Quinn basing campaign on populist platform

IN THE RING:
Democrat settles for run at Lt. Gov. post, citing family concerns.

KIRK MOTTRAM
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Former Illinois Treasurer Pat Quinn officially announced his candidacy for lieutenant governor Sunday, putting to rest widespread speculation that he would enter the already-crowded gubernatorial race.

Though the four announced Democratic gubernatorial candidates may be breathing a sigh of relief, publicly they seem unfazed by the announcement. Quinn had been teasing the field for weeks, showing up to Democratic gubernatorial functions and speaking as if he were a bona fide candidate.

But Quinn, citing family considerations as the primary reason for his passing up a run for governor, is intent on securing the nomination for the state's second post.

"I'm the only candidate with kids in grammar school," Quinn said, justifying his decision to bypass a gubernatorial campaign. "There are certain things in life you only do once, and I'd like to spend more time with my family."

Quinn's family did not deter him from mounting a statewide campaign, however. He now positions himself to run against Mary Lou Kearns, Kane County coroner, in the March primary if he can collect the 5,000 signatures by Monday to get on the ballot.

Quinn is no stranger to statewide races, as he secured the treasurer's position in 1990 and won the Democratic nomination for Secretary of State in 1994. Before he was treasurer, Quinn was elected to the Commission of the Cook County Board on Property Taxes. He also ran an unsuccessful campaign for U.S. Senate in 1996, when he was defeated in the primary by now-senator Dick Durbin, D-Ill.

Quinn, a self-described populist, said his campaign primarily will focus on state insurance rates, campaign-finance reform, health care and ethics reform. Quinn admits he will not be running with a fully stocked war chest, but he is confident that his tough stances on campaign finance will offset a shortage of funds and translate into votes.

"We're pretty frugal — always have been," Quinn said. "We want this campaign to be used as a model on how to run a campaign without spending an arm and a leg."

"Populism means standing up for citizens who don't have lobbyists working for them."

Quinn entering the lieutenant governor's race did not seem to faze the John Schmidt camp, as Schmidt's press secretary, Becky Carroll, downplayed the announcement.

"We're not focusing on anybody else," she said. "But, it reflects the fact that John Schmidt has run a strong, solid campaign so far."

Carroll said Quinn's decision most likely had been affected by Schmidt's recent surge in momentum. In a recent internal poll of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, Schmidt took first with 40 percent of the vote, followed by U.S. Rep. Glenn Poshard, D-Ill., with 34 percent. Former Attorney General Roland Burris placed third with 15 percent, and the rest were undecided. Retired U.S. Attorney Jim Burns, the remaining Democratic candidate, did not garner any votes.

"If Pat Quinn felt that he was a strong showing, he would have chosen to get in the race," Carroll said. "It demonstrates that the field is thinning and that John (Schmidt) has been building a SUPPORT: Stephan Marsh finishes his two-hour morning workout at the Recreation Center as his fiancée, Becky Newburn spots him. Marsh works out four hours a day as part of his recovery from cancer.

SIDE BY SIDE

Couple finds strength in each other for three-year battle against cancer

KAREN BLATTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Stephan Marsh struggles to raise a barbell above his head as his fiancée spots him, assisting him, as he rebuilds his body. Becky Newburn not only supports Stephan in his exercise routines, but has never left his side during his three-year battle with cancer.

Since the SIUC student was diagnosed with cancer in 1994, he and Becky have been on an emotional roller coaster, facing more medical problems than most people will see in a lifetime.

Despite the strain of dealing with Stephan's cancer, Becky says she would not change anything about their seven-year relationship.

"I don't regret a minute of it," she says, smiling at Stephan. "I could have just packed my bags and left."

"I'd do it all over, for the rest of my life, if that's what is meant to keep him here."

Stephan is approaching his second year of remission.

Discovering cancer

In October 1994, Stephan was a junior at SIUC, double majoring in photography and industrial design. He enjoyed lifting weights to stay a healthy 285 pounds. Despite working out, Stephan began getting sick more and more often, and no doctor could determine what was ailing him.

"They told me I just had a cold or the flu or that I was just working too hard and was over stressed," Stephan, a native of Makanda, said. "They told me not to worry about it."

During the week of Stephan's 26th birthday, after months of trips to doctors and no definite answers, he was rushed to the emergency room with a temperature of 105 and pain in his lower abdomen and groin.

Tests were performed, revealing a cancerous tumor.

The discovery shocked Stephan.

"About five doctors came into me hospital room, and they didn't say anything to me for about 10 minutes," he said. "They just kept on looking at each other. Finally they said, 'Mr. Marsh, you have cancer.'"

"I just sat there and said to myself, 'You have cancer.' I called Becky and told her. She came to the hospital crying."

Stephan was diagnosed with stage 3 cancer. Stage 5 is the most severe type of cancer.

Becky, an SIUC alumna with a degree in German from Makanda, was stunned.

"Not him, not somebody who takes good care of himself," she said. "It's supposed to happen to somebody who drinks or smokes or doesn't take care of their bodies."

The battle begins

Stephan began taking chemotherapy in November 1994, but his reaction to the therapy was unusual. The doctors could not figure out what was wrong with him, so he was flown to St. Louis University Hospital.

When Stephan arrived at the hospital, his liver, kidneys, spleen and pancreas stopped working, and his heart began to beat erratically. The doctors diagnosed Stephan's cancer as Hodgkin's Lymphoma stage 4B multi-cellular variant type, an advanced stage of cancer with a low survival rate. Stephan was at the prime age to get this type of cancer.

He was put in a medically induced coma, while various surgeries were performed to him, including open-heart surgery and a tracheotomy.

Stephan's family could not afford the flight from Texas to be at his bedside, but Becky was CORN DAWG: Work of SIUC Scientist could boost income of Illinois corn producers by $305 million a year.

J. MICHAEL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC biotechnologist David Lightfoot has been researching a project that soon may bring corn producers a $305-million income increase and lower-priced protein sources for consumers.

Lightfoot, an associate professor in plant and soil science, has found that corn he equipped with a nitrogen-loving gene, E-coli, not only makes better use of fertilizer, but produces more protein.

"This has been a lifetime dream. I am very satisfied that I will soon accomplish this 16-year goal," said Lightfoot, a native of Yorkshire, England, who did his doctoral work at the University of Leeds. "They (the Illinois Corn Marketing Board) couldn't find any scientist that believed it would work. Through my theoretical experimentations, I knew it would work."

If the research pans out, Illinois corn producers could see their incomes rise by $305 million a year.

Lightfoot's experiment will be in its next phase in fall 1998, when researchers have enough corn to do feeding studies. The feeding studies, funded by a $75,000 grant from the Illinois Corn Marketing Board and a $36,500 grant from the Council on Food and Agricultural Research, will show if Lightfoot's corn contains enough protein to replace some of the protein supplement often given to livestock.

Philip Shane, market development director for the Illinois Corn Marketing Board, said the board was pleased when Lightfoot approached its members in 1984 — the year the board began to fund Lightfoot's research.

"The original plan for the research was to create corn that would use nitrogen more efficiently. The goal was to address environmental concerns," Shane said. "It was something that we wanted done, so it wasn't a question of whether he could do it or not. We knew the project would take some years, it was a question of if he would devote the time."

Lightfoot has been with SIUC for the past six years teaching courses in plant and soil sciences. Lightfoot is at a slow period of researching but in the fall, he will be experimenting on almost a full-time basis.

Meanwhile, Shane is awaiting the results from Lightfoot's 16 years of research.

"I hope farmers will get the most benefit out of this," Shane said. "It'll maintain the price of the commodity. Farmers will see environmental benefits by spending less money on chemicals and less money on nitrogen."

Richard Dado, an assistant professor of animal science and an SIUC animal nutritionist, is working with Lightfoot to determine how the corn is digested in the livestock.

"That would be good, not only for corn growers, but for consumers who would benefit from lower-priced protein sources when they pay for their food," Dado stated in a press release.

Dado, who sits on a College of Agriculture committee that reviews grants requests, said they thought farmers and livestock owners could see great profits when he read Lightfoot's report on his research.

"Economic benefits to livestock owners could be 10 times greater than the pure agronomic benefits — at least, based on my best guess," Dado stated.

If this research is successful, Lightfoot will not see any money made by it because SIUC owns the patent.

Lightfoot said it may be awhile before his dream breakthrough makes it to market:

"Government regulations will prevent this from hitting the public anytime soon," he said.

University to tackle repair backlog

TO-DO LIST: Library asbestos removal, Faner air conditioning fix, numerous roof repairs top maintenance projects for SIUC.

TRAVIS DEÑEAL
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC will be making progress in repairing a backlog of maintenance projects on campus now that a supplemental appropriations bill has been sent to the Illinois Board of Higher Education for distribution to schools.

James Tweedy, vice chancellor for Administration, said the appropriations bill signed last week, which allocates nearly $2 million for repairs, will allow the University to fix leaky roofs on Neckers, Altgeld and Quigley halls, Lesar Law Building and the Agriculture Building.

Air conditioning problems in Faner Hall, asbestos removal in Morris Library and a massive wiring project for the Springfield campus, also are included in the package.

Other repairs, such as structural repairs for the north overpass that leads to Brush Towers, will have to wait for further appropriation money.

"The overpass repair was not as high a priority as some of the other repairs," Tweedy said, "but it still is a high priority."

Tweedy said further maintenance projects are included in this year's budget requests to the IBHE.

Does it solve all of our problems? No, but we don't have the backlog we once did.

SIUC CHANCELLOR DONALD BEGGS

Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, said the supplemental appropriations bill had to be passed during the same session in which the recent education funding plan was passed.

The education funding plan, which institutes higher taxes on phone usage, cigarettes and casino profits to pay for education, also outlines future state spending for education. Backdated projects, though, must be paid for in supplemental appropriations bills, Bost said.

Thus, the financial needs of backlogged projects statewide had to be met before future education spending could be passed, Bost said.

The bill has been referred to the IBHE, which Bost said should distribute the money quickly. It is possible that SIUC may start receiving money during the first two weeks of January.

Tweedy said though the money was not enough to take care of all maintenance projects on campus, SIUC is close to becoming up to date on its repairs.

"Now we can respond to people who have been complaining about their roofs leaking, for instance," Tweedy said.

SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs also is pleased that the appropriations bill passed because the University is moving away from the backdated maintenance problems.

"This is very positive outcome statewide," Beggs said. "Does it solve all of our problems? No, but we don't have the backlog we once did."

Lorena Bobbitt charged with punching mother

The woman formerly known as Lorena Bobbitt, who became internationally famous for slicing off her husband's penis, appeared in a Prince William County, Va., court Monday on a charge that she punched her mother in the face.

Lorena Gallo, who now uses her maiden name, appeared in Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court on a misdemeanor charge of assault and battery. Police said they were called Friday night by Bobbitt's mother, who said she was watching television when she was attacked by Gallo.

Police said Gallo's brother intervened to stop the attack, which allegedly left his mother with scrapes on her face. Gallo was arrested later that night at a friend's Woodbridge, Va., home and released on a $750 bond, police said.

A source familiar with the investigation said the arresting officer asked the county magistrate to issue a protective order telling Gallo to stay away from her mother. The request was denied, the source said.

El Nino may be waning, but rough seas not over

The El Nino current dominating the equatorial Pacific Ocean, which climate experts have forecast as one of the century's largest and potentially most disruptive weather phenomenon, may be on the wane, according to new satellite data released by NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

In recent weeks, the vast pool of warm water associated with the El Nino — which by November had grown to almost twice the size of the United States — has shrunk by at least 10 percent, falling to a level last observed in early September.

Although scientists with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Topex/Poseidon satellite project said the decline could be an early sign that El Nino is retreating, they were reluctant to call it conclusive proof that this year's powerful current is on its way out.

Even if El Nino is waning, they warned, it has already released enough energy into the atmosphere this year to disrupt weather around the world.

WASHINGTON

Clinton has no plan to force recovery of tobacco funds

The Clinton administration has no immediate plans to force states to hand over part of their settlements of lawsuits with the tobacco industry, officials told members of a House subcommittee Monday.

In a conciliatory letter from President Clinton to state officials that was released at the hearing, Clinton said he hoped to "find a mutually agreeable purpose" for the funds.

At the same hearing of the House Commerce Committee's subcommittee on health and the environment, commerce committee chairman Thomas J. Bliley, R-Va., announced that he would try to release before Christmas more than 800 tobacco industry documents handed over by the companies. Bliley said that he would work with ranking Commerce Democrat John D. Dingell, D-Mich., to review the documents, which the industry surrendered on Friday after Bliley subpoenaed them.

The industry has fought the release of the sensitive internal documents, saying they are protected by attorney-client privilege. In a surprise move, Bliley, a staunch industry supporter, demanded the documents, saying Congress had to review them to see if they contain any evidence that the industry deceived the public about the dangers of smoking before considering a national tobacco settlement.

Our Word

No excuse

Thieves rob campus of more than just beautiful exotic plants

IT IS A SAD TIME AT SIUC WHEN WE must refrain from planting beautiful, exotic plants on our campus for the fear of them being stolen.

Since April, plant thieves have been pillaging the landscape around the Agriculture Building. This has not only cost the University about $2,000 in expenses, but these unscrupulous thieves have robbed us of the chance to enjoy the beautiful garden that once existed there.

And that garden did not only have aesthetic value. Those plants, trees and shrubs were planted and used as landscaping and design projects by SIUC students needing such hands-on experiences.

But it did not take long for thieves to attempt some hands-on experiences of their own. Karen Midden, an associate professor of plant and soil and general agriculture, noticed two exotic Japanese maple trees were missing only a week after they were planted. As a result of that $160 theft — and the other thefts soon to follow — ideas of putting more plants around the Agriculture Building have been shelved.

THERE ARE PEOPLE EXISTING IN OUR community who would rather steal campus plants, instead of buying their own from one of any number of local merchants. Worse, this action — an act of the highest degree of laziness — most likely will go unpunished. It is too difficult to catch the plant thieves in action, so there is little that University Police can do about the crimes.

But if anyone has information about the greenery thefts — or even wants to return a stolen plant — call Karen Midden at 453-2496. Midden has volunteered to replant any plants that are returned. So if the campus plant thieves have just a hint of a conscience left, SIUC could have its missing garden back soon.

Top priority

Campus Lake research important to determining harmful effects

CAMPUS LAKE IS BENEFITING FROM A well-deserved state grant to determine if pollution, erosion and algae build-up are negatively affecting its aesthetic, recreational and biological aspects.

And this means that future SIUC students, staff and faculty will be able to enjoy Campus Lake for a longer period of time.

Although complaints about the ever-present litter surrounding the human-made lake have been prevalent over the years, it is good that studying Campus Lake itself has become a top priority by the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency. A $75,000 grant from the Illinois EPA given to SIUC in April has allowed University researchers to study the 40-acre lake. Researchers are examining Campus Lake to determine causes of sedimentation, shoreline erosion, over-fertilization and storm drainage that has harmed the lake for years.

For example, more than 20 storm drains' run into Campus Lake. Runoff from campus streets, parking lots, buildings and woodland areas repeatedly has found its way into a place that is supposed to be one of our valued recreational havens.

LET US NOT FORGET THAT CAMPUS LAKE also is home to numerous fish, ducks and other species that will benefit from the researchers' efforts to improve the quality of the lake's waters. These researchers' efforts deserve recognition, and protecting Campus Lake should remain a top priority for SIUC in the future.

Woods shows lack of respect toward caddie

Young
Soo
Shim

Guest Column

Young is a graduate student in journalism. Guest Column appears Tuesdays and Thursdays. Young's opinion does not necessarily reflect that of the Daily Egyptian.

The game of golf is simply confusing. Is it because I shoot as well as a Saluki golf team member one day, and play as horribly as a guy hitting the field for the first time another day? Partly. There is more to it than that.

Whether you play golf or not, I bet you know Tiger Woods is being hyped as an equivalent in golf to Michael Jordan in basketball. You might have watched his play on television at least once.

What strikes me most is not Woods' dazzling play. What draws my eyes most is how Woods treats his caddie — who looks old enough to be his daddy.

Have you even noticed the 22-year-old golf superstar walking with pomposity as his caddie was staggering under the weight of his golf bag — and probably his own age? To my eyes, the caddie had to struggle to carry his own weight.

And have you seen Woods throw a club at his caddie with an angry look after making a bad shot? And in front of thousands-strong gallery and national TV audiences? These were not quite pleasant scenes to watch, were they?

Is Woods a little bit better than Nick Price, who had his caddie

"Squeaky" carry his bag until a few months before his death from leukemia? I don't know. You tell me.

You might say, "What's wrong with this? This is a capitalist society in which you can do whatever you like with your own money. If you've got money, you can hire a 90-year-old man to polish your shoes and wash your car."

I don't have much to say about that. But if you do really think this way, please stop reading this column right here. Further reading will be just a waste of time for you.

What about the golfer William Morgan — who stands out not so much for his golf finesse than because of the ever-present burring cigar in his mouth? Is he so addicted to nicotine that he can't take a cigar out of his mouth — even during shots or puts that last only a few seconds? I really don't know whether there is any other sport in the world that allows you to compete on a professional level with a cigar in your mouth.

Have you ever watched a senior PGA tour on television? The players are pretty athletic-looking, aren't they? They have such huge tummies that they can't bend low enough to retrieve their balls out of the putting hole. And they can't move from the tee ground to their ball a couple hundred yards away without panting like a runner at the end of a 25-mile marathon. Still, the guys pocket millions of bucks a year from golf. What a game it is.

Now we can't help but ask a few questions.

What image can youth have of golf when they see professional golfers in the prime of physical shape make pompous strides, while their older caddies are struggling to catch up with them under the weight of a set of golf clubs and the scorching summer sun?

What lesson can a youth learn from a 22-year-old golf idol who hurls abusive words and looks at his aged caddie after making a bad shot? I really don't know. It's just confusing.

What I'd like to see from Woods is not his legendary 340-yard drive. Nor is it his winning a major tour by a record margin. Nor is it setting a money-winning record. What I really want to see from him is a minimal show of respect to his aged caddie.

Why can't Woods say a warm word or two to his caddie, such as "Old man, give me the bag, I'll carry for a while. You catch your breath and wipe the sweat off your face."

“ Have you even noticed the 22-year-old golf superstar walking with pomposity as his caddie was staggering under the weight of his golf bag — and probably his own age? ”

Corporate America takes a nap

WASHINGTON POST

Great news for slackers: Sleeping on the job is now a good thing!

That's right, taking a short nap at the office — long considered a sign of a bad work ethic, laziness and unproductivity — is gaining limited acceptance in a smattering of workplaces across the country.

Take 42 IS Consulting, for example. The computer consulting firm, based in Berkeley, Calif., views regular siestas as a fundamental part of doing business.

"Not only do we allow it, we encourage it," said P.M. Clary, who, in the more creative California way with job titles, is "special agent" for the company. "Everyone works hard and puts in a lot of hours. We ask a lot of our employees; it only makes sense they get everything they need to remain sane and healthy."

That includes a special napping loft with a queen-size bed. The sleep space has become so popular that employees usually have to make reservations, Clary said, but the benefits of a few afternoon z's are immeasurable.

"I'm very much re-energized" after a nap, said Clary, who estimated that most people nod off for 20 to 25 minutes. "It's as important for employers to offer a nap break as it is for them to have coffee breaks. It's easy in this industry to wind up working on nothing but coffee, and that makes for sloppy work. Naps are a natural and more healthy way to achieve the same result."

But are naps a credible prescription for employee sluggishness, or do they simply invite more problems, such as abuse of the privilege?

"There is a natural tendency, which is biologically driven, to get tired in a work atmosphere," said David F. Dinges, director of the experimental psychiatry unit at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine.

"There's no question that workers would be better off if they're allowed to sleep for 25 minutes. Naps enhance morale, performance, production and safety."

there to hold his hand.

"All I remember is waking up out of the coma," Stephan said. "I wasn't able to talk. I remember not being able to move and just lying there."

By March 1995, Stephan weighed 145 pounds. Another side effect of the chemotherapy was severe nerve damage that left him virtually paralyzed. He was unable to talk, move or even swallow, and he could not breathe on his own.

"It was really hard emotionally not being able to walk or talk," Stephan said. "I wasn't able to do things for myself."

Stephan was sent to yet another hospital, Vencor Hospital, in St. Louis, where he underwent physical therapy for five months.

"I remember what it was like not being able to move in the hospital bed," Stephan said. "I had to depend on everybody. It sucked."

While in rehabilitation, tests showed that Stephan still had cancer invading his liver. At the same time, Stephan was told he would never be able to walk or have children.

"I saw how upset he was and how hard it was for him, and I knew I had to stay focused on him and be there for him," Becky said.

He made major improvements in breathing, arm and leg movements. The doctors then determined he was well enough to be sent to a rehabilitation hospital.

By October 1995, Stephan was undergoing chemotherapy again. Doctors tried different drugs on Stephan so he would not have the same negative reaction. The therapy lasted 24 hours a day for five days a week.

The first round of chemotherapy went smoothly. Stephan kept on working out, and he was doing limited walking on his own.

Although breathing became more and more difficult, the doctors decided he was well enough to return home.

It marked the first time in more than a year that Stephan would be able to be in his own home.

Chemotherapy stopped because Stephan's breathing had become too difficult. His previous tracheotomy had scarred his trachea, causing it to close up on itself. A semi-permanent T-tube was placed in his trachea to keep it from closing, allowing him to breathe.

Stephan returned to the hospital for tests that showed his cancer had not gone into remission. He underwent two more painful rounds of chemotherapy.

Stephan relapsed into his cancer for a total of four times.

After these last battles, Stephan's cancer went into remission in December 1995.

Everyday life

This month marks two years of remission of Stephan's cancer.

Stephan is in a wheel-chair because of severe nerve damage. He was forced to put his education on hold until spring while he recuperates.

"Even though it has been gone for almost two years, it always has a chance of coming back," Becky said. "The possibilities of coming back drop drastically after a year, but there still is a chance."

Doctors told Stephan and Becky that he was one of the few survivors of his type of cancer in its advanced stages.

"We were like, 'Why?'" Stephan said. "Why have I lived this long while others have died?"

Stephan and Becky try to make the most out of every day, starting off early at 4 a.m. It takes Stephan about 30 minutes to clear out the tube in his throat.

"It think about cancer every day," he said. "The first thing I have to do when I get up is clear my throat. That's a reality check right there."

Then he and Becky work out from 5:30 to 7:30 a.m. at the Recreation Center.

Stephan works out his chest, shoulders, triceps and biceps. At times, he is able to push his wheel-chair one lap around the track.

After Becky returns home from work, they both trek back to the Recreation Center to work out again.

But the hardest part of Stephan's day is when he is at home alone.

"There's nothing to do," he said. "There's TV, but that gets old. Next was the Internet. Then I started reading my old text books, but even that got boring. I just hang out here all day, but I am stuck inside."

The fight remembered

Stephan and Becky agree that the first year of his cancer treatments were the hardest.

"It doesn't bother me as much as it did a year ago," Stephan said. "I'm doing better than I was before."

Stephan recalls how hard it was for him to fight the cancer.

"It sucked," he said. "All the friends we thought we had were gone. Becky was the only person who visited me regularly in the hospital."

Stephan's parents, who live in Texas, were unable to come see him through the cancer because his mother was the only one working, and she could not afford the to take the time off to make the trip to Illinois.

Stephan said Becky's positive attitude has helped him in his recovery.

"She's always been there," he said. "She's always telling me that everything is going to work out fine."

Sights on the future

Stephan feels his recovery is coming along as well as he planned it to be. He set goals for the five years after following his remission. What he has accomplished so far has surpassed his two-year goal.

"Right now I'd love to get up and walk. I thought that it would take about five years for me to walk again. Now it's been two years, and I am doing really well," he says proudly.

The longer the cancer is in remission, the higher the chance of survival. After five years, Stephan will be considered cured.

Stephan has a walker to help him navigate around the house, and he can walk a short amount by himself.

Even though Stephan and Becky never set a date for their wedding, they say that being married is not important anymore.

"I love Becky very much," Stephan says, glancing at his fiancée. "But if we get married, our insurance premium would go up too much, and we wouldn't be able to afford it."

Although there is no immediate plan to get married, Stephan and Becky both joke with each other as to where they will have the ceremony.

"She wants to get married on a pontoon boat," Stephan says, laughing. "And I want to get married at a drive-thru in Las Vegas."

After being out of school for almost three years, Stephan is enrolled in the spring semester. He will finish his degree in photography in three more semesters, and then will concentrate on his degree in design.

"It means a lot for me to go back and finish," he says. "I want to graduate before I 'kick the bucket.'"

"As far as school goes, I'm taking it semester by semester. As for life I take it every three months for the CAT scan. I do everything I can in those three months except the week before, I just sit home and worry."

Becky says she sees the difference in his attitude in the weeks before the CAT scans that will search for possible cancer.

"He's unbearable," she says in a frustrated tone. "Everything is death, doom and destruction."

Stephan is hoping to have the T-tube removed permanently after he graduates.

Stephan's sperm counts have gone up in the last year, that will possibly allow them the have a child.

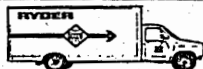

"We do want to have kid however we can," Becky says.

But the couple is focusing on Stephan's recovery. His next CAT scan is Dec. 19.

"I get really nervous just thinking about it," Stephan says. "This is the longest I have gone without a CAT scan. Before it was every two months, and now it is every three. It's always on my mind."

Becky's positive and upbeat attitude shines through when she reassures Stephan of the results of the CAT scan.

"Everything is going to be just fine," Becky says with a smile.

Atom accelerator gets budget boost

WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — In an unprecedented act of international scientific collaboration, the United States Monday pledged to provide more than $500 million in high-tech components and services for construction of a state-of-the-art atom smasher near Geneva.

"For the first time, the U.S. government has agreed to contribute significantly to construction of an accelerator outside our borders," Energy Secretary Federico Pena said at a ceremony formalizing the agreement in the Old Executive Office Building. "We have concluded that this is the most cost-beneficial way for the United States to participate" in expensive experiments at the forefront of high-energy physics.

"It sets an excellent precedent," said Christopher Llewellyn Smith, general director of the European Laboratory for Particle Physics (CERN), which will build the facility. Not only is the cost of such projects increasingly "beyond the means of most countries," Smith said, but the physical location of the center is "increasingly irrelevant. Science knows no national borders or continental boundaries."

The Large Hadron Collider (LHC), planned for completion in 2005 at an estimated cost of about $6 billion, is designed to be the world's most powerful accelerator, generating about seven times more collision energy than the record-holder, the Tevatron at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory (Fermilab) outside Chicago.

Those energy levels are expected to create conditions that will enable researchers to "uncover and unravel the deepest secrets of the physical universe," said National Science Foundation Director Neal

Lane, including the profoundly vexing question of what process in nature causes particles to acquire mass.

Other objectives include trying to understand the mysterious "dark matter" that makes up at least 90 percent of the mass of the cosmos but has never been seen, investigating why there is so little antimatter in today's universe and studying how the four fundamental forces of nature might be unified.

The LHC was conceived years ago by CERN, which is supported by a consortium of 19 European countries.

solid base of support an draining money."

None of the Democratic hopefuls have endorsed a candidate for lieutenant governor. Dave Stricklin, Poshard's press secretary, said his candidate is concentrating solely on the governor's race, but is impressed with both Kearns and Quinn. Stricklin seemed to express indifference with Quinn's decision, but said that a case could be made for a Quinn-for-governor candidacy benefiting Poshard.

"Everybody ought to look at the lay of the land," Stricklin said. "It's America. It's the Democratic Party. And, people ought to run for the office that best suits their talents and abilities if they have something to contribute."

"You could probably make a case that if there was an additional Chicago candidate in the race, it would have benefited us, but we're really not looking at it like that."

Stricklin also downplayed the results of the recent Central Committee poll, saying that Poshard is continuing to build support and further his message.

"We're very satisfied with our support in the Central Committee," he said. "We're not worried."

Quinn is not worried about his election chances, either. He says his name recognition and past experience will aid him in securing the nomination. Quinn also said his strategy consists of establishing a strong southern base, where populism rather than elitism is favored.

"I'm convinced that for us to win the state of Illinois, we must build from the south — north," he said. "I'm skeptical of big government, big bureaucracy and big corporations, and I think the people are, too."

"Organizing citizens is important. And, I think people know who I am and what I stand for."

Love of SIUC motivation for leaving Washington

BACK HOME: Simon keeps busy as adjunct professor, Board of Visitors for Morris Library.

KELLI SMITH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Jeanne Simon was not motivated by money, but by the sense of home and family, when she decided to accept the volunteer position of adjunct professor at SIUC.

"SIU has been exceptionally good to us," Simon said of herself and her husband, former Sen. Paul Simon. "We had many offers throughout the country with big titles and money. SIU is home.

"And our daughter is a professor in the Law School. More than that, Paul and I don't think titles and money are important at this time in our life. If you don't believe in what you're doing, it's not any fun, and we truly believe in what we are doing."

Co-workers at Morris Library value the contributions Simon has made to SIUC as a volunteer.

"She is really supportive of the library and the University and is willing to help out in any way she can," said Carolyn Snyder, dean of Library Affairs. "She's excellent to work with and is very knowledgeable about libraries."

Simon has contributed to the University in many ways since her return to SIUC from Washington, D.C., in 1996. She serves on the Board of Visitors, which targets the improvement of Morris Library through those who have left the University but still want to stay involved.

Simon and Snyder also are working together to plan an intellectual property rights conference on the Internet.

"Some of my goals are to succeed in this first conference, to work with the Law School, and to develop different ties in the University," Simon said.

Before meeting her husband, Simon was an assistant state's attorney in Cook County. Afterward, she served as a democratic state legislator for two terms in a northeastern Illinois district. More recently she has served as a consultant to the National Society Archive.

Aside from what she does at SIUC, Simon also was re-appointed last month by President Bill Clinton for a second term as the chairwoman of the U.S. National Commission on Libraries and Information Science. Her first term began in 1993.

"I think Hillary (Rodham-Clinton) might have had something to do with it," Simon said. "She is pleased to see women taking roles like this."

Since leaving the nation's capital, the Simons have maintained a highly active role traveling and speaking across the country. Jeanne Simon speaks before many organizations, most recently the League of Women Voters. Snyder says this is an added bonus for SIUC.

"As she travels as an adjunct professor,

SIU gets recognition," Snyder said.

SIU President Ted Sanders is pleased with Simon's decision to join SIUC. Sanders also was instrumental in the Simons' decision to come to SIUC, Simon said.

"Jeanne Simon brought to SIU a first-rate intellect as well as an excellent blend of strong, theoretical knowledge and practical experience," Sanders said. "She is also a lawyer and author. SIU is thrilled indeed to have Jeanne in its family."

Irradiation approved by FDA to kill deadly microbes in meat

WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — In the war on food poisoning, the federal government has gone nuclear.

The Food and Drug Administration last week approved irradiation to kill potentially deadly microbes in beef, lamb or goat meat, as well as in edible byproducts such as organ meat. The scientific community and public health organizations are in near-total agreement that it is safe to eat food that has been sterilized by radiation at the levels approved by the FDA. Many consumers, however, remain wary.

At the same time, consumers are increasingly worried about food poisoning, and for good reason: Food-borne infections cause millions of cases of human illness and an estimated 9,000 deaths annually in the United States. Meat safety has been of particular concern since an outbreak of food poisoning from fast-food hamburgers contaminated with E. coli bacteria killed four children and sickened hundreds of others in 1993. Earlier this year, E. coli contamination led to the recall of a record 25 million pounds of ground beef processed by Hudson Foods Inc.

The notion of using radiation to sterilize foods has been around for nearly 100 years, and use began in earnest about 40 years ago. These days half of all disposable medical devices go through the process, along with nipples for baby bottles, wine corks and those tiny foil-covered cups of half-and-half for your morning coffee. The first foods approved for irradiation were wheat and wheat flour in 1963; since then Uncle Sam has given the nod to use the approach on spices, pork, fruits and vegetables and poultry.

Orioles eager to add DH

WASHINGTON POST

Baltimore Orioles officials were anxiously awaiting a decision Sunday night by free agent designated hitter Paul Molitor, who was weighing contract offers from them and from the Toronto Blue Jays.

Orioles officials were hoping for more positive news to cap what had already been a productive weekend. Late Saturday, free agent center fielder Brady Anderson agreed to a five-year, $31 million deal to stay with the team.

Anderson said early Sunday that he and Orioles majority owner Peter Angelos agreed to the $6.2 million-per-season deal during a telephone conversation Saturday night, but will leave the final details of the contract to Orioles General Manager Pat Gillick and Anderson's representatives.

Orioles officials made plans for Anderson — and Molitor, they hoped — to participate in a news conference Sunday at Oriole Park at Camden Yards.

"It was weird when I finally said, 'I'll take that,'" Anderson said, before returning to Baltimore from California. "It was like, 'Did I really say that?'...It's a strange feeling when it finally gets done. (But) I wouldn't say it was a relief.

...The whole process was sort of fun. When I was going through it, I never felt it was hard. I liked the challenge of it during the season. I liked the challenge of negotiating a lot of it myself."

Angelos, meanwhile, said the Orioles will begin next season with a player payroll of approximately $70 million. The club, in effect, said its goodbyes to outfielder Jerome Walton and pitcher Shawn Boskie, after declining to offer salary arbitration to the free agents.

The Orioles are prohibited from re-signing either player before May 1.

Orioles officials seemed to be leaning toward offering arbitration to Harold Baines to maintain their right to negotiate with the free agent designated hitter. But Baines likely will head elsewhere: if Molitor picks the Orioles, Molitor told Orioles officials that he intended to make his choice late last night or today.

The Orioles will be one of baseball's highest-spending teams next year.

In the past eight months, though, Angelos has gotten the club's three cornerstone players-third baseman Cal Ripken, pitcher Mike Mussina and Anderson—to sign contracts below their free agent market values. Ripken signed a contract extension with annual salaries of $6.3 million. Mussina signed an extension for $6.825 million per year. Anderson, 33, agreed to receive $1.5 million of his $6.25 million in each of the contract's first four years as deferred compensation without interest.

"I'm obviously pleased that we were able to sign all three exceptional players," Angelos said. "They essentially are the heart of the team. I compliment them. I think they set an example that all great players on every team should follow. They sought deals that were fair and equitable to both sides."

Anderson was adamant throughout his series of one-on-one conversations with Angelos in recent weeks, most of them during dinner in Baltimore before Anderson left to spend Thanksgiving in California, that he wanted the Orioles to guarantee him $28 million over four years or about $31 million over five seasons. Anderson said the Cleveland Indians made him a four-year, $28 million proposal Saturday.

"I thought it was serious enough for the Orioles to end it (Saturday) if they were going to end it," Anderson said.

The NBA has shown a greater leeway for the more marketable players who fill the arenas than the average ball player.

Sprewell's suspension is the longest in NBA history, breaking the previous record of 24 games (60 days) set by the Los Angeles Lakers' Kermit Washington in 1977. Washington broke the jaw of Rudy Tomjanovich with a devastating rabbit punch.

The knock on Sprewell is that he attacked the coach twice, and did not apologize to Carlesimo for his behavior.

Did "Shaq" send Greg Ostertag

a copy of his new CD after slugging him? Or maybe Rodman gave that cameraman Madonna's phone number. And what did Barkley tell the reporters who asked him of the Sprewell's failure to apologize?

"I didn't apologize to the mother f---er I threw through the window in Miami," Barkley said, as the reporters chuckled.

And Sprewell is the one serving a year-long suspension.

were outscored at the free-throw line 19-8 as SIUC shot just 61 percent from the charity stripe.

Tucker finished the first half with nine points and five assists, but he managed just four points in the second half to lead SIUC with 13 points. Hawkins chipped in 13, while Thunell added 12.

"We didn't go right to him (Tucker) to start off the second half, and we ended up forcing some shots that we didn't get down," Herrin said. "He (Tucker) probably didn't play as good in the second half, and he probably got tired."

Both teams played shorthanded Sunday night. Hawaii's leading scorer, Anthony Carter, missed the game with an injured shoulder, but the Salukis felt the brunt of the loss as the team's centers, Derrick Tilmon and James Watts, missed the championship contest. Their absence caused Herrin to play 13 players in Sunday night's loss.

Tilmon is expected to miss another two to five weeks with a stress fracture in his left foot. Watts is expected to be ready this week. Watts missed the two Hawaii games after putting his hand through a window; an injury requiring stitches, following a 73-66 loss to St. Mary's College Dec. 2 to open the three-game West Coast trip.

"We've got some depth, but we need our two big guys bad," Herrin said. "We weren't very big, and we had to make some adjustments. If we get those two guys back, we'll have that 5 (center) covered."

SIUC returned to Carbondale Monday and is preparing for a two-game homestand, beginning with a battle Thursday night against an improved Southeast Missouri State University squad. The Indians, led by 6-foot-10 center Bud Eley, beat the University of Colorado 62-59 Nov. 16 and Missouri Valley Conference-member Bradley University 79-71 Nov. 26.

"They're playing very, very good under (first-year coach) Gary Garner," Herrin said. "They're a very good basketball team, and we better be ready to come and not have a letdown. If we win the next three games, we can be over .500 by Christmas. I think we can, but it will take a good effort."

"It's very obvious we've got to get some work done," Cornell said. "I was pleasantly surprised with some of our athletes, but we've got to get Jeraldo Henry and Orlando McKee ready right after Christmas break."

Henry and McKee missed the indoor season opener because the two are recovering from the Saluki football season.

The SIUC women's track and field squad went to the meet with hopes of gelling as a team, but the Salukis finished in a disappointing third place that only featured three individual Saluki winners.

Women's coach Don DeNoon said it was a frustrating meet for him and his team.

"We weren't there as a team,"

DeNoon said. "It could be that we don't have a lot of depth because the numbers are there. It just made for a long day."

Some of the bright spots on the women's side were Felicia Hill's first-place finish in the high jump (5' 8") and third-place finish in the triple jump (38' 9-1/2"), Kelly French's victory in the 3,000-meter run (10:24.82) and Leah Steele's triumph in the pole vault (9' 0").

"Felicia Hill looked real good," DeNoon said. "She looked like she intimidated a field of really good high jumpers. She made three fairly decent attempts at qualifying for nationals (5' 9-1/2"). It will be only a matter of time before she sets the school record (5' 8-1/2")."

Other top performances for the Salukis were Finda Fallah's second-place finish in the long jump (17' 7-3/4") and Raina Larsen's third-place finish in the mile (5:12.47). Leah Nolden placed third in the 800 (2:24.95), and Yolanda Mask's third-place finish in the 55-meter dash (7.32) rounded out the Salukis' effort.

Mask, a freshman from Wheeling, said the meet was a good learning experience.

"I thought we did well since it was our first meet," Mask said. "It was a good start for us."

The Saluki women finished with 29 points, trailing Indiana State, which finished with 68 points for first place, and Illinois State, which compiled 65 points.

DeNoon said SIUC has to work on many aspects of its performance before its next meet Jan. 17.

"We have a long way to go," DeNoon said. "We're not anywhere close to where we need to be. It could either be a long season, or we'll end up making big improvements."

The men's and women's track and field teams will compete Jan. 17 against the University of Kansas in Carbondale.

Richardson
DE Sports WriterNBA tough on Sprewell, easy on Rodman, Barkley

Being one of the few Latrell Sprewell fans still in existence, I am not here to argue that his actions toward P.J. Carlesimo were justifiable.

Sprewell physically abused his coach, and the NBA had a right to take disciplinary actions. The Golden State Warriors initially suspended him for 10 games without pay. He was set to lose $1 million of his $7.5-million annual salary.

Justice is served, right?

Two days after the incident, the Warriors decide to void Sprewell's four-year $32-million contract.

OK, though the punishment may be harsh, justice is served now.

A day later, the NBA decides to interfere when commissioner David Stern called for a one-year suspension of Sprewell. Sprewell is barred from signing with any other NBA team until Dec. 3, 1998.

Didn't the pursuit of justice go a tad bit far?

In a league where Dennis Rodman can make a complete mockery of the sport with his unnecessary behavior, the NBA always seems to make an example of lesser-known players, including Latrell Sprewell.

Sprewell, who plays for one of the worst teams in the league and is not a public icon, had never broken any league rules until now. Rodman, a member of the five-time champion Chicago Bulls, makes a habit of bending the rules whenever he can.

During the Bulls' last two championship runs, Rodman has kicked a courtside cameraman, head-butted a referee and repeatedly told Stern and other NBA officials he did not care what actions the league takes.

Still, Rodman was in uniform for the playoffs to help the Bulls continue their reign.

Was it because "The Worm" once dug in Madonna's soil?

But it's not just Rodman who receives this special treatment from the league. Superstars Charles Barkley and Shaquille O'Neal both exercised their privileges this season.

Barkley threw a fan through a window, and O'Neal sucker-punched another player on the opposing team. Both were suspended one game, and the incidents were considered comical rather than serious by the media.

But in 1995, Houston Rocket guard Vernon Maxwell is slapped with a 10-game suspension for his assault on a fan in the stands. Maxwell, a non-marquee player, was triggered by the fan's repeated remarks about his deceased daughter.

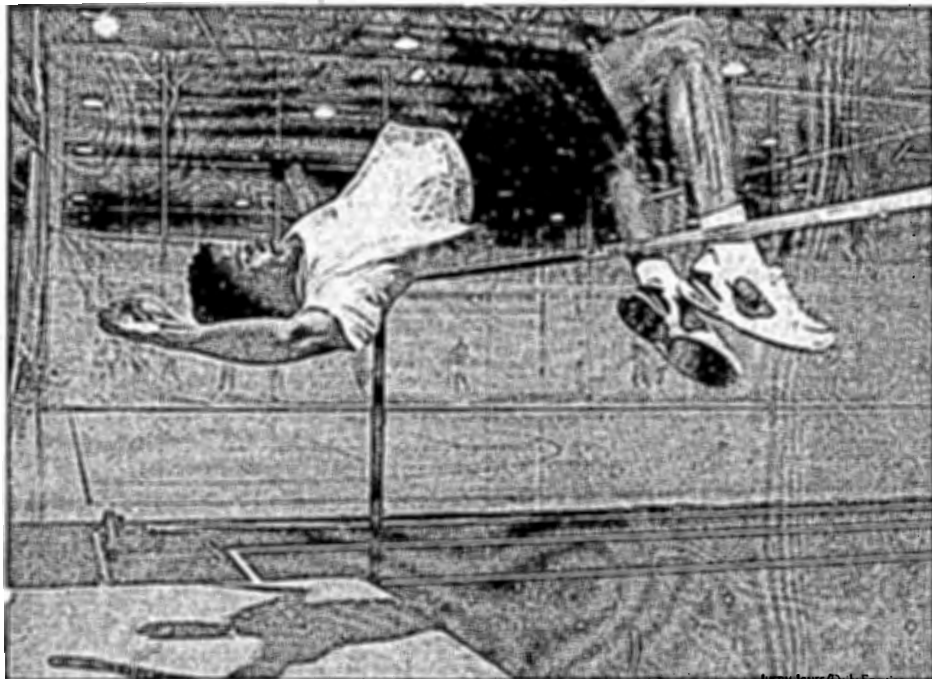

Now labeled "Mad Max," Maxwell is viewed as a negative figure in professional sports.

Is "Sir Charles" considered a role model because he's paid to wreak havoc on outspoken fans?

Even Michael Jordan has been involved in physical altercations, but no actions against him were taken. Jordan's run-in with teammate Steve Kerr in practice was portrayed in Sports Illustrated as "His Ainess" just showing his competitive drive. Tell that to Kerr and his bloody nose.

Does Jordan have that right because

LIFTOFF: Loren King, a freshman in zoology from Glen Ellyn, launches himself over the bar while practicing the high jump Monday. SIUC track teams suffer last-place finishes at Illinois State tournament

INJURY TO INSULT:

In addition to tournament, men's team loses top high jumper to torn Achilles tendon.

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIUC men's track and field team was bitten by the injury bug in a big way over the weekend, which only added to the disappointment of a last-place finish at the Illinois State University Early Bird Classic.

The Saluki women suffered disappointment as well, as the team finished third out of three teams as well.

The SIUC men lost its top high-jumper Neophytos Kalogerou for the season when the Cyprus native tore his Achilles tendon during a jump-off for first place against teammate Loren King. King finished first, while Kalogerou placed second. Both jumpers scored a jump of 6-10 to reach the tie-breaker.

The Salukis finished the meet with 44 points, trailing behind first place Illinois State, who had 62 points, and Indiana State University who finished with 56.

Men's coach Bill Cornell said the loss of Kalogerou will change the outlook for the season for some of his athletes.

"We have a big-point man gone already," Cornell said. "That's 10 points we lose every meet (for a first-place finish). We'll have to have some of our younger jumpers step up and come through for us."

In the field events of the competition, long jumper Brad Bowers placed first for the Salukis with a jump of 22 feet and 10 inches. Sam Rone earned first in the triple jump with a leap of 47' 4-1/2", while Bowers placed third (47' 7-1/4").

Ryan Lovelace placed second in the pole vault (14' 5-1/4"), and Mike Sandusky placed third in the shot put (48' 8-1/4") to round out a solid effort in the field events.

Cornell said the field events were a bright spot in the Salukis third-place finish.

"We did well in the field events, but we need help in the track events," Cornell said. "They've just got to get their heads together."

In the track events, the Salukis received a solid effort from Peter Forder in the 200-meter dash, with a time of 22.94 seconds, and Rone in the 55-meter dash (6.56).

Joseph Parks finished fourth in the 3,000-meter run (8:50.68), and Matt McClelland placed fourth in the mile with a personal record (4:18.59).

Cornell said the team has some areas where it needs to improve on over Christmas

Honolulu not so sunny for Salukis

INCONSISTENT: Dawgs fall to the University of Hawaii in final of Power Bar Invite.

RYAN KEITH
DE SPORTS EDITOR

The SIUC men's basketball team flirted with an upset Sunday night, but a familiar theme struck the players again in the second half.

The Salukis took a 43-42 lead over favored University of Hawaii with three minutes gone in the second half, but SIUC fell apart offensively as in its other three losses this season. The Rainbows went on a 33-12 run to take a 75-55 lead on the way to an 80-66 win over the Salukis in the championship of the Power Bar Invitational in Honolulu.

Hawaii moved to 4-0 on the year. SIUC fell to 2-4 on the season with the second-place finish. The loss marked the fourth time the Salukis have lost a second-half lead in their four losses.

Saluki men's basketball coach Rich Herrin said his team showed character in playing well for much of the game.

"They're (Hawaii) a good basketball team," Herrin said in his postgame radio show. "We may not be as consistent as I'd like to have for 40 minutes, but I feel very good about our basketball team. I feel better right now than I did before we started the basketball game."

SIUC did not allow a crowd of 8,013 to distract it in the first half. The Salukis, paced by a solid effort from forward Rashad Tucker, hung right with the Rainbows and matched every Hawaii run with a run of their own.

Hawaii took a 30-24 lead with five minutes remaining, but SIUC responded to tie the game at 30-30 on a three-pointer by guard Shane Hawkins. SIUC then tied the game at 38-38 at the end of the half on a reverse layup by Josh Cross.

"We had them tied at halftime, but we didn't play under control in the last half," Herrin said. "I believe in penetration, but you can't beat them totally on the dribble."

After taking a 43-42 lead on a three-pointer by Chris Thunell, the Salukis relived a firsthand account of disaster on the anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor. The Rainbows took advantage of SIUC's poor second-half shooting and several turnovers to blow open a close game and take a 75-55 lead with four minutes and seven seconds left.

Hawaii finished the game shooting 49 percent from the field and 61 percent from the free-throw line while committing 10 turnovers. SIUC shot 42 percent from the field and committed 16 turnovers. The Salukis
