Edgar wants temporary funding as budget deadlock hits 10 days

Related story, Page 7

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — Gov. Jim Edgar Wednesday asked the General Assembly to approve about $320 million to make sure state employee paychecks go out on time, lottery winners are paid and disability payments are issued.

The move deviates from Edgar's earlier call to do all parts of next year's budget together. However, if it is approved quickly, it will avert a possible shutdown of some state government services and will guarantee about 21,000 state employees will receive their paychecks on time next week.

"I believe we can reconcile our difference in the near future and produce a balanced budget without increasing taxes," Edgar said. "There is no need at this point to disrupt or interrupt state services."

Edgar is making the move because a shutdown could be a major political liability for him. However, the governor did not consult legislative leaders before making the announcement at the State Capitol and he did not mention his plan in a 90-minute meeting with top lawmakers Tuesday afternoon.

Of the $320 million in the stopgap spending plan, $300 million would go to meet payrolls for state workers and university employees, $18.5 million would go to lottery prizes and $900,000 to make temporary disability payments on July 23 to state government employees who are unable to work because of job-related injuries.

On Wednesday, the General Assembly was in its 10th straight day of work in the new fiscal year without a budget.

Thursday at noon is the deadline for approving a state budget to make sure paychecks are processed fast enough to get to the employees

Trustees to talk about '93 with no money for '92

By John Patterson
Staff Writer

In the midst of an unknown budget and flying rumors, the SIU Board of Trustees will meet today in Edwardsville.

Although not officially on the agenda at the meeting, the budget crisis will be on the minds of everyone present, said SIU Chancellor Lawrence K. Pettit.

With nothing for certain on what budget SIU will get, Pettit said any new information will have to be put together quickly and presented to the board.

Pettit sends help to Springfield to await budget word

Pettit sent Vice Chancellor for Administration Tom Britton and Vice Chancellor for Financial Affairs Donald Wilson to join Executive Assistant for External Relations Garrett Deakin in Springfield and keep him posted on what happened at budget talks.

They will be meeting with other university and government officials to see what decisions are made about the budget for higher education and shutdowns of state agencies.

Pettit said all the vice chancellors and vice presidents then will meet with him to brief him on the situation so he can prepare a report for the Board of Trustees.

He said it's unusual to prepare budget requests for fiscal year 1993 when the University doesn't have a budget for FY 1992.

With the information coming from Springfield as the budget negotiations develop,

Bush repeals five-year sanctions on S. Africa

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush, seeing an "irreversible" march toward scrapping apartheid, lifted 5-year-old sanctions against South Africa on Wednesday in reward for its move to end decades of official racial separation.

In what was sure to spark criticism from some civil rights leaders and members of Congress, Bush said recent steps to enhance the rights of black South Africans left him no choice but to repeal the restrictions.

At the same time, he acknowledged that "all is not totally well" in South Africa despite praise for the reforms of President Frederik de Klerk. He pledged redoubled efforts to see its transition complete.

Speaking to reporters at the White House, he said a restoration of South Africa to full economic health is crucial to a political transformation, and the repeal of sanctions "will encourage the process."

"We hope that state and local governments and private institutions in the United States will take note of our action and accordingly to help build a new South Africa and help build employment opportunities in South Africa."

The long-awaited announcement flowed from a conclusion by the State Department that the South African government had freed all political prisoners as defined by the United States.

That judgment, challenged by those who want sanctions maintained, met the last of five tests Congress set for the South African government to be freed of curbs on investment and trade.

Still in place are a U.N.-ordered arms embargo, trade preferences for black-owned South African businesses and a prohibition on support for South African loans from the International Monetary Fund.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., disagreed the conditions for repeal had been met and recommended retaining some sanctions to guarantee "the dismantling of apartheid and the granting of political rights to all South Africans."

More than 5,000 workers may lose jobs if electric company decreases coal use

By Jennifer Kulier
and Christine Leninger
Staff Writers

As many as 5,400 workers with coal-related jobs from six down-state counties may be jobless if the Illinois Delegation for Clean Coal fails to convince Union Electric to continue using Southern Illinois coal, said Gerald Hawkins, a member of the delegation.

Union Electric has indicated they will switch to using a combination of Western coal and Southern Illinois coal. The amount of coal to be used from each region has not been decided yet, said Carol Sinnott-Rowe, manager of coal marketing for the Illinois Department of Energy and Natural Resources.

"The federal Clean Air Act has caused all national utilities to reconsider their use of coal and what type to use," said John Mead, director of the Coal Research

$30 million boiler for University to cut emissions of toxic vapors — official

By Todd Welvaert
Student Writer

SIUC's new $30 million coal boiler will cut sulfur dioxide emissions by 30 percent and, depending on the success of the facility, may save the Illinois coal industry.

The fluid-bed cogeneration system to be built in the summer of 1993 will use technology developed by the SIUC-based Coal Research Center and may keep high sulfur Illinois coal competitive with the low sulfur coal of western states.

"This is a chance to show the utilities that Illinois coal can still be used at low cost and still comply with the Federal Clean Air Act," said Harold Foster,

Climbers wait for decision on land swap

By John Sommerhoff
Staff Writer

Area climbers say key climbing spots in Southern Illinois may be in jeopardy because of a proposed land swap between the federal and state governments.

Tom Hagerty, a spokesman for Shawnee National Forest, said Cedars and Drapers Bluffs, which currently are part-owned by the federal government, are going to be given to the state in exchange for land around Lake Kinkaid.

Cedars and Drapers Bluffs are located about 20 miles south of Marion on Interstate 57 near Lick Creek.

Todd Fink, natural heritage biologist for the Illinois Department of Conservation, said the state is in the process of appraising the federally owned land and of writing the National Environmental Policy Act.

The NEPA is a document drawn up when states buy land from the federal government.

Eric Ulner, a member of the Southern Illinois Climbing Alliance, said the alliance is adamantly opposed to any land swap that would put the climbers at risk of losing access to the areas.

The Southern Illinois Climbing Alliance was formed on May 13, 1991, by local climbing enthusiasts when they heard from a landowner at Drapers Bluff the prospect of the land swap.

Ulner said SICA is attempting to get U.S. Rep. Glenn Poshard, D-Carterville, to intervene and stop the land swap.

A spokesman for Poshard said SICA hasn't yet approached the congressman with its request.

The alliance's main goal is to have Cedars and Drapers Bluffs remain part of the Shawnee National Forest and to be bumped to a lower priority in the land exchange.

Ulner said if the state takes over, camping probably would be outlawed and climbing would be stopped because there is no accessibility for emergency vehicles to get to the bluffs in case of an accident and because of its impact on the environment.

Sports clubs provide outlet for recreational competition

By Rob Neff
Staff Writer

Students who want to participate in sporting activities but who do not want to compete on a collegiate level can take part in a sports club at the Recreation Center.

Nine clubs are active this summer but that number typically rises to 27 in the fall, said Kathy Rankin, assistant director of Intramural Recreational Sports.

Jeff Thom, a senior in accounting and president of the Sport Club Council, the governing body of the sport clubs at the Recreation Center, said the groups give students an opportunity to expand both physically and emotionally.

"Students learn how to take care of their own," he said. "The develop their organizational and management skills. The groups help them become a more well-rounded person. It has a lot more long-term effects than just health."

Thom said one reason sports help develop these skills is that the groups are completely self-run and self-governed.

"We don't have a coach, so it's just us," he said. "We practice all the time and we work hard, though."

The clubs at the Recreation Center range from scuba diving to martial arts to competitive sports like rugby and water polo.

One club at the Recreation Center is the Aikido club.

Dominic Fleming, a sophomore in foreign language and international trade from Naperville and president of the Aikido club, said the club provides a relaxed environment

Danish Tour leader breaks collarbone

VALENCIENNES, France (UPI)

— Tour de France leader Rolf Sorensen of Denmark broke his collarbone in a fall Wednesday near the finish of the fifth stage and likely will be forced to withdraw.

His withdrawal would put American Greg LeMond, a three-time winner of the event, in the overall lead.

Sorensen was in a group of riders in a fall about 2 miles (3 km) from the finish of the 93-mile stage from Reims to Valenciennes. He was given another bicycle by teammate Bruno Cenghialta and finished the stage, holding his shoulder.

The 26-year-old rider was rushed by ambulance to a local hospital from the finish line. X-rays confirmed the fracture, said Dr. Gerard Nicolet, one of the physicians on the race staff.

"I can't see him going on,"

Nicolet said.

Giancarlo Ferretti, director of Sorensen's Ariostea team, said Sorensen would have to quit the race. The rider was expected to travel Thursday to Italy for medical treatment.

"It could require surgery," Ferretti said.

Sorensen still held the overall lead at the close of the day, nine seconds ahead of LeMond and 10 seconds ahead of Ireland's Sean Kelly.

But his probable absence from the sixth stage would leave

LeMond with the lead and the yellow jersey.

"If it is confirmed that Sorensen has to go out, LeMond would start in front," race director Jean-Marie LeBlanc said.

Dr. Gerard Porte, chief physician for the race, said Sorensen's injuries, which also included cuts and scrapes to the head, left knee and left elbow, would prevent him from resuming the 2,449-mile (3,940 km) race.

"He wanted to continue, but I advised him against it, as did his team director," Porte said.

Second half surge: Baseball division contenders consider disabled list players for upcoming starts

TORONTO (UPI) — When the regular season restarts Thursday, contenders in all four divisions will look to their own disabled lists for key second half additions.

Having settled matters between the two leagues — at least until October — with the All-Star Game, won Tuesday by the American League 4-2, return to regular season action Thursday marks the unofficial start to the pennant races. And virtually every team can see one important member of its squad on the disabled list.

The tightest race at the break is in the American League West, where five teams are within 2 1/2 games. The Texas Rangers lead the Minnesota Twins by percentage points, while California, Chicago and Oakland are clustered behind.

Oakland Athletics manager Tony La Russa said there's a good chance all five will remain in the race through September.

"There are a whole bunch of good clubs in our section with a chance to be involved right to the finish," La Russa said. "You'd need a streak like the one Toronto's had to take command and I don't think that's likely to happen in the West. It's going to be a dogfight."

The Rangers have been without pitcher Bobby Witt for a month. Oakland's pitching has been hit by numerous injuries and Minnesota ace Scott Erickson's trip to the disabled list has hurt the Twins' chances.

Twins' manager Tom Kelly said the health of pitching staffs will be crucial.

"I'm going to look for divine help because the team whose pitching stays healthy might beat us," Kelly said. "Otherwise, we are in there."

AL West players also were looking forward to a five team race in September.

"The division could have a dream race in September with five teams in it," said Chicago catcher Carlton Fisk. "That will make everyone happy, both players and fans. When you are in the hunt in September, it's what it's all about. It's no fun being 15 games out."

"It's definitely going to be fun for the fans — fun for us, too, if we can keep playing our own game," said California starter Mark Langston. "It could even be five teams all the way. Who do you see falling off? I don't see anyone."

In the AL East, a hot run before the All-Star break saw Toronto

Fiesta Bowl gets chance with alliance

MIAMI (UPI) — The Orange, Sugar and Cotton Bowls named the Fiesta Bowl Wednesday as the fourth member of an alliance designed to produce a national championship college football game.

The Fiesta Bowl was selected over the Citrus, Gator, Holiday and Blockbuster Bowls, which all made pitches to become what has been known as "Bowl X."

Under a tentative agreement, whichever one of the Orange, Sugar and Cotton Bowls has rights to a team ranked No. 1 at the end of the regular season also would have the right to select the No. 2-ranked team, provided that team is not locked into a bowl which is not part of the pact.

The only other two bowls with conference ties are the RoseBowl, with the Big 10 and Pac-10, and the Holiday Bowl, with the Western Athletic Conference.

Bush nominates Greenspan to continue as reserve chair

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush nominated Alan Greenspan Wednesday to a second four-year term as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. There had been speculation Bush would replace the genial, if taciturn Greenspan, who has earned widespread admiration for his handling of the nation's central bank. Greenspan, 65, was first nominated by President Reagan in 1987 to replace Paul Volker, who served two terms. Greenspan's term expires on Aug. 11. "He has done an outstanding job," said Bush in announcing the nomination at the White House. Bush urged the Senate to move quickly in confirming Greenspan's nomination.

Slovenia accepts EC proposal to avoid civil war

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia (UPI) — The Assembly of secessionist Slovenia Wednesday overwhelmingly accepted a European Community plan on averting civil war in Yugoslavia, despite objections from hard-line nationalists and a fresh exchange of threats between local and federal armed forces. The so-called Brioni Declaration was approved by 189 votes, with 11 lawmakers opposing the pact and seven abstaining after 2 1/2 hours of debate, in a crucial victory for Slovenian President Milan Kucan, whose political fate hung on the decision. "Let us not lose too much energy in long discussions," the former Communist said.

Bush synical of Hussein's nuclear accounting

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush said Wednesday that he was not convinced Saddam Hussein had "come totally clean" on Iraq's nuclear capability and the United States "will not be lulled" into thinking he is telling the truth. At a news conference, Bush repeated what senior administration officials have been saying for two days, adding that "there will not be normal relations" between Washington and Baghdad as long as the Iraqi leader remains in power. In a report released this week to the United Nations and to the International Atomic Energy Agency, Iraq acknowledged that it possessed outdated machines to process uranium.

Palestinian guerrillas start to surrender weapons

TYRE, Lebanon (UPI) — An estimated 5,000 Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas began surrendering their weapons Wednesday to the Syrian-backed Lebanese army in the southern Tyre region, a Cabinet minister said. Minister of State Abdullah al-Amin made the announcement after two hours of talks with ranking PLO figures in the ancient southern port city of Tyre, 46 miles south of Beirut. "The Palestinian brethren have begun collecting and handing over their medium- and small-caliber weapons," he said. Sultan Abu al-Ayeneh, a PLO field military commander, said the guerrillas laid down their arms.

Malaysia to spend millions to develop economy

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (UPI) — Malaysia plans to spend $38 billion on development projects over the next five years, more than doubling its rate of the past decade in an effort to become a fully developed nation within 30 years, Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad said Wednesday. Mahathir described the expected development expenditures in announcing the "Sixth Malaysia Plan," a five-year economic blueprint that starts the first phase of a national goal of becoming a developed country by the year 2020. The plan to spend $38 billion represents more than what was spent over the last decade.

Police transcripts uncover disregard for public

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The most damning evidence of racism and violence uncovered by the independent panel investigating the Police Department was released Wednesday — computer messages written in the words of the city's street cops. A review of the computer transmissions, many of which were examined by the Christopher Commission, reveal the work-a-day world of patrol officers who often displayed a naked callousness and contempt for the public they are sworn "to protect and to serve. A day without violence is like a day without sunshine. The sun shone last night," read one transcript.

Carbondale's past eternalized in picture book

Photos of SIUC, railroad, institutions tell history of 139-year-old community

By Annette Holder
Entertainment Editor

This picture book is for coloring in the past.

G. Bradley Publishing Inc., from St. Louis, is making a 200 page pictorial book about Carbondale's past, beginning with 1852, the year Carbondale was established.

English professor Betty Mitchell, who is organizing the book project, has received about 450 photographs, but she still needs photographs from the past to the present featuring SIUC activities and people.

The book will have a chapter for each of three different chronological time periods, a chapter on Carbondale institutions, such as banks and schools, a chapter on the railroad and a chapter devoted to SIUC.

The chronological time periods are 1852-1905, 1905-1945 and 1945 to present.

Mitchell thought the railroad and the University were important to the success of Carbondale, so there is a special chapter for each of these two subjects.

"The railroad is the reason Carbondale was founded in the first place, and is the primary reason why Carbondale got the University," Mitchell said.

Her favorite photograph is of two girls playing on Poplar Street when it was a dirt road. The picture was taken about 70 years ago.

Teresa Rust, assistant vice president of First National Bank, said the bank was approached by the publisher to sell the book because it is one of Carbondale's largest banks and is still locally owned, which is rare. The bank will not make a profit on the book.

Rust predicts the book will sell well because other books the publisher has produced have sold well.

"The publisher made 2,000 books for Vincennes, Ind., and they sold out in two or three days," she said. "He's in the business of publishing books, but he's also doing a community service."

Rust said one of the most interesting photographs she has received is a postcard from the 1890s of the Halloween celebration on South Illinois Avenue.

"Some pictures will tell a story," he said. The limited release hardcover book can be purchased in November at First National Bank for $24.95. Old photographs should be brought to the bank and will be returned.

SIUC management professor to retire after 14 years

University News Service

After succeeding in two careers, Uma Sekaran could easily rest on her laurels when she retires June 30 from the faculty and staff of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. Instead, she will begin a third career, maybe more.

Sekaran is a professor of management and director of University Women's Professional Advancement (UWPA) at SIUC.

Before she got into higher education, Sekaran worked 19 years as an executive in a bank in her native city of Bombay, India.

After retirement, she plans to move to California and study Sanskrit because she needs to interpret 2,000-year-old manuscripts that will be the primary source for her historical research on the status of women in India.

But that's not all. She's going to take violin lessons, study musicology and music theory, teach a college class in business management and "get into community work with women."

In a 14-year career at SIUC, Sekaran won the College of Business and Administration Researcher of the Year Award three times and Outstanding Graduate Teacher of the Year Award in 1985.

As a women's advocate, Sekaran has urged businesses and academic institutions to recognize women's efforts and their qualifications for high-level administrative jobs.

Sekaran came to the United States in 1971 after her husband accepted a job in New York City. She also expected to continue her career but she found no takers. New York bankers weren't ready to hire a woman trained in India.

She enrolled in the MBA program at the University of Connecticut at Storrs, earned her degree in 18 months, then went after a Ph.D. at the University of California at Los Angeles. After earning it in 1977, she landed an appointment as assistant professor at SIUC.

Nine years later she had risen through the ranks and become chairwoman of the Department of Management.

Sekaran believes that many universities are making progress in hiring and promoting women, but many more need to step up their recruiting efforts.

"We definitely need top women administrators — and in equal numbers," she said.

She is pleased with what she says she's accomplished as director of UWPA:

■ Measures to ensure salary equity among female and male faculty members.

■ An administrative internship program for SIUC women with potential who want to become administrators.

■ A University Women of Distinction Award to recognize accomplishments of SIUC women staffers and students.

■ An evening child care program on the campus.

■ Female faculty development workshops.

■ A spouse placement program that accepts job listings from 1,500 organizations within a 60-mile radius of Carbondale.

Employee benefits lacking at University

GOV. JIM EDGAR'S signature is the only thing standing in the way of a 50-percent tuition waiver for state university employees' dependents.

Senate Bill 1353, which has passed the Illinois General Assembly, would be the newest addition to the employee benefit package for state university workers.

The waiver would apply to undergraduate students age 25 or younger whose parent has been employed at least seven years at one of the state's public universities, providing they meet the same acceptance requirements as other students.

University employees deserve this employment perk.

The idea of tuition waivers for university employees' families is not a radical one. Actually, it is a very common practice in the academic field.

It is not easy working for a higher education system, especially at this time when cutbacks in education funding directly lead to employee salaries that fail to keep up with the cost of living.

ATTRACTING WORKERS is a more introverted need for this employee benefit. With salary increases unlikely in the near future, universities must have something to attract and keep employees in order to offer quality education.

One argument against the bill is that no additional state funding would come with the bill, which means universities would be responsible for handling the cost of the waiver.

The waiver could turn out to be a positive influence on university pocketbooks by enticing employees to keep their children within the university structure. If this is the case state universities would gain financially from this benefit.

Another argument is that it is not fair for the Legislature to give a tuition waiver to children of university employees but not to other state workers.

However, this is not a valid argument because state employees are not the same as university employees. Although state universities are funded partially by the state, universities are not a state agency. This counterpoint becomes more valid if, in fact, state funding will not be allotted to support this benefit.

THE ONLY VALID argument against this bill is that it is not a substitute for a salary increase. Job benefits are not equivalent to take home pay. In actuality, though, this argument is not against the waiver bill, but rather a reminder to the Legislature that its work is not done.

Many previous bills have been proposed to the Legislature dealing with a similar benefit for state university employees, but Senate Bill 1353 has lasted through the process longer than any of the other bills. If at the last stage, though, the bill fails to become a law, the process need not end there. The SIU Board of Trustee has the authority to provide such benefits.

Northern Illinois University and Sangamon State University already have a similar benefit for their employees that was implemented by their governing board. If the Legislature isn't ready to give university employees this well deserved benefit, the Board of Trustees should make the stand.

Letters

DE policy has too many restrictions

Let's take a close look at the DE's editorial policy just to see what it accomplishes. Letters to the DE are under many restrictions which can cut the material up piece meal, change the meaning of the author, or prevent publication entirely. What if the DE existed in 1776 and someone was trying to publish the Constitution as a letter in the DE (for all we know this may have happened and the story repressed by the editor). What might have happened to our Constitution if it was worked on by the DE editor.

The DE has a policy no letter can be published if it's longer than 300 words. Too bad for the Constitution; it could not have been printed because it's too long. The fact that it is an important enough document to warrant an exception would not mean anything to the DE policy setters.

One of the rules of publishing a letter is that the DE retains the right to remove sections from the text as it sees fit. Perhaps the editors would have wanted to make more room for an ad by removing say Article VI of the Constitution. Oops, there goes the supremacy of federal law. The Carbondale sanitation department would then take precedence over the government in Washington.

The interesting thing about the editorial policy is that if one argues it with the staff they look at you like you are nuts. The attitude is that it can never be changed; it is carved in stone. Of course the stone begins to flow like water whenever the DE feels like changing it. Actually the policy was not set by God even though the individual setting it would like to think so. This is an individual named Wanda Brandon who is titled acting managing editor. Ms. Brandon has an interesting idea of what constitutes news.

I watched the DE butcher one of my letters which informed people that the Israelis have shot over 10,000 children with live ammunition. Of course I only wrote the letter because the DE did not report this event and I thought someone should. Apparently Ms. Brandon and her editorial board does not see this as being important enough to print in their newspaper. They must see it as being a smaller news story than the important stuff they do publish about the Grotto club.

I have seen other stories about the food riots caused by IMF policy which are completely ignored by the DE. Apparently food riots that are being directly caused by American policy are less important than letters from the deranged individuals who get published saying that SIU has no parking problem.

Thanks to media organizations like the DE, I have to avoid looking the foreign students in the eyes every time the embarrassing subject of American political ignorance comes up. We are widely known to be the most uneducated population of any developed nation. Congratulations DE you are right up there with Peter Jennings in the fight to keep Americans ignorant and apathetic. What a newspaper.—William Scott Stromberg, graduate student, social work.

War of words as old as language

"Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more." That line, borrowed from Shakespeare, seems to be the cry of the politically correct as they war against injustice with a new dictionary. That war has been going on in English as long as the language has been in use. Here are some examples: "If women had written these books (of wisdom), they would have written more of 'nen's wickedness, than their whole sex could redress. Men whose love is worth less than their oldest shoe, write that women cannot keep their marriages." (Paraphrased from Chaucer, ca. 1400.)

"I am obnoxious to each carping tongue, who says my hand a needle better fits... For such despite they cast on female wits: If what I do prove well it won't advance; They'll say it's stolen, or else it was by chance." (Anne Bradstreet, ca. 1650.) Words are the servants of their users. A word can be given the opposite meaning by the way it's used. Remember: "And Brutus is an honorable man?" How about the line: "I'll call you sometime?" No matter what the definition, it will reflect our hidden meanings in its use. The war against injustice takes place not in words, but in the realm of "internal difference, where the meanings, are..." (Emily Dickinson). It will take more than words to win it. We will join in that war with our words, and hope to make a difference.—Larry Roemer, junior, English.

Petit said he hopes to have "up-to-the-minute" details of how the budget discussion is shaping up.

In recent days several rumors have been going around campus about a possible retirement by Petit, and it repeatedly has been mentioned that something interesting will happen at the Board of Trustees meeting.

Petit was at a loss as to the talk of him leaving, saying he had no plans of leaving right now and "these types of rumors are normal following something like the Colorado fiasco."

Petit was one of five finalists for the president of the University of Colorado last spring, but withdrew his candidacy.

Apparently the rumors also have been going around Edwardsville.

Troy Teuscher, SIUE Alestle news editor, telephoned the Daily Egyptian last week to see if any information could be found to support rumors he had heard about Petit leaving.

SIUC President John C. Guyon had no comment on whether he had heard anything about Petit leaving or if he would be interested in the position if it were true.

Petit said he had been told the Southern Illinoisan had been contacted about the rumors, but attributed the entire matter to campus talk.

"You know how crazy a campus can be," Petit said.

"You can walk across any campus and say the most preposterous things to two people and the next day everyone will be talking about it."

As for the repeated talk of something interesting happening at the Board of Trustees meeting, Petit said it might be something he didn't know about.

"I'm looking forward to the meeting," he said adding that he's interested in finding out what all the talk is about.

assistant director of the Coal Research Center.

1990 amendments to the Federal Clean Air Act mandated that utilities lower their sulfur dioxide emissions by 10 million pounds in the United States by the year 2010. This may force many utilities to switch to low sulfur coal from western states instead of installing costly devices to clean the emissions.

"The Coal Development Board recognized the project was important because it represents another step in the on-going process of insuring (that) Illinois coal use in state facilities is maintained," Foster said.

The fluid-bed cogeneration system burns high sulfur coal with limestone at extremely low temperatures. The limestone is burned and turns into lime, which then absorbs the sulfur dioxide.

"The fluidization bed combustion process will provide added steam generating capacity required to meet the current and the future demands of SIUC," said John S. Moore, director of the Illinois Energy Department and chairman of the Coal Development Board in a prepared statement.

"This technology will also effectively reduce emissions and help maintain the mining economy that is vital to the Southern Illinois community," he said.

The Coal Research Center oversees funds for research into alternate uses of coal and is pursuing other means to clean Illinois coal.

SIUC is continuing research on a modified bacteria that consumes pyrite sulfur in coal and into the chemical bond that links sulfur to coal.

The need for on-going coal research has become more evident as political instability in the Middle East makes the oil flow less reliable.

"It's hard to see a time when there won't be a need for a mobile fuel, but in my mind, there is no question that soon we will be forced to use coal," Foster said.

"I foresee a future where oil will be too expensive to pump and then the real need for coal research will be clear."

Center at SIUC.

Western coal has only one percent sulfur versus Southern Illinois coal's 2 to 5 percent sulfur, said Mead.

Mead said this is not a problem affecting just Illinois.

"Union Electric is the largest single user of Illinois coal. If they switch to using Western coal, Southern Illinois will face at least short-term hardships in the form of job losses," said Mead.

Sinnott-Rowe was more optimistic about the Southern Illinois coal industry outlook, emphasizing that talks between UE and the coal delegation are far from over.

"We (Illinois Delegation for Clean Coal) are hoping the switch will be the least devastating as possible to the Southern Illinois economy," Sinnott-Rowe said.

The counties affected are Jefferson, Logan, Perry, Randolph, Saline and Williamson.

Union Electric Chief Executive Officer W.E. Cornelius indicated UE is serious about wanting to find a way to use the most Illinois coal possible, but they want to make sure they have all the information they need to make the decision.

"Our greatest concern must be to utilize the least cost method of providing energy to our more than one million customers in Missouri, Illinois and Iowa," Cornelius said.

Mead said there are many other ways to help alleviate some of the sulfur content of coal.

"Scrubbing is a good way to reduce the sulfur, but the initial costs of building the facilities for use on one boiler is about $100 million," he said.

"Although the scrubbers cost a lot initially, they will prove to be less costly than using Western coal because of the transportation and need for more coal. Western coal gives off less energy than Southern Illinois coal," Mead said.

The switch by Union Electric to western coal would be done gradually over the next decade, said Hawkins, who is the director of governmental relations of the Illinois United Mine Workers of America.

who should have them by Monday.

In a related development, three major unions representing state government went to court Wednesday in Sangamon County in Springfield where they asked a judge to order the state to pay the workers anyway. They contend the state has money in its bank accounts and is not paying the checks only because of the budget impasse.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the largest union representing state workers, said the temporary appropriation is the way to go.

"There is absolutely no reason why state services and state employees should suffer when this solution is available," said Steve Cullen, AFSCME's executive director for Illinois. "We are all here for one reason ... to protect state services from becoming victims of this political fight."

On Tuesday in the budget negotiations, lawmakers appeared to get closer to resolving their dispute over property taxes and much farther from ending their squabbles over how much money should be spent on the poor in next year's budget plan.

There is apparent agreement to cap local real estate tax increases at 5 percent in Chicago's collar counties but there is still a disagreement over what to do in Cook County outside of Chicago.

Kennedy family to play at Turley Park concert

By Allan Towell
Staff Writer

Three members of the Kennedy family will be appearing in Turley Park tonight, and of course they'll have their banjo, fiddle and guitar along.

The Lonesome River Boys, featuring Ray Kennedy on guitar and his sons Brad and Brian on fiddle and banjo, will be performing at this week's SPC Sunset Concert.

Kennedy said he and his sons have been playing bluegrass music professionally for almost six years, and have been "fiddling" around as a band for nearly a decade.

The band plays traditional music, relying on bluegrass standards for its material.

"We're eventually going to start working on our own material, but right now our playing time is limited so we're sticking with the standards," Kennedy said. "My sons enjoy playing in the 'newgrass' style, but I think as long as I'm in the band, we'll stick to the traditional songs."

Kennedy said "newgrass" music makes use of traditional bluegrass rhythms and adds electric instruments and drums, both of which are absent from roots-type bluegrass music.

For tonight, though, bluegrass fans can count on hearing such favorites as "Rockytop" and maybe even "John Henry."

The band has not had as much playing time recently as it would like, because Kennedy also works a full-time job. This leaves just weekends for practices and performances.

Kennedy said the band was hoping to play to a large crowd in Carbondale, because the larger the audience, the more he and the band enjoy themselves.

The Lonesome River Boys have recorded two self-produced albums, and make most of their appearances at bluegrass festivals. The Turley Park concert will begin at 7 p.m.

Nudist clubs more popular despite conservative trend

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (UPI) — Despite the return to social conservatism in the '90s, more and more people are stripping down and joining up with nudist clubs, a national nudist society said Wednesday.

In the past year, membership at the 200 affiliated clubs of the National Sunbathing Association has increased by about 12 percent to 40,000, said spokeswoman Debra Peterson.

"Some people are very surprised to hear that because they hear of conservative overtones around the country. I think through the last few years we've done a great job of educating the public and letting them know what nudism is and what it's not," Peterson said.

"We're letting them know that family nudism is OK. It's a wholesome activity and we're a very reputable organization."

The association, headquartered in Kissimmee, will celebrate its annual "National Nude Weekend" Saturday and Sunday.

Affiliated clubs nationwide are sponsoring sports fairs, health festivals and open houses to give outsiders a glimpse of their lifestyle.

The Cypress Cove resort in central Florida will participate by distributing information on nudity laws and by staging a series of skits, including a tribute to Lady Godiva.

Visitors are welcome. "Of course no one has to take off their clothes. We like them to come out and satisfy their curiosity. What better way than to look for themselves," Peterson said.

Visitors will find that nudists do more than work on their total tans, she said.

Research found nation's oceans littered with trash

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If the debris found washed up on the beaches of isolated islands in the South Pacific are any indication, the world's oceans are littered with all sorts of bizarre trash, a researcher said Wednesday.

In a letter published in the British journal Nature, Jim Benton of the University of Cambridge in England reported the results of informal surveys he conducted on the islands of Ducie Atoll and nearby Henderson Island.

Ducie Atoll is 3,000 miles from the nearest continent and 219 miles from the nearest inhabited island — Pitcairn Island with a population of only 50, he said.

Benton walked along 1 1/2 miles of shore on Ducie in March and recorded any litter he saw, compiling a list of 953 objects, he said.

The list included 26 shoes, 266 pieces of plastic, six light bulbs, one pair of gloves, 24 crates, 71 plastic bottles, 74 bottle tops, 44 pieces of rope and 171 glass bottles that once contained products made in more than 15 countries, he said.

"Ducie is rarely visited; it has little to offer passing boats (of which there are probably about 30 yachts per year en route between Easter Island and French Polynesia)," he said.

Solar surprise

Last eclipse of sun visible in North America until August 2017

LA PAZ, Mexico (UPI) — Astronomers, fans and downright quacks gathered amid growing excitement Wednesday to witness one of nature's grandest sky shows, a total eclipse of the sun visible to millions from Hawaii to Brazil.

Observers across most of the United States can expect to see a partial solar eclipse in which varying amounts of the sun's disk will be blocked by the moon in the late morning and afternoon as Earth's satellite swings about in its orbit.

But the real show will be along the "path of totality," the 140-mile-wide swath stretching from Hawaii to the Baja Peninsula and on into Brazil along which observers can watch the moon move directly between the sun and Earth, casting a long shadow that will turn day into night.

"Here in Hawaii, the shadow of the moon will descend almost as a horizontal pencil of shadow straight down upon us at about 2,000 mph," said Richard Canfield, an astronomer at the University of Hawaii. "We'll see that coming in the upper atmosphere and then all of the sudden, whoosh! We'll be in darkness. It'll be exciting."

It is the last solar eclipse widely visible from North America until Aug. 21, 2017, and one of the best in decades, if not the century, in terms of duration and visibility, with millions of spectators expected to witness the event.

While solar eclipses are not particularly rare — at least two occur each year somewhere in the world — the July 11 spectacle is unprecedented in that it will take place in view of major observatories in Hawaii, giving astronomers a unique chance to study the sun's outer atmosphere, or corona.

"It's the first time in history that an eclipse has passed over a complex of the world's largest telescopes," Canfield said.

"They're being taken advantage of to do the kinds of things big telescopes do very well, namely, to resolve the tiniest features within the sun's corona. The exploratory nature of this opportunity will give us discoveries concerning features we never anticipated existed."

In Hawaii, the sun will be blotted out by the moon for more than four minutes, while observers in Ruiz in the western Mexico state of Nayarit will be able to watch the total eclipse for the maximum six minutes, 54 seconds, the longest duration of any total solar eclipse until June 13, 2132.

The moon's shadow will race from Hawaii to southern Baja, then most of central Mexico, the Pacific Coast of Central America and into sparsely populated areas of South America.

Costner movie first of summer to top $100 million

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Action-adventure movie "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves" has become the first summer film to pass $100 million in domestic gross, crossing that benchmark in its 26th day of release, Warner Brothers said Wednesday.

"Robin Hood," starring Kevin Costner, has now sold more than $100.2 million in tickets and will probably take in about $150 million. It was No. 3 at the box-office over the Fourth of July five-day weekend, taking in $14.6 million.

Costner's previous movie, "Dances With Wolves," has now topped $178.4 million in grosses domestically for Orion Pictures. "Hood" became the second movie to top the $100 million mark this year after Orion's "Silence of the Lambs," which has sold more than $126 million in tickets.

20th Century Fox's "Sleeping With the Enemy," has taken in $99.8 million after 152 days in release.

SIUC's MBA program expands with women

By Omonpee O. Whitfield
Staff Writer

The number of women enrolled in the Master's of Business and Administration program is at an all-time high, said Gregory White, associate dean of the College of Business and Administration.

White said nearly 40 percent of students enrolled in the MBA programs are women. White said although there are significantly larger percentages of women enrolled in other master's programs, the increased percentage of women enrolled in a business curriculum is impressive.

"In the past, the people who were in the MBA program tended to be white males," White said.

Joe Pineau, MBA coordinator, said in addition to more women enrolling in the program, international students comprise more than half of all students in the program. He also said enrollment as a whole increased since 1991.

"It's an interesting mix," Pineau said. "Fifty percent of the students enrolled in the MBA program come from majors other than business, and more than 50 percent of the students enrolled are international students."

Pineau said despite the recession, admissions to the program have increased since last year. He said more than 50 percent of students have assistantships and only have to pay fees, instead of paying full tuition.

International student enrollment is least affected by the recession, Pineau said.

"Just because our country is in a recession doesn't mean that other countries are in a recession," Pineau said. "In the fall of 1991, we started with 102 students enrolled. During the spring and this summer, enrollment increased to 108, slightly more than last year's enrollment."

White said although the current total enrollment is not an all-time high, it is significant because of the increasing number of women enrollees.

Pineau said the increase in women in the master's program is a result of an increase in the number of domestic students in the program. While most of the international students in the MBA program are males, the increase in domestic students resulted in more American women applying to the program, he said.

COBA Dean Thomas Guttridge said he is pleased with the number of women enrolled in the MBA program as well as the number of enrollees for the upcoming semester.

African National Congress: Lifting restrictions premature

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — The African National Congress Wednesday called the United States' lifting of sanctions against South Africa "premature," while President Frederik de Klerk and the South African business community applauded the decision.

The ANC issued a statement Wednesday night saying that despite de Klerk's efforts to end apartheid, it could not support the lifting of sanctions because the white minority government still held political prisoners and violence in black townships was obstructing political activity.

"We regard this action as premature with regard to (these) two specific items," the ANC statement said.

More than 1,000 people have died this year in township fighting between ANC supporters and those of its rival the Inkatha Freedom Party. The ANC blames the government for not stopping violence and says it has impeded effective grassroots organization.

"Furthermore large numbers of persons, defined as political prisoners in terms of agreement reached between the ANC and the South African government, remain in jail," it said.

In addition, South Africa's constitution still excludes blacks from voting for members of Parliament. De Klerk welcomed the end of five years of sanctions.

"The end of the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act is to be welcomed as a further step towards the normalization of relations between our country and the United States," de Klerk said in a statement.

"The removal of these sanctions will contribute to the revival of our economy to the benefit of all South Africa, especially those disadvantaged South Africans who have borne the brunt of sanctions, including many of the unemployed," he said.

Anti-apartheid activists: 'A sad day for America'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Randall Robinson, head of TransAfrica, the nation's major anti-apartheid group, said Wednesday that President Bush "cynically violated" the law in lifting economic sanctions against South Africa.

"Today, for 28 million South African, is a tragic day, for they have been abandoned in their quest for freedom," Robinson told a news conference just an hour after Bush announced he was ending the economic restrictions against the white minority regime.

"It is also a sad day for America," he added, "use President Bush has cynically violated the spirit and, more importantly, the letter of the American sanctions law."

It was pressure by TransAfrica, including mass demonstrations and arrests at the South African embassy, that resulted in passage of the 1986 sanctions legislation over the veto of President Reagan.

Bush's argument that the South African government had met the conditions imposed by the sanctions law was disputed by TransAfrica and other groups, including Interfaith Impact, the Protestant, Jewish and Roman Catholic lobbying group in Washington, and the NAACP, meeting in convention in Houston.

On Capitol Hill, Rep. Ron Dellums, D-Calif., author of the 1986 law imposing tough sanctions, sharply criticized Bush's action, saying conditions in the law for termination "have not been met."

Rep. Edolphus Towns, D-N.Y., chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, called Bush's action "premature and inappropriate."

Sanctions lifted, but U.S. knows rights violated

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Even though President Bush lifted sanctions against South Africa on Wednesday, U.S. officials continue to acknowledge human rights violations against that country's black majority.

A State Department report released in February concluded that although President Frederik de Klerk was working to abolish apartheid in his country, his police force continued to torture, and in some cases perhaps kill, political detainees.

A State Department official said Wednesday the agency still stands by that report. "We stand on our report, which we feel is accurate and objective," said Nat Kingsley, spokesman for the department's Human Rights Division.

Bush, when announcing he would lift the sanctions, also acknowledged that "all is not totally well" in South Africa, but said he believed his action would "result in more progress toward racial equality instead of less."

A guarantee of basic human rights to all blacks was not one of the five conditions Congress set down for South Africa to meet before economic sanctions would be removed. But critics of Bush's action say the country's human rights record and blacks' inability to vote should have been given more consideration.

The State Department in its report said that just last year, at least 12 persons died under suspicious circumstances while in police custody, likely because of their political beliefs.

State government workers eligible for no-interest loans

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — State government employees will be able to apply for a short term, no-interest loan from a credit union if they are not paid as scheduled next week.

Credit Union One, which holds money for about 10,000 state government members in Illinois, announced Wednesday that loans for the full amount of the workers' paychecks will be given at zero interest for 30 days.

About 21,000 state employees are in danger of not getting a paycheck next week because of the state budget impasse and even Gov. Jim Edgar has admitted those workers might have a hard time meeting mortgage payments and other obligations.

The credit union's marketing director Sandy Taylor said only people eligible for a financial loan and workers who miss paychecks can apply for money.

"If their check would come, we would expect repayment. They could take the 30 days I suppose but we would hope they would come in," Taylor said.

Taylor added, "The pool is really unlimited and we could cover $12 million in paychecks. I'm sure it's not going to happen like that but I'm sure we could cover that."

Gorbachev plea expected at summit for foreign investment to aid reforms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has no illusions about swapping an ambitious economic reform package for a "pot of gold" when the world's major industrial nations gather for an historic summit in London next week, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said Wednesday.

The Soviet leader will present his plan — which may include an end to a ban on private property — on the second day of the three-day meeting of the Group of Seven industrialized nations.

In return, Gorbachev is expected to ask for pledges of future investment to help prop up his nation's tottering economy — but not, Brady said at a White House briefing, a specific sum of cash.

"The idea of a grand bargain with some big pot of gold is one that A. (Gorbachev) will not come to London to ask for and B, that the participants .. wouldn't regard as a way that would advantage the cause of the Soviet Union at this time," Brady said.

Infusions of fresh cash depend on Gorbachev's proposal, he said.

Parliament: Yugoslav army return to barracks

STRASBOURG, France (UPI) — The European Parliament voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to urge the Yugoslav army to return to its barracks and condemn the use of force in the crisis of the federation.

The vote easily approved a compromise text presented at the legislature calling on all parties involved in the standoff "to abstain from any new use of force."

The text, supported by all parties except for the extreme right, expressed support for the truce brokered by the European Community on July 7, but it also acknowledged the right of Yugoslav republics and autonomous territories "to determine their future in a peaceful and democratic fashion."

The resolution said these entities should fully respect the obligation of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe including those regarding human rights and accept international obligations made by the Yugoslav federation. The European legislators expressed satisfaction at the decision of the governments of Slovenia and Croatia to suspend for three months the implementation of their independence declarations of June 25.

Yeltsin sworn in; Russian president first ever elected

MOSCOW (UPI) — Boris Yeltsin was sworn in as president of the Russian republic Wednesday, becoming the first popularly elected leader in the 1,000-year history of Russia. As his sometimes bitter opponent Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev looked on, Yeltsin, 60, took the brief presidential oath.

"During the exercise of the powers of the president of the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic, I vow to observe the constitution and laws of the Russian Federation, uphold its sovereignty, respect and safeguard the rights and freedoms of the individual and citizens, the rights of the peoples of the Russian Federation and perform in good faith the duties entrusted to me by the people," he said.

Bush in favor of closing 39 U.S. military bases

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush approved in full Wednesday the recommendations of a special blue ribbon commission to close 39 military installations around the country at an eventual savings of $1.5 billion a year.

Emerging from the White House after a brief Oval Office meeting with Bush, the chairman of the base-closing panel, former Rep. Jim Courter, R-N.J., acknowledged the painful cost in jobs for communities nationwide, but predicted "that with a little work, cooperation and some ingenuity" the affected localities "will be the beneficiaries of greater prosperity down the line."

Bush approved the panel's recommendations after his defense secretary, Dick Cheney, endorsed the report that recommended closing California's Fort Ord and the Philadelphia Navy Yard, among others.

The report now goes to Capitol Hill, where Congress has 45 legislative days to take a straight up or down vote.

Courter confidently predicted the recommendations would be approved by lawmakers by mid-September.

"I think it will be readily accepted by the Congress," he said. "The president has every confidence ... that this report is going to receive the blessing of the Congress, will be implemented and will save American taxpayers about $1.5 billion each year after the cost of the closure is completed."

Of the president's action, Courter said: "He accepted it in total. And now the Congress has only two options — that is to accept it or reject it in total as a package."

The decisions, reflecting the end of the Cold War and plans to shrink the Pentagon by 25 percent, not only will affect thousands of jobs across the country but also will affect local economies and real estate markets.

No base would close immediately and the gates will slam shut a few years from now only after a closure process streamlined by the law creating the closure commission.

Courter reported that Bush was particularly curious as to which base was the hardest for the panel members to decide to close.

The former congressman said it was generally agreed that the Philadelphia shipyard was among the most difficult, as well as Fort Ord in Seaside, Calif.

Cutbacks hit state arsenal installations

ROCK ISLAND (UPI) — The Rock Island Arsenal will suffer a net loss of 700 jobs as a result of President Bush's decision Wednesday to close 39 military installations across the country and realign others.

Steve Vetzner, a spokesman for Rep. Lane Evans, D-Ill., said 1,400 jobs would be moved from Rock Island to Huntsville, Ala., when the Armament Munitions and Chemical Command moves to the Redstone Arsenal, Rock Island, however, would gain 700 jobs when the Depot Systems Command moves to the Quad Cities from Pennsylvania.

Vetzner said the shifting is expected to be accomplished over three or four years and employees probably will be offered transfers.

The Rock Island Arsenal currently provides nearly 7,000 civilian and military jobs.

Federal officials estimate the base closings and realignments recommended by a special blue ribbon commission will save the government $1.5 billion a year.

Former Rep. Jim Courter, R-N.J., acknowledged the painful cost in jobs for communities nationwide, but predicted the affected localities will have prosperity down the line.

Senate fails to limit debating stalling vote on anti-crime bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate refused Wednesday to shut down a Republican-led filibuster blocking final passage of the year's major anti-crime bill, delaying the legislation again and putting its future in doubt.

It was the second time in the three weeks that the Senate failed to limit debate that would force a final vote.

The vote was 56-43, four votes short of the 60 required for cloture. In the showdown, 49 Democrats and seven Republicans voted for cloture, while seven Democrats and 36 Republicans voted against it.

"This vote is a test whether one is for or against a crime bill," Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell said. "The only way we are going to get a crime bill is if we get cloture."

Senate Republican leader

Robert Dole said Republicans and Democrats had sought to settle some "unresolved matters," and urged his Republican colleagues to vote against debate-limiting cloture.

Included in the bill is a five-day waiting period for the purchase of a handgun, with states required to run a background check on the buyer, and a ban on the make and sale of 14 semiautomatic "assault" weapons.

The $3 billion legislation also proposes the death penalty for 51 federal crimes, tightens curbs on death row appeals and relaxes police search and seizure restrictions if they are carried out with a warrant and in "good faith." Other major provisions of the bill would send $1 billion to state and local law enforcement agencies to hire 10,000 new officers.

Companies bow to FDA requirement to discontinue sale of AIDS test kits

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Two companies have agreed to comply with a government order to stop selling insurance companies an unapproved saliva test for AIDS, the Food and Drug Administration announced Wednesday.

Epiptoe Inc., of Beaverton, Ore., and Home Office Reference Laboratory Inc. of Lenexa, Kan., agreed to the FDA's June 28 demand to stop marketing OraSure test kits for AIDS, the FDA said.

Home Office, which had been marketing "large quantities" of the test kits to insurance companies to screen potential policy holders since January, also will retrieve any of the kits that have already been distributed, the FDA said.

The FDA's action was prompted by an inquiry about Epiptoe's and Home Office's activities by United Press International in April.

While the FDA has approved blood tests for AIDS and is reviewing applications for approval to sell saliva tests — including Epiptoe's — no saliva tests have yet been approved and therefore none can be marketed, the FDA said. The "improper commercialization of an unapproved medical device represented a serious breach of the pre-market approval system which allows FDA to determine the safety of devices," FDA Commissioner David Kessler said.

Fast-paced, driven people inclined to hypertension, heart attack risks

DALLAS (UPI) — Hard-driving "Type A" people apparently are at high risk for high blood pressure and tend to have hostile attitudes, talk fast and interrupt others, researchers reported Wednesday.

Previous research has shown that time-pressured, hard-working so-called "Type A" personalities are at increased risk for heart attacks.

But previous studies of the relationship between Type A behavior and high blood pressure produced mixed results. In the new study, Jane Irvine of the University of Toronto in Canada and her colleagues screened workers at a variety of work places and identified a group of 88 men and 21 women with high blood pressure and then tested them for Type A personality traits.

The new study differed from previous studies in that none of the subjects was on medication, the researchers tested the subjects blood pressure more than once and diagnosed those with Type A with an accurate test, she said.

"This is the first study that has done structured interview assessment of Type A in a population with high blood pressure," she said.

"The important thing about this study is it was done in WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. veterans of the Persian Gulf War show fewer psychological problems than soldiers who fought in earlier wars, the Department of Veterans Affairs said in a report released Wednesday.

But veterans' advocates say it's too early to draw that conclusion because symptoms of psychological disorders may not be diagnosed until years after a soldier's stint in the military ends.

Since the war ended in February, veterans facilities have seen some 2,800 soldiers who fought in the Gulf War, including 240 who were

Clinic seeking 300 possibly AIDS-infected

NASHUA, N.H. (UPI) — The Hitchcock clinic has so far been unable to locate about 300 patients who may have been exposed to an AIDS-related infection and efforts are under way to find them, a spokesman said Wednesday.

The patients were among 1,800 who came in contact with a health care worker who tested positive for human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which can lead to AIDS. The infected employee has not been identified because of state confidentiality laws, but several news accounts have described him as a doctor, possibly a surgeon.

The incident was the first involving a health care worker in New Hampshire.

Spokesman Bill Burtis said all patients who may have been exposed to the virus were notified beginning last week by certified mail. About 300 of those were returned for lack of a current address.

"We're double checking with the post office to see if they have any further information," Burtis said.

treated for psychiatric problems, according to the report by mental health experts from the Defense and Veterans Affairs departments.

Ten of those were treated for post-traumatic stress disorder or PTSD, most of them veterans of the Vietnam War who had been re-traumatized by their experiences in the gulf, the report said.

"We have seen few cases of PTSD to date in our health-care facilities," said Edward J. Derwinski, secretary of veterans affairs.

"We have begun special efforts to conduct additional outreach to this segment of the veteran population that may need our help in the future."

The department said in a statement that the data "suggests that the Persian Gulf War appears to have been less traumatic than World War II, or the Korean and Vietnam wars."

But Paul Egan of Vietnam Veterans of America said it was too early to make that kind of comparison.

"I would submit to you that there is a reason for the meaning of the word 'post' in the term post-traumatic stress disorder," he said.

American skiing team trains during off-season

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — The United States ski team added volleyball and the ancient art of tai chi to its off-season conditioning program this week in search of ways to keep up with the year-round skiers from Europe.

With a few months to go before the 1991-92 World Cup circuit begins in Park City, Utah, the leaders of the U.S. Ski Team are hoping their new approach to conditioning will keep their young men's and women's teams physically sharp and mentally focused 12 months a year.

"You can't bring a team together

World Cup training includes volleyball and ancient art of tai chi for six or 10 days and beat their heads against the wall and then say they are ready for the season," said Bill Egan, the men's downhill coach.

American skiers who have been scattered across the country in the summer months have been at a disadvantage compared to teams in Europe, where the snow is available longer and is a low-priced train ride away.

"You get in good skiing condition only by skiing," Egan said, "but I hope (this program) will build our intensity level when we get on the snow."

After four knee injuries last winter floored the women's team, officials decided an overhaul of the off-season conditioning was needed with more variety added and more individual attention.

Two dozen members of the men's team and about 12 women took part in this week's "dry land" training camp at Point Loma Nazarene College overlooking the Pacific. The skiers who will represent the United States in the 1992 Olympics took part in running and agility drills, lifted weights at the nearby Marine Corps Recruit Depot, played volleyball and received their introduction to tai chi from Vince McCullough, who teaches the Oriental cross between martial arts and meditation at Saddleback College in Orange County.

Moving very slowly through a series of choreographed, karatestyle movements might seem a paradox in a sport where the participants fly down the side of a mountain striving to shave fractions of seconds from their time.

But tai chi helps skiers work on their balance and concentration in the same way the tough Norwegian team is given ballet instruction during the off-season.

"You have to be able to wait until the right moment," said Ueli Luthi, head men's coach. "One of the biggest mistakes the athletes can make is to try to move too fast."

move 5 1/2 games up on the struggling Boston Red Sox.

Toronto has been without Dave Stieb and Kelly Gruber, but Boston's rotation behind Roger Clemens has been hurt. Matt Young, Danny Darwin and Mike Gardiner are disabled.

"Right now, our staff is bullet-riddled," said Boston third baseman Wade Boggs.

"We're to the point where we don't sit and think about us, we think about the Blue Jays," said

Clemens.

Pittsburgh appeared to have the NL East in hand until a surge from the New York Mets narrowed the Pirates' advantage to 2 1/2 games.

Also, the Mets can look forward to a boost from the return of starter Sid Fernandez.

"I don't know if Pittsburgh can win," said Pirates third baseman Bobby Bonilla. "There is lots of time. The Mets have made it a race again."

South Africa in no hurry for events

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (UPI) — The chairman of South Africa's newly recognized National Olympic Committee Wednesday urged the Republic's athletes not to rush into international competition even though the barriers have been removed.

Sam Ramsamy's moment of triumph came Tuesday when South Africa was welcomed back to the Olympic Movement 21 years after being expelled because of its apartheid laws.

With the dropping of an I, the Interim National Olympic Committee of South Africa (INOCSA) became the National Olympic Committee of South Africa (NOCSA) by the decree of International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch.

But Ramsamy, a long-time campaigner against apartheid in sport, is anxious the fruits of victory should not be thrown away in a mad rush by some of the individual sports bodies.

Reflecting on the lifting of the moratorium in sports conforming to IOC regulations, he said: "One of the reasons why we wanted the authority was to move people who are stationary and at the same time to put the brakes on people who are moving too fast because neither group is helping the cause of unity and non-racialism in South Africa.

"We needed the IOC recognition to give us the authority to intervene in South African sport.

"We find, especially with the former white groups, they are impatient. But they have waited 20 years and waiting a few more months is immaterial. Unity and non-racialism must be meaningful for the whole of South Africa.

for learning Aikido.

"The club is run by the students, so it's not a real high pressure school," he said.

"There are some people that come to all three meetings a week, some come once a week and some drift in and out of it," he said.

Fleming said the main reason for less frequent class visits is students' class schedules.

"There's something for everyone," Rankin said. "If a student has an interest in an activity not represented here, we will accommodate them and help them start their group."

Rankin said the first step in starting a sports club is to become a Registered Student Organization through the Office of Student Development.

To become an RSO, a group of students interested in forming the club need stop by the Office of Student Development and pick up an application packet.

The application packet contains the procedure for becoming an RSO, blank petition forms and a sample constitution.

The group must have a minimum of 10 signatories on the petition and formulate a constitution.

Debra Watson, assistant director of student development, said the only constitutions which have ever had a problem getting approved were ones that segregated members or that were discriminatory.

Once the application is approved by student development, it then goes to the Undergraduate Student Government.

Watson said the application generally takes two to four weeks to be approved by USG because the meetings are biweekly.

Once the group has become an RSO, it then needs to apply to the Sport Club Council to become a member RSO.

Thom said that part of the process runs relatively smoothly so the group can begin to have fun.

The various sport clubs will be represented at the Freshman Orientation Night at the Recreation Center on August 14.

Sport clubs also will recruit new members during the first few weeks in the fall.

People interested in joining or starting a sport club should call the club's representative or should call Rankin at 453-1272.

"Fern Cliff State Park is one of the climbing areas that the state runs and the area is limited to a very small area because of accessibility," Ulnar said.

Fink said if the land is acquired, camping most likely would be prohibited to preserve the area.

Fred Tetreault, public information officer for the Illinois Department of Conservation, said because climbing is very dangerous and a lot of inexperienced people try it, the state does not promote it as a recreational activity.

"We don't encourage climbing because we don't want anyone to get hurt and we don't want to get sued," Tetreault said.

Ulnar, who has been climbing in Southern Illinois for 15 years, said there is a big difference between skilled climbers and weekend scramblers.

"Whenever someone falls off a cliff and gets hurt the media says it was a climber," he said. "It is this kind of thing that gives climbers a bad name as wild and crazy individuals."

Ulnar said the group is concerned about the Drapers and Cedars areas because the state closed climbing in Mississippi Palisades State Park in Northern Illinois because of the impact of climbing on the environment.

John Jachino, site superintendent for Mississippi Palisades State Park said a lot of climbing routes still are open in the park.

"We only closed certain routes throughout the park because we found there was damage being done to some of the plant life," Jachino said.

Hagerty said climbers could pose a threat to the bluffs in Southern Illinois.

"There are a lot of areas in the forest that are fragile but aren't marked," Hagerty said.

"The climbers don't know where these spots are and they sometimes accidentally destroy some of the plants in these areas," he said.

Fink said Drapers and Cedar Bluffs were set aside as Illinois Natural Inventory areas in 1970.

"The most common type of damage done by climbers is trampling on the top and bottom and the scraping off of lichens and mosses on the face of the bluff," he said.

Ulnar said climbers in general are environmentally-aware and are eager to work with the Forest Service and the Department of Conservation to manage the climbing areas.

"Climbers usually tend to repair their own areas, stay on trails and traditionally pack out more garbage than they bring in," he said.
