Psychic aids search team

By John Mohler
Shriver

After attempts using helicopters, divers and drag lines failed, searchers have turned to a psychic for help in locating a University student missing in the Big Muddy River since Jan. 23.

"At this point we've run out of everything," Kendall Gledo, Murphysboro assistant police chief, said. "It's a real needle-in-a-haystack situation."

The psychic contacted Murphysboro police last week from her residence near Peoria to assist in searching for Ricki Johnson, freshman in forestry. Police said Johnson's parents hired the psychic, whose identity was not revealed.

The psychic described various river sites to phone over the telephone and suggested areas, Gledo said.

"We feel her landmarks were accurate changes in the river, that type of thing," Gledo said.

"As to whether we believe in psychics or not, that's up to everyone's own appeal," Poindexter said. "We'll try anything we can."

The two-week search has been complicated by bad weather, rising and falling water levels and river debris. The searchers believe Johnson's body has not floated south of the Murphysboro area.

Johnson has been missing since a University-owned canoe capsized on the Big Muddy River between Route 13 and old Route 13 in Murphysboro.

Simon faces test in Iowa caucuses

By Dana DeBeaumont
Staff Writer

Sen. Paul Simon's legitimacy as a candidate for the presidential Democratic nomination will be tested today in the Iowa caucuses, Simon supporters say.

"The Iowa caucuses are the most complicated, challenging and very determining," Barbara Brown, an Illinois delegate candidate and professor of political science, said. "Really die-hard supporters go to meetings and fight out who the delegates will be. It takes the entire evening to get the delegates through the caucuses."

John Jackson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, said each precinct has a separate meeting for Democrats and Republicans where voters debate and make speeches about the candidates.

"A primary is just like an election before an election, but a caucus starts at the precincts and consists of separate meetings for all Democrats and Republicans that are interested in going," he said.

Brown added that very few voters attend the caucuses because it's a drawn out process. "People have to really feel strongly about a candidate to go to a caucus," Brown said.

At the caucuses, voters divide into groups for the candidate they support. Each group holds a meeting.

Death toll in occupied territories rises to 47

BEIT UMMAR, Israeli-occupied West Bank (UPI) - Israeli troops Sunday shot and killed three Palestinians, and a 15-year-old boy allegedly beat a Palestinian of the worst day of violence since late December.

A 19-year-old boy hit by shrapnel last week, died Saturday night, the army reported Sunday. The five deaths brought to at least 47 the number of Palestinians killed since anti-Israel violence began Dec. 9.

An army spokesman said an Arab woman, originally reported killed Saturday night by army gunfire, was killed by a "light object" hurled from a protester's sling-shot in the Arab-run Palestine Press Service said at least 26 West Bank residents were wounded by gunfire Sunday. The army said it had reports of three people wounded by gunfire in addition to the three Palestinians killed.

It was the worst day of violence in the occupied territories since five protesters were fatally shot by soldiers and 11 were wounded Dec. 22. The Israeli military kept the exact number of people in the West Bank confined to their homes. No curfews were reported on the Gaza Strip.

"This is the worst day I have witnessed in my near stay in this hospital and colleagues who have been here longer say it is the worst in 20 years," Dr. Hani Abdeen of Muqassed Hospital in Jerusalem said.

Abdeen said at least 27 wounded people were admitted Sunday to Muqassed Hospital, including 13 with "quite serious" gunshot wounds and 11 who died or were severely beaten.

In addition, Rami Alkug, 15, of the Deir el-balsh refugee camp in the Gaza Strip, died at Muqassed Hospital of a brain hemorrhage about 30 minutes after he was transferred from a Gaza Strip hospital, Abdeen said.

The boy's father told doctors his son was beaten by soldiers Saturday, Abdeen said, adding the victim's injuries were "consistent with a beating."

Alkug was believed to be the first beating fatality since Israel announced the army would use physical force, including beatings, to quell disturbances in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, seized from Jordan and Egypt during the 1967 Six-Day War.

An army spokesman denied the youth was beaten by

Panamanian general implicates Poindexter

NEW YORK (UPI) - Panamanian strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, indicted on U.S. charges that he sold his country to drug smugglers, said Sunday in a television interview that he met with U.S. officials in 1986 to discuss plans to, an invasion of Nicaragua.

A Noriega aide also interviewed on the CBS "60 Minutes" program said national security adviser John Poindexter urged Noriega at the December 1986 meeting to find a pretext to invade Nicaragua in the United States could join Panamanian forces in the assault.

"They were going to hit Nicaragua," Noriega said "60 Minutes" through a translator during an interview in Panama City. "They were going to invade Nicaragua, and the only reason they hadn't done it was because Panama was in the way, and that all the President wanted was Panama to get out of the way and allow them to continue with their plan."

Cpt. Moises Cortizo, a Panamanian military officer and 1966 West Point graduate who Noriega said was at the Poindexter meeting, said Poindexter wanted Panamanian forces to attack Nicaragua first, followed by U.S. troops.

"They wanted Panama forces to go in with American forces, but we'd go in first," Cortizo told "60 Minutes" through the translator. "Then we'd get support from the Americans. That's what we'd be taking part in the invasion."

PLO rejects U.S. peace proposals in Israel
ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (UPI) - The Palestine Liberation Organization Sunday rejected current U.S. peace moves in the Middle East as "agreements arrived at by Washington to abort a 2-month-old uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories. A PLO executive committee statement said the violent protests against 20 years of Israeli rule would continue until Palestinian rights for self-determination and statehood are recognized."

PORT-APRUI-PRINCE, Haiti (UPI) - Leslie Manigat was inaugurated Sunday as Haiti's first elected president in 30 years and said his victory in army-run elections - condemned by many as rigged - ensured "the chances of a true democracy" in the impoverished Caribbean nation. NEW YORK (UPI) - Police arrested 23 gay Catholics kneeling outside St. Patrick's Cathedral Sunday following an outdoor mass as an alternative to standing inside as a gesture recently banned by court order. Police later arrested 23 of the gay worshippers for disorderly conduct.

FISICAWAY, N.J. (UPI) - Despite warnings from veteran radical Abbie Hoffman, students at a nationwide gathering of campuses leftists face a potentially difficult clash in Washington over the issue of regional versus national leadership. The students, representing more than 100 campuses nationwide, said that they appeared to have agreed on liberal consensus on a range of political and social issues during their conference at Rutgers University, but the real of the delegates said organizational problems cited by Hoffman and others as running groups in the late 1960s and early 1970s already appear to be plaguing them.

Iowans Prepare to Pass Judgment

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI) — Iowa voters prepared on Sunday to pass the first real judgment of the 1988 presidential campaign amid a new round of bickering between George Bush and Bob Dole and a muckraker-than-ever Democratic race.

When an estimated 250,000 Iowa voters turned out at 7 p.m. Monday night for both parties' 2,487 precinct caucuses, the farm state and the television caucuses, long lineups were evident in the dark. Bush voters were prepared to make their case for the incumbent, while Dole and the other Democrats were seeking a new round of bickering.

Four of the seven Democrats seeking a share of the 97 national convention delegates will attend a pancake breakfast on Monday night to write their names on the certificates, the Iowa caucuses, and make their case for the vice presidency.

Election candidates were stumping the breadth of this farm state and the television caucuses,饱和了了-Iowans living in the 11 weeks before the caucuses.

Bush eager to answer questions about the Iran-Contra affair by network television interview, attempting to mute the impression left from his combative interview with CBS anchorman Dan Rather two weeks ago that he was avoiding the subject.

Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, who has spent more time campaigning here during the past two years — 144 days — than any other candidate, led the seven-man Democratic field, but there were indications he was in decline. Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois was on the ascendency.

The Iowa Poll published by The Des Moines Register Sunday showed Dole with 37 percent support among likely Republican caucus attendees to 23 percent for Bush and 13 percent for former television evangelist Pat Robertson. Among a smaller group of voters who said they definitely would attend, Robertson was virtually even with the vice president.

The leading candidates tried to keep expectations low, knowing the army of journalists that has invaded this state of 2.8 million people are virtually unanimous in public opinion polls over Bush, the vice president running on the Reagan administration's record. The two men have been conducting a bitter personal feud that continued during the campaign, with Bush charging that Robertson was virtually even with the vice president.

A University student was injured after he was hit by a car driven by another student at East Freeman and South Logan streets Sunday morning.

John Buckiewicz, of 105 Allen St. (Hall), was taken to Memorial Hospital of Carbonale and later to St. Louis University Hospital after the 12:41 a.m. accident.

According to a St. Louis University Hospital representative, Buckiewicz is listed in critical condition. Neither hospital would disclose the extent of Buckiewicz's injuries.

Peter C. Elvert, of 520 E. Walnut, was driving east on East Freeman when he hit Buckiewicz in the South Logan intersection, Carbonale police said.

Police said Buckiewicz stepped in front of the car. Tire marks were found at the scene of the accident on the westbound lane of East Freeman at least 10 yards west of the South Logan intersection.

The tire marks stranded the curb 15 feet before the intersection and at the corner. Large blood stains were found at the intersection, with traces of blood found at least 50 feet west of the intersection.

Carbondale police declined to give out further information pending an investigation.

Planning needed for transit system

THE PROPOSED CITYWIDE transit system could be the best thing to happen to SIU-C students in years, if it is well thought out.

The system would provide off-campus students with inexpensive transportation to and from campus and around town, which also would ease the parking shortage. It would be worth the proposed $15 fee per semester to have such a service. But the system will be useless if it is not properly planned to correspond to students' needs.

The mass transit committee, which is in charge of researching students' attitudes toward the plan, must be very careful in surveying where students live, where they want to go and at what times buses are needed.

IN ORDER TO accurately gauge these factors, more research must be done than a simple telephone survey, which is the committee's present plan. A professional feasibility study should be conducted. It would be a terrible shame if a mass transit system failed because of poor planning.

The committee, which is part of the Student Welfare Commission, should seek input from the city and from local merchants in developing the system. Merchants, particularly those located further than walking distance from campus, such as in the University Mall, stand to gain if their businesses become more readily accessible to students. They should recognize this and be willing to cooperate with the committee in researching the plan and in developing a feasible proposal to present to the Board of Trustees.

THE CITY ALSO stands to gain from the system in that it would ease the city's traffic flow and encourage students to frequent developing business districts, such as the area east of town surrounding the University Mall.

By the same token, the system would put additional pressure on the city and its merchants to improve Carbondale's downtown area. Many students are forced to shop downtown because they lack transportation. But if they were given convenient access to other parts of town, the merchants on and around South Illinois Avenue would be forced to become more competitive.

This added pressure on the downtown area may be a blessing in disguise in that it may force the city and its businesses to stop the decay of the downtown district. Any pressure to reverse this decay would be positive.

The University, the city and local merchants must work together to develop a bus system that could be a great boon to Carbondale and SIU-C.

WASHINGTON (UPI) -- Presidents are supposed to be more powerful than governors, but when he moved into the White House Ronald Reagan had the "item veto" -- an authority to reject specific items of spending within larger appropriations bills. This power exists in different forms in 43 states, but it is denied to the president of the United States.

The purpose of the item veto is to give chief executives a way to keep legislatures from loading down money bills with "pork barrel" spending proposals.

A governor with the item veto can strike out individual items from a big appropriations bill. But a president, without it, can only veto an entire bill when it has only a few items he does not like.

Reagan had this choice when Congress sent him a massive spending bill. The president vetoed $35 billion in spending programs opposed by the president just before Christmas last year.

Doonesbury

By Garry Trudeau

News Analysis

Had he vetoed the bill, it would have cut off federal funding for the entire federal government, a situation members of Congress felt he would not dare invoke.

Reagan has asked for line item veto authority in nearly every State of the Union address. But Congress, faced with huge deficits, has not complied.

The simple fact is that Congress will not give up the power to wrap legislation into a single bill that the president will in the White House, did not move to oblige the president.

But now comes Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., with word that he thinks the Constitution already provides a partial item veto. Campaigning for the Republican nomination in Nashua, N.H., Dole cited Article 1, Section 7, Clause 3 of the Constitution that empowers the president to veto any "unexpended and unobligated" funds approved by the House and Senate.

As Dole sees it, that may mean a president may veto a section of a spending bill that was added by an amendment to another appropriation bill, approved by both houses of Congress.

Dole certainly would not cover every item a president thinks shouldn't be voted on, but it might knock a few ornaments off some of the appropriations bills that would otherwise pass.

In any case, Dole said if he wins the presidency, "I want every member to know I mean business. And if it means testing the use of this section of the Constitution when in yet a bill laden with fat. I will do it. Then, we'll let the courts decide."

Actually, it might not be necessary to wait for Dole to move into the White House. Reagan still has most of a year remaining on his term, and it ought to be possible between now and next Jan. 20 to find a bill on which he could test the system.

Then it would be interesting to watch the reaction of the legislators in Washington, D.C., especially the leader of the Senate, Mr. Dole of Kansas.

Atheism makes no sense

Where is your logic? Are you really open-minded?

If you would not believe that Jesus is the son of God, then would you believe that Jesus was just another common man like Shakespeare was another common man?

If you would not believe that the Bible is the word of God, then why would you believe that the Bible is just another book (like "The Origin of Species") is just another common book?

If you would feel comfortable when someone was mocking Shakespeare or using quotations from "The Origin of Species," then why would you be so troubled when you heard the name of Jesus or quotations from the Bible?

If you would not believe that there is a God, then why should you try to oppose him? How can you fight against something that is non-existent in your mind?

If you would not believe that the word of God has power, then why should you be afraid that someone will be converted?

Would it be possible that deep in your heart you know that God's invisible qualities, both his eternal power and his divine nature have been clearly seen on earth, but you just don't want to recognize his presence? — Pan H. Kung, professor of forestry.
Bush, Dole can't stop feud

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI) — Vice President George Bush and the Republican leader Robert Dole tried to put their heat behind them Sunday but kept it away from each other on the eve of the Iowa presidential caucuses.

"As far as I'm concerned it (the campaign) is over," Dole said on NBC's "Meet the Press." He then raised questions about the vice president's staff and Bush's role in the Panama scheme.

"I don't like change and counterchange," Bush told ABC's "This Week" host David Brinkley. "Let's talk about something else." Babbitt and Mexico were Mr. Poindexter's acting against Nicaragua, according to the army report.

But when asked if he would apologize to Dole, Bush said "I was wrong accused the Dole campaign of running negative campaigns against him in New Hampshire.

The appearance on national television of the two leaders in the polls kicked off the next-to-last day of Iowa's caucuses, which will be the first stop in selecting 37 delegates to the Republican National Convention in August.

A Des Moines Register poll published Sunday showed Dole leading the race with 37 percent, followed by 33 percent, with 13 percent, in a virtual tie with Bush among Iowans who said they definitely planned to attend a caucus Monday night.

In his television appearance, Dole and Iowa voters wanted him and Bush to talk about the issues. "If you can find something wrong with my record, or he can, let's talk about it," Dole said.

But the five-day feud kept coming with the role a former Dole aide David Owen in getting an unsecured loan from the Small Business Administration.

"Once I found about it, Dave Owen was gone," Dole said and then took a swipe at Bush's staff. "There have been a lot of revelations about Don Gregg but he's still on George Bush's staff."

"There is a chief is adviser to Bush and, because of his close relationship with the Contra rebels, he has become a crucial player in the overthrow of Bush's role or the influence of the Iran-Contra affair.

Dole said Democrats are running their trucks with the planets saying 'we hope it's going to be George Bush' because of the Iran-Contra Thing. That's out there. It's on the table. The Democrats are not going to forget it.

Bush in his appearance regretted that he believed the United States was dealing with "a desperate modern who might help free American hostages being held in Lebanon."

He also said still could not recall whether he was at a key Jan. 7, 1986, White House meeting.

Most of Sunday violence occurred in small West Bank villages near the neighborhoods of Jerusalem. The area is known as Best Unna, 15 miles south of Jerusalem, where dozens of villagers, encouraged by instructions read over a mosque's loudspeakers, blocked the Hellen-Jerusalem road, state-run Israeli Radio and the army reported.

After the violence, Palestinian violence occurred in small West Bank villages. The army said four Palestinians were killed and ten wounded.

Israeli troops, including tanks, were in the area of the small Palestinian village of Hadeh, west of Jerusalem, to enforce a curfew.

Tensions between Arabs and Jews from the West Bank have been running high following several rock and Molotov cocktail attacks on Jewish-owned cars.

In Hebron, dozens of Arab cars were vandalized Saturday night. As anonymous caller told Israel Radio the damage was done by Jewish settlers.

If a group doesn't have at least 15 percent of the delegates present, the group is broken up and the delegates can either go home or join another candidate's group. Jackson said.

In a Des Moines Register poll, published Sunday, the participants released Saturday, Richard Dole would be back with 35 percent, Simon followed with 19 percent, Bush with 15 percent. Bruce Babbitt and Jesse Jackson would be 11 percent each, followed by Gary Hart with 7 percent and Albert Gore Jr. with 5 percent.

But, the poll revealed that 15 percent of likely caucus delegates were undecided.

Headaches differ in causes, remedies, professor says

By Edward Rehe
Staff Writer

It's late at night. You've been up for hours studying for an exam you must pass. Then it hits you, that unmistakable throbbing headache brought on by stress.

Before you reach for a bottle of aspirin, consider what Roger Poppen, associate professor at the University's Behavior Analysis Therapy Program, has to say about headaches.

Poppen recently spent his sabbatical leave at the Center for Stress and Anxiety Disorders at the State University of New York at Albany assisting in an ongoing study of 100 headache sufferers.

"HEADACHES ARE a generally accepted phenomenon," said Poppen. According to a recent survey of college students, 14 percent of all people and 28 percent of all women reported having at least one headache over a one-week period.

The patients in Poppen's study were mostly those for whom drug treatment was ineffective.

"The levels of medicine people take for a headache is amazing," Poppen said. "For some, drugs are ineffective."

One study estimated that Americans spend an average of $500 a year on headache remedies.

POPPEN SAID, "I.T. ads suggest a very lucrative headache business."

In order to determine the best treatment for headaches, patients at the Center for Stress and Anxiety Disorders are thoroughly analyzed to determine what stress factors cause the headache. After a complete analysis, patients suffering from tension headaches are taught methods of relaxation training.

The training teaches people to tense and relax muscles in 16 zones of the body and to differentiate between the feelings of tense and relaxed muscles. Stress management and coping strategies also are taught.

Migraine sufferers are treated through relaxation techniques and a method of biofeedback therapy which teaches patients how to control body temperature in order to prevent migraines.

HEADACHES CAN be categorized into four main types, ranging in source from brain tumor to eyestrain, Poppen said.

Migraine headaches, usually hereditary, are caused when blood vessels in the brain constrict. A lack of oxygen in the brain causes the head to jump, Poppen said.

Migraine headaches commonly occur in hyperactive people. Such people often suffer from chronic migraines and need to learn to relax, Poppen said.

A person who suffers from classic migraines may experience a series of symptoms before the onset of the head pain. These symptoms include gastrointestinal pain, visual sensitivity to light, nausea and in some cases, paralysis.

COMMON MIGRAINE sufferers usually don't experience symptoms prior to the onset of the headache, Poppen said.

In a very small number of people, migraines can be caused by foods like cheese, red wine and chocolate. These foods contain a chemical, tyramine, that is shown to cause migraine headaches.

In fact, one of the cluster headaches is the rarest type of migraine and the most debilitating. Cluster headaches are characterized by extreme head pain, which lasts about an hour. The pain can occur daily for several weeks or months and then disappear for several months.

THE SECOND category of headaches is the more common tension headache caused by an imbalance in physical systems brought on by the muscles in the head, neck and shoulders becoming tense and causing a dull throb in the head.

The third category includes mixed headaches, a combination of migraine and tension headaches.

In the fourth category, psychogenic headaches, are suffered by people who cannot be categorized as suffering from either a migraine or tension headache. Most often psychogenic headaches are a result of the patient's psychiatric delusions, Poppen said.

Blood drive surpasses pint goal

The three-day blood drive netted 925 pints of blood, 14 pints more than the goal, Vivian Ugent, Southern Illinois University Red Cross coordinator, said.

More than 1,100 people volunteered to give blood, but 72 were ineligible, Ugent said.

Sixty-five of the donors were first-time givers. "The overwhelming majority of the donors were students," Ugent said. "That speaks very well of the support we get from the University."

The next campus blood drive is scheduled for April 4 and will be a week-long effort, Ugent said. Those interested in volunteering at the drive should contact Ugent at 457-580 or Mary Jo Hall at the Office of Student Development, 683-5714.

Lennon’s murderer inspired to kill by novel

LONDON (UPI) — Mark David Chapman says his murder of ex-Beatle John Lennon was inspired by the novel “Catcher in the Rye,” and the violent death of the rock superstar drove “the last nail in the coffin of the ’60s,” a television documentary reported last week.

The documentary, a joint British-American production, features actual tapes in which Chapman, 33, recounts to police and psychiatrists why he killed Lennon as Lennon left his luxury Manhattan apartment on Dec. 8, 1980. The documentary, “The Catcher in the Rye,” was scheduled for its premiere Feb. 2 in Britain.

The documentary offers a chilling view into the confused world of the one-time drug and rock fan, who also was once a YAGA camp leader. It also details his fascination with the novel, “The Catcher in the Rye,” J.D. Salinger’s best-selling novel about an adolescent who rejected the hypocrisy of the adult world in favor of the innocence of childhood.

Chapman, who pleaded guilty to murder and is serving 20 years to life in New York state’s high security Attica prison, said he drew inspiration from the Salinger novel, which Chapman described as a “crusade against phony.”

“When I flipped it, what a phony,” he says of the former Beatle. “I knew I was going to kill him.”

But another time he recounted, “I don’t know why I chose him. I was just fed up with the world. The whole destruction was kind of like a blessing.”

Chapman — who was raised near Atlanta, moved to Hawaii in 1977, failed in a suicide attempt and later married — seemed to express pride in the killing that shocked the world. “Something really extraordinary happened,” he said. “The Beatles were the cultural movement of the ’60s and early ’70s. They changed the world as we knew it. And I changed them ... It’s the last nail in the coffin of the ’60s ... I am indeed The Catcher in the Rye of this generation.”

At other times, Chapman expressed horror at what he had done, saying he sacrificed his life in Hawaii to set off on his murderous quest.

“I don’t know what happened,” he said. “I was just depressed, quit my job, got a gun, came over here (to New York) and killed someone. That I guess is what happened. From heaven to hell in a month.”

He said even as he set off to kill Lennon, “I just kept saying to myself: ‘Go back to the hotel and go home now, don’t do it. Get the doorman to order you a cab. Do it right now.” But I stayed.”

In a calm voice he described shooting Lennon five times with a handgun outside the rock star’s Dakota apartment building near Central Park as the ex-Beatle’s wife, Yoko Ono, screamed.

“There was no anger, just dead silence in my brain,” he said. “I looked at me. I tell you, the man was going to be dead in less than five minutes and he looked at me.”

“My head started saying, ‘do it, do it, do it,’ over and over again. I don’t remember taking aim, although I must have. I just pulled the trigger steadily five times. I thought he would just fall down dead. The guy had five bullets in him. Big guns came out of him, they had to ... It was like I was in a movie.”

Reagan remains neutral in presidential race

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan maintained his neutrality Sunday in the political fray until the new standard bearer is picked at the Iowa caucuses.

Although some of Reagan's key policies are in contention in the presidential race, White House officials have said the president will stay out of the battle for the 1988 presidential nomination, declining to support any of the Republican candidates bitterly fighting in the four primaries.

President Reagan has been a team player for the administration last year. Despite a setback last week in his drive for a new $36 million Contra aid package, including $3.6 million for arms, has promised to work with the Democrats to develop an alternative assistance package.

"What I still do not accept, however, is an assistance package that is little more than a guise for surrender and abandonment," he told the radio audience.

The women’s basketball team found out firsthand how the Drake Bulldogs became the giant-killers of the Gateway Conference.

Drake, which already knocked Illinois State and Eastern Illinois out of first, forced the Salukis from the top spot in the standings with a 57-52 overtime victory Saturday in Des Moines, Iowa. The Salukis, tied for second with Illinois State and Eastern Illinois, fell to 14-3 overall and 7-3 in the conference. Drake improved to 15-7, 8-3 in conference games, for youths age 7 and up, are held from 10 a.m. to noon Saturdays at the Recreation Center.

Drake set out the final 6:43 of the third period when he was called for his fourth foul, but returned in time to guard a 51-45 lead with 4:31 left. The East coasted to its seventh triumph in the last nine All-Star contests. Wilkins took charge in the third quarter as the East extended a 49-45 halftime lead to 99-89 to end the period. Jordan left with 6:43 to go, and Williams scored 5 points in an 8-2 run that gave the East an 86-77 advantage. Wilkins finished with 12 points in the period.

Jordan turned from passer to scorer for the West and had 10 points in the period, including a pair of 5-point plays. Abdul-Jabbar nearly set the record to end the period. His missed shot at the buzzer was ruled a basket at first, but taken away when officials ruled offensive goaltending.

The second quarter belonged to Jordan, who delighted the hometown crowd with two electrifying dunks and 14 points. The Bulls guard had 6 points in a 13-0 run that started the quarter and turned a 32-32 deficit into a 40-32 advantage. Jordan capped the surge by driving the baseline and spinning a lay-in off the glass.
