LONDON (AP) — Satisfied that Argentina considers hostilities in the South Atlantic at an end, Britain announced Monday it is returning the remaining 583 Argentine prisoners who surrendered on the Falkland Islands a month ago.

However, Britain will maintain its air and blockade of the Falklands and the Argentine coastline, and the economic sanctions imposed against Argentina in support of British objectives have not been withdrawn.

The final exchange of prisoners, including the release Thursday of the sole British prisoner held by Argentina, Flight Lt. Jeffrey Glover, did nothing to resolve the bitter sovereignty dispute which led to the 74-day undeclared war that saw 255 British and 712 Argentines lives lost.

The Argentines claim sovereignty over the islands, Britain for 140 years, and the two countries had been negotiating the issue off and on for 17 years until the Argentine invasion. Britain now says it will be a long time before the war is reopened.

The last prisoners, including commanding officer Brig. Gen. Mario Benjamin Memesder, will be flown soon aboard the British passenger ferry St. Edmund, headed for Argentina's Puerta Maderas, the Foreign Office announced.

At first Britain sought an "authoritative" statement from Buenos Aires that hostilities were over, but finally settled for "indications" that all conflict had ceased.

The Foreign Office said those indications came partly in an exchange of messages with Argentina and partly from other sources, including "confidential statements" relayed from Argentina.

STC staffer among PR candidates

A search for an executive director of development has just begun while a search for an executive director of university relations has settled upon five finalists.

Only one person from the SIU system is a finalist in the search for an executive director of university relations.

David Saunders, director of the office of relations and development in the School of Technical Careers, is among the five finalists for the post, formerly known as director of communications, search committee chairman Elizabeth Lance said Monday.

Joining Saunders is Jack Dear, director of the public affairs division of the St. Louis public school system; Louis Carter, executive editor of the department of state and community relations at the University of Michigan; Stephen Meehan, assistant secretary of North Carolina's department of commerce, and Ron Carter, journalism professor at California Polytechnic State University.

Lance said the director will supervise SIU-C's public relations operations, including news and photographic services, graphic and exhibits.

Stanley McNally, vice president for university relations and development, said that the director's job "will be to plan and direct programs that result in a maximum of public understanding and support of SIU-C among all constituencies."

The finalists will be interviewed on campus over the next three weeks. Lance said, and the committee's recommendations are to be submitted to McNally's approval on Aug. 5. McNally said he hopes to announce his choice by early September.

Lance said the search committee looked for candidates who've shown good management ability, have written communications, have worked directly with the media and are familiar with all aspects of public relations.

Improvement of SIU-C's fund raising capabilities will be the main objective of the search for the new director of development.

SIU-C raised just over $1 million in fiscal 1982, which lagged well behind SIU-C's fund raising in 1983. SIU-C raised just over $12 million in fiscal 1983.

"We will look for a person who's had five years of progressive, responsible experience in fund raising, preferably in a college or university," he said.

McNally added Monday that the executive director's main duty will be the developing, planning and coordinating of all private fund raising of the University. Private funding involves alumni, non-alumni, business, corporate and foundation sources, he said.

"We will look for a person who's had five years of progressive, responsible experience in fund raising, preferably in a college or university," he said.

McNally also plans to form a "dene prospect research program" designed to identify those alumni who are able to make major contributions to SIU-C.

The search committee will be looking for someone who's been successful in raising funds for higher education, said Terry Mathers, special assistant to McNally.

WASHINGTON (AP) —
Secretary of State-designate

Bowen will convert to detention center

HARRISBURG (AP) — The A.L. Bowen Mental Health Center, closed to save money and consolidate care on the mentally ill, is to become a 200-bed, medium-security juvenile detention center, officials announced Monday. James R. Thompson, Simon Friedman's predecessor as acting head of the Illinois Department of Corrections, recommended converting the center. The Illinois Department of Corrections took control of Bowen on July 1. At the end of June, 120 young Bowen residents were transferred to the Anea Mental Health Center. The Bowen center specialized in treatment of mentally ill children and teen agers. Its closing prompted a lawsuit by parents charging that the center's programs could not be duplicated immediately at Anna. The Anea center houses several hundred mentally ill and disabled adults.

The legal challenge fizzled late last month when Sangamon County Circuit Judge Simon Friedman refused to issue a preliminary order blocking transfers. Meanwhile Monday in Anna, workers at the mental health center, all members of the American Federation of State County and Municipal Employees, set up informational picket lines. The workers were protesting a number of different issues, including handling of grievances. Many of the issues were not connected to the transfer of patients from Bowen, but workers complained that the administration at the center was overly concerned about the transfer, and as a result was not paying enough attention to problems of the current staff and patients.

The governor also plans to convert the Dixon Mental Health Center into a prison, and is closing the Adler Mental Health Center in Champaign — all moves be said are needed because of the dwindling number of mental patients in state institutions.

Cars broken into; suspect arrested

A Carbondale man was arrested Saturday afternoon after allegedly entering two unlocked cars in the K-Mart parking lot, according to Carbondale Police.

Broderick Rowe, 18, was stopped by K-Mart security guard after he was seen attempting to remove a pair of dice from the rear-view mirror of an unlocked car. An AM-FM cassette player taken from a car in the same parking lot was found in Rowe's car, police said.

Deadline extended on surface mining act

By Mike Nelson
Staff Writer

Illinois coal mine operators will be able to continue mining prime farmland beyond the Aug. 3 deadline set by the 1977 Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act, Gov. James R. Thompson's office announced Thursday. According to Anthony Liberatore, Thompson's coal aide, extending the deadline will ease Illinois' transition to a medium-security juvenile detention center, the facility was in the works for Southern Illinois.

Corrections Director Michael Lane said at a conference in Harrisburg that Bowen was being converted to a detention center because of an increase in the number of confined juveniles and a projected increase over the next few years. The center would employ about 300 workers and house people ranging in age from 13 to 21. Lane said the first group of juveniles would arrive at the center in about four months, he said.

Renovation to convert the facility was to begin immediately, Lane said. He noted that the Illinois General Assembly had appropriated $1.1 million for conversion.

Thompson said in a statement that the conversion is expected to take up to two years and cost $5.4 million. He said that would be less expensive than building a new detention home.

"Not only does the existing facility meet the unique security needs of a juvenile center, but the community and the employees of the center are trained in working with youths of this nature," Thompson said. Ron Bitte, regional administrator for the state Mental Health Department, said the Corrections Department took control of Bowen on July 1.

"I think that we have met the needs of both the agriculture and the mining communities," he said. Liberatore said that a total of 20,000 acres of prime farmland are involved in the deadline extension, 13,000 of which have already been approved for mining. About half of the 13,000 acres already approved will continue to be mined under what are known as "grandfather exemptions," Liberatore said. The exemption allows coal operators to restore farmland to 90 percent of its pre-mining productivity, rather than the 100 percent mandated by the reclamation act.

Liberatore said the other 13,000 acres of prime farmland involved can be mined only if the coal operator can prove technical capability to restore the farmland to 100 percent productivity. "Right now the coal industry is at about 90 percent pre-mining productivity," he said.

Liberatore said the Aug. 3 deadline was extended to assure that all prime farmland is restored to 100 percent productivity. There is no longer a specific deadline for mining prime farmland. The deadline now consists of a specific deadline date for reclamation of land already been approved for mining.

Liberatore said the other 13,000 acres of prime farmland involved can be mined only if the coal operator can prove technical capability to restore the farmland to 100 percent productivity. "Right now the coal industry is at about 90 percent pre-mining productivity," he said.

Liberatore said that the deadline extension offers an alternative to grandfathering and expressed hope that "by extending the Aug. 3 deadline, we have negotiated an end to the grandfather exemptions." Michael Schechtman, of the Illinois South Project in Herrin, said grandfathering has involved a long history of negotiated compromises. In 1977, he said, "agricultural and environmental groups and the United States Department of Agriculture called for a moratorium on mining of prime farmland." After the coal industry pleaded economic hardship and insisted that, given the chance, it could restore prime farmland to full productivity, a compromise was struck, he said.

"Basically, the compromise stated that coal operators would be allowed to continue mining prime farmlands as long as they demonstrated capability to reconvert land to 100 percent of its pre-mining productivity, and actually did so once the permits were granted," he said.

Female athletes should continue equity efforts

IN MAY OF 1979, 13 female SIU-C student athletes and one graduate assistant were denied funding and facilities against the University with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare under the Department of Education. These inequities in men's and women's scholarships, recruitment, equipment, means of travel, food and lodging accommodations while on trip, scheduling, training, coach ratios and facilities for practice and games.

Ever since, the complaint has been hung up in the red tape of Title IX enforcement. Title IX, a federal law to ensure equal funding and facilities for men's and women's athletics programs, have their been any gains for women since the complaint was filed?

Charlotte West, women's athletic director, thinks women's athletics have made substantial progress in the three years since the complaint was filed. Women's department who was involved with the complaint, also thinks SIU-C has progressed in compliance with Title IX.

WOMEN'S SPORTS HAVE finally received some of the equal attention and funding they have deserved for so long. In the matter of facilities, Davies Gymnasium finally got its renovation that was promised many years ago. In spite of some facilities as the men at the Arena, Davies now does not have a leaking roof or a warping floor or showers that low cold water when someone flushes the toilet.

Women now have assistant coaches in some sports, which they didn't have when the complaint was filed. Workers in 1976, the percentage of the athletic funding, which is a substantial gain over what they have in the past. They have been granted equal gains in the areas of scholarship and recruitment funding. These are gains that are plans for improvement in those areas.

Detering has said that the complaint filed with HEW has been a "motive-conscious factor" in the progress made at SIU-C. She also said she was proud to think that she had an effect on the University's policy on equality.

THE WOMEN WHO filed that complaint three years ago should be proud. They have helped women to progress in the struggle for equality in athletics. But there's still a way to go. Perhaps the Title IX investigation will turn up some grounds for sanctions, in view of the progress made in athletics equality at SIU-C. It should not serve as an end point in the efforts of female athletes to get their fair share of the pie.

Equality must be achieved justly

To any woman or man fighting for the Equal Rights Amendment I say, "Bethink and speak out!"

With the incredible ability to think, reason, and rationalize, one could easily realize that something is not a matter of justice or equality. Ms. Byrnes has said, "the fight for equal rights for human beings is not over. It has just begun." This is the first mention I have heard of a fight for "equal rights for human beings". I think we all should realize that the "equal rights for human beings" is the total meaning of "Equal Rights.

The passage of a bill, any bill; will we see justice? Will this equal me or you with someone who holds all the value of property and mock Appendices leadership as was done at our state's capital?

Will this make it acceptable or tolerable for men to perform or be employed in jobs, that until recently, have been exclusively for women? Will it be too late when the wars are over? Thor Hynddal never saw a day without seeing debris in the sea and the America of unlimited resources has reached and overshadowed its resources. Outer space has no limits but even one of the rate of progress is matched by our ability to pollute. Even in this early stage, the Columbia narrowly missed Russian captured depot!

How will they draw up boundaries in space nobody knows. Already Thor World countries are fighting to "book parking spaces" for communication satellites in space before it is all taken up by the superpowers. The Spanish Armadas and Francis Drake of old stand to be resurrected, only this time they would be the American and Igor Illyshin Drake. We can conceivably look forward to new Farklands or perhaps "Falkspace" in the future.

It is the imminent militarization of space that bears the most terrifying prospects. Military planners and innovators are rubbing their hands with glee at the many opportunities that space promises - great new sites for nuclear testing, platforms bristling with sophisticated weapons or perhaps weapons that may prove disastrous war? How much will this alter the nuclear threshold?

These admittedly are wild flight of fancy but they point to serious issues that need to be resolved before we rush to the stars. In space, man is too far worse than the rope of our world.

The Columbia is a magnificent milestone of progress. Fraught as it may be with dangers, it holds the possibility of mankind that far outweighs the dangers. The exploration and utilization, and exploitation of space is a shared project for the benefit of all mankind. Modes of equitable distribution of both the cost and the fruits of space must be worked out. Ways of reducing as much as possible the carryover of our present injustices, inequalities, rivalries and war making tendencies must be explored. Ethics must move hand in hand with scientific goals and military arms.

As Moses said, "I give you a blessing and a curse."

Political attack by the Clash sung with classic punk anger

By Mike Nelson
Staff Writer

Joe Strummer has reaffirmed his position as rock’s last angry man. The vocalist and rhythm guitarist of the Clash has unleashed the fury of his outspoken political conscience on the twelve songs that make up the band’s new LP, “Combat Rock.”

“Combat Rock” is the fifth album released by the Clash, a musically ambitious collection of politically motivated songs, laden with the classic punk anger that has become a Clash trademark.

Battling the excesses of last year’s triple album, “Sanctuary,” the band has sharpened its attack on such issues as poverty and political indifference by writing shorter and more direct songs. With “Combat Rock,” the Clash have attempted to regain the urgency that marked earlier efforts like 1977’s “White Riot” and the 1981 album “English Civil War.”

From the opening track of the Strummer-Mick Jones guitars on the LP’s first track, “Knew You Were Right,” it becomes chillingly clear that the Clash mean business. “Knew You Were Right” is a bitter forewarning of the worsening situation of street violence, coupled with police and government inability to do anything about it. Strummer declares the situation hopeless, finally shouted “Get off the streets. Run. Don’t you have a home to go to?”

The political attack is put on temporary hold by the next song, “Jungle Jim’’ or should I say ‘tastic Mick Jones rack’ that recalls some of the band’s more humorous material on their 1979 album “London Calling.” The band shrouds their next stab at political institutions in a mask of light humor in “Rock the Casbah,” a song about Muslim traditionalists who have attempted to ban popular music in Iran.

Side one ends with “Straight to Hell,” possibly the LP’s finest track, which proves the Clash masters of the reggae stumb. The song deals with the unfortunate plight of Vietnamese children and other Asian peoples whose lives were shattered by the Indochina War and its aftermath.

The LP’s most musically adventurous track is Sean Flynn, who refers to the Vietnam War photographer and son of the ace and ERNOL Flynn, who was dissaproved while on assignment. The song is a chilling attempt to create the mystifying aura of the dark jungles of Vietnam during the war.

Also noteworthy is “Ghetto Defender,” a duet between Strummer and poet Alan Ginsberg. The song is a reggae influenced excursion into the nightmarish world of drug addiction and despair.

The LP closes with “Death is a Star,” a fitting conclusion to a collection of haunting material. The song features a spoken vocal by Strummer backed by acoustic guitar and piano. The sparseness of the instrumentation serves to emphasize Strummer’s message with chilling effects.

Neck Strain

You may take your neck for granted, but you shouldn’t. It is one of the most important parts of your body. Composed of seven small bones or vertebrae and supported by muscles and ligaments, your neck must hold and balance a head that weighs approximately 10 pounds.

This makes the neck susceptible to stress and strains from many sources. It may react traumatically to seemingly minor accidents or falls. Some authorities say the neck is strained more frequently than any other part of the body.

Any misalignments in your neck may cause pain and discomfort because of an interference with the normal functioning of your body’s ner-
Summer features are show's fuel

Southern Illinois in the summer minus, perhaps not the most exciting place to be, but there really are things to do if you look around.

Radio and television students at SIU-C are doing the impossible by mastering up some little-known going on in Southern Illinois this summer for broadcast on a new WSIU-TV series called "Out and About." The show, which has been aired now for five consecutive weeks, is on seen Saturday nights at 8 p.m. on channels 5 and 15 in everything in Southern Illinois as well as some parts of Missouri, Kentucky and Indiana.

"Out and About," a half-hour, magazine format show resembling "PM Magazine," covers events such as county fairs, museums, scenic areas, rodeos and concerts.

The original idea for the show came from WSIU-TV's program director, Nancy Cottingham, who said she wanted a show about Southern Illinois activities for the area's people.

Executive producer-director of "Out and About," Alfred Carroll, who has total responsibility for each show, acts as both a supervisor for the staff and videographer in charge of the filming.

According to Carroll, the staff consists of about 35 volunteer students who do all the reporting, audio and set design.

"There's a lot of history in Southern Illinois," Carroll said. "Our mostly student staff is responsible for finding the stories, and if they're good, we use them."

The feedback for the show has been phenomenal, Carroll said. "We get letters coming in all the time thanking us for our coverage of events in the area."

Besides student volunteers, producer-directors at WSIU-TV Robert Henderson, Dave Campbell and Scott Terronez help with the videography.

Beginning a week before the show is to be aired, the videographers and student reporters get together to cover the event, according to Carroll.

With the story taped and reported, associate producers John Bunn and Martha Voorhees help put the segments together.

Show host Tomi Thompson, whose direction name it is, uses the reporters' information to give an introduction to each of the four segments in the show. Thompson also announces the Community Calendar at the end of each show.

The most recent "Out and About" show consisted of four segments, including coverage of the Valley Pet Fair in St. Louis over the Fourth of July weekend, Duquoin Harness Racing, a tour of steeplechase Mansion and the weekly Community Calendar.

Coming up August 7 and 14 is a children's special and a senior citizens' special, respectively. Each special will feature segments on its particular age group, with reporting by children and senior citizens.

For Saturday, July 17, "Out and About" has coverage of the Clinton County Fair, a segment on the St. Louis Zoo and one on Cedar Lake, and the first in a six part series on Touch of Nature's activities.

So if you think there's nothing to do in Southern Illinois over the summer, you probably haven't been watching what's happening on "Out and About."
U.S. support sought by Iranian picketers

By Glavy Lee Staff Writer

Fifteen SIU-C Iranian students picketed Friday near the Student Center in silent protest of atrocities they claim have occurred in Iran under the Khomeini regime.

Two of the students participated in a mock execution, one by hanging and the other by firing squad, while another, dressed in army clothes with pictures of Khomeini on them and armed with a toy rifle, acted as a member of a firing squad.

The group of students, all of whom are members of the Moslem Student Society, carried signs of protest against the Khomeini regime, one which read, "Join us to condemn Khomeini's atrocities," and another which showed the former Shah's face, gradually changing into Khomeini and reading, "Evolution of Savagery."

The purpose of the picket line, according to Nosrat Ghanbarnejad, senior in engineering, was to make Americans aware of what is happening in Iran and to gather support from them.

"It is our belief that because of the hostage crisis, most American people were thinking of Iranian people in the same way they think of Khomeini," he said, but added that things have changed and Americans are beginning to support anti-Khomeini Iranians.

Yousef Aharchi, senior in engineering, said that if people write to international agencies condemning the atrocities of the Khomeini regime and asking them to send missions to Iran, then the Iranian government will find it difficult to resist this international pressure.

The international pressure itself will be "like the Iranian government," he said.

Foreign governments could put sanctions on Iran if Iran wants to have any kind of relationships with other governments, it will have to give in, as the government had to in the Shah's time."

One American student who participated in the picket line, Sandra Benavente, junior in agriculture, said that there's a need for more American support.

"There's definitely not enough American support, but I think it's a little more positive lately than it was," she said. "If there's murder going on, it needs to be stopped.

The other reason is having a picket line either once a week or once every two weeks, Aharchi said. "The harder we work, the more people will know," he said.

Old Main Room to stay open; trial period shows more sales

By Michele Inman
Staff Writer

After big closed last week for remodeling, the Old Main Room's doors opened again Monday.

And the doors will remain open for the summer, said Corker, Student Center Director.

Because ofincreasing sales during a three-week trial period, the Old Main Room restaurant, located on the second floor of the Student Center, will remain open throughout the summer, Corker said.

Interstate United, a private company handling the Student Center's annual budget, had suggested prior to the start of the summer semester that the Old Main Room close for the summer to save money, Corker said.

In order to break even, the Old Main needs $250 in daily sales, Corker said. To prevent the restaurant from closing, a three-week trial period, from June 14 through July 1, was implemented. "We don't want to cut services," said Corker. "It's a nice service for students, faculty and staff."

Corker said that during the trial period the restaurant has served about 85 customers a day. "Our sales are averaging $116 a day," he said.

To boost sales during the trial period, a handbill urging students to eat at the Old Main was distributed across campus one day during the week of June 14 corker said. Newspaper ads were also used. The handbill advertised that the Old Main may be forced to close because of tightening budgets.

Only one change has been made since the trial period, Corker said. As of Monday, the use of coupons by students living on campus is limited. Coupons may be used for lunch from 11:00 a.m. to 11:45 a.m. and from 1:00 p.m. to 1:30 p.m.

No restrictions are placed on the Student Center or Woody Hall cafeteria, Corker said. "Because of the combination this summer, we have had to cut back on staff in food service."

Corker said. "We're continually adjusting staffing in all areas according to volume."

This summer, customers must be patient. "We're basically a waitress short in the dining room now," Corker said.

Customers may have to wait for food longer but it's a better alternative than closing the Old Main completely, he added.

This year, food service in the Student Center has reduced its losses by $1,800 from last year, Corker said. "Last year during the week of 4th of July, we stayed open and lost $4,400. This year we lost $2,978."

For the first time, the Student Center closed July 3, 4, and 5. The major savings was utilities expenses, Corker said. "Air conditioning is $150 an hour," he said.

Although the Old Main Room was closed for a week, remodeling is not completed yet. "Originally we planned to have all the chairs and booths recovered, however, the materials didn't arrive in time so we cancelled out," during the week, pictures and prints were added to the walls instead.

"Chiropractic is the science of restoring the inherent homeostatic mechanisms. It recognizes the enormous protective and healing powers of the human body."

He said if the picture doesn’t turn around concerning the state economy, legislators may be faced with a decision on how to increase revenues in the state.

Richmond also said Thompson backed down on a promise made last year that “catch-up money” would be included in the budget to make up for lean budgets in the past.

Richmond said that because some maintenance workers have retired without being replaced, maintenance of buildings on the SIU-C campus has suffered.

A “bleak picture” necessitated the budget, but Richmond said sooner or later, SIU would need catch-up money.

He said catch-up money would be needed for salary increases and for maintenance of buildings.

“It’s a bleak picture and a lot of students will not be able to go into higher education,” Richmond said.

“Instead of a sandwich, you get half a sandwich, I’m not very happy about it.”

Beg your pardon

For those who went to the open house Sunday at the Horticulture Research Center, expecting to see a "garden of magnolias" on the campus of Illinois State in a photo caption in the Friday issue of the Daily Egyptian:

There were marigolds that Peggy Wilkins, greenhouse manager, was tending to in the photo.

Ms. Wilkins, who knows the difference between marigolds and magnolias, gave the Daily Egyptian photographer the correct information. But somehow (who knows how or why these things happen?) a marigold became magnolia when the photographer passed along the information to the DE copy editor who wrote the caption.

The copy editor now knows the difference between marigolds and magnolias -- William Harmon, managing editor.

ILLINI from Page 16

call from Mike Hatfield of the U of一个月icle Association, who asked her if she would take a job monitoring athletes, at-endance at class. Rose said she took the job because she needed
the money.

"It's not a bad job, really," she said. "The guy I'm watching is really nice. He knows that I have to do this as my job,
and that if I didn't, someone else would."

She said that the job takes about one-half hour to an hour
both Seward and Hatfield decimal to comment on the practice.
The practice of student monitors at U of I first came to light when Rose gave an interview to Andy Regal of WPGU, the student radio station at the university. Regal, who is the sports director, sent a copy of the tape to Bob Grenzberg of WBIW in Chicago.
The Chicago Sun-Times also mentioned the practice in its Sunday paper.

Terry Cole, of the Athletic Association, said the association hires between 55
and 60 hours during the regular school year. He admitted that student monitors are one of several ways athletes' academic progress is checked.

When asked if the $4 an hour wage was above the scale of on-campus jobs, Cole said, "We can pay our workers whatever we want." He said the money comes out of the Athletic Association budget, which is funded mainly by alumni donations.

"We have run into problems with athletes and academics," he said. "That is why we have tutors."

Doug Single, athletics
director at Northwestern University, said NU does not have students checking on athletes.

"Absolutely not. We have a different academic philosophy
at Northwestern," he said. "All the monitoring is done by the professors. Sometimes, if there is a problem with a student-athlete not attending class, then the professor will call me."

Brian Faxon, assistant athletic director at Illinois State, said that school does not use students to check on the athletes.

NFL contract talks resume

NEW YORK (AP) - Few
owners and player representatives seem overly concerned about the possibility of an All-Star Game next summer
in Cincinnati. Negotiations between the National Football League and the players union were to resume Tuesday between the National Football League and the players union - just two days before their current agreement
expires.

When the negotiations
resume at the New York Sternway, the owners will present a revised free-agency
system, still based on salary levels, not much higher than the existing ones.

Training camps will be opening during the final two weeks of July, and exhibitions
will begin with the Hall of Fame Game between Baltimore and Minnesota in Canton, Ohio, on Aug. 12.

Dan Casebeer still riding and winning
By Ken Perkins
Sports Editor

Dan Casebeer is at it again.
The SIUC bicyclist took another giant step toward a National Championship in the speedo-class event--competing and scoring high--
in road and track races throughout California and Wisconsin.
On July 1, while others were eating ribs and watching fireworks, Casebeer was busy pursuing his fourth Lowrenbrau Gran Prix race win when he completed against some of the biggest names in track and road racing.
Casebeer, a native of Fond-eliac, Wis., he finished seventh in the same field, but this was
it 30 minutes instead of 25.
On Tuesday, the SIUC
senior placed second in the 7-
eleven-Bicycle Magazines Nationalso in Los Angeles defeating the national champion, Tom Dowdy, by one minute.
Last Wednesday, he placed an impressive fifth out of 25
competitors in the 30-mile race
which included
champions from both Canada
and Japan.
Sunday Casebeer placed 28th in a 62-mile race at Manhattan Beach, Calif. It was a wild and woolly week for Casebeer.

Students monitor
Illini athletes' class attendance

By Jackie Rodger
Staff Writer

According to Allison Rose, a student at the University of Illinois, a unique monitoring system is used by the university to check the attendance of student athletes in their classes.
Rose is one of "two or three"
female students who have been hired by the university to monitor the attendance of athletes in class. Rose said she is paid $6 an hour to make sure that Pete Mulchrone, a member of the Illini football team, attends his
classes.
Rose said her job requires that she be in the classroom 10 minutes before Mulchrone's class is scheduled to begin, and wait until he arrives or wait to see if he is late. She then reports her attendance to Tom Sewell,
one of the football coaches.

I think its a pretty silly,
" really, " Rose said of her job.
" The whole idea of the way
in which I was treated by the new coach was silly. My sister was living with some girls who tutored athletes,

Letter to the editor

Column on cage camp 'untrue'

This letter is in response to a piece which was written by Ken Perkins,
sports editor of the Daily Egyptian. Mrs. Perkins questioned
the way that theSIU-C camp
at home. Camps provide competition and teach,
through the words of a coach,
about the ways to handle
success and failure.

Camps have other important roles which are worth mentioning. They can be specifically related to a sport.
We see a few young men get honorary membership, but we're very proud of themselves finishing the week. We see exciting shots used to the bums and scratches of an event take place.
Competition and perhaps a little tougher at week's end.

The most enjoyable
moments are simply us coaches getting to spend time with some very nice, honest reaching. Fun kids. It is especially as much of an experience for us as it is for the campers.

But what if you got any coaches at all? The only criticism I have of kids is when they get too
big. I have seen many camps that have had 350-400 campers. And this personally think that is too many.

In closing, it is clear that
Ken Perkins does not know me,
Staff Stephens or Herman Williams. If he knew us, he could never have written this. The staff at this camp is committed to giving this University, or a basketball camp at University where we may be, everything we can. Conditioning,
staffing, skill, training room exposure,
demonstrations, lectures,
game competition and competitions, all personal involvement with each young man is what camp is about.

It would be most inaccurate and ridiculous to expect, standards from five days of camp. I would hope Ken would give parents and coaches a little more credit
than that.

I suppose it is better to be reported with no feel for the truth, but I hope for those who have not met one or me or our staff this letter will explain some of how we feel about our camp and our profession in general.

Alene Van Winkle
