HUD releases funds for downtown project

The last obstacle has been cleared to begin land purchasing for the proposed downtown Carbondale convention center and parking garage.

A $2.97 million Urban Development Action Grant was released Friday by the Department of Housing and Urban Development to help buy and clear the land for the project.

The UDAG funds will be added to the city's line of credit, from which it will be reimbursed for acquisition and clearing costs.

The grant was awarded to the city in December, 1978, but release of the funds was held up until financing for the project was secured.

The proposed 10-story, 211- room convention center would be built on the block bounded by Park, Illinois and University avenues, and West Street.

A 467-space parking garage is planned to be built facing Illinois Avenue between Walnut and Elm streets.

Revenue from the purchase land will be sent out early this week to property owners on the project site.

The sending of the purchase offers is the first in the city's policy on purchasing the land as stipulated in a "quick take" ordinance passed by the City Council in December.

The "quick take" ordinance would permit the city to take possession of land if it cannot agree with property owners on purchase price.

The ordinance would then leave the amount of payment to be decided in court while the city went ahead with clearing the land.

At the meeting, city Community Development Director Monty said that once the property owners receive the offers to purchase their land, they can seek clarification of the offer.

"You will not be faced with a situation where you will have no idea of what the appraiser," he said.

City administrators hope to begin demolition of the buildings by Labor Day.

The city will purchase the convention center site for developer Stan Leitner and Associates within one year.

Short-term loan fee may be increased

By Mike Antony

Staff Writer

Students will again be able to obtain applications for short-term loans from the Office of Student Work and Financial Assistance starting Monday, but they may soon see a change in service charge for the loans.

The office stopped giving out applications for short-term loans Jan. 21, according to Janie James, short-term loan officer. The office determines the amount of money to be loaned each month, based on the funds available.

The office gave out about $100,000 in short-term loans to 85 students in January, Bernard said.

But while many students may be happy about the resumption of short-term loan applications, Advisory Committee is considering an increase in the amount charged to students who borrow from the program, according to Joseph Camille, director of Student Work and Financial Assistance.

A service charge of about one percent is assessed now. "In my mind, the amount of service charge would be the start of a discussion with the FAAC," Camille said.

The FAAC will get opinions from the Advisory Committee and the Undergraduate Senate before they vote whether the charge should be increased, Camille said.

An increase is being considered because the short-term loan program has had a default rate of about 1.5 percent in fiscal years 1975-1981, Camille said. He said he thinks "the service charge should equal the default rate, because if it doesn't, you have one principle.

"While the default rate has increased in the last couple of years," Camille said, "the amount expected to be made available seems to be more than the amount we've collected on the service charge."

Welfare cuts could affect middle class

Editor’s Note: This is the final article in a five-part series by The Associated Press examining President Reagan’s “New Federalism” plan.

By Betty Anne Williams

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If President Reagan gets his way, not only the poor but America’s vast middle class will feel the effects of his proposed array of social welfare programs from the federal government to the states.

Included in Reagan’s "new federalism" are three main plans: 43 programs are school lunch, which will benefit many pupils from middle and upper-income families. Since the Reagan planning assistance is available regardless of income.

There are federal subsidies to help the elderly poor pay their heating bills, and programs for battered children, runaway teens and other troubled youngsters who come from affluent as well as needy families.

The programs are as old as the government’s maternal and child health programs, which began shortly after the Social Security system was established in 1935.

They are as new as the food stamp program, which was undertaken in October 1960. And they include many of the benefits of the Johnson administration’s anti-poverty programs.

Altogether, nearly 20 of the 43 programs slated for transfer to the states under the president’s plan, announced in the State of the Union speech last month, involve social, health and nutrition services. In addition, the federal government would take over the Medicaid health insurance program for the poor in exchange for full state control of food stamps and aid to Families with Dependent Children, the government’s biggest welfare program.

Beyond that, the Reagan plan includes several of his new block grants in the transfer package, and each block involves consolidation of other federal programs. Block grants allow the states to be governed by a single block of funds, which is administered by the states for services as they see fit.

The "turbo" block programs would be financed during the current fiscal year and for the following 10 years, starting in 1981 by a special, $32 billion fund made up of revenues from federal excise taxes and the so-called windfall oil tax.

At the end of 1981, the trust fund would expire and the states would either assume all financial responsibility for the former federal programs or abandon them.

Critics of the "new federalism" already are arguing that the states won’t be able to finance such programs equally on their own, or may be unwilling to continue some of them.

At an estimated $1.8 billion this fiscal year, child nutrition, which includes school lunches and breakfasts and several other types of meals for young people, is the biggest of the social welfare programs Reagan wants to transfer to the states.

Congress revised child nutrition eligibility standards at the administration’s request last year in an attempt to reduce the size of subsidies for middle-class youngsters.

The changes, for instance, that fewer children receive free lunches and that children receiving reduced-price lunches pay about twice as much as they had previously.

Another result is that the overall federal subsidy for school lunches, which holds down the cost of the program for all pupils, was reduced by about one-fifth from 23.2 cents per lunch to 15 cents per lunch.

Opponents of the program transfers plan are predicting that some localities will have to raise lunch and feeding programs without a continued federal subsidy.

Another feeding program the president wants shifted to the states is called WIC (Women, Infants and Children), which provides nutritional supplements for pregnant women, infants and small children. With an annual budget of about $559 million, WIC is expected to reach about 21 million people this year.

Although WIC is a relatively new program, established in WASHINGTON (AP) - Unwavered by the recession that upted his glowing forecasts of a year ago, President Reagan says he still expects robust economic recovery - just one year later than planned. But after one year of "Reaganomics," private economists are as skeptical as ever.

Reagan's budget for fiscal year 1983, released this weekend, calls for the biggest federal deficits in history during the same three years in which he now projects the nation will climb out of recession and head into recovery.

At this time last year, Reagan said overall U.S. economic growth would be slight in 1981 but would bounce back at a healthy 4.5 percent rate in 1982 after adjusting for inflation.

Now, Reagan says growth this year will be much less - just two-tenths of 1 percent. But once again, they are saying wait till next year. And least analysts agree that it will keep falling this year.

But last year, the president and his advisers said interest rates and unemployment also would be coming down. For the most part, they increased instead.

Reagan's new forecast says the jobless rate will not be in the highest in 40 years, averaging an 8.9 percent. But it says once again that interest rates will decline this year and will keep falling in 1983 as well.

Private economists tend to agree that the president's plan - coupled with continued tight control of the money supply by the Federal Reserve Board - make strong recovery only possible rather than probable and make the lasting recovery Reagan promises not very likely.

In fact, they say, the nation will be in the same inflationary recession by this time next year if things go really wrong.

"It's all based on interest rates," said Michael K. Evans, President of Evans Economics in Washington.

If that trend continues over a period of time, "you're cutting into the student you can loan, and that's not fair to the student," said Alan Zolg, the prog-xm or the donors who contribute," Camille said.

To help defray costs from defaulting on short-term loans, Camille said "the need to avert a crisis of priority of the Student Work and Financial Assistance office is to put short-term loan on the Bill Receivables System.

Student Loan statements are not included on students' monthly BRS statements.

Camille said that even though the Bursar's Office and the General Accounting Office have told him the problems are being worked out. "In the meantime - certainly within six months - short-term loan billing will be included on BRS statements or I'll be very disappointed."

It looks like it will still be a major recession.

Last year, President Reagan promised not to make matters worse with "tough medicine." But the president's critics charge that the president's plan does not do the job.

"You're cutting into the student you can loan, and that's not fair to the student," said Alan Zolg, the program manager or the donors who contribute, to the president.

Students will be waiting another six months for the problems to be worked out.

"The problems are being worked out," Camille said. "But in the meantime, the problems are being worked out. In the meantime, the problems are being worked out. In the meantime, the problems are being worked out. In the meantime, the problems are being worked out.

Even Evans said that "because there are approximately 25,000 short-term loan accounts, there are some technical accounting problems" that prevent short-term loan bills from being included on BRS statements.

Camille said the Bursar's Office and the General Accounting Office have told him the problems are being worked out. "In the meantime - certainly within six months - short-term loan billing will be included on BRS statements or I'll be very disappointed."

Evans said such rates could fall substantially next year, but the optimism bases that likelihood in a development that is far from certain. Fed Chairman Paul Volcker will find a way to be more accommodating in his money-supply control or Volcker will be out of a job, Evans said.

High interest rates, a major risk for the current recession, have been widely tied to the Fed's restrictive control of the nation's money supply - a policy backed at least in name by the Reagan administration.

And although rates fell last fall, they have been rising again recently.

Evans said such rates could fall substantially next year, but the optimism bases that likelihood in a development that is far from certain. Fed Chairman Paul Volcker will find a way to be more accommodating in his money-supply control or Volcker will be out of a job, Evans said.

Tight fiscal situation leaves programs scrambling for funds

By Bob Bonduerast
Staff Writer

Carbondale's tight fiscal situation has made a delicate job of deciding which agencies will get city funds.

At the City Council's meeting Monday a public hearing was scheduled on how the city's federal revenue sharing funds ought to be allocated in the next fiscal year.

The hearing is one of the steps the council must take in preparing the fiscal 1982-83 budget.

The public hearing is the deadline for requests for funds.

Funding requests totalling $73,675 had been received Friday. The Carbondale Public Library Board requested $4,500, the Council on Problems of the Aged $5,000, Hill House $6,000, the Carbondale Women's Center $10,000 and Synergy $17,317.

Last year, the council funded the Women's Center, Appalachia Community Services Board, Youth Services Bureau and Carbondale Senior Citizens for a total of $93,360.

The council last year rejected the recommendation of City Manager Carroll Fry that only the Senior Citizens Center be funded.

At last week's council meeting, Fry told the council that the city's financial position is "a mess" and that the city may have to sell short-term bonds to solve a cash flow problem.

City Council members disagreed at that meeting on whether the fund for outside agencies should be kept at the same level or lowered because of the city's money worries.

Representatives of Carl Walker and Associates, architects, will present preliminary plans and specifications of the proposed downtown parking garage.

Details of the $4.25 million, 407-space structure will be discussed.

The council will also discuss whether to oppose a 26.5 percent increase in utility rates requested by the Central Illinois Public Service Co.

The council will review a checklist submitted by the St. Louis developer, Leo Eisenberg, and Company, for a proposed shopping center on the west side of Carbondale.

Originally approved by the council in September, 1980, the shopping center plan included a Kroger store, a Supervalu drugstore and a K-Mart store, but has been scaled down.

up with the jail tour idea, hasn't declared a stance on the proposal for a new jail.

Mrs. Nelson said the new jailhouse would solve the space shortage problems, and that it's needed to satisfy state regulation on jail conditions that was passed in July of 1980 and must be met by Jan. 1, 1986.

"Cells will have to be designated as single-occupancy cells, and jails will have to provide 50 square feet of floor space per occupant," Mrs. Nelson said. "The present jail can't provide these. The new one could.

The present jail contains 16 cells and has an average daily occupancy of 30. Mrs. Nelson said the new jail would have 72 cells.

Six of the cells would be used for juveniles, satisfying a regulation that will call for jails to separate juveniles "in sight and sound" from adult offenders, she said. A "sight and sound" regulation will also apply to separation of male and female occupants, she said.

"The present jail can only partially satisfy these requirements," Mrs. Nelson said. She said that 1986 isn't that far away when you consider the amount of money needed to build a new jailhouse.

Richman, who led the tour through the second-floor courtrooms and offices, said he would rather see the county hold off on the new jailhouse and make plans to build another building about the same size as the present courthouse.

"The new jailhouse would be a waste of taxpayers' money," Richman said.

Reagan's plan incomplete; give defense to states, too

For some days now I have been pondering President Reagan's remarkable State of the Union Address. Especially that part in which he calls for the abolition of many of the functions of government that for years have been taking over from the states. In my view, it was a remarkable address and a remarkable moment. It was much more than just a State of the Union Address; it was also and even more important by its intention — a one-way war. It is also, and I am sure that there has been no understatement in it. It portrays a haunting sense in the president's call for the transfer of function to the states. I refer to the debate on the Right Association. The NRA would derive from this shift a validation for the yet unsubstantiated argument about the constitutional rights of the individual to bear arms — that is, hand guns, and now in Illinois, machine guns. Other significant arguments might accrue, which I really cannot go into for the state would have control of nuclear that is, and without the need of a single commander-in-chief, each governor could take on that responsibility for his state forces. But enough.

I am not sure what can be done about this problem, but for a starter citizens can write their representatives in the House and Senate suggesting that they work not just for the transfer of the federal function to the state list, but also for the very important purpose of having the state's representatives could be asked to urge the president himself to do that. The President's plans so as to eliminate this federal law. Erskine Hubi, Professor Emeritus, English.

ERA is only ticket to equality

I am writing in response to the columns by Vicki Olgyaty on Jan. 27. I don't think that anybody who is a woman does not have the protection accorded men by the Constitution. In fact, have to resort to the courts to obtain these rights. When successful, to gain rights men take for granted.

I was told by the Right to the Equal Rights Act, the Equal Pay Act and the Civil Rights Act, the Executive Order all have gone a long way to eliminate discrimination.

But did you know that the Civil Rights Act and the Equal Pay Act are laws that can be changed at the 110th Congress under the Executive Order, signed by one president, can be altered by any other president? Did you know that President Reagan is the first president since President Eisenhower who has not supported the ERA?

New federalism won't work; it goes against human nature

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S proposed flight back to federalism is so sound in principle that it seems a pity to venture a melancholy prediction: It won't get off the ground.

In order to pull off his bold plan, the president would have to persuade Congress to repeal scores of statutes and to rescind hundreds of rules and regulations. But provisions of the United States Code and the Federal Register are the soul of his problems. Reagan will have to persuade some of the laws of human nature, and these he will beyond the reach of parliamentary yea's and may be the president's idea, to be phased into operation over the next decade, have two main elements. The first calls for a 25 billion swap. The federal government would take over the entire cost of Medicaid, and the states would take over the entire cost of food stamp and Aid to Families with Dependent Children. The second element provides for the states 40 major grant-in-aid programs.

THE BIG DIFFICULTY lies in the backburner. Reagan would create a Federalism Trust Fund of roughly 25 billion a year. The fund would be financed by revenues from existing federal taxes on tobacco, alcohol, taxes, plus 5 cents of the gasoline tax and a portion of the tax on windfall profits oil and coal companies. In 10 years the fund would go out of existence, and it would then be up to the states if they wanted to continue the programs — to impose these same taxes or equivalent taxes on their own.

There's the rub. For the past 20 or 30 years, as a general proposition, the states have had all the pleasure of spending the money without the pain of raising it. Human nature dearly loves a free lunch. Human nature has a way of saying "Let George do it."

Only an incorrigible optimist can envision the states rising to meet the prospective responsibilities.

Yet when that has been said, it remains to be said that the president's plan is fundamentally sound. He calls for a return to the states their heritage, but in fact he echoes the closest political traditions of our republic. The Constitution of 1787 envisioned a national government with federal powers but not unlimited ones. The Bill of Rights, the Bill of the Constitution in the 10th Amendment, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."

body tower and Franki Valli-type falsetto as he accompanied himself alternately on acoustic piano. Ovation 12-string acoustic guitar and an electric Gibson SG painted in '60s Jimi Hendrix psychedelic.

The sound lacked the hater of Pomp and circumstance-produced albums, with their lush instrumental and choirlike vocals. But Rundgren managed to make the sparser up to.

His video creations showed up in interludes, projected onto two screen above the stage.

One featured prismatic three-dimensional images and unadulterated brocades of color, to lasso Torn's 'synthesizer' interpretation of two compositions by French composer Claude Debussy.

More interesting was a production released last year to promote his latest album, "Healing." Here. Rundgren painted "Time Heals" from inside reproductions of time-oriented pictures. Rundgren and Rene Magritte.

Rundgren tinkled the show liberally with humor, ticking the audience with jokes about sex, war and changes on the last point, he commented on how his albums are received: "God, this album sucks. It's nowhere near as good as the last one!")

The audience warmed to the dialogue, and some more avid fans offered banners and roses up to the stage.

A more active Rundgren took over the second half of the show, shaking instruments in favor of capping around the stagefront. He delivered a spirited 60's medley and crowned another favorite, "The Light In Your Eyes," with elaborating gesturing of big, bony hands.

Three encore ended the first show at about 9:30. The second got under way about 10:30. During the interval, Rundgren tried to relax. While activity rumbled around him, he reclined in his dressing room, his eyes glued to a postcard-sized TV screen.

He did look up long enough to scrub the red-lined eyes in an attempt to erase the effects of bright lights, to adjust his striped socks (the only element of color in his all-black attire), to run a hand through his red-tinted hair, and to lose out some ideas.

The 22-year-old musician was vague about projects underway at Utopia Video, his $2-million studio near Woodstock, N.Y. (although it was mentioned that Utopia's new album, "Loving to the Right," will be out in two weeks). But he had some definite ideas about music and where he fits in.

Although optimistic about the future of the video industry, he does not sing praises of the videocassette. "One can use it to promote his latest album, an interpretation of Gustav Hauri's "The Planets.""

Today, cable, coupled with home videocassette recorders, packs a roister video future, he believes. "You can get what you want immediately, it's cheaper, there's a greater diversity of programming ..." Videocassettes seem to offer too many times do you want to watch the same thing?"

And, although a fan of technical gadgetry, Rundgren feels guitar synthesizers, called the instrument of the future by some musicians, aren't for him.

"I've dabbled with them, but I don't take them seriously," he says, citing reluctance to change to accommodate the synthesizer's interface between musician and audience. "It's possible that someday they will make a synthesizer that doesn't require an alteration in technique," he says. Until then he is content to limit himself to more conventional equipment.

As for music, "It's been going through a steady sort of curve - I see less and less relevance ... the world has seen musical minimalism, he says, in disco ("The music is less important than the bass drum.")"

And like a dot off the "curve," he observes such phenomena as punk rock: "Fashion is the entire trend; style is considered more important than content. They're style-oriented; I'm content-oriented."

His own music, however, he refuses to compartmentalize: "My music talks about the things that I think about. Mostly, it has to do with struggling to be an individual."

Clinics designed to help students improve their resumes and interviewing skills are set for Monday through Thursday. A resume clinic open to all students will be held Monday at 8 p.m. in room 1298 of the Communications Building. The clinic will explain how to better improve resumes and cover letters, and show students how to locate prospective employers. More interview sessions are planned for Wednesday at 7 p.m. and Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

P.D.Q. Bach brings parody to Shrock

The local music scene may never be the same after Professor Peter Schickele brings his irreverent and hilarious musical spoof, "The Inanimate P.D.Q. Bach" to Shrock Auditorium's Celebrity Series Feb. 10.

Professor Schickele presents to audiences the music of the heretofore undiscovered (for reasons which will be made clear) son of the great Johann Sebastian Bach, proving that "like father, like son" is not necessarily true.

The Society for Bionica Antiqua will accompany Schickele in such melodies of serious music as "Goldbrick Variations," "Abacucantia" and "Twelve Guitars Unguitarian Songs" (based on signs of the zodiac). Schickele first presented "history's most justifiably neglected composer" in 1963. In addition to the live performances, Schickele has created a whole world around the hapless P.D.Q. — eight recordings, more than 50 published compositions, a book and numerous solo dates with symphony orchestras.

Great satire must be supported by an in-depth knowledge of what it's lampooning, and Schickele's musical credentials are many. He's a graduate of Juilliard and a writer of chamber music and cabaret songs.

Tickets are $10.50, $9.50 and $8.50 and are available at the Sycamore Auditorium Box Office from 11:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays. Mail and credit card phone orders are also accepted daily from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.

1972, the federal government's interest in ensuring adequate nutrition for young adults predates World War II.

The president wants to turn over Low Income Energy Assistance to the states. This new program served 1 million households last year, mostly the elderly poor. About $1.5 billion has been allotted for the program this winter.

The president's "new federalism" proposal is arousing vocal opposition from constituencies that had fought successfully either to have their programs excluded from the first round of Reagan's block grants or to prevent their outright abandonment.

FAMILY PLANNING, a program that served nearly 3.3 million people last year, would have been included in a block grant where states could continue if they wished, under the president's plan.

The Legal Services Corp., a semi-autonomous organization operating for the benefit of about 20 million poor people, would have been eliminated. The corporation was forced to absorb a 25 percent budget cut and has survived with a $231 million budget and a lawyer-client ratio of two per 10,000.

Several of the president's block grants also would be transferred to the states with even fewer strings attached. They include the $2.4 billion social services block grant, the $2.8 billion community services block grant, the $81.5 million prevention block grant, the $432.1 million alcohol, drug abuse and mental health block grant and the $10 billion maternal and child health block grant.

FAMILY PLANNING assistance also is in a block grant.

Redbird air raid stuns Saluki matmen

by Steve Metzck
Sports Editor

The Redbirds of Illinois State scored a four-point victory over the Salukis in the Arena Friday afternoon. The Redbird line-up swept the Salukis in all three periods and decisively beat them, 36-9. Jerry Richards, Speedra Laufman, and Dick Snyder of the SHU-C, wrestlers, who compiled a 15-7 record for the season, were the only Salukis able to muster points against the impressive Redbird line-up.

Richards bullied Illinois' John Corn to the floor for a three point advantage in the 118-pound division. Both wrestlers were awarded two-point ties.

Saluki Coach Lion Long said Richards' win was "selective" against Rosenthal. "We hoped Jerry would be able to slip by him, but the opportunity never came," Long said.

Dick Snyder won 31's 3rd consecutive bout with a four-point major decision over Redbird John Long. The junior scored four takedowns on his way to a 15-3 decision in the 132-pound weight class. The St. Louis native is now 16-3 and has lost since mid-December.

Long, who said earlier this season that Dick Snyder's only chance to drop down to 138 pounds if he wanted to qualify for the NCAA national meet, admitted that Dillick has enjoyed some success at 142 pounds and probably won't have to drop any points.

"It's a real dog," Long said. "But if we try to have him be more explosive and continue when he meets some class opponents, I think he'd be pretty good at 142, not just size and strength offset them a little." Snyder won the most exciting bout of the meet by scoring a two-point takedown over Redbird Jerry Rich with only five seconds left in the third period of the heavyweight bout. Soica had trailed 3-1 going into the final period.

"I thought Dale nicely handled a tough situation," Long said.

Unfortunately for SHU-C, 10 weight classes were scored in NCAA competition and the Redbirds captured the seven remaining classes.

Saluki Don Caudle lost a five-point superiority decision to Illinois State's Joe Long in 110-pound competition. The Redbird scored three takedowns and three near falls over Caudle.

Junior Keith Abbey ran into a buzzsaw named Paul Grenier, dropping a five-point superiority decision. Abbey was able to score only two points, for a near fall early in the third period, as the Redbird took the 134-pound bout, 18-2.

S-U-C's Jeff Snyder lost a contact loss during his 150-pound bout with Matt Hedstrom. Sanders found the loss, but wasn't able to find a victory, as Hedstrom, brother of SHU-C's Mark Hedstrom, outscored him the final period and won a three-point decision.

On Tuesday, Hedstrom had a quick day's work in his last against Redbird Pat Carney in the 106-pound division. Carney beat the Saluki with a fall at the 1:36 mark of the first period.

Senior Dave Shea, brother of Dale, competed for the first time as a Saluki and, like Kern, lost by a fall. Redbird Neil Weiner dropped him 4:06 into the 195-pound bout. Illinois State's Greg Johnson scored a four-point major decision over Saluki Ted Berman, with the bull runse was able to score just two reversals in his 14-4 loss.

Mark Hedstrom and Redbird Scott Gordon in the first battle in 195-pound competition, but Berman lost to win a three-point decision. The Salukis will close out their season with a dual against Southwest Missouri State on 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Arena.

Illinois State overpowers men cagers

“The defensive tackles beat the offensive backs.” Saluki Coach Alvin Van Winkle said after SIU-C suffered a 85-47 loss at Illinois State on Saturday.

Wait a minute. The football season ended about three months ago, didn’t it? Apparently not. The men’s basketball team, minus point guard John Kellel, took it on the road Saturday afternoon at SIU’s Horton Fieldhouse in a Missouri Valley Conference game that might encourage conference basketball coaches to start recruiting from the following team.

Illinois State’s 6-8 center Rick Lamb, 6-0 forward Matt Zwart, and 6-7 forward Hank Corley spelled the major part of their afternoon overpowering the smaller Saluki frontcourt of Charles Nance, Darnell Jones, and Ken Byrd.

“We were 6-5 forward Jones who had the not-so-pleasant task of guarding Lamb, the leading scorer in the MVC. Lamb, however, was more intimidating than he simulated as he scored 13 points and led both teams with 10 rebounds.

On offense, 6-4 center Charles Nance had the task of trying to score against Lamb and his frontline cohorts Zwart and Corley. Nance, who was able to score 12 points and pull down seven rebounds, was not alone in trying to crack the tenacious Redbird defense that seemed at times more physical than state, according to Van Winkle.

Byrd, 6-3 forward, was held to four points while Jones could muster only two points on the afternoon.

“I don’t know how any two people (Lamb and Zwart) can do the damage that was done on Nance and I don’t believe he went free from a call on the floor,” Van Winkle said.

Although the rest of the game, the SIU-C bench did do a good job. Lamb and Zwart picked up their fouls and were benched for six minutes by Coach Bob Dowsell.

SIU-C, which did not once take the lead in the game, ended up with four points at 42-38 after a Illinois-Copeal breakaway.

Donnell then called a timeout and put Lamb and Zwart back into the game with 1.1 seconds left on the clock. SIU-C’s last effort was rafined by Van Winkle.

Salukis clip Redbirds in basketball opener, 8-1

The men’s tennis team didn’t exactly shut out its first competition with SIU-C’s Lady Salukis.

The salukis were led in scores by a 9-1 victory against Missouri Valley Conference rival Illinois State in Tuesday and came away with an 8-1 win after the six-member squad matched all its doubles matches and five of the six singles matches. Illinois State, which hold its season with wins over Missouri and Bradley, expected no less with the Salukis but came away disappointed, according to Scott’s Saluki Coach Dick LeFevre.

They expected to beat this weekend, LeFevre said, Everybody played pretty well and the Illinois State is our Conference, this win is going to help us in the long run when it comes to the double championships.

Salukis playing in the No. 1 spot for SIU-C, defeated the Redbirds’ No. 1 player Darrell Smith in two sets, 6-3, 6-4. Smith is rated as one of the top 20 players in the Midwest region of the NCAA.

The No. 2 player, Salukis’ Lito Armpen, was the only Saluki to finish the day without a win.
