Poll proposal called anti-student

By Tony Gordon
Staff Writer

A proposed change of polling places in five Carbondale precincts is "a deliberate attempt by Republican members of the Jackson County Board to keep students from voting in township elections," a Democrat board member has charged.

Mae Nelson, District 6 representative from Carbondale, said that the three member committee on elections will recommend to the full board moving the polling places for the April 7 election in Precincts 11, 17, 21, 23 and 25 to locations different from where they were for the Feb. 24 primary.

The elections committee is made up of Nelson and Republicans Kay Blackwell of Murphysboro and William Shuffelbarger of Gorham, who is committee chairman.

Changing the locations in Precincts 21, 23 and 25, all heavily populated by students, was designed by Shuffelbarger and other Republicans to discourage student voting, Nelson said. She said Shuffelbarger informed her of his proposal Monday by saying "I'm the committee chairman and I can do whatever I want."

Shuffelbarger denied Nelson's charge, saying no other Republicans had proposed any changes and that if anyone was trying to discourage voting by students, "it was all news to me."

"No one outside our committee proposed anything of the kind to me. If the students are registered to vote, it is their privilege to vote and I encourage it. I think Nelson could be trying to measure people in her own cup," Shuffelbarger said.

According to Nelson, under the proposal to be made to the entire County Board Wednesday night, the polling place at Wilson Hall for Precinct 21 would be moved to the Lutheran Church of All Saints on Wall Street, north of Pleasant Hill Road. Precinct 25 would be changed from Lentz Hall at Thompson Point to the Baptist Student Center if the proposal is approved.

People voting in Precinct 25 would actually be casting ballots at a location in Precinct 22, Nelson said, because the proposed change there calls for a move from Grinnell Hall to the Newman Center at 715 S. Washington.

The other new polling place proposed is at the Carbondale Towers for Precinct 11, whose voters went to the Pyramids Dorm at 516 S. Rawlings St. for the primary.

Carbondale Township Precinct 17, which had no primary voting because party caucuses determined nominees, would vote at Eve's Fitness Center on South U.S. 51 if the proposal is approved by the board, Nelson said.

Shuffelbarger said Nelson's list of the changes "sounded about right," but would not definitely confirm them because he did not have his own list when he was contacted. He said he developed the changes because of voter complaints after the primary.

"I had 12 to 15 voters contact me following the primary complaining about parking, access and other general objections to the polling places in those precincts, so I decided to move them for convenience," Shuffelbarger said.

Reagan's education budget examined

Planned cutbacks opposed at hearing

By Randy Roguski
and Scott Canon
Staff Writers

President Ronald Reagan probably would not have been a very popular man in the Student Center 4th Floor Video Lounge Friday.

Most of the Reagan administration's proposed cutbacks in student financial aid were opposed by witnesses who testified to a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee on post-secondary education.

The hearing was the fifth in a series of six being held throughout the country to solicit responses to the president's proposals. The final hearing will be held next week in Kansas City, Mo.

Democratic Rep. Paul Simon, of the Illinois 24th district, and Rep. Thomas Coleman, Republican from Missouri, listened to testimony from students, administrators and others who would be affected by the cutbacks.

Threatened by Reagan's proposals are the Pell Grants (formerly Basic Educational Opportunity Grants), Guaranteed Student Loans and National Direct Student Loans.

Most of the witnesses urged the congressmen to protect the needy. SIU Chancellor Kenneth Shaw said, "Thousands of needy students will no longer be eligible for various forms of aid should drastic reductions in these programs occur."

Responding to a proposal to impose a family-income limitation on the Pell Grant Program, President Albert Somit said the income ceiling would hurt many students' chances of attending college.

Income ceilings of $25,000 to $30,000 are being considered by the subcommittee. Somit said more than one-third of SIU-C students are receiving BEOGs this year and 38.7 percent of those students come from middle-income families.

"To terminate or sharply reduce these students' eligibility is clearly the first step in denying access to higher education to this group," Somit said.

Diane Johnson, junior in speech communications, told the subcommittee that although she is the youngest of a six-child family, she is closer to earning a college diploma than any of her siblings. She testified that without her BEOG, she would not be in school.

"I'm lucky. There's no way I could be here without my financial aid," Johnson said.

Another Reagan proposal calls for students to prove earnings of $750 annually to become eligible for Pell Grants. Debbie Brown, president of the Graduate Student Council, was one of those who opposed the proposal.

"I am very concerned with the self-help factor," Brown said. The $750 figure "is currently 22 percent of the undergraduate student budget at SIU-C. That is a significant chunk," she said.

The Pell Grant Program may also be cut by reducing the size of maximum awards from the present $1,800 limit to $1,200.

Larry Matejka, executive director of the Illinois State Scholarship Commission, said an award reduction would create an additional demand on the ISSC. The demand would be more than $15 million over next year's budget because of students who may receive smaller Pell grants, he said.

Julie Hines, sophomore in anthropology, discusses her financial aid problem in her room at Baldwin Hall.

Student finds education cuts back her into financial corner

By Randy Roguski
Staff Writer

Last year Julie Hines stormed into Carbondale possessed by enthusiasm and chattering with anticipation of university life. Next year she may be a college dropout. She may have no choice.

Hines, sophomore in anthropology, is one of many students who may be crippled by cutbacks in student financial aid. She says she will not be able to survive in college if the government cuts her aid—or any part of her aid.

"I'm making it now. But I'm just making it," Hines said. "I don't know what I'd do. I'd cry."

The congressional cleaver is aimed most prominently at the Guaranteed Loan Program and the Pell Grant Program (formerly the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program). The General Assembly will probably take similar swings at the Illinois State Scholarship Program.

Students may be expected to make do with smaller loans. Students from many middle-class families will likely be denied grants. Students like Hines may discover they can't make ends meet.

"There wouldn't be much chance that I could stay in school," Hines said. "And I'm a good student. It's not fair."

Hines is receiving this year a $320 award from the ISSC, a $900 BEOG and a $2,000 student loan. She puts in more than 20 hours of work each week as a student worker at the library.

Though her library work is already hammering at her

Hijacked Pakistani jet lands safely in Syria

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — The hijacked Pakistani airliner with more than 100 hostages aboard landed early Monday in Damascus, Syria, and Syrian officials immediately started negotiations with the hijackers by radio from the control tower, Syrian authorities said.

Syrian officials said the plane touched down at about 1:15 a.m. local time, 6:15 p.m. EST, and was parked in a remote area of the international airport. All doors of the plane remained shut, they said.

A reporter at the airport hotel said it was too dark to determine what kind of security was present.

The departure of the plane Sunday from Kabul, where it landed last Monday, followed Pakistan's crackdown on political opponents and the government's refusal to meet the hijackers' demand for release of Pakistani prisoners.

Shortly after leaving Kabul, a Pakistani spokesman said the pilot of the Pakistani International Airlines Boeing 720 jet radioed to a passing PIA aircraft that he had been told to fly in the direction of Damascus. The three men who hijacked the plane on a domestic Pakistani flight last Monday have threatened their 111 hostages — including three American citizens and two other U.S. residents — with death.

The hijackers, armed with hand grenades, pistols and at least one automatic weapon, executed one of their hostages Friday.

Pakistani government spokesman Javed Akhtar said news of the aircraft's departure was reported on state-run television in Kabul.

There was no immediate word from the State Department on the latest developments. Earlier, State Department officials had said the Reagan administration had informed the Soviets that they expected them to "use their influence" to help end the standoff.

Radio Afghanistan reported Sunday evening that negotiations between the hijackers and Pakistani officials had broken down at the Kabul airport. However, Pakistani spokesmen here denied the report.

Islamabad officials had said that the hijackers rejected Pakistan's latest offer but appeared willing to compromise.

1968 riots commemorated in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — With threatened industrial strikes two days away, Polish workers joined thousands of students at the University of Warsaw Sunday to commemorate riots that began there 13 years ago.

A spokesman for the independent labor federation Solidarity speculated union leader Lech Walesa would meet with Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski Monday. The report could not be confirmed.

Indiana execution to proceed

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind. (AP) — Preparations for the execution of Steven T. Judy began Sunday as the convicted murderer counted the hours until his walk to the electric chair and an escape from a society he says rejected him.

Judy, 24, convicted of raping and murdering Terry L. Chasteen and drowning her three children in April 1979, was scheduled to die sometime after midday Sunday.

Democrats strive to block arms sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's foreign policy appears headed for stormy weather, with Democrats striving to scuttle a weapons sale to Saudi Arabia.

Several Democratic senators reacted sharply to the administration's announcement Friday that it wants to sell to Saudi Arabia extra fuel tanks and Sidewinder air-to-air missiles to enhance the range and firepower of F-15 warplanes already sold to the Saudis.

Cutbacks in federal loans proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is proposing major curbs on the federal government's role as a low-interest money lender, a move that will mean fewer subsidized loans for home-buyers, farmers, students, small businesses and dozens of other types of borrowers.

As part of an overall plan to pare back government activity in the economy, the administration said it wants to reduce new loans and loan guarantees through 1982 by 11 percent, or nearly $35 billion, from the levels anticipated by former President Jimmy Carter.

Among the programs that would be affected are the Federal Housing Administration, which insures home mortgages; student loan programs; the Rural Electrification Administration; Farmers Home Administration; farm commodity loans; Veterans Administration; Small Business Administration and the Export-Import Bank.

Cuts also would be made in lending for foreign military sales, energy development, rural housing, consumer cooperatives, housing rehabilitation, economic development, veterans, the District of Columbia, aircraft purchase, merchant ship-building and credit unions.

The Carter administration projected the government would extend $154 billion in new credit this fiscal year, including $58 billion in direct subsidized loans and $96 billion in guarantees that the government will cover private-loan defaults.

City council to consider plan for single accounting concept

By Tony Gordon
Staff Writer

All audits of city spending required by state, federal and local regulations will be performed by a single accounting firm under a new "single audit concept," if the City Council approves a proposal scheduled to be made Monday night.

City Director of Finance Paul Sorgen is expected to recommend the council award contracts to the firm of Lavanthol and Horwath, of 116 W. Main Street, for all audits required to be done at the end of this fiscal year, April 30.

Sorgen says in a memo to the council that Lavanthol and Horwath have proposed the single audit concept, "designed to eliminate the need for separate audits of the federal and state supported grant programs and include them into one annual audit of the city," to cut costs in the future.

Audits required by city regulations this year include ones of the General Fund, Public Service Enterprise Fund and Youth Program, the memo says. The state requires an audit of funds used in the Comprehensive Child Care Program and the Department of Housing and Urban Development audits spending from the Community Development Block Grant Fund.

In addition, Sorgen's memo says, the General Accounting

Office requires an audit for the Railroad Relocation Project

Lavanthol and Horwath have proposed charges of $15,800 for the General Fund audit, $12,700 for Public Services Enterprise Fund, $10,000 for the CDBG, Child Care and Youth Program combined, and $3,500 for the audit of Railroad Relocation.

In a letter to the council, Sidney Leavitt, a partner in the firm, says the single audit concept "will enable us to plan our examination and structure our report to meet the requirements of federal and state agencies for audited information by intergrading these audit requirements with the annual financial audit of the city."

Nelson said several Republican officeholders and candidates "had worked on the changes with Shuffelberger, and she was "suspicious" that Carbondale Township Assessor John B. Parrish was one of them. She said the manager of the Carbondale Towers told her that Parrish had already set the polling place there for Precinct 11 when she contacted them for the same purpose earlier this month.

Shuffelberger said he had already decided on moving Precinct 11 to the Towers before talking to Parrish and that his only involvement was making the arrangements. Parrish confirmed Shuffelberger's story Sunday.

Shuffelberger said because there were no primary elections in his assigned area, he had finished his work for the April voting before Nelson and "decided to help her out" with her unfinished arrangements.

Nelson said Shuffelberger's statement was "absolutely not true," and that she had set polling places for all Carbondale precincts except 17 before hearing of the changes.

"It is quite obvious they don't want the students to vote. Some races in the county are decided by 100 votes or less, and the student Democratic vote could have an effect in those races. They can't prevent the students from voting, but they are putting as many inconveniences in their way as possible," Nelson said.

The change in Precinct 21, she said, "will move the polling place almost a mile from where the students live. They will have to travel through a poorly-lighted area that has no sidewalks."

Changes proposed in 23 and 25 may be illegal, she said, because they move the polling place away from the center of the population in the precinct.

Shuffelberger said he expected the changes to be approved by the full board, but that he "would go along with the wishes of the board," if they choose to reject them.

While wary of the cuts in the Pell Grant Program, Matejka said he supports a Reagan proposal to place an income ceiling on those eligible for Guaranteed Student Loans. A ceiling of $35,000 is being considered by the subcommittee.

Michael Jackson, a bank president from Greenville, said an income ceiling would be appropriate as long as it wouldn't prevent middle-income families from educating their children.

Paul Natalonis, president of the Undergraduate Student Organization, disagreed and testified that an income ceiling on student loans would inevitably hurt middle-income families.

He said students from middle-income families use the loans because other forms of aid are unavailable.

Another proposal suggests that interest on loans be charged to students while in school to discourage students from investing their loans rather than using them for educational costs.

Jackson said the in-school interest charge would cause students to accumulate large debts that would be difficult to pay immediately after graduation

Brown said the burden could lead to an increase in loan defaults

"I don't think students, regardless of how well intending, reasonable and responsible they are, will be able to bear this increased financial burden," she said.

The subcommittee also heard testimony from parents of students. The parents expressed concern about their ability to finance their children's education if the proposed cuts are enacted.

3.45 grade point average, threatening to keep her from attending graduate school, she's willing to work more hours next year if it will help her recover her losses in financial aid.

"If I quit school, it would be a long, long time before I'd come back," Hines said. "And if I quit school I have to start paying back my student loan. I'd probably have to take out a loan to pay back my loan."

So she may not go to school.

She thinks she may quit school temporarily and return to her hometown of Rockford.

There she will undoubtedly collide with a nearly hopeless job market. In a city dotted with factories and machine shops, she thinks she may be able to track down a waitress job. She said it's a far cry from graduate school. And it's even further from an anthropology profession.

But Hines, like many students, may have no choice

This does not compute

By R. Scott Andersen Student Writer

THE ENERGY CRISIS IS NOT THE ONLY shortage hurting the students and faculty at SIU-C. Valuable computer resources are becoming more scarce now than ever before.

In 1979 it was foreseen that our one IBM370 (a large computer in its own right) would never meet the demand for the next year. The administration could have made a long-range plan, determined the current trend of computer usage (a staggering increase not only at SIU-C, but all over the country), and replaced the system with one that would have facilitated a pool of resources large enough for everyone to complete his work on the computer with a minimum of frustration. This is what could have been done.

This is what actually happened: The administration made a patch on the computer system yielding what we currently have now. It purchased another machine similar to the first one and now devotes one of these two machines almost entirely to administrative uses. Net chance for the students: almost zero. This type of corrective measure would be like Wilt Chamberlain buying a car too small for him to fit in, realizing his mistake, and buying another car just like the first one.

Are students the only ones frustrated? Probably not. Many faculty members from a variety of departments are also feeling the crunch. As computer resources dwindle, faculty members find it more difficult to complete necessary research. Faculty and staff wait just as long for print-outs from the already over-worked computer printers at Phaner and Wham as students do too. They do not appear to be overly happy with the situation.

THERE ARE WELL OVER 1000 USER-ACCESS numbers allowing students and faculty to access the computer through special terminals. The limited availability of terminals is a problem. Unfortunately, purchasing more terminals will not entirely remedy the situation. A majority of these terminals must access the computer over special phone lines. There are a limited number of the lines going into the computer that must be shared by students, faculty and some areas of the administration. Accessing one of these phone lines during normal business hours is virtually impossible. Chances of getting a line increase only slightly after business hours because more students and faculty members attempt to access the computer between the hours of 4:30 p.m. and midnight in hope of making up for time lost during the day. The only time computer resources seem to be plentiful is between midnight and 7:00 a.m. Both the Phaner and Wham facilities are closed these times, but if you happen to have your own terminal and a thermos of coffee you can actually accomplish something.

This situation cannot continue. Policy changes must be enacted if we computer users are to be able to use these precious resources. Someone must make a long range plan or the lines will be longer for keypunches and terminals, waits will be longer for print-outs, and tempers will become shorter.

A college where great issues shape the content of courses

GREAT ISSUES ARE NOT TO BE FOUND in Oskaloosa, Iowa, a farmland community in the south central part of a state that is literally middle America: 25th in population and 24th in size. But an excitement about great issues is here, which may be better. At William Penn College, a liberal arts Quaker school of 650 students in its 106th year, an innovative curriculum is based on classroom debates of the great contemporary issues.

The other morning, in a classroom of about 25 students and with a painting of the peaceable kingdom on the wall, I dropped in on one of the intellectual square-offs. Two students were matched against another two on the question of whether the media manipulate public opinion.

As the passing-through representative of the media that are probably the able reflectors of public opinion or (con) craft and systematic manipulators, I was at first interested to see who would "win" the debate.

But then, listening to the give and take of rebuttal and counter-rebuttal in which quotes from A.J. Liebling, I.F. Stone and other titans of the media exploded in the air like truth grenades, the purpose of this method of education slowly became obvious. First, it is meant to produce minds that can think and, second, it conforms to Aristotle's thoughts about argument in Book One of Rhetorica: "It is absurd to hold that a man ought to be ashamed of being unable to defend himself with his limbs, but not of being unable to defend himself with speech and reason, when the use of rational speech is more distinctive of a human being than the use of his limbs."

THE LEADING ARISTOTELIAN ON CAMPUS is Gus Tuberville, the college president. As one of 1,962 four-year college university presidents—every one of them nervous about the Three R's of higher education, Rising costs, Rising illiteracy and Rising competition for students—Tuberville had his fill of conventional teachers-talk-and-students-listen education. To him, that was oral chloroform.

"For learning to take place with any kind of efficiency," he says, "students must be motivated. To be motivated, they must become interested. And they become interested when they are actively working on projects which they can relate to their values and goals in life."

In 1979, Tuberville asked his teachers to shape their courses according to the great issues of the day. The risk was that this would be no more than bringing the Saturday night bull session into the daily classroom. But so far, little beery windiness has been heard.

The most impressive sign that the program is successful can be found in the campus library: In only one year, its use has tripled. Quakers are believers in friendly persuasion, one teacher told me, but the kids are discovering that well-researched and tightly reasoned persuasion has its uses too. The same teacher said that with the students becoming more articulate, orally and written, he himself can no longer pull out last year's lecture notes. He refers approvingly to the remark of John Holt, "The biggest enemy to learning is the talking teacher."

Colman McCarthy

AMONG THE TALKING STUDENTS in Penn's department of humanities, the debate topics for the current semester include: Resolved—that our environment determines everything about our behavior. Resolved that restricted drugs should be made available to cancer victims. Resolved: that the problem of racial prejudice has largely been solved in America.

In the department of natural science, the debates include: Resolved—that mining control techniques should be lifted due to the energy shortage in the world. Resolved: that radiation is a factor in mutations. In social sciences, it is resolved that the electoral college system should be abolished. It is resolved too that the food stamp program should be abolished and replaced by a cash grant program.

Penn students are asked to participate in at least one debate a semester, taking either the negative or affirmative. As word spreads nationally about the Great Issues program in tiny Oskaloosa—it is the healthy kin of the Great Books program at St. John's in Annapolis—the experiment is likely to be debated itself. Resolved: William Penn College is on to something.

I'll take the affirmative (c) 1981, The Washington Post Company

Thanks, reporters, you served us well

By Bill Aitken Student Writer

It must be a conspiracy against 18-20 year olds.

Not only must they contend with the long arm of the law that says that they can enter a Carbonale bar but not drink, now they must be wary of gung-ho would be Woodsteins and Bernwards with dreams of headlines, Pulitzer Prizes and the need for some good stories to send to potential employers along with their resume.

That girl at the bar may be Billie. The guy ordering from the waitress may be Rossi. And who knows which one is playing Animal. He's probably behind a two-way mirror like in the Mirage scandal in Chicago.

But at least staff writer Andrew Strang was kind enough to include in his story that underage drinkers stand a better chance of being served if they order from a waitress instead of the bartender. Thanks for the tip.

Underage drinkers at SIU-C should also give thanks to Daily Egyptian staff writer Tony Gordon for his help on how to obtain fake IDs. I never heard of Instant Passport Photos of St. Louis before and I thought "High Times" was a magazine aimed at the smoking, not drinking, audience. But his story wasn't thorough enough. He didn't even mention where to get the replacement sheets of plastic coating after the original has been steamed off the ID.

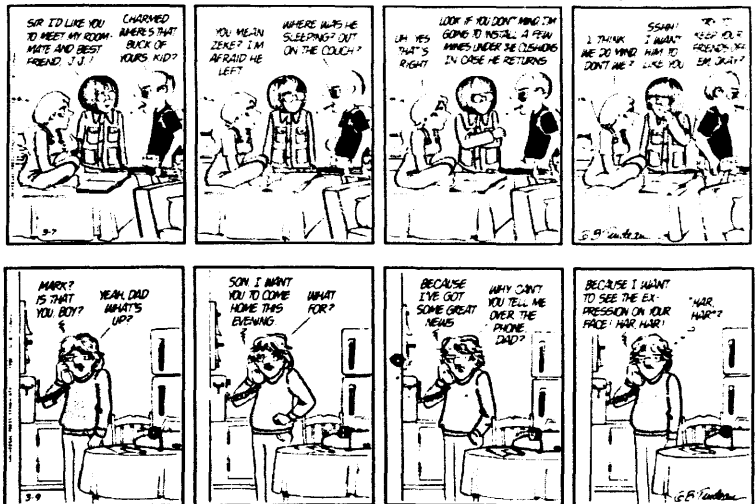

But the part of Gordon's story that is contradictory with the ethics of journalism is that he has withheld the names of the criminals who stole the 30 to 40 IDs from Woody Hall to get a story.

These students at large are known to the reporter and are freely walking through the halls of this institution—as is Tony Gordon, an accomplice to the crime. Reporters have been jailed for not revealing the names of sources.

All Strang and Gordon will get are pats on the back for a job well done and more stories to write about underage drinkers being arrested uptown, but in fact those DE reporters have sold out.

I've got a better story idea for Strang—try to find out who Gordon talked to and how he found out about the stolen IDs.

DOONESBURY

Activism a way of life for some

By Karen Gullo
Focus Editor

Over ten years have past since the riots at SIU-C, the murders at Kent State and the peak of the anti-war movement. Ten years ago people such as Abbie Hoffman, Jerry Rubin and Tom Hayden were so-called "radicals" at the helm of the movement. Protest was their job, the movement was their cause.

Today, Hoffman has emerged after six years as a fugitive and has begun a nation-wide college lecture tour. Some say he is selling out to the Establishment. The same thing is sometimes said about Jerry Rubin, who is trying his hand on Wall Street today. And Tom Hayden is dabbling in politics in California—a far cry from the "trust no one over 30" ideology of the late 1960s.

Like many college campuses, SIU-C had a vocal, visible anti-war movement in the early 1970s. Whereas Hoffman, Rubin and Hayden may have been household names to SIU-C students, the names of the local leaders of the anti-war movement are not as well-known or as well-remembered as those legendary hippie heroes of the 60s and 70s.

Where are the campus radicals of SIU-C today and what are they doing? A month-long search for the student and faculty leaders turned up several former activists who say they remember SIU-C well. Some of them say they are still activist, others said their activism began and ended at SIU-C, but all agreed that participating in the campus movement had a tremendous effect on their lives.

One former SIU-C activist, a Yale graduate and philosophy instructor, was a central figure in the controversy over the Center for Vietnamese Studies. Hired by the University to teach philosophy when he was 26, Douglas Allen was at SIU-C until 1970 when he was fired after being denied tenure by the SIU Board of Trustees.

Today, Allen is the chairman of the philosophy department at the University of Maine in Orono. Allen said he is just as politically active today as he was ten years ago at SIU-C.

"I never dropped out of the activist movement," Allen said. "There's a continuity in my life with activism."

Allen was the faculty advisor to the Southern Illinois Peace Committee, a group of students, faculty and community members who protested the war and organized anti-war activities. They were in part responsible for holding a rally on campus to protest the war which led to tear-gassing and the arrest of some 100 students.

Allen now heads a similar group in Maine—the Maine Peace Action committee. The 55-member group, comprised mainly of students and faculty, holds meetings, sponsors activities and does research on issues such as militarism, imperialism and foreign policy.

Allen said he notices a difference in student activism today.

"I really noticed a pattern in students of the 70s," Allen said. "They just don't get as involved in political activism. They are more concerned with their personal lives, they've become discouraged. Students feel that even if they try to be active, they won't get anywhere. Students have turned cynical towards activism."

At the University of Maine campus there are many single-issue groups—anti-nuclear, women's, gay, ecology and anti-war groups, Allen said. So in

Students confront National Guardsmen in front of what used to be the president's house on the early closing of the University in the spring of 1970. The confrontation was but one of many that led to the grounds where Faner Hall was later built. The some ways there is a revival of political activism.

"But we couldn't mobilize 3,000 student like we did in the 70s. We have more active people now, but when the Peace Committee plans an activity, it will attract maybe 100 to 200 people," he said.

Leaders such as Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin were the "entertainers" of the movement, Allen said.

"The media glamorized Hoffman and Rubin. They were not the reason we had a movement," Allen said. "You don't build a movement on a few individuals. In a sense, they weren't our leaders, they were the media hype. There were thousands of people who worked hard on the movement, who gave up their time and energy, and the media never reported on them. They made the movement."

One reason why student activism has changed so drastically in the past 10 years is a difference in young peoples' perception of the government, Allen said.

"In the 50s we thought the president was wonderful, that government was great and we had confidence in the country," Allen said. "Now students are cynical. They didn't look up to Ford or Carter they way we looked up to Kennedy and Truman."

'Viet Center' served as past student protest site

By David Murphy
Staff Writer

SIU-C students today probably don't know very much about the Center for Vietnamese Studies or a man named Doug Allen. Ten years ago, though, these names were the focus of a raging, sometimes violent, controversy between students, faculty members and administrators at the University.

In the years from 1969 to 1973, the "Viet Center," as it was called, was a focal point for student protest and was the site of several violent confrontations between students and police. Academic protest against the center was led by Allen, a professor of philosophy, who was eventually denied tenure by the University for his activities.

The center was officially established in July, 1969 with a $1 million grant from the Agency for International Development, a branch of the State Department. The center's function, according to the grant, was to provide "programs of technical assistance and consultation, research and training related to the economic and social needs of Vietnam and its postwar reconstruction."

Protests began almost immediately. These protests focused around the question of whether a university campus was the proper place for a government-sponsored facility that was directly involved in the Vietnam War. At a protest conference in October, Allen called for the center's removal from campus, calling it "a continuation of America's disastrous policy in Vietnam."

In January, 1970, police and students battled in front of the center, then located in Woody Hall.

In February, a march organized against the center led to a brick and mortar-throwing spree in the middle of Illinois Avenue which had to be broken up by police.

In May, 1970, a referendum held among students showed that 6,000 of 10,000 students voting wanted the center removed from campus.

Throughout the next two years, protests and rallies against the center were repeatedly held, organized by now-defunct groups like the Southern Illinois Peace Committee and the Student Mobilization Committee.

During this time, Allen came increasingly to the forefront as a leader of protest against the center in the academic community. In October, 1970, he organized a conference of Asian scholars from around the country which criticized the center.

In November, the Board of Trustees denied Allen academic tenure, saying later that he gave "inadequate attention to scholarly duties," and introduced into the class room "controversial matter not relevant to the subject."

Allen immediately brought suit against the University through the American Civil Liberties Union, claiming he had been terminated because of his personal beliefs, not his academic credentials.

The suit trudged through the courts for five years, until Allen and the University reached an out-of-court settlement in 1975. Allen received $35,000 in damages.

Meanwhile, student protests continued. In the summer of 1971, the center was removed from Woody Hall and moved to College Square.

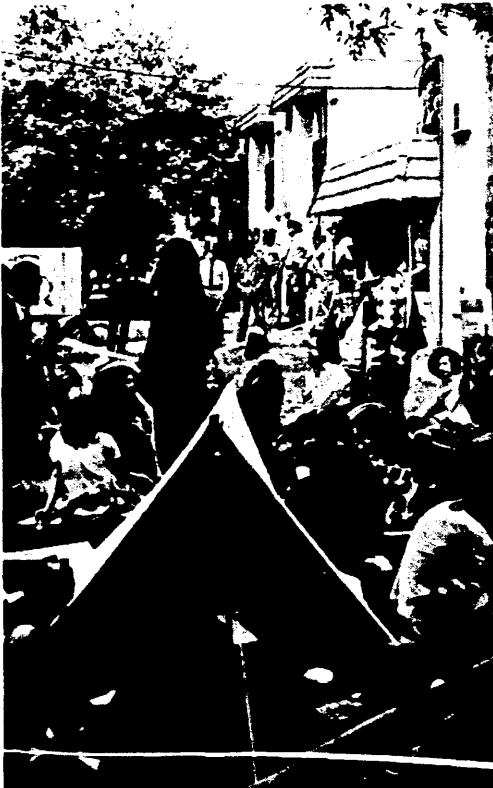

In May of 1972, students set up a mock Vietnamese village with tents and began prolonged fasts outside the center to protest its presence. When police cleared them from this area, they set the village up on campus.

Later that month, a demonstration resulted in the teargassing and beating of students. Nearly 100 students were arrested.

Today, the center still exists but has no office or special funding. Its current director, Professor Dahn-hoa Nguyen, said that it offers mainly courses in the Vietnamese language.

"Most of our work is in the linguistics department, now," he said. "We have no money in our budget like we used to."

In May 1972, students set up a mock Vietnamese village on what used to be University property on Wall Street to protest the presence of the Center for Vietnamese Studies. The protest was spearheaded by Doug Allen, then professor of philosophy, who can be seen, bearded and bald-headed, in the middle of the picture.

The government has changed, the issues are different and the level of student activism has dropped off, but according to Allen most students of the late 60s spent their time doing the same things students do now, maybe watching TV or drinking beer, but not being active.

Sheldon Rosenwieg was a social work major at SIU-C in the early 1970s. He was also a member of the Students for a Democratic Society and a writer for the Big Muddy Gazette, SIU-C's radical underground newspaper.

Today, Rowenwieg is working on his master's degree in counseling at the University of Alabama. He is married and has a 2-year-old daughter.

Rosenwieg said his activism didn't end with college. He considers his social work with the poor in Tuscaloosa, where he resides, as a real form of activism.

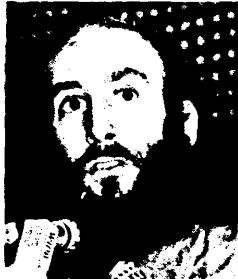

Rosenwieg said the memories of the Vietnam protests are still with young people today and this accounts for the small amount of activism on today's campuses.

"The lingering memory of the Vietnam protests are still with us today," he said. "It shows that people are very hesitant to involve themselves in a protest over the situation in El Salvador."

Thirty-year-old Ken Zucker, a doctoral candidate in psychology and part-time instructor at the University of Toronto, was president of the Southern Illinois Peace Committee in 1970. In articles covering the campus protest movement in the Daily Egyptian, Zucker's name is often mentioned as the SI Peace committee spokesman.

Zucker said his activist days are over.

"It's so much safer to be anonymous and that's what I am," Zucker said.

Douglas Allen

It's more interesting and exciting to be active on an individual basis."

Today's society doesn't support protest movements, Zucker said, but 10 years ago the anti-war movement had not only opposition, but much sympathy and support.

"One of the problems with living in North America today is there are no heroes," said Zucker, who has been living in Canada for the last five years. "Students really want to believe in something, but there is no coherence or heroes in society, so young people attach themselves to anything that can give them meaning."

The movie "Ordinary People" illustrates his point, Zucker said. "People can lead ordinary, successful lives without emotion or meaning."

Zucker said he always liked Abbie Hoffman because "he had a great sense of humor."

"What heroes do is express for people what they are thinking and that's what Hoffman did," Zucker said.

Manuel Schonhorn, an SIU-C English professor who also criticized the presence of the Center for Vietnamese Studies on campus ten years ago, is the secretary-treasurer of Amnesty International, a worldwide group opposed to human rights violations. During the late 60s and early 70s, Schonhorn worked for the school committees of the American Civil Liberties Union in Carbondale.

"Those were the days of long-hair suspensions and dress code suspensions," Schonhorn, 50, said. "We worked in dealing with the illegalities of suspending students because of the length of their hair or they way they dressed."

Schonhorn said there couldn't be a single faction of student activists today because the issues are too numerous and overwhelming.

"The Viet Center was right there, it was something you could see," he said. "Today, students can't grasp apartheid in South Africa or guerilla warfare in El Salvador."

The days of student activism on campus may indeed be over, but according to those who took part in the anti-war movement of the 60s and 70s activism is more than just marches and peace symbols. It's a way of life.

Bricks in toilet save water usage

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Why put a tiger in your tank when you can have a great white shark for just $1.50?

Capitalizing on the water shortage in northern Delaware, students have painted bricks to resemble the "Jaws" monster and are peddling the finished product as a handy dandy water saver for toilet tanks.

Experts say bricks in toilet tanks will corrode and clog pipes. But Walter said the club's bricks being sold at a Junior Achievement Trade Fair are covered with a water-based paint to keep the bricks from breaking down.

Abbie Hoffman who? Students have mixed reaction to 'radical'

By Bill Turley
Staff Writer

Abbie Hoffman would have a tough time getting elected in an undergraduate election on this campus because of a name recognition problem.

Of about 20 students asked if they knew who Hoffman, a famous—or notorious depending on the perspective—radical from the 1960s is, only half said they knew of him.

One woman student even asked, "Who's she?"
Some who were aware of him knew little about the man and couldn't comment on him. But of those that did the reaction was varied.

"I think he's cashing in on what he once was," said Mike Logue, sophomore in music business.

"The ads in the D.E. just add to the hype. If he had some value and contributions to make and isn't just out to make money then I think it's right," he said.

Logue was unsure whether he would go to see Hoffman but said he knew several people who were going.

Ticket sales for the lecture are "going as well expected," according to Greg Janese, chairman of the Student Programming Council Executive Arts Committee. Hoffman was originally scheduled to appear here last fall, Janese said, but the former radical's attorneys advised him to stay in New York so he cancelled. Janese said, "Because he cancelled before some people are waiting until the last minute to buy their tickets."

One student who was unsure if he would go to see Hoffman was Jeff Herzberger, sophomore in business and geology.

Herzberger said he saw nothing wrong with Hoffman going on the lecture circuit because Hoffman was on "the radical top ten and the rest of the top ten have done it, why not him? It might be interesting to hear his thoughts on the 60s."

Herzberger, 30, was in Chicago in 1968 during the Democratic Convention riots, riots Hoffman and seven others were accused of inciting, and he said "I was in shock and trying to tell myself this is America."

"But I'm not going to say he was wrong to start it," said Herzberger, who also said he became an activist later while in college.

Kathy Miller, freshman in elementary education, remembered him as the guy who "didn't go to Vietnam." Miller said she had three brothers who fought in the Vietnam war and she would not go see Hoffman because "I think other people have better stories than him, like people who went to the war."

Tom Grant, junior in communication graphics—design, disagreed, saying "Hoffman may have a pretty interesting story as a fugitive from justice."

Scott Pollard, junior in business, said Hoffman "went a little overboard on some of the things he did. But maybe drastic measures were called for."

Pollard said Hoffman's lecture tour "was a bit of a sellout" and said Hoffman was "coming back into the establishment." But he said he saw Hoffman on a talk show and thought he was entertaining.

Lori Kirchner, senior in communication graphics and design, said she wasn't aware of Hoffman until last fall when Hoffman was originally scheduled to lecture on campus.

Kirchner said she was unsure if Hoffman was doing the right thing going on the lecture circuit because "I don't think I'd want people to know all about my charges. He kind of broadcasts it."

'Vanya' performance a credit to Chekhov's philosophy of life

By Abigail Kimmel
Student Writer

A country estate is usually considered a place of tranquility, happy activity and of general harmony strewn with little everyday calamities and celebrations.

But in Anton Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya," the happy activity of a country estate soon dissolves into listless indolence and boredom which destroys the tranquility and disrupts the harmony with agitation and confusion.

Chekhov wrote to discourage the wasting of life by boredom and apathy, both in humanity and environment. As directed by Meredith M. Taylor, the performance given Thursday night at McLeod Theater was a credit to Chekhov's philosophy.

Nine people live on the Serebriakov country estate in Russia in 1900. The estate is owned by Sonia, who farms it with her Uncle Vanya. They have been sending most of the profits to Sonia's father, Alexander, in order that he may pursue his work as lecturer, writer and professor of art. Alexander has married again to Yelena, whom Vanya loves. Yelena loves Mikhail Astrov, a country doctor who loves Yelena in return, but who is also loved by Sonia.

The scenario may sound like a soap opera of unrequited love, but the resolution of these triangles makes for sometimes comedic, more often poignant drama.

In the title role of Uncle

Vanya, Elias Eliadas gave a thoughtful, moving performance, showing another side to his acting ability apart from his usual comic roles. Astrov was charmingly played by Brad Griffith, though his character was sometimes not as bored as the script suggested. The men's friendship and later rivalry were pleasing and then unsettling, as their sentiments toward Yelena were revealed.

As Yelena, Jeanne Gilbert displayed an air of indifference which hid a passionate fear of being mentally, emotionally and intellectually choked.

Though at times it seemed almost too well hidden, she exuded that poise, grace and sometimes pathetic resignation that men supposedly find irresistible in women, especially in those women married to men 30 years their senior.

Rita Sand's Sonia was a wonderful foil to Yelena, being a woman of strength, intelligence and realistic thinking. Sonia was the character most everyone could empathize with, or at least want to, since she was not the "most beautiful, exquisite woman on earth" as Yelena was described. She instead was a passionate, sensitive, "ordinary" woman with a great deal of good sense, which didn't happen to appeal to the men. Alexander was played very well by Michael Myers as the short-sighted, philosophical professor whose mother-in-law favors him in every way over her own son. Vanya, Faith Potts' Maman was the stiff, regal, rather unfeeling matriarch, played with the right touch of ice queen.

Judith F. Lyons as Nyanya, Sonia's old nurse, and Anthony Joseph Hausmann as Ilya Ilyich, Sonia's godfather, were both delightful as the caring, older stable forces on the estate whose opinions were never really considered, but who were always there when needed.

The performance wasted no emotion on the audience, it poured it over us slowly, allowing it to be absorbed. It truly left me feeling that I should go out and live, not merely play at living.

SPC pays homage to bad films with screening of three classics

By Bill Crowe
Staff Writer

Bad movies, sometimes referred to with such colorful descriptions as "stinkers," "dogs of the week" and other unmentionable terms, have always been a staple feature at drive-ins, second-rate movie houses and on late-night TV. They also hold a morbid fascination for both film buffs and fans of high camp in general.

The Student Programming Council Video Committee will pay homage to three of the all-time immortal pieces of celluloid excrement Monday, Wednesday and Thursday when they present "The Worst of the Worst Film Festival." Monday's stinker will be "The Creeping Terror," followed by "Plan 9 From Outer Space" on Wednesday and "They Saved Hitler's Brain" (what a wholesome title) on Thursday. All shows will be screened at 7 and 9 p.m. at the Student Center Video Lounge. Admission is 75 cents each night.

Until a couple of years ago, appreciation of bad films was generally kept under wraps. Followers of campy, inane and downright stupid filmmaking were embarrassed to let others know of their secret tastes. That all changed, however, when an industrious pair of bad film devotees, Harry and Michael Medved, came out of the closet. In the late-70s, the duo published "The Fifty Worst Films of All Time," a cult classic which honored such immortal pieces of film as "The Conqueror," in which John Wayne gives a memorably bad performance as Genghis Khan, and "Godzilla vs. the Smog Monster."

The book was a surprising success and was quickly followed up by "The Golden Turkey Awards," sort of a bastard son of the Academy Awards. Honors doled out in the "Turkey" book included: "The Worst Performance by an Actor as Jesus Christ," "The Most Ridiculous Monster in Screen History," "The P.T. Barnum Award for the Worst Cinematic Exploitation of a Physical Deformity" and "The Most Unerotic Concept in Pornography."

In fact, all three films to be screened this week figure prominently in the "Turkey" award book. Here's a synopsis of each of these classic dogs.

"The Creeping Terror" (1964)—The compelling tale of a long, vicious monster that looks like a huge shag rug and munches on humans. Shot entirely in Lake Tahoe, Nev., the soundtrack to this film was lost and the entire story is told by a narrator. This film was nominated for "The Most Ridiculous Monster in Screen History" in the "Turkey" book, but lost out to a man in a giant ape suit with a deep-sea diving helmet in "Robot Monster." "Plan 9 From Outer Space" (1959)—Voted by the Medveds' readers as "The Worst Film of All Time," this movie was directed by the immortal Edward Wood, Jr., who was voted "The Worst Director of All Time." Along with its paper plate flying saucers and cardboard graveyard scenes, this stinker is immortal for exploiting itself as the last movie in Bela Lugosi's career; he only appears in about two minutes of the film (he suddenly died) and was replaced by an unemployed chiropractor who stood a foot taller than Lugosi and held a black cane in front of his face.

"They Saved Hitler's Brain" (1964)—Voted "The Most Brainless Brain Movie of All Time," this film tells the story of a group of Nazi doctors that preserve the Fuhrer's grey matter in a pickle jar hooked up to a bubbling life-support system. Lasting only 74 minutes, this film's slim plot is padded with stories of a Latin American banana republic, revolutions and a corrupt El Presidente. It's classic melodrama, to say the least.

If these mindless films aren't enough for some bad film devotees, there's still hope.

Considering the recent output by the major movie companies, the future looks bright ahead.

Buffett concert a mixture of older songs, new material

By Rod Smith
Entertainment Editor

Jimmy Buffett is the type of person with whom you'd like to sit with on the deck of a ship with a bottle of tequila and sing and philosophize about islands, sailing, women, drinking and generally living the good life. Buffett and his Coral Reefer Band celebrated their sixth anniversary together Wednesday night before a slim crowd of about 4,500 at the Arena. Although the audience was small in number, it wasn't small in enthusiasm. It seemed as if everyone there was a true every phase and every album of his career. The fans of his earlier albums acknowledged older tunes like "Pencil Thin Moustache," "Come Monday," and "A Pirate Looks At Forty," as well as responding favorably to his lone hit single, "Margaritaville," and seven. See BUFFETT page 13 fan of the cult-figure singer-songwriter.

Buffett opened the concert with nothing more than his acoustic guitar. He immediately struck up conversation and a brilliant rapport with the audience that continued throughout each of two hour-long sets. It made one feel that a better environment—a beach, a ship's deck or a smaller auditorium such as Shryock—would greatly add to the mood Buffett had created. His tender strumming wasn't suited for the cavernous, acoustically poor Arena.

Nevertheless, Buffett, casually dressed in a Wildlife Preservation sport shirt, jeans and tennis shoes, led off the show with solo versions of "Stranded On A Sandbar" and "Changes In Latitudes, Changes In Attitudes," gradually adding band members until finally, after six tunes, the entire eight-piece Coral Reefer cast was on stage. Buffett spun tale after tale, playing songs from nearly

in disneyland death

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — A teen-ager was stabbed to death at Disneyland in what spokesmen say is the first killing in the amusement park's 25-year history.

Mel C. Yorda, 18, of Riverside, died Saturday at a nearby hospital. Police arrested a San Diego man and woman for investigation of murder.

James O'Driscoll, 28, and Julie Holdener, 25, were being held in lieu of $250,000 bail each.

Labahn said Yorda was stabbed during an altercation that broke out shortly after 10 p.m. in the Tomorrowland area of the park. Disneyland spokesman Bob Roth said the incident occurred during a private party sponsored by Rohr Corp.

1. Call home. Report the situation, and tell the folks they can get emergency cash to you fast by phone.

2. Ask them to call Western Union's toll-free number, 800-325-6000 (in Missouri, 800-342-6700), anytime, day or night. They charge the money and the service fee to their MasterCard® or cuts from his latest album, "Coconut Telegraph."

 Highlights were a bluesy, picking version of "God's Own Drunk" which featured some spirited harp playing from Greg "Fingers" Taylor, the rowdy "Why Don't We Get Drunk And..." the calypso oriented "Volcano" which was played before a slide show backdrop of the title, and "Cheeseburger In Paradise" where Buffett was presented with a monstrous burger from some front-row chefs.
 The show was primarily very mellow with the lyrics being showcased more than the group's instrumental talents. Taylor had a few nice harp solos as did lead guitarist Barry Chance, but for the most part, they were unfortunately seldom heard from. Whenever the band performed a rowdy number like "Cheeseburger" or "The Weather Is Here, Wish You Were Beautiful" that got the crowd to its feet, they were put back in their seats by a soft mellow tune.
 Hearing the lyrics from Buffett's latest LP, it is apparent that he is more introspective and thoughtful than the rowdy, boozing and womanizing subject matter of his past.

After seeing this show, I want to see Buffett again. Only next time, in a smaller, more intimate setting.

Netters whip Tigers; extend streak to four

By Greg Walsh
Staff Writer

It's now four wins in a row for the Saluki men's tennis team. But according to Coach Dick LeFevre, the 3-4 win over Missouri Saturday in Columbia, Mo., was definitely the hardest and the most exciting.

The Salukis raised their record to 4-1, while the Tigers went even at 2-2.

LeFevre said the match was exciting because the teams were tied 3-3 after the singles matches, and the Salukis lost the No. 1 doubles match, but tied the team score again at 4-4 when the Salukis' No. 3 doubles team won.

In the last doubles match that was played, the Tigers took a late advantage.

LeFevre said the team match looked lost when the Salukis' No. 2 doubles team of Brian Stanley and David Filer was down 0-5 in the third set and even at 1-1.

"They came back to tie it up then sent it into a tiebreaker and won the tiebreaker," LeFevre said. "That is almost impossible."

"It was one of the most exciting matches we've ever played. They were much tougher than we thought," LeFevre said. "We were lucky to get out of that one with a win."

LeFevre felt the Salukis may have been overconfident going to the match because they found out Friday that Missouri's No. 1 player, Mark Sissel, was out of the Tiger lineup due to torn foot ligaments. Sissel was the top singles player in the Big Eight Conference last year.

"They (the Salukis) thought they could just walk onto the court and win the match," LeFevre said.

But it was the just the opposite. The Tigers became a better team after Sissel was taken out. LeFevre said Sissel, who had been playing hurt for about three weeks, probably would have lost his match with the Salukis No. 1 player Guy Hooper, and given the SIU-C a 4-2 advantage in the singles.

As it turned out, Missouri's interim No. 1 man, Scott Whaley, won decisively over Hooper, 6-1, 6-1.

Brian Stanley of SIU-C won the first set against Mark Sims 6-0, then lost 2-6 before winning the third set 6-0.

Saluki No. 3 player Lito Ampon had the controversial match against Ken MacDougall. LeFevre said. With the tiebreaker tied at 4-4, Ampon lost the third set, and the match, when MacDougall ruled a ball out that many of the Salukis thought was in.

"Players were required to call their own matches." The final score ended up, 7-5, 4-6, 7-6. Filer won the No. 4 match over the Tigers' Brett Blair, 6-4, 6-2, and Saluki John Greif defeated Shawn Boat.

Gymnasts split 2 dual meets

By Mike Anthony
Staff Writer

The pressure is off the SIU-C women's gymnastics team. Last week's victory over the Louisville Cardinals put the Salukis in a position that they could lose all of their remaining meets, and still enjoy their 18th consecutive winning season.

This weekend, the Salukis have a hectic schedule. Saturday, SIU-C will face the University of Illinois Illini at Champaign in a dual meet, and Sunday, the Salukis will face the Missouri Tigers and the Iowa Hawkeyes in a double dual meet at Columbia, Mo.

According to Saluki Coach Herb Vogel, the biggest factor for SIU-C this weekend will be fatigue. There will be only a little more than 12 hours separating the conclusion of the Saluki-Illini meet and the warm-ups for the double dual meet in Missouri. Half of that time will be devoted to travel, Vogel added.

"Earlier in the season," Vogel said, "I don't think we could have handled this type of test. Physically, unless we pick up some bumps and bruises, the team can handle this weekend if mentally they accept the weekend as just another problem that an aggressive attitude can and shall overcome."

The Illini have never beat the Salukis in a dual meet, but Illinois beat SIU-C two years ago in the Illinois AIAW State Championship 130.95-130.70.

"The Illini are improved over last year," Vogel said, "but they are not living up to their expectations."

This meet could very well preview and set the tone for the Illinois AIAW State Championship meet on March 13, Vogel said.

"The outcome, event for event, could predict who the new 1981 state individual champion might well be, or at least indicate to the Saluki women what each must do in preparation to gain individual state titles, and all-state recognition," Vogel added.

The Saluki all-arounders, Val Painton, Lori Erickson, Pam Turner and Pam Conklin will challenge the Illini's allarounders Heidi Helmke, Mary Amico and Karen Brems.

Helmke, a former Illinois state prep champion in vaulting and the Illini's most consistent scoring all-arounder, recorded a 35.50 score in a quadrangular meet against top-ranked Utah last month. Helmke sprained an ankle and missed a dual meet against Illinois-Chicago Circle last week.

Sunday, the 13th-ranked Salukis will face 11th-ranked Missouri and Iowa. SIU-C is looking to avenge its Jan. 11, loss against Missouri in which the Tigers slid by the Salukis, 139.25-136.15.

"The most difficult aspect of the weekend will be the double dual meet on Sunday," Vogel said. "Missouri beat us in the season opener, so they should be better, as we are better."

The Tigers are currently 9-4 in dual meet competition this season, while the Salukis are 9-3. Missouri also finished second in the Big Eight Conference meet last week.

This weekend, freshman D.D. Mooney is scheduled to make her first appearance in the Saluki lineup since fracturing her foot last semester. Vogel said. Prior to her injury, Mooney's potential had earned her a starting position in floor exercise and balance beam.

"We are going to give her a shot at getting her position back," Vogel said. "If we learn that she is a competitor, she will certainly help the Saluki cause as we close out the year."

DePaul tops Notre Dame

ROSEMONT (UPI)—Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps had maintained it was Clyde Bradshaw rather than Mark Aguirre who would cause the Irish the most problems in the annual grudge match between the two powers.

Sunday, Bradshaw made Phelps' words come true.

The senior guard engineered the Blue Demons' offense and forced several turnovers to lead second-ranked DePaul to a 74-64 win over seventh-ranked Notre Dame before a season-high crowd of 17,579 and a national television audience.

"It's almost impossible for him to be stopped from getting the ball," Phelps said. "He's the quarterback and when he's on, we're in trouble."

Aguirre, despite playing in foul trouble throughout the game, did lead DePaul in scoring with 24 points. But it was Bradshaw who ignited the Blue Demons' fast break. Bradshaw, playing his last regular-season game at home, had 14 points, 13 assists and three steals. He was named the game's Most Valuable Player.

"I don't know if this was my best game ever. Sometimes Coach thinks I played well when I didn't. And other times, I think I played well and Coach says I didn't," Bradshaw said.

Three Rivers coach applies at SIU-C

By Scott Stahmer
Sports Editor

Gene Bess, head coach at Three Rivers Community College, is the third confirmed applicant for the vacant SIU-C men's basketball head coaching position.

"I'm at the point where I've gone about as far as I think I can go with this program," the 46-year-old Bess said. "I've been here 11 years and I'm interested in a Division I job."

The other known applicants for the Saluki job, which opened up when Joe Gottfried resigned, are Bob Brown, former head coach at John A. Logan College, and Bernie Kirsner, ex-New York City high school coach.

Men's Athletics Director Gale Savers has said he will hire Gottfried's replacement by April 1.

Bess' 11 years at Three Rivers, located in Poplar Bluff, Mo., have been prosperous ones. The Cape Girardeau, Mo., native won his 300th game (against 88 losses) when the Raiders defeated Crowder Community College Friday night.

That win advanced the Raiders, ranked No. 1 among the nation's junior colleges, to the national tournament for the fourth straight year. Three Rivers, 36-1 this year, won the junior college tournament in 1979 and was fifth last year.

"This group has really surprised and amazed me," Bess said. "Our tallest man is 6-4 1/2, and the next tallest is 6-3. We missed out on a couple big men last spring and I thought that might hold us down, but it hasn't."

"We're ranked No. 1 going into the tournament, but that doesn't mean a great deal. I do think our chances are as good as anybody's."

Bess said he is happy at Three Rivers and would leave the school only for a significantly better job.

"It has to be an excellent situation to get me to leave," he said. "It would have to be a Division I situation where I'd be bettering myself. I've been able to build programs and compete on top levels wherever I've been the coach."

"All I know about the SIU situation is what I've known from past years. I know they've got a beautiful location and a great facility, and I know they've had some excellent teams."

Bess said his players at Three Rivers are recruited "from all over" and said he would continue this policy if hired by the Salukis.

"We take a lot of pride in bringing good people in," he said. "We've had a lot of good players from Memphis and St. Louis. I think I'd want to work with the Chicago area and also get good local talent."

Bess said two of his team's shooting guards are being recruited by major colleges, but added that he would evaluate the Salukis' situation before signing them if he becomes SIU-C's coach.

"I don't know if they'd be what we would need," he said. "I do have access to a lot of junior college players but I don't know if they'd be needed immediately."

Tankers relinquish conference crown

The Saluki men's swimming and diving team failed in its bid to win its fourth consecutive National Independent Conference Championship title, placing second with 406 points in the meet held Thursday through Saturday at Columbia, S.C.

Miami finished first in the 17-team meet with 418 points. South Carolina placed third with 289 points and Cincinnati was fourth with 219 points.

In the three-day meet, the Salukis won only two events, but recorded a number of lifetime best and unretired best times. SIU-C's Mike Brown captured the 500-yard freestyle with a 4:30, and Rick Theobald finished first in one-meter diving.

According to Saluki Coach Bob Steele, an important factor that weighed heavily in the outcome of the meet was the addition of several "quality" Metro Conference teams, especially Cincinnati, Florida State and Tulane.

"This meet is no longer a dual meet between SIU and Miami," Steele said. "It's hard to believe the complexion of the meet could change so fast. The addition of the other teams has made this a first-class conference meet."

Times that would have placed sixth in previous years were placing in the 20s this year. Steele said. He added that times that would have won last year were seventh- and eighth-place times this year.

Another important factor in the outcome of the meet, Steele said, was SIU-C's decision that Salukis who earlier qualified for the NCAA championship meet wouldn't be rested and shaved for the meet. Instead, they would work their way through the meet in preparation for the NCAA finals.

Steele said only about eight swimmers in the meet were not rested and shaved, which contributed to the faster times recorded.

Salukis Conrado Porta, Anders Norling, Roger Von-Joanne and Pat Looby finished third in the 400-yard medley relay with a time of 3:24.1.

In the 100-yard freestyle, SIU-C's Keith Armstrong placed third and Looby finished fourth with times of 45.31 and 45.8, respectively. Armstrong's time was a lifetime best, and places him third on the Saluki Swimming Honor Roll.

Porta finished second in the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 1:51.8, which is an unretired best swim time. Saluki Mike Bohl placed fourth at 1:52.8, a lifetime best swim that places him fourth on the SIU-C Swimming Honor Roll. Porta also finished second in the 100-yard backstroke at 51.66.

SIU-C's Larry Wooley placed third in the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 2:05.3, just 3 seconds off the NCAA qualifying time standard and placing him on the honor roll.

The Salukis made the NCAA qualifying time standards in both the 800- and 400-yard freestyle relays. In the 800-yard free relay, SIU-C's Carlos Henao, Tony Byrne, Porta and Brown finished second to Miami with a time of 6:44.9. In the 400-yard free relay, Porta, Byrne, Looby and Armstrong finished second to Cincinnati at 3:02.74.

In the one-meter diving, Salukis Jim Watson and George Greenleaf finished fifth and sixth, respectively. Theobald captured third place in the three-meter diving, and Greenleaf placed fifth.

Lee charting route to nationals

By Greg Walsh
Staff Writer

David Lee, SIU-C's top trackster, combined his great running ability with the fast track at Middle Tennessee State to post the nation's second best 440-yard dash time, thus qualifying him for the NCAA Indoor Track Championships in that event.

Lee and teammates Karsten Schulz and Tom Ross were sent to the "Last Chance" meet in Murfreesboro, Tenn., by Coach Lew Hartzog in hopes of qualifying in unfamiliar events. Lee, who has also qualified in the 60-yard high hurdles and long jump, ran a 47.24 in the 440, only .04 off the nation's current best held by Kansas All-American Dion Hogan.

"I am not really surprised," Hartzog said. "I kind of had a feeling he could do it. But not that fast."

"It is a tribute to a guy who is a fantastic athlete."

Even though he posted a great time, Hartzog said Lee had a little trouble with the 280-yard unbanked track because it was almost circular, making Lee contend with an almost constant turn.

"You have to remember that Lee is 6-3 1/2. So when he goes around those turns it hurts," Hartzog said. "He probably could have done better if it had been outdoors."

Schulz and Ross did not do as well in the mile run. Both missed the qualifying time of 4:05.5, with Schulz, already a qualifier in the 1,000-meter run, running a 4:07.3, and Ross a 4:07.09.

"Those two guys ran good races," Hartzog said both may have been tired because "I have used those guys a lot over the last three weeks."

NCAA issues basketball tourney bids

MISSION, Kan. (AP)—Top-ranked Oregon State, Louisiana State, De Paul and Virginia all drew top seeds Sunday in the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I basketball tournament.

The nine-man basketball committee spent "an arduous 2 1/2 days choosing and seeding the 48-team field," chairman Wayne Duke said.

Twenty-two teams were given at-large invitations to go with 26 automatic qualifiers. The rash of weekend upsets in postseason tournaments caused considerable problems, Duke said, and even diluted the quality of the field.

Oregon State, 26-1, ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press poll, drew the top seed in the West, while second ranked DePaul, 26-1 following its 74-64 victory Sunday over Notre Dame, is seeded first in the Midwest Region.

LSU, 28-3 and ranked No. 3 in the AP poll, is the top seed in the Midwest and Virginia, 25-3 and No. 4 in the " in the top seed in the East.

Teams receiving at-large berths in the Midwest Regional were LSU, Iowa, 21-6, Arizona

State, 24-3, Wichita State, 23-6, Arkansas, 22-7, and Missouri, 22-9.

At-large teams placed in the Midwest are Boston College, 21-6, Maryland, 20-9, Alabama-Birmingham, 21-8, Kentucky, 22-5, Wake Forest, 22-6, and De Paul.

The West at-large entrants are Kansas State, 21-8, Wyoming, 23-5, and Illinois, 20-7.

In the East, the at-large teams are Villanova, 19-10, Brigham Young, 22-6, Georgetown, 20-11, Tennessee, 20-7, UCLA, 20-6, Notre Dame, 22-5, and Virginia.

First-round regional action will be March 12 and 14 at Providence in the East Region, Los Angeles in the West, Austin, Texas in the Midwest and Dayton, Ohio, in the Midwest.

At Providence, BYU, 22-6, will meet the Ivy League champion, either Penn or Princeton, with the winner playing UCLA. In the other first-round game, Georgetown, 20-11, meets James Madison, 20-8, with the winner going against Notre Dame. The other first-round site in the East Region is Charlotte, N.C., March 13 and

15. Houston, 21-8, will play Villanova, 19-10, and the winner will meet Virginia. Virginia Commonwealth, 22-4, plays Long Island University, 18-10, with the winner going against Tennessee, 20-7.

The top four seeds in each region receive a bye into the second round.

In Los Angeles, Kansas State will meet the West Coast Athletic Conference champion, either San Francisco or Pepperdine, and the winner will go against Oregon State.
