Ex-president criticizes job

By Marc Chase
Administration Reporter

The SIU chancellor's position has been criticized by a former University president as not being cost effective and is currently under the scrutiny of a state legislator.

Officials at SIU and other state universities, however, disagree, saying the chancellor system in Illinois should be retained.

The publicity surrounding the SIU office began after Chancellor James Brown announced his retirement at the July 14 Board of Trustees meeting.

Brown has served as acting chancellor for three years and permanent chancellor for two years and will continue his term until a successor is chosen.

Brown said he serves as a mediator between the SIU Board of Trustees and the administrations at the four SIU campuses to protect the interests of the Board at each campus. The SIU chancellor is hired by the Board.

Albert Somit, former SIUC president, said he is in favor of eliminating the chancellor system at SIU as well as across the state.

He said it would be more cost effective to enstate one or two chancellors to fulfill the office at all state universities, based on systems in New York and California in order to save tax dollars.

There are currently four governing boards for the various Illinois universities.

Also, Illinois Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin, formally asked the SIU Board of Trustees to review the chancellor position's efficiency and usefulness at the University before Brown's successor is chosen. Brown, whose office has a budget of $1.8 million, said Somit's claims are not applicable to Illinois.

"I'm afraid Mr. Somit sounds like a man who was fired by a chancellor once," Brown said. "The state (chancellor system) has evolved to the current system it has and does not need the draconian measures that Mr. Somit suggests."

There are three other university governing boards in the state besides SIU: the Board of Governors, Board of Regents and University of Illinois. Each board has its own chancellor, but the duties and budgets of each chancellor office vary.

The Board of Governors serves five separate state universities including Chicago State University, Eastern Illinois University, Governors State University, Northeastern Illinois University and Western Illinois University.

Tom Layzell, chancellor for the Board of Governors, said the chancellor systems that exist

USG sets goal to define duties

SIUC's Undergraduate Student Government may have felt unorganized and out of many students' minds lately, but goals set by the organization's administration recently may change that feeling.

Edwin Sawyer, Undergraduate Student Government president, said USG will kick-off the fall semester by talking directly to students about the duties of student government and what it can do to help students.

The Undergraduate Student Government serves as a body to protect students' interests on campus and bring student concerns to the University administration.

The information campaign titled "Operation Listen-Up" involves USG senators, who represent the different academic departments and on-campus housing areas at SIUC, visiting classrooms in the areas they represent.

Sawyer said each senator will give a speech to the classes they visit

Student sexually assaulted on campus

Safety programs offer alternatives to common risks

By Connie Fritsche
Staff Reporter

For most students, college life is blighted with many kinds of fears. Perhaps one of the biggest and most horrifying, however, is the fear of sexual assault.

Unfortunately, one female SIUC student was forced to face those fears this weekend.

Early Sunday morning, this student informed police she was sexually assaulted while walking home.

The assault occurred near Schneider and Boomer Halls between 2:15 and 2:45 a.m. The student reported she was suddenly grabbed from behind while walking. The man then sexually assaulted her and later fled on foot.

According to police reports, the suspect is believed to be a white male in his 30s, about 6 feet tall, with dark hair and a medium, muscular build. He wore a light-colored T-shirt, jeans and gym shoes.

SIUC police are investigating the crime and anyone with information about the incident should contact the department at 453-

Association draws interest of undergraduate leaders

By Marc Chase
Senior Reporter

Leaders of the Undergraduate Student Government took part in a national conference of student governments in early August and, as a result of the experience, say they want to become more active in student issues on a national level as a result.

Edwin Sawyer, Undergraduate Student Government president and Matt Parsons, chief of staff, attended the United States Student Association Annual Congress in Arizona during the first week in August.

Sawyer said the congress is a gathering of student government bodies from universities across the country to discuss issues that concern students on a national level.

"The organization meets, collaborates on current student government issues and does some lobbying at Capitol Hill, the Senate and the White House," Sawyer said.

"They (the association) represent many issues affecting students that are on a national rather than a local or university level that we don't hear about at SIU."

Sawyer said one of the main issues the association currently is concerned with is an underfunding of Pell Grants, financial aid grants for college students, from the government. Parsons and Sawyer said if Pell Grants continue to be underfunded, many students will not have the opportunity to attend college.

"Without the money and assistance (from the grants) many will not be able to receive a full education," Parsons said.

Sawyer said USG has had minimal involvement in the association in years past, but he wants to ask the USG senate to become more involved.

"When we went to the congress in Arizona we were on a fact-finding mission to see if the association was something we wanted to become more active in," Sawyer said.

"Becoming more active would give us (USG) more power with congress at little expense to the students."

Sawyer said he plans to ask the USG senate, possibly on Aug. 31 at the first USG meeting of the fall, to support a referendum to increase its involvement in the association.

Patrick Smith, Graduate and Professional Student Council president, a student government body that protects the interests of graduate students at SIUC, said the council is already involved in a similar national association.

"We (GPSC) are a member of the National Association of Graduate and Professional Students," Smith said. "We will probably discuss on Aug. 31 whether we will send a delegate to this year's conference."

Saluki Fair highlights groups

Friday fun exposes students to campus-wide opportunities

By Stephanie Moletti
Senior Reporter

While Southern Illinois gears up for the upcoming DuQuoin State Fair, the Salukis are participating in a fair of their own, giving students the opportunity to learn a little more about what SIUC has to offer.

The Saluki Fair will be Friday from 1 to 4 p.m. in Student Center Ballrooms B, C and D. The fair provides students with the opportunity to get to know a few of the Registered Student Organizations on campus.

Harriet Wilson Barlow, associate director of Student Development, said there are close to 500 RSOs on SIUC's campus, many of which will have tables set up Friday to introduce interested students to their organizations.

Barlow said this is the first year the fair did not take place during orientation.

"We hope this will give the opportunity for more students to be involved (in the fair)," Barlow said about the change.

Various organizations from recreational clubs and general interest groups to Greek Letter organizations and entertainment groups will participate in the event.

Barlow said the purpose of the event is to introduce new and returning students to the various opportunities available to them on campus.

The organizations will provide information on their groups and some will have games and prizes, Barlow said.

Kim Clemens, executive chairperson of the Student Programming Council, said the council plans to have a solicitation table set up during the fair with games and prizes.

"This is a type of recruitment and a chance for us to get our name out to the new students," Clemens said.

Clemens said the position of Homecoming chair and positions as a committee member are available within the council.

The council consists of 10 different committees including travel, consorts, expressive arts, films, fine arts, special events and SPC TV.

Eileen Jiskra, program coordinator of the Student Environmental Center, said the center hopes to get the word out to students interested in the environment through the fair.

"We provide an alternative rather than being depressed about the state of the environment," Jiskra said. "We are focusing this year on tools on how to take

Instructor's methods recognized

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

An instructor who puts students through an hour-long physical obstacle course sounds like the kind of instructor many students would avoid.

But Kim Harris, associate professor of agribusiness economics and four-time teaching award winner, is no ordinary teacher.

Harris was recently honored by the American Agricultural Economics Association, a 4,000-member organization, for his undergraduate teaching.

"I'm very excited and quite proud of that award," said Harris, who received second place for the same award last year.

Harris' unconventional teaching methods are part of what make him popular with his students, according to Lyle Solverson, chairperson of the agribusiness economics department, who nominated Harris.

"He's very innovative: a teacher's teacher," he said. "His students like him and his classes are always the first to fill."

Harris, who teaches both Professional Agriscelling and Financial Management in Agriculture, uses teaching innovations, such as obstacle courses and use of microcomputers, to provide different learning experiences.

"Instead of me telling students things, it gets them to learn those things on their own," he said. "I'm told that my teaching methods are atypical, so the students have been very responsive and I've been lucky."

Students are crucial to decision process

LAST FEB. 14 THE STUDENT BODY WAS ASKED to vote in a referendum about increasing student fees to support athletics at SIUC. The athletic program budget cuts were a result of the Illinois Board of Higher Education's recommendations. IBHE's suggestions for cuts came from the Board's Priorities, Quality and Productivity initiative, which was intended to decrease wasteful spending in the Illinois higher education system.

The originally proposed student fee increase of $40 was suggested as a means of offsetting the $1.2 million cut to be made from the 1994 athletics budget at SIUC. With a student voter turn out of approximately 2,700 students the results were as follows: 1,557 against the increase, 1,152 in favor. An after-the-fact criticism that has been made by those in favor is that the number of voters was too small a sample to be representative of overall student sentiment. However, the athletics fee increase, when compared with previous student votes in terms of turnout, represents one of the more successful student referendums.

A POSSIBILITY OF OFFSETTING THE LOSS OF athletics funds with corporate sponsorships shows a certain degree of promise. In soliciting corporate sponsorships, the University attempts to raise money by allowing businesses to associate themselves with Saluki athletics. However, President John C. Guyon says Southern Illinois has definite limits to the amount of corporate funds available.

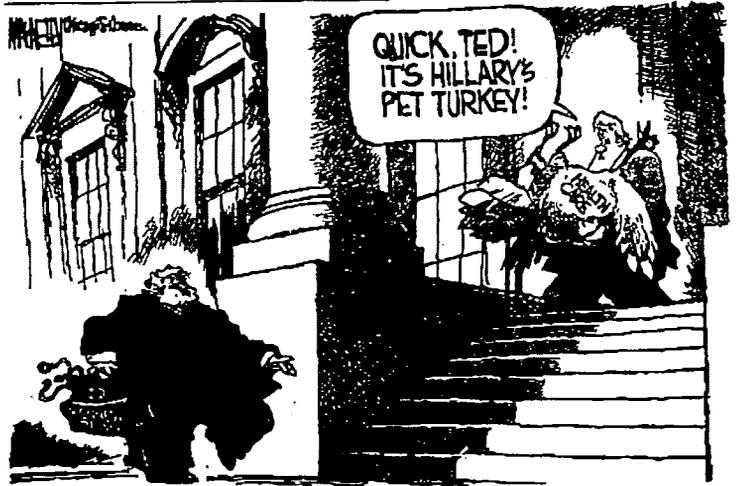

The SIUC athletics program so far this year has raised approximately $400,000 in donations compared with Jim Hart's first year as athletic director, 1988, in which $245,000 was raised. So, the athletic program has taken the responsibility of fundraising partially onto its shoulders, but the $1.2 million in cuts remain.

President Guyon, at the SIU Board of Trustees meeting July 14, put forth a new proposal suggesting a $30 increase that would be broken up over two years. The trustees approved the idea of the possibility of the new fee hike, which would be voted on and could be officially passed at a later meeting.

President Guyon has made it clear that he does value student opinion on the subject of the athletics fee increase. President Guyon's sentiment was clear in the Feb. 17 issue of the Daily Egyptian where he stated, "Student input is a critical variable." Guyon said he interpreted the referendum results as the students saying they were not willing to support the entire fee increase. However, it cannot be assumed that the student rejection of the $40 proposal indicated a willingness to pay for a smaller increase.

A CHALLENGE THAT NOW EXISTS FOR President Guyon is how he will determine exactly what level of financial commitment the students are willing to make toward athletics. Guyon said he has determined from the referendum that students would not support an increase of $40. A major issue stemming from this is who will determine what amount of increase, if any, students will agree to? Correspondingly, how will students be asked if they would be in favor of the reduced fee increase?

Whether another referendum is taken or not, students need to decide if they value SIUC athletics enough to justify the $30 fee increase. After this decision is made, students need to clearly let the administration know exactly what they would support.

Baby boomers fail to save funds

By James K. Glassman
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Not too long ago, when there was no Medicare, no Medicaid and hardly any private health insurance, Americans paid their medical bills out of their own pockets. Where did they get the money? They saved it up.

This notion sounds almost quaint to us today, but saving—which is another word for personal investing—is the basis of a capitalist economy. It's where the capital comes from.

Economists have been perplexed for years by our abysmal and declining savings rate (now around 4 percent), and they frequently argue that the culprit is tax policy.

But another reason Americans don't save is that our politicians lately have essentially been telling us we don't have to.

The government and its agents will take care of us if disaster strikes—through flood relief, Social Security, deposit insurance and now, comprehensive health care.

Threats of personal catastrophe have traditionally offered a terrific incentive to save, but as government has promised to remove those threats, saving has lost its appeal. Health-care reform—if it happens—will diminish that appeal even further.

There's an analogy here with welfare and other social programs. They may relieve suffering, but they also discourage sufferers from taking steps to help themselves get out of poverty permanently.

If the government really could take care of all our problems, then the fact we don't save wouldn't matter so much.

But it can't. Instead, by making wild promises, politicians have simply given us a handy excuse to consume rather than save, and we have latched onto it with a vengeance.

In 1970, for example, Americans spent exactly as much on clothes as they squirreled away in savings. Twenty years later, we spent 47 percent more on clothes than on savings.

Most afflicted by this disease, it seems, are baby boomers—those now aged 35 to 48.

They have no personal memory of the Great Depression or World War II and assume that, if the worst happens, a Big Daddy will be there again to protect them.

"They (baby boomers) have no personal memory of the Great Depression or World War II and assume that, if the worst happens, a Big Daddy will be there again to protect them."

B. Douglas Bernheim, a professor of economics at Stanford, says in a recent study for Merrill Lynch & Co. that the average baby boomer family should be saving three times what it now saves in order to maintain its standard of living in retirement.

And, if Social Security benefits are cut even moderately in the future, the family will need to save at five times its current rate.

Some Social Security cut appears inevitable. Today, there are 3.2 workers per beneficiary.

By 2029, when today's thirty-somethings are starting to retire, the ratio is projected to fall to just 2.1 workers per beneficiary.

President Clinton's fiscal 1995 budget even included a chapter that calculated that the burden of paying for current government promises would force future generations to face a lifetime tax rate of 82 percent.

Such a rate, of course, is insane. The alternative will be to cut the benefits the government has been so busy bestowing for the past 30 years.

The paradox is that baby boomers know the government can't meet its promises, but they seem paralyzed to act on that knowledge.

Steven Wagner, vice president of Luntz Research Cos., said that his firm's polling for Merrill Lynch found that "there's enormous pessimism about the ability of government to provide for their needs, and yet there isn't a commensurate compensation in savings."

Yet for all their skepticism about government promises, Americans aren't taking steps to support themselves. "They don't fully grasp the magnitude of the problem," says Wagner.

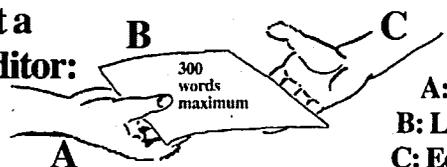

The survey by Luntz found that 86 percent of baby boomers expected future retirees in general to face a "financial crisis," but fewer than half believe that they personally will face one.

The numbers are scary. Bernheim says that a married couple with earnings of $75,000 and without a traditional pension must accumulate $439,000 in savings in order to retire at 65 at roughly the same standard of living. But that's in 1993 dollars!

If retirement is 20 years off, the couple will need $900,000—even if inflation averages just 3 percent to 4 percent.

What can the government do to boost savings? It could bring back IRAs (individual retirement accounts) for all Americans, trim the capital gains rate and end double-taxation of dividends.

six of the nine were alcohol-related.

Sergeant Nelson Ferry, of the SIUC Police Department, said that 80 percent or more of sexual assaults involve alcohol either on the part of the perpetrator or the victim.

Patrolman Don Priddy, community resource officer with the Carbondale Police Department, said as of Sunday, 14 rapes have been reported in Carbondale this year. This figure does not include the one reported this year on campus.

Both Women's Services and the police provide tips on avoiding situations that can lead to sexual assault and rape.

- Never walk alone, especially when intoxicated or upset — use a "Buddy System" when you go out, or walk at night.

- Always use a Brightway Path when walking on campus at night.

- Be aware of your body language and surroundings — attackers look for passive victims.

- When on a date, communicate your feelings clearly — back them up with actions.

- If drinking, do so with a friend you can trust to "watch out" for you — leave with a group rather than alone or with someone you don't know.

- Always carry Mace, in hand — it does no good in the bottom of a purse or backpack.

- Trust your instincts — if you feel threatened, you probably are and need to get out of the situation.

"The best defense against sexual assault is to have a response plan to out-think, out-talk, or out-maneuver your attacker," Ferry said.

He said that it is imperative to think about and practice your response before getting into a dangerous situation.

"If you wait until it happens, it's too late," he said. "It's very important to know your personal limitations."

Priddy said the Carbondale Police Department will be offering Personal Safety for Women classes. The classes include a three-hour lecture and two three-hour workshops.

Anyone wishing to register for the classes can contact Priddy by calling, 457-3200 ext. 428.

Ferry said that there are self-defense courses offered through the Student Recreation Center in conjunction with Women's Studies. For more information on these courses, one can contact either the Recreation Center, 536-5531, or Women's Services, 453-3655.

within the state serves Illinois well, and implementing a system that exists in another state may cause more problems than it solves.

"Keep in mind the Illinois chancellor system has been reviewed at least a dozen times since I have been in office in the last 30 years, and each time it has been found to be the best system for the state" Layzell said. "It may not be the best system in the world, but it works for and meets the needs of this state."

Layzell said it is unlikely that a system which works in one state will function well in another state because of unique conditions that exist in each state.

"You can't just graft another state to Illinois and expect it to work," he said.

Layzell said his duties are similar to the SIU chancellor because he also implements the interests of the his governing board at the five campuses.

Layzell said his office, which has a budget of $2.1 million, is responsible for coordinating legal services for the five universities since there are no campus lawyers in his board system.

Also among Layzell's duties are coordination of labor relations by negotiating with faculty and staff over salaries, coordinating government relations with the governor and the state legislature and coordinating the insurance programs of the universities.

He said dealing with so many campuses can become confusing because of the diversity and variety of the administrations and regions of the universities in his board system.

The Board of Regents serves three universities including Illinois State University, Northern Illinois University and Sangamon State University and has a budget of $1.3 million.

Ron Groves, chancellor for the Board of Regents, said implementing a system like Somit proposes would probably not change the current system very dramatically.

"Shifting a system of five boards to two or three is a waste of time," Groves said. "It would be much ado about little at all, and universities would lose their logical organizational structures."

Stanley Ikenberry, president of the University of Illinois, which is equivalent to the chancellors at the other state schools, was unavailable for comment.

Don Coe, director of public relations at the University of Illinois, said the central administration office at the university has a budget of $7.9 million, and oversees the Champaign-Urbana campus and the Chicago campus.

which provides rides to and from campus: Night Safety Vans which provide regularly scheduled stops for men and women on campus; and S.A.F.E. Escorts at 453-3724, for students walking at Thompson Point. All services are free.

The Women's Resource Center, located in room B244, Woody Hall, provides a wide range of information concerning women's safety.

The center offers materials on preventing sexual assault as well as information about the transportation services offered to women on campus.

It also provides counseling services for women who have been the victims of sexual crimes. The number at the center is 453-3655.

Leslie Strategier, the Campus Safety Representative at Women's Services said that the center will counsel an individual up to six times and can see the victims immediately after the assault.

Sexual Assault has been committed if someone:

- 1) Commits an act of sexual penetration by force or threat of force or
- 2) Commits an act of sexual penetration and the accused knew that the victim was unable to understand the nature of the act or was unable to give knowing consent.

Sexual Penetration is defined as:

Any contact, however slight, between sex organs of one person and the sex organ, mouth, or anus of another person, or any intrusion, however slight, of any part of the body of one person or of any animal or object into the sex organ or anus of another person including, but not limited to cunnilingus, fellatio or anal penetration. Evidence of semen is not required to prove sexual penetration. Conviction leads to a mandatory imprisonment of not less than four years.

NAACP in transition

Los Angeles Times

BALTIMORE—On April 9, 1993, Benjamin F. Chavis Jr., the freshly elected NAACP executive director, struck a confrontational pose as he attempted to reverse the moribund image of the 85-year-old civil rights organization.

Sixteen months later, Chavis was history — fired last weekend, in the words of one board member, for racing the engines of 85-year-old organization "too hard, too fast."

Now it's back to the future for the NAACP.

For the second time in less than two years, the proud and revered civil rights organization is lurching toward yet another change in direction — away from Chavis' aggressive black nationalism toward its traditional, integrationist roots.

Tuesday, Chavis' lawyers argued in a Washington federal court that his firing violated the NAACP's bylaws and would cripple his ability to seek another job.

Giant City offers variety of activities

Students relax in idyllic setting at popular park

By Chad Anderson
Staff Reporter

Giant City State Park, a popular recreational area for SIUC students, offers a wide variety of outdoor activities, from picnics to rock climbing.

Activities available at Giant City include hiking on two- to 16-mile-long trails, rappelling, rock climbing, camping, horseback riding, fishing and — during special seasons — shotgun and bowhunting.

The main attraction for the park is its rugged, unmoistened beauty.

The caves, rock formations and plateaus that make up the landscape attract visitors to the park.

One of the most popular spots in the park is a narrow, twisting, cavernous crevice known as "Fatman's Squeeze."

It has provided a few tight problems in the past, but is relatively safe for anyone who is not claustrophobic.

The few cases of people being stuck have been solved easily with cooking oil.

Many SIUC students spend time at the park.

Tiffany Veath, a junior in radio and television from Carbondale, said she enjoys hiking.

"I don't like the longer trails, but I like the two mile trails. I take my dogs (to Giant City) with me, and they love it," Veath said.

But some students have not had a chance to explore the area.

Jeff Ellebracht, an undecided sophomore from Alton, said he would like to visit Giant City.

"I would like to do all of that (hiking and climbing), but I've never had the time to," Ellebracht said.

Joel Rojas, a freshman in business administration from Joliet, said lack of transportation makes visiting the park difficult.

"I enjoy bike riding and hiking. I'd probably go if I had a car," Rojas said.

Giant City is located about 15 minutes south of campus on Giant City road.

The park offers campsites and lodging.

Although rappelling and rock climbing are not encouraged, they are allowed.

Visitors must furnish their own equipment.

explaining what the Undergraduate Student Government can do for them.

It also gives students a chance to meet with their senator is so if they have concerns they wish to bring to USG, they will know who to speak with, he said.

Matt Parsons, USG chief of staff, who is heading up "Operation Listen Up" said even though the senate has not had its first meeting, many senators have already spoken with him and are enthusiastic about reaching out to students.

Sawyer said there also are several unnecessary parts of the constitution that merely take up space and serve no real purpose. He said he plans to ask the senate to eliminate those parts.

He said the constitution mandates that all senators follow "Robert's Rules of Order," a system of organization in government, when speaking during a senate meeting.

The constitution also contains two full pages describing "Robert's Rules of Order" which Sawyer said are unnecessary since the rules are already mandated once in the constitution.

USG also wants to discuss possibilities for organizing student recreational events, such as helping plan Homecoming at upcoming meetings, Sawyer said.

Free market system helps clean air

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A free market system set up in the 1990 Clean Air Act appears poised to produce a faster, cheaper cleanup of sulfur dioxide than either the utility industry or the Environmental Protection Agency forecast when the bill was enacted.

When the bill was being debated, the industry warned that cleaning up the pollutant — which contributes to acid rain — could cost as much as $1,500 a ton. The administration set the cost more conservatively at $600 a ton.

But last year and this year the market set the price at about $150 a ton.

The mechanism at work is a market in emission allowances that utility officials, federal regulators and environmentalists say has encouraged utilities to find the cheapest cleanup methods. An allowance is the right to emit a ton of sulfur dioxide in a year.

A utility that cleans up more than required under the provisions of the Clean Air Act can sell the allowances to another utility, which can use them to meet its own cleanup requirement.

Under the Clean Air Act, Congress gave utilities until the year 2000 to cut sulfur dioxide emissions in half.

Since sulfur dioxide in the air eventually dissipates, the reduced emissions will constitute an effective improvement in air quality.

The cleanup begins next year, but utilities already have signaled to the EPA what their intentions are, indicating that the cleanup will total 22 million tons at the end of the period — considerably more than the 16 million tons required.

"I really don't see what more you could ask for in terms of a program delivering what it promised to," said Joseph Goffman, a senior attorney with the Environmental Defense Fund. Goffman and others said they hope similar methods may be employed to control ozone, which is a major air pollution problem in metropolitan areas.

Mexicans say post-election growth likely

Newsday

MEXICO CITY—President-elect Ernesto Zedillo, with the lowest mandate ever for a Mexican president, called on his opponents Tuesday to join in an exchange of ideas to move the nation forward.

"I invite all the candidates, political parties and political forces to participate in a dialogue ... that leads to a common platform," he told an audience of Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) candidates for the federal legislature at party headquarters.

With 88.5 percent of the ballots tallied by late Tuesday afternoon, Zedillo maintained his hold with at least 50.1 percent, which gave him a solid lead but the lowest percentage in the 65 years that the PRI has dominated political life—often by fraud—in Mexico.

The Federal Electoral Institute confirmed that the turnout was the highest ever, with 77.58 percent of the eligible voters.

Diego Fernandez de Cevallos, candidate for the center-right National Action Party, known as PAN, received 26.73 percent and Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, candidate for the center-left Democratic Revolutionary Party, or PRD, received 17 percent. Six other candidates trailed them.

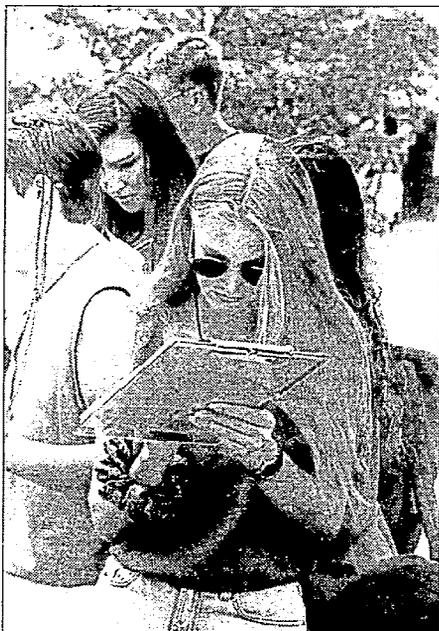

But Cardenas scored heavily in areas influenced by Mayan guerrillas in Chiapas, piling up 73.7 percent of the 19,012 votes there.

Fernandez acknowledged Zedillo's victory while Cardenas Tuesday refused to accept defeat in what national and international observers attested was an election free of any serious irregularities.

"This is the victory of a PRI that responds to the demands of the people," Zedillo said Tuesday.

According to several exit polls taken Sunday, improving the standard of living tops the list of what Mexicans now want from their new president.

Economists Tuesday said Zedillo's scandal-free victory could be the boost Mexico needs to attract the volume of foreign investment it needs to grow.

Domestic and international markets have reacted positively to Zedillo's victory. The Mexican Stock Exchange quickly rose almost 2 percent in what analysts have said was a surge in confidence in the country's future. Zedillo's election is viewed as ratifying the economic program, launched by President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, that has brought Mexico from a closed state-dominated economy to a free-market economy.

"I expect an increase in portfolio investment, direct foreign investment and investments by Mexicans domestically," said David Malpass, director of international economics for Bear Stearns & Co. in New York.

Since he was elected six years ago in Mexico's most controversial election, Salinas has opened the economy, created a free market and attracted foreign investment. The program was capped by passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement last year. But economic transformation has not ameliorated the nation's severe social problems.

Although Mexico has a growing middle class, it remains a poor, underdeveloped country with one of the most skewed income distributions in the hemisphere, which has fueled the migration of millions to the United States.

Clinton pressures neighbors to intern Cuban raft refugees

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—The Clinton administration, trying to stem the flow of Cuban rafters, pressed a dozen Caribbean and Latin American governments Tuesday to provide internment camps that officials hope will prove less attractive to refugees than the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba.

Administration officials said the Cubans would be transferred from Guantanamo Bay, on Cuba's southeast coast, to alternate sites just as soon as arrangements can be completed.

Although the refugees at Guantanamo are held behind barbed wire, to many, the base seems less forbidding than a foreign internment camp.

"They believe that Guantanamo is part of the U.S.A.," said Victor Fraga, 35, a Cuban now living in Miami who reached the United States during the 1980 Mariel boat lift.

"When they get to Guantanamo, they are in the U.S. They have food. They have jeans. They have freedom."

"There's more freedom in a jail in the U.S. than in Cuba," said Orlando Abelindo, who arrived in the United States Aug. 14 after casting away from Cuba on a raft made of Styrofoam packing material. "In Cuba we are slaves. When they get to Guantanamo, they know for a fact that they are in U.S. territory and Castro can do nothing to them."

"In Cuba they are slaves. When they get to Guantanamo, they know for a fact they are in U.S. territory and Castro can do nothing to them."

—Orlando Abelindo

Graciella Cruz-Taura, a professor of history at Florida Atlantic University, agreed. "For Cubans, going to Guantanamo is not going to a foreign land.

Legally it may be U.S. property, but for a Cuban to be told he is going to Guantanamo, it is in fact part of the island.

"It doesn't have the same psychological impact as being sent to a foreign detention camp," said Cruz-Taura, a Cuban American who came to the United States in 1962.

Three days after President Clinton sought to stop the outpouring of Cubans by decreeing that refugees will be rounded up and detained instead of gaining almost automatic asylum in the United States, the pace of emigration continued to accelerate. Tuesday, the Coast Guard rescued 2,886 more rafters, the largest single-day total since the Mariel boat lift, which brought 125,000 Cubans to Florida over five months.

The Coast Guard had rescued 2,548 rafters Monday.

"The bottom line is that this is unprecedented," said Lt. Cmdr. Jim Howe of the U.S. Coast Guard. "With Mariel, you had a shrimp boat with 100 people on it. With this, you have a fire with a guy in it."

Organic, natural foods offered at local co-op

Ben Golsahhr
Staff reporter

Dr. Seuss's Sam-I-Am once asked, "Would you like green eggs and ham?"

The green eggs, provided by the araucanas chicken, are available at Carbondale's Neighborhood Co-Op, a non-profit vegetarian food store.

Locally grown organic produce, meat alternatives such as Tempeh, honey from area beekeepers, and organic coffee are among the many kinds of food products available at the store, located at 102 E. Jackson Street.

Even seemingly impossible foods such as wheat-free bread and non-dairy product cheese are available.

Jane Reh, distributor to the Co-Op, said with the recent additions of coffee and spice dispensers, customers may purchase these products in bulk. Other products may be specially ordered in bulk.

Although there are no meat products sold on the store's shelves, organic meat can be ordered. A meat or vegetable is considered organic when it is not treated with any artificial preservatives, pesticides, hormonal treatments (used in animals), or when any other unnatural processes or agents are not added, Reh said.

Most of the food sold there is clearly marked as organic.

Fresh bread is available weekdays at noon and is made largely from locally supplied organic herbs and spices.

Vern Crawford, the baker, uses over forty different bread recipes, most of them his own. "We don't keep any secrets here. All recipes are on the back of the labels," he said.

There generally are two to three different kinds of bread made each day. Monday features peasant bread, Wednesday has whole wheat apple millet raisin, and on Friday tomato bread made from fresh, locally grown organic tomatoes. The tomato bread is very popular, Crawford said.

The Co-Op also sells works from artists and craftsmen who live in Southern Illinois. Native-American hand drums, candles, jewelry and T-shirts, as well as local music and photographs, are available at the front of the store.

Customers that shop at the Co-Op can become members of the organization for a $3 annual fee. Reh said about 1,400 households are members. Membership benefits include a 10 percent discount on food purchased and the opportunity to receive greater discounts through volunteer service.

The Co-Op is not run as a normal business — all the profits made go back into the business. There are certain "fixed" expenses, such as rent space, insurance and employee wages. All money made after that gets recycled into the business in the form of new cash registers, coolers and coffee bean dispensers.

In addition to being an outlet for organic food, the Co-Op sells biodegradable products, such as dish and laundry soap, toilet bowl cleaner and recycled paper products.

Environmentally conscious shoppers can bring in their own containers, instead of using plastic or paper bags, Reh said.

The Co-Op will present a workshop on vegetarianism from 2 to 4 p.m., Sept. 24. The workshop will focus on adapting to a vegetarian lifestyle. Nutrition, cooking techniques, and other health questions will be addressed. A question-and-answer session will follow.

Crawford said there will be more workshops at later dates, including one on the medicinal value of certain herbs and spices. The workshops are free and ideas about future workshops are encouraged.

"I get a real satisfaction working at the Co-Op," Crawford said.

Espresso pots serve java with 'classical' flair

For those who like their coffee grounded in the classics, there now is an espresso pot shaped like a fluted Greek column.

Created by Japanese designer Isao Hosoe with Sam Ribet for Serafino Zani of Milan, the Mach coffee maker is a stove-top model that starts with cold water in its base. The finished brew ends up in the capital after making what the designers call a "ritualistic passage" up the column.

The coffee maker, which makes two to four cups, is being sold in the United States in anodized aluminum, $80, or black, $100, through Neiman Marcus.

Carbondale entrepreneur adds radio station to list of services

By Dean Weaver
Senior Reporter

Along with thousands of new students before the semester began, Carbondale will soon be home to a new radio station as diverse as the people who live here.

Tom Egert, a Carbondale entrepreneur, was granted a license by the Federal Communications Commission May 17 which allows his future station, WDBX 91.1 FM, to broadcast from a 750-watt tower that will reach listeners living within a 15-mile radius of Carbondale.

Egert said he wants to play a variety of music including jazz, reggae, folk and country interspersed with some in-depth and offbeat local news stories that listeners cannot find anywhere else.

"I want to fill a gap and do something no one else is doing," he said. "I have talked to students and residents and I think there is a real desire for something like this."

Egert said he is the president of the station officially known as the Heterodyne Broadcasting Company, which is a non-profit public station, that will include educational and instructional segments in its format. Michael Starr, chairman of SIUC's radio and television department, said WDBX will give radio and television students another chance to do off-campus internships.

"The new station would be a tremendous learning experience," Starr said. "Students could do program selection and design along with learning how to go out in a community and get financial support for a non-profit station."

Ronald Manis, a Carbondale certified public accountant, said he is on the station's board because he thought it was a chance for him to give something back to the community he has lived in all his life.

"I feel this station will help the community and be more accessible to students and the community," Manis said.

Tom Godell, station manager for WSIU 91.9 FM, said he does not fear WDBX will detract from his informational and educational radio station.

"The new station will only provide students with more learning opportunities and we already have students that work at other stations in addition to WSIU," Godell said.

Egert said one of his main reasons for starting the station was to give something back to the Carbondale community where he lives and has managed businesses since 1982.

"I have been fortunate to have local businesses in the community provide me with services to help start the station, and hope the support continues," he said.

The FCC license states Egert must start broadcasting by November of 1995, but has not set a date the station will be on air. He is getting equipment bids and is working with a local architecture firm in designing the studio that will be located near the Long Branch Coffeehouse. Gene Turk, a Carbondale attorney and station board member, said he is offering his legal advice to help get the station started.

"I hope the station will be up and running by early spring," he said. "Once the station is on the air a new board of people from the community will be appointed."

Egert said he hopes his station will help unite the community, and he plans to do this by scheduling a variety of programs for different groups including a program run by Carbondale High School students, a call-in talk show where people can discuss community-oriented topics and programs hosted by international students.

WDBX is not the first unique service Egert has brought to Carbondale. He is also the owner of Long Branch Vintage Clothing, Carbondale Rag Company, Sweet Dreams Futons and the Long Branch Coffeehouse all located at 100 E. Jackson.

Recycled Eco Discs an environmental alternative

Los Angeles Times

Keep computer disks out of the landfills.
That's the aim of Eco Discs, a new line of disks made from recycled floppies. They're a new listing (billed as "retreads for the information highway") in the current Earth Tools, an environmental-products-catalog business run by a Los Angeles couple.

"We saw them this year at Eco Expo," Stormy S. Knight says. "They've been selling well."
Eco Discs are recycled floppy disks from the computer software industry whose members are stuck with tons of obsolete disks every time they upgrade a program.
So a Texas company has begun recycling the rejects, which are erased, pre-formatted for IBM or Macintosh, given new labels printed with a vegetable ink, packaged in a recycled box and put on the market.

The price is $12 for a box of 3.5-inch disks, which includes 10 formatted disks and a bonus disk with environmental information to be downloaded into your computer for future reference.
And although one little disk doesn't look like a landfill threat,

Knight says, billions are another matter.
"People like to buy something they can picture in their mind helping the environment," she says.
She and her husband, Marc Harris, started Earth Tools four years ago after Earth Day.
"We started looking for environmental products and either couldn't find them or they were priced on the high side," she says.

They shop at trade, gift and natural-product shows, she says, and offer dozens of environmental products for home, garden, pets and personal care.
Although the eco market has changed in four years, with mainstream retailers picking up some items, people are still looking for green products, she says.

Internet addictive pleasure offers escape from reality

The Baltimore Sun

BALTIMORE—Freddie the computer science student had to go cold turkey last year. When Spud the philosopher quits for a week, he feels "very strange." Julie the theater historian says, "It's my hallucinogen of choice. ... I love being able to slip into another body, another persona, another world."

All describe themselves as heavy users. Not of drugs, but of the games, chat lines, news groups, databases and other services on the Internet, that invisible digital landscape created by thousands of linked computers from Stockholm, Sweden, to Sydney, Australia.

These committed cybernauts have spent 40 or more hours a week on line, have friends they know only by Internet nicknames and sometimes feel that time on the net is the most rewarding part of their day. They are, as one researcher put it, "really living parallel lives."

Some fear that marathon netters risk disconnection from "RL," the cyber-name for real life. But one faction of psychologists and sociologists disagrees, saying the net is a relatively healthy place for people to deal with deeply rooted problems.

"People are working through something or escaping from something or finding something important for them," said Sherry R. Turkle, a sociologist and professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who is writing a book about how people act in simulated environments.

Freddie has been an undergraduate at the University of Maryland Baltimore County for five years, but is still a sophomore. He blames the delay, in part, on what may be the most addictive activity on the net—MUDing.

"There are some things I really get into and all else just disappears," said the 21-year-old, who asked that his real name not be used.

MUD stands for Multiple User Dungeons or Dimensions, and the technology is simple: Computers create imaginary castles or mansions or landscapes through simple word descriptions.

A room might be created, for example, with the words, "You are in a large dark room" or "You are in a closet stuffed with toys. There are 22 other people jammed in with you." Players from all over the world plug in through the Internet, adopt a nickname and type their conversation and actions.

They use simple commands such as "go" to move between rooms or "say" to talk. Other players in the same room or space generally can read those words and type back.

It may not sound fascinating, but MUD players may be among the most obsessive on-line users. Some players say they spend 40, 50 or even 80 hours a week playing.

Jumbalaya sound will hit Pinch: Whiteboy to play zydeco, blues

By Paul Eisenberg
Entertainment Editor

Jumbalaya, a combination of varied tastes combined to form a unique dish, could be the best word to describe the music of an artist appearing at a Carbondale bar tonight.

Donnie "Whiteboy" Jennings, hailing from Oppelousas, La., will bring his unique blend of zydeco, blues and Cajun music to Pinch Penny Pub tonight.

Jennings has been performing this blend with various bands and people since 1988, when he and zydeco artist Terrance Sintiam recorded a track on the Disney movie, "Blue Bayou."

He began his own band in 1989, consisting of himself on guitar and vocals, a bassist, drummer, and a rub board player.

Jennings said a rub board is a washboard, "but you wear the thing."

"It looks like a bulletproof vest of some sort," he said. "You want to make sure you're wearing a rub board when you find yourself in the wrong part of town."

Jennings' band also contains an accordion player and a harmonica player at some shows, but tonight he will only have the four-piece band.

Despite the lack of an accordion player, Jennings said there will be many hints of New Orleans in his music.

"It's pretty different," he said. "I do a lot of blues, but when I do zydeco without an accordion player, it's like a Cajun blues. I'm the only one doing this type of thing without an accordion. You really have to hear it to get a sense of what it is."

He said because he is from Louisiana, the music he writes contains elements of all music originating from the Mississippi delta. "It's a mixture of blues, zydeco and Cajun music," he said. "It's kind of like a jumbalaya, it's very different."

Jennings said he got his nickname because he was the only white person in several all-black bands.

"I've played several black clubs where I was the only white guy to ever appear on the stage," he said.

This will be Jennings' first performance in Carbondale. The show is set to begin at 9 p.m.

Harris, who has been with the University as an instructor for 10 years, said his methods were not always unusual.

"I started out as a lecturer, but now I work very hard to make my students participate," he said. "I think that's what my job is — creating a better environment for students to learn in."

Another major change in Harris' teaching strategy is the emphasis on the quality of work covered rather than quantity.

"Now I don't cover as much material, but the material I do cover is covered more thoroughly and

(the students) learn more," he said. Harris credits his teaching assistants, secretarial support, the deans in his college and others at SIUC with contributing to his recognition.

"I'm the one who gets the award but it's a team effort," he said. "I think SIUC is a good place to be a professor and a good place to be a student."

Harris' other awards are from the National Association of Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture in 1987, and by the College of Agriculture and the University in 1991.

Student's case finally heard after five years

By Aaron Butler
Staff Reporter

This article did not run in its entirety in the Aug. 24 issue of the Daily Egyptian. The Daily Egyptian regrets any inconvenience caused.

An SIUC doctoral student gave local environmentalists something to cheer about last week after being awarded $587,900 in damages by a Chicago circuit court.

Biological engineering Ph.D. candidate Jack Tursman had been pressing a case against his former employer, a hazardous waste incinerator near Chicago, since 1988.

He alleged in his case that he had been discharged in an attempted cover-up by his superiors, who were violating government hazardous waste treatment standards.

Tursman was fired from his shift-management position at Chemical Waste Management in December 1987, after blowing the whistle on numerous on-site violations of Environmental Protection Agency waste disposal regulations.

"Untrained workers were handling toxic waste which they knew nothing about, spills were going unreported, and PCB-contaminated soil was being dumped, untreated, in the fields behind the plant," Tursman said.

One year after his termination, Tursman filed the claim against his former employer and spent the next five years pushing the case through Illinois' civil court.

"I felt discouraged a lot," he said, describing the slow process of getting his case tried. "But I never even considered dropping the charges. This was too important, and I'm just not a quitter."

The decision was good news for the environmental movement in general, said Donna Braun, group coordinator at the SIUC Student Environmental Center.

"Even more important than the money itself is the message this decision sends the waste disposal industry—that people behind these incinerators will be held accountable," Braun said.

Braun cautioned that problems Tursman confronted in the Chicago area should also be concerns on the minds of Southern Illinois residents.

"It took the firing of a brave man to get EPA attention focused on the violations at that incinerator," she said. "We are told by the same EPA that let the Chicago plant operate for two-and-a-half years, in flagrant violation of regulations, that the proposed Crab Orchard incinerator is safe. Why should we believe them now?"

"We are told by the same EPA that let the Chicago plant operate for two-and-a-half years, in flagrant violation of regulations, that the proposed Crab Orchard incinerator is safe. Why should we believe them now?"

— Donna Braun

Dr. Rose Rawell, a Herrin resident who has studied the effects of hazardous waste incinerators for five years, said the decision was an important one.

"Mr. Tursman is a pioneer in our field," she said. "I can't say enough about what he has done for the environmental movement in the area."

Dr. Rawell also expressed her concern regarding the EPA's irresponsible lack of supervision over the waste management industry.

"This particular incinerator had a long history of environmental violations. If the EPA had been doing its job, Tursman would not have had to face the company alone."

William Plunket, spokesman for Chemical Waste Management Inc., said the verdict is unjustified and the company is considering all possible remedies, including a possible appeal.

Purnell bellows words of encouragement

By Aaron Butler
Staff Reporter

The halls of John A. Logan junior college echoed yesterday with the booming voice of Silas Purnell, as he tried to give bewildered new students a sense of direction in the chaos of life at an unfamiliar school.

Purnell, division director of Ada S. McKinly Educational Services of Chicago, spoke Wednesday on social and personal development for new college students.

A prominent advocate of low-income minority education, Purnell has helped place over 40,000 students in colleges and universities throughout the country.

He says there is no secret to his success, and firmly believes anyone can achieve anything through determination and perseverance.

The most important thing for a new student to remember, according to Purnell, is that one cannot achieve success alone. "As a student, you have very little power.

Therefore, you must exercise

Community college echoes with positive thinking influence over those with more power than yourself. Let them know you are valuable, that they will benefit by helping you."

Purnell calls this process "networking", and described three patterns of behavior necessary to make it work.

"First, you must be competent. Be the best you can be, whatever you do. Second, be reliable. People must know they can count on you. Third, you must have integrity. Develop positive values: work, family, religion, and especially perseverance. When things are rough, hold on."

Self-respect was another major theme.

"Many students have a lot to offer, but don't know themselves. You have to trust yourself, do not be afraid to take risks. It is better to make your own mistakes than to only act on the advice of others."

Purnell also stressed the importance of religion.

"The jails in this country are full because the churches are empty," he said.

In closing, Purnell asked students to look ahead, and not worry about past mistakes. "How many of you have seriously considered about where you will be in five years? Think about it."

"Remember," he said, "education, jobs, contacts, all of them are means to an end. Your final goal is a better quality of life, and none of these other things mean anything unless they give you happiness you are looking for."

Dan Bounley, a criminal justice major at John A. Logan College, described Purnell as an excellent motivational speaker.

"I came here today feeling depressed, and discouraged about my chances of ever getting my degree. After hearing Mr. Purnell speak, I am determined not to give up, no matter what."

Purnell was invited to Logan by the Student Support Services office of the college.

Ngozi Okasili, coordinator of the office's minority transfer center, said she had first met Purnell in 1968, and would recommend his advice to anyone uncertain of their future.

"Silas is an honest, sincere man, genuinely interested in anyone who asks him for help. He has the ability to move people, to make them feel they can accomplish anything they set their minds to."

DaShunda Gore, president of the Black Student Association at Logan, said she had heard Purnell speak last year on a previous visit, and wanted to see him again.

"Mr. Purnell has a message I believe is great for students lacking confidence in any situation. He is unbiased, speaks the truth and is very encouraging. I believe he can help anyone who truly wants to be helped."

The crowd for football usually starts as a large one, but begins to taper off as the weather chills.

"When I tried out here, it was April and I was still in high school. I drove down here every day for a week for a clinic and it was two-and-a-half hours each way. It was different here because of the guys, and you have to start over from the bottom. But it was worth it."

Little League World Series may be only tourney to see

Enjoy this World Series—the Little League World Series on ESPN, ESPN2 and ABC—because you might not get to see another one this year. ...

It turns out that the Los Angeles Raiders didn't get such a bargain when they took Iowa running back Nick Bell in the second round in 1991 with the 43rd pick over-all after he had been projected by most draftniks as a first-round selection.

Sign of the times: Free agent comeback Toi Cook signed a one-year contract with the San Francisco 49ers for the veterans' minimum of $162,000, but could make as much as $838,000 in incentives that would bring his take to $1 million.

The new rule that restricts defensive backs' physical contact with potential receivers must be a factor in some of the dandy pass completion percentages during the exhibition season.

UCLA's opening-day opponent Sept. 3, Tennessee, has had more first-round NFL draft picks since 1984 than any other school. The 14th was Heath Shuler, the quarterback picked third overall by the Washington Redskins after his junior year.

Former Duke All-American halfback Jay Wilkinson has written a book about his late father, "Bud Wilkinson: An Intimate Portrait of an American Legend."

Of USC's 40 leading rushers, a list that includes four Heisman Trophy winners, who has the highest average per carry? Howard Elliott, who netted 1,384 yards on 195 carries from 1925-27 for a 7.09 average.

The NCAA will have a $190.1-million budget for the 1994-95 fiscal year, $151.9 million coming from its contract with CBS sports.

NBC has signed one of the best TV sports reporters, Jim Gray, formerly of CBS and ESPN.

Look-alikes: David Cone and actor Andrew McCarthy.

John Paxton, the Chicago Bulls guard who announced his retirement after an 11-year career, will be remembered most in Los Angeles for his 65 percent shooting during the Bulls' five-game series victory over the Lakers in the 1991 NBA Finals.

Still don't think Nick Price is in a class by himself? With three-quarters of the year's tournaments having been played, Price is the only multiple winner on the PGA tour. He has won five, including the PGA Championship and the British Open.

Those who believe boxing is dying might have to change their thinking when Mike Tyson, who is eligible to be released from prison next May, returns to the ring.

Can you imagine the television audience for his first fight back, no matter the opponent?

Roberto Garcia will not have a Tyson kind of payday when the unbeaten 19-year-old featherweight from Oxnard, Calif., fights Frankie Avelar Saturday at the Grand Olympic in Los Angeles. But Garcia got a nice perk from Top Rank, Inc., the other day during his first visit to Beverly Hills—a $70 haircut from a Rodeo Drive stylist. It was the first time anybody except his father had cut his hair.

McNall agrees to plead guilty in fraud case

Los Angeles

Los Angeles Kings' President Bruce P. McNall, the sports entrepreneur credited with turning on Southern California to professional ice hockey, has agreed to plead guilty to four criminal counts stemming from a federal bank fraud investigation, sources close to the case confirmed Tuesday.

McNall, hailed as recently as a year ago as one of the United States' most successful and innovative sports executives, has signed a draft agreement negotiated by his lawyers and federal prosecutors. That agreement calls for guilty pleas to one count of bank fraud, two counts of mail fraud and one count of conspiracy, the sources said. As previously reported, a federal grand jury has been investigating McNall for allegedly falsifying loan documents.

Although it is possible for McNall to receive probation from a judge, sources with knowledge of the agreement said that was unlikely, adding that under federal sentencing guidelines and the current plea, McNall probably would face a maximum prison sentence of six to nine years.

That sentencing ceiling could be lowered. That would depend on such factors as assistance he provides authorities in investigating business associates and lenders, repayments made to creditors and his degree of culpability for certain losses from his business operations.

Saluki football boosts offense

By Sean Walker
Staff Reporter

The Saluki football team took a giant step toward solidifying the offense by acquiring a part time starter from a Big Ten power Tuesday.

Damon Jones, a sophomore tight end transfer from the University of Michigan, will be donning the maroon and white this season as the Salukis begin head coach Shawn Watson's new era.

"Jones is a good addition to the team," Watson said. "He will really help our depth and we are excited to have him."

Watson said Jones decided to join SIUC because he had worked with receiving coach T.J. Weist at Michigan before coming here.

"Jones is a definite attribute to the tight end position," Weist said. "He can run-block and can catch the ball very well."

As a Wolverine, Jones started in three games which resulted in seven receptions for 93 yards.

Watson said it was an agreement between Jones and Michigan head coach Gary Moeller for him to play at SIUC.

The Michigan sports information office said Jones left Michigan for off-the-field personal reasons.

Jeff Long, Michigan's assistant athletic director, said things just did not work out at Michigan and with a year of maturity Jones will do well.

"Jones wanted to be able to play immediately and having T.J. Weist down there probably helped in his decision," Long said.

"He is an outstanding tight end," he said. "The kid has all the tools to be a great player and not just at the collegiate level either."

Watson said Jones is eligible to play this year, but has some catching up to do on the practice field. Jones will be able to start practicing with the team on Friday.

"He is behind right now because he will only be starting practice this week, but we expect him to contribute soon," Watson said.

Jones, an Evanston native, said he is not used to the heat, but that will help him get to his desired weight before the season opener.

"I will help out in any way I can," he said. "I want to be part of coach Watson's 'it's a new beginning' motto."

Weist said Jones is anxious and happy to be playing in his home state with the Salukis.

"Jones knows about our football tradition," Weist said. "He is very excited to be playing

Real athletes: Cheerleaders work out year long

By Charlotte Rivers
Campus Life Editor

The Saluki cheerleaders do more than leading the crowd in spirited calls for victory at SIUC football and basketball games. Behind the scenes, they work year-round to maintain the physical conditioning needed to perform at an average of 27 football and basketball games per year. Coach Nancy Esling said the squad of 18, nine men and nine women, practices four times a week for three hours along with additional training.

"They all lift (weights) three times a week," she said. "There's some running and the actual activity itself."

Jeremy Cramm, a junior in exercise physiology from Decatur, said squad members follow a training regimen set for them by the athletic training department.

"We lift weights, run a mile before practice and do ab exercises," he said.

Cramm, who has been a Saluki cheerleader for three years, said he prepared for try outs with other hopefuls.

"We went to the Rec (Center) to practice," he said. "We lifted weights and attended tumbling sessions to get ready for try outs."

Although attending practices, performing at games and making up to 10 yearly special appearances, Cramm said the amount of time spent on the squad is not a burden.

"We get to register for classes early so we can schedule our time around cheerleading," he said. "It helps with planning time and learning responsibility."

Dawn Slusher, a senior in special education from Jacob, said she works to schedule her practice and study time.

"All the special ed classes are at night, so right after I leave practice, I go to class," she said. "My dad always had (SIUC) season tickets so we went to all the games," she said. "I've wanted to do this since fourth grade."

Even though the cheerleaders do not receive large material rewards for their efforts, there are many intangible benefits.

"We don't see a lot of rewards," said assistant coach Anthony Harris.

"We do it because we love the sport. The experience shows that you're well-rounded. It's time consuming but not in a bad way because we love it. We spend a lot of time together and become like a family."

Harris, a senior in biological science from Carol Stream, served as a cheerleader for two years before becoming the assistant coach, said he got involved in cheerleading because he likes to show his school spirit. "The high school I went to had no spirit," he said. "I had done wrestling and gymnastics, so when I came here, I asked about try-outs and I tried out."

The squad travels to other schools and conducts clinics for high school and junior high school cheerleaders and also serves as judges for high-school level try outs, Harris said.

"We have three clinics coming up; at Galatia, Cobden and Meridian High Schools," he said. "Last year, we hosted a clinic in December with more than 10 squads. High school squads don't have males so we show them how to lift; that girls can lift girls. It's not a matter of strength, it's timing and technique."

To help keep up with their rigorous schedules, squad members maintain a healthy lifestyle, Cramm said.

"I don't drink, and most of the others feel that way, too," he said. "We're just like other students—we got out once in a while and have a couple of drinks, but mostly we just go out dancing or to each others' houses."

A cheerful outlook is necessary for all the squad members, LaTasha Mallory, a senior in psychology from Bellwood, said.

"You have to be confident," she said. "A positive attitude is important." Mallory, a cheerleader for four years, said the squad works to get the crowd involved in the game.

"We use chants that the crowd
