Ervin captures student trustee position

40 votes decide race winner

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The student trustee race was close, as one by one, polling locations had their votes counted with no clear winner pulling ahead. In the end, Jason Ervin won the position with 385 votes, but Courtney Macke came in a close second with 347 votes.

Ervin said he dedicated a great deal of time and energy to this campaign, and is ready to get some sleep.

"I'm very tired, exhausted, mentally drained," Ervin said. "It's been a long, hard fought battle, but I'm ready to roll."

Jason Ervin

Macke, currently USG tuition, fees and housing commissioner, said he plans to remain active in student government.

"Win or lose, that's my plan — to continue to serve the student body," he said.

The position Ervin fills beginning July 1 is the highest on student government, representing the student body at the monthly SIUC Board of Trustees' meetings.

Ervin, a junior in accounting from Chicago, said he plans to fight for tuition caps, make sure the University is above standards set by the Americans with Disabilities Act and improve the accessibility of his new office. Ervin said tuition is becoming too expensive for students to afford degrees, in particular SIUC School of Law tuition which was recently raised 14.9 percent.

"(Tuition) is currently $1,848 per term to attend the SIUC School of Law," Ervin said. "I am afraid tuition here will rise to within $100 of IU's." (Northern Illinois University law tuition is $2,136 per term.)

No tuition or fee increases should occur without a noticeable increase in services provided to students, Ervin said.

"The criteria I would use in supporting a fee increase would be to look and see what we are receiving for what we are giving up," he said.

Ervin said he wants to bring SIUC above the standards set by the Americans with Disabilities Act to improve treatment of disabled students by the University.

"I am speaking primarily of getting the instructors to treat disabled students as if they were regular students," he said.

"As a tutor in the College of Business, I had an experience with a student who felt their (disabled students) needs were not being met by their instructors," he said.

"Things like that bother me because it could be you or I in that situation, and I would want someone to fight for me."

SIUC students cast their votes voicing their opinions on three referendums Monday with two failing and one passing.

Undergraduate and graduate students voted against a $15 per semester athletic fee increase, a referendum that appeared on the student trustee ballot. Miscommunication between student leaders and SIUC administrators on the amount of the fee increase caused a discrepancy on the ballots. Some ballots printed a $30 increase rather than a $15 one.

On the ballots with the corrected fee increase, there were 140 yes votes and 314 no votes. On the ballots with the incorrect fee increase of $30, there were 309 yes votes and 698 voted no.

Bill Karrow, a student trustee election commissioner for the Graduate and Professional Student Council, said "it was a long chain

Hip-Hop security decides to utilize metal detectors

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

People attending tonight's Hip-Hop Showcase '95 in the Student Center Ballrooms will have to pass through metal detectors before they are allowed to enter.

The metal detectors, purchased last year by Student Affairs, will be used at Student Center functions determined to be dances by the sponsoring organizations.

The event was not labeled a dance function by the sponsors, but the detectors were deemed a necessary security precaution, according to Doug Dagggett, associate director of the Student Center.

"It was pointed out that the nature of this concert could attract an audience that could become violent," Dagggett said. "Apparently, these types of concerts have had violence related to them at other settings at other locations."

Dagggett said although the detectors were called for because of the nature of the audience, he does not feel the matter is race-related. It is rather, he said, a safety concern: "Our bottom line is that we want to provide the safest environment possible for the patrons."

Dagggett said there have been fights at previous dances, and a shooting took place in 1991. "We've crossed the line from fists to

Students anticipate annual switch to air conditioning

By Carey Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As temperatures climb in Carbondale, students, faculty and campus employees are wondering if and when the air conditioning will be turned on at SIUC.

Tom Nykiel, a junior in social work from Frankfort, said professors' lectures are falling on deaf and sleepy ears because classrooms are too hot. Peggy Mayer, a cashier at the Student Center bakery, agreed.

"It's just flat out hot," she said. Harry D. Wirth, director of plant and service operations, said workers are going to start turning on the air conditioning Thursday, and by Monday the air conditioning will be in full effect unless major problems arise.

"It's just not a matter of flipping a switch," Wirth said. "The process takes more than just a few hours."

Wirth said all the buildings on campus are not connected to just one system. He said turning on the air conditioning involves going to the buildings with major refrigeration systems and charging them. Some buildings — like Morris Library — have their own air-conditioning systems, and those have already been turned on.

Penny Moon, typing clerk in the reception area of SIUC President John Guyon's office, said those in Anthony Hall have to "suffer along with everyone else."

The air conditioning is usually turned on at SIUC around April 15, according to Wirth. "Be aware that every year we have the same problem," he said.

Wirth said the decision not to start the refrigeration systems before Wednesday was based on a weather forecast which says the temperature is supposed to drop to the high 50s. He said Thursday was set in anticipation of warming weekend weather.

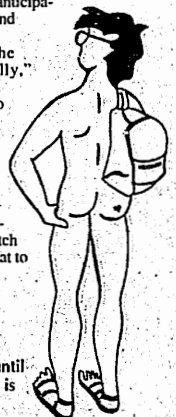

"We monitor the weather very carefully," said Wirth.

SIUC subscribes to the National Weather Service and AccuWeather, checking them four to five times a day.

Wirth said it would cost the university thousands of dollars to switch back and forth from heat to air conditioning.

PALESTINIAN SENTENCED FOR ATTACK ON ISRAEL — JERUSALEM—The Palestinian self-rule authority in the Gaza Strip rounded up more than 100 Islamic militants Monday and announced for the first time a verdict and sentence against a Palestinian charged with fomenting attacks against Israel. The wave of arrests, at least the sixth crackdown by Yasser Arafat on violent opponents of his peace negotiations with Israel, came as two more victims died of wounds inflicted in two suicide car bombings Sunday, raising the death toll to eight. One of the dead, Alisa M. Flatow, 20, was a Brandeis University junior on leave to study at a yeshiva in Israel. Previous mass arrests of Islamic militants, always in the aftermath of terror attacks, tended to avoid active military leaders and resulted in no formal charges.

CLINTON REASSURES JEWS ABOUT ISRAEL POLICY — LOS ANGELES—President Clinton on Sunday at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel sought to reassure anxious American Jews that his administration will not sacrifice the security of Israeli citizens in its desire to promote the Middle East peace process. Speaking to a Jewish fund-raising luncheon in Los Angeles hours after terrorist attacks left at least six Israelis dead and 47 injured in the Gaza Strip — including three Americans, according to White House officials — Clinton said that the bombings demonstrated the risks of peace. Clinton was warmly received by the group, the charitable fund-raising arm of the Jewish Federation Council of Los Angeles.

PRIME MINISTER DEMANDS PAID FOR FIGHTERS — WASHINGTON—Declaring that she has "no apologies to make" for Pakistan's continuing nuclear weapons development program, a combative Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto Monday demanded that the United States either deliver 28 fighter jets Pakistan has paid for or give the money back. She said she will tell President Clinton in a meeting Tuesday that Pakistan has "fulfilled its obligations under its "Contract With America," standing by the United States through the Cold War, working closely with Washington on security issues today and offering a bulwark of moderation and modernism against Islamic extremism. In return, Pakistan wants to be treated like an ally, not punished, she said.

FORCED RETIREMENT FOR AGENCIES QUESTIONED — WASHINGTON—The Senior Executives Association wants the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence to deny intelligence-gathering agencies the right to force workers to retire as soon as they become eligible for any kind of pension payment. SEA says mandatory retirement is a coverup for the inability to manage the workforce, and would turn many employees 50th birthday parties into a wake. The executive group said it would "give agencies authority to tailor the workforce and unlawfully discriminate with impunity if they wish" without being subject to court review.

DOLE OPENS THIRD CAMPAIGN FOR PRESIDENCY — EXETER, N.H.—Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., opened his third campaign for president Monday vowing to reduce the power of the federal government, and as a symbol of his conservative commitment, he signed the anti-tax pledge he rejected in his 1988 campaign. Dole's decision to sign the tax pledge was the clearest sign that his issue agenda in the 1996 campaign will reflect the rightward shifts within a Republican Party that was swept into power last November. Dole's message Monday also emphasized that his record as a war hero and his 35 years in politics give him experience unique among the field of candidates.

ENVIRO-LEADER GETS SUPPORT FROM OTHER SIDE — WASHINGTON—Wilderness Society president G. Jon Roush, under fire in the news media and from environmentalists for logging 400,000 board feet of timber from his western Montana ranch this year, is picking up support from unusual quarters. Chuck Cushman, president of the American Land Rights Association wrote to Roush last week, offering "to stand shoulder to shoulder with you ... in your, so far, eloquent defense of private property rights." Cushman offered Roush a guest editorial in ALRA's publications and a speaking slot at a conference this summer. He also offered Roush an honorary ALRA membership.

Chancellor search leaves advisers cold

By Dean Weaver
DE Special Assignments Reporter

As SIU's Board of Trustees moves closer to naming a new chancellor, the chairman of the chancellor-search advisory committee says his group was asked for little input.

Despite the fact that a 10-member advisory committee was named February 10, the group was not given the chance to help narrow the field of chancellor applicants, according to Lawrence Dennis.

Dennis, chairman of the advisory committee, said he learned the week of March 19 that his panel of students, faculty and staff from the SIUC and SIUE campuses would only be allowed to interview two candidates.

Now, the committee is being asked only to confirm the Trustees' choice for chancellor, Ted Sanders.

Sanders is a former Illinois Superintendent of Schools and deputy Secretary of Education under former President George Bush. He is currently Ohio's public schools chief.

"When the committee met on March 27 we were extremely concerned about the number of candidates we would have the chance to interview," Dennis said. "There was even talk by some of the members of protesting by not attending the interview."

And when the committee discovered their task was to interview but a single candidate, many were frustrated, Dennis said.

"The whole committee would've liked to have met with more than one individual," he said.

John Brewster, an SIU Board of Trustees member from Marion, said he and the Trustees are the search committee, and the advisory committee's purpose is only to advise.

The statutes for the SIU Board of Trustees require the Trustees screen a preliminary group of 12 to 20 individuals, then narrow the search down to four to six chancellor candidates. The final group is to be interviewed by a committee of constituency leaders, in this case the advisory board.

Brewster said the Trustees did not originally intend to select the final candidate.

Virtual homework:
Class assignments evolve in today's computerized world.

By Marco Buscaglia and
John Ellis IV
College Press Service

Wellesley College freshman Wendy Wong remembers writing term papers in high school. "I kind of had a pattern," she says. "I would try to follow a format that I thought was effective."

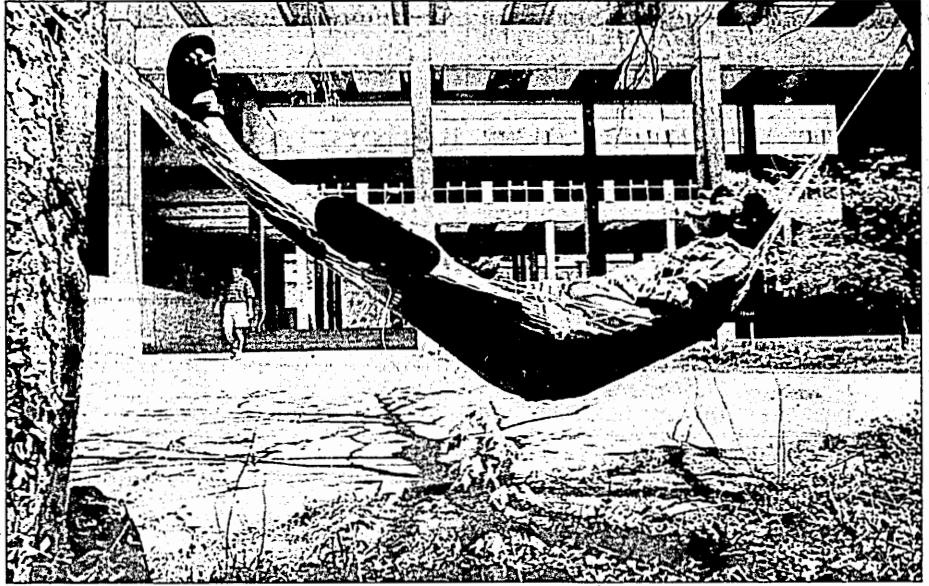

That format usually included a thesis statement, footnotes and a conclusion. Now at Wellesley, it also can involve hyperlinks and multimedia images.

Wong is among a growing number of students nationwide who are learning to design "virtual" term papers.

"You're able to show people exactly what you want them to see," says Wong. "You don't have to leave as many things open to interpretation."

As universities become more wired, professors are no longer content to confine their assignments to an 8 1/2-by-11-inch canvas. More and more, students are using computers to design class presentations.

Worker of year delivers message to youths

Saileem Rasheed

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Saileem Rasheed is not a typical student worker. He is 45 years old, holds a degree in computers and is working toward another in special education.

Rasheed is the winner of the SIUC student employee of the year contest.

Rasheed, a sophomore in special education from Chicago, said he had no idea he would be selected as the student employee of the year.

"I'd never would've thought I'd have won the award," Rasheed said.

"I'm not a limelight man. I try to be humble."

Julie Ann Armentrout, Rasheed's supervisor, said she nominated Rasheed because he is reliable, responsible and enthusiastic about his work.

"I nominated him because he is an outstanding worker that goes above and beyond any expectations we have for our student workers," Armentrout said.

Rasheed works through the University's special educational program on the Self-Determination Project which Armentrout coordinates.

Rasheed also works at Gateway, a residential facility for troubled youths. At the facility, he teaches the kids about effective communication techniques that prepare them to re-enter the community, he said.

"I try to teach them about eye contact for their interaction with educators, relaxed posture for job interviews and also about reflexive statements to show people they are listening well," Rasheed said.

"I want them to get the message that they can reach any goal and that getting in trouble is not their destiny."

Rasheed said he lived through some of his own troubles, growing up in Chicago and being a member of a gang.

"I was exposed to bad things in Chicago — gangs, drugs and all that," he said. "I try to let these kids know that the life they live isn't the end, it can be a beginning once they recognize."

Coming to Carbondale helped him see that there is much more outside the

For the terminally aware: Computer option in taking GRE

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC students now can take the Graduate Record Exam through the new Computer-Based Testing Program instead of the traditional paper and pencil method.

Gary E. Jones, director of Sylvan Technology Center, said students who wait until the last minute to take the exam really appreciate the computer-based exam.

"The pencil and paper test is given only four times a year," he

Test-taking made less stressful, more accessible said. "The computer test is available all year round, plus on the weekends."

Faith Townsend, a senior in psychology from Pickney, Michigan, said students panicked when the power went out Friday during the test, but the center was able to get the tests back on the screen.

"The atmosphere was very comfortable and the director handled the testing very professionally," Townsend said.

Townsend chose to take the computer test because it was easier to get a testing date.

"I consider being able to take the test at my leisure a great advantage over the paper and pencil method," she said.

John Molinari, a senior in English from Grayslake, said he believes there is more room for error on the written test.

"On the computer you cannot forget to answer any questions because the computer asks 'are you sure you want that answer,'" Molinari said.

Molinari said he liked the fact that when you are finished with one test you can move on to the next test without having to wait on other students to finish.

"It is less distracting because you are in your own cubical space and not bothered by others," he said. "We got to sit in nice office chairs instead of sitting at a university desk and chair."

Jones said another main advantage to the computer test is the instant score reporting. The scores appear on the screen within two minutes after completing the exam.

"Students like it because they get test results quick," Jones said. "Otherwise it would take about two weeks."

Jones said students have been taking the GRE nationwide by computer for about a year. Educational Testing Service creates the GRE.

He also said they are working to make all tests available on computer in two years.

Group pays nature its needed respect

SPRING AND ITS WARM WEATHER HAS ARRIVED, and with its arrival comes the opportunity for us all to comfortably enjoy the pristine beauty of nature on and off campus. People should know all too well that the beauty that the Earth has to offer is limited to how we take care of the natural sights which already exist. If we want to enjoy nature, we have to preserve it.

A community group, aided by several campus and regional groups, are to be commended for working Saturday to replace some of the natural beauty near Campus Lake.

FRIENDS OF THE LAKE, COMPOSED OF MEMBERS concerned with preserving the aesthetic qualities of Campus Lake, planted Illinois prairie plants in an area recently clear-cut because of interference of its trees with power lines.

By rallying support from local, regional and campus groups to accomplish the planting, Friends of the Lake has been able to begin the restoration of the natural prairie image which Illinois is so well known for.

MANY PEOPLE TAKE FOR GRANTED EVERY DAY the joy and recreation that nature can bring us. Sometimes we forget, however, that there will come a point when we will only get out of nature what we put back into it.

Next time that you are walking around Campus Lake, taking in every visual and tactile quality it has to offer, remember that it will not retain its beauty unless it is taken care of.

So bend over and pick up the scraps of trash when you see them, be conscientious about carelessly dropping trash and consider joining a group that will work to maintain and restore one of the great natural wonders of this campus — like the Friends of the Lake.

Joint effort needed to save train routes

"HOW AM I GOING TO GET HOME IF I NEED TO?" These words may be on the lips of many SIUC students who take Amtrak train service back to their home towns for holiday breaks or for other family reasons after some daily train routes are cut this summer.

While these cuts are partially necessary to save as much as the service as possible from a massive deficit, Amtrak would still not be home free; the service is still in need of a $260 million operating subsidy from Congress — a subsidy Amtrak is not sure it will receive. Both Amtrak and Congress need to work together to salvage as many train routes as possible for the good of those who rely on the service for transportation and their careers.

Starting this summer, trains which normally linked Carbondale to Chicago, and several other cities and college towns along the route, will be cut from a Sunday through Friday service to operation on only Sunday, Monday, Thursday and Friday. These upcoming route reductions are only a small example of cuts taking place across the country to save Amtrak from a massive, deficit. Without approval of the subsidy by Congress, however, it seems even more routes may be lost.

IMMEDIATE ACTION MUST BE TAKEN BY FEDERAL politicians and Amtrak officials to ensure the subsidy is passed in the federal budget for fiscal year 1996, which begins this summer. Cooperation between the two groups should not end with just lobbying for the passage of the subsidy, however. New avenues must be explored, such as seeking subsidies from state governments, in order, to save what Amtrak feels it must eliminate.

Letters to the Editor

Guyon's stance on graduation prayer weak; majority view should be answer

"America is the only nation in the world that is founded on a creed. That creed is set forth with dogmatic and even theological lucidity in the Declaration of Independence." — British essayist G.K. Chesterton

I cannot say I was surprised at the ACLU's pressure on SIU to ban commencement prayers for graduation.

What surprised me was President John Guyon's spineless cave in to a notoriously left-wing organization without putting so much as a whimper of resistance. Not to mention the failure to even explain his decision to the students or the general public with nothing but "No comment."

Here's probably what happened. ACLU: "Mr. Guyon, get rid of commencement prayer or we'll sue."

Guyon: "Gee, I don't know, I might piss off most (of) the campus."

"Mr. Guyon, get rid of commencement prayer or we'll have the governor revoke your parking space."

"Sounds like a good deal to me!"

"Mr. Guyon, do you have any guts?"

"No comment."

"We like you, John. You've got the spine of a chocolate éclair."

Cure the headache by cutting off the head — that is, getting rid of it without exploring alternatives — reflects Guyon's poor leadership style.

In a democracy the majority rules — we don't negate public elections because the losing minority doesn't like the elected candidate. This is just another example of how a small minority can destroy a nation's values reflected by a moral majority. The students have the Constitutional right to pray at commencement if it is led by students.

Separation of church and state only applies to a state-sponsored church. It doesn't mean separation of God and state.

Solzhenitsyn said, "To destroy a people you must first sever their roots." Guyon and the ACLU need to get a CLU and realize America was founded as a religious nation, not an academic one.

American flag deserves respect

Symbol of country source of pride for patriotic protesters

The letter from Zach Shelton published in the April 7th DE was based on two mistaken premises. The first was the premise that patriots fight and die for the American flag. The second was in viewing the country and the government as one.

The American flag is the symbol of the United States of America, a country with individual freedoms that are protected by the law of the land, the Constitution.

All who serve in the armed forces of the United States take an oath to protect the Constitution. Saying that a soldier or anyone else is willing to fight and die for the American flag is symbolic of saying they are willing to fight and die in defense of the Constitution. Our armed forces are sworn to protect the Constitution because without it, we would not have a country of freedoms.

Zach stated in his letter, "...when we feel that the country has gone off the right track, when the government is at odds with the interests of the people, the flag is no longer a symbol of pride..."

The country and the government are not the same. Our country is the United States of America, a true, physical representation of which is the Constitution.

The American flag is a symbol of the United States of America/the Constitution. The government consists of a number of political organizations made up of elected or appointed people who serve in specific capacities. They are not the country and the country is not the government.

Those who wish to protest government policy have the right to do so as guaranteed by the First Amendment to the Constitution. Wouldn't it make sense to proudly and properly display the American flag while protesting the actions of the government? After all, the flag is the symbol of our country; one that is based on law that protects individual freedoms including free speech. The flag is always a symbol of pride to freedom-loving Americans. Americans are proud of their country and its constitutionally guaranteed freedoms.

At times, Americans do not agree with their government. "I love America, but I distrust the American government" is a common statement within patriotic circles. If you want to target a symbol of the government, target something like representations of the donkey, elephant, White House, or national capital. Desecrate a symbol of what you are upset with, not the symbol of that which gives you the freedom to protest.

"The board has a favorable position with one candidate," he said. "You never know how these things are going to work out."

Brewster said if the advisory committee is supportive of Sanders, the Trustees will likely vote to name him the new chancellor.

The goal is to fill the chancellor position by July.

Chancellor James Brown said he collected the applications for the position and selected 14 preliminary candidates. Of these, Brown asked the Trustees to directly consider six.

"The board narrowed the field from six to four, and then to two candidates," he said.

Sharon Holmes, executive secretary for the Trustees, said the group began the selection process in January.

Sanders was confirmed as the final candidate April 1.

Dennis said that after the members of the committee interviewed Sanders April 8, they followed the Trustees' instructions and wrote a memo with each member's reaction.

The Trustees will review the reactions of the committee before Thursday's meeting, he said.

immediate community, he said.

"I've been blessed to have had the opportunity to get an education and positively influence the lives of these kids because the gangs and drugs were taking me nowhere," Rasheed said.

Rasheed, a Carbondale resident, said his work with the behaviorally and learning disabled students are his efforts to be the best Muslim he can.

"I don't want these kids to have to be 45 to realize their excellence," Rasheed said. "They're all good at heart and just need a bit of guidance to realize their area of excellence."

There were 36 student employees nominated by their supervisors for the student of the year award at SIUC. Of five finalists, only one received the $200 scholarship, a plaque honoring his efforts and a letter of recognition from SIUC President John Guyon.

The other four finalists in the competition were Kelli Austerman of the Daily Egyptian, Matthew Brown from Information Technology, Eric Craig from Student Development and Tracy Eubanks from MEDPREP.

Each of the four finalists received $50 scholarships and a letter of recognition for their efforts from Guyon.

The chancellor is a university representative in the public forum that includes state and federal legislators and political groups. The chancellor executes and enforces the decisions and regulations of the Trustees, and recommends policy changes.

The campus community plays a much greater role in the selection of the SIUC president and deans of colleges, Dennis said, but that is the nature of the job.

"The chancellor must work more closely with the board, so their degree of involvement is understandable," he said, but again added that the "whole committee would've liked to have met with more than one individual."

across campus, said Donna Williams, an accountant at the Financial Aid Office.

"A selection committee of four full-time financial aid employees rate each of the nominees individually in different categories," Williams said. "We try to have five finalists each year, from which a winner is chosen."

Rasheed will automatically be included in the state competition sponsored by the National Association of Student Employment Administrators, Williams said. Following the state competition are the regionals and then the nationals, she said.

"We've had two or three state winners and one regional winner in the six years we've competed," she said.

"We're seeing an increase in these types of projects because there can be such a wide range of subjects and activities that can be covered," says Gordon Miller, director of multimedia lab at Virginia Tech. "The students love it. They are so enthusiastic about the possibilities of the technology."

For example, Miller helps engineering students use computers to put together automated examples of the often-difficult material they are attempting to explain. "It's the future on how we plan on receiving and storing information," Miller says.

"It's already having a huge impact on most industries that will only increase."

Peper Roni, a chemical engineering professor at Virginia Tech, says that his students are usually enthusiastic about the possibilities of seeing their papers evolve from the traditional format.

"This is more than the writing of a term paper. What this really is teaching them is the communication of results," Roni says. "We're talking about real communication here.

It's wonderful."

Roni even grades his papers electronically, placing digital Post-it notes where he sees fit. "The students already know what to look for," he says. "Yellow is for general comments. If they see a red Post-it note, they know there is a problem."

Joyta Maye, a junior majoring in psychology at Hood College in Frederick, Md., used digital presentations in both psychology and social work classes. "It's a great way to 'wow' people," says Maye. "They are expecting a routine paper or presentation and then you surprise them by the format."

of errors" for the athletic fee referendum.

Edwin Sawyer, current USG president, said the vote "sends a message to the administration — the Board of Trustees has to take the results into consideration."

The referendum was drafted so the SIU Board of Trustees could sample student opinion before voting on the proposal.

The increase will compensate for a potential loss of $650,000 annually in state funds which support intercollegiate athletics.

If passed, students would have received free admission to all games in all sports and the money generated would have allowed SIUC to retain the NCAA Division I status that brings the University, national exposure.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education asked all state schools to phase out their use of state funds for athletics by fall 1995 as a part of its Priority, Quality and Productivity Program.

However, IBHE is reconsidering its position.

The SIU Board of Trustees will have the final say on the athletic fee increase with a vote expected in May.

As a result of the second referendum, JC's Student Activity Fee increased by 50 cents. The University gained full membership benefits with the United States Student Association, a non-profit and non-partisan student lobbying group.

Sawyer said GPSC must pass a similar resolution for the fee increase to take effect.

"This puts the pressure on GPSC," he said.

"The votes were interesting due to the fact that there wasn't a lot of campaigning."

The USSA referendum appeared on the Undergraduate Student Government ballot and only undergraduate students voted on the issue.

There were 872 votes in favor of the referendum and 486 against.

The Washington, D.C.-based group lobbies Congress, the Department of Education and the White House.

SIUC may now enjoy benefits including a chief organizer on campus, mailings to federal representatives on student issues and increased involvement in the association.

The third referendum, which appeared on the USG ballot, dealt with the Mayoral/Presidential Halloween Task Force's recommendation to raise the bar-entry age to 21.

USG has supported keeping the entry age at 19, but gave undergraduate students the opportunity to voice their opinion on the issue.

Students voted against raising the bar entry age to 21 with 805 no votes and 525 yes.

"It is going to give our city affairs commissioner some direction, and it's going to give him something to give the city," Sawyer said.

New York City smoking regs begin

Newsday

NEW YORK—At Le Park Cafe in Manhattan, they were ready for New York City's first mostly smokeless lunch hour Monday.

Leaflets were stacked at the hostess' station to explain to smokers why they couldn't anymore. And Olga Kivvisova, waitress and smoker, wasn't happy about it.

"I think it's crazy," Kivvisova said. "I'm going to show them the paper. If they go ahead and smoke, it's not my responsibility. And then I'm going to breathe it in."

At Billy's Restaurant, a Manhattan steakhouse, owner Joan Borkowski was hosting a news conference with other tavern owners and the head of the National Smokers Alliance to protest New York City's new ban on smoking in the dining areas of restaurants with more than 35 seats.

"It should be our choice to determine what we can do to best serve our clientele," said Borkowski, who complained that the new ban made her heavy investment in separate smoking and smoke-free dining areas useless. "It's a terrible law."

But at Sea World, a 36-seat, fast-food eatery in Manhattan, a woman named Sandra who didn't want her last name used was spending Day 1 of the ban peacefully smoking a Benson & Hedges Light in the front window as she sipped a cup of hot tea.

"Nobody jumped down my throat," she said, before ventilating her feelings about the new rules. "What is bizarre is that the government subsidizes tobacco growers, but then they say you can't smoke."

So it went Monday, as New Yorkers greeted the kickoff of one of the nation's toughest smoking bans with a mixture of compliance, complaints and quiet coping.

The new law, which replaces a law requiring restaurants to make at least half their seats non-smoking, will affect an estimated 11,000 eateries across New York City.

In addition to restaurants with less than 35 seats, it also exempts bars and has a loophole allowing restaurants to permit smoking at a limited number of tables.

Detectors

weapons," he said.

Sam Jordan, SIUC director of security, said the Student Center makes the decision to use metal detectors.

"When we're informed that there's going to be a dance or function that falls within the policy, then we staff that function with the appropriate personnel to operate the magnetometers (metal detectors), and to perform other security functions as necessary," he said.

Don Castle, assistant University program coordinator, said the detectors have only been used once this year.

"We've been having an ongoing discussion about this issue," he said.

"This is an experiment. We're going to see how it works."

Castle said the metal detector discussions were finalized last week.

While the detectors were set up for the Aug. 20 Foo/Dyslexic Apaches show, they were not in place for the Catherine/Neclarine concert Sept. 1, or the Velocity Girl concert Dec. 1.

Tamaria Hattix, president of Blacks in Communications Alliance (BICA), treasurer of the Delta Sigma Theta sorority and incoming Pan-Hellenic Council president, said she feels the use of the metal detectors is too much of a coincidence.

"I feel like since they're going to have metal detectors this time, they need to look over this a little more," she said.

"People are going to find out about this, and some are going to resent it," Hattix said rap music's negative image may be the concern.

Caffeine most used U.S. drug

By Lynn Schenk
Student Health Programs

Caffeine is the most widely used drug in the United States.

Two out of every three Americans consume approximately two cups of coffee (200 mg caffeine) per day, and each year Americans consume an average of 16 pounds of coffee per person.

Once for ounce, brewed coffee contains the most caffeine with 110-150 milligrams in 8 ounces, while black/green leaf tea contains 70 milligrams for the same amount.

Cocoa contains 6-42 milligrams per 8-ounce serving.

A 12-ounce cola soft drink has an average of 50 milligrams of caffeine, with Coca Cola, Dr. Pepper and Mountain Dew ranging from the most to least.

Two cups threshold

About two cups of coffee (200 mg) is the amount of caffeine that begins to cause a wide range of effects on the body; however, some people notice these effects in dosages as low as 50 mg.

The severity of the effects of caffeine are in part dependent upon the dose and upon a person's tolerance.

The effects can be observed within 15-45 minutes of being taken and may last several hours.

One to three cups of coffee has been shown to reduce or mask fatigue, improve the ability to think faster and more clearly, and sharpen the senses.

However, once this amount has been exceeded, especially in non-caffeine drinkers, symptoms such as irritability, mood swings, nervousness, diarrhea, dehydration and sleep disturbances may be experienced.

Caffeine appears to intensify premenstrual symptoms in women, such as breast tenderness and mood changes. It also interferes with the absorption of calcium.

Iron absorption blocked

Both caffeinated and decaffeinated brands (as well as tea) block the absorption of iron.

Chronic caffeine users should drink non-caffeinated fluids such as water and fruit juice to ensure against dehydration.

There are also symptoms associated with the cessation of caffeine. Heavy users report feeling jittery, nervousness, irritability and "The Caffeine Headache" 12-18 hours after drinking their last cup of coffee.

However, these symptoms are temporary, and after abstaining for a while most people actually feel more steady energy and less fatigue than when they were using caffeine.

Other options available

For those who would like to feel energized without the use of caffeine there are other options.

Eating a balanced, varied diet with high carbohydrate in-between-meal snacks and regular physical activity will help to increase energy levels.

Diaphragmatic (deep) breathing is the most efficient, least taxing way to breathe and helps increase energy and stamina.

Truth-in-sentencing bill passes state House

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Illinois House of Representatives voted April 7 to make violent criminals spend more time in jail.

The Republican truth-in-sentencing bill, which passed the House with a 105-6 vote, would keep murderers and serious sex offenders behind bars longer.

If the bill is passed by the Senate and signed into law by Gov. Jim Edgar, first degree murderers will serve 100 percent of their sentence, which could range from 20 to 60 years, or life in prison. Convicted rapists and other serious sex offenders would serve at least 85 percent of their sentence.

According to bill supporter Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, the average Illinois murder sentence is 33 years, but the average murderer spends 10 years of that in jail.

People convicted of other felonies, including attempted first degree murder, aggravated battery with a firearm, aggravated kidnapping

"Most likely, the only bill that was going to be before us on this issue was the Republican bill."

David Phelps
Eldorado state representative for ransom and armed robbery also would spend at least 85 percent of their sentence in jail under the bill.

Bost said he was in favor of the bill despite criticism by Democrats that the bill does not go far enough.

"The Democrats are saying this (bill) is not tough enough," he said. "They want to have truth in sentencing for everything. To carry out that plan we would have to triple the income tax or cut education by $7.6 billion."

Nie Howell, spokesman for the Illinois

Department of Corrections, said the Republican version calls for $314 million over 10 years while the Democratic version calls for $7.6 billion during the same period. That money would be used to build more prisons and cover other costs resulting from longer prison stays.

Edgar also has his own truth-in-sentencing bill, which would cost the state $242 million over 10 years. He has not yet said whether he will support the criminal sentencing bill that passed in the House April 7, but Bost said he expects Edgar to sign the bill after it is passed by the Senate.

Rep. David Phelps, D-Eldorado, said he would have liked to pass the Democratic bill but voted for the Republican bill because it was the only bill available.

"Most likely, the only bill that was going to be before us on this issue was the Republican bill," he said. "If you're someone who says you're going to be tough on crime, you are going to vote yes on what you can. Now that the Republicans are in control, we are only able to respond to what they give us."

USG Elections

Students get to polls, vote on 'issues'

By Kellie Huttes
Daily Egyptian Reporter

MICHAEL J. DESISTI — The Daily Egyptian
Ryan Roseberry, a junior in foreign language in trade from Lincoln, votes at the USG elections Monday afternoon at the Student Center.

Less than a week after city and county elections, students made their way to the polls to vote for SIUC student senators, Undergraduate Student Government president and vice president, a student representative for SIU's Board of Trustees and for three referendums, Monday.

More than 1,150 students voted at 4 p.m. and after 4:30 p.m., there was a steady flow of voters, according to election officials. The exact number was not available at presstime.

Student candidates made last-minute efforts to persuade voters by dispersing campaign fliers and explaining their views on issues.

Candidates could be seen throughout the day in front of the Student Center and Student Recreation Center entrances braving the heat to get their points across to voters.

Students, who only needed an I.D. to vote, said they were voting because of the issues and to support each other as student candidates.

The three referendums on the ballot asked students if they approved of raising the bar entry age to 21, raising the athletic fee $50 during the next two years and a 50 cent increase in the student activity fee that would fund a direct membership in the United States Student Association.

Robin Place, a senior in paralegal studies from Pinckneyville and election worker, said she was surprised at the student voter turnout. "I expected it to be busy around 10 till when classes were through, but it's been steady all day," she said.

Michelle Greenberg, an undecided freshman from Wheaton, and Jennifer Devora, a freshman in elementary education from Highland Park, said they wanted bar-entry age to remain 19.

Students put Sherman in USG top spot

Winning by landslide: The USG president-elect is ready to lead the new senators.

By Shawna Donovan
DE Governmental Affairs Editor

Duane Sherman, along with several members of the Unity Party, were voted into the Undergraduate Student Government Monday night. Sherman and Vice President candidate Kim Clemens won in a landslide against last minute write-in candidate Jami Bathon and her running mate Rob Irby, according to unofficial numbers.

Sherman said even though the landslide might put some pressure on the now dominant party, members are ready to serve.

"We are going to perform," Sherman said. "We know the ins and outs of the issues, and we will work as a good team."

As a candidate Sherman vowed to get students more involved.

He said with Clemens, who is the executive chair of the Student Programming Council, they will get the word out on activities and issues.

Sherman also said he will try to get a quorum of senators for a summer senate.

"I would like to get started on the issues and get prepared for the fall," Sherman said.

Election results will be official when USG and the Graduate and Professional Student Council ratifies the numbers, according to Jean Paratore, USG advisor.

University Park's contested senate race went to the wire as independents Jason Barrett, 197, and Terrace Howard, 163, edged out Unity member Ali Anekwe.

Anekwe said after this race, he probably will not participate in student government.

"I've done more than the average student by going to all the meetings," Anekwe said. "If I'm out, then I'm out."

Irby, who ran for both vice president and a College of Education senate seat, won the seat with 21 votes. He is joined by Unity member Kim Zilch, 14 votes.

Unity Party members Maggie Bednar, 207, and Jason Smith, 164, carried the two senate seats for the College of Liberal Arts. Smith rode past independent Jason Smith, 149.

On some of the ballots, different candidates were written in. Gus Bode received six votes and Fred Flinstone received one.

The USG election commission double and triple checked election results which caused numbers to run late. Most results were not available at press time.

Fire up the grill: Murphysboro residents grill out for a picnic at Lake Murphysboro Monday afternoon. Weather forecasts called for thunderstorms, but the sun was bright and temperatures reached the mid-80s. Pictured in back are Junior Bailey (left) and Bonnie Yarber. Big bucks rolling into Newt's PAC

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The national Republican political action committee controlled by House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., reported one of its most successful off-year fundraising periods Monday, generating $487,520 in three months and securing Gingrich's place as the hottest money magnet on Capitol Hill.

GOPAC, the political action committee Gingrich has chaired since 1986, raised the money from 1,771 individuals across the country, most of them small donors and several of them wealthy repeat givers such as Wisconsin businessman Terry Kohler, who gave $70,000 on top of the more than $700,000 he and his wife have contributed since 1985.

The overall total surprised some GOPAC staffers, who had expected the expensive November elections and the electoral calm of 1995 to suppress wintertime giving.

"Compared to an off-election year, right after the kind of election we had in 1994, we are very pleased with the numbers," said Lisa B. Nelson, GOPAC's executive director.

The GOPAC report offered additional evidence that Gingrich's multi-pronged fundraising machine—which has touched off several ethics complaints over alleged conflicts of interest—is running stronger than ever.

"No one comes close to him in terms of the reach of his network," said Thomas E. Mann, director of governmental studies at the Brookings Institution. "The organizational networks match his ambitions, not only for himself, but for the Republican Party and the country."

"It would be shortsighted to view this in narrow, conflict-of-interest terms," Mann said. "It's interesting as a phenomenon."

voting because the issues are important to them," Greenberg said. "To some students the bar entry age is probably the most important issue on the ballot."

Melissa Miller, a junior in radio and television from Morningside, said she voted for the bar entry age to stay at 19 because there are no alternative activities to drinking here.

"I don't think there are enough other activities for students to participate in," she said. "If you increase the bar entry age, you increase drinking and driving. So what if someone is in a bar and drinking under age? At least it's supervised drinking."

Troy Alim, a sophomore in speech communications from Chicago, said he voted to support the referendum for USSA.

"I think the voice of students is important," he said. "I'm surprised

"I don't think there are enough other activities for students..."

Melissa Miller
reported 21 bar entry age at what I've seen, which is good. There's been a lot of students out voting today."

Joe Sickles, a senior in consumer economics from Aurora, said he voted to increase SIUC's athletic fee.

"I think the athletic fee needs to be increased because we need Division I status—that helps the school," he said. "I would hope more students vote because this election has a lot more to do with them than the city election."

The referendums students voted on are non-binding.

Keenan has drive to turn players into teams

By Helene Elliott
Los Angeles Times

"I am not going to leave New York. I am coach of the New York Rangers."

—Mike Keenan, June 13, 1994.

"It came very easily. It was like going back to my old neighborhood."

—Keenan on July 17, 1994, after leaving the Rangers to become coach and general manager of the St. Louis Blues.

Mike Keenan is unhappy, biting off his words as he analyzes his players' performance.

"They're standing around and looking at each other, saying, 'We've got a hell of a lot of talent so we don't have to work,'" he says.

"They're at a crossroads. They have to make up their minds what direction they want to go, whether they want to win or want the same old same old."

Choose any year in the last 10 that Keenan has coached in the NHL, and he has made that speech.

That day, he was talking about his Blues, but he said the same thing last year about the Rangers.

And he said it about the Chicago Blackhawks and, before that, the Philadelphia Flyers.

Keenan has his ways.

He flatters the stars, prods the underachievers, drives players harder than they are used to being driven and gets them into top shape.

He challenges his bosses, exasperating them with his insistence on doing things his way.

But mostly, he wins.

Keenan, 45, took the Flyers to the finals twice and the Blackhawks once before he led the Rangers to the Stanley Cup last spring, their first since 1940.

They might have won to spite him, but win they did.

And now, Keenan has the Blues in second place in the Central Division, again after bruising player egos and clashing with his bosses.

"In this profession, we're judged on how we do in the playoffs," said St. Louis assistant coach Ted Sator, who previously worked with Keenan in Philadelphia.

"With Mike, there's not a lot of gray. There's black and white. And there's one direction he steers his team, toward getting ready for the playoffs."

That's why the Rangers hired him.

They had missed the playoffs in 1992-93, and he had been fired by the Blackhawks.

The Rangers needed a coach who could handle stars and were willing to overlook his autocratic manner.

"I knew what potentially he could do when we hired him, good and bad," Ranger General Manager Neil Smith said.

"I was warned about him by many people. But those were drastic times, and that calls for drastic measures."

It turned out to be a nerve-racking, tumultuous ride.

Keenan benched key players, such as defensemen James Patrick and Brian Leetch, to emphasize that they needed to work to stay in the lineup.

He stroked star center Mark Messier and pushed other players. But it all worked.

The Rangers won the Cup and Leetch was voted the most valuable player in the playoffs.

Split

Sanam Berksoy brought two wins apiece to their records against the Sycamores and Bulldogs, bringing them each to 13-5 for the spring season.

At the no. 1 singles flight, sophomore Patricia Zihler lost to Indiana State's Kathy Najbert, 7-6, 6-2, and Drake opponent Nikki Veize, 6-4, 6-0.

Saluki netter Lucy Steele at the no. 6 spot lost to both her opponents over the weekend, losing to Meredith Lavelle of Drake and Jill Scales of Indiana State.

Doubles action flip-flopped between ISU and Drake, as the no. 2 and 3 flights won on Friday against the Sycamores, then lost to Drake on Saturday, as the no. 1 tandem also split the weekend, losing to ISU and winning against Drake.

The women's squad takes on Evansville today in their final conference match of the season.

"It doesn't look promising because of the weather, and we won't be able to reschedule it," Auld said. "We have beaten teams that they haven't beaten, so that will be a factor in conference seeding if we're unable to play."

"But Evansville has always been very scrappy, with stiff competition at the top three positions. They are always tough competitors."

Goransson also excelled in doubles competition with partner Dan Jones.

The duo cruised to victory over Northern Iowa's Tod Berkey and Craig Gordan, 8-3; and then slid past Redbird's Steve Moehn and Bryan Edmunds, 9-7.

Vuckovic had an easy time with Panther Matt McElroy 6-2, 6-1, Saturday. On Sunday, Vuckovic dropped the first set to Redbird Roger Juers 3-6, but came to life in the second and third sets, 6-3, 6-2, to complete the weekend's singles sweep.

He also teamed up with Jack Oxler to beat Northern Iowa's Chad VanderLinder and Tom Neff, 8-4, in doubles action and the duo came back to crush Illinois State's Adrian Camilleri and Josh Reed, 8-4.

Goransson and Vuckovic's victories aside, the team could be performing at a better level like the teamed played against Northern Iowa.

"When we play well we are capable of being very good; but we have to play well consistently," Goransson said.

Other single winners against Northern Iowa included Altair Merchant who defeated Craig Gordan 6-0, 6-2; Mick Smyth took out Jeremy Weigel 6-4; 6-1; and Jack Oxler whipped Brandon Lindsey 6-1, 6-1.

Merchant and Smyth teamed up to oust Matt McElroy and Jeremy Weigel, 8-6, to give SIUC a clean sweep in doubles matches against the Panthers.

The Saluki netters now sport a record of 5-11 on the season and will travel to Peoria for matches against Bradley and Creighton, April 15.

doubleheaders.

Schuttek has been the lone consistent pitcher for the Salukis this season, and her presence on the hill could potentially make or break the team's season. She has accounted for nine of the 14 Saluki wins this year, with an earned run average under 1.50, while the rest of the staff has a record of 5-11.

The injury did not keep the freshman from being the designated hitter all four games.

Brechtelsbauer said she will decide if Schuttek will start the first end of tomorrow's doubleheader at Eastern Illinois just before game time. She said the same holds true for Wednesday's twin bill at Southern Illinois-Edwardsville. The four games are against non-conference teams.

The Salukis (14-14, 1-5 in the Missouri Valley Conference) take up conference play again on Friday in a home doubleheader against Tulsa.

"We definitely want her to be ready for conference," Brechtelsbauer said. "But, if she's ready to go tomorrow, she'll go. We've decided to use her in

Chris Sabo signs deal as DH for White Sox

Baltimore Sun

SARASOTA, Fla.—As a Baltimore Oriole, Chris Sabo balked at becoming a designated hitter, saying it was "not baseball." He conceded that Harold Baines was "a nice guy," but said all a DH did was bat four times and watch television.

Nothing like the threat of unemployment to change a man's mind. Now that Sabo has signed a one-year, $300,000 contract to be the Chicago White Sox DH, he'll be happy to grab a bat and the remote control, too.

It's mind-boggling enough that the White Sox chose Sabo to replace Julio Franco as their DH. It's even more mind-boggling that they plan to bat Sabo cleanup—behind Frank Thomas.

"Is that what I'm hitting?" Sabo asked the reporters who greeted him at the White Sox training complex Monday. "Interesting."

Almost as interesting as the humbling of a free agent who batted 256 with 11 home runs and 42 RBIs in 68 games with the Orioles last season.

"I can't play anywhere but third base," Sabo proclaimed last June. "I'm not a pinch hitter, and I'm not a DH."

But after spending the weekend at the free-agent training camp in Homestead, Fla., Sabo practically skipped into the White Sox clubhouse, thrilled to be a DH.

"It beats the alternative," he said. "I've always loved playing. I'll do the best I can to adjust to the role. Maybe I'll have less chance of getting hurt."

Sabo, 33, said he has been injured every season since 1991. A back strain caused him to lose his third base job to Leo Gomez last May.

"I enjoyed playing for the Orioles—it was one of the best groups of guys I ever played with," he said. "It's strange the way it worked out. But I don't regret going there."

season form.

"Go get a Gatorade," he'd tell the losing team, mixing a commercial pitch with an insult.

Heck, Jordan would even warn his baseball friends to wear Nike basketball shoes, not Reeboks.

What did Goodwin do?

"I came in Nikes," Goodwin said. "I wasn't stupid."

What happened to the guys in Reeboks?

"They got dunked on. They'd lose. He'd pick on them."

The games took place in the late afternoon, at a gymnasium near the San Francisco Giants' training facility in Scottsdale, after the day's baseball was over.

"You could always tell he loved it," Zaub said. "He loved being out there. It was his idea to go play."

"He'd send off his assistant, George, tell him to load up the cooler with sodas and beers. We'd close up the gym and go out and play."

"He just did it because he wanted to play basketball. He knew no one on the team would say no."

Say no?

Once the word got out, players from other teams in Arizona began showing up at the gym as well.

It became such a big deal, Ochoa's mother brought a video camera one day while visiting from Miami.

"A lot of people came with them," Goodwin said. "I wish I had one."

Did Jordan ever dunk over Goodwin?

"Never," Goodwin said. "I let him live it. I was like, 'Here, show me, stick your tongue out, do all them dunks, I ain't going to mess with you.'"

Signs point to announcement of Joe Montana's retirement

By Bill Plaschke
Los Angeles Times

Quarterback Joe Montana is expected to announce his retirement early next week in San Francisco, ending an era where it began.

"I understand that's when it's happening," said Carl Crowley, longtime family friend from New Eagle, Pa. "But I'm not believing anything until I hear it."

Relatives from Monongahela, Pa., have already flown to San Francisco to join Montana, 38, for the ceremony in the city where he led the 49ers to four Super Bowl championships and countless comeback victories.

The ceremony may involve city officials, but the 49ers are not expected to participate. They traded him to Kansas City two years ago, going with Steve Young as their quarterback.

Months of retirement speculation became a reality recently when Montana, according to relatives, finally decided to listen to his aches, pains, and the wishes of his wife, Jennifer.

"He wants to keep playing and winning," said one source close to the situation. "But he's sick of practicing, and his wife wants him home."

During his two seasons with the Chiefs, the team and his body deteriorated to the point where Montana apparently has decided that the final season of his contract would not be worth his $2.4-million salary.

Neither Montana nor his agents could be reached for comment.

"At the end of the year, his friends in Kansas City were telling me that Joe was just tired, real tired," said Dave Huffman, a friend and former Notre Dame teammate. "This shouldn't surprise anybody."

What may be surprising is that Montana will retire, after a 16-year career, with only two NFL passing records—most consecutive 400-yard passing games, five, and most consecutive completions in a game, 22, twice.

Although he trails Fran Tarkenton and Dan Marino in completions and touchdown passes, nobody has performed better in big games.

"He is the greatest quarterback of our time," said retired linebacker Matt Millen, longtime rival and teammate. "Here's the test. Ask Marino or Tarkenton if they would trade what they have done for what Joe has done. And they would."

Some of the highlights of his career are so impressive, they have titles.

Remember "The Catch," the touchdown pass to Dwight Clark that gave the 49ers the 1981 National Football Conference championship against Dallas?

How about "The Drive," Montana's game-winning march against Cincinnati in the final minutes of the Super Bowl after the 1988 season that ended in a touchdown pass to John Taylor.

there, it was hard to believe," Zaub recalled Sunday. "You'd watch the guy on TV, then all of a sudden, you're sitting there going, 'I'm on the same court with Michael Jordan.'"

Great fun.

Until Zaub's team beat Jordan's in full-court four-on-four.

"The first game, he was lolly-gagging. He wasn't really doing much," Zaub said. "But when we beat them, he got mad."

How mad?

Well, in the next game, Zaub had an open layup—so he thought.

"He came out of nowhere and swatted it into the stands where the wives were sitting—a big-time swat," Zaub said.

Jordan being Jordan, he didn't leave it at just that.

"Go tell your grandkids about that one," he said.

Someone find Zaub a lawyer, and Goodwin and Ochoa, too.

Not because Jordan dished them. No, because they deserve a share of the proceeds from Jordan's return, along with all the others His Aimeess dunked on in Arizona.

Indeed, the day he returned to the NBA, Jordan said the pickup games against the minor-leaguers rekindled his desire to play basketball.

That surprised Goodwin.

"He never talked about going back," he said.

But in retrospect, it's obvious Jordan was getting frisky. He was the one who organized the games. And his trash talking was in mid-

Naturally, Jordan obliged.

He was his usual fiercely competitive self.

"You play a game of tiddlywinks with Michael Jordan, and he's out to beat you," Zaub said.

"One day, we were playing dominoes, and I was beating him. He got up and walked off, because he didn't want to lose. His excuse was, 'I got to go.' But he didn't want to lose at anything."

Goodwin marveled at how Jordan had the energy to get up in the morning to play golf even after a night game.

Zaub loved how Jordan would tell the players to meet him at a pool hall, and Charles Barkley would show up.

It was something new every day. Occasionally, they even played basketball outdoors.

"One day, we went up to this park in North Scottsdale," Zaub said. "We all showed up, probably 15 guys from our team."

"Michael showed up at the court with two boxes of brand new Air Jordans in his hands. A couple of guys didn't have basketball shoes. He just gave them out."

"When we started playing, hardly anyone was there. But by the time the game was finished, people were lined up around the court."

Oh, the stories they can tell.

"Once, I was running to guard someone and Jordan set a pick on me and knocked me to the floor," Zaub said. "He said, 'Welcome to the big leagues, kid—that's how you set a pick.'"

Jordan, of course, wasn't going to the big leagues.

Even back then, his mind was on something else.

But come crunch time, these high-paid veterans are often sitting and watching. In their place you will see Nate McMillan, Cassell, Dell Curry and Anthony Mason.

There are other reserves who finish out games—Roy Tarpley for the Dallas Mavericks, Brian Shaw for the Orlando Magic, Chuck Person for the San Antonio Spurs and several current and former All-Stars for the Phoenix Suns frequently come off the bench in the fourth quarter to replace a starter. All but Tarpley compete for play-off-bound teams.

The top NBA teams are deep enough to have reserves who would start for other teams. These finishers have the ego to handle coming off the bench, the skills to provide a quick pick-me-up and the reliability to play smart basketball.

"I don't care if I'm not starting," says Mason, who is an erratic player. "I like having the responsibility of picking the team up when I come in. I'd be happy to come off the bench my entire career."

Netters rule court against Panthers, bow to Redbirds

It was two days of strong performances and disappointing let-downs, as the SIUC men's tennis team split two dual meets this weekend.

The Salukis blitzed Northern Iowa 6-1, Saturday, but lost to Illinois State 4-3, Sunday.

Two SIUC netters stood out this weekend, as Andre Goransson and Bojan Vuckovic were victorious in every one of their matches.

Goransson easily dispatched Northern Iowa's Tod Berkey in straight sets, 6-2, 6-2. Then he came back to squeak by Illinois State's Steve Moehn, 7-6, 2-6, 7-5.

In the match against Moehn, Goransson was down match point at 5-3, one-point from losing, before fighting back to get the 7-5 win.

"I have already played the guy from Northern Iowa, so that was not so tough," he said. "But the player from Illinois State gave me a tough time, but I did enough to win. "At those times you just have to forget that it's match point and play aggressively. I just put it out of mind and hit the shots I needed to."

However, even with Goransson's success, he was disappointed that the team lost to Illinois State.

"We were supposed to beat them," he said. "I don't know what happened with the other players, but sometimes we just Close conference competition sums up last weekend's results for the SIUC women's tennis team.

The Saluki netters took on No. 4 ranked Indiana State University on Friday, winning 5-4 in Terre Haute, Ind., and No. 7 ranked Drake University, falling 3-6 at South Bend, Ind.

Auld said the key to team success has been the extreme depth of the team.

"We haven't been doing anything differently, we're just consistently winning and bringing in good results," she said. "One person on the team can pick up where another left off. It's very nice to think that they mostly freshmen and sophomores this season."

Liz Gardner, a sophomore from Essex, England, suffered two defeats in the no. 2 singles flights over the weekend, breaking her 13 game winning streak for theseason.

Auld said Gardner had a hard time getting into her matches last weekend.

"Liz is too good of a competitor to let it get her down," Auld said. "Any other time, I think Liz would have beaten her ISU opponent. I knew she was having a hard time concentrating during the match."

A massive sigh of relief flowed through the SIUC softball coaches' office as the diagnosis of the knee injury to Saluki pitching ace Jamie Schutteck is day-to-day.

X-rays of the freshman's left knee came up negative Sunday, as the pain she was suffering was due to soft tissue underneath her knee.

"I'm relieved for both her and the program," Saluki head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said. "She is such an integral part of our program. Right now we'll just play this thing day by day."

Schutteck (9-3) was hit in the left knee by a pitch in a game over spring break, which caused discomfort in the knee when she would land on her left foot when completing her pitching delivery.

The injury did not prevent Schutteck from performing her normal pitching and designated hitting duties until last Friday when the freshman felt pain in her left knee after completing her delivery in warm-ups. The pain was enough to keep her off the mound for Friday and Saturday twin bills against Wichita State and Creighton, respectively. Schutteck normally pitches the first end of all

In assessing the teams most likely to succeed during the playoffs, forget the obvious. Every top team in the NBA has a go-to guy. They all have point guards with outstanding assist-to-turnover ratios. And they all—well, almost all—play with great defensive intensity.

Instead, the benchmark of a championship team is its bench.

No matter that Hakeem Olajuwon had an MVP season, the Houston Rockets would not have won the NBA title last season without Sam Cassell, Mario Elie and the team's other reserves, who easily outscored the New York Knicks' bench in the Finals. The Chicago Bulls had an able supporting cast for Michael Jordan's supporting cast during their championship run. The Detroit Pistons had Dennis Rodman and Vinnie "Microwave" Johnson. The Los Angeles Lakers had Michael Cooper. The Boston Celtics seemed to resurrect a veteran every season they won the title—Bill Walton, Scott Wedman, M.L. Carr, Paul Silas, Don Chaney, et al. Get the picture?

Bench play is always critical, but even more so during the playoffs, as the mental intensity and the physical wear and tear of the long season lead to more fouls and fatigue. Even though teams pare down their rotations to eight or nine players for the playoffs, those three or four reserves can determine the outcome of a season.

"The best teams in the league have the best benches in the league," Lakers Coach Del Harris says. "No matter how talented your starting five is, that's not enough."

The ideal is to have one man, the sixth man, who comes off the

Bengals may move at end of '95 season

By Vito Stellino
Baltimore Sun

Cincinnati Bengals President Mike Brown said for the first time Monday that he no longer believes a football stadium will be built in Cincinnati, prompting speculation that he may move the team after the 1995 season.

Brown is frustrated that the city hasn't taken steps to get funding for a new stadium since he announced last month that his lease at Riverfront Stadium was breached by a late payment.

"The answer may be in," Brown told reporters in Cincinnati. "It probably means there isn't going to be a new football stadium in Cincinnati. I'm not encouraged that there have been any advances."

Brown had one meeting with City Manager Jon Shirey, whose position is that the Bengals' lease hasn't been breached, but didn't make any progress at it.

With the owners poised to vote Wednesday in Dallas on whether to allow the Los Angeles Rams to move to St. Louis. Brown said he hasn't had any discussion with officials from Los Angeles.

But when he was asked if he had met with officials of any other city, he declined to comment.

John Moag, head of the Maryland Stadium Authority, also declined to comment when he was
