Future of athletics hinges on fee hike

SIUC students will vote next week on a $40 Athletic Fee Fund increase to compensate for state funding cuts, but a student leader is concerned more time is needed to make an educated choice.

Graduate and Professional Student Council president Susan Hall said she is concerned students only have a week to get familiar with the referendum.

"If we are asking students to make a decision, we must be objective (in the referendum wording) and give all the facts," she said. "I'm not sure we can do that in a week."

Although the vote is approaching, Undergraduate Student Government president Mike Spikw said he feels students will have time to make an educated choice.

"I've taken a lot of criticism for this (spending the vote), but I think whether students have a month or a week to think about it, we'll get the same turnout," Spikw said.

The increase will be spread over three years, with an approximate $10 increase the first and second years and a $20 increase the third. If approved by the students and Board of Trustees, the increase will start next year.

The increase is the result of recommendations by the Illinois Board of Higher Education to stop state funding for intercollegiate Athletics. Athletic funding cuts are part of the IBHE Priorities, Quality and Productivity initiative, aimed at cutting unnecessary spending at 12 state universities.

The cut would leave the University financially short by $1.2 million, which students may compensate for, according to the proposed referendum.

IBHE has recommended student fees not increase to compensate the loss, he said.

"This brings in some political implications," she said.

Also, Hall said one of the board members proposed students in the Monetary Award Program, which waives tuition and increases, pay the $40 increase themselves.

Hall said a few SIUC faculty members and local residents asked for and received a ban on corporate sponsorship by alcohol companies see FUNDS, page 5

Gender-bias accusations proven unfounded at SIUC

By Emily Priddy

Despite a national watchdog group's suspicions that the American College Testing Program Assessment may be unfair to women, an SIUC admissions official says in awards, merit-based scholarships, the University only looks at new students' class rank and ACT scores when considering scholarship applications.

Roland Keim, SIUC director of admissions and records, said the University only looks at new students' class rank and ACT scores when considering scholarship applications.

"There is no weighting by gender," Kein said. "As far as I know, no scholarships have been created with any kind of gender-bias information as part of the awarding process."

The ACT tests high school students in the areas of math, science, reading and writing.

A recent College Press Service report stated males nationwide average 1.2 points higher than females in the math test and half a point higher in the composite score, despite similar high-school experiences.

According to the report, FairTest, an organization concerned with equitable testing procedures, suggested biased exams cause the discrepancy in scores and can lead to inequities in the awarding of scholarships.

Harvey Welch, SIUC vice-president for student affairs, said the admissions process is not perfect, but it is the most practical see BIAS, page 5

Some university faculty had mixed feelings about President Clinton's State of the Union address, but all agree the most important was placed on universal health care coverage.

Patrick Kelly, SIUC law school professor, said Clinton mishandled his health care plan and its results.

"Clinton's proposed health care system does not preserve choice, will not be affordable, and will not preserve or build on the strength of our current system," Kelly, former faculty advisor for the College Republicans, said.

Clark said Clinton was a smooth speaker and gave a very persuasive speech, but his unwillingness to complicate health care reform and crime legislation in the State of the Union address, but talked little about foreign affairs, SIUC international students say.

Wan Kamal Was Napi, vice-president of international affairs for the International Student Council, said because of the United States' superpower status, it is obligated to assume a leadership role in international affairs.

Napi said international and domestic affairs deserve equal attention from U.S. officials because of the United States' economic position is becoming more influential than national.

There should not be a division between domestic policy and foreign policy, he said.

CLINTON SOUNDS CONFIDENT IN ADDRESS
- What the nation heard Tuesday night was a confident president. Bill Clinton is rebuilding in the polls, wafting upward by a strong economy, despite a partisan assault on his personal character. Just as a weak economy helped him defeat President Bush in 1992, a resurgent economy solidified his hold on the electorate in 1994. A symbol of Clinton's stronger position compared to the last year was that he traded in Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan for AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland as the occupant of the honored gallery seat next to Hillary Rodham Clinton. In 1993, he needed Greenspan as a token of the administration's fiscal responsibility.

So far, the idea hasn't worked out very well. As many investors are painfully aware, the "green funds" fizzled. Indeed, they have been fizzling for more than three years. The recession and the slow race of government action have combined to stifle the progress of environmental stocks, according to the managers of these funds.

It added that the singer is "an innocent man who does not intend to have his career and his life destroyed by rumors and innuendo."

SIUC students help in recycling efforts

Old phone book collection project ongoing at SIUC

By Stephanie Moletti
Environmental Reporter

SIUC students and community volunteers are joining together in the expanding environmental fight by collecting old phone books.

"It is estimated that 174 cubic yards of landfill will be saved by this year's recycling effort," said the Saluki Volunteer Corps. a group of students provided with the opportunity to participate in volunteer work, community service and work experience, is pitching in by visiting the drop off sites to get the phone books.

This is the third year for phone book recycling, Andrea Stader, Carbondale Clean and Green coordinator, said. However, the program has been expanded to include two more counties for a total of five in the program.

Last year, 53 and a half tons were collected and the group is hoping to collect at least 60 tons this year due to the expansion.

The city of Carbondale is helping out with curb pickup of the books in blue recycling bins until Saturday.

Kathy Lorentz, coordinator of Student Development, said SIUC is helping in more than one way. SIUC law students are joining the recycling ranks as a part of community service by going on Saturday to pick up phone books at homes and make a final round at the drop-off points, Lorentz said.

Most of the phone books will be shipped to paper mills in Wisconsin and recycled into brown-paper toweling, Stader said. The shipping and recycling of the phone books is an expensive process, Stader said.

It costs $30 to $40 a ton to ship the phone books out.

SIUC phone book recycling program on campus will be ongoing throughout this year, Jim Sissom, graduate student in public administration from Herrin, said.

"We are going to several offices on campus," Sissom said.

"The participation and enthusiasm from the faculty and administration is excellent." Although there are no drop off areas on campus for students, Sissom said making drop-off points that are more available is part of future plan.

"It is certainly not as convenient as we would like it to be, but I hope students will take these phone books to local drop-off points," Sissom said.

However, excess student directories which are not delivered to local drop-off points are sent in for recycling, Sissom said.

Although the University is taking serious steps toward recycling, the phone book recycling is something where SIUC and the city can work together, Sissom said.

Registration becomes priority

By Chris Davies
General Assignment Reporter

The SIUC Student Government is proposing University administration get involved in a student voter registration drive in an effort to gain political leverage before the state primaries.

Student leaders have issued a proposal to the student housing administration allowing student deputy registrars to register students to vote during resident assistant-scheduled programs.

Troy Arnoldi, undergraduate governmental relations commissioner, is coordinating a statewide voter registration competition among all Illinois' public universities.

SIUC will be competing with other public universities to register the most voters by March 15. Arnoldi said students must realize the importance of voting, especially in the upcoming elections.

"By voting, students can have an impact on their community, particularly in the areas of housing and most importantly state-wide funding," he said.

"People that make decisions concerning these issues only listen to one thing and that is registered voters." Mark Kochan, SIUC student trustee, described the move to register voters and raise voter awareness as a rally call to end student apathy.

He also said student involvement is necessary and can bring notoriety and political power to SIUC.

"Having a large number of students registered to vote can provide us with some political leverage when we go to Springfield to voice our concerns on state funding for higher education," he said.

Kochan said registering students in the resident halls is part of a three part program to get student to the polls.

"First we will register students, then we will have to get informed the students about those candidates that best support our cause," he said.

"Finally, we are going to ask SIUC to provide transportation to the students who have registered to the voting booths." Student Government will be ready to register students as soon as the proposal is approved, Susan Hall, graduate and professional student council president, said.

"Resident assistants will call us as soon as the program is approved to schedule registration programs for individual floors in the halls," she said.

Traditional music becomes part of radio station series

By Kyle J. Chapman
Entertainment Reporter

Sacred music has brought African Americans through centuries of oppression and its far reaching influence is being explored in a 26-part series on two Carbondale radio stations.

WSUI FM and WUSD FM are broadcasting the series "Water: African-American Sacred Music Traditions," Saturday evenings at 9 p.m. to document the history of African Americans over a 200-year period through song and historical analysis.

National Public Radio and Smithsonian Institution have undertaken their largest project exploring African-American sacred music, according to an NPR press release.

The project airs on 225 of the 480 NPR member stations.

Smithsonian's Carlos Bernice Johnson Reagon founded the Smithsion's program in African-American culture. She is a scholar and historian of African-American culture who worked for 40 years to establish the program.

Reagon said this program's purpose is to show how African Americans created sacred music which inspired them to overcome great adversity and influenced all music forms that followed.

"It's beautiful (the music) because in each artist they perform and talk about their experiences and what their music means to them." --Dackeyia Simmons

Reagon said this music is sacred to African Americans because it gave hope and spiritual revitalization during a time of enslavement.

"We're talking about a culture that was developed where one people found it wasn't a wonder that they could get through life after what they experienced," Reagon said.

John McClandon, director of the Black Culture Center at the University of Missouri, said slaves used music as a form of rebellion to communicate, in code and for spiritual revitalization.

"(Music) communication was a lifeline and it gave spiritual revolution against slavery," McClandon said. "Slaves needed to rejuvenate to continue through slavery or else we wouldn't be here."

The series will expose listeners to African-American spiritual recordings as well as rare archival material featuring classic performances from such artists as the Fisk Jubilee Singers, James Cleveland, Mahalia Jackson the Winans and many others.

Dackeyia Simmons, administrative assistant of Wade in the World program, said the series of project is chronicling the sacred music of African Americans.

"We cover traditions, classical and contemporary gospel as well as jazz," Simmons said.

"It's beautiful because in this program and talk about their experiences and what their music means to them."

DURING THE PAST 18 MONTHS SIUC MADE significant strides toward improving campus safety, a fact left out of the Jan. 24 editorial, "Campus Lake Lights Need Improvements." The editorial focused on statements made by Vice President for Administration James A. Tweedy on Jan. 19 to the SIUC Women's Caucus. Tweedy said he would not feel safe walking around Campus Lake at night, but spending $70,000 to correct lighting problems in the area would not be a wise investment.

However, during the same meeting Tweedy presented an extensive list of safety improvements made since he became SIUC's Vice President for Administration. These included improving lighting and beefing up security.

DURING THE PAST 18 MONTHS $100,000 WAS spent on lighting improvements. A system to identify the location of burned out lights was established to help workers fix the problems during daylight hours. Light fixtures were replaced and new lighting was installed in several areas on campus.

Six new emergency telephones were installed at strategic locations. The Saluki Patrol grew from 10 to 40 officers, and a Crime Prevention Unit was established to provide safety education on campus. A proposal to expand daytime security van hours from midnight to 3 a.m. is being considered. The University has responded to safety concerns on campus.

DESPITE ALL THE IMPROVEMENTS, CAMPUS safety continues to be a problem. The fact that SIUC's Vice President for Administration would not walk around Campus Lake at night sends an alarming message to students. Safety has become a luxury instead of a reasonable expectation.

Tweedy was right to say people should avoid walking into wooded areas at night. More lighting around Campus Lake would not guarantee anyone's safety. People do get robbed in well lit places. Safety can never be guaranteed, even at home.

However, it is unreasonable to think everyone will avoid the area around Campus Lake at night. If lighting can improve safety in other areas on campus, it can improve safety around Campus Lake.

THE CAMPUS LAKE LIGHTING PROBLEM represents a specific example of a safety concern that should be addressed by the University. Realistically, budget restraints force administrators such as Tweedy to establish priorities and make difficult decisions.

Ideally, the University would commit enough of its resources to avoid a choice between providing adequate lighting in a potentially dangerous area or letting fate take it course.

The loss experienced by an assault, battery or rape victim makes the $70,000 cost of lighting improvements around Campus Lake seem irrelevant.

Physician lifestyle is misunderstood

Physician lifestyle is misunderstood

THIS LETTER IS IN RESPONSE TO THE EDITORIAL PLACED ON DECEMBER 8, 1993. WE FEEL OBLIGATED TO RESPOND TO THE MISINFORMATION STATED IN THE EDITORIAL PRINTED THEREIN.

Although we are aware that many health care costs are high, the staff at your paper may want to investigate this issue a little more thoroughly before commenting on it. Current research indicates that the current rise in health care costs is NOT in fact due to the cost of physician care. Most health care costs are in fact derived from administrative costs and the high price of pharmaceuticals—over which the practicing physician has no direct control.

The majority of physicians in fact, enter the health care field in order to serve the community and help ill persons, and also for the love of science. It is a common misconception that all physicians are inherently "wealthy" and we feel obligated to point out some facts that the general public may not be aware of. The average medical school student in United States to say will graduate with loans exceeding $80,000. These costs, mind you, are for the graduate education necessary to become a physician and do not include the high costs accrued during the four or more years of undergraduate education. The costs of education of course, accrue interest of anywhere from 5 to 9 percent for many loans, and therefore by the time of graduation, the average doctor has accumulated an astronomical amount of debt.

The graduate of medical school is then obliged to serve a residency of anywhere from 4-13 years (depending upon the specialty), making an average of 19,000 to 30,000 yearly. Only two percent of practicing physicians in the United States earn over two hundred thousand dollars a year. The debt accrued must still be paid and the average graduate must pay school loans, far into the future, at rates averaging several hundreds of dollars a month.

In summary, although physicians often command a high salary, this salary in most cases goes toward the costs of school, exorbitant malpractice fees, licensure fees, equipment costs, etc. So please, before just assuming that physicians have large amounts of money handed to them on silver platters: consider the decades of schooling, stress, 20 hour work days, risks of contracting diseases such as HIV and Hepatitis B.

Practicing pagans preach peace

I have had enough! I am not alone on this campus as a practicing Pagan. I am tired of how the Christians go on about how "satanic" all this is. If they have a problem, let them deal with that radical sect of their religion without making all who would practice non-traditional faiths as "evil"

The Webster's New World Dictionary defines a Witch as 1) a woman who supposedly has supernatural powers granted by a compact with evil spirits or 2) an ugly, shrewish old woman. Another Dictionary gives the definition of pagan as a person who does not acknowledge god in any religion, also defined as a heathen. A heathen is defined as a person or nation that doesn't recognize the god of Judaism, Christianity or Islam.

The term Witch is derived from the Old English verb "wicce" which means "to bend", Pagan comes from the Old Latin, "paganus" or "country dweller". Heathen if Old English "heathen", or one who lives in or upon the heath (wasteland). None of these terms really depicts an evil or bad person or concept.

To refer back to the dictionary definition of "Witch", I am young, fair and open-minded, and certainly not ugly or shrewish. Like the word, witch, I am able to bend, adapt and survive things that might have driven a lesser person mad. I try to understand things from the other side of the fence, but all I see is fear of things that are different. Not all pagans are Wiccans, some follow the old Norse deities, some the Classical Greco-Roman, and others the Celtic path or the Native American of Africa Shamanic traditions. I have not seen any evil arise from following another path. In fact, there are many things that Christianity has "stolen" from the old European pagan faiths.

Thing like: Easter, originally the Celtic celebration of Oestre, goddess of fertility, on the vernal equinox. The figure called Father Christmas was created out of Hearne the Hunter, also called the Hooved God, but in no way related to the Judeo-Christian devil.

I see things around me that are painful, but She has helped me learn to adapt and live in harmony with as much of my world as I can. Open your eyes and look at the world around you and you will see it is all in every one of us, and all around us.

I can only hope that I have clarified a bit of this for you. Walk in the path of peace...

Heart attacks quake linked, doctors say

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — When the Northridge quake struck, the woman was terrified. In less than a minute, the shaking stopped and her Granada Hills house remained intact. But the danger, for the 73-year-old, had not passed. Her heart began to ache. She gasped for air. She knew she was in trouble and dialed 911.

But 911 wasn't there. The telephone lines were down.

Within minutes, the woman died in a manner similar to about 20 other Southern Californians following last week's 6.6 earthquake.

Of the more than 50 earthquake-related fatalities, early reports indicate that most died due to heart attacks, or what doctors call sudden cardiac deaths. The Los Angeles County Coroner's official report is not expected for several weeks.

But the high percentage of cardiac deaths apparently related to the quake does not surprise medical experts who, in recent years, say they have developed an awareness of respect for the power of emotions.

In several of the cases, the victims were clearly reacting to immediate danger.

Fear, panic and terror are among the most gripping of sensations — feelings strong enough that even young, healthy people often experience their hearts racing and breaths shortening in the midst of a traumatic event.

"I know I felt that way," says Dr. Linda Dorn, chief of cardiology at the University of California, Los Angeles, Medical Center.

The response is designed to trigger an increase in strength in healthy individuals, Dorn says. But, "If someone has compromised blood flow to the heart, they may not be able to meet the demands of the heart muscle."

And, it could be that the Northridge quake was poignantly in relation to how much strain hearts can withstand.

On this Monday mornings, statistically, the highest risk period for having heart attack. Early morning hours are described as "normal biological variations, including the blood being more likely to clot in the morning hours."

Frightened children return to school after quake

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Throughout the Los Angeles Unified School District, school bells beckoned 580,000 students to a return to class Tuesday — some arriving before dawn and others near closing time — as their children’s schools reopen after two-hour-long postponements.

In the hard-hit San Fernando Valley, where 36 schools remain closed on Tuesday, attendance was dramatically down, prompting school officials to roam through test cities and shelters pleading with parents to get their children back to familiar classroom surroundings.

Although final attendance figures were not available, administrators estimated that overall attendance was about 80 percent.

But for the most part, school students were in class, many students running a schedule, few teachers missed classes and teachers generally seemed relieved to be among classmates and colleagues.

Kaufman did strike many of the 76 closed schools Tuesday as scores of hopeful but ill-informed drivers showed up with cars in tow, only to be turned away at the gate.

Some criticized the district for making announcements about closures as late as in the day Monday.

Compounding the air-void, about 75 children were based from their homes in South-Central Los Angeles to closed valley schools because either parents or buses drove out too late about the rapidly changing school closure plans.

Overall, district officials were pleased with the quake’s inactivity, day that Superintendent Bill Thompson described as “a very profitable day for our students.”

Transportation coordinators were on hand to offer reassuring advice to anxious youth.

“Some of them are nervous and a little tense,” said psychologist Mary Helfrich of LaSalle Elementary School. “But for the most part they’ve gotten back into their routines... We’re trying to reassure them that they have the skills to get through an earthquake.”

Throughout the district, elementary schoolchildren ran into their teachers’ arms eager for a hug for the district’s unprecedented emergency closure. Others youngsters clung to their mothers’ arms, afraid to be left alone.

“Some tom-agers were so somber in class they simply shook their heads when no one spoke to ask them to share their feelings about the quake.”

Teachers cast aside academics and dealt with the conflicting emotions inside their classrooms. These were the lessons of the day: It’s OK to be afraid. School buildings are safe. What is a tectonic plate? Do you know what price-gouging means?

In other developments: Thompson announced that 13 more schools will open Wednesday morning along with two children’s centers.

He predicted that all but five of the most damaged campuses will open by the end of the week.

While some students will be temporarily transferred to other campuses, Thompson said every effort will be made to keep students at their regular schools.

Kural still Sunday morning pick
The Hartford Courant

If you can’t be with God on Sunday mornings, there’s always Charles Kaufman. Like a sacrament!

Not to fans of "CBS News Sunday Morning" or those who remember its 15th anniversary Feb. 6. But for the most part, the show has morphed "Sunday Morning" since its debut in 1979, has been its faithful parishioners, awaiting service presence whose mellow, mellifluous delivery makes even the most verschiedene.

Of course, "CBS News Sunday Morning" it more than a morning program. It’s one of television’s last bastions of journalism, where artists and musicians are examined instead of promoted, and nature is viewed with silent reverence in video postcards.

"I’ve long since given up categorizing our audience," Kaufman told TV critics in Pasadena, Calif., recently, "I thought it would be all college professors in tweed jackets with patches on the elbows. But we've learned that we’re not all along, which is not worry very much about what audience we have and just do a program that pleases us—which is what we’ve been able to do for 15 years."

It’s not, truth, truth, 59, wasn’t interested when CBS first approached him. "I didn’t really want to do ‘Sunday Morning’ in the beginning,” he said. "I was free and happy out there on the roof."

Kurai’s peripatetic, Emmy-winning “On the Road” pieces— which began on “The CBS Evening News” and later became a series—was about the best assignment he could imagine.

But his bosses at CBS talked him into it, promising he could still travel the world. "I've lost some three or four years," he said. "Still, he doesn’t get out much anymore."

"But for it," Kuralt admitted, "adding, "I would miss it more if I didn’t have the same kind of freedom today. Every since ‘On the Road’ started in 1967, I haven’t had any assignments."

Kuralt CBS sort of lets go where I want to go and do what I want. And they do it for me... Where I am most of the time, which is a very satisfying way to work."

The Beatles fans fail to ‘Let It Be’, demand 60s sound

The Washington Post

With no month’s hot-so-so-studio project drawing many fans, the third two-in-one compilation “The Beatles Anthology” video history, Beatles fans are hoping the latest release, still material, will nestle in its vaults.

There has been nothing “new” since 1970: the famous “Abbey Road” and “Help!” (from concerts in 1964 and 1965). A 1984 “Sessions” album featuring unreleased tracks recorded in 1962–69 before the formation of the Beatles was released for release. A collection of live BBC performances has been unavailable since 1993 but has yet to be issued.

Actually, the vast majority of this material has been available on the bootleg market for years. The Beatles released their albums — before the more recent than they points out. In the fall, his book “Black Bedtime: The Story Behind the Lost Recordings” will address the 1,000 bootleg Beatles albums and CDs that have come, albeit illegally, on the market since 1969.

The official Beatles catalogue runs about 230 pages and has more than 400 photos of Beatles tapes, most of which seem to have been recorded in sessions for another since the group’s break up in 1970.

They include 275 recordings made at the famous “Abbey Road” in 1969, including 36 R&B and rock-and-roll covers never recorded for EMI’s 35 CD-Beats at 30 years” set. The “Korean TV” and “John Lennon” versions of “A Hard Day’s Night” have been issued since the Beatles were together. They are not about a lot of people who can do that.

Indeed. According to researchers, most of us need seven or eight hours of sleep a night but can get by with an hour or so less for short periods. Unlike the short sleepers, we become groggy, tired and prone to making poor decisions when we don’t get our seven or eight hours. Some pr health, but until recently, sleep was seen as a luxury.

“People who require 10 hours have a difficult time getting along. They are chronically sleep deprived,” says Dr. Mark H. Schaller, director of the Sleep Disorder Center at the University of Minnesota, Regional Sleep Disorder Center.

“Most of us are chronically sleep-deprived to some extent. Short sleepers fall into two categories: the small group of naturals and the slightly larger group who have learned to cope with the effects of sleep deprivation.”

“There is no question that there are people whose sleep base is as few as five hours. But they are very rare,” Dr. Neil B. Craig, director of the Sleep Disorder Center at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center in New York. “If you’re one of those who shaves the sleeping hours and suffers from a head syndrome in meetings, you don’t qualify as a natural.

The naturals don’t need alarm clocks, nor do they have to play catch-up on the weekend. At one time, they were referred to as ‘healthy insomniacs.’

Searching for short sleepers, doctors in England document a retired nurse who slept 67 minutes a night.

Canadian researchers discovered a man who consistently slept an hour or less, a trait he realized he had after working as a radar operator during World War II.

Wilkins requires only a little more than that. “Some people set an alarm clock,” he says, “but I’m always awake before it rings.” He sleeps two, sometimes three hours a night, the same as he did while an NFL player for 15 years. He’ll come home after a game, watch ESPN’s “SportsCenter” from 230 a.m. to 7 a.m. for about an hour and finally go to sleep around 4 a.m. “It’s the way I’ve always been.”

That may be wishful thinking, says Berkenstein, because of “Artifacts,” an Italian bootleg that just hit the underground and “has more EMI” a year ahead of it.

The five-CD set, with a full booklet, is “the ultimate bootleg boxed set on the Beatles,” he says.

The set begins with the Beatles’ earliest recordings (at the Quarry Men) and ends with the “Abbey Road” sessions, and includes “the most historically significant takes. Live, demos, TV, radio, BBC, Sullivan,” Berkenstein says. “It’s a set that EMI and Apple and Capitol will be hard-pressed to compete with.”

For collectors and fans, one of the most intriguing aspects of this whole affair is a possible songwriting partnership between Paul McCartney and George Harrison. They actually had been one McCartney/Harrison collaboration but it predates the Beatles and was their very first recording of any kind.
Jackson settles out of court

NOWADAYS - LOS ANGELES — Pop superstar Michael Jackson was scheduled Tuesday to pay a reported $30 million to settle a lawsuit brought by a 14-year-old boy who said the entertainer sexually molested him.

Jackson's attorney, Johnnie Cochran, said the settlement "is in no way an admission of guilt by Michael Jackson.

But prosecutors in Los Angeles said the settlement of the civil case would not thwart their criminal investigation into allegations that the entertainer molested boys.

At a news conference outside the Santa Monica courthouse, Larry Feldman, the boy's attorney, said his client had agreed to drop the suit.

"Michael Jackson maintains his innocence and he withdraws his allegations," Feldman said. "The civil suit will be dismissed in the near future to allow my client to get on with his life."

Jackson's attorney's office is taking Mr. Feldman at his word that the alleged victim will be allowed to testify and that there has been an agreement in the civil matter that will affect cooperation in the criminal investigation.

Under California law, the settlement agreement cannot keep the boy from testifying in the criminal case, but legal experts said it was unlikely he would.

"The settlement probably precludes a criminal indictment stemming from the allegations of this boy, because the boy does not have the benefit from the prosecution, has no reason at this juncture to cooperate and cannot be compelled to cooperate," said Peter Arendella, professor of law at the University of California, Los Angeles.

A recently enacted California law prevents victims of sexual abuse from being forced to testify, he said.

Prosecutors in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, Calif., said they were investigating the singer since August, but no charges have been filed.

The Santa Barbara District Attorney's Office could not be reached for comment.

A hearing in the civil case was to begin Tuesday, and Jackson was scheduled to give a deposition later this month.

Calling the agreement "a form of damage control," Arendella said a public trial would have subjected Jackson to huge publicity. Moreover, he said, "There was no necessary certainty that a trial would have led to a guilty verdict for the plaintiff.

"Given the incredible amount of damage that has already been done, any finding of guilt in this civil suit ... has to be seen as a positive," Arendella said.

He dismissed the notion that Tuesday's settlement would open the doors to other civil claims.

"Mr. Jackson always has been and always will be a target of lawsuit attempts," he said. "This settlement won't change that fact of life.

The lawsuit filed in September accused Jackson, 35, of sexual battery, seduction, willful mis-counsel, intentional infliction of emotional distress, fraud and negligence.

Endorsement companies tell Jackson to 'beat it,' experts say

Thanks to Tuesday's settlement, Michael Jackson's reputation of putting his music career back on track but almost no chance of getting corporate endorsements, according to celebrity market expert Gacectti.

"The settlement saves him more in the entertainment world than with corporate America," said Martin Blackman, whose New York-based Blackman & Raper is a consultancy to corporations that use celebrities. "Had this gone both the civil and criminal routes, you would have seen the pay-off totally destroyed. It is a totally smart business decision to settle."

MCGin th has any illnous about the nature of cil's threight might review the recent history of the American Championship Racing Series. Here was one of the sport's best innovations ever, a 10-race program at tracks from coast to coast to determine the country's best thoroughbreds. It stimulated keen fan interest and earned national television coverage—just the kind of things that any racing czar should want to accomplish.

Yet the owner of Arlington Park wouldn't join the series because he feared it would upstage his track's big race. Executives of Santa Anita decided to pull out of the ACRS because it didn't serve their track's self-interest. The owner of Oaklawn Park

Selig stays for interim

The Sporting News

For months, there have been indications that major league owners have tried to persuade interim commissioner Bud Selig, the Brewers' owner, to take the job permanently.

Although Selig continues to resist that idea, it was no surprise last week when the owners decided to suspend the search for a new commissioner pending settlement of a new basic agreement between the players' union.

There was virtual unanimous agreement among the owners, who despise congressional pressure to hire a commissioner and despite the acknowledged need for such a figure at the game's top, bringing in a new commissioner during the uncertain labor situation would be counterproductive.

So Selig, who has overseen the game since Fay Vincent's ouster 16 months ago, will continue in that role indefinitely. "I will say it again because I've been saying it for months that I will be very happy to be rid of this job," Selig said. His great satisfaction at what we accomplished at the Fort Lauderdale meeting was only tempered by knowing that I will have to continue doing this. However, I really had no choice given the situation."

Harvey Schiller, the head of the U.S. Olympic Committee, and Arnold Weber, the retiring president of Northwestern University, had emerged as the top choices of the commissioner search committee. However, neither generated much enthusiasm among the owners 18 of whom went on record as opposing selection of anyone at this time.

Weber since has withdrawn his name, and Schiller's future seems highly unlikely. Thus, the search would appear to be back to square one. Throughout the process, there have been indications from various sources that Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, has been the owners' prime candidate.

However, Mitchell has been discouraging such speculation because of its possibly negative impact on his senatorial re-election campaign. Carlisle Hill.

Paul Kirk, a highly respected Boss attorney and the former chairman of the National Democratic Committee, is another well-regarded candidate from the prior search.

Harrington seems likely at this point that when the search resumes the new candidate will turn to new candidates with more of a business or marketing background.

One possible candidate could end up being Richard Ravitch, the owners' chief labor negotiator.

Ravitch was instrumental along with many others in forging the compromise on revenue sharing, and he has been given unprecedented powers to control the upcoming negotiations with the players.
Tournament makes season meaningless

Rules change game courses, playing strategy

Newday

Roy Williams was right, the college basketball polls "a ridiculous waste of time." The question is: What now? Maybe, but only for the 99 of us who vote in The Associated Press or CNN/USA Today poll, and the poor, misguided souls who take our opinions seriously. As for the 1%, you, if you find yourself pondering worthy issues such as, "What is wrong with Michigan and St. Louis last week, but retain the same AP ranking?" keep this handy phrase in mind:

Thank goodness this isn't college football.

Of course, there is a price to pay for the basketball season, in which the NCAA Tournament is everything, and powerhouse teams are all but assured a berth before they play their first regular-season game. The downside is that the regular season largely is meaningless, and has become monotone now that parity has become commonplace.

Last week, seven of AP's top 10 teams lost, including Williams' No. 1 Kansas. No problem. College basketball fans, students, check the ESPN schedule, and wait for another outcome.

Wann's the 35-second shot clock supposed to be one of those nicely-richter changes, making it difficult for less talented teams to control tempo? New a theory exists that the elimination of the rule requiring a closely played game to be played at the rate of one point scored in the last five seconds enables teams with solid backcourts to control the game and manipulate situations.

"Game play is without question the No. 1 prerequisite," UConn Coach Jim Calhoun said. "Without the five-second count, good and talented guards can control the game and manipulate situations."

The Huskies qualified, led by freshmen Ray Allen and Daron Shelfer. In fact, the nation is awash in stellar backcourts. UCLA, North Carolina, Arizona, Temple, Texas, Florida Atlantic, Georgia. The Dones once had Bill Russell to swing opponents' shots. Now they have Orlando Smart and Gerald Walker to "manipulate situations?"

Another change. No. 1 teams change, UCLA? The Bruins are No. 1 for the first time in their history, and are the nation's No. 1 this season and have vindicated Coach Jim Harrick, who was under fire this time last year. Now nice. But wait, UCLA visits Stanford and California this weekend.

Next.

The women: Last week's upset bug spread to the women's game, where parity was slower to take hold but is here to stay. Four of the top five in the AP poll lost No. 1 Tennessee, No. 2 Iowa, No. 4 Texas Tech and No. 5 Vanderbilt. The solo survivor was Penn State, which moved from No. 3 in No. 1. Tennessee's loss was to resurrect Rutgers, which moved into the poll at No. 25, its first appearance since the end of the 1990-91 season. Forwards Caroline DeKlooste (16.3 points) and Janell Williams (15.9) lead four starters who average double figures. "If we stay focused and injury free, and get just a little lucky, I think this team can play with anyone in the country," Coach Thomas Grentz said.

Alas, the Lady Knights aren't scheduled to play No. 22 Seton Hall today. It's the Lady Vols' first loss since 1988, when Rutgers toppled its 11th victory in a row over The Hall, 95-90.

The lean familiar Top 25 team is No. 16 Florida International, a pre-season commuter school near Miami that's having its best year since joining Division I in 1987-88, FIU (13-1), which has lost only at Texas Tech, is led by junior point guard Andrea Nagy, a native of Hungary who is averaging 16.3 points and a Division I-leading 11.0 assists.

Last season, assistant Mariana Freeman stubbed at Iowa for Vivian Stringer when Stringer's husband died, and she went 5-0. Now Freeman is in her first year as head coach at less talented Syracuse. The Orange women are 2-14, 0-8 in the Big East.

Around the nation: Texas Pan-American is 9-3 (5-1 in the Sun Belt) after going 5-20 last season. Senior guard Greg Gay, who led Division I with 29.3 points per game in 1992-93, finally has some help, and his average has dropped to 20.5. — Arcadia's Josh Weis' 92-80 win over Prairie View on Monday left Florida Atlantic (6-17) alone among winless Division I teams.

— UNLV Athletic Director Jim Weaver recently attempted to conside disinterested fans with this odd proposal: More than any other town in America, our town is a town of winners," he said.

"We understand that, and we will bring them winners." Yo, Jim, more than any other town in America, Las Vegas is a town of losers. The economy relies on it.

Rio wins: Game of the Past Weekend: Louisville 70, Southern Mississippi 69. Inspired, perhaps, by being left off our list of standout freshmen last week, Deionte Howat made a 16-footer with 6.3 seconds remaining.

Forget about Super Bowl, Patriots playing for trophy more important

The Sporting News

Let's review the week. Jimmy Johnson stuck out his chest in Dallas. People talked about a Joe Montana-like performance. It was a match. The Buffalo Bills got no respect.

Then came Sunday. It's the Cowboys and the Bills in the Super Bowl. The Bills are already seen this game, let's move on ... to 1995 or 1996, because something really worth while could happen in the future. Get ready, folks. The New England Patriots are playing for the Vince Lombardi Trophy w'y soon.

Here's a walk toward realizing their impossible dream this week. Let's look at why Kansas is favored. They have a good coach, a great team, a great season. Kansas has an easy road in the playoffs. But that's not enough. In the NFL, there are three-and-out teams that are capable of being a Super Bowl contender, and the NFL sees on that, the Bills are the real deal.

The scarecrow factor is on the Saluki' side in this clash after SIUC fell to SMU 54-53 in the championship game of the MVC tournament last year. In the past two seasons, Scott and his team have been swept by the Bears losing six times in as many meetings.

Planning to graduate in fall 1994, Baus is not entirely sure of what she will do, but if she has her way she will continue to impact on the world of athletics. "I plan on going into teaching at a high school level," Baus said. "My main goal is to change the curriculum for physical education to be more health and exercise oriented.

Rivalry winner will take second place

By Grant Deedy

Certain rivalries in collegiate athletics never seem to change. Ohio State vs. Michigan, Miami vs. Florida State, UCLA vs. USC and SIUC vs. Southwest Missouri State.

Springfield, Mo., will be the site tonight when the Saluki women's basketball team takes on the SMSU Lady Bears in a Missouri Valley Conference classic.

A jam-packed Hammons Student Center is awaiting the arrival of Saluki head coach Cindy Scott and her team.

SMSU has one of the greatest women's basketball followings in the entire country. They typically draw over 8,000 fans, and they hold a 45-game conference winning streak at home. The SUIC game is always a crowd favorite, although, for reasons beyond SUIC's typically strong team.

"It has always been such a tremendous rivalry," Lady Bear head coach Cheryl Burnett said. "But our fans love to come out and watch Cindy Scott on the sidelines. She's always entertaining and we're expecting a full house.

"The Lady Bear faithful may want to draw at least some of their attention to the actual game tonight. The winner will take sole possession of the MVC's second place spot behind Creighton (6-0).

"SIUC will head into the game with a 13-4 overall record and a 4-1 mark in conference play. Creighton is the only MVC team to trip up the Salukis this season, winning a 63-61 defeat at the Arena on Jan. 15.

"Rocky Ransom is the main offensive threat to her...averaging an MVC-best 17.4 points per game. SMSU's Julie Howard will most likely match Rocky's scoring. Ransom, an assignment Burnett said will be difficult to handle.

"I've always thought of Julie as an incredible player, even before this year," she said. "Rocky has size, speed and can rebound well. We've always had a hard time matching up with her."

Another fact to the Saluki area is the recent emergence of forward Angenee Summrl. She leads the MVC in rebounding (9.2) and scored 17 second-half points in a key win for SUIC over Indiana State last week.

To counter the Saluki attack, the Lady Bears feature one of the conference's top backcourt pairs. Guards Tina Robbins and Melody Howard command this offense. Both players average in double figures for the 9-5, 5-1 Bears, and Howard has led the team in scoring for seven straight games. Robbins and Howard's high-powered scoring attack has been to the Final Four of the NCAA tournament in 1992 and to the Sweet 16 at the end of last year's Lady Bear campaign.

Four years seem short in life of swimmer

By Chris Walker
Sports Reporter

When the SIU's women's swimming and diving team landed Jennifer Baus four years ago, the program hoped to continue to build on its proud past with another good class of recruits.

Four years later Baus stands out as the only member from that class that remains with the team.

Her accomplishments in the conference include four MVP seasons, five school records and an Academic All-American senior season. With those credentials, Baus ventured into a distinct change in college with a new swimming program and a school that satisfied her high standards for academic achievement.

Several things assisted Baus' decision to attend SUIC.

"The coaching staff at that time was very impressive," Baus said. "Plus, the program has been and is very successful."

"I also was aware of the history of the program which was impressive, and I really liked the campus, it's really pretty."

One of the biggest disappointments in Baus' collegiate swimming has been the quickness of her career. She said she hadn't had the time to really enjoy school.

"College goes by so fast," she said. "In the second half of the season, I want to have an excellent time racing and enjoying competing. I am not as concerned with times and performance as I am with having fun, which lets go of some of the stress and anxiety.

"Baus has a good chance to enjoy the rest of her collegiate career. With only three meets remaining before the Eastern Independent Championships, she has plenty of time to prepare for her ultimate goal.

"The Eastern Independents is the back of the day," Baus said. "I would like to make the NCAA's—that is every college swimmers ultimate dream, but it isn't an realistic goal. It is possible if I can make a major step.

Although Baus is finishing her collegiate career on a team with twice as many freshmen and sophomores as upperclassmen, she believes that even when she is gone her presence will be felt because of the time she has spent with the likes."

"You touch every person you swim with," Baus said. "As an upperclassman you have a bigger influence on those below you."

Baus, the only four-year senior on this year's team, has been a helpful guidance to her underclassmen teammates both in and out of the pool, one of her finest traits according to her teammates.

"She is a team leader. Whenever any of the girls have a problem out of the pool, she's there to help."

—Jennifer Bobanic

"She is a team leader," freshman teammate Jennifer Bobanic said. "Whenever any of the girls have a problem out of the pool she's there to help.

"Having been with the program for four years, Baus believes that in some way or another the girls look upon her as some sort of elder.""

"I would hope to be considered a leader by now," Baus said. "My main qualities come with experience. A lot of questions come from freshmen because they have a young outlook."

"Sophomore transfer Shari Witham said Baus is a hard-working athlete who sets a good example for the team because she seems to have the right answer for everything.

"She is kind of the mom of the team," Witham said. "She has a good idea of what to expect out of the meets, and she tries to set a good example in and outside of the workouts.

"Baus said she wants to be remembered as a hard-working athlete.

"I want to be remembered for always swimming."

Drew Cullam lifted himself to a lot of proud memories after making a dream happen over Christmas break.

Cullam, a senior in work force education from Sterling, accomplished some major life goals by breaking the drug-free bench press record in the United States.

The 5-7, 230 pound weightlifter's outstanding day was Jan. 9, at the Oklahoma City Bench Press Nationals. The record was 190 kilograms (418 lbs.) in which Cullam had tied on his first lift.

The record was shattered with a lift of 240 kilograms (529 lbs.) after Cullam had found out that the record was going to be broken. He usually won the Nationals in his weight class of Super Heavyweight. He also had a third lift of 540 pounds which he was unable to lift out.
