Imperfect in their own eyes

The quest for the perfect body images have both men and women using extreme methods to accomplish goals

Geoffrey Ritter
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

There was a sense of uneasiness in the air as the nine women strutted across the stage in their one-piece swimsuits and high-heels, gazing into the emptiness of O'Neill Auditorium at John A. Logan Community College. Aside from the occasional comment from a technician or a joking catcall echoing from the back of the theater, the room was silent.

There was a reason for the air's scene last month: the women were less than 24 hours away from participating in the Miss Southern Crown Pageant, a competition of talent and beauty from which only one will prevail. Needless to say, the tension at this dress rehearsal could have been cut with a knife.

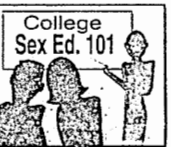

"Up until dress rehearsal, I've been freaking out," said Carolyn Valentine, a SIUC junior in information systems technology and one of the contestants anxiously preparing to grace the stage. "I think it's all just in my head."

Hidden in this scene is a much larger social issue: that of how people perceive their body and how it drives their self-esteem, a problem which University experts on the issue say affects a vast majority of the population. And, in addition, it is a concept that knows no age restrictions.

In a darkened row of seats in the theater sat 1999 Miss Illinois Jade Smalls, carefully observing and critiquing each girl as they took the stage modeling formal wear and rehearsing talents. While her pageant career has taken her to all corners of the country, Smalls said, nothing shocked her so much as a conversation she had with a young girl about a year ago.

"A 5-year-old girl came up to me and said, 'my grandma says if I can be as tall and pretty as you, I could be Miss America,'" Smalls recounted. "I can't imagine being 5 years old and thinking 'she's prettier than me.'"

However, research shows that body image issues are affecting girls, as well as boys, today at younger and younger ages, many of them spawned by a heavily-mediated society. A recent study found that 90 percent of impressionable young girls own a Barbie doll, with its physiologically impossible proportions, and many of these same girls will begin to experiment with makeup at about age 10.

Experts at SIUC say while there are a variety of influences that compel young girls to think this way, much of it can be attributed to a heavily mediated society. Powerful images, such as that of an 18-year-old Britney Spears parading her young and scantily clad body in magazines and on television, send psychological jolts into young and developing minds, according to SIUC student Keli Brattman.

"Research has looked at the influence of the media as a big problem," said Brattman, a graduate student in psychology who wrote her master's thesis on body images. "Children are very impressionable at that age."

In addition, research indicates that these feelings of inadequacy are not left behind with childhood, but rather continue to fester as a major component of a person's self-esteem. According to information collected by the U.S. National Center for Health Statistics, 50 percent of college-age women within their recommended weight range complain about being overweight, in comparison with 25 percent of men.

"We do an injustice to the female population," said

'Tough decision' ahead in vice chancellor race

Candidates Bender, Johnson and McCurry would each bring extensive experience to SIUC

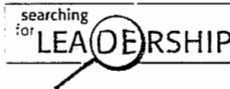

Brynn Scott
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

After meeting the final three candidates for vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement, University officials are confident that any of them would benefit SIUC.

Carl "Bud" Bender, Ronda Johnson and Ricky McCurry interviewed with constituency groups, faculty, students and interested community members during the past three weeks in the University Museum.

"I'm confident that we can hire one really good candidate out of the three good candidates," interim Chancellor John Jackson said. "It is going to be a tough decision; the interviews were well."

Jackson said commenting on each candidate's individual strengths and weaknesses would be inappropriate at this time, since each candidate has not yet been fully evaluated.

The vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement's role at SIUC is to advance fund raising, private funding, Alumni Association relations and public relations. Jackson said private funding is the most important aspect of the job.

Each candidate would bring a wealth of fund-raising experience to SIUC, though each one has specialized strengths, according to Jackson.

Bender, associate vice president for Development at Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo, directed three mini-campaigns at the University of Western Michigan and launched a $125 million capital campaign.

Johnson, vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, has more than 22 years of fund-raising experience.

McCurry, associate vice chancellor for Development and Alumni Affairs at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, successfully completed a $175 million campaign by raising more than $235 million in gifts and pledges.

Paulette Curkin, president of the Administrative and Professional Staff Council, said all three candidates would fit the vice chancellor position well.

"They are all qualified," Curkin said. "All three of them are good candidates."

The positive reactions from University officials may complement the hard work from the search committee.

Samuel Goldman, chairman of the committee, said the group spent many extra hours evaluating each applicant. The committee narrowed the pool from 40 to three in less than a year.

Max Yen, Faculty Senate president, said all three candidates are qualified for the job.

"We are lucky to have three good candidates," Yen said. "All three are very outgoing and confident."

Though few students and community members participated in the interviews, Jackson has received feedback from them.

Jackson and the search committee is evaluating the feedback from all who participated in the interview process. After taking in the recommendations, Jackson will formulate his recommendation and forward it to SIUC interim President Frank Horton and the Board of Trustees.

The board has the final decision as to who will be the next vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement. Jackson expects the decision to be made before May.

SIUC names new director of Information Technology

Out with the old, in with the Olson

CODELL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC's 10-month vacancy for a permanent director of Information Technology will end May 1 when Donald Olson assumes the position.

Olson was chosen out of 30 other candidates for his experience in this particular field after Albert Allen stepped down from the post in July 1999.

He served as director of Academic Computing and associate vice president of Computer Services at Mankato State University from 1981 until 1996, when he accepted a position as chief information officer at Murray State University. There, he was responsible for all the academic computer services, media support, administrative computing and network telecommunications departments.

"We felt his particular skills were superior," said Glenn Poshard, vice chancellor for Administration.

Olson said he will miss Murray State University, but said he thinks his new job, in which he will be earning an annual salary of $102,500, is a promotion.

"I'm really excited to start the position," Olson said. "The people I've met here have been helpful and very friendly."

Olson earned a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from the University of North Dakota, a master's degree in mechanical engineering from North Dakota State University and did doctoral degree course work at the University of New Mexico.

Despite his academic history at North Dakota and New Mexico, Olson already had a connection to SIUC before he got the job. His wife LuAnn Hiniker is working toward a Ph.D. at SIUC in work force development.

He hopes to accomplish a lot as the new director of Information Technology. He is hoping to put the new student technology fees to good use by directing the money it gets toward student needs.

Because of his experience in similar fields and his enthusiasm to do a good job, Poshard thinks Olson will have a bright future at SIUC.

"We are very proud to have him on board," Poshard said.

SIUC graduate remembers what changed his study habits, life

ANDREA DONALDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

When remembering back to his college years, John Heakin recalls times of challenges and obstacles. Most of all, he remembers what got him through those difficult times.

Heakin, executive in residence for the College of Business and Administration, was an undergraduate in finance during the late 1960s, got married, and had a child. He was finding himself under a lot of pressure.

The night before an important term paper was due, the furnace went out in the Heakin trailer on Wall Street. He stayed up all night fixing the furnace. He skipped his class, finishing the paper with no time to spare. Heakin, covered in soot from the furnace, waited outside the class for his professor, handed him the paper and waited.

He waited and wondered all week. Would the professor accept it? Would he fail the course? Would he let his family down?

As his professor returned his paper, Heakin was both surprised and relieved. He had passed with a high grade.

At the end of class, Heakin wanted to speak to his professor, Donald Perry. Perry understood that everyone has had days and that was Heakin's day.

"I said what day [the paper] was due. I didn't say what time it was due," Perry said about the late paper.

Heakin said from that day on he changed his study habits. If Perry had not given him a second chance, Heakin said he might not have graduated.

"For the first time in my life, someone had shown me a special kindness," Heakin said. "I was determined not to let him down."

To show his gratitude to SIUC and Perry for having confidence in him, Heakin has written a $1 million gift to the University, in his will.

Heakin graduated in 1971 with a degree in finance. Upon graduation, he returned home where he joined his brother and sister to build the small family business his mother had started. The business had one store and one paid employee.

Since then, it has been built to be the largest, most successful company in the business, Heakin said. Heakin Research, Inc., now has 36 offices in 20 cities coast to coast and does about 11,000 research projects each year.

Heakin is visiting SIUC as part of COBA's Executive in Residence program. He will be visiting and speaking to marketing and management classes this week.

"I want to relate to [the students] as best as possible in the things they're interested in," Heakin said. "It's a nice component to what you learn in the text books."

Heakin offered a few words of advice to students in COBA and other students in the University: get an internship, study international marketing and foreign languages, learn the Internet and get an advanced degree.

"If you're going to compete in the new millennium, you need these things," Heakin said. "The more you know, the more you're worth. The better the training, the better you are."

Designing a future

Architecture students are showing University Housing the things they want to see

GEOFFREY M. RITTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

It's just the beginning of another hard day of work for students in Architecture 415's senior studio in Quigley Hall. In fact, most do not plan to leave until the early hours of the morning.

"We're here everyday that ends in Y," said Andy Leek, a senior in architecture from Evansville, Ind. "We're here, and all our friends are out at the bars."

Leek's comment is met with a quizzical glance from fellow student Nate Wambold from across the studio. The room is silent for a moment.

"Bars?" Wambold asks. "Yeah," Leek explains. "You know, people congregate, dance, drink ..."

The two agree that they may have to give their nominal "bars" a try, if they can find the time, that is. As an assignment given to them by their instructors, Leek and Wambold's class is working on designing apartment-style housing complexes, complete with all the amenities they think today's students want. While their plans might never make it to the construction phase, they have attracted the attention of University Housing.

The 47 students in Architecture 415, which is taught by assistant professors Norman Lach, James Wright and Robert Swenson, have been spending their semester designing these buildings after Lach returned from a conference in Chicago last year. Among other things, the conference discussed how to get students more involved in the design aspect of architecture.

Lach said he returned to Carbondale thinking that putting students to work designing housing complexes would be an effective exercise. However, he was unprepared to discover that Director of Housing Ed Jones was already toying around with possible designs for future housing.

Thus, Jones and the course's instructors launched a collaborative effort. Jones, who has visited the senior studio twice already, said the

The influence of hip hop and R&B a panel topic

The Department of Black American Studies is sponsoring a panel discussion on the influence of Hip Hop and R&B culture on today's society. The discussion takes place tonight at 7:30 in the Moore Lecture Hall in Faner 1326.

The event is organized by SIUC students, who will also make up the panel. For additional information, call Jermaine Taylor at 529-8873.

Opening the lines of communication on race

SIUC's Campus Dialogue on Race is having a panel discussion, "Why Diversity is Important at Southern Illinois University," from 4 to 5:30 p.m. today in Lawson 101.

Panelists will include faculty members, staff and students. CDOR is a campus organization of faculty members that seeks to promote dialogue on race issues at SIUC. For more information, call Jennifer Willis-Rivera at 453-1882.

On-campus residents hear four false fire alarms

Four false fire alarms sounded within 45 minutes in different residence halls on campus, forcing more than 1,500 students outside early Saturday morning.

The Carbondale Fire Department and University police responded to the four alarms between 2:42 and 3:17 a.m. Saturday. Police have a suspect in one of the incidents.

Alarms went off in Schneider Hall, Mae Smith Hall, Allen I and Allen III. At Schneider Hall, in which an alarm was sounded on the 16th floor at 2:42 a.m., police are investigating information about a suspect.

There are no suspects in the other incidents.

Sexual assault story comes to SIUC in video presentation

Katie Koestner, a nationally known sexual assault victim, will not speak at SIUC this year, but a video presentation will be shown in her absence.

Koestner visited SIUC last year, speaking to an audience of about 125 people. Although she will not be visiting this year, Women's Services will be showing an HBO docudrama depicting Koestner's situation.

Carol Sommer, campus safety representative for Women's Services, said Koestner's presentation was dynamic, but they opted to invite other speakers this year.

"The video still brings some pretty important issues," Sommer said. "I hope what will happen is that there will be a discussion about date or acquaintance rape, and seeing her talk about it might help other women come forward with their stories."

The event, part of Sexual Assault Awareness Month, aims to increase awareness by representing Koestner's story.

Koestner created Campus Outreach Services in 1995, an organization that works on sexual assault issues on college and high school campuses. Koestner, a Virginia state-trained and certified peer-educator and sexual assault counselor, plans to eventually go to law school and start a firm that specializes in expanding legal rights of sexual assault victims.

Koestner is disappointed that she will not be attending SIUC this year and said the video is only about 15-percent accurate.

"The movie still portrays the issue," Koestner said. "I don't think it'll make a lasting impression the way a real person would. I definitely think having a discussion afterwards is important to elaborate. I don't know if the video alone could change anyone's mind."

The video presentation and discussion takes place from 4 to 5 p.m. today in Woody Hall, Room 244 B. For more information or to register, call Women's Services at 453-3655.

Students being paid to quit smoking

Integrative Neuroscience lab conducting project

TRAVIS MORSE
ACADEMIC AFFAIRS EDITOR

Strength is not what allows people to quit smoking, said assistant lab director Norka Rabinovich. It's preparation that enables them to make it through the process.

"We give the people the opportunity to be prepared to quit," Rabinovich said. "People smoke because it's what they're used to doing. We get them used to doing something else."

Rabinovich works at the Integrative Neuroscience Laboratory or Smoking Lab in the SIUC Department of Psychology. There, she and more than 45 other dedicated staff members, offer smokers preparation skills and a monetary incentive of about $520 to quit smoking during a 45-day period.

The project, entering its second year of existence, is funded by a grant from the National Institute on Drug Abuse. David Gilbert, a psychology professor in charge of the lab, said the study not only helps people quit smoking, but also provides vital scientific information on how nicotine changes the central nervous system.

Two different therapies are given to participants in the study to help them quit smoking. One group is given nicotine patches and cessation behavior therapy, which emphasizes changing smokers' routines on a daily basis. OUR WORD

Student interests buried in the mud of student leaders

Elections for Undergraduate Student Government are about a week away and it's time for the candidates to decide how much they care about the organization they plan to lead.

Rob Taylor, presidential candidate for the Interim Party, told the DAILY EGYPTIAN he named his party to "rib the administration" and may sling some mud "for fun." He may regret those words if he loses the election, but that's nothing compared to the regret that will follow him if he wins.

USG has almost no official power. Other than allocating some student fee money to Registered Student Organizations, their power is completely advisory. The administration has no obligation to hear them out or heed their resolutions. USG's influence as an organization hinges on its ability to represent itself as a credible source for student opinions. If it loses that credibility, it's wasting its time and ours.

All the candidates are now rightfully consumed with convincing the voting students of their superior potential to act both as leaders and representatives. And maybe clever stunts and cheap shots at their colleagues will persuade some segment of the student population to vote in their favor, but let us warn you now, it's not worth it. The stunts would have to be so clever and the shots so cheap as to make the students forget the necessity of professionalism to USG's influence.

Once in office, a president who won his seat with shock-value and personal attacks will not only discover his or her own reputation is damaged, but he or she will bring down USG faster than you can say "impeachment."

The only thing more frustrating than being ignored by the administration for playing dirty in the election is being ignored as a diligent USG senator or commissioner because your leader didn't bother to campaign on the issues.

The first indications aren't looking good for this election, but it's not too late for the candidates to return the emphasis to what SIUC students want from their University. As each candidate tries to sway the students in their favor, he or she must remember the students aren't the only ones watching. Otherwise, the winner is in for a long year.

How to build a better human being

What if you could find out what kind of diseases your child will have before it is born? What if you could create the "perfect" child, free from disease? It may be possible sooner than you think. Using human genes to determine specific diseases and other problems has been under way for some time. However, there is a new step in the challenge of figuring out the human "body." A step that could create a world free of disease and allow us to live a lot longer.

According to a recent Newsweek magazine article, for the past 13 years scientists have been trying to decode the human body. At $250 million and rising, the Human Genome Project is the most expensive biology experiment ever. The goal of the project is to read every "chemical letter" in human DNA. What will this accomplish? Because human genes are 99.9-percent identical, this list will help doctors in diagnosing specific types of cancers. Knowing what makes us tick will help evaluate a child's genes in order to test the likelihood of getting any disease. The project will also help us predict different types of diseases like cancer. The most ambitious beliefs of those involved are that we will be able to create the "perfect" child. That is a child free from disease and free from obesity, learning disorders, and even being short. The study's aim is to name all 3.2

billion letters. They have already named 2 billion and are naming 12,000 letters every minute of every day. The medical benefits of this discovery are astounding. Besides being able to "turn off" the genes that promote disease and create a child free from it, this information could slow down the aging process, increasing our life expectancy dramatically. Being touted as the greatest find since the periodic table of elements, this project promises a lot in ways of the human body. But do we want to know this much?

Imagine a society where parents are creating their children in labs, deciding what color their hair is, how tall they are and even what sports or studies they will be interested in. Suppose further that there are a few "rebellious" parents who refuse to play God and want a natural child, regardless of the outcome. Imagine what sort of outcast this child would be. If he or she were overweight or had problems reading, he or she would be a pariah and their parents considered fools. And what about the workplace? If this project does what it promises, we may be able to know what kind of disease we are predisposed to 50 years down the road. If our employers have this kind of power, they could decide not to hire us based on that fact. Why would an employer put someone on the payroll and offer them benefits if they know that two years before they retire, they will succumb to cancer? Imagine the money they'll save. Think this won't happen? It already has. According to the article, a man listed as healthy at a pre-employment physical exam, was later fired for "lying" when it was found that "he carried a gene for kidney disease."

It is easy to imagine the benefits of this project. We would all like a world free from disease. We would all like to know when we'll get sick or if our children will be prodigies. But do we want to? These scientists are discovering something that could not only revolutionize medicine as we know it, but could destroy society. Imagine this information in the wrong hands. The project brings us a step closer to the world Adolf Hitler imagined.

Too much discretion on the finance committee

DEAR EDITOR:

In light of the Supreme Court's ruling about Registered Student Organization funding, and deadlines for annual funding extended for all SIUC RSOs, everyone seems to be talking about money these days. The editorial in the March 28 issue of the DAILY EGYPTIAN stated that "SIUC treatment of Registered Student Organizations is view-point neutral." I disagree. The rules that were set by the committee are, in fact, "view-point neutral," but the application of them is not.

I recently resigned from the Undergraduate Student Government Finance Committee after eight long months of disagreement and personal attacks over ways to appropriate student fees so that SIUC is benefited in some way. Anyone can obtain RSO status, after an interview with the IAC Committee and approval by the Senate, but they will only receive funding at the whim of the finance committee.

This is the problem: students are deciding what student organizations can and cannot spend their money on. Seven people sitting in one room judge, sometimes based on their personal beliefs, who should be funded. If they have a personal connection to a member of the group, particularly the chairperson, their decision is often made before the interview commences. Exceptions were constantly granted to those organizations who knew someone on the committee.

Until we can assemble committees that have little or no discretion, student fees will continue to come under fire for not being distributed equally. I am asking the finance committee that is left to allocate annual funding based on the rules that we wrote, not based on their personal opinions. A hint for all groups that are applying for funding: make friends with a member of the finance committee.

Chi-town should not be ignored

DEAR EDITOR:

This letter is in response to Beth Dobbels' letter, which appeared in the Tuesday, April 4 edition of the DAILY EGYPTIAN. There are a few things that need to be addressed in her letter.

First off, she congratulates the DAILY EGYPTIAN for their job covering the Illinois Primaries. I also think the DAILY EGYPTIAN did a great job. Next she asks, "Who really cares about the congressional primary in Chi-town unless you are from that area?" I will ask Ms. Dobbels, who really cares about the 17th district primary where no one was running against either Lane Evans or Mark Baker for their respective party's nomination? It's true that the two men have run against each other in the past two congressional elections and the contests are often heated, but this was a primary election.

There is no reason to favor a race where both men are running uncontested (Note to DE: Please cover it in November when the two men are actually head to head, Democrat versus Republican, because the race usually grabs a lot of national attention).

The third item that needs to be discussed is where Ms. Dobbels' writes, "There is more to the State of Illinois than Chicago." True there is more state, but over half of Illinois' population comes from Chicago, not to mention half of Illinois' congressional votes, along with a good number of students here at SIUC. Cook County alone has 2,977 students here. That is more than the entire 17th district, which is made up of thirteen counties. Lake County, which is also in the greater Chicago land area, along with Du Page County, sends 444 and 736 students respectively. The other five counties making up the Chicagoland area send large numbers of students to SIUC as well. Maybe those people care about the Bobby Rush congressional seat.

Overall, Illinois citizens should be concerned with what goes on in Chicago because the politicians have the power to control the entire state. Bobby Rush was concerned with Chicago and Chicago only in his eight years in office, so maybe the new candidate will support the rest of the state. I think Lane Evans is a good man and I hope he beats Mark Baker in November. Being from Bishop Hill (in the 17th district), I know that in November I will be voting for Lane, but I will also be watching the other races around the state.

Easing the leg work of job hunting via Internet

SIUC student hopes to send student resumes all over the world

Geoffrey Ritter
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Jennifer Kampmeier says she hopes to make student job hunting a little easier through her new business.

Electronic Job Searching, Inc., launched about two weeks ago, offers services to students to help get their names out to potential employers, said Kampmeier, a graduate student in curriculum instruction.

By offering resume consultation and then scanning that information into a computer that will send it to up to 200 different job-related websites, she said, the system offers a much more convenient and effective means of tracking down a job.

The search takes into account such factors as desired salary and geographical location, and notifications of interested employers are sent to the client via e-mail.

"It could go shooting off to 15,000 different people," Kampmeier said. "While you're sleeping, people can be looking at your resume."

According to Kampmeier, her business is a sign of trends in job searching coming in the near future. By the year 2010, almost all job hunters will be using scannable resumes as a means of getting their credentials spread to potential employers around the world, she said.

Abby Raboin, a junior in human resources management from Charleston, said she had a resume consultation with Kampmeier and will most likely look forward to seeing her resume jettied off into cyberspace. While she said she still has a ways to go before graduation, it is never too early to begin checking out options, and using online approaches such as Kampmeier's has many advantages.

"Everybody's using the Internet," Raboin said. "If you don't have [your resume] out there on the net, people aren't going to see it unless you take it to them."

However, according to James Scales, director of

JOB HUNT

* MORE INFORMATION ON ELECTRONIC JOB SEARCHING, INC. CAN BE FOUND ON ITS WEB PAGE AT WWW.ELEJOBSEARCH.COM.

University Career Services, much of the job-related material on the Internet is dated, and the method often results in employers looking to fill a single position receiving thousands of applications from all different areas.

In addition, Scales cited that online job banks rank about seventh on the list of where employers look for potential employees — well behind such conventional methods as personal meetings and campus visits. While he said services such as Kampmeier's are certainly beneficial, students should also try as many other approaches as they can find. The future, he said, will only open up even more options.

"I don't think we've seen the tip of the iceberg yet," Scales said. "By 2005 or 2006, the students will deal directly with employers. They won't even need the job bank."

Organization of American Historians Annual Conference inspires students

DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Students in Black American Studies were pleased to see black history included in the agenda during a recent conference for American historians and would like to see that more is done on the SIUC campus to promote black history.

Four SIUC undergraduate history majors attended the Organization of American Historians Annual Conference March 31 to April 2 in St. Louis. The OAH is a national society of American historians, and one of the largest in the nation.

This marked the first time undergraduate history majors attended the OAH conference.

Most were impressed that black history was part of the material covered.

"I feel we were represented," said Jakobi Williams, a senior in history from Chicago. "I felt comfortable there, and I feel that black history was represented there."

Williams said he is majoring in history because the University only offers Black American Studies as a minor. Despite recent increases in black enrollment and the number of minority graduates, SIUC still has more to do in terms of promoting Black history on campus, Williams said.

"I give them credit for that, but I don't think they tend to the needs that we have here," he said.

Pamela Smoot, a professor of Black American Studies at SIUC, made the decision to take undergraduate history majors to the conference for personal, as well as professional, reasons.

Graduate students are usually taken on trips like this, she said. Smoot said she never had the chance to attend such conferences as an undergraduate student, but did so as a graduate student. She thought her students deserved the chance to attend the conference as undergraduates instead of them having to wait another year.

"I think they're really good students and they show great promise as future historians, so I thought it would be a good experience for them," she said.

Terrence Henderson is another student of Smoot's who attended the conference. Henderson, a senior in history from Chicago, said he found things out about black history during the conference that he has not learned in four years at SIUC studying history.

"I think more classes should be offered here to teach black history," he said. "You can't tell the story of America without including everybody."

Students and professors from other institutions also attended the conference, in addition to historians and educators from around the nation. The conference included more than 40 two-hour sessions covering many aspects of American history.

In addition to historical topics, such as the women's movement and World Wars I and II, aspects of black history were also on the conference's agenda, including the African slave trade, blacks in sports and the Civil Rights movement.

Henderson and Williams will accompany Smoot in October to a conference of the Association for the Study of African-American Life and History. The AASLH is comprised of black historians from around the nation.

Smoot is more than pleased to see her students develop a passion for history. Her mentor as a student was Darlene Clark Hines, who currently teaches at Michigan State University and is the president of the Organization of American Historians. Smoot said she is now trying to mentor her students through involving them in activities such as the OAH conference.

"I am trying to give to the students I have now that energy and nurturing that I got," Smoot said.

BODY IMAGE

Clifford Coleman, a plastic surgeon who has operated out of Carbondale for about 20 years. "They see Playboy and they get very trained as far as what they think the stereotypical male wants."

Since Coleman began in the profession in the late 1970s, the business of nose jobs, face lifts and breast augmentations has sky-rocketed. Although the field started as a method to correct basic problems, he said, it has actually evolved into a billion dollar industry that attracts people looking to dramatically transform their bodies.

"The number of women requesting breast augmentation is going up and up," Coleman said. "So many famous people were having it done that it's just become mainstream."

While many obsessed with their appearance are flocking to corrective surgery, there are other routes some take to try to shed a few pounds. SIUC Counselor Virginia Hoffman said that eating disorders, such as bulimia and anorexia, are also on the rise. She estimates that about 10 percent of the students who come into her office is afflicted with one of the two.

However, Coleman and Hoffman stress that body image problems are not exclusive to women. A 1997 report in the journal "Psychosomatics" reported on a condition known as muscle dysmorphia, an issue that primarily affects men by causing feelings of muscular inadequacy. Many men afflicted with the disorder lead a life that revolves around their workout schedule.

Regan Hudecek, a freshman in aviation maintenance from Lombard, said he has been regularly working out for about five years and tries to make it to the gym between three and five times a week. While he says he also enjoys receiving the physical power and healthy lifestyle that come with lifting, enhancing his physical appearance plays an important part.

"It's not a top thing in my life, but sometimes I have to do it," Hudecek said. "I want to look good, and it makes your self-esteem so much better."

In the end, however, women remain the most notorious for harboring self-esteem problems related to their bodies. Although they are immersed in a competition which allows them to play up their lean bodies and pretty features, the women involved in the Miss Southern Crown Pageant still think they could be improved, especially in the areas of breasts and thighs.

"I feel, personally, that I know I could look better," said Miranda Hinman, a competitor in the pageant. "For my height, I think I'm OK, but I could still improve."

Though Hinman and Valentine accentuate the role the media plays in creating body image worries, they agree with experts such as Hoffman who assert that the issue is caused by a wide variety of sources.

"I think the causes are multi-determined," Hoffman said. "It's how we're genetically programmed. It's how our emotional make-up is made up. It's about what society wants to see. It's a combination of things."

projects are helping him learn what today's students want from their housing.

"We just started brainstorming some ideas," Jones said. "I just wanted to get an idea of what students want."

The site chosen for the projects to be designed for is located on the east edge of campus, at the intersection of Wall and Grand streets. Lach said the site was chosen because of the easy accessibility to campus buildings, the Recreation Center and Grinnell Hall, where students could easily find food.

Among the requirements for the project is that the design should provide housing for 200 to 240 students, with four students living together in a suite-style apartment, be handicapped accessible and provide all of the services offered by conventional housing.

However, according to Lach, other interesting concepts have arisen in the various student designs. Many students have incorporated elaborate landscaped areas into their designs, and including a design that welcomes visitors to that side of campus has also become a trend.

In addition, many of the students have also included ideas that they think will improve resident life. Wambold, who lives on Schneider Hall's architecture emphasis floor, said he chose to highlight these kinds of floors in his design because of the learning atmosphere they provide.

"I just chose to do that since I'm over there all the time and I understand how well it works," Wambold said.

In the end, Lach said the project is preparing the students for the hectic careers in architecture that are ahead of them. It is an added bonus, he said, that the ideas they are generating are playing into the minds of University officials.

"The University is getting the advantage of seeing what could happen," Lach said. "It's providing them a lot of ideas free of charge."

behavior therapy in the fight against addiction.

Amr Skerly, recruitment coordinator, said it is a fight the lab is winning with an 80-percent success rate. The only problem she sees is attracting new people to the program.

"We run paper ads and fliers in every building the campus allows, but some people are still apprehensive about coming in," Skerly said. "If we can speak to more smokers personally about the program, I think we can diminish some of the mystery surrounding it."

Skerly also said some younger people are frightened away because they are under the impression their privacy will be invaded. This is not true, according to Skerly.

"We protect people's information and privacy by using subject ID numbers rather than full names," Skerly said. "We like to foster an environment of trust."

Another study being conducted in the Lab chronicles the affects of quitting smoking on a person's mood and concentration. Participants are paid $200 to $300 to undergo tests on the effects of nicotine and nicotine deprivation. It is funded by the National Cancer Institute.

"We are trying to find out what happens to a person's personality if they don't have nicotine," Gilbert said.

Each of these studies is ongoing and faculty, staff, students and community members are encouraged to get involved. Skerly said the financial incentive as well as the opportunity to improve one's life makes it an offer few should refuse.

"It's a unique and great opportunity for people in this area," Skerly said. "It's a shame if they don't take advantage."

Griffers and charlatans, however, should beware. Each participant is thoroughly screened through saliva and blood samples to determine that he or she is actually a smoker.

"There are a lot of ways to determine how often people are smoking," Rabinovich said.

Injuries, weather and competition beat up SIU

Rough weekend for men's tennis losing two matches and Epure

ANDY EGENSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

What could go wrong, did go wrong for the SIU men's tennis team last weekend.

Whether it be the difficult competition, the weather or injuries, the Salukis could not buy a break.

The Salukis (5-9, 1-2) lost 4-0 Saturday to Illinois State University and were man-handled by the top conference team, Indiana State University, 6-1 on Sunday afternoon.

Saturday's match was moved indoors to Sports Center, behind the University Mall, because of cold, windy weather.

In its first weekend of Missouri Valley Conference play, SIU did manage to salvage one victory Sunday, beating Bradley University, 6-1, but even the victory would cost them.

Valentin Epure, a junior from Romania, suffered a sprained ankle during the Saturday morning match versus Bradley and will likely be out of action for this weekend's upcoming matches on the road.

"I'm already prepared in my mind that we won't have [Epure] for the weekend," said SIU head coach Brad Iltner. "We are going to be without him this weekend unless there is some miracle that happens between now and Thursday."

Epure remained on crutches for the remainder of the day looking dejected as he watched his teammates compete.

"I was a little disappointed," Epure said. "I didn't expect this, but I'll have to get over it and just keep going."

The squad would not go far against Indiana State, which is ranked 30th in the country by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

The Sycamores handled every Saluki opponent they faced, with the exception of Dante Santa Cruz, who pulled off a monster win. Santa Cruz won 6-1, 6-2 against the reigning MVC Player of the Week, Gareth Keating.

Santa Cruz said the team had plenty of respect for the Sycamores, even before the match.

"We already knew that we were going to have a tough match ahead of us," Santa Cruz said of Indiana State. "We knew we were the underdogs from the start."

Santa Cruz's win would be the only positive aspect of the weekend, leaving Iltner to come up with some speedy solutions before this weekend's road trip. He is trying to put emphasis on some of the positive play, but could not help to see the overwhelming negatives.

The team will depart Thursday to play the University of Northern Iowa and will continue the weekend at Drake University and Creighton University. Iltner hopes the trip will mix up the atmosphere and the team can focus more on tennis.

"Maybe it's going to be good for us to get out of our routine a little bit," Iltner said. "Hopefully we can look at this trip as a business trip. There are not going to be girlfriend distractions, or whatever homework types of things they are dealing with day to day. This is going to be a tennis travel weekend."

Weather, short game wrecks havoc

Women's golf fights conditions and greens in Indiana

JAVIER J. SERNA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The wind blew hard in Bloomington, Ind. this past weekend. So hard that the Indiana University Invitational — originally scheduled for a 54 holes — was shortened to 36 holes.

The SIU women's golf team, plagued by the inclement weather and poor putting at the Invitation II, could not hold on to its 11th-place position after round one, and dropped two spots to finish in 13th place.

Claiming first place was host Indiana University (637), with Ohio State University (639) taking second and the University of Wisconsin (645) finishing third.

SIU finished with a score of 682. The team had to point out that though the conditions were bad, but there was no excuse for the high scores.

"The weather was obviously something you had to work through, but everyone had to play in the same conditions," team captain Andrea Walker said. "It's not like we were playing at a different time than everyone else."

SIU botched many of its close-range shots, as the combination of tough greens and gusting wind proved disastrous.

"Our biggest trouble was our short game... between the six of us, on 36 holes, we had 43 three puts," Walker said.

SIU coach Diane Daugherty said that once the team started to miss some of its early puts, the lack of confidence caused a snowball affect.

"We kind of lost our confidence a little bit, it piled on us, and once we missed a couple of little puts, and the greens are fast and the winds blowing, it really [plays] havoc with your confidence," Daugherty said.

The Salukis' performance may have been disappointing, but the opposition included seven teams nationally-ranked in the top 50. All of the Big Ten teams were included among the 15-team field.

"When you're up against all the Big Ten schools — you're up against some major competition," Daugherty said.

are not making plays, we're playing shoddy defensively," Blaylock said.

After the 1-3 MVC home weekend, Blaylock is uncertain how her team will react to the disappointing losses when they play in a non-conference doubleheader at Western Kentucky University Wednesday.

Every tournament that SIU has competed in this season has involved nationally-ranked teams. Daugherty said that with the complete team being consistently still, lukewarm finishes are to be expected at times.

"As long as I'm going to schedule this way, and schedule tough competition, we're going to have to deal with some of these not-so-positive finishes," Daugherty said.

On the positive side, SIU finished ahead of the University of Notre Dame and Northern Illinois University.

Junior Liz Uthoff led Saluki scores, showing a two-round score of 164, which placed her in a four-way tie for 24th. After shooting an 85 on day one, she cracked the 70s for the second time this season with a second round score of 79.

The team will now look ahead to next weekend's tournament at the University of Illinois in Champaign, the last tournament before the Missouri Valley Conference championship.

"We're going to put this behind us and rebound and practice hard this week and gain our confidence enough to come back," Daugherty said.

Blaylock said she is certain of her mindset, but unsure of whether her players share that same desire to win.

"I'm not going to give up, I'm a fighter," Blaylock said. "I've always been a winner, I think we've got some kids on this team that are winners, but I think we've got some kids that need to perform."

SPORTS BRIEFS

Salukis expect to sign St. Louis star

The SIU men's basketball team has at least one highly-touted prospect waiting in the wings when the spring signing period begins Wednesday.

Daren Brooks, a 6-foot-3-inch guard from Jennings High School in St. Louis, will reportedly sign with the Salukis Wednesday. Regarded as one of the top athletes in the St. Louis area, Brooks averaged 25 points a game as a senior on one of Missouri's top Class 3A teams and is also a standout football and baseball player.

Brooks was reportedly also being recruited by Alabama, Villanova, Saint Louis, Tulane, Rice and Southwest Missouri State. Assuming the Salukis sign Brooks, SIU head coach Bruce Weber will have two more vacant scholarships to fill this spring. SIU is after help in the low post and at the point guard position.

Women swimmers make splash in classroom, too

The SIU women's swimming and diving team has been named a College Swimming Coaches Association of America's Academic All-American Team, ranking 19th in the country with a team grade point average of 3.229.

The Salukis, who won their third consecutive Missouri Valley Conference swim championship in February, have earned the academic honor for 19 consecutive semesters.

"We have been a fixture on CSCAA's Academic All-American list for the past 19 semesters and receiving this honor is a good way to finish up a year," SIU head coach Mark Kluepfer said in a statement.

"This is a real good group of young women who make it a priority to work hard in the pool and also do so in the classroom. It is pretty impressive when you have a whole team that is successful at both."

The Salukis were the top finishers among MVC schools and second in the state of Illinois, one spot behind Northwestern University.

And the Bears (20-20, 4-4 MVC) took advantage of more shaky SIU defense in the eighth to steal the victory on two Saluki errors.

"That's what makes tennis a unique sport... it doesn't do any good to have a top player or a great No. 6 player. You have got to have that all the way through the lineup."

The Salukis' doubles play made a valuable contribution during matches against the Sycamores and Redbirds.

The No. 1 doubles team of Simona Petrutiu and Pamela Floro won what turned out to be the deciding match against Indiana State 8-6. The duo is 12-1 this spring in doubles play.

Ten's Note:

Auld announced that she has signed Tina Trupani, a two-sport, stand-out athlete from Murphyboro High School.

She is the first local player that has agreed to play women's tennis at SIU in Auld's 26-year career at the school. Trupani is described as a tenacious player with an outstanding work ethic.

"She will not lose matches," Auld said. "She will literally have to be beaten, and I don't think you'll see a lot of that."

"A Table Before Me"

This musical drama, Stevens conveys the terror her mother's family experienced during the Nazi takeover in Austria. Letters from the Secret Police to her grandfather come to life in chilling vocalizations. To her own accompaniment of period piano music, including excerpts from Janacek, Schonberg, and even cabaret riffs, Stevens enacts the roles of Nazi officials and of her increasingly desperate grandfather as he struggles to contend with crippling taxes, legal restrictions, and violence against Viennese Jewry.

Saluki baseball team better off than snakebitten UT-Martin

JAY SCHWAB
SPORTS EDITOR

The SIU baseball team has its share of problems, but none are as troublesome as the ones faced by its opponent this afternoon.

The University of Tennessee-Martin ballclub was returning home after a win against the University of Mississippi on March 28 when a van driven by Skyhawk head coach Bubba Cates carrying nine players collided with a farm vehicle in northern Mississippi.

Cates remains hospitalized in critical care in Memphis, Tenn., and eight of the nine players who were in the van during the frightening incident are expected to be out of action for the remainder of the season.

So by comparison, the Salukis, who welcome Tennessee-Martin (7-25) to Abe Martin Field for a 3 p.m. game today, are doing just fine.

SIU (13-17) has been in the doldrums for the past couple weeks, but managed to snap a five-game losing streak Sunday in a thrilling 6-5, come-from-behind, 10-inning affair against Austin Peay State University.

"We needed a win badly," SIU head coach Dan Callahan said. "It turned into one of those situations where we were struggling in all phases of the game, and we just needed to find a way to get a win."

"I can't begin to [say] how much that meant to everyone. Hopefully it was a game that will propel us on to better things in the near future."

SIU, which has struggled most with its defense and bullpen, hopes to continue to ride the hot hitting of sophomore infielder Luke Nelson. Nelson has gone 18-for-35 during the last nine games, and now leads the team with a .351 batting average.

Meanwhile, SIU junior Victor Hockett (1-2, 6.59) will be on the mound for the Salukis today.

A solid pitching performance from Hockett would go a long way toward positioning SIU to finally string a couple wins together leading into a weekend conference series at Southwest Missouri State University.

"It'd be nice to get another win under our belts," Callahan said.

Error in confidence

Softball team swept by MVC foe Southwest Missouri State University Monday in pair of one-run contests

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Five errors led to five unearned runs, which ultimately led to a sweep.

That would pretty much sum up the woeful tale of the SIU softball team's doubleheader against Missouri Valley Conference foe Southwest Missouri State University Monday at LWV Fields, in which the Bears swept SIU, winning 2-1 in game one and 6-5 in eight innings in game two.

In game two, the Salukis committed five costly errors that led to all but one of the Bears' six runs. Two of those errors occurred in the bottom of the eighth inning, resulting in a game-winning fielder's choice off the bat of Bears' first baseman Jamil Canada.

"In the second game we threw the ball all over the place," Saluki head coach Kern Blaylock said. "I hope people realize that we do work on these things. We just have not performed well, especially under pressure, and I don't know why."

For the second straight day Blaylock was disappointed as her Salukis (9-15, 2-6 MVC) trudged off the field with two more Valley losses coming in their backyard. Blaylock was not pleased with her team's effort in a split against Wichita State University Sunday and was obviously dejected after Monday's sweep.

The first-year skipper has questioned some of her team's heart in the past few games and staying true to her no-nonsense attitude, she has let them know it.

Blaylock gave the team a long talk following Sunday's doubleheader and did not have many kind words for them following Monday's losses, either.

"There's a bunch of people that just need a gut check around here and hopefully they will," Blaylock said.

In game one, the Salukis only connected on two hits in the final five innings as one run was not enough for senior pitcher Carisa Winters in the 2-1 Saluki loss. Winters pitched seven innings, allowing four hits, two runs and striking out five.

Junior center fielder Marta Viethaus led SIU, going 2-for-3 with two singles.

In game two, the Salukis got off to a rocky start defensively, committing two errors on the same play leading to three unearned Bear runs in the first inning.

The Salukis would battle back, anchored by a single from junior first baseman Chiara Calvetti that scored two runs in the third inning to tie the game 3-3. The Salukis took the lead in the fourth inning as a pair of back-to-back RBI singles from Viethaus and junior third baseman Julie Meier put SIU on top 5-3.

The Bears would regroup quickly, though, scoring two runs in the midst of a two-out rally, one unearned on another error, in the bottom half of the fourth to tie the game at 5-5.

Peaking at the right time

Women's tennis has eye on MVC prize

ANDY EGGENES
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIU women's tennis team has not yet reached its potential, but by the looks of last weekend, the Salukis are well on their way.

SIU (10-3, 4-0) spent a three-day, three-match road trip by beating Indiana State University, Illinois State University and then destroying Bradley University.

"I think we are playing good tennis, but we are still not at the top of our games," said SIU women's tennis coach Judy Auld. "I want to see them peak every weekend and when they are playing their best tennis, they will be at the conference championship."

The weekend would not be an easy one and the rest of the schedule shapes up to be just as tough.

SIU defeated Indiana State 5-3 Friday, slipped past Illinois State 5-4 on Saturday, and cruised against Bradley 9-0 on Sunday. The Salukis received quality performances throughout the line-up, which is crucial for the team's long-term aspirations.
