The Du Quoin State Fair

All DOLLED up for the fair

JESSE DRURY - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Carnival worker Bob House sets up the "Bank-a-Ball" contest Thursday at the Du Quoin State Fair, which begins today and runs until Sept. 4. For more information, visit www.state.il.us/dq.

The Du Quoin State Fair combines old and new for its 77th annual romp

JENNIFER WIG
DAILY EGYPTIAN

DU QUOIN — Beyond the midway games and the carnival rides, the food stands and the petting zoo, is a history.

Seventy-seven years of history, filled with old traditions and new improvements, will make up this year's Du Quoin State Fair, which opens tonight.

The theme of this year's fair, "An Old-Fashioned Fair; Something to Crow About," recognizes the tradition of county and state fairs for entertainment value.

"We just want to honor tradition and bring back some of the good things that were part of the rural family tradition," said Joey Helleny, media coordinator for the fair.

Larry Dietz, vice chancellor for Student Affairs, grew up in the Southern Illinois region and has a particular interest in the fair's world-famous horse races.

"I remember the rich tradition the fair had related to the Hambletonian," he said. "I'm anxious to go back up this weekend. It's a piece of Americana."

The Hambletonian, a prestigious harness race, was established at the fair's opening in 1923. Although it is no longer run in Du Quoin, harness horse races and the World Trotting Derby continue to be a tradition.

Despite the focus on the old-time activities, such as the horse races, several new things have been added to the fairsgrounds. The state of Illinois doled out $640,000 to repair the four roundhouses, historic brick structures that contain different venues. The structures were built in the 1930s and were repaired to keep their art deco appearance.

This year, each one features a different form of cultural food, including German, American, Italian and southwestern barbecue.

The mile-long racetrack also received a facelift,

SIUC researcher probes ginseng as breast cancer remedy

ANNE MARIE TAVELLA
DAILY EGYPTIAN

In one of the many laboratories housed in Life Science III, incubators resembling miniature refrigerators are keeping live cancer cells warm — or more precisely — keeping them the same temperature as the human body.

To the naked eye, the live breast cancer cells appear to be a harmless pink liquid. Under the microscope, the diluted fruit punch-like substance does not appear threatening. However, cells resembling these will cause the death of 40,800 women and 400 men in the year 2000.

This year, 182,800 women and 1,400 men will be diagnosed with breast cancer. Laura Murphy hopes her research will someday bring that number down.

Breast cancer is a malignant tumor that develops from the cells of the breast. There are several different types of breast cancer, often varying in severity. The cancers can develop in the lobules and the ducts of the breast.

About three years ago, Murphy, an assistant professor in physiology, decided to look into the effects of American ginseng on breast cancer.

"This is really something that could have potential merit, something that will really help humankind," Murphy said.

Murphy got the idea after looking into ginseng's properties as a hormone. Murphy and her students tested ginseng's effect on the libido of male rats.

"It did enhance their libido and their performance," Murphy said.

Murphy, who is also an endocrinologist, knew that cancer cells, especially breast cancer cells, seem to be affected by hormones. She decided to see what effect the ginseng would have on live cancer cells.

With her students, Murphy created a ginseng extract and added it to human breast cancer cells. It stopped the growth of the cells.

She continued to work on the project and submitted a grant proposal to the U.S. Department of Defense.

"It was a shot in the dark," Murphy said. "It was a matter of putting together preliminary data to arouse [the granting body's] curiosity."

It worked, and in September 1999, Murphy received a $295,701 grant from the Department of Defense.

Murphy is close to positively identifying the component in American ginseng that affects the cancer cells and is beginning to test prostate and other types of cancer cells. The likely component in ginseng is called Ginsenoside Re, which Murphy is able to obtain commercially for her tests.

A large part of the success of the project is due to the work of students in her lab, Murphy said.

GMOs: Are they really safe?

New research at SIUC lab hopes to find the answer

RYAN TROST
DAILY EGYPTIAN

To sufficiently feed the six billion people on the planet today, all the mountains in North America would need to be leveled and all the landfills plowed, said SIUC professor and biotechnologist David Lightfoot.

"If you go to 12 billion (people) then you have to do the same in North and South America," Lightfoot said. "There simply isn't that much agricultural land."

By 2040 United Nations experts predict the world population will be 12 billion, which is twice what it is today. The year 2040 may seem far away but most college students today will not even be retired in 2040.

The Illinois Council on Food and Agriculture Research group has granted Lightfoot and nutritionist William J. Banz a research grant of more than $100,000 for the next two years to study genetically modified organisms (GMO) and their potential dangers and benefits to humans and the environment.

GMOs are organisms which have been modified so they are capable of resisting disease, pests and bacteria by interchanging the genes of resistant organisms into a susceptible organism.

The goals of Lightfoot's research are to foster consumer acceptance of GMOs as essential parts of sustainable agriculture and to reduce groundwater contamination from nitrates by making crops resistant to disease and pests.

The other goals are to improve environmental quality through regulatory requirements, while increasing the capacity of crop and animal systems to respond to changing world agricultural and food demands.

"It would be nice to be able to arm plants to fend off insects, and fungi and bacteria that infect them without having to go out there and spray x-billion pounds of chemicals every year," Lightfoot said.

Lightfoot said SIU has three areas where GMO crops are grown, particularly corn and soybeans, which are required to be quarantined until they are found to be safe.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture defines agricultural biotechnology as "a collection of scientific techniques, including genetic engineering, which are used to create, improve or modify plants; animals and microorganisms."

The goal of both the biotechnologists and environmentalists is to be able to increase production of crops and livestock without altering the basic make-up of the organism or harming the surrounding environment and humans who eat them. The methods used to reach this goal are where biotechnologists and environmentalists differ.

There are obvious fears among environmental experts that the proliferation of GMOs to unassuming consumers has been a problem since the first GMOs, Bovine Growth

SIU professor, David Lightfoot, shows a genetically modified ear of corn which he has been researching along with other genetically modified organisms.

Murphysboro man makes short-lived escape

A 19-year-old Murphysboro man is facing charges after he allegedly fled on foot from the Jackson County Courthouse Thursday.

A judge had ordered the suspect detained during a court hearing shortly before 10 a.m. While a courthouse security officer was escorting the suspect to a holding cell, the man fled and ran out of the courthouse.

He was apprehended minutes later in an alley several blocks north of the courthouse by Murphysboro Police. A local citizen, who had come to the aid of police, assisted in the foot pursuit.

Dennis Melvin, 32, of Elkhart, was walking into the courthouse at the time the suspect was fleeing and gave chase. Melvin was able to point out for police the alley the suspect ran into.

SIUC soars ahead in biotechnology

CHRISTIAN HALE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

SIU may aid in bringing about important links to research throughout the state thanks to interests from the state and Illinois' businesses.

With the lure of entrepreneurial development, SIUC is attracting interest from the Illinois Coalition, a non-profit, non-partisan private group that brings together leaders from business, academia, government and the public sector.

SIUC has a lot of potential to aid in the collaborative goals of the Illinois Coalition, the Illinois governor's office, the Illinois Bureau of Technology and the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, said John Jackson, interim chancellor of SIUC.

"We believe that things we're already doing and that our faculty are doing can provide the seed that these organizations can help water and help grow," Jackson said.

It is the Illinois Coalition's goal to advance the mission of strengthening Illinois' economy through science and technology, said Shayne Mandel, president of the Illinois Coalition. He will be handing in a proposal to the governor on Nov. 1.

"From the academic sector, the presidents of all the major research universities of the state, including Southern Illinois, sit on my board," Mandel said.

"Different government leaders, like the governor's chief of staff and a couple of state legislators, both U.S. senators and Rep. Hastert, speaker of the house. The rest of our board, most of our board, is made up of public-sector individuals."

MARLEEN TROUTT
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Vibrant purple fields, red and blue trees and turquoise waterfalls contrast with dark expanses of unfathomable clouds to reveal local beauty a photograph could not capture.

"Scapes," opening Friday at Longbranch Coffeehouse, 100 E. Jackson St., features landscapes by Mike Geno and skylscapes by Lara Nguyen, both SIUC Masters of Fine Arts graduate students. Local musician Chris Piper will accompany with classical guitar.

The oil paintings were inspired by and depict the rural setting of Southern Illinois. While the intense use of color and emotion evoke memories of surrealism, the result is an ultra-real collection, portraying a dream-like authenticity.

On one wall, Geno's landscapes, priced at $150 each, demonstrate a bright and playful sense of fun. Blue trees and pink skies may seem more like Dr. Seuss than art, but Geno's regional landscapes more closely touch truth than the average browns and greens.

ER GULICK - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Fine art graduate student Lara Nguyen stands beside one of her paintings of clouds. Nguyen's works are hanging at the Longbranch Coffee House, 100 E. Jackson St.

Geno, 30, said he was taught color did not have to be traditional at the Tyler School of Art at Temple University in Philadelphia.

"I enjoy the challenge of pushing the limits of what I can do with color," Geno said. "I want to get beyond the predictable. I don't think a painting has to be predictable to be likable and actually I think it's the opposite."

The major accomplishments of this collection are Geno's three-dimensional renderings of plowed fields, waterfalls, rolling hills and frolicking terrain, executed with rich, thick paint and fine-tuned by voluptuous brushstrokes. The energetic color fuses with voluminous texture to create pieces appropriate for a foyer or sun-room.

On the other wall, Nguyen exhibits the dark seriousness of the unexplained universe on flat, painted canvas and wood with masonite panels, which indicate the transitory quality of the heavens in hues of blues, grays, beige and mauves. She hops to capture the unobtainable quality of the universe.

'The Sequel' offers an international supplement

KELLY DAVENPORT
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The International Film Series: "The Sequel" will return this Sunday, Aug. 27, after a semester hiatus caused by low funds.

Since 1986, the series, sponsored by the University Honors Program, has presented classic and near-classic films from countries like Angola, Iran or Belgium which "stretch the mind in ways it's not often stretched," according to Frederick Williams, director of University Honors.

This Sunday, the World War II Steve McQueen classic, "The Great Escape," will air at 7 p.m. in the Life Science III auditorium.

Other films in the series include "The Red Violin" with Samuel L. Jackson and "Midaq Alley (El Callejon de los Milagros)" with Salma Hayek.

"This series is like an international supplement," Williams said. "We try to offer on film the same kind of thing we offer through our curriculum: something different and special."

The series returns this year after University funds, which paid for the majority of the series' costs, dried up, Williams said.

When the spring roster of six films was canceled, the Carbondale area was left without what Williams considers a "connection with those parts of the world we only hear about when there's an earthquake."

The films are now underwritten by local sponsors inside and outside the University.

"It's a crying shame if that series goes away," said Maryam Sanjabi, associate professor in French. "So I'm just trying to twist everybody's arm to get them involved."

She is sponsoring the showing of "Ponette" on Sept. 24 and 25 and will also lead a discussion of the film at the screenings. Other speakers will present at each movie showing.

"The community responded not by wringing its hands but by getting out their checkbooks," Williams said. "Now we're kind of like public television."

Sponsors' funds help buy virgin VHS or DVD copies of the films, which are chosen by Williams and University Honors Associate Director Scott Furtwengler from suggestions offered by SIUC professors, students and area residents.

Williams hopes this year's free admission will bolster attendance at the screenings, though he knows the "clientele group is smaller than Monday Night Football or 'Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?'"

The simple rarity of a classic international film is what should motivate attendance, said Susan Felleman, assistant professor of cinema studies.

"The director of 'Taste of Cherry' is one of the most admired directors working today," Felleman said. "But local theaters don't show these films."

Preconceived notions about other cultures will be dashed after viewing this series, she said.

"People will see how great and diverse the artistry of film-making is and learn a great deal about the cultures these films come from," Felleman said.

"The Cell"
boasts unnecessary

DAILY EGYPTIAN

Carl isn't such a bad serial killer. He likes nursery rhymes, dolls, murdering young women and dogs. He also likes attaching chains to piercings in his back to suspend himself in the air for pleasure. But who could blame him? He had a rotten childhood.

And while Carl (a shaggy Vincent D'Onofrio) is obviously an endearing — if cartoonish — character, do we really want to spend two hours prancing around in his muddled mind? "The Cell" thinks we do. But, it's wrong.

In this eye-candy flick, D'Onofrio (known best for "Full Metal Jacket") is a killer in a coma whose last victim has only 40 hours to live before she, too, dies in the "cell" — a glass chamber D'Onofrio's Carl rigged up in an old barn in the California scrub lands.

Jennifer "Touch me, I'm hurt" Lopez is the sensitive child psychologist who can enter his mind and search for the poor girl's whereabouts.

She will just have to step over lots of goo and endure costume changes ranging from a Grinchy dominatrix to a glowing Virgin Mary to do so.

Vince Vaughn ("Swingers," "Psycho") is the typically overwrought, incompetent FBI agent who persuades Lopez to have a go at Carl's impenetrable psyche.

Sounds neat, right? It's just that "The Cell" — for all its trippy, psychotic sequences — elicits more guffaws than gasps. About the time Carl dons an Elizabethan ball gown and starts grinning like a Muppet and disemboweling Vince Vaughn (though this is only Carl's mind, it's not real, or is it?), the audience can't suppress a giggle any longer.

This is what happens when a music video director is allowed two hours on the big screen to indulge every "hey, that would look really cool" whim.

But there is no doubt "The Cell" is pretty. Tarsem's eye is sharp and his lens loves slick little jump cuts and perfectly composed post-modern visuals: the flick jumps from dreamy desert dunes to Carl's snowy albino shepherd dog back to a stark and dusty California landscape where Carl sins.

However Tarsem's attention span is a split-second short and all his energy is spent on special effects and freaky visuals instead of, say, believable characters.

Lopez spends the entire movie whispering and widening her eyes in the pained expression of a martyr, while the camera caresses her curves for no particular reason.

She is supposed to be a driven saint with almost supernatural powers of empathy — an intriguing concept — but her character is barely fleshed-out.

Poor Vaughn has absolutely no credibility as an FBI agent. He actually tells the mother of the last missing girl something to the effect of, "Ma'am, we think your daughter is in the hands of a gruesome serial killer."

Carl himself becomes a caricature and because of the film's uneven tone, he elicits both sympathy and freak-show stares from the audience during the same five-minute span.

On the surface, "The Cell" gleams with mystery, psychosis and visual vertigo, but there's little underneath.

"I wanted the audience to know the cutting edge," Tarsem told Entertainment Weekly. "And slice it hand on it."

It's too bad Tarsem's slice is no more riveting than a paper cut.

"Sometimes there are moments when the sky is really intense. A photograph never does it justice," Nguyen said. "Everybody sees differently. I'm trying to put out there what it is that I'm experiencing."

Her collection's title, "The Sky is Blue," is meant to challenge convention and illustrate the good of things that fall outside normality.

"When you're young, you're told things are a certain way," Nguyen said. "As you get older you realize there's a lot of different truths out there. The sky isn't always blue and its not always good when it's blue."

As a young girl, Nguyen won honorable mention from NASA for a sixth grade science project on clouds.

"I've been interested ever since I could look up and be in awe and amazed at what was going on around me," Nguyen said. "I use to want to fly up there and eat clouds. I thought they were cotton candy."

The strikingly large, canvas centerpiece of Nguyen's collection, priced at $1200, shows clouds parting to allow the light of day to peek in. Though primarily dark, the yellow-white light, expanding into morning, gives the hopeful feel of dawn.

Nguyen, 24, from Indiana, said each painting in this collection represents a pause in her life where she took the time to sit back and not take life so seriously.

"When I look up I feel significantly insignificant. You are the center of attention in your head, but if you actually look up and out and at other people you realize you're very minuscule to this whole, entire earth."

Chris Piper, 33, a 1996 alumnus in outdoor recreation from Metropolis, will provide impressionistic, classical guitar accompaniment for the exhibit.

This is a 'geushift' for Piper, who calls his normal style of original composition "gangsta folk."

Piper, who writes songs, sings and plays guitar in a local post-grunge, sonic distortion band, "Heat Vikters," does not mind toning down his edgy style to complement the art.

"I'm here for them," Piper said. "I like the art and I just wanted to be a part of it."

Anthony Hall occupants brace for move

DAILY EGYPTIAN

The first stage of Anthony Hall's renovation has begun, as construction continues at the Northwest Annex where SIUC's top administrators and their staff will soon relocate.

Construction began in the Northwest Annex A-wing earlier this month. Administrators, including the chancellor and vice chancellors for Administration, Student Affairs and Academic Affairs, are expected to remain at the Annex for up to 18 months.

"This is a major move involving the entire Anthony Hall staff, but we don't expect it to interfere with our work on this campus," said Vice Chancellor for Administration Glenn Poshard.

Anthony Hall has been home to SIUC's top brass for nearly 30 years. More than 80 administrators, staff and student workers will be relocated.

The Northwest Annex currently houses International Students and Scholars and International Programs and Services. The building's A-wing is undergoing a complete renovation at a cost of about $600,000.

The heating and ventilation system will be upgraded while workers make alterations to the section's floor plan. Walls are being removed to accommodate access for the disabled. New phone lines and electrical wiring will also be installed.

"We're undertaking a significant renovation of the building," said Scott Miller, assistant superintendent of building maintenance.

Miller said the project is basically on schedule. Physical Plant officials expect the first move by mid-to-late September.

The A-wing recently was home to the Administrative Information System, SIUC's computer purchasing system. The section was also a large mail room and storage area.

When you think of Area Code 618, you think of music with a complex simplicity and clarifying innuendo. You think of a group that is inseparably individualistic. With 618, words like comparable, inspired and inflatable must come to mind. But this one group is more than the sum of its whole. Paul Hardcastle plays drums with an intense malaise that well compliments the unique semblance of T. Thomas on bass. Bill Carter on lead and Steve Danley on fiddle share vocals in a style of intersecting parallelism that defies comparison. And Andy Compton plays with everything else to fill in the gaps. Possible change in SIUC's Student Conduct Code

Revisions underway in Judicial Affairs

ALEXA AGUILAR
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Students may have a revised set of rules to follow if changes proposed by a Student Conduct Code review committee are approved.

The Student Conduct Code committee, organized early this year, met at various times during the year to review the code, and considered nine specific concerns submitted by Undergraduate Student Government.

The committee was organized in response to a resolution passed by USG in December. The resolution called for the chancellor to establish a constituency review board.

Concerns about the Student Conduct Code and Judicial Affairs were raised last year at a town hall meeting hosted by USG. Two of the major changes proposed by the review committee include jurisdiction and the appeal process.

Kristen Renn, assistant professor and chair of the committee, said the jurisdiction issue was the one most difficult for the committee to resolve.

As the code stands right now, a student can only be brought up on charges for social misconduct off campus if: 1) they harm members of the campus community anywhere, 2) the person results in personal injury or property damage within City of Carbondale limits.

The committee proposed changes to the off-campus jurisdiction level, recommending the code's wording be changed to "... that substantially affects the University's interest, including but not limited to, conduct against person(s) and/or property."

The committee agreed that this change would be beneficial to both students and the University.

Renn said this provision would accommodate student concern that the University would be able to charge students for any off-campus behavior, while allowing the university to charge students for conduct that "has an adverse effect on SIUC."

In May, Dawn Roberts, a student activist, drew national attention to SIU when she threw a pie in Gov. George Ryan's face at a Carbondale town hall meeting.

Under the current conduct code, Roberts could not be brought up on charges because there was no personal injury or property damage.

Renn said Roberts' action was not the initiative for the proposed changes. However, they used the incident as an example during discussion, Renn said.

Eric Waltmire, undergraduate representative to the committee, wrote a dissenting opinion to this proposed change. In the dissenting statement, Waltmire said "substantial interest" is too vague and leaves room for abuse.

The committee also suggested changing the appeal process.

Currently, a student can first appeal a Judicial Affairs decision to the vice-chancellor for Student Affairs or his/her designee. Next, the student takes his appeal to the Board of Trustees.

The committee proposed to keep both levels of appeal on campus by implementing a constituency review board at the second appeal. This committee would consist of eight members (two undergraduates, two graduate/professional and two faculty) and be advisory to the chancellor.

Renn said this will make the appeal process more accessible. This appeal board will only hear cases in which the sanction is suspension.

The committee submitted their proposed changes to Larry Dietz, vice chancellor for Student Affairs, in July. Now, interim Chancellor John Jackson will have to take a look at the proposed changes.

"I would say overall the committee did a terrific job of reviewing the code and making changes," Dietz said. "I commend Dr. Renn for her leadership."

Renn said the committee as a whole did an exemplary job and Waltmire did very well as a representative for undergraduates. "They worked really hard, really fast, and really well," Renn said.

Bill Kincaid, faculty representative to the committee, said he loved working on the committee.

"It was a great committee with a real seriousness of purpose," he said. "The committee members were good communicators and good collaborators."

I would say overall the committee did a terrific job of reviewing the code and making changes Hormone in cows. Since the Food and Drug Administration in 1990 cleared the way for BGH in American markets without requiring labeling, the public has been bombarded with GMOs, said Dan Startz, adjunct lecturer in the environmental studies at SIUC.

"Most of the food that we eat that is on the shelves at the supermarket with grain, rice, corn and soybeans have been genetically modified," Startz said.

The relative unknowns surrounding GMOs are one of the main concerns of environmentalists.

"Everything the environmentalists are concerned about is possible. The question is what's the relative risk and what's the greater risk," Lightfoot said. "Poisoning our environment using billions of gallons of chemicals trying to feed 12 billion people or taking a chance that genetically modified crops advantages in a safe way, have less of an environmental effect."

Kris Harms, a senior in radio-television from Kansas City, Mo., was unaware that most of his food was genetically altered.

"They don't even know what's going to happen in the long run, but who knows there could be positives too," Harms said. "If they can genetically alter food so that we don't have to use all the insecticides that could be a positive, because [pesticides] affect the environment around them, which in turn effects everything else."

Whatever happens in the next generation of biotechnology, changes are going to have to occur that will increase crop and animal productivity without destroying the environment around us, Lightfoot said.

"We're starting to, we have, reached the limit on this plan- et," Lightfoot said. "The only way to get more agricultural land is slash and burn agriculture in the rain forests, or to double the amount of food we can produce on current agricultural land in the next 40 years."

According to Mandle, the Illinois Coalition is acting as a filter and conduit for all science and technology budget requests for Gov. George Ryan. He said the Illinois Coalition will spend the next three to four months working with SIU and the other major universities and labs in the state to prioritize the eventual manifestation of the statewide project.

"We are picking strategic locations in the state where we think there is great potential for commercialized technology," Mandle said.

Future sights will include the Evanston, Champaign-Urbana, Carbondale and Peoria areas, a couple of sights in Chicago and one in western DuPage county, which will probably be partnered with Northern Illinois University.

The Dunn-Richmond Center at SIUC will be the possible future sight of a central facility to aid in the increase of the project's effectiveness and interdisciplinary goals.

"We believe the Dunn-Richmond Center, as a business incubator, has been quite successful," said Jackson. "It has helped a number of businesses get started."

According to Jackson, that fact itself epitomizes the role SIUC has always played as an economic engine in Southern Illinois.

"Indeed, the economic engine of Southern Illinois is very much driven by this institution," said Jackson. "That's been true since we've been here, now for more than 130 years."

The efforts of this new project is interdisciplinary in focus, according to John A. Koropchak, dean of SIUC's Graduate School. He said that people from agriculture are working with people from the school of medicine, science and others.

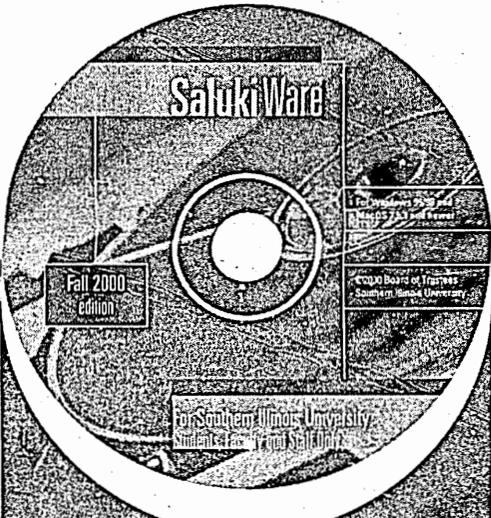

"They are very synergistic, active and effective as a result of this."

"Some of the problems that we have right now are lack of space for expansion and lack of instrumental infrastructure for future competitiveness. We have high-tech instrumentation, but as some of the researchers can tell you, if you look at what is available at other campuses,

We believe that things we're doing and that our faculty are doing can provide the seed that these organizations can help water and help grow

CANCER

Students are responsible for a number of duties involved in the experiments. They extract ginseng, maintain the different types of cancer cells growing in the lab and prepare the treatments given to the cells. Different cells receive different treatments, and the cells are then counted under a microscope.

"It's a very student oriented, student-driven project," Murphy said.

So far Murphy has only tested ginseng on human cancer cells. If the tests continue to be successful the next step will be to treat animals with the ginseng. If the results are positive, humans would be next.

There are a few different methods in which the ginseng may be used to assist breast cancer patients and those at risk.

Ginseng may someday join the ranks of other drugs currently used in breast cancer prevention. In 1998, the drug tamoxifen was shown to reduce breast cancer cases by 50 percent in four years during a large research study of high-risk women. However, the risks, side effects and benefits vary for each woman.

MINOOK PARK - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Laura Murphy, professor in physiology, watches her researcher, Jennifer Rice, treating human prostate cancer cells with ginseng. Murphy has worked on human breast cancer research for five years.

Another possible use would be to use ginseng in combination with treatments already being used. Murphy said this may be especially useful with chemotherapy drugs, which can often have severe side effects.

"If we combine low doses of those drugs with Ginsenoside, can we lower that toxic effect that occurs and yet increase the efficacy of the chemotherapy?" Murphy asked.

One of the largest obstacles Murphy faces is getting others in her field interested in her work.

Murphy said one of the problems is Americans as a whole are a little weary about herbal medicine used for therapeutic treatment, especially for a disease as serious as cancer. Murphy presented her data at a national meeting for cancer research last April and will again this December. She also plans to publish her findings in the spring.

"It's just a matter of getting enough people interested, finding what [ginseng] truly does and how it works, and that is going to take some time," Murphy said.

Jennifer Rice, a researcher who has been working with Murphy for about a year and half on the project, graduated from SIUC last May with a degree in physiology.

Rice works in the lab, treating and counting the cells and then graphing the results. Rice said she finds the work very rewarding because cancer is something that affects so many people.

"If we find something here that inhibits cancer growth — that's huge," Rice said.

One of the best parts of the research is actually watching the cancer cells decrease in growth, Rice said.

"Doing this research is a way that I can help us to maybe find a cure," she said.

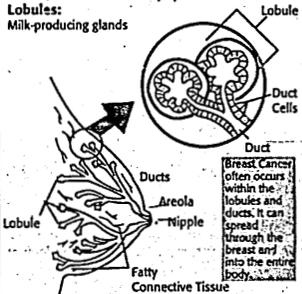

Murphy shares Rice's excitement about the project. Although Murphy acknowledges there is still a long road ahead, she is optimistic about the future and pleased with what has been accomplished.

"I'm really enthusiastic about this," Murphy said. "I really enjoy this research."

Sportsfest not the same old thing

Annual event to feature games, food and music

GINNY SKALSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Four live bands and a free picnic are turning the same old Sportsfest of years past into a broader event for all students.

Sportsfest is traditionally an opportunity for students living in campus housing to participate in mini-sports tournaments featuring flag football, volleyball, softball and tug-of-war. However, this year with help from Undergraduate Student Government, it will feature Full Circle, Mobile Chicken Party Unit, Massive Funk and the Marching Saluki.

"Sportsfest previews the various intramural activities that are available to students throughout the year," said Bill McMinn, director of the Recreation Center. "[This year] we want to try to get a nice campus-wide event to kick off the school year with a lot of departments to generate enthusiasm from students."

According to McMinn, the Sportsfest, which is in its 14th year, was going to only feature sports activities again this year. However, USG President Bill Archer approached him with the idea to expand the event to include live music and a free picnic.

"This is one event where everybody from all of housing comes together and gets to meet people," Archer said. "Before [students] would play sports go back to their room and then come back and play another sport; hopefully there will be more socializing and group work for the students [with the bands and food]."

Teams for the tournaments have already been made up, but all students are invited to attend the picnic, which some administrators will attend.

McMinn said the Saluki football, volleyball and cross country teams will also be introduced to students.

Archer said Student Programming Council helped to select the bands, which will be playing on the University tennis courts beginning at 6:30 p.m. Each band will play for about 45 minutes.

"It's a good positive event for the whole campus," McMinn said.

FACTOID:
SPORTSFEST 2000 IS FROM NOON TO 10 P.M., SUNDAY AT THE LIGHTED PLAYING FIELDS NEAR SIU ARENA.

Carla Coppi, associate director for International Student and Scholars, is enthused about the possibility of working side by side with the administration, even if it is only temporary. Coppi said she does not expect the move to act as a distraction for her office.

"I'm really excited to have the highest visible office on campus right next door," she said.

As for Anthony Hall, the 87-year-old building will receive a new piping system to replace the three-decade old system in place now.

No reconstruction is expected of Anthony Hall itself, but additional work will be done on the fire alarm system, light fixtures and fan coil units, in addition to the walls and ceilings.

Renovation will also include the removal of asbestos in the heating and air conditioning systems, and in all piping and insulation areas.

Anthony Hall, originally built in 1913, is one of the oldest buildings on campus. The building was originally a women's residence hall before it was converted to office space in 1962. Costs of renovation to Anthony Hall are estimated at around $3 million.

at a cost of $2.6 million. A 42-inch tall concrete wall and a chain-link fence were added to protect spectators from the hazards of car racing. Lighting was also added to increase visual enhancement for evening and possible future televised events.

The "entertainment alley" has been expanded, adding a bear exhibit at one end and continuing the endangered tigers exhibit at the other end. The midway also has several new rides, about 35 total, including 10 "spectaculars" which are the larger carnival rides. The typical farmyard petting zoo will return and singers, dancers, magicians and other free entertainers will be available, particularly in the children's section.

While excitement is in the air for fairgoers and planners, it's nothing new to Carol Knaga, a food vendor. The proprietor of "Sirloin Hut Steak," Knaga makes a living by attending about 20 fairs, seven months a year.

Knaga, a Carbondale native who travels with her son and daughter, said the Du Quoin State Fair is nice because it is near her home. For her, the day is full of preparation, such as water and electricity being hooked up to the newly constructed concession stand.

"[Fair life] has had its good points and bad points," she said. "It can be tiring; we've made a lot of friends."

The Du Quoin State Fair began in 1923, when W.R. Hayes convinced investors to contribute $10 per share toward building a state fair on 30 acres of land just south of Du Quoin. It has been called a "state" fair since the beginning, although the state did not purchase the land until 1937.

The big question for the popular annual fair is the weather, which can make or break attendance records. Recent rains have forced officials to cancel today's tractor pull.

Helleny explained that the event tears up the racetrack and mud would interfere with the horse races, an important staple of the yearly event.

Helleny touted the World Trotting Derby, which takes place Sept. 2. He said some may not realize how important horse racing is to spectators and the state of Illinois.

"[We're] very committed to keeping the horse industry active," he said. "It's a big part of our state's industry."

Although the tractor pull was canceled, Helleny expects a good year with all the new events combined with the old, assuming the elements continue to agree.

"It's fun to throw a big party for everyone," he said. "We just have to ask Mother Nature to provide the weather to go with it."

Cross country team solid

The men and women's cross country teams shaping up for the start of the season

COLLIN RHINE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

SIU cross country head coach Don DeNoon doesn't have the luxury of time.

Since being named head coach of both the men and women's cross country teams only three weeks ago, he has scurried to get his house in order to produce a successful year.

"We better make it work and make it work effectively," DeNoon said.

Still in the preliminary stages of practice, both teams have seen the way through obstacles of transition and are now shaping up for the season, which is just one week away.

This year will see the men and women training side by side as teamwork becomes the key ingredient.

DeNoon has kept a positive approach for the upcoming season, but is not making any predictions on individuals' performances.

"It's too early to tell exactly where we are — we need competition that will tell us who's ready," DeNoon said. "We are having really good practices and the kids are excited about who's around them. We'll just have to wait as the season progresses to see how it unfolds."

Saluki returnees are concentrating on improving their skills since last season as a nice group of walk-ons join the effort and try to develop enough potential to contribute to the team.

However, the men's team has lost some big runners to graduation, including Brian Bunden, Matt McClelland and Eric Rushing. Each placed in high positions last year in the NCAA Regional at Champaign.

Though these losses may have been crucial, team leader Travis Pressler keeps a positive outlook on the season.

"We'll definitely be as good as last year. We'll have people fill in and returners improving, also there were some guys fighting injury last year," Pressler said.

The men's cross country team is adding a strong group of walk-ons to combat the vital losses and recruiting difficulties after losing former head coach Bill Cornell to retirement.

"These guys have shown a lot of guts and determination as well as talent," DeNoon said. Shane Kelly, a transfer student from Milliken, could make an impact in his first year at SIU.

"He stands out with a high level of maturity and is training really well," DeNoon said.

Returning leaders on the men's cross country team include Joe Ziebert, Chris Owen, Ryan Hauser and Travis Pressler.

Meanwhile, the women have an unusually small team this year, consisting of only 10 runners, a little lower than the usual 15 or 20.

Bucky Cox, Marissa Jelks and Kacie Henning round out the major returnees to the women's squad. They will be joined by a promising group of scholarship athletes as well as new recruit Jodi Huddleston.

Huddleston comes from Parkland Community College in Champaign and was a NJCAA National Champion in 1999, as well as being a four-time NJCAA All-American.

"The nature of the women's team is real solid," DeNoon said. "The important thing will be to keep everyone healthy."

Football ticket sales less than expected at Penn State

KELLY MULLIGAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
(PENNSYLVANIA STATE U.)

UNIVERSITY PARK, PA. (U-WIRE) — With the Pennsylvania State University Kickoff Classic just two days away, football tickets for certain games are still available — reflecting the significant decline of demand this season.

Some tickets were returned from group sales, and students can purchase them now at the athletic ticket office in The Bryce Jordan Center, said Bud Meredith, Penn State athletic ticket manager.

"We are anticipating a total sell out," Meredith said.

The Kickoff Classic against Southern California will be 2:30 p.m. Saturday at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, NJ. Tickets cost $40 each.

About 1,000 tickets are still available for the opening game against Toledo on Sept. 2 at Beaver Stadium. These seats are located in the public section and cost $38 each, Meredith said.

Scattered single seats for the Louisiana Tech game on Sept. 9 at Beaver Stadium are also on sale.

Tickets for away games sell out faster because the opposing team allots a certain amount for Penn State fans. Ohio State saved 4,000 tickets this season, while Michigan saved 5,000. Additional student tickets for the Sept. 16 game in Pittsburgh may go on sale the Monday of game week, Meredith said.

Penn State reserves 20,000 seats for Penn State students for each home game. Beaver Stadium holds just less than 94,000 people. The remaining tickets are sold to alumni, group events and the general public.

Because student season tickets sold out, the university denied 2,000 students tickets this season. The number is down from the 3,500 students who could not get tickets last season, Meredith said.

Meredith attributes the decrease to this season's home schedule.

"Not to demean the opposing teams, but last season, Ohio State, Michigan and Indiana were all home games," Meredith said.

Most students acted quickly when they received the letter in early June.

"As soon as I got the envelope, I sent it back because I didn't want to get stuck without tickets," Lisa Strunk, a sophomore in business said.

Other students also found that responding quickly increased their chances of securing season tickets.

"Most of the people that I know got tickets. I sent it in the next day, and I think that's the key. I did that last year, too, and I didn't have a problem getting tickets," Lucas Crumbacker a sophomore in international business said.

The Cincinnati game in 1991 was the only game out of the past 132 home games that did not sell out. The university backed off ticket sales, because the upper deck was still under construction.

"The deck passed inspection, but it was already game week. It was during the eleventh hour," Meredith said.

Goelz hopes to continue tradition

New women's swimming coach keeping business as usual

JENS DEJU
DAILY EGYPTIAN

If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

That appears to be the motto of new SIU women's swimming coach Jeff Goelz.

Goelz will take the head position after serving as the assistant coach for the past six seasons, replacing former head coach Mark Kluemper.

"I stayed on as an assistant with the men's and women's team waiting for an opportunity. I had other opportunities but I knew this is where I wanted to be," Goelz said. "So when the opportunity arose, I was just the right person for the job."

"A lot of the things we've done in the past are things that were my ideas and things that I helped implement anyway. We have a good thing going.

Five out of the last six years we've won conference so I think we're doing something right."

Senior Beth Ann Erickson said Goelz can utilize what he's learned from Kluemper and implement his own style as well.

"He knows Mark's old team, but I think he's got a few innovations that he's excited to do with us," Erickson said.

When Goelz was a student-athlete at SIU, he was an All-American on the 200 free relay, 400 free relay and 200 medley relay teams in the early 90s. He shares the SIU record in the 200 free relay and the 200 medley relay.

“I always tell them that they're not doing anything I haven't done myself, so when they say "Oh, this is killing us," I can say, well I've done something like this and yeah it did kill me but it paid off in the end.

JEFF GOELZ
Women's swimming head coach

Goelz's days as a student-athlete at SIUC may give him an advantage when it comes to dealing with his swimmers.

"He knows the tradition here, he knows how SIU works, he's a big part of SIU," said sophomore Amber Mullins.

Goelz said the team should be business as usual since everyone has a familiarity base to work from.

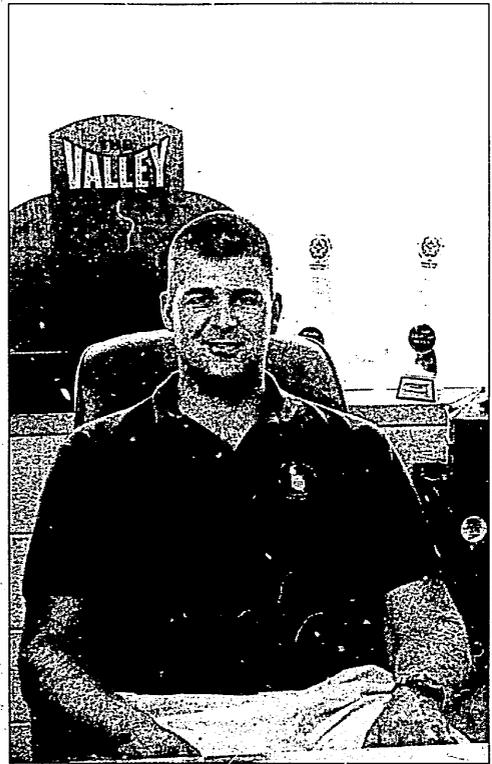

"Some of these kids I recruited as 17-year-olds, and now they're seniors, so they're my family," Goelz said. "I grew up with them, they grew up with me so I know what makes them tick."

Goelz has led by example since he has gone through the same situations he expects his swimmers to go through. This not only applies to athletics, it applies in the classroom, also.

"I always tell them that they're not doing anything that I haven't done myself, so when they say "Oh this is killing us," I can say, well I've done something like this and yeah it did kill me but it paid off in the long run," Goelz said.

Goelz's main objective will be to continue the tradition of success in and out of the pool for the upcoming season. That should not be a problem with the quality program he has helped build here.

"All these good things are going to gel and just be tremendous," Goelz said. "There's no excuse not to have an awesome season. There's no excuse."

Former Saluki heads to NBA, Florida sunshine

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Troy Hudson signs two-year deal with Orlando Magic

The deal came out of nowhere, almost like magic. And in all actuality, it was the Magic.

After attending summer workouts for the Utah Jazz and Toronto Raptors, former SIU basketball standout and Carbondale native Troy Hudson was hungry to get back in the NBA after spending a season with the Los Angeles Clippers last year.

But a coaching change in Toronto and lack of faith in the Jazz gave Hudson's New York based agent, Bill Neff, reason to look elsewhere.

Repeated phone call after phone call by Neff to Orlando late in the summer landed Hudson a workout.

"I got nervous because I thought Utah would go away, so I bugged Orlando [for two days straight] while I was driving somewhere and said you've got to see this guy Hudson," Neff said.

The phone calls paid off, literally. Hudson impressed the Magic to the extent of being offered a two-year deal on Aug. 10. Hudson has an option on the second year of the deal.

Utah later called back, but Hudson opted to go for the longer term deal, plus he will likely see more minutes in Orlando.

He will earn $523,000 the first year and $590,000 in the second year of the contract. Hudson said he will remain in Carbondale through Labor Day before heading South.

"All summer long [Orlando] really wasn't in the plans, but it was just a great situation for me," Hudson said. "It's a great area. There's great weather year-round, you know Florida sunshine."

Because he stayed in such great shape this summer, the Magic thought it was a no-brainer to add Hudson to their roster as a backup to point guard Darrell Armstrong.

"That's the real reason he's successful, the guy works his butt off," Neff said. "I knew I could get him to Orlando 10 seconds after I called him. There are some players I have that if I called they would need 10 days, not Troy."

Hudson left Carbondale for St. Louis to catch a plane to Orlando the day Neff called.

"He had been working four to five hours a day with no incentive," Neff said. "It was not clear if he was going to have a job — but this guy was ready and because he was ready he got himself a two-year deal."

Hudson proved he belonged in the league after a successful stint with the Clippers last season. He averaged 8.8 points and 3.9 assists in 62 games with L.A.

However, Clippers management did not treat Hudson well in the end. Despite solid numbers and making 38 starts at point guard, his minutes began to diminish as the season progressed.

When Hudson played 30 minutes or more the Clippers were 10-16. When he played less than that they were a meager 5-51.

"[The organization] needs work, but it was an opportunity to play in the NBA, so I'm thankful I had a chance to play for one of the 29 teams, even though it was the Clippers," Hudson said. "I was very fortunate to get a chance to play in the league. I don't have any regrets of playing with the Clippers."

Hudson realizes that better times are ahead. This summer, Orlando proved they are an organization dedicated to putting a winning team on the floor by signing superstar Grant Hill and budding talent Tracy McGrady.

Hudson will also fit in Orlando's system under head coach Doc Rivers, a former NBA point guard and NBA Coach of the Year winner last season. Rivers is known for being a respected player's coach.

Hudson is also looking forward to battling Orlando's highly energized Armstrong everyday in practice. Because of their similarities in play, the Magic will not lose too much when Hudson spells Armstrong on the court.

"They need a backup to Darrell because of the way Darrell plays," Neff said. "He plays with such high-energy that he's a risk to get injured."

What the Magic get in Hudson is an extremely dedicated player. Hudson loves the game so much that practice and workouts are not a bother to him.

"Troy would play for free, but the fact that he can make money is a bonus," Neff said. "Money doesn't really motivate him to play. Troy plays because he loves to play."

Hudson is also serious about the business and does not have the big ego that some NBA players do. He's just happy to get the chance to do what he loves to do.

SIU assistant basketball coach Rodney Watson, who coached Hudson at SIU, said Hudson is down to earth and does not have the typical NBA attitude.

"I think what [Orlando is] going to like about him is they're getting a good person, and today that's a pretty high commodity," Watson said. "He appreciates being on an NBA team. This is what he loves and he's very serious about it."

Only 24 years old, Hudson has the opportunity to launch a solid NBA career.

"I think it is becoming a pretty stable career, so hopefully it will continue after [this two-year contract]," Hudson said.
