MOSCOW (UPI) — The Communist Party swept away its monopoly on power Wednesday and will ask the people to approve a presidential system with a Cabinet, Politburo member Alexander Yakovlev said Wednesday.

The stunning announcement climax ed a momentous three-day plenum of the Communist Party Central Committee, whose approx imately 250 voting members agreed that the party will have to contend for power in the Soviet Union for the first time since the Bolsheviks seized control 72 years ago.

Anatoly Lukyanov, the vice president of the country, said the plenum agreed to change Article 6, which provides a constitutional guarantee of Communist monopoly power.

Lukyanov said the plenum agreed to place the question of changing Article 6 of the Soviet Constitution during its plenum, which will make the official change, within a month. He stressed the party wants the article changed.

"The party regards necessity by way of legislative initiative to submit for consideration at the U.S.S.R. Congress of Peoples' Deputies proposals on correspond ing changes of Article 6 as the basic law of the country," Yakovlev said.

The decision by the Central Committee to give up unchal lenged was the most radical political step of Mikhail Gorbachev's era and will utterly alter the political landscape, eventually forcing Gorbachev's main rivals out of the spotlight.

The move follows the resigna tion of total power by Communists in Eastern European nations set free under Gorbachev's reforms.

Yakovlev said the Central Committee had proposed a real presidential system with a Cabinet, a radical concept in the Soviet Union.

"The plenum supported the idea of asking the people to approve the introduction of a presidential government in this country," Yakovlev said.

"That is to say, the president should be elected for a certain term and he and his Cabinet shall have full power.

He gave no details of how the elections would be held.

In another key decision, the plenum refused to recognize the breakaway of the Lithuanian Communist party — the first split of the monolithic communist party in 72 years. Yakovlev said the Soviet party would "render all material and other assistance" to loyalist Lithuanian Communists.

The Central Committee again urged the head of the dissident party Algirdas Brazauskas to change his mind, Yakovlev said.

Fierce exchanges during the plenum's first two days forced it to be extended beyond its planned close Tuesday and the meeting finally closed Wednesday afternoon just after Secretary of State James Baker's arrival for a three day visit to Moscow.

Major oil spill hits California

At least 6,000 barrels lost as tanker ruptures hull with anchor

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — At least 250,000 gallons of oil spilled into the ocean about 1 mile off the Southern California coast Wednesday after an oil tanker ruptured its own hull or an underwater pipeline with its anchor, authorities said.

The accident occurred about 5 p.m., when the tanker, American Trader, carrying an unspecified amount of oil for British Petroleum, was docking at a "buoy" about 1 mile off the coast when its anchor punctured the hull, said Dave Kelly of the city's emergency office.

However, it was not clear if oil was leaking from the ship's hull or a nearby pipeline that was possibly ruptured as well.

"Right now all we know is that while docking to a tranker, the ves sel dropped anchor and the anchor swung back to the b.w. causing the forwardmost compartment to be breached," Folly said.

The 6,000-barrel spill caused a slick measuring 2 miles by about 400 yards.

"At this point, we're calling it a major spill," Coast Guard spokesman Tim Rowe said.

Who owns the tanker and where it was headed was not immediately known, Rowe said.

A Coast Guard strike team, a cleanup contractor and a government Pollution Response Team was sent to the scene, just west of Huntington Beach Pier about 20 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

Divers and boats were in the water trying to keep the oil from washing up on the popular beach, laying a boom around the slick.

The seas were reportedly calm.

SIU-C students to bear brunt of proposed rate increases

The SIU Board of Trustees will discuss raising student fees at its monthly meeting today.

The Board Finance Committee will meet at 9 a.m. to discuss eight proposed fee increases — six for the College of Arts and Sciences and two for the full board.

Walter Rehwald, assistant to the vice chancellor for financial affairs, said no formal action will be taken by the board until the March 8 meeting in Edwardsville.

"The delay will allow for vari ous student groups to comment on the proposals, and it will "we the Board members ample time to decide which (fee hikes) to accept," Rehwald said.

He said the finance committee will make recommendations on the following SIUC fees:

A $3.50 increase in the Student Housing Program Fee, effective for full semester-1990.

A $14.50 fall 1990 increase and a $8.75 spring 1990 increase in the Student Health Fee.

A $5.11 a semester increase in the Campus Housing Recreation Fee for residence students in the Evergreen Terrace, effective July 1, 1990.

A $7.22 a semester increase in residence hall rates and a $13 a semester increase in apartment rentals rates, effective summer semester 1990.

A $3.30 a semester increase in the Student Activity Fee, effective fall semester 1990.

Chancellor Lawrence E. Pettit said no one is please when the University must raise tuition and fees.

"It is not a good position to be in to have to raise tuition and fees to survive," Pettit said.

He said the hikes are necessary because all of higher education is receiving a smaller amount of state appropriations each year.

"Converted to 1988 dollars, we are getting less money per student than we received in 1979," Pettit said. "We have lost 12.1 percent in real dollars."

He said although SIUC's tuition has increased 171.8 percent, from $574 per year in 1980 to $1,560 per year in 1989, its per centage of increase and resulting tuition level is the lowest of all Illinois universities except for the Edwardsville campus.

The Finance Committee also is scheduled to discuss the food services to the Student Center.

Rehwald said the committee is reviewing the present food service, but that the board may recommend a "bidding for the Student Center contract."

The Board Architecture and Design Committee will meet at 10 a.m. to discuss four building projects.

Basketball makes the grade

By Kevin Simpson
Staff Writer

The true success of a basketball program is not measured by the final score, but by the quality of the student-athlete it produces. The passion is important, but it is not the only factor. For the San Francisco Gators, the goal is to graduate students who possess the skills to be competitive in both basketball and other endeavors.

There are several ways to evaluate the success of a basketball program, according to the NCAA. They include graduation rates, the number of hours a student-athlete is able to contribute to the team, and the number of hours a student-athlete is able to attend classes. All of these factors are important in measuring the success of a basketball program.

The San Francisco Gators are a perfect example of how a basketball program can be successful. The team has a graduation rate of 75%, which is well above the national average of 54%. The team is also able to contribute 120 hours of basketball to the team each season, which is well above the national average of 40 hours.

The team is also able to maintain a high level of academic performance. The team has a cumulative GPA of 3.1, which is well above the national average of 2.5. The team is also able to maintain a high level of academic performance, with a graduation rate of 75%, which is well above the national average of 54%.

Hart, West, open about convention

By Greg Scott
Staff Writer

The 84th annual NCAA Convention in Dallas, Texas last month was built as the convention for the student-athlete. The first convention of the NCAA in 1920 was held in Chicago and was aimed at providing a forum for the study of student-athletes and their roles in the educational process. The convention has since evolved into a forum for the discussion of the issues facing student-athletes and their roles in the educational process.

The NCAA President's Commission wants to improve time in the classroom and decrease time on the field. The presidents feel compromise cut in spring football practice and moving back preseason basketball workouts could help toward this goal.

BEGINNING WITH spring football drills in 1991, practice days are reduced from 20 to 15 days. Contact drills can be held on only 10 of those days. "That is probably a good thing," Hart said. "I talked to Bob Smith (San Luis head coach and football) and he doesn't feel badly about that.

A regulation concerning basketball beginning the 1991-1992 season, will move preseason workouts to Nov. 1, replacing the original Oct. 15 date.

SAN LUIS men's basketball coach Rich Herrin doesn't think this helps the team. "I don't think there is any advantage changing the date," Herrin said. "October 12 is a good date and it has worked for years. If it's not broke, why fix it?" The team will play three games off the 28-game basketball schedule beginning with the 1992-1993 season.

SALUKI-INTERCOLLEGIATE Athletic Director Jim Hart said the convention was aimed at the student-athlete. "I think the NCAA is headed in the right direction in regard to the student-athlete," Hart said. "We will probably see more legislation concerning this in years to come.

The Saluki women's basketball team will return to "play it safe." They have lost almost all of their personnel due to injuries. Their guard, Oni Cole, has been out for almost the entire season. Their starting center, Ashley Dunlap, is also out with an injury. They are currently 7-11 overall and 3-5 in the Gateway.

The Gateway has lost in last two games in Des Moines and have only a 2-8 record against Drake on its home court during the Gateway.

Deployment of troops sparks fight with activists in Pakistan

KARACHI, Pakistan (UPI) — Activists called to organize an anti-government strike and protest marches in response to a proposed new labor law that they say is designed to further exploit workers.

Pakistan's government has been criticized for its lack of action in addressing the growing crisis of unemployment and poverty.

The proposed labor law is seen as a threat to the rights of workers, who are protesting against the law. The law would allow companies to fire employees at will, without any notice, and would limit their ability to form unions.

Inter-Christian fighting ensues for 8th day

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Christian strongman Gen. Michel Aoun said Wednesday he would halt his campaign to destroy the Christian Lebanese Forces militia if its leader agreed to oppose the agreement that led to the election of a new president opposed by Aoun. Clerics continued efforts, meanwhile, to end the eight days of fighting for control of the Christian enclave of the divided capital, and a halt in the battles Wednesday allowed relief workers to evacuate some of the wounded.

AIDS epidemic among Romanian children

PARIS (UPI) — Childhood AIDS has reached epidemic proportions in Romania, where nearly 3,000 children under the age of 12 have been diagnosed with the virus, a French specialist said Wednesday. Dr. Jacques Lebas, president of the humanitarian organization Médécins du Monde, said that the results released in Paris show that 301 out of 2,184 children tested had been exposed to the HIV virus that causes the deadly disease. He said that of those who tested positive, 50 had full-blown cases of AIDS and 102 suffered from AIDS-related complex, or ARC.

Students protest KKK party formation at Bradley campus

PEORIA (UPI) — A peaceful protest demanding racism at Bradley University was mounted by 200 demonstrators Wednesday. The rally was in response to flyers calling for a student meeting Saturday to form the "American White Supremacy Party," Thursday, a letter was distributed on campus bearing a logo reading KKKOC — Ku Klux Klan on Campus — and including the phrase "freights are scar." "The matter is being dealt with in a very serious manner," University President Martin Abegg said, following a meeting with black students.

Sioux struggle portrayed in film

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

For white Americans, the Black Hills of South Dakota are a tourist spot, a land of majestic scenery where curiosity seekers snap Polaroids of everything from Mount Rushmore to authentic totem poles.

For Native Americans, however, the Black Hills and Bear Butte are filled with more than just campgrounds and parks where Indian religious practices are put on display for public amusement.

"This country is a temple of God and a tabernacle of the Indian people," says Lakota (western Sioux) Elder Matthew King in "Our Sacred Land," tonight's feature presentation at the 12th Big Muddy Film Festival.

Chris Spotted Eagle, one of the few American Indian film and television producers in the U.S., is the festival's featured guest filmmaker and will speak at 9 tonight in the Student Center Auditorium. Admission is $2.

Spotted Eagle will present "Our Sacred Land," (1985), a documentary detailing the struggle for religious freedom among the Sioux and their fight with the U.S. government over land rights.

The Ho chunk Indian filmmaker made "The Great Spirit Within the Hole," (1983), which focuses on the rights of American Indians to practice their religious rituals in prison.

After the showings, Spotted Eagle will answer questions from the audience about his films, both of which have aired nationally on PBS.

In 1877, Congress repealed the 1851 Laramie Treaty, which granted some 50 million acres of U.S. territory to the Sioux and Arapahoe nations.

The Indians have been defending their legal rights to this sacred land ever since. In the film, Tony Fast Horse tells how his ancestors "traveled to Washington with this treaty (Laramie) in their hands, asking for some type of pledge, some type of guarantee that those promises would be fulfilled. A lot of those people have since lived and died with this treaty in their hands. I have inherited that position. Now I am carrying that document in my hands... Someday, some great grandchild of mine is going to say, 'My great grandfather was steadfast in his right to the Black Hills.'"

The federal government has previously offered the Sioux $105 million to compensate for the loss of the land. The Sioux rejected the offer, stating that the land is holy and not for sale.

Lawsuits were filed against the government, citing infringements of their freedom of religion because the Black Hills and Bear Butte areas are central to their religion. Sioux like Harvey Peak in the Black Hills are religious shrines in the same sense that the Kaaba at Mecca or the wailing wall at Jerusalem are, according to Spotted Eagle's film.

Yet today when the Indian people ascend Bear Butte to pray according to a bloody hundreds of years old, their privacy is invaded, their rites are disrupted and their holy places are desecrated by careless visitors.

"Our Sacred Land" provides film footage of South Dakota's state government erecting a parking lot just above the ceremonial grounds, opening up the area for tourists and rendering it practically useless for future spiritual observances by Indians.

The Sioux's desire to partake in the traditional Vision Quest trek is made almost impossible by the intrusion of curious hikers at Bear Butte "state park."

"Our Sacred Land" makes clear the formidable obstacles Indians face in attempting to reassert their rights.

"People have more or less ignored us to death," as one Indian put it in the film.

"There's another title which we have to the Black Hills, which the white man has a very great difficulty in grasping, and that's the spiritual title," Gerald Clifford, a Lakota leader, says in the film.

"And it's that spiritual title that has sustained the Sioux over the last 105 years," he adds.

In making "The Great Spirit Within the Hole," Spotted Eagle traveled to 10 U.S. prisons to interview Indians about their religious practices and the harassment they face from prison authorities because of these practices.

Through this film, Spotted Eagle hopes to make prison officials see the validity of Indian religious practices, which should already be protected under the First Amendment guarantee of religious freedom, he said.
Black history month
a time for celebration

MORE THAN 20 YEARS ago in the heat of the civil rights upgroar in America, blacks gained more rights and freedoms than ever before. It was a time of great promise and hope.

Black History Month reminds us all of this fight. During the late 1960s it grew out of Black History Week, which first was celebrated in 1926. It's founder, Carter G. Woodson, the first historian to record African American heritage, endorsed it in the Negro History Bulletin of the Association for Negro Life and history.

THE FIRST BLACK History Week was celebrated from Feb. 12 to 18, 1926. It included the birth dates of Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass.

Douglass was a black abolitionist, writer and journalist. Douglass also was the first ambassador to Haiti for the United States.

According to Angela Rivers, director of education at DuSable Museum of African American History in Chicago, Douglass was the equivalent of Lincoln to many African Americans. His ambassadorship was proof to them that success did not discriminate.

DURING THIS BLACK History Month, we should note the number of African Americans who have contributed to American society.

From Bill Cosby to Arsenio Hall, Jackie Robinson to Dave Stuart, and from Martin Luther King to Jess Jackson, African Americans have distinguished themselves in every possible field. They have risen past so visible obstacles between themselves and success.

WE ALSO should reflect on the years ahead of us. Minority employment continued to be a weak spot in many professions.

The number of full-time black teachers at the University has gone down from 1.8 percent, or 20 out of 1,106 teachers, in 1979 to 1.7 percent in 1989, or 18 out of 1,074. And although the decrease is slight, it shows we are losing ground.

SEYMOUR BRYSON, assistant to the president for affirmative action, said the University needs to continue its recruitment of blacks.

As members of the University community — and in celebration of Black History Month — let's remember how far we have come. Together.

Bush rewards S. Africans for the bare minimum of decency

By Leonard Larsen

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is making clear that as it concerned South Africa was both blinds and wrongheaded and President Bush keeps alive that sorry tradition of his patron and predecessor.

Soon after announcement that Nelson Mandela would be released from a 26-year imprisonment and that black political activism outlawed by the regime would now be permitted, Bush suggested he would favor the peace talks only if South Africa removed apartheid. In a speech on Wednesday, he threatened to prolong economic sanctions.

The South African government might have promised another economic windfall at a boasted racist government that's taken tentative steps away from a half-century of official oppression against most of the people of South Africa.

Instead. Bush held out the possibility of rewards for a bare minimum of decency, a decency still foreign to an ugly, brutal system of government enforced by minority rule.

The release of Mandela and legalization of the African National Congress was announced by South African President F.W. de Klerk. While he spoke of other possible reforms, de Klerk made it clear the state of apartheid would remain on the government, dominating life in South Africa.

What reforms might occur, the de Klerk program leaves the structure of apartheid in place — although the government is still committed to South Africans by race, the segregation and confinement of non-whites, the fearful and limited police powers of white authority and the continued exclusion of blacks from political participation.

Lack of indoor plumbing is practical but illegal

By Brian Dickinson

Providence Journal

The latest turn of events in South Africa is altogether remarkable, and it is well past being to nodding. President F.W. de Klerk, in office less than six months, has boldly thrown most of his party’s apartheid past from the window.

At a stroke, he has met key demands of South Africa’s embattled black majority, thus opening the way for negotiations leading to a new constitution and political power for blacks.

It took notable courage for de Klerk to act as he did, as even former black activists warned last week. By legalizing the African National Congress, lifting most emergency restrictions and pledging to free political prisoners, especially Nelson Mandela, de Klerk offered a new model of hope to South Africa’s battered soul. From the leader of a party that for four decades had brutally repressed legislation and political power of blacks, it was a notable achievement.

But amid the acclaim for de Klerk’s demarche, the long-suffering patience of most black nationalists might still be sorely tested. De Klerk has acted (one might say, caved in) to the force of global opinion, the ANC Party should have acted from the time of its birth in 1948. Negotiations then on a non-racial constitution, with protection for minority rights, might have spared South Africa the recent intermittent bloodletting and consequent pain. Black South Africans might not have been forced to endure decades of degradation and the blatant injustices of a grotesquely racist political system.

For its part, the African National Congress, from its own birth in 1912 until the police massacre of 69 blacks at Sharpeville in 1960, pursued a political voice with a gentleness that so often strikes little short of amazing. It was only after the white-ruled government sought to crush its black opponents that black fists were raised in fury. Bloody guerrilla battles have been fought many a time. But in striking, however, is not that recent years have brought outbursts of black violence, but that black violence and rage did not become total long ago.

The impending release of Nelson Mandela now offers all South Africans precious time to explore possibilities of compromise among black and white alike. Mandela, sentenced to life imprisonment in 1964, may represent the last chance for South Africa to realize political power through a negotiated constitution. Yet since 1971, the time he was initially met with Mandela at the table is not unlimited.

President de Klerk finds himself in a somewhat parallel situation. Determined to break with the doomed dogma of his predecessors, he staked his own political fate (and even that of his party) on this one electoral roll of the dice. He could not very well lie down after succeeding President P.W. Botha last year with pledges of far vast change. He seems to some that Mandela and a currently quiescent ANC offer white South Africans perhaps their only realistic chance to effect a new and secure political structure. De Klerk’s gamble, which holds many unforeseen implications for his own (and his nation’s) future, is that negotiations with the black majority can lead to apartheid South Africans away from the precipice.

Both de Klerk and Mandela understood that a negotiated settlement is the key to everything. Last year, in a statement prepared for his July meeting with former President P.W. Botha (and recently obtained by the Christian Science Monitor), Mandela defined two political issues as central. One is the black demand that he be permitted to represent his people in a unitary state. The other, as Mandela pointed out, is “the insurrection of whites on structural guarantors that majority rule will not mean elimination of the white minority by blacks.”

By legalizing the African National Congress and lifting most emergency restrictions in South Africa, de Klerk has provided a new and significant voice to the African majority. The South African government, dominated for years by a policy of segregation, has finally recognized the voice of the majority. The path to peace and a just society in South Africa is now within reach.

Herschberger, a member of the Old Order Amish Church, dislikes such modern conveniences as plumbing. Herschberger has his own ways of doing things the old fashioned way. In this conflict between late 20th century modernity and 18th century frugality, the 18th century should win.
Evaluation changes sought

Additional ‘student oriented questions’ wanted by USG

By Richard Hunt

Walters said, “We represent 5,800 students. However, the decisions we make were really the Department of Government and Politics and the Department of Economics by stimulating tourism and economic development revenues for the municipalities that want it.” Thompson said.

Thompson named Kunkle of Champaign as the Gaming Board, a division of the state Revenue Department.

Walters was a former Democratic party’s attorney and chief deputy state’s attorney. “I’m thrilled to take on the challenge,” Kunkle said.

Walters said, “We have already committed money to a study on cable TV. We’re putting our money where our mouth is on those issues,” Jones said. The budget money for this study is $46,000, he said.

Walters said the increase could help fund a system that would allow students to eat meals at cafeterias other than the one that serves their specific meal.

Jones said he will be sure to meet with the USG housing tuition and fees committee and the student senate when another increase is proposed.

In other business, the senate objected to the consideration of a bill that would have volunteered pages carry messages during the meetings and a bill that would establish salaries for members of the judicial branch.

“We’re not Washington, D.C. We’re not Congress. We’re a student senate,” he is asking that this bill (requesting pages) fail,” Hildebrand said.

The bill to impeach Michael Parker, the public board of government chief of justice, was pulled from the agenda.

Walters said the increase would help pay for renovation of residence hall facilities and new services such as cable television in the residence halls. The increase would also cover more student-oriented questions than the current instructional and course evaluation forms. Students would be asked to rate such items as instructors, quality of teaching assistants, and amount of work expected and quality of teaching assistants.

These examples were taken from the University of Illinois-Chicago’s Class Instructor Evaluation book from Spring 1991.

The results would then be distributed to both faculty and students, Walters said.

Doctoral students were pleased with the idea of what is being done, and a contracted consultant will plan. The Board Academic Matters Committee will meet to discuss purchase orders and contracts costing the University more than $200,000. Petit said committee members also must discuss the reason some contracts do not need to be approved.

The Board Academic Matters Committee will hear a report on departmental programs and educational units approved and abolished during the 1990-1991 academic year. Members of the committee also will discuss the Illinois Board of Higher Education’s $2.1 billion operation and grants budget recommendation for fiscal year 1991.

We have held off an increase and no provision is expected and individual departments have their own policies for using teacher evaluation forms, he said.

Walters said faculty members would have the choice of using the form as part of their evaluation.

Benjamin Shephard, vice president of academic affairs, said some form of teacher evaluation is required for tenure and promotion processes.

About 10 to 15 students are needed to provide input on the content and distribution of the form. Walters said the committee welcomes faculty input as well. He said students can contact either Walters or Murray at 536-3381.
Mandatory car insurance bolsters business for Carbondale agencies

By Lisa Miller

Business is booming for auto insurers in Carbondale as a result of the new mandatory insurance law.

"The law caused an increase in sales, Renshaw said. "We've seen a large number of people who came in to buy insurance that had already been ticketed. We've seen a lot of college students come in here and get insurance because they had been caught without it," Payne said. Secretary of State Jim Edgar said he estimated more than 5,000 tickets were issued to uninsured motorists throughout Illinois in the three weeks after the law took effect.

Neal Jacobson, public information officer for the Carbondale Police, said the department has ticketed 45 motorists in Carbondale during January and 15 through Tuesday. Edgar said he was pleased that more than an estimated 250,000 Illinoisans have bought car insurance to comply with the law. "If someone is going to drive a car in our society, he should be responsible, and responsible motorists have insurance," Edgar said.

In addition to the increase in sales, Renshaw said calls coming inquiring about insurance has made a difference for his agency so far. He said more than 300 motorists aula insurer's have car insurance since January 1, 1989.

"The increase in sales has been absolutely tremendous," Renshaw said. "This new law has really made a difference for our business."

Although the storm of sales came in January, Ayala said there has been a significant increase in February, but the month is only seven days old," Renshaw said. "We're still experiencing a large amount of calls."

Raul Ayala, owner of Ayala Insurance Agency, said although he had no concrete figures, he estimated his agency sold about 700 percent more insurance policies this year than last year.

The major surge in sales came in late December through January, Ayala said. "We've experienced a considerable increase, but things are beginning to subside now," Ayala said. Steve Payne, insurance broker for Oliver and Associates Insurance, said his agency experienced a significant increase in policy sales, but he had no exact figures.

The pictures in the Alternative Space this month are worth more than a thousand words. In fact, this month’s photography students have carved a whole new vocabulary, which redefiners the classic “portrait.”

The show, “Portraits: A Collaboration Between The Subjects and Photographers,” was an event started by photography students, under the direction of Joe Ziolkowski, a cinema and photography faculty assistant.

“The title of the show is what I believe a portrait is,” Ziolkowski said. “It’s the photographer and subject working together.”

The process of creative collaboration has produced some uniquely different work. Thirteen cinema and photography students are showing their interpretations of friends, family and models.

John Folsom, a senior in cinema and photography, used symbolism to bring out the eccentricities in his friends and acquaintances.

“I wanted to enhance some part of each person’s personality,” Folsom said. “I worked with symbolism within the image.”

In order to reveal these characteristics, Folsom painted the portraits on the actual portrait print. For example, he painted a “developer halo” on one of the subjects for the sandwich value.

“Some of these symbols were definitely added for sarcastic purposes,” he said.

Despite all the talk of imagery and symbolism, Folsom said the main thing, to him, is to have fun doing the photographs.

Where Folsom made portraits enhancing characteristics of his subjects, sophomore Rob Shields did some variations on the usual self-portrait.

Shields took three pictures of himself in fun-house mirrors and mounted the prints on regular mirrors.

“It was part of a class assignment,” Shields said. “We were supposed to take pictures of how we think others see us. I mimicked abstract images of people.”

Shields said mounting the images on the mirrors enhanced the images. Along with the mirror-framed prints, he mounted one blank mirror.

Shields’ other two portraits also catch the eye, mainly because of the people in them.

In one, a furry hunter carrier: a deer’s head. The other shows a punk-looking guy, complete with hair that stands up a foot and a half.

Shields explained the punk looking man is wrestler “Frankie the Tyrant,” a friend of a friend.

“I didn’t do anything to that portrait,” Shields said. “He wanted to be that way.”

Unlike “Frankie the Tyrant,” the subjects that senior Kathleen Robertson photographed may not want to see the way she displayed them.

Robertson was working with exaggerating facial expressions when she began this project.

“I wanted to push the exaggeration even farther,” she said. “I decided to make it all bigger. I thought of inverting the portraits on balloons.”

Instead, Robertson chose to print the portraits on Spandex. To do this, she made a Xerox of the photo and did a Xerox transfer onto the white Spandex. She then stretched the Spandex into wooden frames to create the distorted effect.

Robertson said she found this project “a relief” after all of the personal things she had been working on.

“It really was easier with people I know,” she said. “We were just playing. The distance between photographer and subject was already broken down.”

Each of the six display cases has a “contingent” sheet next to it, inviting viewers to take a look at the photos and write their own captions. Robertson wants the viewers to think about the portraits and what they think Robertson was saying.

“I’d want her to do my family portraits,” Robertson was amused.

The show will be up until Feb. 22. Alternative Space is in the Communications Building.

Akeem frustrated in Houston

HOUSTON (UPI) — Rockets center Akeem Olajuwon says he may consider asking for a trade if the club shows no sign of improving.

"After this season, I have to concentrate on which direction I want to go," Olajuwon told The Houston Post. "I love Houston. I would like to play here. But the only way is up." The Rockets have been to the NBA finals just once since the former University of Houston star joined the league in 1985. The Rockets, who reached the championship in Olajuwon’s rookie season, are 22-24 this year and could miss the playoffs.

"I have played all my career here," said Olajuwon, who earns more than $3 million a year and is signed through the 1994-95 season. These next four or five years are my best years and I want to make the most of them.

"When you win, it is a totally different feeling than when you lose. There is no pride when you lose. You feel ashamed. To me, I do not feel comfortable at all in that situation."

Olajuwon emphasized he is not criticizing any teammates.

"The players are trying their best," he told the Post. "We are all trying to work hard and win as many games as possible. This is about the future and where the team is headed with me as the center."

Olajuwon, who will compete in this weekend’s All-Star Game in Miami, said playing for a mediocre team the last four years has not been fulfilling.

"My concern is with management, because they are the ones making the decisions," he said.

"We feel very good about our graduation rate," Herrin said. "We can get them through the first two years we feel pretty good about graduating them."

Beyond trying to recruit top-quality athletes, Smith said the staff tries to make sure the program fits the best, seniors of the athlete and vice versa.

"You try to get people who will fit into your program and they're going to mesh with your current players and with the staff," Smith said.

"There's going to be times that we recruit people, that, for one reason or another we may have made poor judgment. Maybe they're not good enough to play or they might not be the people that we thought they were," Smith said. "And there is going to be players that select SU because they think this is the place for them and it might not be."

"That's why you see programs that have people transfer," Smith said. "And it might not be because of dislike for a coaching staff, or dislike from coaches to a player.

"As recruiters, Smith said the staff tries to make sure there is a solid link between athletics, academics and social life."

"When we recruit them, we talk about wanting Southern Illinois University to be a good match for that student-athlete," Smith said. "With that match comes a number of things."

"We need to be a good match academically — we need to offer them the program they desire," Smith said. "Our style of play, the demeanor of the coaches. The personalites of the other players on the team."

"We need to be a match for them socially," Smith said. "We need to offer them an environment away from academics and basketball that's going to be conducive to the other two."

"But in talking to President John Guyon he brought up some logical points. If someone wants to take drugs they will find a way to get around being detected. He felt as a university we needed to take a stance of being against it."

WEST IS IN the middle of the road concerning this topic.

"I see both sides of it," West said. "I move from one side to the other. But I guess I would lean toward thinking it was an invasion of privacy. It is almost an assumption of guilt until proven innocent."

Presently, the NCAA tests only at championship events and bowl games. The present policy states that if athletes test positive they face only the loss of eligibility for postseason competition for 90 days.

WEST HAS suggestions for the future.

"I think the presidents have good ideas, but they need to converse with their athletic directors before the convention," West said. "It was long and drawn out."

West said SU-C Goes does this. "President Guyon is the perfect example of how a president should converse with the athletic directors," West said. "He talks with us and gives his views."
