SIU-C settles in Hemphill suit

By Anne Flasz
Staff Writer

A $5 million lawsuit filed against SIU-C head football coach Rey Dempsey and three others was dismissed in U.S. District Court in Benton Tuesday in exchange for a settlement of $20,000 to be paid by the University's insurance carrier.

The suit, originally filed by the late Mark Hemphill, a former Saluki football player paralyzed in a game on Oct. 6 1979, was pursued by Hemphill's father, Obra, through St. Louis attorney Chris Holthaus.

Hemphill died Nov. 26, 1982, of a apparently unrelated heart infection.

Other defendants named in the suit were then Athletic Director Gale Sayers, former wide receiver coach Dan Brooks and trainer Harry Shulz.

A University News release said the suit was dismissed by U.S. District Court Judge James Foreman as having "no case for negligence" but Holthaus disagreed, saying he accepted a summary judgement in order to receive a settlement.

"You don't pay $20,000 to somebody if you don't have some responsibility," Holthaus said.

Shari Rhode, chief trial attorney for SIU-C, was not available for comment Wednesday.

Holthaus said a workman's compensation suit against the University is on appeal before the Illinois Industrial Commission. It has been previously rejected by an IIC arbitrator, he said.

In addition to the $20,000 Hemphill's estate received from the University's insurance carrier, Holthaus said settlements totalling $56,000 were reached with a local sports distributor and the manufacturer of the football helmet Hemphill was wearing when he was injured.

Holthaus said a settlement was reached with Bleyer's Sports Mart for $6,000, and with Riddel sports equipment company for $50,000.

Because the court "adamantly refused" to issue a continuance on any of three occasions, Holthaus said he did not have enough time to develop a substantial wrongful death suit.

Although Holthaus said that he did not think Dempsey or the others involved did anything "grievous," he disputed the attitude of college football administrators.

"They have nine employees, huge revenues, budgets which are over a half million dollars. They think it's a game. It's not — it's a business," Holthaus said.

"Everything that happened to Mark Hemphill after he was first injured on Oct. 6 shows that he was a victim of a bullheaded, misguided bureaucracy," Holthaus said.

Dean backs Russian program

By John Schrag
Staff Writer

James Light, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, said he does not agree with President Albert Somit's suggestion to eliminate the Russian Languages and Literatures baccalaureate program.

Light, who returned from a vacation Wednesday, is scheduled to meet with Somit and John Guyon, vice president for academic affairs, on Friday to discuss the future of the program.

Joseph Kupceck, one of the two professors in the Russian language program, is retiring next year and Light has decided not to hire a full-time replacement.

That decision was protested by a group of students in the Russian program, who met with Somit and Guyon on Nov. 16 to voice their concerns.

At that meeting Somit said he thought the program should not be offered as a major if only one or two faculty members are teaching, although courses could continue to be offered as part of the Liberal Arts curriculum.

"I would be hard pressed to justify a baccalaureate program with only two teaching positions," he told the students. "If we can't do a competent job, if we don't have the faculty or the resources, then I would say we should wipe it out."

Light, however, said he never intended to eliminate the Russian baccalaureate program and is "totally unsympathetic" to such a move. "I am hopeful that we will not have to eliminate the Russian major," he said.

Light said the decision not to replace Kupceck immediately with a full-time instructor was made in light of anticipated budget cuts to the college. He said he hoped to replace Kupceck, "at least for a time," with a part-time instructor.

Last week, President Reagan signed a bill that authorizes the State Department to spend up to $50 million during the next 10 years to increase the level of Soviet expertise in the United States.

Margaret Corvail, a staff member of the House subcommittee on post-secondary education, said much of that money will likely go to university Russian programs.

McAndrew gets new look for network

By Dave Saelens
Staff Writer

While the popular saying among Saluki fans lately has been "How 'bout them dogs?" Physical Plant employees this week may be saying "How 'bout them goalposts?"

In preparation for Saturday's semifinal Division I-AA playoffs between the Salukis and the Nevada-Reno Wolfpack, Physical Plant employees Wednesday erected a new set of goalposts and added weatherproof covers to the press boxes in McAndrew Stadium.

Alan Haake, University architect, said the goalposts cost $4,000 per pair and are the same brand as the ones being replaced.

Haake said that although there is the possibility the posts may be torn down by fans if the Salukis win, the uprights were still purchased since this is the last game of the season.

Physical Plant workers are also adding a roof to the two lower press platforms in the stadium, Haake said, as well as side panels to the upper press platform.

Haake said the panels, which are made of a weatherproof type of plywood, cost an estimated $8,000 and will be in place by late Friday afternoon "since CBS will be using the upper area Saturday for their play-by-play coverage of the game."

Bruce Swinburne, vice president for student affairs, said that physical plant representatives, SIU-C Security, University programming and athletics met Monday and approved the additions to the stadium. Swinburne said the additions were due to the booths' "inadequacy in case of inclement weather."

He said that since the game would be receiving national coverage, there was also some concern about the amount of space in the press boxes.

Swinburne added that people should remain off the field while there is time remaining in the game Saturday, and if people do enter the field after the game "they should use reasonable care."

93 killed in Madrid plane collision

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A Spanish jetliner got lost in fog and taxied into a Boeing 727 that was accelerating at about 100 mph prior to takeoff from Madrid airport Wednesday, setting off a fiery explosion that killed 93 people, officials said.

It was the second air disaster in Madrid in 10 days. One survivor of the latest crash, an American, said he thought neither plane should have been allowed to take off in the dense fog. The airport, which has no ground radar, had been closed to incoming flights.

Air traffic control officials said the collision occurred at 9:45 a.m. (3:45 a.m. EST) when an Iberia Air Lines Boeing 727 carrying 84 passengers, including 40 Japanese, and nine crew members, accelerated to take off toward the north for Rome. They said the pilot, after apparently spotting the other jet approaching on the ground, just managed to get the 727's nose up.

Transport Minister Enrique Barón and Iberia President Carlos Espinosa de los Monteros said a DC-9 of Aviaco, a domestic Spanish airliner carrying 37 passengers and five crew, got lost while taxiing and collided with the midsection of the 727, went under it and burst into flames.

Spokesmen for Iberia, Spain's national airline, and Aviaco said 50 passengers and one crew member aboard Iberia Flight No. 350 to Rome died. All 37 passengers and five crew members of Aviaco Flight No. 134 to the northern Spanish city of Santander perished, they said.

Barón had earlier put the number of victims at 104, but it was believed the higher figure was due to a confusion in the names of the Japanese tourists traveling on the Boeing 727. An estimated 23 of the survivors of the 727 jetliner were hospitalized, officials said.

Thomas Goltz, 39, a Madrid resident who comes from El Paso, Texas, and his wife Sydney, 32, were seated in the back of the Iberia plane and survived the crash with minor bruises. Goltz, manager of the Singer Co. in Madrid, said neither plane should have been allowed to leave the airport.

'Day After' shown in Germany

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Some critics said the film was poorly made and badly acted, a "nuclear soap opera." But it hasn't mattered to West German audiences who are flocking to theaters around the country to see "The Day After," the U.S. made-for-television movie about a nuclear war triggered in Germany.

Female panda in serious condition

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ling-Ling, America's female panda with the tragic love life, is seriously ill from kidney failure and anemia, and National Zoo specialists said Wednesday that her chances of recovery are very poor.

"It's difficult to say how long she can survive," said Dr. Mitchell Bush, the zoo's chief veterinarian.

Shuttle astronauts prepare to land

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The Spacelab crew, one of them again displaying his temper, packed up Wednesday for the trip home as scientists hailed them for saving the mission and gathering an unprecedented cargo of knowledge.

Columbia, with Spacelab in its cargo hold, is scheduled to end a record 10-day flight with a landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

Experts: economic forecast good

CHICAGO (AP) — The upswing of the U.S. economy will continue in the 1984 presidential election year with moderate inflation and declining unemployment, a panel of economic experts predicted Wednesday.

Walter D. Fackler, professor of business economics at the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business, which annually sponsors the Business Forecast Luncheon, said he was "unabashedly optimistic" about 1984 because of lower-than-expected unemployment and inflation rates.

"This economy is like a supertanker under way," he said. "Its momentum will certainly propel it through the first half (of 1984) and probably through the second half as well."

The three panelists said, however, that changes in some economic variables — such as Federal Reserve policy and the size of the federal deficit — could disrupt the recovery.

They predicted sharp increases in business and consumer spending while forecasting little substantial reduction in the federal deficit. Joel M. Stern, president and chief executive officer of Stern, Stewart, Putnam and Macklis, Ltd., predicted "a fine year for the U.S. economy: continued high growth, but less than recently, a little more inflation, a strong stock market with another bulge in corporate profits, and slightly lower interest rates."

Stern also said he expects the value of the dollar to fall by 5 percent or less next year, and that the federal deficit problem is likely to be made worse by "non-defense spending that can only exacerbate the economy's normal cyclical swings."

USO BOOK CO-OP

The Undergraduate Student Organizations' Book Co-op is a beneficial program provided by your student government. This service enables students to turn in textbooks and set the price for the books that they desire. YES! NO more receiving 50% of what you paid for a textbook.

The Co-op process is easy to do, and takes only a few minutes. Books are collected in the Student Center and a simple contract including book information and set price, is signed between USO and the student.

Textbooks are then sold to students by the Undergraduate Student Organization, and money from the books is then distributed to students.

You too could benefit from the Undergraduate Student Organization Book Co-op Service.

Pending bill nixes bond money for center

By Paula J. Finlay
Staff Writer

A bill pending in Congress that would significantly reduce the ability of cities to issue industrial revenue bonds has, in effect, ruled out the use of bonds to finance Carbondale's downtown conference center project.

The City Council met in a special closed session Tuesday to consider the advisability of continuing to pursue the purchase of land for the project. City Manager William Dixon said, but no decision was made and the matter will be considered again at Monday's council meeting.

The limitation on issuance of tax-exempt bonds is part of a tax bill that supporters say will raise more money for Congress by closing tax loopholes. Donald Monty, director of community development, said.

Municipalities would be given a ceiling of about $75 per capita per year on the amount of bonds they could issue, and that would put Carbondale's limit nearly $10 million short of the $12 million to $15 million needed for the project, Monty said.

Proponents of the measure want to limit the number of tax-exempt municipal bonds and generate more tax revenue. Monty said, but opponents argue that the economic development created by the bonds would generate enough taxable revenue to make up for that lost from the tax exemptions.

Even though "the legislation is just sitting there and not going anywhere," bond counsels are not willing to risk guaranteeing the bonds as tax-exempt to potential buyers because the bill, if passed, would be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1984, Monty said.

One option would be to try for state-issued bonds for the project, but if the effective date was changed to the date of passage, that would solve the problem, he said.

Dixon said that work will continue on the project.

"There will no change in the course of our action, at least until Monday night," he said. "We're proceeding very cautiously."

The council also passed a $2.25 million water and sewer bond issue. An investment banking firm in New Jersey was the low bidder for the bonds at an interest rate slightly over 10 percent, bond underwriter Marlin Moseby said. Bidding for the bonds was "aggressive" and every major bank in Illinois and St. Louis bid the issue, he said.

She said the Soviet-Eastern European Training Act will provide up to $5 million a year for the next 10 years for training Americans to become experts on the Soviet Union. She said funds will be available for language programs, faculty research, teaching fellowships and graduate and doctoral programs in Soviet and Eastern European studies.

The money will be distributed through an advisory committee set up within the State Department, Corvail said, and likely be available in 1985.

The bill signed by the president is a modification of a bill that was co-sponsored by U.S. Rep. Paul Simon, D-Makanda.

Simon, who chairs the subcommittee on post-secondary education, has been a long-time advocate of foreign language study. Last week he expressed concern about the possible cuts to the Russian program at SIU-C, saying there is a shortage of Americans who speak Russian.

He said this lack of bilingual skills causes a lack of understanding between the United States and the Soviet Union and adds to international tensions.

Syrians keep prisoner, return casualty

By the Associated Press

Syria released the body of U.S. Navy pilot Lt. Mark A. Lange on Wednesday but said the return of American prisoner Robert O. Goodman depended on relations with the United States.

Syria also accused the United States of direct involvement in the Lebanon war.

Meanwhile, bombs and rockets slammed into residential neighborhoods in Christian east Beirut from Druse positions in the hills overlooking the city. Police reported two civilians killed and 16 wounded by shrapnel.

The body of Lange, 27, of Fraser, Mich., was flown by the Marines to the aircraft carrier Independence off the Beirut coast for its eventual journey home, said Maj. Dennis Brooks. Lange's A-6 fighter-bomber was shot down Sunday in an attack on Syrian positions in Lebanon's central mountains. His body was delivered by the Syrians to the Lebanese army, which in turn handed it to the Marines.

Syria's state minister for foreign affairs, Farouk Charaa, told a news conference in Damascus that Goodman, 26, of Virginia Beach, Va., Lange's bombardier-navigator, was considered "a prisoner of war."

"He is well-treated in accordance with international rules," Charaa said. Goodman was captured after he bailed out of the stricken plane Sunday.

Charaa said the conditions for releasing Goodman, the first American serviceman held prisoner in Syria, depend "on the development of relations between Syria and the United States."

'Doc' doesn't deserve GPSC's gaudy gift

CLARENCE "Doc" Dougherty, vice president for campus services, has come under fire at times during his tenure for decisions which could only be termed questionable.

But what members of the Graduate and Professional Student Council did to him Tuesday no one deserves.

A plaque which in biting words "recognized" Dougherty for four of his least popular decisions — an effort, we suppose, at facetiousness — was dropped off by a GPSC member in the campus services office.

No good-humored presentation was held. Dougherty wasn't even in his office to receive the "award" — it was left with a secretary.

TO THEIR CREDIT, GPSC President Ann Greeley and nearly half of the council members opposed the plaque idea. The vote was 17-16 in favor of the presentation, with four abstaining.

Greeley said she thought the idea was "tacky." Indeed it was.

We must question why a plurality of the GPSC would choose this method, albeit tongue-in-cheek, to criticize Dougherty for his record. The plaque, in its wording and the manner in which it was delivered, makes the GPSC appear awkwardly irrelevant. It's not a good way to represent the graduate student community at SIU-C.

TOO, WE MUST wonder how GPSC members can justify this sort of stone throwing after a year in which its own house has so often been in disarray.

A gift, after all, is only a reflection upon its bearer. This one does not reflect well upon the GPSC.

Give mathematics a fee, too

After 32 and one half years on the faculty of the Department of Mathematics at SIU-C and as an alumna of SIU-C, I strongly protest a $10 mandatory fee from all faculty and staff for athletics.

I've paid my dues to SIU-C with service and a lower salary than market conditions warrant. Call my staying at SIU-C loyalty or stupidity, it was a sacrifice worth more than $10 a year. If the GPSC thinks $10 is needed for athletics, I believe an amount much more than $10 should be assessed for mathematics — the foundation for a technological society. Our department can afford neither a microcomputer nor a word processor.

"Bah, humbug!" to a student author, i.e. — Imogene Beckemeyer, Assistant Professor, Mathematics.

DE going home to Malaysia

When I decided that I wanted to take home more of Carbondale and SIU than merely a degree, I discovered an abundance of experiences reported in the Daily Egyptian.

I have been reading the columns on the editorial page and they are a good way to better understand and appreciate events. I think that Jeff Wilkinson has done the best job of expressing these events in readable form.

When I return to my home in Malaysia, reading again the essays which I have collected will provide pleasant memories of the American experiences which I have shared. — Teong Beng Ang, Junior, Marketing.

Common sense, objectivity rule downstaters' beliefs

Up to now, I have had a moderately enjoyable time attending SIU-C. In fact, I almost went the whole semester without hearing some Chicagoan put me down for being a dumb downstater. But sure enough, it had to happen.

In one of my early morning classes, two illustrious Chicago students conversed about the light snowfall and remarked about how we downstaters tend to overreact to the least little bit of snowfall, close all the schools down, spend hours driving just a few miles because we're not used to the road conditions, and other erroneous hogwash.

Upon being informed that I live in Murphysboro, one of these nice people quipped, "How long did it take you to get here this morning, an hour?"

It seems to me a bit unfair that the Chicagoans who invade this territory each semester seem to revel in joking about how "backward" Southern Illinois and its people are — especially since none of the downstaters I have met seem to revel in talking about how eccentric Chicagoans are.

Not that we don't talk about it, we just don't revel in it, especially in the presence of a Chicagoan. We are usually more courteous. Downstaters usually have more sense than to

Concern, shock, despair! Trees going in at McAndrew Stadium

Hark! What is this sound cutting through the gently wafting fall breeze? Could it be? Yes, it is indeed the sound of spades turning soil. They are planting evergreen trees and shrubs at McAndrew Stadium. Is it Arbor Day again so soon? Perhaps school officials are making token reparations for the late summer rarl: of Thompson Woods. I think not. However, I decided to investigate.

After driving around campus I find no further planting, and no, checking my Garfield calendar, I find it is indeed not Arbor Day. What other possibilities could there be? Taking note that the bushes are on the north side of the stadium, and duly noting that the last home game will soon be history for this season, what are we to surmise?

Heaven forbid! Could it be that aside from their aesthetic beauty these evergreens are also (after sufficient growth) to block the view of the hillside revelers of SIU home football games?

If this is the case then I must express my concern, shock and despair. I don't care much about the tailgaters who watch the game without paying.

But what, as the object of my concern, about the shrubs? Will next year's tailgater party list include beer, charcoal, grill, and battery powered hedgetrimmers?

I am aghast! Or even more appalling — will we be witness to the pregame ritual of uprooting the shrubs as a vicious prelude to uprooting the goalposts? Cold steel has no feelings. I move for the relocation of "McAndrew Woods." — Rob Kelley, Freshman, Business.

In defense of library

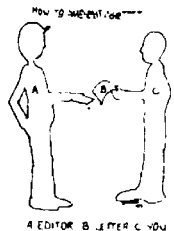

I am appalled by the column taking up half of a page in the Dec. 2 issue of the Daily Egyptian. I am referring to Mr. Rod Stone's attack on Morris Library. What was Mr. Stone's intention? If humor was his goal, I think he missed the boat, since I do not find exaggerated vilification humorous. As an individual who is both a frequent library user and a library student worker, I feel obligated to defend those so unfairly attacked.

As a specific issue, Mr. Stone tells of his adventure with the book, In the Spirit of Crazy Horse, which apparently was recalled when he was on vacation. I too would have been annoyed if I had a book recalled to be placed on display. But a quick check revealed that the copy on display is from Special Collections and could not have been charged from the library.

Mr. Stone's copy must have been requested by, and probably now is in the possession of, another patron. Although at times inconvenient, the recall procedure exists to allow patrons an opportunity to get a book that otherwise could be unavailable for up to sixteen weeks.

I appreciate the fact that Mr. Stone noticed that librarians read during working hours. Maybe he will apply his journalistic skills to learn why this is part of their job description. (Hint: If a librarian knows what is in a professional journal...)

Perhaps if Mr. Stone had used the time he spent editorializing to learn what the library can and cannot do for him, his hostility would have been reduced in a more constructive manner. — Chad Rubin, Junior, Microbiology.

A EDITOR B LETTER C YOU

Share, care this season

The holidays are upon us with cooking, cleaning, buying gifts, entertaining family and friends. For many it's a time of joyous feasting, a time of giving thanks and praise, a time of celebration and sharing. For others this holiday season will not be so blessed.

As a wife and mother volunteering at the Women's Center, I see so many women and children without family and friends, without income and homes of their own, victims of domestic violence whose holidays will not be so filled with joy. But I also see so many ways that we can change this sadness and help. Whether it be through our donated time, money or much needed household items and supplies, there is always something all of us can contribute.

Through volunteer effort, the Women's Center provides care and shelter to fleeing battered women and children 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. We are always there, ready to help.

Could you share and care and help us make this a happier, more meaningful holiday season? — Kathleen R. Shaffner, Women's Center Volunteer.

Staff fingerpainters perform

By Belinda Edmondson
Staff Writer

Anna Martisawski, senior in architectural preservation, has organized a somewhat unorthodox museum display for her final project for Art 447. "Introduction to Museums."

Instead of organizing displays of standard art collections, Martisawski decided to put together an exhibit of 16 fingerprint pictures — done by SIU faculty.

The display, which will be in the Vergette Gallery in the Allyn Building throughout finals week, features works of art by such notables as Bruce Swinburne, vice president of student affairs, and SIU President Albert Somit.

"A lot of students think that the faculty are stuffed shirts, and I wanted to disprove that. I proved a point, I think," Martisawski said.

"I got negative responses from some faculty at first — they thought fingerpainting was something only three-year-olds do, but they grew susceptible to the idea after a while," said Martisawski.

Participants were chosen on the recommendations of former students, who called them "fun" teachers, she said.

The participants were instructed to paint "anything they felt like," and their works range from "landscapes, sunsets, abstracts, expressionistic sort of pictures to corny," Martisawski said.

"I wanted to have them psychoanalyzed, but I was advised against it by my instructor," said Martisawski, who believes that psychoanalysis might have brought out hidden aspects of the artists.

Evert Johnson, Martisawski's instructor, said he advised against psychoanalyzing the pieces because he feels it is not "pertinent" to the project.

"It's a fun kind of thing, by no means a terribly serious exhibit," said Johnson, who said he felt that there were not many psychologists who would find anything significant in the pictures anyway.

Several of the participants drew pictures with themes that related to their personal life, said Martisawski.

"Bruce Swinburne drew a picture called 'The Iowa crossroads,'" and he's originally from Iowa," she said.

Another picture, by philosophy professor George McClure, is titled "The Cosmic Forces of the Universe." Charlotte West, head of Women's Athletics, drew a collage of basketball and volleyball nets. Somit's picture is entitled "Uneaten M & M's."

Asked if she saw any psychological significance in the painting, Martisawski said with a laugh, "You can never tell."

Opera-theater extravaganza planned for Quigley auditorium

A bit of culture will fill Quigley Hall Auditorium at 5 p.m. Friday, when the SIU-C Opera-Music Theater Workshop and the Marjorie Lawrence Opera Theater will present an opera-theater extravaganza entitled "The Contemporary Scene," directed by Michael Blum.

The Marjorie Lawrence Opera Theater is the opera-producing wing of the School of Music.

The entertainment scheduled for the event is full staging and costuming of selections from "Celebration," "The Magic Flute," "She Loves Me," "The Old Maid and the Thief," "The Saint of Blecker Street," "Trouble in Tahiti" and "The Ballad of Baby Doe."

The repertoire includes works by such classic composers as Bech and Harnick, who wrote "Fiddler on the Roof," Menotti, and Leonard Bernstein.

The performance is dedicated to Mel Seiner, former assistant director of the School of Music and longtime fan of the opera, who died Nov. 25.

All of the pieces will be in English. One scene represents an updated context of Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be set in a pet shop in a suburban mall.

Members of the community, graduate and undergraduate students will be participating in the performance. Admission is free.

Illinois justice may be blind, but it's not color-blind

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Americans often boast of the system of justice set down in the Constitution, saying it achieves the long-sought goal of being "blind."

In this system, it is said, everyone looks the same in the eyes of the law and everyone is entitled to be tried by a jury of his peers — or, as the cliché goes, "12 good men."

News Analysis

But in a growing number of cases, some attorneys are contending that Illinois justice is not blind at all — and especially not color-blind. If you are a black defendant in Illinois, these lawyers say, the jury weighing your guilt or innocence more than likely will be composed not so much of 12 good men as 12 white men.

Ironically, the discrimination supposedly is made possible by an age-old practice aimed at ensuring fair trials.

The latest episode in this legal controversy occurred last week when the Illinois Supreme Court refused to take action against allegedly discriminatory jury selection practices by state prosecutors.

The court had ruled against defense lawyers on the racial bias challenge several times recently, but last week's case ruling marked the first time jury discrimination was the sole issue on appeal. Some lawyers had hoped earlier this year that the court might use the case to end the reported discrimination.

The ruling stemmed from the conviction of Stanley Payne, a black man, in Cook County Circuit Court on charges of aggravated battery and armed violence. A jury concluded Payne was guilty of shooting an acquaintance during a dispute on a Chicago basketball court.

That jury was composed of 11 whites and one black.

Defense lawyers objected to how that racial makeup was reached. They said the prosecutor improperly used so-called "peremptory challenges" to exclude six black potential jurors from the panel.

The peremptory challenge system — a centuries-old legal tradition — allows trial lawyers to keep certain persons off a jury without telling the judge why they don't want them. This privilege can be exercised by each side 10 times in Illinois courts.

In all other challenges, attorneys must offer a legally acceptable explanation of why that person might not render a fair verdict.

Peremptory challenges, according to their backers, allow lawyers to use their intuition about people in selecting impartial jurors.

Defense lawyers in the Payne appeal and other cases have charged that prosecutors are using this old system in a new way — to prevent blacks from sitting in judgment of black defendants. The rationale for this unspoken discrimination, the lawyers say, is the fear that blacks will be overly sympathetic to members of their race who are accused of crimes.

An Illinois appellate court which heard the case ruled that prosecutors violated Payne's Sixth Amendment rights and denied him a jury chosen from a fair cross-section of the community.

The Cook County State's Attorney's office, which has been involved in many of these appeals, has strongly denied that it discriminates and has promised it never will.

But the facts don't support that assertion, Justice Seymour Simon said in an 18-page dissent to last week's three-page majority decision by the state Supreme Court.

Simon pointed to a long list of Illinois appeals in which the racial bias question is raised, saying the list itself is evidence of how widespread the practice is.

However, Simon's colleagues were not convinced. The majority opinion, written by Justice Robert Underwood, said the Supreme Court will continue to reject changes in the peremptory tradition until it sees solid evidence of systematic exclusion of blacks from juries in case after case, not just some trials.

Alan Raphael, an attorney who represented the Chicago Council of Lawyers in the Payne case, predicts no change soon in the court's position. Raphael, who asked the justices to change their minds on the subject, says the Supreme Court's recent rulings have demanded proof of bias so mathematically stringent and convincing that it can't be attained.

Raphael contends the bias problem could be solved in Illinois by allowing judges to question prosecutors on their exclusions or by severely limiting the number of peremptory challenges allowed. He notes that the states of California, Massachusetts and New Mexico have taken steps in this direction.

But so far, the Illinois Supreme Court has shown great reluctance to interfere with a lawyers' prerogative that has gone untouched for so long.

"The majority places too much reliance on the weight of history," Simon wrote in his dissent.

SIU-C debaters ranked third in nation

The Debate Team was awarded a third place national ranking from the Cross-Examination Debate Association on Nov. 30.

During the first seven weeks of competition, the team earned 25 debate awards at seven CEDA-sanctioned tournaments and held a first place national ranking.

In debate tournaments held this semester, the team competed against 198 schools from 44 states.

First place national ranking was awarded to Central State University of Oklahoma and second place went to the Air Force Academy.

Buy a house, write a book...

History traces city's architecture

By Joyce Vonderheide
Staff Writer

She intended to put together only a brochure, but Susan Maycock's work became a book instead.

The former SIU-C instructor's book, "An Architectural History of Carbondale, Illinois," covers the town's development until World War II.

The book grew out of Maycock's interest in the house she had purchased on Walnut Street. Having earned a master's degree in architectural history from Boston University, she believed the house was older than other people said it was. Through research, she learned that the house dated back to 1870.

Through her conversations with older residents, she learned more about other houses on her street and wanted to bring information to the public to enable them to see what was left of older Carbondale buildings in a historical context.

Because few written histories of Carbondale are available, Maycock had to go back to primary sources, such as deeds, photographs, tax records and directories.

Maycock said old newspapers were "invaluable," although there were large time gaps in the newspapers which survived the 85 years covered in the book. She read through newspapers covering a 50-to-60-year time span.

Talking with older residents was also helpful in her research, Maycock said that Julia Mitchell Etherton, who moved to Carbondale in the 1890s, helped her in dating houses. Etherton could remember who had lived in which house and had a collection of photographs of early Carbondale.

The few early maps of Carbondale which exist were insurance maps, showing only parts of the town. Maycock was able to make a "social map" of Carbondale by using computers and city directories from 1896 and 1905.

Old buildings along East Jackson Street, an area discussed in Susan Maycock's book.

She entered the street addresses into the computer to find out how many buildings had actually existed along a street. Because directories also listed occupations of residents, Maycock was able to determine different neighborhoods and tie in social history with architectural history.

Response to her book has been enthusiastic, Maycock added. She receives many of the same responses she received when she presented slide lectures while living in Carbondale. People tell her that they never had bothered before to look at homes or upper stories of downtown stores and notice the architecture.

Many residents do not realize that certain parts of the town had different roles in earlier years. Carbondale's public square, formerly a focus of the town, has "disappeared," Maycock said. The upper level storefronts in the square, bounded by what is now Jackson, Monroe and Washington streets and Illinois Avenue, are reminders of the importance of the area.

Maycock said the 100 block of East Jackson Street "best shows the 19th century character of the commercial district."

The building at 101 N. Washington St., which now houses the Carbondale Stage Company, really has "two other buildings buried underneath." In her book, she noted that the building was slated for demolition. Maycock said she is glad the building hasn't been destroyed and that its opera house beginnings are being revived.

Of all the places in Carbondale, Maycock said, that Main Street between University Avenue and Poplar Street would be a section to see in its original state, as the area contained "an elegance not equalled now" in Carbondale, she said.

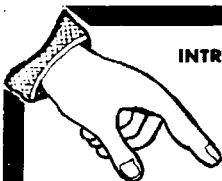

Maycock said she "tried to put current Carbondale into context" in her book. She hopes more public and private awareness and interest will be created through her book.

Two faculty groups gear up for collective bargaining push

By John Stewart
Staff Writer

Leaders of two faculty groups planning to bring collective bargaining to SIUC faculty have set down plans and goals for next year.

Both the Carbondale Federation of University Teachers and the American Association of University Professors are gearing up independently to push for collective bargaining, and they might even choose to jointly represent faculty.

Herbert Donow, president of CFUT, said he expects the group to get off to a flying start next semester, and hopes to have 350 members by the fall of 1984. The membership drive which started last month is the main focus for CFUT in spring.

Donow, a SIUC English professor, said his group will have help pushing for collective bargaining. The national group of which CFUT is a part, the American Federation of Teachers, has assigned staff member Kelly Gardener to work with CFUT in Carbondale next spring.

Donow said Gardener will help direct the bargaining campaign, advising members on recruitment and distributing literature to faculty. She'll be here a few months, starting in January, Donow said.

In February, CFUT and the AAUP are planning to co-sponsor an educational meeting about collective bargaining to inform faculty about how bargaining might affect them, according to Lawrence Dennis, CFUT vice president. The CFUT plans to get officers of the National Education Association to come to Carbondale to speak at the meeting.

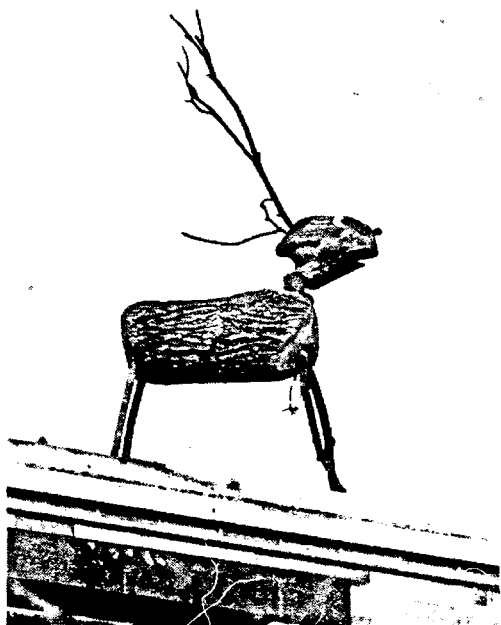

The CFUT is now in the process of electing new officers, Donow said. He said ballots went out last week, and that he hopes to continue as president. Donow said he should have more time to devote to CFUT next semester, as he won't be Faculty Senate president again next semester. Donow's term will have expired and senate presidents may only serve for two consecutive terms, according to the faculty senate constitution.

AAUP has also begun a membership drive, and hopes to distribute information about collective bargaining to faculty throughout next semester, according to Emil Spees, AAUP president. Spees said his group hopes to participate in educational programs co-sponsored with CFUT in addition to having its own programs. Faculty can then learn about what collective bargaining could mean to them and "make a logical, rational, informed decision, rather than an emotional response," Spees said.

Spees said it is too early to tell if the AAUP and CFUT might work together to jointly represent the faculty if bargaining comes to SIUC. Dennis said he hasn't talked with AAUP representatives about the possibility of joint representation since Nov. 1, but he expects discussions to continue throughout the spring. In October, Donow said that though CFUT was working to merge the groups to represent faculty, CFUT would pursue sole representation if no agreement were reached.

Spees, who attended a statewide AAUP meeting on collective bargaining at SIUC last week, said faculty groups at other state universities are further along than SIUC in trying to bring collective bargaining to their faculty, with the exception of the University of Illinois.

Help me! I can't fly!

This reindeer endured wind and cold Tuesday night and Wednesday morning on top of Abbott Hall while its owner, Saluki Shaker Shelley Fichtel, wondered where it was. Fichtel received a call from an anonymous man saying the reindeer was being held ransom for her pompons. If she didn't turn over the pompons, the male said, the reindeer would be turned into Bambi burgers. Fichtel, of course, said she couldn't give University equipment away. But the story has a happy ending. Maintenance rescued the reindeer Wednesday afternoon.

50 design students to debate earth's future, global conflicts

About 50 SIUC design students will participate in a debate at 6 p.m. Thursday in the Quigley Auditorium. The debate will concern the earth's future and the development of possible solutions to complex, global-level problems.

"A systematic approach is integral to the design process and comprehensive design skills are applicable to social problems as well as to more traditional design projects," Carolyn Foxx, design professor said.

The debate was planned by the design students enrolled in "The Systems Approach to Problem Solving and Environmental Design."

"Given the timely topics involved in our classroom discussions, it seemed most appropriate to encourage my students to develop this type of debate for public presentation," Foxx said.

The debate will focus on the development of systematic and creative solutions to ecological, geopolitical, societal, economic and other large scale difficulties.

The debate is open to the general public. The audience will be allowed to ask questions after the formal arguments are completed.

The winning team will receive $100, which was donated by a private source, for donation to a charitable organization to be selected by the team before the debate.

Women making gains in law, medical schools, teacher says

By Karen Torry
Staff Writer

It's not always easy, but SIU School of Medicine tries to give women an even break at getting into and being successful in medical school, instructor Roger Robinson said Wednesday.

Robinson conceded that recruitment drives for women students are not as strong as for men, but insisted that "SIU Medical School has a strong commitment to under-represented groups, and that includes women."

Speaking to the SIU-C Women's Caucus, Robinson said that strong efforts are made to eliminate sexism within the medical school.

"It's no different than racism — it's simply not accepted," Robinson said, noting that it is difficult to avoid sexism in a traditionally male-dominated profession.

"Admission and recruitment are one thing," said Robinson. "It's another thing to 'live' a non-sexist environment."

While there is no established quota system, Robinson said that women are usually given priority when there is a tough choice between two applicants.

"With all things equal, the edge goes to women when considering candidates," said Robinson, noting that the current medical school class has a 47 percent female population.

SIU-C's Medical Education Preparatory Program has been instrumental in increasing the number of women and minorities enrolling in medical school, Robinson said.

Rosalyn Green, director of the MEDPREP Program, said it's not difficult encouraging women to apply for medical school, but some need extra help to get accepted and make it through a rigorous program.

The MEDPREP Program, which serves undergraduate and post-baccalaureate students interested in medical or dental careers, evaluates students' strengths and weaknesses and designs programs to prepare them for medical school.

MEDPREP also offers counseling, which Green said some women need to juggle a medical career and a family.

Green said about 85 percent of students who participate in MEDPREP are accepted in medical schools, a success rate she attributes to the evaluation and encouragement students receive through the program.

Winona Whitfield, assistant professor in the SIU School of Law, said the number of women law students has increased dramatically in recent years, but that only recently were women breaking into male-dominated private law practices.

Chicago, said Alice Mitchell, Air Illinois' vice president of marketing. The ad campaign began Sunday in Iowa media, Mitchell said.

The firm will offer the only jet service between those Iowa cities and Chicago.

Traditionally, women have worked for public agencies in non-litigating capacities, said Whitfield, although the "measure of success" for a lawyer is to become a partner in a private firm.

Some women, who have to work to finance tuition or want to combine law school with a family life, are blocked by rules limiting the number of part-time students to 5 percent of enrollment, she said.

But SIU School of Law still has attained a 30 percent female student population without a special effort to recruit women, said Whitfield.

"The success that women students have had is the best method of recruitment," she said.

Conservation officers protect old shipwreck

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Acting on a tip from the U.S. Coast Guard, Indiana conservation officers rushed to Lake Michigan last year to prevent the "theft" of the J.D. Marshall, a scow that sank in Indiana waters in 1911.

"A Michigan salvage company had lifted the shipwreck to the surface with cables and intended to take the whole thing off to Michigan, sink it in shallow water and begin an intensive salvage operation," said Gary Ellis, an archeologist for the Department of Nature Resources division of historic preservation and archeology.

The Sept. 3, 1982, incident ended with the Marshall being lowered back to the bottom of Lake Michigan, but it got Ellis thinking about other shipwrecks in the part of Lake Michigan inside the Indiana borders, about 180 square miles.

Nobody had ever tried to find out how many wrecks there were, or where they were, so Ellis took on the task.

"We've got 47 shipwrecks on inventory since we began in August of this year," he said.

"The earliest wreck is from 1816. They vary from small schooners to one-, two- or three-masted ships and some fairly large ships.

"One of the most important ships is the David Dows, which went down in a snowstorm on November 8, 1889. It's believed to be the only five-masted ship that ever sailed the Great Lakes, and it lies right on the Indiana-Illinois border."

The ships are being charted as part of the state historic sites and structures inventory. Eventually, a number of them will be proposed for both the state register and the National Register of Historic Sites.

"The state of Indiana considers our part of the bottom of Lake Michigan, and its natural resources, as belonging to Indiana," Ellis said. "The shipwrecks are considered just like any other historical or archeologically significant site located on state property.

"They are out there for everyone, which is why we want to stop divers from taking souvenirs off the wrecks. Once they're gone, they're gone. Shipwrecks don't breed underwater."

The project was short of funds, so Ellis worked out an arrangement to have conservation officers and other trainees in the State Division of Law Enforcement dive on the Indiana shipwrecks during underwater training.

"So far, it's worked very nicely," Ellis said, adding, "They made one dive this year, and we're only in the pilot stages of our survey."

'All My Children' addicts share soap's ups and downs

By Greg Severin
Student Writer

It was high noon in Carbondale and high drama was beginning to unfold at the Student Center.

ABC's top-rated soap opera "All My Children" was coming on the air for another day and students were flocking to the Video Lounge on the fourth floor of the Student Center to get a quick fix of their favorite soap.

On the first Monday after Thanksgiving Break, a standing-room-only crowd was on hand to see whether Angie and Jessie would find their son, who was put up for adoption by Angie's meddling, over-bearing father.

Faithful viewers were waiting to see whether Tad would seek revenge on Marian Colby. Marian is a bored society woman, 20 years Tad's senior, who has broken off her steamy and sordid affair with him. Students were also watching to see Mark, who is back from a detoxification center for cocaine addiction, try to win back his wife's love.

To the hard-core "All My Children" fan, it is serious business.

Donna Lorenz, sophomore in speech pathology, is an admitted "soap addict." Lorenz watches the daily trials and tribulations of "All My Children" religiously.

"I used to hate the soaps, but my mom used to watch 'All My Children' when I was in high school and she kind of got me hooked on the show," Lorenz said. "I guess my addiction started back in high school."

Lorenz said she likes to watch the show with a group of people.

"I watched the show when I was home but it wasn't as much fun," said Lorenz. "It's more fun to watch with a group of people because you can listen to all of the comments people make. There is a lot of audience participation."

Lorenz believes most college students watch the soaps because it serves as a break in their day.

"Soaps help break the boredom of the day. It's good therapy," she said.

Joe Rebluff, junior in mechanical engineering, thinks the popularity of "All My Children" at the Student Center stems from the time of day the show begins.

"It comes on at noon and that's a convenient time for a lot of people," Rebluff said. "I come up here to kill some time and relax. I think many people come up here to take a break from their classes and studying," he said.

Linda Parabola is a veteran soap opera viewer. Parabola, a freshman, has been watching "All My Children" for about five years.

"I know all the characters on the show real well. I guess I'm an addict," Parabola confided. "But I'm sure there are people more addicted to the show than I am."

From the looks of the crowd during the show her statement seemed to be true.

Parabola watches "All My Children" at the Student Center because she likes the large screen television and she enjoys listening to people talk about the show.

"Some of the comments the people make during the show are pretty funny. They get pretty involved," Parabola commented.

Involved indeed. The crowd booted and hollered when Devon, a vulnerable hospital admissions worker who was recently dumped by her lover, seemed to be turning more to her gay friend, Lynn, for emotional support. The crowd at the Student Center was titillated when Lynn eyed Devon in more than a friendly way. Will Devon and Lynn become more than just good friends? Only the show's writers and ABC's censors know for sure. In the mean time, the excitement continues...

Charles Musgray, senior in biological science, was turned on to soaps by his roommates during his freshman year. He has been a faithful "All My Children" viewer ever since.

"Soaps give you a time to relax and look into other people's problems for a while," said Musgray. "They help me release the tension from classes."

Meanwhile, up on the screen, Tad, a resident gigolo and rat, is livid. Marian, Tad's middle-aged mistress is ending their affair, against Tad's wishes. Tad tears his gold chain, a gift from Marian, off his neck and throws it to the floor. He skulks to the doorway and yows revenge. In a parting shot, he calls Marian a "slut" and stalks out of her house. The crowd howls in delight...

Musgray said he likes to watch the soaps with a group of people "because you get different opinions about the characters and what they're going to do next."

Kris Snyder, freshman in computer science watches "All My Children" for the young, vibrant characters. Her favorite is Jenny Gardner, a cute, wholesome girl of 19, who works as a model in New York. Jenny makes big bucks, but is miserable. She was forced by her pushy boss to accept an engagement to Tony, her lollipop modeling partner, solely to advance their careers.

Jenny would rather be back in Pine Valley, the show's fictitious town, tending to the needs of the boyishly handsome Greg Nelson. But Greg has problems of his own. Because of a nasty fall from a catwalk, Greg, until recently, was

Study shows free health care doesn't make people healthier

BOSTON (AP) — People visit doctors less often when they have to pay some of the bills, but generally are just as healthy as folks who get free care when they want it, a study for the federal government says.

"For the average, non-elderly American, the additional health care bought by free care didn't do very much, and I don't think there's much doubt about that," said study director Dr. Robert H. Brook.

The study found when poor people get free care their blood pressure drops slightly, and nearsighted people take advantage of the program to get glasses, so their vision improves a bit. But otherwise, those who use care sparingly because of its expense are just as well off.

Some critics blame soaring medical costs on insurance programs that provide cheap or virtually free care to everyone. One proposed solution is "cost sharing" — in which people pay a portion of their own medical bills, so they have an incentive to avoid doctors and hospitals unless they really need them.

Two years ago, the Rand Corp. found that people make one-third fewer visits to their physicians and are hospitalized one-third less often if they must pay a share of the cost. The latest phase of Rand's $78 million, federally-financed study set out to answer the question: "Does free medical care lead to better health than insurance plans that require the patient to shoulder part of the cost?"

The researchers used 10 measures of health to compare people who got free care with those covered by cost-sharing programs.

Although free treatment slightly improved vision and blood pressure, the researchers wrote, "for the average participant, as well as for subgroups differing in income and initial health status, no significant effects were detected on eight other measures of health status and health habits."

The experiment, on 3,958 people in 2,005 families, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. Among the findings:

The more people had to pay for care, the less of it they used.

—Free health care had no effect on bad health habits linked to heart trouble and some kinds of cancer. Even though people getting free care saw doctors often, they were just as likely to smoke, be overweight and have high blood cholesterol levels as others.

—The free care plan's effect on blood pressure, although small, could save lives among high risk patients. These people's risk of early death was about 10 percent lower as a result of the free care.

However, they said these reductions in deaths do not justify the expense of free care for all adults. Programs targeted at detecting high blood pressure would make better economic sense.

The latest research "is a landmark study that will be as widely cited as its predecessor," Dr. Arnold S. Reisman, the journal's editor, wrote in an accompanying editorial.

Dead Marine's pen pal grieves over her friend

CHICAGO (AP) — A 12-year-old girl who became a U.S. Marine's pen pal wrote him a seven-page letter all about herself — her thoughts, her beliefs, her school activities and her friends.

He was dead before she could send it.

"I really told him a lot because I knew he wanted to know, and I enclosed a tape of my favorite rock group, Def Leppard," Lisa Macanowicz said Wednesday.

Her letter to him "is still on dresser in my bedroom," she said. "I will always keep it, always."

Lisa learned Tuesday that her "Dear Marine," 19-year-old Lance Cpl. Sam Cherman of New York, was one of eight marines killed Sunday in a mortar attack on the U.S. peacekeeping force's base in Beirut.

"I was very upset. It's horrible, like a nightmare. I've cried a lot," said Lisa. "My mother said he was too young to go and that he was a sweet person."

Lisa was one of 100 7th graders at St. Edward Elementary School who had written "Dear Marine" letters as a school project. They were delivered by a Navy chaplain to servicemen overseas.

Cherman was one of 45 marines who wrote back.

"They're lonely and need someone to talk to," said Lisa.

Cherman's response to Lisa's letter read in part:

"You sound like a very sweet girl, and you're a perfect example of why I want to defend our country ... If you want to write on a regular basis, I'll be more than happy to write. I need a friend to communicate with ..."

"I thought that everyone at home forgot about me. I'm 19 and this is the first time I've been on my own. Everything is very new to me as far as going to another country to fight."

He signed off, "Your friend, Sam," and promised to send a photo of himself the next time.

In the letter Lisa never sent, she wrote:

"Dear Sam, Hello ... I think you're super sweet and special. Thank you for protecting our country."

"How are you? I'm fine. I would really like it if we could be pen pals. It would be real nice. I love Chicago ... my friends, and a very special pen pal."

In closing, Lisa wrote: "P.S. This is not a school assignment like the other one. This was truly from my heart."

Sister Paul Mary, St. Edward principal, said when it was learned that Lisa's "Dear Marine" had been killed, "there was hardly a dry eye in the school."

confined to a wheelchair. And if that isn't bad enough, he may be impotent.

"I like Jenny," said Snyder. "I can relate to her. She's chasing after a dream: to be a model but is having some setbacks along the way. I think a lot of people see their dreams through some of the characters on the show."

Not only are soaps serious business to their viewers, they're serious business to the three networks that broadcast them. ABC, CBS and NBC reap approximately $700 million a year in advertising revenue from the soaps, according to a Newsweek study.

Moreover, thanks largely to the infusion of college viewers, soap operas today are playing to record crowds.

What is it that attracts college students to daytime dramas? Linda Grant, professor of sociology, thinks the continuity of soap operas is one of the reasons why college students watch.

"I think they are attracted to the sheer repetitiveness of them. They see the characters as everyday-type people and get involved with them," said Grant.

Another reason for the soaps' burgeoning appeal, Grant believes, is that they deal with emotional issues more openly than people do in real life.

"They deal with a lot of daring themes and that may attract young viewers," explained Grant. "Men especially have a hard time dealing with emotional issues, so they may get some useful information from the show that they can't discuss at home."

Unlike daytime serials of 10 years ago, soaps today are injecting more young characters into their stories. In fact, ABC's newest soap, "Loving," is centered around a college university. Laurie Dunphy, a graduate student in sociology, thinks that young characters in soaps attract young viewers.

"On 'All My Children,' almost all of the main characters are of college age and students can relate to them," Dunphy said. "The men like to look at the young, attractive women and the women like to look at the young, attractive men."

According to Grant, students gather in groups to watch soaps to watch the people as much as the show.

"Places like the Student Center are social arenas. People aren't attracted to the soaps as much as they are to the people watching them," Grant said. "It's a social thing."

SPC Video Chairman Bjorn Reddington said the number of people watching soap operas at the Student Center is increasing.

"All My Children' is the most popular soap here," said Reddington. "We have over 150 people watching the show. People are becoming more aware that the big screen television is up there."

After Monday's episode was over, people filed out of the Video Lounge as quickly as they came in, leaving soda cans and plastic wrappers behind. Little, if anything had been answered on the show. Angie and Jessie were still hunting for their baby, Tad was still plotting revenge on Marian, and Devon and Lynn's relationship was still platonic.

But the people exiting the Video Lounge would be back Tuesday for another episode in the continuing drama...

Salt and sugar solutions help save children's lives

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Simple, cheap solutions of salt and sugar are helping combat the dehydration that claims the lives of 5 million children a year in impoverished regions of the world, the U.N. Children's Fund reported today.

And there are indications that as infant mortality rates drop, birth rates fall because parents who are confident of their children's survival have fewer babies, UNICEF Executive Director James P. Grant says in his annual State of the World's Children Report.

"A revolution in child survival is likely to result in a slowing down of the rate of population growth and to contribute to the stabilization of world population," Grant said.

An estimated 40,000 children in developing countries die each day from malnutrition, dehydration and illness.

UNICEF believes that half that number could be saved through widespread use of such low-cost remedies as 10-cent salt and sugar packets, reintroduction of breastfeeding, expanded immunization and monthly weight checks to guard against "invisible malnutrition."

Oral rehydration therapy — salt and sugar mixed with water — halved deaths from dehydration over one to two years in areas of Guatemala, India, Bangladesh, Honduras, Nicaragua and Egypt, studies show.

In Malawi, the incidence of measles — the main killer of children there — dropped by 60 percent after extensive immunization programs.

Three-fifths of the world's children are born in 70 countries where the infant mortality rate is higher than 50 deaths per 1,000 births. Some African countries have rates above 200 per 1,000, compared with industrialized nations which have 20 or fewer per 1,000.

The economic recession has increased the child death rate in some areas, including the U.S. states of Alabama and Michigan, and in the Soviet Union, Grant said in his 42-page report.

Last year, 15 million young children died in developing countries — equal to the number of children under 5 years old in the United States, the report said.

UNICEF, joined by non-governmental international groups like the International Red Cross, is educating communities about some easy, life-saving measures that were introduced in last year's report:

—Breastfeeding. The risk of death in infancy is five times greater for bottle-fed babies.

Marine survivors return to U.S.

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — Some 1,900 Marines who survived the Oct. 23 terrorist bombing in Beirut returned to the United States today to welcoming signs, marching bands, American flags and thousands of yellow ribbons.

The USS Austin, carrying 600 to 800 members of the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, was the first to arrive, docking at the North Carolina State Ports Authority terminal at 10 a.m., said Helen McBride, a terminal employee.

"It's just great," she said, adding that a large crowd, including hundreds of family members, had braved chilly temperatures and 30 to 40 mph gusts to greet the troops.

The young men, in camouflage uniforms and carrying backpacks and rifles, stepped off the Austin shortly before 11 a.m. and boarded buses to Camp Geiger, part of the Camp Lejeune complex, to be reunited with their families.

The flagship two Jima, carrying about 1,000 Marines, was due to land at 12:15 p.m., delayed by high winds and seas.

The Marines are based at Camp Lejeune, 60 miles east of Morehead City.

As the large, gray Austin came into views, Ann Krose began crying and said to a baby in her arms, "Look, there's Daddy's ship." Her husband, Navy radioman Joe Krose, had been in Beirut since May.

Elaine Sandrik, whose son Alfred Jr. is a Marine meteorologist, shouted, "Isn't that the most beautiful sight you've ever seen!"

Mrs. Sandrik said she and her husband, Alfred Sandrik Sr., drove 11 hours from Atlantic City, N.J., for the homecoming.

She said it took a week after the bombing to learn that her son had survived. "It was the most terrible seven days of my life," she said.

Tanya Holland Goins of Asheville, N.C., with yellow ribbons tied around her arms and legs, brandished a sign reading "Welcome Home Holland." The message was for her brother, Marine Pfc. Vernon Holland.

Alcohol-free party to be held

The third annual alcohol-free cocktail party will be held at 3 p.m. Monday in the Community Center at 605 E. College, sponsored by Alcohol Treatment Services of Carbondale.

The purpose of the party is to promote responsible use of alcohol during the holidays, organizers said.

Ideas on alternative beverages and party-planning tips will be offered during the event.

Alcohol Treatment Services provides a range of alcohol and drug services for residents of Jackson County including: assessments to alcohol and drug abusers and their families; referral to inpatient treatment facilities; and, outpatient counseling. The agency also provides educational services to groups in the county.

Prof to trace 'real story' of goddesses

By Greg Stewart
Staff Writer

Joan O'Brien thinks that Hera, the queen of the Greek gods, was once equal to her husband, Zeus, but has been demoted by men through the centuries to the "bitchy wife" figure of Homeric myth.

O'Brien, an associate professor in classical studies at SIU-C, hopes to gain evidence to support her theory when she goes sabbatical to Poston during the spring semester and Greece during June.

One of O'Brien's special interests in classical studies is women in mythology, their role in myth and how the demotion of women in mythology has affected the status of women in society.

O'Brien became convinced of the demotion of Hera through readings of classical literature. She began looking for evidence during a trip she took to Greece last spring.

Prior to that trip she wrote an article on creation goddesses in mythology and how they have been demoted through the centuries by men. The article, "Nammu, Mami, Eve and Pandora: What's in a Name?," was published in the October 1983 issue of Classical Journal.

O'Brien says that it was after she wrote the article that she saw a connection between the demotion of creation goddesses and Hera.

Joan O'Brien, associate professor in classical studies, lectures to a class.

"I had already suspected that Hera had been demoted," she said, but it wasn't until she visited the Heration on the island of Samos, a temple devoted to Hera, that she had some archaeological evidence to support her claims.

A sanctuary to Hera was originally built at Samos in the 10th century B.C., but the earliest temple ruins are from the 8th century B.C., she said.

"In religious cults, Hera is shown as an independent goddess, whereas in Homeric myth she is the bitchy wife," O'Brien said.

Statuary found thus far from the 10th century B.C. shows Hera alone, but in the 8th century B.C. she appears with Zeus.

"Most of the votive offerings are made to Hera alone. When Zeus does appear, he is present as Hera's escort, not her 'lord,'" she said.

This information tends to indicate that Hera actually came before Zeus, she said.

"Temples of Hera antedate temples of Zeus or Apollo," the two most popular Greek gods, O'Brien said.

Besides Samos, Olympia was an important site for followers of Hera, O'Brien said. Olympia is famous as the site of the original Olympic Games, where only men were allowed to participate and women couldn't even attend. O'Brien said that Olympia was also the site of the Heration Games, contests similar to those of the Olympic Games, but where only women participated.

A question O'Brien said she will try to answer while on sabbatical is whether the Heration Games came before the Olympic Games, as the architecture of the region seems to indicate, and if so, why they haven't been heard of as much as the Olympic Games. O'Brien thinks it's further proof that Hera, and women, has been demoted by the patriarchal society of men.

O'Brien plans to leave on her sabbatical around Jan. 10. Before going to Greece, O'Brien will study in the Boston area with Mary Lefkowitz at Wellesley College, an authority on the mythology of the Aegean area, and with Emily Vermeule at Harvard University, a leading scholar on the archaeology of the Aegean.

She has received an extension on her sabbatical through June of next year. She will return to the island of Samos and to Olympia, Nauplia and Mycenae on the mainland to do research, and to teach one of the courses sponsored by the SIU-C Philosophy Department as part of a series of interdisciplinary seminars.

The topic, called Hera and Heroines, can be taken for graduate or undergraduate credit in Women's Studies, classical studies or General Education Area C.

Students interested in participating in O'Brien's portion of the seminars may contact her for information about the trip.

SIU-C Security investigates thefts in Schneider Hall

SIU-C Security is investigating the theft of property and cash from five rooms at Schneider Hall within a three-hour period Tuesday morning.

Police said someone, described by witnesses as a 6-foot-tall black man, entered unlocked rooms and took jewelry, cash and credit cards.

Leslie Burs, Room 1317, said a watch, gold chain and pearl earrings were taken from her room about 8:12 a.m.

William Caldwell, Room 1229, said a watch and credit cards, valued at under $300, were stolen between 6:30 and 8 a.m.

Craig Kohler and Michael Reel of Room 417 and Robert Quick of Room 414 reported a watch and cash valued at under $300 stolen about 8 a.m.

Daniel Aberg of Room 1628 also reported a watch and wallet, valued at under $300, missing at 8 a.m.

Another Schneider resident, Neal Retke, Room 433, told police an attempted theft occurred at 9 a.m. when a black male walked into his room and, after asking about someone who didn't live there, left.

Children say final goodbye to custodian

CHICAGO (AP) — For 25 years, Jack Rozek devoted his life to children at a day care center. Every evening, he would stand at the door to bid each child goodnight as the youngsters lined up to go home.

"Bye, Jack," the kids would say.

Now the final goodbye has been said.

Rozek, a 68-year-old custodian who lived at the St. Timothy Day Care Center, was beaten to death early Tuesday by burglars.

School officials found it too difficult to explain his absence to the youngsters — 3 to 5 years old — when they asked, "Where's Jack?"

So the children were told their friend had been hurt.

A few hours later they were sent home, where their parents would try to explain why Rozek no longer could be there to buy them Popsicles in the summer and cookies in the winter.

The nearby grocery store where Rozek went to buy treats for the kids was about as far as he ever roamed from a West Side church that rents its basement to a day-care center attended by 25 children.

"He always did for other people," said Naomi Clay, the center's director. "The kids were just crazy about him. This hurts so bad, I want to cry."

Sarah Amorin, a teacher at the center, said, "He would buy everything for anyone down here."

Rozek, a bachelor, had lived in a little room furnished with a single bed, a dresser, a chair and black-and-white TV set.

Beg your pardon

The master's degree program in telecommunication at SIU-C, approved by the Illinois Board of Higher Education Tuesday, will be offered by the faculty of the Department of Radio and Television, and not in cooperation with the Department of Cinema and Photography.

The Daily Egyptian incorrectly reported Wednesday that the program will be offered in cooperation with the Department of Cinema and Photography.

Fire in uranium warehouse contained; no hazard posed

EAST ST. LOUIS (AP) - A fire Wednesday damaged a warehouse where tons of uranium is stored, but neither the public nor firefighters were in danger, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said. The fire at an Edlow International Inc. warehouse broke out about 12:40 a.m.

"There were no problems, no injury, no hazard to firefighters," said Jan Strasma, NRC public affairs officer in Chicago.

Strasma said the fire was confined to an area where 39 drums of uranium ore concentrate were stored. He said the Illinois Department of Nuclear Safety inspected them and found each of the 55-gallon drums' seals to be intact.

Another area houses 18 210-ton steel containers of uranium hexafluoride, which also eventually is processed into fuel. Strasma said that area was not damaged.

"The potential for disaster simply isn't there," according to Strasma. The stored uranium is solid, he said, and would not represent a major radiation hazard even if it were released.

"The primary concern would be if the material would somehow become airborne and would become inhaled and become lodged in the lungs," he said. "Then it would represent more a chemical hazard than a radiation hazard."

Leverse Brooks, deputy fire chief for the East St. Louis Fire Department, said the blaze apparently started on the warehouse roof.

"There are some sophisticated alarm systems out there," he said. "But the alarms didn't go off and neither did the sprinklers."

Strasma said he was unaware of the sprinkler and alarm problem. He said two NRC inspectors were expected at the warehouse Wednesday to check on any problems.

Strasma said the drums would be moved to an undamaged section of the warehouse and that authorities did not know what caused the blaze.

Uranium is used primarily as fuel for nuclear power plants. The uranium is stored temporarily at the warehouse, Strasma said, after it is processed from uranium ore and before it is made into finished uranium fuel.

"There is no explosive nature to it," he said.

Training finally pays dividends for gymnast with big aspirations

By George Pappas
Staff Writer

His three years of hard work are finally beginning to pay off.

"We may have a national champion on the floor exercise," said Brian Babcock. Babcock should know. He may be on his way to the 1984 Olympics.

"He's worked very, very hard to get where he is," Saluki Coach Bill Meade said. "You couldn't ask for a guy with a better attitude."

They speak very highly of Lawrence Williamson. They have a right to. He's proving that he can take on the best as he scored his career high 9.65 and captured first place in his floor exercise routine in the Windy City Invitational two weeks ago. Nine of last year's 12 best NCAA gymnastics teams were there.

"He did it in a prestigious meet," Meade said.

Williamson's goals are as immodest as his accomplishments.

"I would be satisfied to be an All-American on the floor-ex this year," Williamson said. "Being champ would be hellacious."

Williamson, a senior in architectural engineering, was red-shirted his freshman year and has one season left after this year. Along with being the king of the SIU-C floor-ex department, he's proving himself on the vault, too. His best score on the vault is a 9.45, which Meade said is Williamson's best improvement since coming to SIU-C in 1980.

"We battled with Larry on that vault," Meade said. "He busted his face on it once. He's been careful ever since. Now, he's performing some nice vaulting to go along with his floor-ex routine."

Williamson said he had to start with the basics on the vault. He used to go to the gym in the morning before his classes to get some extra workouts. It's paying off for him now, but he still prefers "tumbling."

He says he's been tumbling since he was a little kid. He grew up in the South Side of Chicago and graduated from Simeon Vocational High School. He joined the cheerleading team because his high school didn't have a gymnastics team. He couldn't tumble at home because there were too many people around, with Williamson's seven sisters and three brothers. He's the second youngest in his family.

He said he came to SIU-C because he didn't want to stay in Chicago and because SIU-C had a gymnastics team. He was a walk-on freshman. Now, he's getting a partial scholarship and hopes he'll get a full one for his final year.

He's involved in some school activities, too. He joined the Black Affairs Council as well as the Black Engineering Technology group. He especially enjoys dances sponsored by the BAC. He also said he is so oriented to working out that he finds himself at the Recreation Center when there isn't practice. He said he loves the diving boards.

"I can attempt any wild somersault and twist I want off of those boards," Williamson said. "Hitting the water awkward isn't as bad as landing on the ground, on your head."

Williamson really enjoys being on the gymnastics team and said he likes traveling the most.

"We get to go all over the country," Williamson said. "You can't beat that."

He said he used to be very nervous for his meets. Now, he's worked out a little game plan for himself.

"Before I do my routines," Williamson explained, "I give the judges a salute and a big smile. I sing a little mellow jazz tune in my head and do my routine. It really relaxes me."

It seems to be working. Even during practice, Williamson is out to do his best. He says he's in the best physical and mental condition that he's ever been.

"The past three years, it would take me until mid-January to get in good shape," Williamson explained. "This year, though, I'm in excellent shape right now."

During his practice runs on the floor-ex, the intensity within him shines as he lands perfect on a back somersault with a double twist. He does back double somersaults, no problem. According to Meade, Williamson had springing ability from the first day he walked into practice.

"I think he learned to do back flips off the street curbs at home," Meade said.

He used to have problems with his presses, though.

Lawrence Williamson

Pressing a handstand was hard for him at first, but with all the practice, Williamson said it's all coming along.

His teammates call him "Big L," or when they're kidding around, he's called "The Great White Hope." When he makes a mistake, he's called "The Great White Hopeless."

The names, of course, are all in good fun. But one thing is for sure. Williamson is part of the nine-man prestigious SIU-C gymnastics team which finished ninth in the nation last year. Individual first-place finishes garner big team points at big meets, and Williamson is doing a lot of garnering.

Cubs send Martinez to Padres

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - General Manager Jack McKeon's determination to make a trade for the San Diego Padres resulted in a five-player, three-club swap completed at baseball's winter meetings today.

In the deal, Montreal acquired relief pitcher Gary Lucas from San Diego and sent starter Scott Sanderson to the Chicago Cubs. The Padres came out of it with reliever Craig Lefferts, first baseman Carmelo Martinez, and minor league third baseman Fritz Connally, all from Chicago.

McKeon was the architect of the deal and there were reports that at various times, it included several more players.

"If he had the time, it might have been a couple of more clubs and six or seven more players," said John McHale of the Expos.

"McKeon worked tough on it," said Dallas Green of the Cubs. "I'm not sure John and I could have worked it out without him."

Lucas, a left-hander, was 5-8 with a 2.87 earned run average for the Padres last season. Sanderson, who spent part of the year on the disabled list with an injured thumb, was 6-7 with a 4.65 ERA for Montreal.

Lefferts, also a lefty, was 3-4 and had a 3.13 ERA in his first season with the Cubs. Martinez batted .251 with 31 home runs and 94 runs batted in at Iowa of the America Association where Connally hit .288 with 22 homers and 85 RBIs. Martinez also hit .258 with six homers and 16 RBIs in 29 games for the Cubs.

Swimmers to take on No. 8 NCAA finisher

By Scott Rich
Staff Writer

The eighth and ninth-place finishers in last year's NCAA women's swimming championships will come face-to-face at 7 p.m. Friday when Auburn comes to the Recreation Center pool.

The Lady Tigers edged the Saluki women by nine points in the NCAAs, finishing with 131 points to SIU-C's 123.

Early this season, women's swimming Coach Tim Hill pointed to the contest with Auburn as the Salukis' toughest dual meet of the year. Hill still holds that opinion.

"By the times they have turned in this season, we're the under-dogs going into the meet," Hill said. "Auburn lost only one swimmer to graduation and they picked up some good people."

The Saluki women are following up a disappointing fifth-place finish in last weekend's SIU-C Time Standard Invitational, but Hill said that his swimmers would be ready for the contest with Auburn.

"We're looking for this to be our most competitive meet of the season," Hill said. "I think we'll see some swimmers qualify for the NCAAs."

Although Hill's team didn't fair so well in the invitational, one of his swimmers was recognized for her outstanding performance.

Armi Airaksinen was named the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference Player of the Week for swimming, for her performance in SIU-C's dual meet with Indiana and the Time Standard Invitational.

Airaksinen finished third in the 200-yard freestyle, sixth in the 200 butterfly and eighth in the 100 free in the invitational. She is one of nine freshmen on the Saluki squad this season. A native of Stockholm, Sweden, she is primarily a butterfly and freestyle sprint specialist.

In the dual meet with Indiana, the Salukis extended their dual meet winning streak to three. Airaksinen won the 500 free in 5:04.68, one of eight events the Saluki team won.

Her third-place finish in the 200 free in the Time Standard tied with Roxanne Carlton's third in the 1,650 free for the highest Saluki finish.

Hill said he expects his team to be "a lot more fired up" for the meet with Auburn.

"I expect the girls to swim better than they have before," Hill said. "It's up to them to improve enough to beat Auburn."

Auburn swimming Coach John Asmuth said this weekend's contest is a big meet for both teams. He also said he has no feel for the outcome going into the meet.

"I'm not really sure how well we will do," Asmuth said. "We have our final exams this week so we're going to have a lot of people missing practice. We just can't train consistently."

The strength of the Lady Tiger team is in its backstrokers. Three Auburn swimmers scored individually in backstroke events in last year's NCAAs.

Sandy McIntyre was the top point scorer for the Tigers, finishing fifth in the 100 back, 11th in the 50 back and 12th in the 200 back. Dawn Hewitt was eighth in the 50 back and Nancy Bodner was 11th in the 200 back and 12th in the 50 back.

Butterflyer Carolyn Goodley was another top point scorer for the Tigers in last year's NCAAs. She placed in all three distances of the fly, including a seventh-place finish in the 100.

Asmuth said that the weak breaststroke, Jeanine Dale is listed as the only consistent breaststroker on the team. The 50 and 100 breast are her best events.

Asmuth described the Saluki women as "a hard team to beat at the end of the season."

"Tim (Hill) has built a very good program at SIU," Asmuth said. "I think they can consistently finish one of the top 10 teams in the nation."

Auburn also boasts a very good diving team. Two of the Lady Tigers have already qualified for the NCAAs. Freshmen Jeanie Chapman and Joan Pitt have met the qualifying standard on both the one and three-meter boards.

Women's diving Coach Dennis Golden said Auburn is favored going into the diving competition.

"Given their scores thus far I would say they are the favorite," Golden said. "The thing we have been working on is to better the quality of our dives in practice. If we do that I think we'll see a better quality of performances during the meet with Auburn."

NEVADA-RENO from Page 28

1976. Ault inherited a team that had gone 8-14 the two years before.

Since then, Ault has gone 63-28-1, with his Wolf Pack squads never having a record worse than last year's 6-5 mark, when Nevada-Reno had to win six of its last seven games to produce a winning record.

The Wolf Pack squad runs a wing-T, a spread and a multiple offense, Ault said.

Last year, Ault's top two running backs finished first and third in rushing in the Big Sky. This year, they claimed the top two spots while becoming the first backfield tandem in Big Sky history to rush for more than 1,000 yards in the same season.

Otto Kelly has rushed for 1,274 yards this year, averaging 6.4 yards per carry on 200 rushing attempts.

Fullback Anthony Corley has gained 1,185 yards on 264 carries, averaging 4.2 yards per carry.

"While we don't throw as much as the other teams in the conference," Ault said, "we have backs who can do the positive things that we ask them to do."

One of the successes for the running backs has been the offensive line, which Ault says he calls a "wide-bodied 747."

"They aren't tall, but they are awfully wide," Ault said.

Led by left tackle Derek

Kennard, 6-foot-2, 270 pounds, the offensive line has "played real well this year," Ault said.

First-year starting quarterback Eric Beavers has come on strong in the last four to five games, Ault said. Beavers has completed 95 of 186 passes for 1,118 yards and 12 touchdowns. He has thrown just eight interceptions.

Split end Alphonso Williams is Beavers' main target with 46 receptions for 721 yards and six touchdowns.

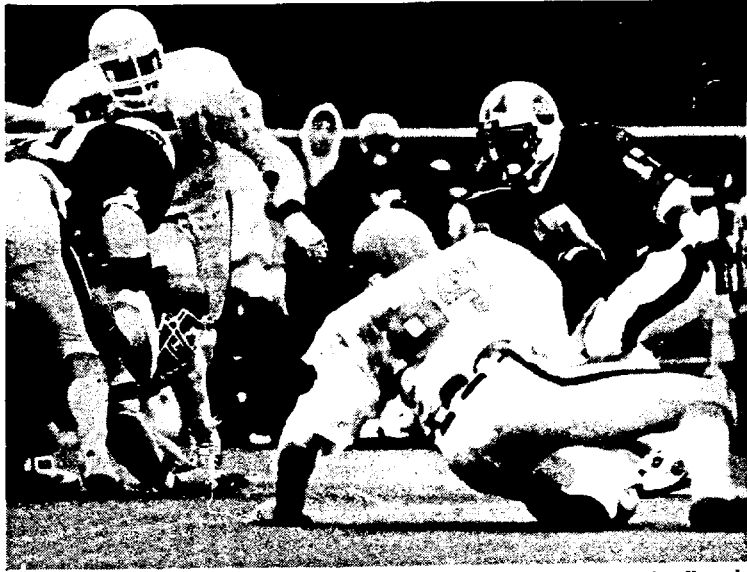

Led by a young secondary that has two sophomores, a freshman and a senior starting, the defense has given up 304.7 yards of total offense per game.

Pass-wise, opponents have thrown for more than 205 yards per game, but Ault said that statistic is misleading, because "everybody in the Big Sky throws the ball."

With four interceptions against North Texas State last week, the defense has 32 for the year. It has recovered 19 fumbles for a total of 51 turnovers. After subtracting the offense's 13 fumbles and 15 interceptions, the Wolf Pack has a turnover margin of plus 23.

"Our secondary is young," Ault said. "Going into the season, that was a very suspect area for us. Of course, it has been a real pleasant surprise."

Although Ault had young people in certain skill positions,

Saluki tailback Derrick Taylor was looking for a hole, while Indiana State's defense was down and out. Taylor will be a major problem Saturday for Nevada-Reno's stingy defense.

he said he knew his squad could make the playoffs.

"We had a very tough schedule this year," Ault said, "but I felt that if we could keep healthy, we'd have a good year."

possible going to 6-foot-3 center Connie Price or 6-foot-2 Char Warring. SIU-C isn't hurting from the outside, either, with 5-foot-9 sophomore guard Petra Jackson leading the team in scoring with 16 points per game.

"We started with the attitude that we could run," Scott said. "But we're basically a controlled club. Petra was a real key against Washington State, because they played a zone and she brought them out."

The Salukis will likely not see a zone from WKU or Vanderbilt. Scott said that Western Kentucky plays an aggressive player defense and cuts off passing lanes well.

SIU-C will stay with its player defense, Scott said, as long as her team can stay with its opponents. Scott said her club should match evenly in speed with Western Kentucky.

The key to a pair of wins for the Salukis, though, will be consistency throughout the lineup. Scott said her team has yet to get a good game from everyone, but has been fortunate in being able to go to the bench without making a sacrifice.

While the Salukis will be pressed to match WKU's speed, the problem Saturday could be height. Scott said Vanderbilt will bring in a big front line, but Vandy Coach Phil Lee said his team has no one to match up with Price.

"We're going to have to play slow and patient, the way we played last year," Scott said. "We made that adjustment before the Washington State game and it helped cut down the turnovers."

SIU-C has 82 turnovers in its four games, and average of 20.5 per game. Scott's club is shooting .474 from the field, and converting free throws at a .689 clip.

The Salukis are averaging 38 rebounds per game while their opponents have managed 32.7. Jackson is leading the team in individual field goal percentage, hitting 83.6 percent from the field, while Price tops the team from the free throw line. Price has hit 15 of 17 free throws, 88.2 percent.

In the Gateway conference, coaches picked SIU-C and Drake as pre-season favorites. Jackson is fourth in the GCAC in scoring average while Warring is fifth. Warring is eighth in the conference in rebounding average, with 7.5 per game.

The Salukis are second in scoring margin, outscoring their opponents by an average of 10.5 points. The team is atop the conference in rebounding margin and team defense and second in field goal defense.

Spiker named all-conference

By Sherry Chisenhall
Sports Editor

Saluki middle blocker Chris Boyd has been named to the All-Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference second team for volleyball.

SIU-C Coach Debbie Hunter said she was a little surprised by Boyd's selection, since Boyd played in only four of nine GCAC matches.

Boyd suffered a knee injury in practice and missed most of the team's conference schedule. She underwent knee surgery two days after her selection to the All-GCAC team.

Hunter said that the all-conference team was determined by coaches of member teams, with each coach not able to vote for more than two players on their own team.

"It's unusual that Chris was chosen because she saw limited conference play," Hunter said. "That's a compliment in itself, because not everyone in the conference got a chance to see her play. The coaches that saw her play must have been impressed.

Chris Boyd

"Chris has worked hard enough on her game that she deserves to get recognition. It might help to heal some wo mds, and be motivational." Boyd said that although being named all-conference was one of her pre-season goals, she thought that her injury might have ended that possibility.

"I'm really pleased about being picked for the team," she said. "It was something I was working for, but I was surprised. I didn't expect it.

"I thought the injury would cut me out. I was disappointed, because I didn't think I had a chance to prove myself."

Boyd said the team's 9-23 season was disappointing, but was still useful for the team.

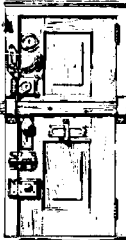

"The season was disappointing, because we didn't do what we had planned on doing," she said. "We still saw some good things, though. It was a learning year."

Despite her injury, Boyd came on to spark the team in several of its final matches, including its last GCAC victory over Indiana State. She's a powerful hitter whose loss was apparent in the Salukis' attacking game.

Boyd and Hunter said that they were disappointed that senior hitter Mary Maxwell was not chosen for the team.

Goal post destruction called tradition

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Winning is relatively new to Illinois football fans, and so is tearing down goal posts. But, even if the Illini winning streak continues, fans may not tire of running off with those $3,500 metal poles, UI sociologists say.

"When the goal posts came down that first time, I think thereafter it quickly became a tradition," said Professor John Loy.

Some people believe if Illinois wins regularly, fans will lose interest in tearing down the goal posts. But, sociologist Clark McPhail says it may be part of the script of what fans expect of themselves.

The goal posts first came down in Memorial Stadium this season after the victory over Iowa.

McPhail said a UI official made a mistake after that game by saying destruction of the goal posts "didn't seem" a terribly expensive price to see that kind of enthusiasm from Illinois fans. There was a kind of early on sanctioning of this thing.

Subsequent warnings by UI officials against tearing down the goal posts were not effective. They came down in Champaign after the next three games, and finally, Illinois fans ripped down the Northwestern goal posts at Evanston after the last game of the regular season.

"I have to admit I was a little shocked when they took down the goal posts on an opposing field," said Loy. "That's the first time in my life I can recall that happening."

It is unclear where the tradition began, but McPhail remembers visiting high schools in the 1940s and seeing a piece of wooden goal post on display next to the championship trophy.

"It may be at some point the goal posts became a kind of symbolic spoil of war that the players carried back," said McPhail.

It also is a dangerous act. An 18-year-old Harvard freshman was injured and partially paralyzed Nov. 19 when she was hit with a goal post torn down after the Yale game.

While school officials may wish to keep fans off the field, they also hesitate to use force

Nevada-Reno next for Salukis

Wolf Pack running wild in passers' conference

By Jim Lexa
Staff Writer

Nevada-Reno could be considered an oddball team in the Big Sky Conference.

Playing in a predominantly passing conference, the Wolf Pack gets the job done on the ground.

But, while preparing his 9-4 team for the Salukis in the I-AA semifinal playoff game at McAndrew Stadium Saturday, Wolf Pack Coach Chris Ault said playing in a passing conference is not that different.

"People misjudge the passing game," Ault said. "We don't pass 40 times a game like the other teams. We throw about 25 to 28 times."

Ranked No. 11 in the final regular season I-AA poll, the Wolf Pack had an unimpressive start.

Nevada-Reno was 2-3 earlier, hardly what many people would consider a potential playoff squad.

Three weeks later, the squad was 4-4, but 4-1 in the Big Sky.

The road to the playoffs has not been easy for Nevada-Reno. After going over the 500 mark with a 34-24 win over Pacific, the Wolf Pack topped No. 14-ranked Idaho 43-24.

When the next I-AA poll came out, Nevada-Reno was ranked No. 14.

The Wolf Pack finished its season with a 3-3 win over Montana State. More importantly for the Wolf Pack, it finished its conference season 6-1 and in first place.

The next reward for the Wolf Pack was a trip to Idaho State for a rematch of a 37-16 Nevada-Reno win. With four field goals by three-time All-American place-kicker Tony Zendejas, the Wolf Pack won 27-20.

North Texas State was the next opponent for the Wolf

Pack, which received the home game.

Sporting an 8-3 record, with losses to Oklahoma State, 20-13, and to I-A No. 2-ranked Texas, 26-6, North Texas State was thought to be the team that was going to win, at least by SIU-C people, Ault said.

"That's what I was hearing," Ault said. "I think the Southern people were expecting to travel to Denton (Texas) for their next game."

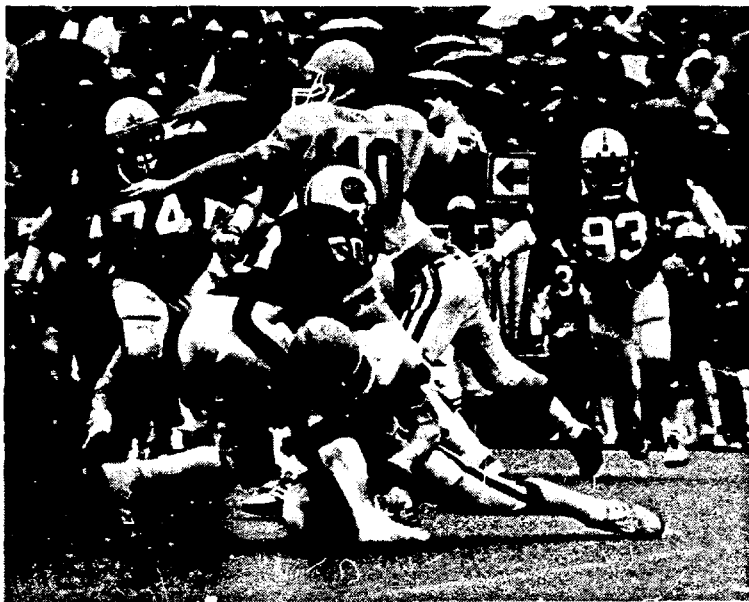

Zendejas came through again for the Wolf Pack. In overtime, he kicked his second field goal of the game to give Nevada-Reno a 20-17 win in weather that was worse than "pretty bad," sports information director Paul Stuart said.

"Pretty bad is the most positive statement I've heard about the weather," Stuart said. "It wasn't pretty bad. It was ugly."

Ault said, "Our grass field took a real beating. We're happy to be playing on the turf at McAndrew Stadium."

It should not be too surprising that Ault has his team in the playoffs. Wherever he has gone, he has produced a winner. When taking over at Nevada-Reno in

The Saluki defense gave little breathing room to Sycamore quarterback Jeff Miller, and will be called on again Saturday to stomp its opponent's offensive attack.

Cagers aware of task in facing top-20 teams

By Sherry Chisenhall
Sports Editor

Disregarding fear of the unknown, women's basketball Coach Cindy Scott claims to be afraid of the known.

What she knows is that this week her 3-1 club will face a top-20 team and another team making a bid for next week's top 20 poll. She also knows that one of those teams holds a win over formerly seventh-ranked Old Dominion and top-20 candidate Florida State, and that her team will face one of the best guards in the nation.

The Salukis take on 17th-ranked Western Kentucky at 7:35 p.m. Thursday in Davies Gymnasium and follow with a 3 p.m. contest Saturday with Vanderbilt at the Arena. Anyone with a ticket stub from the Saluki semifinal football game will be admitted free to the Vanderbilt game.

The 5-1 Toppers of WKU have suffered their only loss to No. 2-ranked Louisiana Tech and boast freshman guard Clemette Haskins, a two-time Parade and Kodak High School All-American. The 5-foot-9 guard is averaging 21.7 points per game and nine rebounds per game.

Vanderbilt is 4-2 and is fresh off a loss to 10th-ranked Auburn, with the Commodores' other loss coming to ninth-ranked Mississippi in overtime.

The Salukis are one up on their opponents, though. While WKU and Vandy are trying to shake losses in their last outing, Scott's contingent is returning from winning the championship of the Dial Classic in Pullman, Wash.

Although no top-20 team played in the Classic, SIU-C trounced schools from the Big Eight and Pac 10 conferences by downing Oklahoma by 20 and Washington State by 15.

Western Kentucky has never won in Carbondale, with a 2-2 series record against SIU-C, while Vanderbilt is making its first appearance at SIU-C.

Scott's club is matched fairly tight with its opponents and both games could come down to the wire. Scott knows her team is capable of beating either team, but the Saluki coach isn't disillusioned about what her team must do.

"We can stay with them, but we'll have to have a consistent effort across the board," she said. "I know a lot about them, and it scares me. The best we've played all year was against Washington State. We didn't shoot well, but we controlled the tempo of the game."

The Salukis will need to set the pace Thursday if they hope to hand WKU another loss. Western Kentucky Coach Paul Sanderford said his team likes to run with the ball, which won't be difficult with Haskins guiding the offense.

"The biggest thing for us is to play good defense," Scott said. "We can't let their guards penetrate. We have to contain them."

The Salukis have settled into a control-type offense, when Junior forward Cleveland Bibbens took the ball up and over a St. Louis University player in the Salukis' win Wednesday.

Cagers edge Billikens

By Daryl Van Schouwen
Staff Writer

Perhaps it was the cold weather outside.

The Saluki basketball team, which hadn't shot less than 53 percent from the field going into Wednesday's game against St. Louis, was forced to utilize a new weapon to eek out a 69-67 win at the Arena.

Wednesday the Salukis used 27 free throws, 15 in the final five minutes, to hold off a Billiken charge that saw the visitors bounce back from an 11-point halftime deficit.

"When you don't shoot well you don't look good," Saluki Coach Allen Van Winkle said. "But we still came out with a win. I thought the kids handled the final minute well."

With 8:23 left, Kenny Perry's fifth foul sent the 6-foot-11 center to the bench and SLU's Tim Stock to the free throw line, where Stock hit two of two to cut the Saluki lead to 48-42.

The Billikens' Kevin Williams poured in six points in a one-minute period near the end of the half to bring the Bills back. The Billikens pulled with two at 1:27.

Roy Birch led the Salukis with 20 points, 10 on free throws. Birch converted eight tosses from the charity stripe in the final 2:25.

Cleveland Bibbens had 15 points and 11 rebounds and was also busy at the line, clicking on seven of eight. All of the Salukis points in the last 4:15 came from the free throw line.

Carvin Norman led the Billikens with 17 points and led all rebounders with 18.

Both teams looked ragged at the outset, especially the Billikens, who managed two points in the first six minutes of the game, allowing the Salukis to jump in front 12-7.

SIU-C's season shooting pattern made an about-face in the first half. Hot from the field but cold from the free throw line in their first four games, the Salukis hit 38 percent from the field and were perfect from the free throw line.

The loss was SLU'S third straight by a narrow margin.
