Gary Kolb becomes acting dean of engineering

JULIE SWEKSON Daily Egyptian

Gary Kolb said he is happy to be the new acting dean of the College of Engineering, effective Monday.

"Obviously it's going to be more work, and I'm not sure anybody is excited about taking on a second juic. but at the same time, I am excited," Kolb said. I think I have a lot of experience at SIU to bring to bear on this situation and I feel like I can be of some benefit to the college."

Chancellor Rita Cheng sent an e-mail to faculty and staff Monday to announce Kolb's acceptance of the position. Cheng said Kolb's skills as an administrator and faculty member more than qualify him for the position.

"Gary provides outstanding leadership in his college, and he and I are confident that with the help of the faculty and staff in both colleges, he can manage the workload," she said in the e-mail.

Kolb said he expects to maintain the position of acting dean until a new dean is appointed, which will ost likely be in July or August.

He first became a candidate for the position after a member of the screening ? committee contacted him and told him to apply in mid- college to see what issues need February, he said. After the chancellor received recommendations from the screening committee, she called Kolb in week to talk about the job, he said.

As acting dean, Kolb said his job is to help prepare the college for its new permanent dean, as well as to help review faculty up for promotion and tenure, He said he will work to meet with constituent groups within the addressing and find possible solutions to the problems. Kolb said he has not discussed how he will split tasks with Acting Associate Dean Lizette Chevalier. Chevalier is out of town and will return Thursday.

Low enrollment figures one factor in possible tuition hike

BRANDON COLEMAN Dally Egyptian

Higher enrollment numbers used to allow the SIU system to keep tuition costs down, but only SIUE manages to continually increase its enrollment, SIU spokesman David Gross said STUC enrollment peaked at 24,869 in 1991 but has seen a steady decrease during the past two decades. Enrollment has dropped every year since 2005.

increase could provide $5.7 million needed to cover the deficit.

Gross said the STU Board of Trustees would vote on the trition increase in May if it is proposed. He said a tuition increase is preded because state appropriations dropped by 7 percent after the board froze tultion for the 2009-2010 school year.

Under the Truth-in-Tuition Law, state-funded institutions are prohibited from increasing tuition for students after their freshman year, Gross said :-

"That's why these tuition increases have occurred every year; because (students' freshman year) is the only year in which to make tuition increases under state law," he said.

SIUC has kept its tuition down more than most other state universities, Poshard said. He said SIUC froze tuition while other universities raised it by at least 8 percent for the 2009-2010 school

The state owes the SIU system $147 million in appropriations for fiscal year 2011, Poshard said, and it's possible state funding could be cut by another 10 percent in May or June.

Nicklow said financial aid packages can help offset a possible tuition

What we're trying to do is get the word out that financial aid at STUC is an extremely valuable asset," Nicklow said.

More than 79 percent of SIUC students receive some form of financial aid, according to the SIU fiscal year 2009 summary of financial aid. Total financial aid money distributed to SIUC students was $262,681,562 with $100,078,333 coming from grants, $123,085,700 from loans and $39,517,529 from student employment.

The total funds for federal Pell Grants and state Monetary Award Program Grants do not increase or decrease if tuition rises, Poshard said.

But the federal government is considering reduction of Pell Grant funding, and state funding for the MAP Grant has leveled off.

Tamara Loyd Workman, director of Transfer Student Services, told the Daily Egyptian March 1 there are a lot of reasons why financial aid hasn't caught up to the cost of tuition and fees, and the state and federal government can't take the sole blame. The main problem is there isn't enough money to go around she said.

Cheng said the state's 66 percent income tax increase could produce money for higher education, but money will not be seen until after fiscal year 2012 and the state has paid its bills.

Online peer-reviewed journals pose risks, problems to society

Daily Egyptian

Online-only, peer-reviewed journals with questionable practices can pose direct problems for everyone, Ruth Guyer said.

Guyer, a professor at Johns Hopkins University who wrote for the peer-reviewed Science Magazine, said online journals shouldn't be am less-rigorously reviewed than print journals, but they can be.

The nature of web publications lends itself to this problem because things happen instantaneously, things can be changed on the web, there are opportunities for online feedback, and the kinds of feedback and comments change the whole world of how publishing occurs," Guyer said.

She said scientific articles published questionable peer-review practices can directly hurt people because medications or trials haven't been backed up with data.

Nobody benefits medically or psychologically when a publication is dishonest and the reporting of data is inaccurate. Guyer sald.

The Journal of Behavioral Health and Medicine is an online peerreviewed journal with research reports, dinkal demonstrations, book reviews and research, and technical articles related to behavioral health studies and psychology. The journal is one of 10 published by Behavior Analyst Online a company owned and run by Joseph Cautilli, chair of a special interest group of the Association for Behavior Analysis International.

On Feb. 3, two professors posted a letter on a Behavior Analyst Online

6 The journals were mismanaged by the involvement of too many people doing too many different tasks and not having a good handle on who was responsible for what. real Linear Victoria Contract (etc

dectronic mailing list. Eighteen other faculty members from universities across the country with experience as editors, reviewers and authors of peer-reviewed journals also signed the letter, which asked members of ABAI to assess each journal's quality and review protocol, editorial policy, and editorial oversight.

Matthew Normand, an associate refessor in psychology from the University of the Pacific and one of the letter's authors, said he noticed something was wrong when he was reading the Journal of Behavioral Health and Medicine and saw his name listed on the editorial board. Normand said he had never been asked to be a part of the journal's editorial board and had not taken part in the journal's peerreview process.

When he and Brian Iwata, a professor of psychology and psychiatry at the University of Florida, contacted 44 members listed on the editorial boards of BAO's other journals, Normand said four couldn't be found because they had no e-mail addresses.

Of the remaining 38 who responded, six didn't know they were listed as editorial board members and 25 had never reviewed a manuscript for the journal.

The purpose of the letter was not to demonize one person or publication but to notify people of the situation and provoke questions, he said.

Iwata said he and Normand found nothing wrong with the Journal of Behavioral Health and Medicine or the way Mark Dixon, the journal's most recent editor, ran it.

"The letter had nothing to do with Mark; I have nothing but respect for him," Iwata said. "The letter had to do with the person in charge of the journals"

Dixon, a professor at SIUC's Rehabilitation Institute, said he ran the journal for a year and a half and got the unpaid editor position after the former editor died unexpectedly. .The journal's editorial board and procedures were established by the former editor, he said.

Dixon said once manuscripts came in, he would send them to editorial board members. Approximately 15 of the journal's 20 submissions were published per year, he said.

He said he resigned after he discovered the Journal of Behavioral Health and Medicine and the other BAO journals were mismanared.

The journals were mismanaged by the involvement of too many people doing too many different tasks and not having a good handle on who was responsible for what," he said.

Dixon said BAO grew very large, very quickly in the past few years. Three months into his job, he said he discovered the journal's process was very messy and dug deeper, which eventually led him to discover the mess extended to other BAO journals. After allegations of fraudulence and questionable scholarship arose concerning other journals, he said he and his associate editor resigned.

"That's surely something I was not involved in, and I wanted to ensure that if that's what they were going to do. I was going to have no business or part in it." Dixon said.

He said Normand and Iwata sent the letter to the president of ABAI six months before it became public, and the presiders didn't share the letter with nyone. After the letter went public, other editorial board members stepped down from the journal, Dixon said.

He said the remaining members of the journals are trying to revise and improve them.

"It is wrong if the editorial board has no contact with the journal," said David Wilder, a professor of psychology at the Florida Institute of Technology who signed the letter. Editorial board members should be reviewing manuscripts submitted to the journal, but I have not reviewed any.

Michael Weinberg, a psychologist and member of an oversight board that works to restructure the business management of the journals and its website, said after Diron put in his resignation, the governing board began to consider whether or not to close the Journal of Behavioral Health and Medicine. Weinberg said whether the on the next editor and the journal's editorial board.

Patrick Dilley, associate professor of higher education and qualitative research in women's studies at SIUC. said peer-reviewed journals ensure the quality of research-based articles published by having experts in the same field review an article.

"The process of peer-review is to ensure that the knowledge that is being disseminated in the professional journals and conferences is rigorously evaluated and maintains the highest standards of quality in its given area," Dilley said.

He said for research-based articles. journals that don't use peer-review are ranked as less important or qualified, especially when it comes to criteria for a professor's tenure.

Dilley said editors of journals should spend time to make sure articles are reviewed by the proper peers. He said if professors submit to a journal and don't know it isn't peer-reviewed, it won't necessarily discredit them or hurt their reputation. If the they do know, it will signal a lack of academic honesty or integrity.

"What I would tell someone who is a junior professor and going up for review, I would tell them to go for the journals that are blind peer-reviewed, because those are the ones that are going to get the most open feedback, the most rigorous review and would consequently hold the greatest value in the academic community." Dilley said.

Cabin by the Pond may lose rental rights

KAYLA KEARNS Daily Egyptian

Tom Egert said he didn't seek permits for his cabins because it wasn't listed in the Carbondale revised code.

"If the city denies my cabins, that's my livelihood," he said.

Egert, owner of Cabin by the Pond, will go before the Carbondale City Council at 7 p.m. today to request a special use permit to continue to rent his three cabins out and possibly expand with three more.

Chris Wallace, the planning commission's senior planner, said Egert was building a cabin without proper permit at the Feb. 16 planning commission If the city denies my cabins, that's my Evelihood

The planning commission's recommendation is for the City Council to approve the special use permit for the three existing cabins and deny the special use permit for the additional three.

If the council approves the cabins, the special use permit would be valid for five years from the approval date. Zoning certificates must be issued before construction begins and would only apply to the operation of the cabins as inns as specified in the code.

High court rules vs. gov't in open records case

The Supreme Court Monday rejected the government's broad use of an exemption in the federal Freedom of Information Act to withhold documents from the public, ruling for a Washington state resident who wants Navy maps relating to its main West Coast ammunition dump.

The court, by an 8-1 vote, threw out an appeals court ruling that backed the Navy's decision to withhold maps showing the extent of damage expected from an explosion at the ammunition dump near Port Townsend in western Washington.

Justice Elena Kagan, writing for the court, said maps could not be withheld under a FOL's provision that deals with a federal agency's "personnel rules and practices." Kagan said part of the law concerns issues of employee relations and human resources."

Justice Stephen Breyer dissented, saying the courts have consistently allowed broad use of the exemption for 30 years. "I would let sleeping dogs lie," Breyer

The case before the court revolved around competing ideas of public safety. The government said releasing the maps could allow someone to identify the precise location of the munitions that are stored at its base on Indian Island.

But Glen Milner, a longtime community activist, said the people who live near the base have valid reasons for wanting to know whether they would be endangered by an explosion. An explosion the Navy's Port Chicago ammunition depot during World War II killed 320 people.

Milner has raised safety concerns about several area naval facilities. While he could not get the map for the ammunition dump, an official at an area submarine base provided Milner a map showing the probable range of damage from an explosion at that facility.

Kagan sald the Navy may have legitimate interests in keeping the maps out of public circulation. She said the government could stamp the maps "classified," which would keep them, from being disclosed under FOIA. Or the Navy could perhaps rely on another FOIA provision that protects law enforcement information in some circumstances, she said.

The Associated Press is among 20 news organizations that filed a brief urging the court to limit the government's invocation of the personnel exemption.

The case is Milner v. Department of the Navy, 09-1163.

OUR WORD

Tuition increase would be unfair, harmful

As the university struggles with a $13 million budget deficit, unpaid state appropriations, and enrollment and retention issues, the SIU Board of Trustees may consider a 7 to 9 percent tuition increase in April.

While this might initially bring in money, it would be counterproductive to one, of the most important goals of the university: to recruit and retain students, without whom the university couldn't survive.

Raising the price of tuition would only deter prospective students, especially since the availability and amount of financial aid will not increase with a rise in tuition.

Instead, we suggest the university disperse the burden throughout the university rather than charging each new student $510.30 to $656.10 more per semester. While university employees have the ability to fight pay cuts through contracts and collective bargaining, students must pay the full tuition or not attend the university.

These rights were practiced by the faculty when the administration said it needed to save $2.6 million through closure days, and the bargaining units that refused to take them were held responsible for the difference. Those units have not come back with an idea that has been accepted by the university, and no agreement has been made.

Administrators and faculty associations continue to debate, fall to compromise, and waste time, money and energy. A federal mediator has been employed, yet many involved have said they find it hard to see any progress.

While come arguments have the right in this great country to express their beliefs. I served in the military at a time when thousands were protesting the war. And I will tell you, to this day, although

I disagreed with the protesters, I would have died to protect their right to protest. I'm sure if you asked any soldier today, he or she would tell you the same thing. What the Westboro Baptist Church does is hateful, but living in America gives you the right to say hateful things.

are just, this method of no compromise is doing nothing to benefit the university or students. The university exists to educate students, and this should be the main concern of those employed by it. As adults who should be committed to bettering the youth they teach, they should lead by example and be proactive in solving the financial crisis that affects us all.

So, if faculty won't take the unpaid closure days, they should offer options to come up with the money they've been told they must save, and the administration should accept that offer if it will save enough money.

A time of financial uncertainty is no time to be selfish or stubborn, and we all must be willing to secrifice. Faculty, administration and staff need to effectively communicate and work together to find a solution that treats everyone fairly instead of increasing tuition, which will only worsen the problem.

With the many highly educated and dedicated people at this university, surely a solution that doesn't create additional problems can be found.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Protesting at soldiers' funerals may be wrong but it's still a right

DEAR EDITOR:

In response to Tara Kulash's Feb. 3 column: Tara, as a journalism major I am surprised at your letter. You, of all people, should understand the freedom of speech.

To paraphrase it, the First Amendment to the United States Constitution reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or the free exercise thereof or ubridging the freedom of speech, or of the

SIUC lacks agriculture in 'core' curriculum

DEAR EDITOR:

One of the goals of higher education should be to create a wellrounded, knowledgeable citizen. This is the justification for STUCas core curriculum. the manner by which the food they consume is produced.

SIUC needs to add an introduction to agriculture class to its core curriculum. Including an agriculture class would allow the students here to become more educated and better prepared to make decisions that would affect them every day for the rest of their lives.

Our campus is full of diverse

There was an Illinois Supreme Court case in 1977 about a neo-Nazi march in Skokie, a suburb that was the home to many Holocaust survivors. The city passed an injunction against it, but the court overruled it, saying that the use of the swastika itself was a symbolic form of the freedom of speech. Nobody wanted that group to march, but they had the opportunity thanks to the First Amendment.

So while I agree that the celebrity is promoting this week.

freedom of speech is unfair, it is also a protected benefit of living in America. And that's what this country is all about. The First Amendment gave you the right to pen your letter, and it is allowing me to respond.

Remember that this amendment is why you are in journalism school in the first place!

SIUC is doing its students a disservice by not requiring study in a field that is so relevant to everyday life. However, it is a disservice that can be easily fixed. I would request that Pat Manfredi, director of the University Core Curriculum, add agriculture to the university's core classes.

Career suicide turns Sheen into pop culture icon

Daily Egyptian

All Charlie Sheen does is win.

At least that's what the actor known for starring in "Two and a Half Men," one of television's biggest abominations, has been saying for the past two weeks.

respected actor with work in "Platoon," "Wall Street" and comedies such as "Major League," has become the personification of a car wreck one that's shown on every channel at every waking hour. That makes it ven harder to turn one's eyes away from the burning remains of what used to be his career.

Maybe you have heard about it, as Sheen has appeared on about 40 different news shows, saying more and more absurd and insane things to the delight of millions. This quote alone from Sheen deserves recognition for its greatness:

"I am on a drug. It's called Charlie you try it, you will die. Your face will melt off, and your children will weep over your exploded body."

Seriously, what other person could get away with saying something like that without having straitjacket-toting psychiatrists knock on his front door? But instead, Sheen is being met with admiration for his insanity.

His Twitter account, created a little more than a week ago, has more than two million followers and is in the Guinness Book of World Records for the quickest account to have that many followers. Sheen hasn't failed to remind people on two catchphrases to pop culture, as Internet references to "winning" and "tiger blood" are appearing all over, usually attached to pictures of Sheen doing something awesome like wrestling Tony the Tiger with a syringe in hand.

Speaking of awesome, Sheen currently resides in his Los Angeles mansion, which he has dubbed "Sober Valley Lodge," with his "goddesses." model Natalie Kenly and porn star Bree Olson. Kenly has gone so far as to have Sheen's signature tattooed on her foot so she can always think of him.

Let all of that soak in for a more in the last week than most people could ever even imagine doing in their lives. But how much longer can people be asked to follow along as Sheen tells people why he's such a winner? In just two weeks, the man has become a parody of himself, displaying all the stereotypes previously associated with to the hard-partying star.

The man said himself he partied in a way that would make legendary party animals Frank Sinatra and Keith Richards Took like droopy eyed, armless children."

Sexually abusive priests live unmonitored

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES charges of child molestation came too long after the abuse to send Carl Sutphin, a Roman Catholic priest, to prison. Now he is spending his days in a doublewide mobile home, a short walk from day care centers and two elementary schools.

"I won't say I deny it. I do not deny it, no." Sutphin, 78, said in a frail voice as he leaned on his

There are dozens of accused priests like him, from California to Maryland. To victims' advocates, that is dangerous.

They say church officials should monitor them in the same way that police track sex offenders and that the church should create special housing to keep predator priests away from children.

Essentially, you have admitted or credibly accused child molesters walking free among unsuspecting families - and bishops are doing little or nothing, said David Clohessy, national director for the Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests.

Advocates' calls raise questions about how far the church can go in monitoring people who have never been convicted, or even charged with a crime.

Plaintiffs' attorneys in Los Angeles worked with private investigators since October to compile a list of the priests' addresses, the most comprehensive accounting of the whereabouts of more than 200 clergy accused of abuse in civil lawsuits in that archdiocese.

They hope to use it Thursday to persuade a judge to recommend the release of all church files for every priest or religious brother ever accused of sexual abuse in the sweeping litigation.

Those confidential files are at the center of a heated dispute that has raged between the church and plaintiffs' lawyers since the nation's largest archdiocese reached a record-breaking $660 million settlement nearly four years ago.

Plaintiffs want the files which could include internal previous correspondence, complaints and therapy records released, saying it's a matter of public safety. The church is pushing for a more limited release

The list of addresses, obtained by The Associated Press, contains nearly 50 former priests and religious brothers from the LA archdiocese who live and work in 37 towns and cities across California. unsupervised by law enforcement or the church.

Another 15 are scattered in cities and towns from Montana to New York, while 80 more cannot be located despite an exhaustive search by attorneys representing those ho have sued them for abuse.

The vast majority of the men

6 shops want to do the absolute bare minimum with predator priests, so they suspend $m{\mathcal{D}}$ them on the advice of defense lawyers and insurance companies and that's it; the priests are free to live and sometimes work and sometimes volunteer wherever they want.

- David Clohessy national director, Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests have not been convicted - in some cases because the charges came too late - and are therefore not required to register with state sex offender databases

It's a situation that has long bothered alleged victims of sex abuse, who have called on the church to do more to monitor former priests even after they have been expelled from ministry or have been laicized.

In Los Angeles, the archdiocese listed 211 names of credibly accused priests - a term the church uses to describe allegations that it believes are likely to be true - or those who had been named in civil lawsuits in a 2004 report to parishloners about clergy abuse.

The list did not include the priests' past assignments or current whereabouts.

Twenty-three other dioceses nationwide have published similar lists, but don't list current addresses. Clohessy said.

Like Los Angeles, victim advocates in Boston have also complained that the archdiocese there has not done enough to inform the public about priests who were accused of abuse but never charged criminally.

In January, Mitchell Garabedian, lawyer for Boston-asea clergy sex abuse victims, released a new list of accused abusers, including previously undisclosed names of 19 Catholic priests, brothers and one deacon. They were among those accused in hundreds of cases his law firm settled with the church over the last 15 years, Garabedian said.

At the time, the archdiocese was working to disclose more information but was concerned about giving priests whose guilt had not been established their due process, sald Kelly Lynch, a spokeswoman for the Boston archdiocese. Alleged victims, including those in Clohessy's organization, have nevertheless pressed the church to create special church-controlled housing for credibly accused priests so they can be monitored - even without convictions.

"Bishops want to do the absolute bare minimum with predator priests, so they suspend them on the advice of defense lawyers and insurance companies to live and sometimes work and and unenforceable sometimes volunteer wherever they want," Clohessy said.

Church officials say it's not fair to expect them to monitor the priests, especially those who are no longer in active ministry.

The archdiocese policy has been to remove any credibly accused priest, sald Michael Hennigan, archdiocese attorney. Most of those men have been lakized, are in the process of being laicized or have been removed from public ministry, he sald.

Laicization is the Vatican process for ousting a man from the priesthood. Local bishops can also bar an abusive cleric from public ministry, which means the clergyman technically remains a priest but cannot participate in any public church work, such as celebrating Mass in public.

The archdiocese has no more responsibility for a laicized priest than a local school district would have for tracking a teacher who was fired with cause, Hennigan said.

He dismissed the idea of churchrun housing for accused priests and and that's it; the priests are free religious brothers as impractical Nwani scored just two points, but she played well on the defensive side. Tiber said.

Tiber said Nwani is one of the team's strongest inside defenders.

"Nneka's numbers don't always reflect how important she is on our end, but she's probably, physically, our strongest post interior defender. Tiber said. "You've got to give her credit for how she defends on the interior for us every night."

Nwani said she was just excited to finish her career in the renovated arena.

"It's great, you know; it's a new arena, and it's what I've been looking forward to ever since I've been here, Nwani sald.

Sophomore guard Teri Oliver had 23 points, including three 3-pointers, which kept the team close to the Lady Bears throughout the game.

Swingler said being ahead in the first half was something the team was not used to in the season.

"It's great," Swingler said. "I mean, we're not usually ahead there, so getting that lead, it just gave us extra fire to keep going and vorking hard."

The Salukis trailed the Lady Bears for the majority of the second half until Swingler made a layup that tied the game at 44.

Missouri State then scored another two points and the game! slowly moved out of the Salukis grasp and the Lady Bears took the win.

At the end of the game, Swingler and Nwani hugged Tiber and many of their teammates to thank them for their time on the team.

Swingler said the thought of leaving the team hasn't fully sunk in, but it might after the MVC Tournament.

"It'll hit me when I get taken out and give hugs to the coach and get a little teary eyed," she said.

Nwani said it was difficult for her to express her emotions.

"It's weird; it's extremely weird," Nivani said. I don't even know if I can all the way believe it."

Tiber said she remembers her last day as an athlete and understood what the seniors were experiencing.

Speaking from a player's perspective, you love basketball but when you walk away from it for the last time it's more about the relationships," Tiber said. "I still miss it to this day, and it's been a long time since I stepped a foot onto a basketball court

Men, women take two wins at home

Dally Egyptian

Women's tennis coach Audra Nothwehr said it was hard for her players to stay focused for 12 hours of matches Friday, but she applauded them for never losing their motivation to play.

The women's team lost to Saint Louis 4-2 but won its match against Austin Peay 4-3 Friday, while the men's team beat Murray State 6-1 Sunday. Although both teams said they could have performed better, neither team was disappointed with bringing home wins.

The women played a strong match in both doubles and singles against Austin Peay, but Nothwehr said the team's strongest performances were its No. 1 and No. 2 Flight doubles matches.

"I was happy to see the doubles do well," Nothwehr said. "We've been working on communicating together, and we're finally starting to see it pay off.

Both Saint Louis and Austin Peay have beaten SIU in the past, and even with Saint Louis' consistent ball handling and Austin Peay's aggressive doubles, Nothwehr said the SIU women had the endurance to play well to the last match

Murray State women's coach Malik Tabet said the SIU men's team played a strong and persisten match. He said all the players looked comfortable on the courts and moved naturally in their matches.

she was happy with winning ber singles match against Austin Peay, but looking back, she bould have performed better.

"I could have improved my net game." Lee said. "I should have moved up more, but I was hesitant because I didn't do so well on the net in my last match."

Men's coach Dann Nelron said SIU was ready for a competitive match against Murray State, but he was disappointed when he learned two Murray State players were missing from its lineup

Even with Murray State missing players, .. Nel nn sald members from both teams still played to the best of their ability, especially Saluki freshman Adam Fabik in singles play.

He didn't play well in his doubles," Nelson said, "But be really kicked himself into gear in his singles and didn't waste any time playing the ball."

Fablk said he felt like he was moving in slow motion while playing his doubles but started to feel himself improve in his singles

"I felt like I was playing great in my singles, but the other guy wasn't playing at his best," Fabik sald. "Still, you feel great every time you know you played well, and right now I feel great

Forwards go out swinging on Senior Night

AUSTIN FLYNN Daily Egyptian

Senior forward Katrina Swingler said she left Missouri State on Senior Night knowing she played beyond the expectations of her coach Coach Missy Tiber said the SIU women's basketball team (2-27, 0-18 Missouri Valley Conference) can say goodbye to senior forwards Swingler and Nneka Nwani knowing they gave an effort in the final regular-season game of their career Saturday.

One thing you cannot doubt was our effort and how hard-we played (Saturday), especially (Swingler and Nwani)," Tiber said. "We send them out on a good note, and they busted their rears today the entire time they were out.

knew they had to play their best to help the team win its final conference game.

"It's just do or die, now or never," Swingler said.

Swingler had 20 points and seven rebounds in the Salukis' 70-

58 loss against the Missouri State Lady Boars (21-9, 12-6 MVC) Saturday. It was her highest scoring game of the season and eight points behind her career-best.
