Contract signed with Moscow Academy

Boundary expanded: Permanent relationship between universities formed to promote exchange of ideas.

By Kellie Huttes Daily Egyptian Reporter

Although the agreement took less than five minutes to sign, SIUC President John Guyon and Moscow Academy Rector Yuri Sviridenko signed a document Wednesday that will bind the universities for years.

The ceremony sealed two years of negotiations between the administrators and made the contract official. They agreed to provide exchanges of students, faculty, educational programs and teaching aids and will allow the two universities to collaborate on research programs.

Guyon said the academy, which has 70 branches, will be working with SIUC students and instructors.

"We plan on a permanent relationship and this agreement helps cement it," he said. "This continues SIUC's international experience and we will start exchanging soon.

Sviridenko said his first goal was to fulfill the non-traditional field of human services with experience and to advance it to a modern level.

His second goal is to train a new generation of professionals competent to compete in the crisis education age.

"We're living in hard times now and during this crisis education is extremely important," he said. "We have started to integrate the universities' programs and we hope this will get up to date, but this is not a one-way street. Americans have a lot to gain, too."

Arkadii Nekrassov (left), president of the Association of Social Workers of Russia, SIUC President John Guyon (center) and Yuri Sviridenko of the Moscow Technological Academy, met Wednesday afternoon at Guyon's office in Anthony Hall to sign a formal agreement that will provide for the exchange of students, faculty, educational programs and teaching aids between the universities.

Sviridenko said his first goal was to train a new generation of professionals competent to compete in the crisis education age.

"We're living in hard times now and during this crisis education is extremely important," he said. "We have started to integrate the universities' programs and we hope this will get up to date, but this is not a one-way street. Americans have a lot to gain, too."

Arkadii Nekrassov, president of the Association of Social Workers of Russia, said the United States and Russia have previously worked together in the area of social work. He said Leo Tolstoy, author of War and Peace, pioneered social work in Russia and Jane Addams, founder of Hull House, developed social work in the United States.

"With this agreement, we will receive contracts and study each other's social systems," he said. "This will be a good start for us and results should come soon. Everything starts with education and our first exchange should happen later this year.

Martin Tracy, director of SIUC's School of Social Work, said he has worked with a similar three-year program among SIUC, Delft, studying child welfare and hopes to make comparisons in Russia.

Sviridenko also said he would like to send the academy's men's basketball team to Carbondale to learn from the Salukis.

Formal complaint filed

Student cites race as reason security stopped car

By Rob Neff Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC student filed a formal complaint with SIUC Security last Thursday, claiming officers pulled over the car she was riding in because of her race.

Javonda C. Landry, a senior in elementary education from Chicago, said the incident occurred while returning from a trip to Chicago in a friend's car Jan. 30.

She said after they dropped a passenger off at Abbot Hall, a police car parked in a nearby parking lot followed them to the intersection of South Illinois Avenue and West Main Street before pulling the car over.

"They followed us all the way to where Shone 'n Stuff is on the Strip before they pulled us over," she said. "When we asked (the SIUC police officers) why they pulled us over, they said they looked suspicious because there wasn't a parking decal on the car and we could be stealing cars or something."

Landry said she thinks the real reason the car was stopped is because all the passengers in the car were black.

"I feel this was harassment," she said. "It's sad that an 18-year-old infant with me. If we were going to steal cars, we wouldn't be a baby with us."

After pulling over the car, the officers ran a check on Landry, found an outstanding Jackson County warrant for a bounced check and arrested her.

SIUC Security Director Sam Jordan said his office was investigating, but could not release a formal complaint.

"There is no mechanism to resolve the impasse," he said. "He should be there because now everyone else knows the issues like him.

Dawgs' basketball to play Creighton tonight

By Shawnna Donovan Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Undergraduate Student Government sent a clear and direct message by asking SIUC Student Trustee Mark Kochan to resign Wednesday night.

Kochan, who is interning in Chicago, has yet to resign despite telling both the USC and Graduate and Professional Student Council presidents that he would.

USG senators passed the resolution, which was tabled at the last meeting that included some heated discussion over Kochan's importance to SIUC.

Marco Nucia, Thompson Point senator, said even though Kochan is six hours away, he is still the student trustee.

"He is still doing the job," Nucia said. "He is doing the job. He's just transferred because no one else knows the issues like him."

Jenny Rublin, west side senator, said she was concerned about replacing Kochan.

"There is no mechanism to replace Kochan," she said.

President turns to Congress

By Doug Dorno Daily Egyptian Reporter

It is not health care, the war with China or a balanced budget amendment, but President Bill Clinton leaped into the Major League Baseball strike with all the enthusiasm of a crime bill debate.

Now the President of the United States has asked Congress to get involved by passing binding arbitration, which has encouraged some baseball fans and dismayed others.

Binding arbitration means both sides would have to abide by what a neutral decides. Clinton met with both sides at the White House on Tuesday to work out a compromise with federally-appointed mediator William Usery, but when that effort failed, the President turned to Congress.

U.S. Rep. Jerry Costello, D-Ill., said Congress should not get involved with the baseball strike.

"While I applaud the President's efforts to try and resolve the impasse offering Major League Baseball, I do not think that Congress should impose a solution aimed at resolving the strike," Costello said.

"We have started to integrate the universities' programs and we hope this will get up to date, but this is not a one-way street. Americans have a lot to gain, too."
NEW YORK--The battle exploded onto the placid streets of suburban Toronto, where two men pulled out guns in a jewelry store. Police have yet to determine whether the incident was a robbery, a theft, or an armed robbery.

The incident presents evidence of the escalating level of criminal violence in Canada's cities. Police have been monitoring a rise in crime, particularly in urban areas, where they believe increased drug use and gang activity may be contributing factors.

In response to the incident, Toronto Mayor John Tory has announced plans to increase police patrols and escalate efforts to combat crime. The mayor has also called for greater community involvement in crime prevention initiatives.

The incident in Toronto is not an isolated case, as similar incidents have been reported in other cities across the country. Crime rates have been rising in both large and small cities, with the highest increases in violent crime.

In an effort to address the issue, the Canadian government has launched a comprehensive crime prevention strategy that includes increased funding for police services, community programs, and intelligence gathering.

The strategy aims to reduce crime by focusing on prevention and early intervention, rather than just responding to crimes after they occur. It includes measures such as expanding community policing initiatives, strengthening gang task forces, and investing in youth programs.

Despite these efforts, crime rates remain high, and the government is facing criticism for its failure to adequately address the issue. Many believe more needs to be done to prevent crimes from occurring in the first place, rather than just reacting to them after they happen.

With the increase in crime, there is growing concern among residents about their safety and security. Many are calling for more investment in public safety measures, as well as increased community involvement in crime prevention initiatives.

As the government works to address the issue, residents are encouraged to remain vigilant and report any suspicious activity to the police. With a united effort, it is hoped that crime rates can be reduced and communities can become safer places to live.

Liquor board votes to cut two licenses

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Carbondale Liquor Advisory Board voted Wednesday to recommend reducing the number of bar liquor licenses in downtown Carbondale from 17 to 15.

The board had considered the reduction of B-2 liquor licenses was necessary because of the fewer patrons, which has resulted from the recently raised entry age.

"It isn’t a coincidence that we raised the entry age from 18 to 19 in July and we now have two bars closed," he said. "If we raised the entry age higher, we would probably see more bars close.

"This cap eliminates the possibility of someone new coming in thinking they can get rich in the bar business, when this is not the case." The Undergraduate Student Government, represented on the board by Commissioner Michael Nolan, opposed the new license cap, because they felt the limit stifled commerce.

"There is no need for this, especially with the additional traffic the new underpass, will bring to the strip," said Nolan. "We feel the current cap is adequate, and the market will take care of itself.

Board Chairman Mark Robinson said the reduction would be good for the area, and for liquor license holders.

"The loss of two liquor licenses won’t affect students much," he said. "But it will lower competition and end the artificially low prices establishments may allow other businesses to move into the area.

"This could be an opportunity for the alcohol related businesses to come in and prove they can cater to students as well," he said.

Board member Joyce Hayes said the lower number of liquor establishments may allow other businesses to move into the area.

"The Joss of two liquor licenses from their licensees probably will see more bars close.

"Right now the strip is a well lit area, within walking distance," said Nolan. "Students habits will not change because of the bars nearby—they will drive, or walk long distances through unfamiliar areas."

Robinson said the reduction will cause an increase in the number of restaurant liquor licenses, such as the A-3 license, which requires an establishment to serve at least 51 percent of its profits from food or entertainment.

But it could be a problem if A-3 license holders attempt to operate a regular restaurant.

"We need to make sure these establishments at least have a kitchen," he said. "Perhaps we should make possible audits at any time a condition of the license.

The board plans to vote on a recommendation of the liquor commission regarding enforcement of restaurant licenses at their next meeting, March 9.

Law professor to lecture at SIUC on link between race, gender

By William C. Phillips III

While the O. J. Simpson case fingers on the Black History Month committee is hosting a law professor to provide some insight and to increase students’ awareness about the relationship between race and gender issues.

Attorney Kimberle Williams Crenshaw, an expert on race and gender issues will speak at the SIUC Law School Auditorium on Thursday at 7 p.m.

"We will all come from her lecture better informed about the legal issues in the black community and Crenshaw will increase awareness regarding the relationship between the two.

"This is a great effect on black women and black men. (They) should become concerned as well and the whole country," she said.

Crenshaw assisted the legal team that represented Anita Hill in the confirmation hearings for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Crenshaw is known for coining the phrase, “critical race theory,” a field of legal analysis that maintains race laws play a significant role in creating racial hierarchies.

Chancellor to select new members for search

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Chancellor James Brown will announce the names of the individual chosen for the Chancellor Search Advisory Committee at the SIU Board of Trustees meeting in Edwardsville Friday, and Jack Detru, executive director of University Relations

Brown will choose one SIUC student representative among four candidates: Marco Nasca and Keith Westpham, from the Undergraduate Student Government; and Jerry Coleman and Kevin Green, from the Graduate and Professional Student Council.

Fred Rogers, SIUC’s president, said he hopes an undergraduate is chosen. However, Sawyer said USC is the only campus with a student representative from both campuses regardless of who is chosen.

Jason Matthews, GOPC vice president, said the council will be represented at the trustees meeting.

Drury said there have been about 75 applications and nominations for the chancellor position. He said Brown interviewed some of the applicants, and will be announcing his recommendations to the trustees.

Detru said the trustees met Wednesday night to decide their next step in selecting the new chancellor.

In other business, the trustees will elect new officers and committee chairs. Several projects at SIUC are up for trustee approval.

The renovations to Salter Hall, on Greek Row, and the Neely Hall roof replacement project are up for approval. Salter Hall renovations are estimated at $170,000, and the Neely Hall roof replacement is estimated at $1.5 million.

An architect will be selected for the renovations to the third floor of Section A at Neckers Building. The project is estimated at $1.5 million.

Encountering problems with the storm drainage and underground utility lines of parking lot no. 39, the cost was revised at $420,911.
In a time when funds are tight and deficits are high for our nation, it is necessary for some program money, normally funded by the government, to be cut back. However, the government needs to take great care in deciding what programs are to be cut or reduced.

While President Clinton is proposing a cut in government spending for coal research, the impact such a cut would have on many jobs and programs in the environmental field should be thoroughly considered. Cuts in this area could have a direct impact on SIUC’s Illinois Coal Development Park, which currently receives $750,000 in federal money. An official of the Illinois Department of Energy and Natural Resources recommends Clinton could change the amount of funding the facility receives from the federal government, such as 80 percent of the funding for some clean coal research projects at SIUC. Services provided by facilities such as the park are worthy of being salvaged from this political haggling for economic as well as environmental reasons.

There has been a major shift that coal experts predict will continue, in the coal industry nationwide. Many electrical companies that use coal to generate energy have turned away from high-sulfur coal, such as Illinois coal, and are using cheaper western coal, which is cheaper and meets current clean-air standards. SIUC’s Coal Park realizes this shift and the impact it has on the Southern Illinois economy and is working to develop alternative uses for regional coal.

One project at the facility already has created a useful alternative for high-sulfur coal which serves as a cost-effective fuel substitute. The alternative, known as coal slurry, involves mixing Illinois coal with water to produce a fuel which fulfills the same function as oil. The coal slurry is cheaper than oil, however. Oil is about 75 cents per gallon, while the slurry is only 15 cents per gallon. According to a coal park official, the slurry is currently being used to fully power an energy plant at the University of Alabama.

There are several other alternative uses for coal and its by-products, such as extracting chemicals from Illinois coal for steel work, that have been or are in the process of being developed at the SIUC facility. The Illinois Department of Energy and Natural Resources reports that by the year 2000, the amount of Illinois coal that is used will drop 21.5 million tons because of competition with cleaner-burning western coal. This drop in usage could severely affect the coal industry, including the unemployment of coal miners, as well as an impact on the overall economy of the state. It seems that the type of research done at the SIUC Coal Park could reduce the impact of the shift in the coal market from high-sulfur Illinois coal to western coal.

Also, many companies do not use Illinois coal because it is more costly to “scrub” out the impurities than it is to buy coal from Western states. Though its use is declining, 54.5 million tons of Illinois coal is still being used today, and the coal facility is dealing with the reality of cleaning up this coal. David Arey, assistant director of SIUC’s Coal Park, said a plan currently is in the works for the development of a cleaner and more efficient coal scrubber. Arey said the completion of the new scrubber is dependent, however, on the amount of funding the facility receives from the government.

There is a long road to be traveled before Congress decides exactly how much money will be given to coal research facilities. Though the funding for coal research may not be the ultimate solution to the coal dilemma, it seems to be an effective solution at this point. Until a better solution is found, continuing government funding of coal research is in order.

Letters to the Editor

Raising bar-entry age possible solution to Carbondale’s Halloween problems

In my editorial of December 6, 1994, I discussed how enjoyable it is to be in the DE that dealt with issues other than Halloween. Obviously, I spoke too soon. Halloween is prime time again, with a blue-ribbon task force having been created to study the problem and the front page of the DE once again emblazoned with the “H” word. But now we appear we are going back to square one considering potential solutions to the “H” problem, including the old cop-out of a “Halloween fall break.”

Frankly put, a Halloween fall break is a dumb idea. Several years ago, as Chairman of the Undergraduate Education and Policy Committee of the Faculty Senate, I directed a poll of all campus faculty as to the type of fall break they wanted. The consensus was strongly in favor of a full-week Thanksgiving break, and President Guyon eventually reimplemented this as policy. But now the Halloween task force has fallen back to considering a Halloween fall break as one of several possible solutions to the “H” problem.

I would respond to the task force’s action with a query: is this all the merriment you can be? What if Halloween were a holiday celebrated on September 15 instead of October 31? Would the task force be considering shutting down the University three weeks into the semester as a solution to the “H” problem? Of course not!

If the task force thinks about it for a moment, they will realize how silly an irregular fall break is. First of all, such a solution is only a means of running away from the problem, rather than facing it. Second, a poorly timed fall break (as a Halloween break would be) would only piss unreasonably travel and financial demands on students. And third, such a policy would unfairly elevate the perception that the University and the community are totally inept at problem solving. Instead of a Halloween break, the task force should focus on real solutions — in particular, the one I suggested in my previous letter: raising the bar age to 21.

In the February 7 DE lead story on the “H” problem, the Reverend Robert Gray (a member of the task force) said that increasing the bar age may help solve the problem, but left us with the conclusion that “it would be a tough thing for the City Council to swallow.” This statement is baffling. For the life of me, I can’t understand why the City Council would not like to see some of the dammest bars on the Strip clean up their act. Even raising the entry age from 19 to 20 would have a beneficial effect, and perhaps the Council should consider this as a first step compromise if it lacks the courage to “go all the way.”

The “H” problem is only going to disappear if the Carbondale City Council has the guts to take strong action. I therefore urge the task force to consider only real solutions to the Halloween problem and take the phony fall break idea of the table. Raising the bar age is a part of the “H” solution, and the Halloween task force should recognize it.

Students face age discrimination

I am responding to an article I read January 31, entitled “Off-Campus Housing: Policy Criticized.” In which Kimberly Gill complains about the favoritism surrounding juniors and seniors and then deprecates sophomores as responsible if they have “good grades.” That also is an unfair standard. Indication of whether students are responsible should not be determined by their grades any more than their age.

This housing situation is like many other problems on campus concerning examples of discrimination. I therefore urge the task force and the City Council should consider this a first step compromise if it lacks the courage to “go all the way.”
WASHINGTON—President Clinton and his Republican rivals have had their differences over the federal budget in recent weeks. Now they are basking over a truly high-stakes issue: professional baseball.

After weeks of low-profile efforts to encourage a deal in the six-month-old baseball strike, Clinton jumped onto the field with both feet on Monday night. He is relying on the good will of both sides and owners to the White House and urging them to accept a settlement proposed by his own mediator.

Aides said the president has spent hours on the issue, getting detailed briefings from his top political troubleshooter, deputy White House counsel Bruce Lindsey, Tuesday’s crisis-style meetings in the West Wing also included Vice President Al Gore and Labor Secretary Robert Reich — Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig and Detroit Tigers first baseman Cecil Fielder.

The game that’s on most White House aide’s minds, though, is the baseball issue, still live as of Monday. If Clinton can use his persuasive power to get the nation’s fans their game back, aides believe he will win some goodwill from the biggest constituency that rejected him in last year’s congressional elections.

Perhaps for that very reason, Republican leaders publicly walked away from Clinton’s mediation effort on Tuesday, warning that the baseball owners could not back up the president with legislation to force a settlement.

“I think it’s crystal clear,” said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., who is planning to run for president in 1996. “Neither party should be trying to get this accomplished in the next year. ‘Neither party should be trying to get this accomplished in the next year.””

Pres. Clinton would love to get his name associated with getting the strike resolved, because his popularity is not that high. If he could get this done, it would be a public relations coup.

Denis Junge assistant professor at John A. Logan

“However, he is making a legitimate effort and any positive settlement would be welcomed.”

Now, with President Clinton asking the U.S. Congress to solve the strike through binding arbitration, Junge said Congress could prove to be a threat to baseball owners by taking away Major League Baseball’s anti-trust exemption. Junge said the anti-trust exemption provides a monopoly for the game of baseball, which allows the league to control itself without outside intervention and stops players from starting their own leagues.

SIUC baseball coach Dan Callahan said that the government should stay out of the Major League strike issue.

“I definitely don’t think Clinton or Congress should get involved at all. There are more important issues that the government should be dealing with right now. I don’t think a lot of people are watching baseball. If they want to, I’m sure that Congress would have no problem getting his name associated with this.”

“People don’t really care about the outcome of the strike. They are much more interested in the football world.”

Callahan said the owners and players need to work out their differences on their own, and if the season starts with replacement players people will still watch.

“There are always going to be fans and even though this will be watered-down baseball, I’ll watch it because I love the game.”

Matt Russell, a freshman in history at SIUC from6 from New Orleans, agreed that government intervention is not the correct course of action.

“If Congress or the president mandates a settlement I don’t think either side would be ready to comply with any government intervention. Congress has no reason to be involved with the first place,” he said.

Paul Morell, a senior in Administration of Justice from Springfield, said he wants either Clinton or Congress to settle this issue.

“I think someone has to step in, because if no one does the owners and players will just continue their selfish ways and the strike will not be resolved,” he said.

Morell said he is concerned that Congress doesn’t want to get involved.

“I’m not sure that Congress wants to settle the strike, from what I’ve been hearing,” he said. “I think the problem is the President and Congress put forth a joint effort to get this accomplished.”

investigating the complaint is in training and won’t be back until late this week. He probably won’t begin the investigation until early next week.

However, Jordan did say any complaint received by his office is handled by a routine procedure designed to protect the rights of the employee accused as well as those of the complainant.

The first step in investigating any complaint is to examine the complaint and find out what happened. Jordan said.

Police then determine whether the complaint alleges an incident that violates state law or SIUC policy.

"If we feel it is a possible violation of state law, then we would contact the State’s Attorney’s office or the state police, some separate agency that can investigate it objectively," he said. "If it is a possible violation of state law, then we investigate it internally."

Jordan said most cases are resolved in about a week, although the length of the investigation depends on the specifics of the case itself, including the number of people that need to be interviewed.

New badges: Carbondale expects to get two new officers from grant

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Carbondale officially received a federal grant for two more police officers Wednesday as part of a nationwide program to put more than 7,000 more police officers on the streets of small cities this year. President Clinton instructed police agencies across the country, at a White House press conference Wednesday that this is just the "beginning," saying he wants to "get two new sworn police officers" per year as part of a "nationwide program to put more police officers on the streets of small cities this year."

"Unless we follow through on our commitment to have 100,000 more police officers on the street, the U.S. government will not be doing its job to give you the opportunity to make the streets safer," he said, "We need 100,000 more badges.

Clinton said the increase is overdue, saying violent crime has tripled over the last 30 years, while the nation's police force has only increased by 10 percent. Crime has especially increased in small cities.

Clinton said, "We all know that most of our big cities have seen a decline in the crime rate in the last couple of years, even though it's still at a horrendously high level," he said. "But many of our small communities are dealing with the aftermath."

The grant is exclusively for cities under 50,000.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said the two police officers will be a welcome addition to the police force. "I think like other police agencies, we are getting stretched thin as we face more challenging situations, such as drugs and gangs," he said. "I am very pleased to be getting more officers."

Strom said he is unsure what the council will provide the additional funding. "If it's all approved, it will make 60 sworn police officers," he said. "It must go through city council, but they have a record on the past saying they will approve it."

This new funding is in addition to the two officers gained under the Crime Bill last year, Strom said. "Carbondale was one of the first to receive funding under this grant," he said. "When we received the grant last year, we were one of 72 agencies across the country. I am glad to see we will be getting two more."

Anticrime bill to uphold more police evidence

WASHINGTON—The House on Wednesday instructed federal courts to uphold evidence collected in some warrantless searches as President Clinton signed a federal law that would make it easier for police to obtain warrants. The law, which was signed by President Clinton, would allow law enforcement agencies to use evidence collected in some warrantless searches as part of a nationwide program to put more police officers on the streets of small cities. The law would also allow law enforcement agencies to use evidence collected in some warrantless searches as part of a nationwide program to put more police officers on the streets of small cities. Picture a classic ballerina dancing to the sounds of 300-year-old music. It could be the usual pas de deux, but if you start to move we'll pull you back.

Weber, the director of the repertory, said the style he lived on his childhood experiences of the "70s combined with the teaching of the classic ballet.

"After school programming and the Brady Bunch define who I am. I am a child of the Hood Bunch define who I am. I am a child of the classical ballet," Weber said. "In my early career, I danced with avery eclectic group of people that were inspired by choreographer Alvin Ailey's trip to Scotland where he saw the fog rolling off the mountains."

Weber said the second number "Our Ailey's trip 10 Scotland where he saw the fog rolling off the mountains."

it," she said. "Sometimes we do unplanned improvements that kind of just happen on the fly, where we have the ability to really listen to each other." Wilson said, with seven members in the group's original sound is multi-textured.
"Some of the material is very danceable and lively," he said. "Some of it is very expressive, colorful — the multiple layers of fun and sonic joy." Vigil said the drum section is made up of a traditional kit, congas and bongos. It permeates the music in a way that catches an audiences attention, he said.

"The percussion and bass is some-ting that really sticks out," he said. "People come up afterward and always comment on that."

Organic Rain began as a group of friends that shared an interest in making music. Last summer they formed the band and have since played several benefits, including one for the American Indian Center, Habitat for Humanity and Cove Mutual, a wildlife refuge.

Stevens said the name of the group reflects the general philosophy the band shares — environmental consciousness and healthy living.

"Rain, in general, in America is pretty much contaminated by virtue of coming through a polluted sky," she said. "Organic rain is unpolluted rain, which, for us, is a vision." She said everyone in the band supports organic living, which includes such things as eating organically, not buying non-recyclable items and being conscious of environmental issues.

"We support organic living," said. "We're trying to avoid things that are bad for us. We support each other."

Traci Antonovich said the band members are so close to one another that they are like a family.

Seven musicians together can put out beautiful music, but it's incredible, "A lot of people like to have their hands on it all — everything just fits into place."

He said the band's music allows people to escape from their daily routines.

"Our music provides a release from their everyday bullshit they go through," he said. "I think this is music that really makes people move — they can forget about their problems and have fun."

Stevens said she wants the audience to not have to think about the music so much as feel it with their bodies.

"We want to get people out of their heads and into their bodies."

SIUC's Feb. 1 game against Tulsa, MVC supervisor of officials Jim Rain was on hand to hear it. Rain contacted the game references and an SIUC administrator at halftime and explained that a technical foul would be issued if the fan's behavior continued.

Luckily for SIUC, who went on to win the game 72-71 at the buzzer, the ref never thought it was necessary to call the technical during the second half.

According to Rule 10, Section 5 of the NCAA Basketball Rulebook, any bench personnel, including coaches, assistant coaches, reserve players or fans, can be charged with a technical foul for failing to follow proper conduct.

This conduct includes: using profanity or any language that is vulgar or obscene.

Elgin said the obscene chant reflects negatively on the MVC, which is trying to become one of the premiere leagues in the country.

"From our perspective, we do not want that type of image," he said. "The origination of the Dawg Pound is a wonderful thing and we do everything we can to encourage positive, clean, rowdy behavior."

"Profanity is neither positive or creative from our position."

Saluki men's coach Rich Herrin, who has been speaking with members of the Dawg Pound before games, said he wishes all fans shared the students' enthusiasm, but the vulgar language has got to stop for the good of the team.

"They're (Dawg Pound) the greatest thing in a long time. Heck, I'd like to take them on the road with me if I could," he said. "But they need to clean their act up. We've got things going too good to compete against at this point in the season." Padovan doesn't consider the two universities to be in the same league, but is ready for competition.

"This weekend will still be good for both teams," Padovan said. "We needed a meet this weekend." SIUC freshman Steve Munz is looking for some tough intrasquad competition to keep rivalry high.

"We're not going to blow off the next just because they're not the kind of caliber we would like to compete against at this point in the season," he said.

"There will probably be a lot of fans, considering where we are in the season." The Salukis begin competition at 1 p.m. at the Recreation Center pool this Saturday.

the men's and women's teams earned academic All-American awards this season.

SIUC women's swimming coach Mark Khoemper said that the competition will be a great time to evaluate performances for the upcoming Conference.

"I am looking for them to race hard," Khoemper said. "I want them to step out on the blocks looking for a win."

The Salukis usually do not place Eastern Illinois on their schedule, but due to the cancellation for the men against Iowa, Eastern Illinois University's swim coach and former Saluki swimming standout, Ray Padovan doesn't consider the two universities to be in the same league, but is ready for competition.

"ball!" then "Off the court!" The protesters responded, "Hell no, we won't go!"

Wilson, the senior university official at the game, said the protests asked for a microphone with which to read a statement. "We asked if they were willing to leave once they read it," Wilson said. "They didn't give an answer so we were not willing to give them a mike."

Bruno, meanwhile, conducted the meeting with officials from both schools. Before the game, Rutgers refused to "do anything the league wanted to do," she said, including forfeit. "The two coaches (Bob Wenzel of Rutgers and John Calipari of UMass) are committed to finish the game. That's fine with both administrations."

ANAHEIM, Calif.—University of Oregon Coach Rich Brooks has been recommended to replace Check Knux as Ram head coach by the team's search committee.

Steve Ortmayer, vice president of football operations, and Jay Zygmun, senior vice president, made the recommendation to team president John Shaw on Tuesday.

"Ortmayer and I recommend that one will not be evaluating him, and after that, we believe to be under pressure from fans, students, and the media," Herrin said, when contacted at his Los Angeles-area hotel. "Let's just get this way: I will not make any comment until probably the next day or two."

Ortmayer made a favorable impression with Ortmayer in his first meeting and provides the head coaching experience and stability the Rams consider essential in making the transition from Los Angeles to St. Louis.

Brooks coached the special teams for the Rams in 1971-72 after coaching the linebackers at UCLA in 1970. After a year at Oregon State, he worked with defensive backs and special teams in San Francisco and linebackers again at UCLA in 1976 before becoming assistant head coach at Oregon.

Herrin to begin analyzing schedule

Richard Herrin, senior vice president, said while on his way to meeting with Shaw, "I'm just not at liberty to comment," Brooks said when reached at his Los Angeles-area hotel. "Let's just get this way: I will not make any comment until probably the next day or two."

The Rams have also interviewed Barry Alvarez, Wisconsin head coach, and Joe Vitt, former Ram assistant head coach.

coach Rich Herrin and his troops.

The Salukis are fresh off an incredible last second victory at Northern Iowa and are one game behind league leader Tulsa (9-2).

Desire Creighton's funk under coach Dana Altman, the third-year head man, said he's always leery of a team that has that to the wall.

"I'm more of a fighter and trying to come in and get a spot in the top eight," he said.

Creighton is led by junior Marcus Lockett, who averages 14.4 points a game, while leading the Jays in free throw percentage (90 percent), steals (22) and assists (63).

Tad Ackerman (6-3, 190) is also back from injury for the Jays. Ackerman averaged 15.7 points a game in junior college, while pouring in an amazing 142 three-pointers.

SIU forward Chris Carr has a shot at reaching the 1,000 career point plateau against CU, which would make him the sixth MVC player to accomplish the feat this year.

Carr leads the Valley in scoring with a 21.1 point average and ranks among the league's top four in field goal (268), free throw percentage (46th) and free throw percentage (76th).

With his team in the thick of the MVC title race, it would be easy for Herrin to begin analyzing the schedules of Tulsa, Evansville and Bradley to see exactly what games St. Louis needs to win.

However, Herrin said he'll leave the predictions up to the media.

"Too many things can still happen — it's way too early," he said.

Tip-off tonight is at 7:05.

Students’ halftime protesting halts Rutgers, UMass contest

Racial comments by Rutgers president causes sit-in PISCATAWAY N.J. — Approximately 150 Rutgers students protesting racially charged remarks by university president Francis L. Lawrence sat on the Brown Athletic Center court Tuesday night shortly before the beginning of the second half, forcing Rutgers and No. 4 Massachusetts to suspend their Atlantic 10 Conference game. The game, which Rutgers leads 31-29, will be resumed at a later date.

League commissioner Linda Bruno met with athletic directors and head coaches of both teams and a game official before announcing that the second half had been suspended.

“UMass just headed back (home),” Bruno said. “We wanted them (the teams) out of the building. The students were requesting to talk to the team members. We didn’t want to put the student-athletes in that situation.”

At a Nov. 11, faculty meeting at Rutgers-Camden, Lawrence said: “The average SAT for African-Americans is 750. Do we set standards in the future so we don’t admit anybody with the national tests? Or do we deal with a disadvantaged population that doesn’t have that genetic hereditary background to have a higher average?”

Francis L. Lawrence
president of Rutgers College

“...long record of commitment to minorities in higher education...,” Lawrence said, apologizing for the remarks.

However, a vocal group of students and public officials continue to call for his resignation.

Rutgers vice president of student affairs Roselle L. Wilson said the school received word late Monday evening that some sort of protest might take place at the game. Not only was it the first home game since Lawrence’s remarks became public, but the lure of one of the nation’s best teams brought a large audience. Rutgers sold out the Brown Center for the first time in four years and the New Jersey Network televised the game.

The first half went without incident.

The Scarlet Knights, on the strength of an early 11-0 run, jumped out to a 13-5 lead. The Minutemen took a 29-27 lead with 1:26 left in the half, only to have Rutgers score the half’s last four points.

The protest spilled onto the court at 9:13 p.m., after the teams returned to their respective benches in anticipation of the start of the second half. One African-American female sat down at the center circle of the court. One African-didn’t want to pull the student-athletes (the teams) out of the building — a game official before the arena ground to have a higher average?

Lawrence must go!” and carried a poster of a Rutgers student calling for his resignation.

“We were really a shame if it came down that,” Elgin said regarding SIUC getting stuck with a technical. “The Arena has a great atmosphere. It would be a shame if a couple of students ruin it.”

The explicit chant Elgin referred to usually takes place after the opposition makes a free throw and has somewhat become a tradition at Dawg games since 1990.

However, when the infamous chant rang out during the first half, those fans who wished to swim, due in part to the fact that it is the last home competition for the seniors on the squads. SIUC's recruiting coach Dave Arndt explained that the last home meet is a chance to present gifts to the seniors, as well as All-American swimmers.

SIUC football inked three more recruits Wednesday to bring this year’s list of signees up to 26.

Kevin Hannah of Corliss High School in Chicago committed to SIUC and should add depth to the running back position.

At six-foot, 190 pounds, Hannah scored 11 touchdowns and rushed for over 1,000 yards to earn first team all-conference honors and a spot in the Saluki city all-star game.

Staying “true to our roots” is most important to the Saluki men’s and women’s swimming/diving team’s agenda this Saturday against Eastern Illinois.
