferred here in January because of the friendly ways of so many people.

But much to my surprise, many of the students and faculty are sexually insecure.

I am married and a veteran of four wonderful years in the Army. I have some homosexual friends and one in the family, and I must say that every "o" of them has more knowledge and understanding of psychology and human respect than any of the "anti-gay" letter writers seem to have.

We are all taught (incorrectly) that the Pilgrims were the embodiment of freedom seekers around the world. It is obvious that the history books are wrong in this respect. This country is still persecuting those with different perspectives.

I don't see any letters from gays, lesbians, or bi-sexuals calling us deviants while everyday, another "Red Blooded American" shoots up a post office or molest a child.

Wrap it up and grow up people. If you fight all your life, you will just end up as a lonely and bitter real life Archie Bunker.

How many of you would drown one of your family members for feeling differently? Are you worried that he or she might grow up when you least expect it?

If God or the Bible is your puppet, you better come down because you are misinformed. The Bible teaches love, not persecution.

Maybe you should go on a witch hunt in your own backyard. The results will surprise you.

Maybe you dur never came out of the closet.

If you worry about going to heaven, you better look into a mirror and face the fact that if there is a heaven, there aren't any prejudices people there. — Eric Hileman, junior, civil engineering.

Dear editors,

The SIUC campus has been divided by the controversy prompted by the budget cuts. Our new leader, the Illinois Governor, Illinois Board of Higher Education (IBHE), and the Illinois State Legislature.

The campus dialogue degenerated when the IBHE decided to issue its own political manifesto, commanding campuses across the state to eliminate specific programs and degrees. The debate further eroded recently when some concluded that the decision making process used by the campus' Central Administration lacked a comprehensive vision and balance.

If this campus is to eliminate programs and degrees as directed by IBHE, and later by the University's Board of Trustees, then the decisions should be based on the programs' and degrees' current economic and qualitative viability.

For too long, high quality, nationally recognized programs with acceptable student support in the College of Liberal Arts, Education, and Communications and Fine Arts have been hampered by budgetary decisions made in Anthony Hall.

What the campus constituencies need is information that describes the critical economic and qualitative variables.

Let those programs and degrees that meet the criteria stand.

Then, allow individuals with a demonstrated commitment to fairness decide where and how uncompensated revenues should be expended.

Economic and qualitative viability and fairness, not personal parochial preferences and values, should guide this University's decisions. — Sidney Kister, professor, special education.

Fair participants deserve praise

We would like to thank all of those who participated in the Southern Regional Illinois History Symposium held on Saturday, March 27. The fair, co-sponsored by the Department of History, the College of Liberal Arts, Phi Alpha Theta, and the Illinois Historic Preservation Agency, was the fourth annual one to be held at SIUC.

All of the media that covered the event did a wonderful job and deserve high praise as well. We regret an error regarding the advertising time for public viewing of the projects and are sorry if this caused any inconvenience. Next year we promise to remedy the situation and hope that you will come and see the spectacular results of area students' hard work. — Kay J.Care, assistant professor and coordinator and Pamela Vaughan, doctoral student and assistant.

"I haven't gotten authorization to search yet," he said. "We have to get authorization from the president and

Shepherd said he will be able to make a good case for starting a search for a new dean and does not foresee any trouble in getting authorization.

Shepherd said a committee consisting of representatives of the four departments, along with graduate and undergraduate representatives, will choose a new dean.

he does not think the policy will last because the bar is a popular winter gathering spot for freshmen and sophomores.

"I don't think it is going to last because of the pressure from much business," he said. "The place was actually a lot of fun, especially in the summer, where you could go to its beer garden and sit and relax and have a couple beer."

Mueller said he does not think other bars will raise their entry age to 21.

"If they do anything, they'll raise it to 21," he said. "If they just would start going somewhere else, the system would probably get bigger."

Mueller said he does not think many bars will follow the frequent Frankie's because they want to spend time with their under-21 customers.

Craig Grannan, a manager at Beach Bums, which has a bar and older entry age, said he does not think his bar will be affected by Frankie's new policy, and said he hopes other bars in Carbondale will not change to a 21 entry age.

"We don't know what they're trying to achieve, I haven't talked to their people, but I don't see it as a threat to us," he said. "We just trying to cater to an older crowd.

I would not like to see (21 entry age) to happen with the other bars, because the drinking is controlled on the Strip and people will start going to parties and you can't control that with this," Grannan said. "You'd just have another Springfest situation, and it would just be more problems for Carbondale police."

City Councillor John Maca said the 21 entry age policy is by the bar's choice, and that they could change their policy if they wanted.

Both Mills and councillor John Yaw agreed the entry age rise is a political move made by the bar.

"I think he's setting a good example," said a lot of bars should look into it and maybe come too.

The American Top, which was closed for 27 years, and Six Bar and Billiards with 14 years, had no comment concerning the raised entry age.

Japanese foreign minister praises American workers

The Washington Post

TOKYO — Here's the latest word from Japan's leadership about American manufacturing: U.S. workers are great, but management may need some changes.

Newly appointed Foreign Minister Yohei Kono, one of the politicians who caused a furor last year by criticizing comments about the American work ethic, returned to the subject Wednesday.

"Americans are marvelous workers," Kono said in his first news conference as Japan's top diplomat. "The fact that it was shown a Toyota or Honda factory run by Japanese management and we see the American workers was really impressive."

"I was greatly moved to see how much the American workers want to make high-efficiency, high-quality products. Even more than the Japanese employees you'd see at a plant in Japan, the American workers are working in a Toyota or Honda plant in America have a way of working that is just splendid."

But Kono also had a warning for Americans.

"We must see with these marvelous American workers: if good management is lacking, things won't come out well," he said. "Management is key." And Kono had an idea where Americans might turn to learn good management practices. "Wouldn't it be interesting if Americans would adopt what is called Japanese-style management to produce products at the best price to please customers?"

The new foreign minister's comments contrasted with the view he expressed early in 1992.

In a conversation in parliament with Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, Kono mentioned his belief that U.S. products made to assembly lines on a Friday or Monday tended to be inferior because of low productivity. "I have seen that American manufacturers then are too focused on, or even emphasizing, the weekend, to pay attention to quality."

"For a time, Miyazawa chided that he had some concerns about the strength of the American workforce. These criticisms, coming at a tense time in U.S.-Japanese relations, infuriated some Americans and led to a round of "Buy American" campaigns."

Muto and Miyazawa quickly apologized for their statements last year.

German high court to decide fate of military intervention in Bosnia

The Washington Post

BERLIN — Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government, over whether to take part in Germany's first combat mission since World War II, Wednesday asked the country's highest court to take the decision out of the politicians' hands. Unless the eight judges clear the legal path toward German participation in enforcing the United Nations' "no-fly zone" over Bosnia, Kohl's coalition could fall apart and Germany could find itself isolated in NATO, a source of cabinet members and top military officials warned the Federal Constitutional Court.

The unusual case, in which the junior partner in Kohl's ruling coalition, the Free Democrats, said their own government, produced the specter of Defense Minister Volker Ruehe arguing against Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The court, which is expected to rule by Friday, could approve German crews for the AWACS reconnaissance flights over Bosnia, reject such a mission as unconstitutional, or kick the matter back to Kohl.

If the court refuses the case, as at least two judges have hinted it should, the conflict could take on "threadbare and dramatic forms," possibly including a collapse of the Kohl government, said Hermann-Otto Solms, leader of the Free Democrats in parliament.

Kohl's chief of staff, Friedrich Bohl— one of four cabinet ministers to testify Wednesday—played down talk of a possible collapse of the coalition, but Bohl and for the first time, that Kohl has decided to keep German airmen in the AWACS crews even if the court refuses to rule on the constitutionality of allowing Germans joining a combat mission outside NATO territory—a position the Free Democrats say they will not tolerate.

Although the constitution specifically permits the government to take part in international security alliances, the Free Democrats and the opposition in Bonn agree that the German military is legally restricted to defending its own territory and that of its NATO allies. NATO Secretary General Manfrid Woerner, a former German defense minister, warned "the judges against taking the German military to drop out of the mission in the former Yugoslavia, he said, Germans perform crucial functions in the AWACS planes and warned of "over- growing importance in the alliance" with the long-anticipated debate over the German's military role.

A U.S. diplomatic source agreed that NATO countries, like many Germans, were disappointed that the Kohl government turned the high court for a ruling rather than deciding to policy for itself.
Minority group in engineering to give awards
By Erick J.R. Enriquez
General Assignment Writer

Most African American professionals are perceived as successful in their chosen fields, but an engineering students' group will do its part to break the stereotype in its diversity banquet Saturday.

Ozzie Lomax, SIUC's associate director of Student Conduct Maintenance at Eastern Illinois University, Light, will be the guest speaker at the Third Annual Diversity Banquet. About 20 to 50 students and faculty are expected to attend.

It is obvious that minorities in sports and entertainment are often in the limelight. "We need to shed light on the fact that African American students are successful in other areas as well."

Black in Engineering and African American Engineers, an engineering organization, will be sponsoring the event, which will feature Illini Student Advices, people who have received the organization, outstanding academics in engineering and students who have graduated from SIUC.

Patricia Wilson, programming chairperson for the organization, said the banquet will be a way of paying tribute to minority students who have succeeded in their organization and the College of Engineering.

"It is important to become a well-known RSO to the University community," Wilson said.

Bruce Crippen, assistant professor of student academic affairs, said the banquet provides an opportunity for minority students to be recognized on a national scale of the profession/ethnic American.

Lomax is also going to showcase a different role that African Americans are playing in engineering. "It's important that youth see that there are other roles models for them besides sports and entertainment."

Lomax's lecture is titled "The SIUC Perspective," and will detail Lomax's own methods for maintaining diversity. The chief engineer said he will also be speaking after graduating from college.

"It is important that even though one may be tough enough, it will get better if one comes down the road," Lomax said.

"The SIUC Perspective," as the topic suggests, will address how to go big pay off five or 10 years down the road for the individual with a clear goal.

Lomax graduated from SIU in 1970 with a degree in electrical engineering. Upon leaving college, he was offered several top jobs, but accepted the access to the lowest paying.

"I chose that job because of the opportunity," Lomax said. "I went through about weren't a great paying job, but I'm glad I did it, or the old engineering would eventually be gone and new systems would need to be filled."

The banquet will be at 5:30 p.m. in the Old Main Room of the Student Center.

It is open to students, faculty and staff of the university and the general public for $10.

SIUC scholastic teams compete in regionals
By Sherina Donovan
General Assignment Writer

For the first time since 1975, a College Bowl team from SIUC advances to the Midwestern Regional. SIUC's team placed second in the regional competition Feb. 25 at Earlham College in Richmond, Ind.

Earl Zeigler, captain of the team and doctoral student in finance from Harvard, Conn., said it was a thrill just to participate.

"We were the dark horse going into the tournament," he said. "We just happened to be there."

SIUC went up against six teams in the first round of competition.

"The first round, we went up against University of Illinois, Zeigler said. "It was our only loss in the first league."

SIUC beat U of l in the first round of the semifinals. U of l came back to beat SIUC twice in the final round.

Kerri Moinen, a freshman in biology from Jacksonville, said the regional competition was exciting.

"It was exciting to know we beat the University of Illinois in round three of the semi-finals," Moinen said. "It just shows how we're going to be there in the future. It is going to be really exciting."

The competition had more difficult questions about science, politics and other parts of the academic.

"The SIUC team is really excited to participate in the tournament," Moinen said.

"This is great. We are competing with a lot of other schools," Moinen said.

"We are going to win. We are going to win. We are going to win," Moinen said.

The regional competition will be April 22-24 in Los Angeles.

Denis Labhart, a junior in political science and history from East Peoria, said he is eager for next year.

"I am looking forward to next year because we did so well this year," Labhart said. "We were a surprise to a lot schools because they think SIUC is a party school. I think we proved them wrong."

Student Programming Council sponsors a campuswide college bowl tournament every fall. The top players are chosen for the team.

Next year, the team is hoping to get area schools to come down during orientation week to give the tournament teams more publicity.

Other team members are Clarke Moore, a junior in electrical engineering from Barlow, Ky., and Tim Buscemi, a senior in mechanical engineering from Riverdale.

Environmental group plans to discuss policy guidelines
By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

Environmental topics that are becoming the focus of policy for making environmental decisions will be discussed by a member of the largest professional organization for environmental education.

"The discussion will include topics which act as policy guidelines," Trudy Volk said. The topic of sustainable development has been building for several years but it came to a head at last year's Earth Summit.

Sustainable development is what it means for developing and developed countries, a topic which dominated last year's Earth Summit, will be the subject of discussion at 7 p.m. today in Davis Auditorium, located in Wham 105.

Desh Bandhu, president of Indian Environmental Organization, will lead the discussion.

Bandhu is an author for UNESCO's Environmental Programme.

He previously has worked in cooperation with U.S. governmental agencies including the Department of Fish and Wildlife.

"What this cooperation the development of educational materials for India has been essential," Bandhu said.

He is a consultant for the United Nations Environment, "agrad and a long-time member of the North American Association for Environmental Education.

Sustainable development will be the topic when state governors meet in May in Kentucky. A similar discussion will be conducted in India.

Program is sponsored by the Curriculum and Instruction Graduate Student Organization.

arrests around the country. House said.

They have studied how marijuana legalization would benefit the economy in the form of tax revenue, House said.

NORML members have ideas to further their cause — such as setting up tables each week to inform students about the benefits of the hemp plant — but simply lack the resources to put the ideas into action, he said.

House said he has met many people who support the legalization of marijuana, but they choose not to join the group.

"Many people are worried about the police, and they use that as an excuse," he said. "People do not need to be concerned at all about getting involved with police just because they're involved with NORML," he said. "Drew (Hendrick) used to always have to go out of his way to get a hand of police officers."

At the start of a semester, many people often show up at meetings, House said.

As many as 75 people showed up on one such gathering on the steps of Shryock, but few continued coming to regular meetings, he said.

"It always happens," House said. "Quite a number of people will show up in the beginning, then attendance will start to taper off."

"They find out we're serious about our work and that we don't just sit around smoking pot," he said.

"But we don't bring that to the meetings. We come here to get things done."

Active demonstrations and more imaginative events will be encouraged to make the celebration of World Health Day different from those in the past, an organizer of the event said.

"We are trying to make this different," said Joyce Combes, committee co-chairwoman. "We don't want a lot of people just sitting at booths with literature."

"We are trying to make this as diverse an affair as possible."

—Joyce Combes

The celebration will be from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. April 15 in the Fane Breeze, vs. on SIUC campus.

A variety of activities are planned throughout the day and rooms are required to participate.

"There will be interactive games, educational materials, a CPR and Tai Chi demonstration and much more," Combes said.

Combes said she is trying to arrange for the Blackfire Dancers to be present, as well as the Ta Kwan Do demonstration. Those activities still are tentative.

"We are trying to make this as diverse an affair as possible," Combes said.

"I can't say how involved the student groups will be, but they are all represented on the Health Fair Planning Committee."

She said SIUC's diverse student population has made her realize that it is important to educate all students in the areas of health.

"I think the diversity issue has made some real strides to touch the lives of all students in the area of health," Combes said. "I am excited about our diverse student population."

"We want to know what is available to them in the areas of prevention and protection."

Combes said she would like to thank the parking division and the University Museum which have helped establish a schedule for those people setting up booths.

"Both parking division and the University Museum have been wonderful, she said.

"We are trying to get a van from the transit service to help with picking up and dropping off people as they set up their booths."

This celebration will be just one of many celebrations all over the world in honor of World Health Day.

There also will be opportunities for cholesterol and vision screening. The Lions Club van will be behind Shroyer auditorium for vision testing.

"There also will be prizes and giveaways throughout the day," Combes said.

"These include 12 free certificates from Subway, free bowling games, food certificates and CDs on bands."

Combes said a salute will be given to the late John Robert Allen for his contributions to the areas of health and recreation.

Sponsors and groups to be present include the AIDS task force, Humane Society, Lions Club, Subway, Country Fair, 710 Bookstore, Coca Cola, Great Shapes Fitness Center, Delta Health, "We Care," Nutrition Center, Taco Johns, S.I. Bowl, Charter Bank, Vogler Ford, Med Prep Club, Illinois College, Pekin/Hellenic, University Museum, Parking Division, Shroyer Arena and SIUC Recreation Center, and Health Advocates.

Cult leader modeled himself after Florida religious leader

The Washington Post

WACO, Texas—A biblical scholar and expert on cults who has advised federal authorities during the armed standoff with David Koresh and his followers believes that the leader of the messianic leader of a turn-of-the-century doomsday cult near Fort Myers, Fla., who died after a violent confrontation with a town marshal, looks enough like Koresh to provide a prescient example for members who may leave.

J. Phillip Arnold, director of Reunion Institute, a biblical research center in Houston, Wednesday cited striking similarities between Koresh and Cyrus R. Teed, a former Union Army medical corporal in the Civil War who changed his name to Cyrus Teed and founded a religious commune called the Koreshan Unity.

"I've never heard of anybody else calling themselves Koresh before, and I've been reading this stuff for 20 years," said Arnold, whose institute studies religious cults and provides counsel-ling for members who leave.

Koresh is Hebrew for Cyrus, the Persian king and defender of the Israelites who, according to the Book of Isaiah, was anointed by God to crush the Babylonians.

Like David Koresh, who changed his name from Vernon Howell, Cyrus Teed "Koresh" was obsessed with the Book of Revelation, a darkly allegorical work that foretells a series of calamities leading to the apocalypse.

Also like David Koresh, Teed took messianicism to its extreme with his followers, who were celibate to guarantee that they would be granted eternal life, Arnold said.

Couples subdue pain, concentrates on golf

The Washington Post

AUGUSTA, Ga.—Even some of the people who know Fred Couples best admit it never ceases to amaze them how he's able to block out the off-course chaos in his once-charmed life and focus on the game of golf at hand—even in the swirl of a tumultuous year that included the swift thrust of his first major victory in the Masters and the agony of an ongoing and painfully public divorce.

"He's had some remarkable performances when most any other guys would have gone in the tank," said CBS announcer Jim Nantz, who roomed with Couples at the Whitby Hotel in Houston and considers him one of his best friends. "Last month, he's playing in the Honda (in Fort Lauderdale), and every night there's a prom with Deborah (his wife) showing up on 'Hard Copy.' To defy all the critics and overcome all the distractions and still win that week, it really showed me a lot about who he is and what he's about."

Only Couples, 33, knows for sure what he's about on the eve of having to defend his Masters championship. This much is certain: He's way off the phenomenal pace he set a year ago when he unexpectedly won the Masters, when he dominated Professional Golfers' Association Tour like no player since Tom Watson and Jack Nicklaus in the 1970s.

Between the 1991 U.S. Open and the '92 Masters, he finished sixth or better 19 times in 24 worldwide events, with five victories and scores in the 60s in 25 of 35 rounds. This year, he won the Honda in a playoff after a collapse on the back nine Sunday, has had top 10 finishes and is fourth on the money list with $375,125, an enviable position for most of his peers. But Couples knows it's definitely not the same.

"At that time (before the '92 Masters), golf was a piece of cake for me," Couples said at the Players Association news conference yesterday. "Now, it's like I have to prove to myself that I can keep doing it, keep using it. That's not a good attitude to have in stride. I just want to play well. Pressure is not whether I can win the Masters again or be number one on the money list. Pressure is getting back to that point I was at last year. What I'd like to do most is win another major. Golf is thinking like that can get to be a bit much. It's really stupid to think that."

"Mentally, I'm ready to go, but I don't think I'm playing like I was back then. That might be because the last two years were the best. I feel a little pressure. Before, it was a freewheel job. I knew I could show up and smash it. Now, I'm a little more timid. I may never play like that again, but I know I can win."

He spent last week working with his swing doctors in Houston, with a stop in New Orleans over the weekend to watch the NCAA basketball semifinals.

Greg Norman, playing some of his best golf in the last two years, said this week he believes Couples has a chance to repeat. "There were eight to 10 days playing well," said Norman. "And Freddie, given his circumstances, I don't know how he's handled the external circumstances. I think he's handling things pretty good."

The circumstances have had an affect. Couples has admitted the divorce proceedings of the past three months after 11 years of marriage has been roughly akin to a death in the family. He and his wife had been together since college; he's the shy, retiring type who loved to sprawl out on the couch and watch basketball, she the flamboyant extravert who wore hot-pink and yellow outfits made her stand out in a golf gallery.

Last summer, after missing the cut at Muirfield and leaving his wife behind at the British Open, he simply kite home to Flori.a, and stopped playing and practicing.

"I didn't want to be around golf," Couples said before the season-opening Tournament of Champions in January. "Everyone would ask how Deborah was. Things weren't that great, but it's the thing I wanted to tell people. What am I going to say, Things are going horrible with Deborah? I didn't think that was going to help anybody, so I just stayed away from everybody. I knew. It didn't affect my game because I was separated. I just didn't play any golf."

But now, Couples and his friends say he has come to grips with his golf and with his life.

Last week, he got a girlfriend and talks about moving to Dallas, where she lives.

Couples now is looking forward to the Masters, despite all the hazards he knows lie ahead.

"I'll have a lot of my friends coming in, and hopefully they'll back me up," he said. "It will be different, I'm sure. It will be easy. I'm not the kind of person who wants to get in a bad mood getting pushed around. I think it will be an enjoyable time, I just hope I can play well.

Kite may not fly at 57th Masters

Zapnews

The field is, as always, full of tales of exciting players in the game of golf. All eyes are on the 57th Masters, which starts up today.

One of the players to watch is U.S. Open champion Tom Kite. Unfortunately, Kite may be forced to withdraw with a bad knee.

Kite, who lost a bet to last year's Masters because he did not win a tournament since finishing high enough on the money list, hurt his knee playing hockey in Orlando. While playing in the Bay Classic, he took his family to Disney World a few weeks ago.

Kite, No. 1 on this year's money-winning list, missed the cut at the Players Championship last week.

"I'm going to play out the tournament," he said. "I'm going to play a round of golf and see how it goes."

If his back clears up, he could win and join the list of winners headed by former champion Nick Faldo, defending champion Fred Couples, almost champion Greg Norman and future champion Davis Love III.

If it stays the same, it's likely Kite will join former champions Doug Ford, Kenny Aaron, Gay Brewer, amateurs Danny Yates, Justin Leonard and the winner of last year's Masters, Ronan Flanagan, in a field for which Seve Ballesteros, another great player with an iffy back, has been cleared to play.

Honorary starters Gene Sarazen, Sam Snead and Byron Nelson will lead the field with the morning tee time. They will play nine holes and practice rounds will be followed by Ford and Brewer.

Many offering to buy Kulwicki race team

Zapnews

Countless telephone calls have poured into Alan Kulwicki's stock shop offices at all hours of the day, after the death of the race car driver in a plane crash last week.

Felix Sabates recalled one of the calls.

"The voice was of a 9-year-old boy who had once sent Kulwicki a picture and a letter, asking for an autograph. Kulwicki signed it, and sent it back."

"She said she had $3, and asked if she could join the Kulwicki race team," Sabates said Tuesday. "It's just too bad."

Sabates, who had been administering Kulwicki's race team, has received calls from nine people interested in buying the 1992 Winston Cup championship team.

"But he's not responding to any inquiries until after today's memorial service in Charlotte. He's had already proved to any inquiries after the funeral," Sabates said.

"For the team's sake, whatever happens has got to happen in a hurry. You can't drag this out three, four months. With some of the people wanting to hire Alan's crew," Sabates met with the race team Sunday night and asked them not to consider any job offers just yet.

"I told them, 'Stick around together and give us some time to talk this thing over.'" Sabates said.

"It may not work out, but it won't be for lack of effort." Sabates, who fields Pontiacs for drivers Kyle Petty and Kenny Wallace, stressed he has "absolutely, positively, unequivocally no intention" of buying the team himself.

Among the prospective buyers are owners of Winston Cup teams and at least one, a major construction company, with no experience racing at all.
Smith produces more than excellent players

College players come and go like midterms and finals and NBA drafts. But one constant is that they own the basketball and the arena. The program stays on.

In a way, it's important. They're responsible for keeping some college teams like UCLA's and Arizona's in the top 20. But when the Coogs hit the court in April, they are a part of something that has been going on for more than 20 years. They are a part of the phenomenal championship game for North Carolina vs. North Carolina State, which is only two years in the last great game of the season. By the end of March, the new season is under way.

The coach is accountable to the athletic director and the athletic director is accountable to the university. And then the full circle gets back to the coach for accountability, for the purpose of his players, for the education of his program.
