Campus environment planning in final stages

MOLLY PARKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

From the construction of new buildings to improved lighting and a clearly marked, dynamic entrance into the campus, a plan to renovate SIUC's historic but deteriorating campus is in its final stages.

The proposed plan includes new signs around campus, lighting, refurbishing older buildings, a signature entrance, space and inventory needs.

"We'll be pulling that all together and presenting it to the Board of Trustees," interim Chancellor John Jackson said.

The finalized plan will be proposed to the Board of Trustees in March, Jackson said.

Civitas, a firm assigned to examining land-use options, was hired by the University last fall to analyze problems on campus and initiate solutions that address weaknesses in the University's land use.

Although expanding growth of the University and the need to fix older buildings will always exist, planning in advance will give the University a goal for the future, said Vice Chancellor for Administration Glenn Poshard.

"Planning efforts made so far in advance will save the campus [money] in the long run," said Poshard, chairman of the Committee Concerning Campus Environment.

In laying out a land-use plan for the campus, Civitas took seven different information sources into account including campus input, observations of the campus, interviews with University leaders and student surveys.

A dot-board survey was used to gather information from students on campus the week of March 20. Large boards were placed in various buildings around campus, listing several different weaknesses of the campus. A large number of blue dots indicated that students were most concerned with parking space and enhancing campus greenery.

The implementation of the plan is expected to span 15-25 years. After the plan is finalized, some issues will be initiated quickly, such as relocating roads and creating a more dynamic entrance into the University, Phil Gatton, University engineer, said.

The entrance from U.S. Highway 51 may be relocated to create an entrance that will better identify the campus, he said.

The cost of the plan will not be set until it has been finalized. The three-member Civitas team cost the University $24,300, but a new contract may be set if they continue to aid in the development of the plan, Gatton said.

A master plan and a schedule will help to prioritize what is most important, and cost issues will be discussed concerning the most important needs first, he said.

In November 1918, World War I ended and life in the United States changed drastically.

Women became more liberal — cutting their hair in a "bob" cut and wearing tubular dresses known as "flappers." Technology began to advance. Prohibition was hotly disputed. Society prospered and people had leisure time to dance to jazz music and buy shares in the stock market without the money to back them.

This relaxed, free life continued in the urban United States until 1929 when the stock market crashed, leading to the Great Depression.

Using this timeline as a framework in creating the "Roaring Twenties and the Great Depression" exhibition, which opens at the University Museum Friday, students from Art 447: Introduction to Museology compared the lives of urban and rural Americans in the 1920s and 1930s. "What they wanted to do is show through two or three decades, what happened to the United States," said Lori Huffman, associate professor and acting director of the University Museum.

Huffman said the assignment gave students the opportunity to engage in a practical

Protesters push for federal involvement in Creal Springs controversy

KATE MCCANN
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Local residents engaged in the embittered Centennial Pipeline controversy are anxiously awaiting word from the federal government that could determine the victor of this year-long debate.

A 26-inch diameter pipeline running from Louisiana through Illinois has generated a nationwide letter-writing war between supporters and opponents. Politicians, environmentalists, farmers and teachers are only a few of those who have joined the growing ranks of grassroots activism in Southern Illinois.

What began as a murmur of protest swelled to a fierce outcry as word spread that Centennial planned to store two million barrels of gas, diesel, and jet fuel inside 17 massive tanks just outside Creal Springs, located about 20 miles north of SIUC. But before tank farm construction can begin, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission must grant permission for a shift from natural gas to petroleum.

Creal Springs resident Marguerite Pulley, whose home is next to the construction sight, worries the pipe conversion will jeopardize the safety of her home and family.

"A 50-year old pipeline won't get any safer," said Pulley, a member of Citizens Against Centennial Tank Farms United Stand (CAC-TUS).

The pipe to be converted and the two pipes running parallel to it have collectively suffered 20 incidents since 1985, and reaped an estimated $2 million in damages, according to documents from the Office of Pipeline Safety.

CMS Energy officials defended the pipeline, saying those numbers do not reflect on its safety.

"That pipe is absolutely safe," CMS spokesman John Barnett said. "We want to cooperate with FERC and we believe that an assessment would be sufficient for the conversion of this pipeline."

A leak or an explosion in a pipeline carrying petroleum poses greater dangers than one which carries natural gas, said Mark Donham, president of the Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists.

"Liquid petroleum is of much more risk to ground water than natural gas," Donham said. The pipeline crosses several bodies of water, including the Lake of Egypt and Crab Orchard Creek, which empties into Crab Orchard Lake. A routine test, called an environmental assessment, will be conducted on the pipe by FERC. But protesters say the assessment is not sufficient when the health and safety of Southern Illinoisians could be at risk, because it is much less thorough than an Environmental Impact Statement.

Creal Springs residents have banded together and are clamoring for an impact statement to be conducted by FERC, in addition to the assessment, citing reasons such as the old age of the pipeline and seismic activity.

According to the National Environmental Protection Act, refusal to conduct an EIS may be experience.

"It allows them to put into practice what they learn in the classroom," she said.

Heidi VonderHeide, one of three students who worked on the exhibition, said they chose the 1920s because the Museum archives had a lot of available artifacts from the period.

VonderHeide, a senior in visual communication from Centralia, said the project was a great opportunity to see the difference between the rich urban Americans and the poverty-stricken rural areas.

"You really got a sense of knowing the depression ... and poverty," she said. "You got to know the history and some of the things that went on."

VonderHeide said the group did most of its research on the Internet at Morris Library and through personal interviews.

Studying the "Jazz Age," Huffman said they found art and sculptures created by Southern Illinoisians through the Work Progress Administration, one of three programs developed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to increase job opportunities.

The show will exhibit a lithograph, "Fire in the Barn," written in 1938 by Thomas Hart Benton and a walnut-carved pioneer sculpture by Fred Myers, a local artist. Huffman said as a part of the WPA program, the University Museum obtained more than 20 historic animal and figure carvings by Myers.

"It was the beginning of the federal government supporting the arts," she said.

Huffman also noted that the Giant City Lodge was built by the Civilian Conservation Corps, a program that hired men to work around the United States to improve bridges, parks and roadways.

"This was probably the most successful because it built on existing programs," she said.

The exhibit will display a variety of antiques from the era, including clothing from the Robert Ward collection from Southern Illinois, a Marion family and the University Museum collection.

"The majority of the items are going to be from local families," Huffman said.

On display will be a wooden and brass propeller from one of Charles Lindbergh's mail planes he flew between St. Louis and Chicago and a cabinet photograph made by the Brunswick Co. in the 1920s.

Clothing on display will include an Army uniform worn during World War I, a Navy dress uniform from World War II, a beaded flapper dress and a women's day dress.

The exhibition will lead up to World War II, when the Great Depression came to an end. During that time the economy stabilized and people gained employment.

"[World War II] pretty much gave our economy a boost, and that is what ended the Great Depression," Huffman said.

Out of towners get the double whammy

Students from outside Carbondale may incur higher ATM fees using out-of-town banking institutions

CHRISTIAN HALE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Maintaining a budget with the rising cost of living can be difficult for any college student, especially if money is accessed through an Automatic Teller Machine.

The Illinois legislature received a report on Tuesday from the Chicago-based activist group Coalition for Consumer Rights regarding charges incurred by using ATMs. The group wants the state to ban fees ATM owners charge patrons of other banks who withdraw money from their ATMs.

When a student moves to Carbondale to attend SIUC, accessing money from a hometown bank through local ATMs can bleed extra cash from the change purse.

The total charge, commonly referred to as the "double whammy" fee, consists of a fee to use the local ATM and a fee charged by their hometown bank.

Laura Clayton, a junior in English from St. Charles, said she recently opened an account at a local bank after continually being charged an extra fee for accessing her own money.

"It made me mad," Clayton said. "My roommates and I just don't think it's fair that we would get charged so much just for getting money out of our own accounts."

Laura Jones, senior teller at SIUC Credit Union's east branch, said patrons from other financial institutions who use the credit union's ATM are charged a fee of $1.50, but also incur a charge from their own bank.

Jones said it works in the reverse, as well. If a credit union member uses another bank, she said the credit union will charge a $1.50 fee on top of the other bank's fee.

For banks that are out-of-network, or not connected to a bank's or banking association's ATMs, a higher "double whammy" fee can be incurred. Some of these fees can reach as high as $5 or more for one transaction.

"It's a marketing thing, I think," Jones said. "We charge you when you use someone else's ATM because we want you to use ours."

Jones said there are credit union customers residing outside of Carbondale who do not have access to the credit union's ATMs. She said requests have been made to place new ATMs, but costs must be considered to expand coverage and maintain up-keep.

Carbondale area ATM fees range from $1 to $2 per transaction at bank or credit-union owned ATMs. Independent ATMs can charge as much as $3 per transaction, charging a higher fee since they are more apt to reside out-of-network.

Clayton said the little bit of money that is charged cuts into a student's budget.

"It's one of those things where you just can't please everybody," Jones said. "We don't feel that we need to charge [more than $1.50 per transaction], probably because we are a credit union and not a bank or a major institution."

Moot court getting a new look

Frank Bietto donation main funding for trial classroom

BRENDA CORLEY
DAILY EGYPTIAN

There is an air of excitement in the School of Law as students and administration await the completion of Moot Court from renovations.

The renovations will give the court a make over, which previously lacked the appeal of traditional courtrooms, said dean of the School of Law, Thomas Guernsey.

Main funding for the courtroom is provided by Frank Bietto, in whose honor the court will be named.

Bietto was born and raised in Southern Illinois and died last year, leaving $400,000 to the School of Law.

"[He] obviously must have liked what the School of Law was doing," Guernsey said.

Moot Court, located in the Lesar Law Building, has not had any major improvements since the building was constructed in 1981.

Renovations for Moot Court began last November and the basic structure will be done by April. But with the added technological advances, the court will not be available for use until fall.

When completed, the court will have a more formal look with cherrywood benches and cherrywood jury and witness boxes. The aisle will be down the center, like most courtrooms, instead of along the sides as it was previously.

Guernsey is hoping with a new look to the courtroom, a digital projector, a new sound system and state of the art technology, the modernized Moot Court will attract real trials, not only mock versions.

"Before it looked more like a classroom," he said. "But now that it will be designed more realistically, I have already talked with a local judge to see about holding real trials here."

Moot Court is used for many trial classes where a courtroom is needed, along with classes that do not require a courtroom.

Students in such classes shared feelings of court's lack of zeal compared to real-life courtrooms and are excited about the court's future appearance.

"Non-realistic" and "out-of-date" are some of the words used by Sarah Moskovitz to describe the courtroom.

"There will be outlets at your table so when you plug in your lap tops, people won't be tripping over cords and pulling your computer off your table which used to happen all the time," said Moskovitz, a second-year law student from Rock Island.

With the possibility of Moot Court being used for real trials because of its new design, Moskovitz recognizes other benefits.

"Moot Court is used for competitions every year and now with its future new look, I think it will reflect well on the school," she said.

Well-known SIUC chemist dies

ANDREA PARKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Richard T. Arnold, a former SIUC chemistry and biochemistry chair, died Jan. 16 after a fall in his home the previous week.

Arnold, 87, spent his last moments in Evanston Hospital. He is survived by his two children.

Though Arnold has passed away, he is still remembered by his fellow chemistry colleagues.

Cal Meyers, director for the Meyers Institute, has conducted an annual Arnold Lecture since Arnold's retirement in 1982. The lecture focuses on chemistry in honor of the professor. His last visit at the University was about six years ago, when he attended the lecture.

Meyers has known Arnold

Among Arnold's many honors are the American Chemical Society's Award in Pure Chemistry in 1949 and Honorary Doctorate of Science degrees from Northwestern University and SIU. Arnold was active in civic affairs, University and departmental committees and published more than 100 scientific papers.

Strike or accept: All faculty must decide their future

The administration tossed out its final offer to the Faculty Association Friday, and now an anticipatory stillness has settled over the players in the game. After almost a year wrangling over the same issues, it all comes down to next week's Faculty Association general membership meeting — will they accept it or will they strike?

The stakes are high. Either decision could be damaging to the University. Whether the Association votes in favor of a contract they think is unacceptable, or rejects it and strikes, there could be long-term ramifications. While departmental representatives voted 21-16 in favor of the offer last week, the administration is still holding its breath to see if the general membership meeting Feb. 1 will produce the same results.

The two-year proposal offered by the administration includes an average 5 percent raise per faculty member for the first year and 6 percent for the second year. It also proposes forming a joint committee with the faculty to review lost lines. But faculty aren't sure this is enough. Faculty Association President Morteza Daneshdoost said the final offer does not "resolve the question of the accountability of faculty positions nor does it catch up SIUC to its peers as soon as possible."

By now, most of the members of the Association have made up their minds about what to do. What's left is the Feb. 1 meeting at which the decision to accept or reject the offer will be made. Attendance is expected to be high, and it is absolutely crucial that it is. About 700 tenured and tenure-track faculty exist on this campus, and a little more than 50 percent of that number belongs to the Association. That 50 percent will make the decision for the entire faculty population.

If the entire Association does not attend, the results could be skewed. But if each and every member shows up, it is more likely there will be across-the-board representation from every department.

Faculty members who do not belong to the Association also have an important obligation in the coming week. While they cannot vote because they don't belong to the Association, they still make up about 50 percent of the bargaining unit. Those professors have a responsibility to contact Association members and let them know how they feel about the offer. Inundate them with calls, write letters, make sure union members have a feeling for what non-union members think.

The Association is making this decision for every tenured and tenure-track faculty member on this campus. Next week's vote will determine whether the battle ends here or continues onto the next level. The DAILY EGYPTIAN understands that some faculty have been disenchanted with current union leaders, or the negotiation process. But that shouldn't stop them — the decision that will affect so many must not be made by just a few.

Professor urges colleagues to reject administration's offer

DEAR EDITOR:

I want to call on my colleagues to say NO to the contract proposal made by the Board of Trustees. I see no purpose in accepting a proposal which gives us only what the state has or is expected to appropriate. The board's claim that it is 5.5 percent and 6.5 percent is false. New money is NOT needed to provide promotion increases. When a professor retires or leaves for some other reason there should be more than enough salary difference between what he was paid and what the new assistant professor is paid to cover the promotion increases of an assistant professor and an associate professor. The number of professors has not been increasing. The board has been clearly using this pot of money to increase the salary of the administrators above the rate which faculty have received. When an administrator is promoted to a new and higher level, money isn't taken from the salary pool for the other administrators. In every business except SIUC promotions are not treated as new money but redistribution of existing money from senior personnel retiring and to junior personnel moving into their positions. The faculty lines issue has been totally abandoned to the good will of the board. It was their decision to slash faculty positions and they can not now be trusted to change their behavior. TL's is a VERY BAD DEAL and I call on my colleagues to JUST SAY NO.

Archer unhappy with columnist's portrayal of USG

DEAR EDITOR:

I just wanted to take some time and clear up a few things that some may have taken the wrong way in the recent column about ARCHER FOR CONGRESS.

In the column there were several ideas that many seemed to have taken in the wrong way. First of all, the column was a satire and meant to be that. Anyone who really wants to find out about who I am or where I stand on issues should come and talk to me.

In the column, the margin that I won the last USG election by was called a landslide and then called a spin-on-words. The actual truth is that more people voted in the last election than they have in numerous elections before. Almost 200 more people last year voted than the year before. That is where the context of my quote came from. I have always said that more students should vote and I will always believe that.

The next statement taken out of context was about me saying that 95 percent of the senators were at a particular meeting. Anyone who follows USG knows that there has been a huge problem with senators not showing to meetings. These absences were causing a severe problem with anything getting done because of a lack of a quorum. This is why the Internal Affairs Committee decided to start removing senators for not showing. Once these senators were removed, we could go about our business. The 95 percent that I was referring to was the number of people at the meeting who were seated senators, which in fact we only had one missing, so I figured that came to about 95 percent.

As far as the name that was given to last semester, anyone with any knowledge of the history of USG can see that, although USG may not have set any land speed records for life changing things at SIUC, the time was well used. We did discuss numerous ideas affecting SIUC students and we even acted on such things as supporting the Faculty Association. My main concern for last semester was cleaning up the credibility of USG that seems to have been tarnished in the past. Though some may disagree about my personal life, as the president of USG, I have done my job very well. Know that USG has taken care of a lot of old stagnant business that was passed to us from the past; this semester we are ready to move forward. We have a list of changes that we are going to try to accomplish.

All in all everyone needs to remember what is real and what is meant as humor. Mr. Marcum, to my knowledge, has never been to a USG meeting, has never spoken with any of the reporters that have covered USG in the past concerning some of his statements, and has never spoken with me. However, I would like to commend Mr. Marcum on his wit on the lyrics of his song. I am currently trying to get one of my friends to record the entire song with your lyrics. Thanks for the good laugh.

Wal-Mart isn't that bad, OK it is

I had a professor once who threatened to fail any student he saw shopping at Wal-Mart. It wasn't anything he held against blue-collar entrepreneurs or the American working class. He said he just could not ever support a business that had single-handedly ruined American architecture by introducing the all-purpose, warehouse department store as a socially acceptable form of commerce. According to him, the only real way to shop was at specialty stores with some type of nostalgic atmosphere. I was never quite sure if he was kidding or not about flunking us, so I clung to the excuse that he would never catch me because, after all, what would he be doing there in the first place?

I would challenge this professor, however, to teach me how to survive without Wal-Mart in this day and age. A combination student-waitress, I have enough problems stretching the almighty buck to cover my basic needs. Perhaps someday I can afford luxuries like vegetables and oil changes, but in the meantime, I would be lost without Sam's Choice generics and "falling prices." And besides, while my professor described it as "disgusting," I was pretty delighted to discover I could purchase Ramen Noodles, contact lenses and an ink cartridge all in the same trip.

I mean, isn't America considered a "melting pot," marrying diverse cultures in much the same way that Wally World marries frozen foods with snow tires? And, ironically, the money I save at Wal-Mart pays my tuition, which supplies his classroom, and my state taxes, which fund his salary.

I think the real problem here is not America losing its identity, but individual Americans searching for their personalities. Sure, in a large city I could set aside an entire afternoon each week to scour the streets of mom-and-pop grocery stores and local co-ops for overpriced produce and a sense of self-worth. I doubt, however, that many of my classmates have the time or resources for this, either. We are too busy writing essays about the demise of creative design in our society.

I suppose in 20 years, when my days of college poverty have been long forgotten, and I have the means to support a more expensive yuppie lifestyle, I will find the real meaning of life among hand-packaged bags of oats and the scent of fresh, chopped parsley. In the meantime, my microwaveable pot pie is getting cold.

So don't cry for me, Sam Walton. The truth is, I never left you. I was in aisle five buying printer paper for my essay on warehouse architecture.

Academic coordinator cheering for athletes

Kristina Therriault provides support services for student-athletes

CARLY HEMPHILL
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Each semester, Andrea Turner seeks help from Kristina Therriault in coordinating her classes and making sure she meets NCAA eligibility to play golf.

Therriault, the academic coordinator in the athletic department, helps students such as Turner, a junior in public relations from Marion, by providing support services for athletes.

"We want them to have the best opportunity as individuals here," Therriault said.

The Athletic Department focuses on services in academics and athletics, along with personal, social and career development. Student-athletes know that Therriault, who has been the academic coordinator for six years, does everything she can to help them in these areas.

"She just looks out for everyone," Turner said.

Although Therriault helps the athletes in all areas, she stresses the importance of academics first. Because SIUC has a 2.0 grade point average requirement for all athletes to be eligible to compete, these services are helpful in maintaining their grades.

Several services are offered, such as tutors and a study table, which student-athletes are required to attend at least four hours a week their first semester at SIUC.

Progress slips are another way Therriault and student-athletes monitor their standing in classes. These slips, which are sent out week six and 12 of each semester, provide Therriault with information to decide if the student-athlete needs help. If the grade report is B- or lower, she then meets with the student-athlete to find out the problem and provide tutoring or other resources.

"She makes sure that you get it taken care of right away," said Jenna Meckler, a member of the swim team.

Therriault stresses that although she monitors academics and provides services to help the student-athletes, it is up to them to be responsible to take action. Most student-athletes use the services, but there are still some who do not fulfill the NCAA requirements each semester.

After four baseball players failed to meet the GPA requirements and were declared ineligible for competition last week, Therriault said this is one thing that makes her job frustrating.

"It's never easy to see someone not make it because you want everyone to be successful," Therriault said.

Therriault became involved with student-athletes while receiving her master's degree in sports administration at Central Michigan University.

There, she worked with the academic advisor and was involved with athletes. She then had an internship at the University of Kentucky working with the men's basketball and football teams, returning to SIUC in 1995.

Therriault has an open-door policy with the student-athletes, which starts with recruits and continues once they are finished with their athletics. Students continually seek advice from Therriault on NCAA rules, graduation, GPA requirements and career decisions.

"They know that we're in the corner of the student-athlete 100 percent," she said.

Student-athletes, such as Turner and Meckler, know that Therriault is important in helping them with their academic and life decisions.

"It's her job, but she cares and that makes a big difference," Turner said.

modus operandi.

"I want to get in and mess around with it," agrees Goode's mentor Gary Kolb, an SIUC cinema and photography professor. "I see a playfulness tinged with a kind of melancholy in her work."

Goode hopes her emotionally charged pieces will "lift a lot of veils" and help provoke insight on the stilled life moments her camera captures.

One of her newest pieces — a giant shadowbox that resembles the sheared-off side of an apartment building — turns photos into dollhouse-like surroundings.

"I just moved into a new apartment and I think about what goes on in the other rooms — how we're all in the same boat but still different," she explains.

Photo sculptures like Goode's stem from art experiments forged in the late '60s by the mad scientists of the Dada era. They played with creating new syntheses of photography and other art forms.

"Photos are so good at replicating the world, but they're two-dimensional," says Kolb. "3D brings the photograph closer to the real world — almost like constructing a virtual reality."

Goode eventually wants to dabble in political activism, encouraging tolerant lifestyles like veganism. She would also like to create compact disc covers, marrying a love of music to her art.

But for now, Goode is still playing. "Art isn't just to be looked at," she says. "It's something to live."

ALMANAC INFO

"RED ALMANAC" WILL BE ON DISPLAY UNTIL FEB. 24 AT LONGBRANCH COFFEEHOUSE, 100 E. JACKSON ST.

There's an old house on Chautauqua Road with a rotted floor and a basement swamped with rainwater. The paint flakes off the walls like dandruff, but the light that streams through the broken windows seduces Kelly Goode every time.

"It's about light in that house," says the SIUC graduate and photographer. "Old houses have this quiet loudness — it feels like I'm knowing life better by visiting its aftermath."

Old houses like the condemned Chautauqua residence helped inspire Goode's new art exhibit, "Red Almanac," on display at the Longbranch Coffeehouse, 100 E. Jackson St., until Feb. 24.

"Red Almanac" — a wild mish-mash of photography and photo-sculpture with found objects — spans 18 months in Goode's life like a journal.

"I'm very young and I'm just trying to figure out my own pathway," says the 22-year-old Danville native. "An almanac is a guide to that pathway."

Goode's collection ranges from "straight" photos — snapshots made with a plastic camera — to eclectic pairings of wood, fabric, silkscreen, metal and photographic images.

Many of the photos use wacky developing methods to get surreal washes of color in yellow tints or cool blues.

Goode developed two of her prints in a fly-by-night darkroom she pitched in her garage last summer. She battled 95-degree heat, using a simple light bulb to expose her negatives before brushing them with developer by hand. And hands-on is Goode's preferred a violation of federal law. The law says an impact statement should be conducted when the proposed project affects the environment through the release of toxic substances or the effects of the project are "highly controversial."

"If you balance the criteria for regulations you will clearly see the conversion of this pipeline is a major federal action," Donham said.

The impact statement, which would take about two years, would look at alternate means to bring petroleum to the midwest and east coast if the project was found to be hazardous. Also, unlike an assessment, it directly involves the public by opening the issue for public comment in the federal register.

Pressure from politicians such as Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson and Michigan Gov. John Engler urging FERC to approve conversion immediately, has CACTUS members worried their request for an EIS will be discarded.

Vice Chancellor for Administration Glenn Poshard is among those who have petitioned FERC for the impact statement.

"I've been dealing with environmental issues and job issues in this area for 30 years," Poshard said. "I'm not opposed to the project, I just want it to be deemed safe to the maximum. Something of that magnitude needs to go a step further than just an environmental assessment."

The EPA has also written FERC advising them the Centennial project may warrant an impact statement. Some of the reasons cited by the EPA include the "potential impact" to state-listed threatened or endangered species and the effect an accident could have on the Shawnee National Forest.

Mapping out campus

JENNIFER WIG
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The SIUC campus looks like a pirate's dream.

Thirty-three X's, each 10-foot in diameter, whiten the pavement across campus. Each X is a marking point for a digital campus map in the works by the University Physical Plant.

The Physical Plant hired the services of two companies to assist in creating a digital map of the main campus. The X's were painted during Christmas break by Berns, Clancy and Associates of Urbana to distinguish certain points on campus. Because the white lines are temporary, 16 concrete markers were also placed in various locations for later use with the global positioning system.

Monday, Aerial Mapping Services of Champaign took photographs of the campus from an airplane, using the "X's" as reference points.

The pictures will later be digitally combined into one 3-D campus map for the school's website, allowing users to click on locations and discern elevations and information about buildings, sewers, tunnels and infrastructure.

Phil Gatton, supervising architect at the Physical Plant, said that with this map, future excavation projects will be easier.

"We won't have to do as much surveying," he said.

Although the photography segment of the project cost about $16,000, Gatton estimates the project will total $50,000 by its completion two years from now.

The map project has been a Physical Plant priority since last year and includes about 1,500 acres of the main campus.

Aerial Mapping Services has done similar projects for the University of Illinois in Springfield and Champaign and has taken photographs of Millikin University in Decatur.

Don't spring for a deal; best rate not always best plan

JOHN REID
DAILY ILLINI (U. ILLINOIS)

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (U-WIRE) — At least Macaulay Cullin was left at home. Some students this spring break will be left stranded in airports or even foreign countries by bogus travel companies advertising cheap rates and amazing deals.

Jack E. Mannix, certified travel counselor and president of the Institute of Certified Travel Agents, warned students in a press release about blindly signing a travel contract.

"Sometimes searching for the best deal can land students far from paradise and cost them more than they bargained for," Mannix said. "That's why it's so important they proceed with caution as an educated consumer."

The Institute of Certified Travel Agents offered guidelines for students who plan to purchase a travel package for spring break. Important tips included working with a certified travel associate or counselor, doing a background check on the travel company and reviewing the fine print of the documents.

"The first thing I would say is to get everything documented, from their first meeting with the agent to the contract, and be sure to read everything," said Alexis Rochefort, institute public relations specialist. "When I was in college, I actually experienced what it's like to be scammed. Now I'm working on keeping others from becoming victims of that."

In college, Rochefort signed a contract for a trip to Cancun for $350, she said.

"The wonderful hotel I saw in the brochure didn't even exist, and I had no place to stay," Rochefort said.

Companies who scam students often exist only for as long as they can make money and then disappear without a trace. Additionally, students who are scammed have little legal recourse available to them, especially if they sign some type of disclaimer.

"If the people scamming students are good scammers, there will be no recourse," said Tom Betz, attorney for Student Legal Services. "They open shop and close shop really quickly, and they're out of sight before they can be tracked."

Betz said some telltale signs to look for are whether the company has a street address or just a post office box, which indicates it might disappear quickly, and whether they can give you the name and address of the hotel they have booked. He said whereas legitimate businesses always rely on repeat customers, the scam artists rely on students with very little experience traveling on their own.

"If the deal looks too good to be true, it probably is," Betz said. "Students are sometimes too embarrassed to ask the really simple questions that need asking, and that's how they get into trouble."

As a precaution, Rochefort stressed the importance of travel insurance. Not only is it a source of peace of mind, but a way to cover students if they find themselves stranded, she said.

"Travel insurance is $30," Rochefort said. "A little security for $30 ... just do it. You'll be glad you did."

U. Chicago Law prof may serve in Bush administration

REBECCA JARVIS
CHICAGO MARNOON (U. CHICAGO)

CHICAGO (U-WIRE)— Kenneth Dam, professor of American and foreign law at the University of Chicago Law School, has been nominated by President George W. Bush to serve as deputy Treasury secretary. Described as a surprise choice by some media pundits, Dam is the recipient of high praise from his colleagues at the Law School.

"He's enthusiastically qualified," said Douglas Baird, professor in the Law School.

Dam, who joined the faculty in 1960, left for a short period to work with the Nixon administration as assistant director of the Office of Management and Budget, where he coordinated national security and international affairs. He departed the assistant directorship to become executive director of the Council on Economic Policy in 1973 and undertook U.S. domestic and international economic policy.

Dam returned to the University of Chicago in 1974 and took over as provost from 1980 to 1982—a position that Baird likens to working as the "chief operating officer of a billion dollar corporation."

Law professor Cass Sunstein applauds President Bush for the decision: "A big bravo on this count, for the new president," Sunstein said.

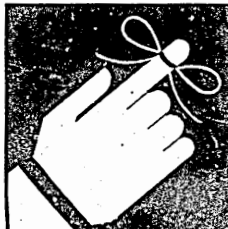

Dam left the University again in 1982 and went to work for Reagan as deputy secretary of State. He then went on to manage financial matters for IBM and in 1992, served as president and CEO of the United Way. He reorganized the United Way after a scandal and worked with its head, Elaine Chao, who President Bush recently nominated to fill the position of labor secretary.

"He knows how to run complex bureaucracies," Hutchinson said.

Dam's background is not on Wall Street — experience often considered to be a prerequisite for offices in the Treasury. But it is precisely that Dam is not a product of Wall Street that Baird describes as "a plus."

"Someone can't hold the positions he's held while being confined to Wall Street," he said.

Dam is presently in Washington D.C. awaiting confirmation of his nomination.

After a fast start, Northwestern 'surprised' by nose dive

EMILY BADGER
DAILY NORTHWESTERN
(NORTHWESTERN U.)

EVANSTON, III. (U-WIRE) — On Dec. 1, the Northwestern women's basketball team grabbed a come-from-behind overtime win against the Pennsylvania Quakers in the Roger L. White Invitational.

The dramatic victory gave the Wildcats a 3-1 record and marked NU's best start since the 1996-97 season -- the last time NU finished above .500.

What started as a robust .750 winning percentage has steadily dwindled since the first two weeks of the season. In 13 games since the invitational, the Cats (4-13, 0-7 Big Ten) have won only once.

The Cats' major concern is no longer keeping with the top dogs in the Big Ten, but staving off the embarrassing losses. After dropping their last three games by 57, 42 and 32 points, expectations are definitely in need of a readjustment.

"There's a lot of doubting ourselves," NU center Tami Sears said. "I've doubted myself on offense a lot lately. That comes along with getting blown out in games. I think anyone would lose confidence if you lost games by the points we're losing by."

Although the about-face largely can be chalked up to stiffer Big Ten competition, the Cats are still searching for signs of the potential they exhibited at the start of the season.

In Sunday's 79-47 loss to Minnesota, the Golden Gophers defied all percentages by scoring on their first eight possessions. They finished with a 60 percent shooting mark from the floor.

So when you're shooting 30 percent and losing by 40 points on a regular basis, where can you possibly turn for inspiration?

"I always think of our football team," Sears said. "They were in a position of accepting losing for many years. Losing wasn't a big deal, and sometimes I think that's the position we're in. We just want to give up on everything."

Task force focuses on new pool at Washington

NISON SIMONTOV
THE DAILY (U. WASHINGTON)

SEATTLE (U-WIRE) — Five months after the swimming program at the University of Washington was nearly cut, hopes of creating a better swimming facility for the Huskies is very much alive.

Athletic Director Barbara Hedges cut the swim program on July 26, 2000, citing "inadequate facilities" as the main reason. After a substantial outcry from the swimming community, the program was reinstated a month later. However, Hedges issued a condition that a swimming task force needed to be created to improve the current facilities, so the program could be up to par with the rest of the country.

The plan centers around the construction of a new pool. The UW's current facility, Husky Pool, was built in 1937 and is simply too small. The pool has only six lanes and doesn't contain a single diving platform. While an Olympic-sized pool measures 50 meters in length, Husky Pool is only 25 meters.

For the time being, Chip Lydum, assistant athletic director for facilities and events, is looking at the current pool and brainstorming ideas about how to enhance it. The expansion of Husky Pool to include more lanes and a diving well is one of the possibilities.

"The only thing we're [focused on now] is to look at the existing pool, the other things are simple brainstorming and may never be pursued," Lydum said. "We will also ask the design team to consider the feasibility of a dive team. It's difficult to compete with the very best swim programs when you're already all those points short before you ever start."

The project is extremely costly, estimated at $20 million, and the fundraising has not yet started in earnest.

"There are so many people who want to give back to the sport and see it prosper. I really see the [fundraising] possibilities as unlimited," Wender said.

Wender envisions the new pool as something from which the whole community can benefit. The closest premier swimming facility is the King County Aquatic Center at Federal Way, which is 30 miles from campus.

Proposed economic package will pay for new stadium turf

Financial plans for new softball facilities, Astro Turf to be released Friday

JOSEPH D. JOHNSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN

SIU's gridiron warriors will have a new battle field to go to war on if a financial package to be presented at the Feb. 8 Board of Trustees meeting goes through.

Details will be released on Friday regarding the package, which will pay for a new artificial playing surface for McAndrew Stadium, according to interim Chancellor John Jackson. The package will also fund new softball facilities to comply with the ongoing Title IX investigation.

"It has been needed to be done," said Assistant Athletic Director Nancy Bandy regarding the replacement of the turf.

Jackson also saw the urgency in getting the proposal made.

"The expected life on the [old] turf was 10 years and we've used it for 13," Jackson said.

The cost range to pay for new turf could be anywhere from $750,000 to $1 million, according to University Engineer Phil Gattton, who talked to the Daily Egyptian last September.

When Athletic Director Paul Kowalczyk first acknowledged he was working toward bringing new turf to McAndrew last fall, there was some controversy because of the plans to replace the entire stadium within the next five years.

Kowalczyk countered criticism of turf replacement ideas by saying that the turf could be moved to the new stadium when it is built.

"I'm bound and determined to have something done," Kowalczyk told the Daily Egyptian in September. "You can't push it off and wait until something happens with the stadium."

The Title IX complaint alleges discrimination against SIU female student-athletes with regard to athletic facilities. The softball program remains without a clubhouse, a dressing room or bathroom, all of which the baseball program possesses. The new financial package would fund new facilities that would assist SIU in attaining Title IX compliance.

HOK, a Kansas City consulting firm that specializes in designing sports facilities, was hired by Jackson last year to gather ideas for a new stadium.

Salukis blow 17-point lead, lose 57-54

Bradley beats SIU fourth straight season in Peoria

ANDY EGENSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The SIU men's basketball team cannot get anything easy.

Sophomore guard Kent Williams' bucket two minutes into the second half gave SIU a 39-22 lead. But it was Williams who could not convert on three shot opportunities in the final 30 seconds, giving SIU a 57-54 loss to Bradley University Wednesday night in Peoria.

SIU has lost four straight games to Bradley in Carver Arena and have not won there since the 1996-1997 season.

The Salukis (9-9, 3-4) scored the first 11 points of the contest and eventually extended the lead to 17 points in the second half. But Bradley inched their way back into the ballgame to make it a nail biter in the closing minutes.

Bradley's Jerome Robinson hit a 3-pointer just under a minute left, giving the Braves a 55-54 lead, their first lead of the game. On the ensuing possession, Williams missed a six-footer in the lane and was knocked to the floor while the Salukis missed two tip-in attempts to regain the lead.

After a pair of free throws from Robinson to extend the lead to three, the Salukis had one last chance, but Williams missed a, open 21-foot look that would have sent the game into overtime.

"We had shots down the stretch. You can't get better shots," said SIU basketball head coach

Bruce Weber on his post game radio show. "Even the three at the end, you couldn't ask for a better look. Our kids just couldn't execute."

Robinson, who led the Braves with 19 points, scored Bradley's last five points leading to the three point win. SIU was outscored 39-22 in the second half.

A win against Bradley would have given the Salukis their third straight win and fueled the momentum for an upcoming home contest versus Drake University Saturday.

But blowing a 17-point second half lead will be the factor that gives Weber headaches. "We didn't finish it and it's a shame. It's really a shame because we played good," Weber said.

Senior Abel Schrader finished the game with 15 points, all coming off 3-point field goals. Schrader canned his third 3-pointer with 6:50 remaining in the first half, giving SIU a 23-9 lead.

SIU shot 39 percent from the field in both losses to Bradley this season, the last coming in a 76-65 loss at home Jan. 10.

"We got to start making a play when a play is needed to be made," Schrader said. "Kent is our go-to-guy and I'd give him the ball every time in that situation and let him go. Next time, I guarantee you that he knocks it down."

Williams followed Schrader with 12 points and delivered on a big bucket 10 seconds after Robinson tied the game with just more than one minute remaining.

The Braves outscored SIU 15-3 from the free throw line. Bradley senior forward Eddie Cage once again was the Saluki nemesis, dropping 10 second half points to lead the Braves to their seventh straight home victory.

"Seniors win games, and they did tonight," Weber said.

Smith's frustrating career comes to a close

Fractured tibia ends career of injury-prone senior

JAVIER BERNA
DAILY EGYPTIAN

When she arrived in Carbondale for the 1997-98 season, Courtney Smith was looked to — along with her recruiting class — as the savior of the SIU women's basketball program.

She was 1997's Ms. Illinois Basketball and was named USA Today's Player-of-the-Year in Illinois, which she captured by leading Carlyle High School to two consecutive Class A state championships, so the stakes were set high from the start.

But things didn't turn out the way Smith had planned, and last Thursday, the senior in management information systems found out that she had played her last college game versus the University of Tennessee-Martin on Dec. 9. An MRI revealed that she had fractured her tibia, an injury that would not heal in time to play again this year in her final season.

"I don't know if I can even put it to words — how I feel," Smith said. "I'm frustrated, confused ... every year something has to happen. Why is it happening to me? Where did I go wrong along the road? I'm angry and disappointed that I'll never play again."

The injury was nothing new to Smith. Her basketball career, which never took off at SIU, was riddled by injury after injury starting with her sophomore year.

After averaging 5.5 points and 3.6 rebounds her freshman season, the season concluded on the operation table for her ankle, which was originally injured her senior year at Carlyle. Her sophomore year was marked by an operation on her knee, but she returned that season averaging six points and 4.1 rebounds per game in 22 games played. Last season, Smith was limited to 16 games because of the injury.

This year, Smith remained optimistic that she would finish her career on a high note, but the season-ending news came after logging only 38 minutes in five games in which she averaged .6 points and two rebounds a game.

Angie Krebs, Smith's basketball coach at Carlyle High School, remembers coaching Smith in high school. "Honestly, it was like a dream come true to have her because she was not looked to as the group that was going to turn this program around," Smith said. "And when I look back now, I am very hurt at what has become of it since we've gotten here, and what little impact we have made."

Maria Niebrugge, who was recruited with Smith, can relate to Smith. She is currently on the sidelines after undergoing knee surgery in September and may end up with the same fate as Smith.

"She and I have been in the same boat for the last four years," Niebrugge said. "It's kind of weird because we both come from strong high schools ... then we came to college and had injury after injury."

Smith, who will graduate in May, is now entertaining job offers, and keeps a positive attitude about her team.

"I've had my glory days and I've had my humble days. It's just unfortunate that I had my humble days here, and that's what I'm ending on," Smith said.

Through all her injuries, Smith remains a co-captain of the team, where from the bench, she has been a vocal leader and motivator.

And SIU head coach Lori Opp is confident that Smith will eventually make a full recovery — mentally and physically.

"She's a strong person, and she's there everyday at practice, and she's very supportive of her teammates," Opp said. "She has some great things going on for her professionally and career-wise."

But right now, Smith is still healing. When she heard the news that sealed her basketball fate last week, she responded by sending letters to each of her teammates. The letter's purpose was to tell them to be thankful for what they have.

With tears in her eyes, Smith said, "I wanted to tell them, 'You may never know when your last game may be.'"

ALEX HAGLUND - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Benched by injury, senior ball player Courtney Smith keeps time for Tuesday's practice at the SIU Arena. The injury, a fractured tibia, will not allow Smith to play ball during her final season at SIU.

only a great basketball player, but she was also a great leader and those are hard to come by," Krebs said. "She was real vocal, and she not only had the ability to pick a team up but was also able to say things to get other people motivated."

Smith feels guilty for failing to live up to expectations as a Saluki. "I feel bad because I don't think SIU got what it bargained for in a sense, because our entire class, my teammates and I, when we came in as freshmen, we were

Women's battle at the bottom

SIU begins three-game homestand tonight versus Indiana State

JAVIER BERNA
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Thus far, the 2000-2001 campaign has been a trying one for the SIU women's basketball team.

The Salukis are in the midst of a five-game losing streak. And it is no coincidence that those five games were against the top five teams in the Missouri Valley Conference.

So, when SIU welcomes Indiana State University (5-11, 2-5) for a 7:05 p.m. contest at the SIU Arena tonight, it figures to be a closer matchup for the Salukis than in past weeks. In fact, the game kicks off a three-game homestand versus the lower-echelon of the MVC, with Illinois State University on the bill for a 2:05 p.m. Saturday contest.

But Indiana State is fresh off a 76-67 win against Illinois State last Saturday, and SIU head coach Lori Opp knows that the Sycamores are just as hungry for a win as her team.

"Indiana State is one of those teams that's on the verge of winning some big ballgames, and like us, they need to get a win," Opp said. "They're playing very hard and have been playing better as of late. They're a team that is very motivated and they have a cause that worries me because they're playing really aggressive."

What about the Salukis? Are they on the verge of winning big ballgames?

"I think our numbers are down, but I think we are on the verge," Opp said. "We've been making some improvements and we've got people playing hard. Once we get more consistency out of our crew, I think we'll start to win some ballgames."

SIU's practices this week have centered on defense and rebounding.

"We've been having trouble blocking out and rebounding, so that's what we've been working on this week," Opp said.

The Salukis will have to contain Indiana State's Kiwana Battle, who snapped her team's four-game losing streak by scoring 24 points against Illinois State. Battle is second in the conference in field goal percentages at 62 percent and leads the conference in blocked shots.

Illinois State (3-13, 1-6) is in last place in the MVC, having lost its last five prior to a contest tonight at the University of Evansville.
