Faculty announces results of vote today

SARA BEAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Results expected are for union to ratify contract

Representatives of the SIUC faculty association will announce the results of its vote on the tentative contract agreement with the University administration at 11:45 a.m. today in front of Rehn Hall.

It is expected by some union officials that the union will ratify the contract, even though Walter Jaehnic, faculty association media coordinator, was reluctant to discuss the projections of the ballot counting prior to today's announcement.

Jaehnic said Tuesday afternoon, he could not reveal the result of the vote until the time of the official announcement Wednesday.

"Either the faculty will go for it or they won't," Jaehnic said. "I can't talk about that until then."

Jaehnic said he was unsure what percentage of the ballots have been counted because he doesn't know how many members voted.

"We had 290 ballots in last week, but I don't know how many ballots have come in since then," Jaehnic said.

"We are expecting somewhere around 300 ballots total, though."

Faculty Association leaders voted almost unanimously June 16 to endorse the tentative contract to their membership.

The 37-2 vote suggested a hopeful future for the proposed contract.

Faculty Association Vice President Mary Lamb, one of the two who voted against the contract, said that although she did not support the tentative contract, the majority of tenured faculty favor the agreement and plan to vote in favor of it.

Lamb said she felt the tentative agreement was a good start, but did not address some important issues.

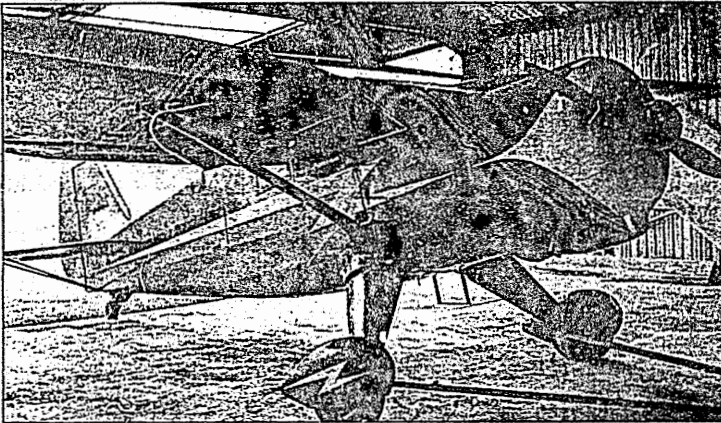

Lamb said she did not think the tentative agreement adequately addressed the issue of attrition.

"I will take it upon myself to be the watchdog over attrition for the next year in my role as vice president," Lamb said.

After the faculty association makes a decision on the tentative contract, the Board of Trustees will have to vote on it. SIUC President Ted Sanders recommended to the Board at its June 9 meeting that it give authority to the executive committee to approve the contract if it was ratified.

The executive committee is made up of Board Chairman A. D. Van Meter, Springfield; Board member George Wilkins, Edwardsville and Board member Harris Rowe, Jacksonville.

Wings of flight

ANGIE ROYER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

John Johnson takes to the sky in a red, well-conditioned V-77 aircraft that once was flown for the British army during World War II.

The plane that Johnson owns is 42 feet in wingspan, 3,000 pounds in weight and 29 feet in length. Johnson is a computer information specialist at Morris Library.

"It's a single engine plane with an interior like a '38 Buick," Johnson said.

He has owned the plane since 1982, and it is now worth $100,000.

"The plane is 55 years old and is considered an antique," Johnson said. "I have to be very careful about that, you see, my wife is five years older than my airplane."

Five hundred planes were built for the American army and leased to Britain after the American army decided they did not need them. The 500 planes were split up into three varieties for use.

One group was aerial camera planes used to photo the grounds below, another group was for instrument training with the instructor in the back, and the last group was called the Reliant 3's.

The Reliant 3's were used to fly officials to wherever they needed to go. The plane that Johnson owns was assigned to the pool of Winston Churchill.

But because records were lost after the war, it is unknown for sure if Winston

COMPUTER SPECIALIST TAKES TO THE AIR WITH ARMY AIRCRAFT FROM WORLD WAR II

Churchill actually rode in the plane.

After the war, there was a surplus market for aircraft. All planes had to be certified by Federal Aviation Administration. Stenson Company purchased the planes for $500 each and were remanufactured and approved by the FAA.

Johnson had fixed everything that was wrong with the plane, and now it has a second engine and third skin.

"The plane flies like new," he said. "I certainly would have no qualms about jumping in the plane and taking it to Vegas."

"If there is anybody around when Johnson decides to go flying, he will take people up with him, and at times he gives people the chance to fly the plane themselves.

"It can carry five people," Johnson said. "It seems kind of silly to fly it by myself."

He does not charge people for the flight, unless the passenger wants to chip in on the gas because of his or her love of flying.

"I don't fly my planes to make money," he said. "It's an addiction."

There are some weather conditions that Johnson will not fly in such as ice storms, summer thunderstorms or when there is heavy ground fog.

"No matter how good you can fly," he said, "you have to land some time, and if you can't see the airport, you can't land the plane."

Wayman Cavaness, a custodian at SIUC for the past 15 years, is Johnson's co-pilot. Because of the insurance that is on the plane, Cavaness cannot fly the plane by himself. The insurance is limiting to where a person must have 1,500 hours of time flying a tail-wheeled airplane.

"I only know about three people who meet those requirements," he said.

Both Cavaness and Johnson are involved in the Civil Air Patrol. Johnson had been involved in the Civil Air Patrol 15 years ago and got back into the Civil Air Patrol six months ago. Johnson would take his plane during practice missions for the Civil Air Patrol.

Cavaness has been in the Civil Air Patrol for seven years.

The Civil Air Patrol was formed one month before the Pearl Harbor bombing in 1941. The U. S. was helping support England by sending them cargo ships as Adolf Hitler started to conquer Europe.

Germany sent submarines to New York Harbor to sink the cargo ships being sent to Pilot John Johnson (left), a computer information specialist at Morris Library, and his co-pilot Wayman Cavaness, an SIUC custodian, provide flights for people on Johnson's reconditioned V-77 aircraft, a plane that was once assigned to Winston Churchill.

CHECKING THINGS OUT: Matt Bober, a senior in mechanical engineering from Orland Park and a volunteer firefighter at the Makanda Township Fire Department, performs monthly equipment checks on oxygen tanks used by the firefighters.

Students ablaze with excitement

HELP: SIUC students assist Makanda's fire department between classes and studies.

KAREN BLATTER,
STUDENT AFFAIRS EDITOR

Lying sound asleep in bed, Mark Dutter is awakened by an ear-piercing siren.

Running out the door, Dutter, a senior in marketing from Beloit Wis., and volunteer for the Makanda Township Fire Department, straps on fire-proof overalls and jacket and jumps onto a bright, red fire engine.

Dutter is one of the quickest to react to a fire call because his home is the Makanda Township Fire House, 5420 Old U.S. Highway 51, which is one of the reasons why he loves volunteering.

"I like the quick response," he said. "In less than a minute, I'm going out the door, and that makes me feel good."

Dutter is the only firefighter who lives in the fire house. His room is furnished with all the comforts of an apartment. Because of living in the firehouse, Dutter has to live different than if he had his own apartment.

"Living here is different because it's a professional atmosphere," he said. "Here, you have to act professional at all times. It's tough, but worth it to do something I love."

Matt Bober, a senior in mechanical engineering from Orland Park, has been volunteering at the Makanda Township Fire Department for the past three years.

Bober said being a volunteer firefighter provides him with a different outlet than just spending time on campus.

"It gives you a chance to do an activity outside of school and is exciting at times," he said. "And it gives you a chance to help people too."

Al Yancey, deputy chief of the Makanda Township Fire Department, appreciates the time Dutter and Bober dedicate to fighting fires.

"Students are a valuable asset," he said. "They have the ability of flexible hours and are young and in good physical condition."

Even though Dutter and Bober enjoy firefighting, class and tests come before responding to a fire.

Bober said school is his main priority and being a volunteer is second.

"Sometimes school comes first," he said. "If I have a test, I'll call and say I have to study. I don't let my school suffer."

One of the challenges Dutter and Bober face is managing time. Because of the unpredictability of a fire, volunteering adds a different excitement to Dutter's life.

"You don't know when your pager is going to go off," he said. "Otherwise it gets tiring going to class and work."

Bober said being a volunteer is different from being involved in a student activity.

"It's not like joining a club," he said. "It's nothing like that, it's something more exciting to do and is different from just school stuff."

Yancey said one of the benefits of being involved in the fire department is the environment it provides to the volunteers.

"We become like a family," he said. "We're there to help each other. It's like a close-knit family, once you are here, you are part of the family."

Union helps SIUC's staff

MEETING: Members of the faculty association aid professional with negotiating process.

JAMES FULLER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Members of the SIUC faculty association negotiating team met Tuesday with professional staff, who are wanting to form a union of their own, to share their insights into the contract negotiating process.

The Illinois Education Association is currently conducting a union card drive to call an election so professional staff can vote on whether to be represented in collective bargaining. Tentative plans call for an election in the fall.

Members of the negotiating team recognized the recent 5 percent across-the-board pay increase for non-union staff as an effort by top University administrators to kill the union card drive.

Team members said a similar pay increase was used to placate staff and stop representation in 1988, but said faculty face

Argersinger says University needs more chances to shine

VISIBILITY: Chancellor wants visitors and honor society to enhance campus.

SHARRIE GLATZHOFFER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC Chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger stressed the need for making the University and its achievements more visible and the need for greater communication between University departments at her first Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday.

"It is our duty and responsibility to show what we can do as a University on a united front," she said. "We have to give people a compelling reason to invest in us."

Argersinger discussed initiating campus visits from people such as Dan Golden, the administrator of NASA, and Rita Colwell, the director of the National Science Foundation.

"We need to be interacting at the highest level with foundation and corporate leaders," she said.

Other plans include getting an SIUC chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, the nation's oldest honor society.

Another of Argersinger's goals is to examine and revise the University budget process to make it more open and to better allocate funds.

Argersinger also intends to visit every department on campus beginning with the administrative departments.

In other business, the Faculty Senate voted to accept an agreement between the Faculty Association, Faculty Senate and the Graduate Council.

Under the principles of agreement, the leaders of each organization will meet regularly to discuss faculty-related issues and ideas. The agreement also spells out the jurisdiction of the three faculty bodies.

The Senate also discussed eliminating the College of Applied Sciences and Arts construction technology degree and transferring the program to John A. Logan College. Faculty involved in the program will be consulted, and the issue will be put to a vote in September.

SIUC's Division of Continuing Education director has been elected as the president of the Illinois Council for Continuing Higher Education by the council's representatives at its annual meeting in Chicago.

Student Recreation Center suffers flood damage

The wood surfaces of the old basketball, racquetball and squash courts at the Recreation Center were damaged from the flood on June 29.

Bill McMinn, Intramural Recreational Sports director, said the racquetball and squash courts are being serviced by Munters Moisture Control Service. The courts should be back to normal in three weeks.

The basketball courts are being used for basketball camps, despite the damage. McMinn said the extent of the damage to the basketball court has yet to be determined.

"The custodians did a good job of cleaning up, so consequently if we keep the humidity low, the damage maybe minimal," he said.

McMinn said he will have to wait six to eight months to be sure about the damage.

"The worse case scenario is that we may need to re-sand and refinish the floor," he said. "Right now, the moisture level is about 14 percent. It has to decrease to 8 percent before we can make a final evaluation and that will take six to eight months."

McMinn said he does not know how much the damage will cost.

The cost of damage to other campus buildings affected by flooding June 29 has not been determined.

Japanese prime minister resigns amid controversy

Ryutaro Hashimoto resigned as Japan's prime minister Monday, taking the blame for his party's humiliating election losses after a voter backlash against the government's handling of the economy.

"Everything was due to my lack of abilities," said Hashimoto, who also stepped down as president of the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP).

"I am taking the blame for the big defeat," he told a news conference calmly. "I told a meeting of LDP executives that I would resign."

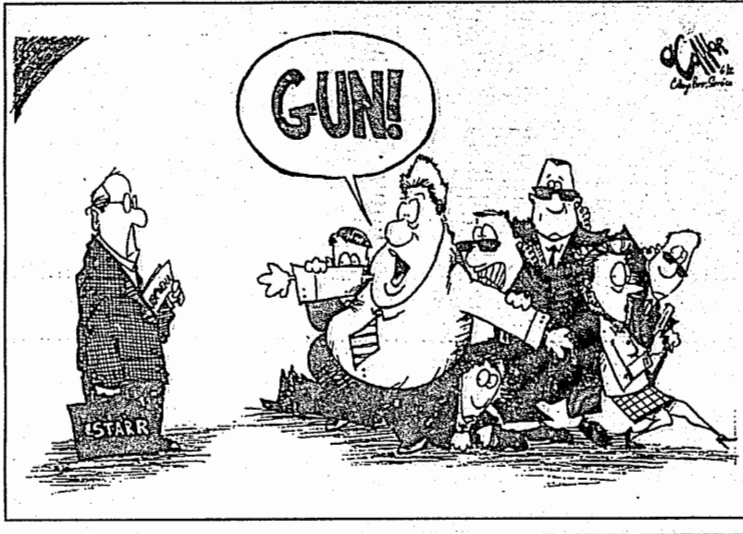

Hashimoto's cabinet will resign as soon as a new leader is chosen and accepted by parliament. Party lawmakers will meet on July 21 to select a new premier. Until then, Hashimoto will remain a leader.

In Washington, White House spokesman Michael McCurry said the change in Japan's leadership "doesn't alter the strong nature of the relationship" between Washington and Tokyo.

"The U.S. has a close, enduring relationship with Japan," McCurry said, adding that President Bill Clinton "looks forward to working with the new Japanese government."

The party retained only 44 of its 61 seats in Sunday's upper house elections — its worst result since polls in 1989.

Our Word

Campus employment needs diversity

SIUC is an institution that prides itself on diversity. Why then is that diversity is not seen throughout campus offices? This was the question raised in a study that examined the racial distributions in the workplace here at SIUC. The statistics are questionable at best, deplorable at worst, and have caused racial concerns to surface. Although the differences in racial representation cannot be directly linked to any racist activity on campus, the numbers are in dire need of attention.

The report indicates that out of 633 office clerk positions available on campus, only 115 were held by African-Americans. In contrast African-Americans held almost half of all janitorial and food service jobs. The African-American student body should not be made to feel that serving food and cleaning up after people are their only options for work on campus. African-Americans represent 22 percent of the undergraduate workforce and that number should be represented in the workforce. Equal representation must come from within the departments.

There are several reasons why this misrepresentation might exist. One reason can be described as a "recycling" of employees. Some offices bring back the same people and disregard any applications turned in by job seeking students. Many jobs can be found out by hearsay, friends within a department, communicating only amongst themselves so opportunities are not fully realized to the student body.

Another reason is due to the lack of academic advisers actively participating in informing new students of job opportunities on campus. Several departments, like the Center for Basic Skills and the Journalism department, do actively inform students and should be commended for that. Perhaps more departments should take control.

In order for the numbers to change, several things must be done. One is that the job market here on campus has to be advertised. Many students do not know the first place to look for a job on campus. Opportunities need to be aggressively recognized so all students are aware of their existence. This requires department heads to not keep their doors closed and realize that there are more students than what they have working for them in need of a job. This attitude needs to stretch to advertisement also. Advisers need to inform students of the various jobs available and not send them out searching for that elusive job in blindness.

The responsibility also lies on students. The student body needs to search a little deeper when looking for their jobs. They should take advantage of all the opportunities available. One thing that should be remembered is that just because you are not an English major does not mean that you cannot get a job in the English department.

Most importantly though is that fair consideration be given to all students. Discrimination cannot be tolerated in any social institution. There has been too many people that have given their blood, sweat and tears to secure the freedoms that now exist in this country. A university campus should be the last place that any one feels threatened because of the color of their skin, sex, religion or any other aspect that too many people are too quick to judge.

Street Machines just good-ol' American fun

The Street Machine Nationals are gone. Another phase of American strength has vanished.

The stuffy politicians in Illinois are reveling in delight over the crushing blow dealt to the Street Machines calling the event "unacceptable" and "unpleasant to the people of Du Quoin." Richard Woodside, a Du Quoin City Councilman, went so far as to compare the Street Machines to Sodom and Gomorrah. Don't look now Richard but I think the brains of Illinois politicians have turned to salt.

Gov. Edgar has publicly embarrassed the citizens of Southern Illinois by dragging them through the media spot light and making them look like a band of barbarians. The cry baby citizens of Du Quoin have betrayed their own by blowing the whistle to Springfield politicians. Who were these kids hurting?

Among other less serious misdemeanors, rowdy youths gathered to watch muscle cars and drink beers. Rumor has it that the cretins even pee in the alleys. I think that it's fair to assume that these people were not hurting you or me. I guess the moral majority of Du Quoin can't stomach such incivilities as public urination, underage drinking or lewd women. Sen. Dave Luechtefeld says "People had witnessed and watched things that were unacceptable." Rep. Mike Bost says, "it's time to move on." On to what, Mike?

The age of American machismo is dead.

This is just another swatting of Southern Illinois by politically-correct "yes" men who want the area to feel their delicate presence. Where does our Constitution state that people don't have the right to assemble on public property to watch cars and ogle at bare-chested women. In New Orleans they call this fun. On Carbondale's Strip they call this fun. In Du Quoin this is vulgar. What's next? Bourbon Street?

What has America come to when we can't enjoy a small taste of our heritage through witnessing an era of automotive power? What has our country regressed to when people are classified as undesirable because they have to pee outdoors or, God forbid, chug a beer and make a little noise? If politicians are so concerned with substances leaking into the soil they should harass Exxon.

To me, this was an awful attempt to stifle the voice of democracy. To silence good American patriots who still raised their cups to the Red, White and Blue. These "undesirables" are working class families of this region. They are good, law abiding citizens who come together once a year to celebrate American cars. The message that came from Springfield last week was a slap in the face to every American who feels a nostalgia for our proud, automotive history; even in the face of the $5 million spent annually during the event.

We can't allow the Street Machine Nationals anymore. The cars are too loud, the women too loose and the beer too good. Compare the Street Machines to crime in Chicago and the Street Machine Nationals look like a fresh flower in fertile soils. What a farce. Shame on our area politicians who allowed this to happen.

I can remember going to the Street Machines in Du Quoin with some friends about eight years back. I was in high school. Me and my buddies decided to spend an afternoon looking at hot rods, drinking beer and peeing on walls. We had a good time too.

New technology fee needs the student body's support

Dear Editor,

As Director of the Language Media Center and the COLA New Media Center, I applaud efforts to introduce a technology fee for technology support at SIUC. I visit universities all over the country and virtually every institution charges a fee to maintain its computing facilities. This is absolutely essential in order to provide students, faculty and staff with up-to-date technology.

Like it or not, in today's Information Age, there is a tremendous demand for technology in all academic and administrative areas. The pace of technological development establishes the need to upgrade on a regular basis. Institutions with outdated and inadequate equipment are placed at a great disadvantage when it comes to recruiting and providing students with tech resources for their studies.

Faculty research is also significantly hampered when equipment is inadequate. External funding provides only piecemeal and temporary resources. Without regular user fees, the university is required to finance its purchases with interest, which is the least cost-effective method. In the long run it is the student who ends up paying the interest through tuition increases.

Unlike the athletic, cable TV and transit fees, which have been passed in recent years, the technology fee will benefit virtually everyone on campus.

Students will no longer have to stand in line and take a number to get access to a computer. Upgrades will take place when needed and not just when sufficient funds can be scraped up by robbing Peter to pay

Paul. Faculty will no longer have to depend on slow, unreliable modems to access the Internet. I would hope that the fees would provide Ethernet connections in dorm rooms as well as additional general access computer clusters for students. I would also hope that specialized computing facilities on campus will have the funds needed to maintain the state-of-the-art equipment necessary to provide students and faculty.

With an enrollment of more than 20,000 students, even a small fee would go long way. I want to strongly encourage the student body to support the technology fee to ensure that they will have access to the technology needed to compete in the Information Age.

Adults facing the truth about adoption

SECRETS: One woman learns her true identity at age 50; she no longer trusts birth certificates.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

GAITHERSBURG, Md. — Her first impulse was to take the old suitcase and its mysterious contents and toss them in the trash. "I felt like, if I ignored it, it would all go away," she said. "I didn't want to believe it."

A cache of letters pulled more than a decade ago from a weathered suitcase — which workers found cleaning out an apartment after her mother's death — was how Carol Ann Callahan Lee learned at the age of 50 that she was adopted.

"I kind of felt like I was hollow — dead inside," said Lee, a retired medical secretary. "I wondered: Who am I, really?"

Lee, who turns 63 this month, is one of thousands of American adults believed to be grappling with the painful legacy of adoption practices that prevailed a generation ago. It was a time when secrecy and shame colored views of fertility.

The truth about adoption was often so zealously hidden that "a woman would stuff pillows under her clothes, go on a trip with her husband and return with a baby," said Sharon Kaplan Roszia, a California social worker.

Attitudes about adoption generally began to change about two decades ago after child-development experts realized how important it was for adopted children to understand their origins as early as possible. But those like Lee found themselves in a time warp.

There are no official records kept of the number of adults who learn of their adoptions late in life, but an estimated 5 million Americans born during the 1930s, '40s and '50s were adopted.

According to Roszia, who counsels many late-discovery adoptees, people put together their identities like the "pieces of a jigsaw puzzle." But, she noted, "adoptees do this in the dark. They get a box of puzzle pieces with no picture on the top. So if you grew up believing you put your puzzle pieces together as a true reflection of yourself, what happens when that picture is suddenly taken away?"

What happens, therapists and experts said, is a turbulent process that all adoptees face when they find out they're adopted no matter what their age.

But the time period for adjustment is far more compressed for late discoverers. There is intense denial, grief and searching. There is also a layer of anger and betrayal. Then, hopefully, there is healing.

Some said that the discovery helps explain the inexplicable. "I didn't look like anyone in my family and I never felt I belonged," said Sharon Ross, 41, of Atlanta, who learned last fall that she was adopted. "But whenever I asked my mother, she would say: 'You're a part of this family.' It wasn't a lie. But it wasn't the truth either."

The telephone call to Carol Lee came 12 years ago. The suitcase had her mother's name on it, and she sent her husband to pick it up. It sat in her living room for more than a week, a silent invitation, unanswered.

One day when her son and daughter-in-law were visiting, they urged her to open it. She snapped the lid off and began pulling out items: first, memorabilia from her parents' wedding day. Then, buried underneath, a packet of handwritten personal letters addressed to her mother.

She opened them up and began to read — and caught her breath. "They were from friends and family members to my mother, expressing grief at the loss of her baby," Lee said. "Apparently she'd had a baby who'd died, around February or March of 1935; the letters were dated the year I was born. But that baby wasn't me."

She kept reading. The tone of the letters changed from sadness to joy. The later notes, from the fall of 1935, were expressions of pleasure to her mother "on getting another baby, which must have been me," she said.

There was no way to confront her parents, who were dead. All she could do was remember.

She had been reared the daughter of William Edward Callahan and Ann Elizabeth O'Connell Callahan.

She grew up near Cincinnati, married in 1956 and had three children.

There were no obvious clues that she was not born to her parents — in fact, quite the opposite.

"I thought I was Irish, just like my parents, and had no reason to think otherwise," Lee said. "I thought I had inherited their medical history too," especially after developing diabetes. "I said: Why not? My father had had it."

Lee wanted to pretend that she had never opened the suitcase, but her daughter-in-law offered to take the papers home and do some additional digging. Reluctantly, Lee agreed.

Her daughter-in-law found references to a filing number for an adoption petition. She called the probate court in Hamilton County, Ohio, and eventually obtained copies of papers filed in 1935 describing the formal adoption of

Carol Ann Henry, daughter of Elizabeth Henry, father "unknown."

Lee looked at the birth certificate she'd always had. It was the standard certificate of live birth, from the Ohio Department of Health's division of vital statistics. It said that she was born at Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati at 8 a.m. on July 26, 1935, to Ann Elizabeth O'Connell Callahan, 34, wife of William Edward Callahan, 41, and delivered by Dr. Carroll deCourcy, who signed it.

But the document did not have an official seal.

The trail stopped there, with only her birth mother's name. But her thoughts do not.

"There is no record of her that we could find anywhere," Lee said. "Just her name, Elizabeth Henry. That's all I know. And I don't even know if that's her real name."

England. Because the U.S. did not have a lot of military at that time, the Civil Air Patrol was formed for the purpose of patrolling the whole country with civilian pilots who owned their own planes. The Civil Air Patrol launched its patrols up and down the coast line from Boston to the Carolina banks.

At first, the Civil Air Patrol had to call destroyers to the area of spotted submarines, but by the time pilots got there, the submarines would be gone.

So, the planes started carrying barrels of explosives and would drop the barrels from the air onto the submarines. The Civil Air Patrol did a lot to save the shipping by keeping the submarines off the coast.

After the war, the Civil Air Patrol moved the headquarters from New Jersey to Alabama. It no longer needed pilots to keep submarines off the shore so the Civil Air Patrol turned into a search and rescue program.

FIXER-UPPER: John Johnson has several aircraft frames at Pickneyville in a hangar including another V-77 frame.

In addition to the V-77, Johnson owns five other single-engine planes.

"I call it my airplane collection," he said.

Though the bodies of the five planes are only metal or wooden frames laying on the cement of the hangar, the frames of the wings are hovering above the bodies from the ceiling.

"This is my retirement from the University," he said.

He has decided he will be retiring in a couple of years. He had been buying up the airplanes in the last few years, and they have cost him around $50,000. He has spent $60,000 on engines he will use to restore the planes.

After all of the restorations of the planes are complete, the planes will be worth more than triple than what he paid for them.

the same problems they faced in 1988. SIUC professional staffers attempted to organize in 1988 and 1990. Both times the staff voted not to be represented by a union.

At Tuesday's meeting the team members said there are several important reasons why professional staffers should unionize.

Beverly Stitt, SIUC faculty association treasurer, said she joined once she found out her situation "wasn't as rosy as she thought it was."

Stitt said she was happy in her position until she found out what other campuses had. Once involved, she learned about problems that were occurring in other colleges and departments on campus but were being resolved with "proclamations" rather than "negotiations."

Team member Morteza Daneshdoost said he was also happy with his position but joined partially because he "didn't like what was happening to his colleagues."

Stitt said differences with colleagues is not a reason to shun membership.

"There are so many people in the association that disagree with each other on certain points, but the one thing that they did agree on was that each person ought to be able to pursue their career in a good environment that nurtures that career," Stitt said.

The panel said their next move is going out and making people believe in the Association.

"Whatever themes or issues are driving you or binding you or making you angry, the two or three or whatever things there are, that's what you need to focus on," team member Dennis Anderson said. "If people say 'I don't want to vote for this' or 'I don't think I'm interested in this,' then you have to ask them, 'Are you happy with your salary, are you happy with the way you're being treated?' Whatever it is that causes problems for people, that's the issue you focus on."

"If they're not happy then you have to ask them 'Do you want to keep it the way it is, or do you want to work with us and make it better?'"

Anderson also said faculty members who are currently happy should join the union for reasons of protection from unfair work practices and for the benefits high union membership can provide in representation and shared governance.

"The greater your membership, the greater your strength," Anderson said. "With an 80 or 90 percent membership, we may have been able to bargain a higher salary increase."

The professional staff association organizing committee will continue their "Brown Bag Lunch Series" in August when collective bargaining leaders from SIUE visit. SIUE professional staff have been unionized since 1989.

Senate approves amendment to past Higher Education Act

DECLINE: Interest-rate cut can save borrower $650 in interest over life of loan.

CPX

Student loans would fall to their lowest levels in nearly two decades, and more needy students would benefit from federal education grants under the Higher Education Act, adopted by the Senate last week.

The bill, which passed 96-1 late Thursday, also included a surprise amendment that would allow welfare recipients to spend two full years in college or technical school without having to work at the same time.

"When Congress passed welfare reform, it surely did not mean to force students to choose between feeding their children and obtaining the education they need to better their families' future," said Sen. Paul Wellstone of Minnesota, who sponsored the amendment.

"Our goal in this bill is to strengthen federal support for higher education," added Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, the senior Democrat serving on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

The overall legislation is popular with student groups and college officials because it reduces interest rates on student loans by almost 1 percentage point — to 6.8 percent from the current 7.6 percent while borrowers are in college, and to 7.4 percent from the current 8.2 percent after that.

The interest-rate cut would save the borrower of the average $12,000 loan $650 in interest payments over the life of the loan, Kennedy said.

Despite the student savings, the Clinton administration opposes the bill because it would give billions of what the White House calls "arbitrary and excessive" subsidies to banks. The Congressional Budget Office estimates the cost at between $1 billion and $3.6 billion over five years.

Student loan providers say the federal money will help them cover costs associated with lowering the interest rates, but the White House contends that the subsidies are not offset by corresponding spending cuts.

The House voted 414-4 in May to approve its version of the bill, which also calls for a five-year extension of the act. Congressional leaders will resolve their differences before sending the bill to Clinton later this year. Given overwhelming congressional support for the measure, it is unlikely the President would veto it.

Among the bill's other provisions:

- * An increase of the maximum Pell Grant. The maximum award is set at $3,000 for the 1998-99 school year, but the bill proposes to increase the award to $5,000 in time for the 1999-2000 school year, and by an additional $200 each of the following four years.
- * Wider eligibility standards for Pell

Grants that would include more students who are independent of their parents and more dependent students who work outside of college. The bill would increase from $3,000 to $4,250 the amount of money independent students could earn and still qualify for the grant.

The bill also would increase from $1,750 to $2,200 the amount of earnings a dependent student could exclude from statements about his or her family's need.

* A limit on the amount of time students can receive aid. Full-time students would lose their grants if they remained in school for more than six years.

* An extension of the amount of time lenders must give students who are more than $30,000 in debt to repay their loans. Currently, students have 10 years. The bill proposes that they get 25 years instead.

* The forgiveness of student-loan debt up to $8,000 for college graduates who teach for three years in schools in poor areas.

* A mandate that colleges and universities disclose to the public more detailed financial information so that students and their parents can make more informed choices. Colleges failing to provide such information would be fined up to $25,000 for each offense.

* The authorization of $10 million in grants for colleges needing to improve their facilities to better meet the needs of disabled students and maintain campus-based childcare for needy students.

GM sues UAW for $12 billion

FINGER POINTING: GM accuses the UAW of using local grievances to stage a national strike.

WASHINGTON POST

General Motors Corp. sued the United Auto Workers, accusing the union of staging an illegal national strike and asking for at least $1.2 billion in compensation.

The suit was filed Tuesday in federal district court in Detroit shortly after the automaker reported its lowest quarterly earnings in five years because of the strike.

GM said it earned $389 million (54 cents) for the second quarter, compared with $2 billion ($2.62 per share) for the same period last year. Although the earnings report was within analysts' expectations, it adds pressure on GM's management to obtain productivity gains in its fight with the union.

GM General Counsel Thomas A. Gottschalk accused the UAW of using local grievances at two parts plants in Flint, Mich., to stage a national strike that has shut down virtually all of the company's North American operations. GM said 175,000 employees have been forced off their jobs by the strike.

"Union representatives have made clear to GM and the media that the real issues behind the Flint walkouts relate to capital investment and product allocation decisions affecting the Flint Metal Center and to sourcing decisions affecting the Delphi Plant East plant," Gottschalk said in a statement. "None of these issues are strikeable under the national agreement." He said the UAW's national contract with GM requires that such disputes be submitted to binding arbitration.

UAW Vice President Richard Shoemaker said the union has acted within its legal rights. "We can only assume this lawsuit has been filed more for its Wall Street PR value than anything else," Shoemaker said in a statement.

Company sources said the lawsuit probably is the first step in an escalating war between the company and the union.

Other steps being considered within GM, according to company sources, include ending health care coverage for the tens of thousands of UAW members laid off as a result of the Flint strike, and possibly shutting the struck plants and contracting out the work.

Neither side reported any progress in negotiations Tuesday. GM asked the court to issue an injunction that would force the strikers back to work and to order the union to submit its dispute to binding arbitration. Ages against the union in the event the arbitrator fails to deal with the question of financial compensation or believes he does not have the authority to do so.

Witnesses to Penn State riot describe antics

CPX

STATE COLLEGE — Eyewitnesses to the downtown riot early Sunday morning described it as part Penn State pep rally, part celebration, and all crazy.

Marc Clair, a Penn State freshman, was in his Beaver Hall dorm room Saturday night. He heard the noise from the riots and decided to walk downtown to see what was going on.

"It sounded almost like a baseball game. The noise would come in waves ... it was almost like cheering," Clair said. "It didn't seem all that violent, sort of like a pep rally but with fire."

Shawn Connaghan is a Kappa Sigma fraternity member and Penn State alumnus. In town for the Central Pennsylvania Festival of the Arts, he saw the rioting begin from Kappa Sigma's deck, one door down from Acme Pizza on Beaver Avenue. Connaghan said the crowd got riled up when police took a party ball — a small plastic receptacle smaller than a keg that holds beer away from revelers in front of Acme.

"People just went crazy," Scheuch said. "It was two hours before the cops decided to come," Scheuch said.

Police stayed at the perimeter because there were not enough of them to control the crowds, State College Lt. Diane Conrad said in a press conference Sunday. The officers told the crowds to disperse with bullhorns, Conrad said, but didn't try to physically control the rioting until they had reinforcements.

Revelers were kicking the party ball just to do something, not to do damage, said Scott Lubochinski, a freshman from Potomac, Md.

"It seemed like they weren't angry, just bored and drunk. It wasn't supposed to be anything big," he said.

Angels pitcher unhappy with relief role

LOS ANGELES TIMES

Watson fears he will be buried in the bullpen

OAKLAND, Calif. — In the wake of Monday's personnel moves, the Anaheim Angels may have the game's highest-paid middle reliever in left-hander Allen Watson, who is making $2.9 million, and the former starter is not too thrilled about it.

Watson was activated off the disabled list and sent to the bullpen, and reserve outfielder Damon Mashore was optioned to triple-A Vancouver.

The move was hardly a surprise, but that didn't make it easier to digest for Watson, who went 12-12 with a 4.93 earned-run average last season.

"I know the guys in the rotation have pitched well, but I earned (a starting) job last year and in spring training, and I don't want to get buried in the bullpen when other teams can use me," said Watson, who went 3-5 with a 7.69 ERA this season before going on the DL on May 24.

"... Last year I made every start, I pitched on three days rest when my arm was a little sore. You can't just forget about a guy the next year. Sometimes I get the feeling I'm getting blamed for getting hurt.

No, Manager Terry Collins said. Watson is paying the price for pitching poorly the first seven weeks of this season and not revealing until mid-May that his elbow had been hurting since early April.

As for Watson's 1997 performance, Collins reminded reporters that Jason Dickson made the All-Star team last year but that didn't prevent the Angels from demoting him to the bullpen earlier this season.

"It's what Allen did this year that warrants the treatment he's getting," Collins said. "He's been out for six weeks — this is not a demotion. If (injured second baseman) Randy Velarde came back tomorrow, he'd be an extra player, not a starter.

"I know Allen wants to start, and we all believe that's the place for him, but we're pitching pretty well now, and I don't want to mess with that."

Watson, sidelined because of a strained left elbow, was ready to pitch late last month, and Collins decided at the time to return him to the rotation. But a deep gash on the outside of Watson's left wrist, suffered when a beer bottle he was opening broke in half on June 29, set Watson back another two weeks.

Since then, Steve Sparks and Jarrod Washburn have pitched well enough in Collins' eyes to remain in the rotation, so Watson went to the bullpen.

"I've got to pitch well and help the team — I can't just sit around waiting for someone to struggle or get hurt," Watson said. "But what if the guys pitch well the rest of the year? Sometimes you have to think of yourself. I'm only 27. I don't want to be forgotten down in the bullpen."

Watson knows better than to demand a trade. There is virtually no demand for $2.9 million pitchers with ERAs above 7.50.

"Any starter relegated to the bullpen shouldn't like it, because that would show he doesn't feel he belongs there," Collins said. "I don't want Allen to like it. But I know one thing. He needs to accept it. We're trying to win the pennant, and we're going to need his help."

Mashore — and not another reliever — was sent down Monday because Collins wants to temporarily carry 12 pitchers as a hedge against Washburn's forearm, which stiffened in his start before the All-Star break, and the tender arms of relievers Rich DeLucia and Pep Harris, who have needed some extra rest between recent appearances. ... Velarde played catch Monday for the first time since he re-injured his elbow during his two-game comeback on May 12-13. He plans to throw every other day in hopes of gaining enough arm strength to return in August. ... Garret Anderson extended his hitting streak to 11 with a run-scoring double in the first inning Monday night.

Rookie Pak is energizing women's golf

WASHINGTON POST

Twenty years have passed since a rookie named Nancy Lopez turned women's golf on its head, winning nine tournaments — including a stunning five consecutive — to herald a career that would define her sport and attract a generation of fans.

Today, rookie Se Ri Pak, who was still learning to crawl when Lopez first stepped into the national spotlight, is causing as big a stir.

Halfway through the LPGA's 1998 season, Pak, 20, has won three tournaments (two of them majors), shattered the 72-hole scoring mark by four strokes (261) and earned more money than anyone else on the LPGA Tour ($645,170). Already a national hero in her economically troubled South Korea, where she has been dubbed the country's "best export," Pak is packing galleries at tournaments stateside and giggling in awe that her image is splashed across magazine pages and highlight films.

What makes Pak special, according to those who have studied her game, is a unique blend of athleticism and composure. At 5 feet 7, 147 pounds, she has a toned, muscular build and equally strong work ethic. She is powerful off the tee, driving the ball 260 yards on average, with a keen sense of the fairway. While her putting is slightly less accurate, Pak rarely is rattled by imperfection, focusing instead on salvaging matters at hand.

While most are loath to saddle a rookie with the tag of "the next Lopez" or "the female Tiger Woods," the comparisons are irresistible.

"What she's doing has drawn more attention to women's golf than anything in a long, long time," said four-time U.S. Open winner Betsy Rawls, whose 55 LPGA victories rank fourth all time. "I can't remember anything since Nancy Lopez that had this kind of an impact. It thrills me to death."

Pak's stirring run began when she won the LPGA Championship, one of the sport's four majors, in May. On July 6 she picked up her second major in riveting style, outdueling amateur Jenny Chuang in a 20-hole playoff to become the youngest U.S. Women's Open champion. The next week she put together the best four rounds in LPGA history (71-61-63-66) to win the Jamie Farr Classic in Toledo, Ohio.

"When she won the LPGA it was significant," Rawls said. "When she turned right around and won the Women's Open, it was very significant. This last tournament took it to another level."

Louise Suggs, an LPGA founder, agrees. Suggs was the first player to follow a U.S. Women's Open victory by winning the next tournament — a feat only Jane Geddes had replicated before Pak. "At the time (1952), I didn't think anything about it," said Suggs, 74. "I'm sure this kid didn't, either. I don't think she realizes what she has done, but I think it's great."

It couldn't have come at a more opportune time for women's golf, either, as the LPGA heads to New York for this weekend's Big Apple Classic, to be nationally televised by NBC.

Pak, who speaks in a charming, evolving English, insists her best is yet to come. "This is a good start," Pak said after the Jamie Farr on Sunday. "I am not finished yet."

A star sprinter and shot-putter in middle school, Pak didn't start playing golf until six years ago, at 14, prodded by her father, Joon Chul Pak, an avid golf fan and single-digit handicapper. She was a quick study, winning 30 amateur tournaments.

rocky relationship, and I apologized and was surprised when he asked me to help out with the sprinters as an unpaid assistant last year," Tai said. "I have to thank coach Cornell for giving me the opportunity."

The new position served as a great avenue for Tai because of his talents as a communicator and an athlete.

Tai said coach Cornell has wanted to see how he handled the sprinters and putting together the relay team.

"We had a good year because everyone of the sprinters had a personal record last year," Tai said. "We won the Missouri Valley Conference in the 4x400 meter relays."

The biggest adjustment for Tai in coaching has been dealing with the role of teacher instead of student. Tai said it is easy to take the athletes' side because he understands the struggles athletes are going through.

"Now I'm living through the athlete, and I have realized that I was a tough athlete for a coach to get along with," Tai said.

Tai's coaching goals are being successful in coaching and for every one of his athletes to reach their top performance. Tai still wants to compete and has a goal of qualifying for the indoor and outdoor championships.

"The reason I'm still competing is because all the people from my last greatest meet, the junior college championships, have all gone to the Olympics or a higher level," Tai said. "I still have something to prove, and the fire to compete is still there."

Steelers' Cowher signs

The Pittsburgh Steelers announced head coach Bill Cowher signed a three-year contract extension on Tuesday.

Terms were not disclosed but Cowher, the second coach in NFL history to lead his team to the playoffs in each of his first six seasons, reportedly signed for $2 million per season.

The signing puts the rumors to rest of Cowher signing with the Cleveland Browns. Cowher, a former player for the Browns, increased the speculation after admitting that job would be exciting at the Orlando football meetings in the spring.

The 40-year-old Cowher has compiled a 64-32 record, which includes leading the Steelers to the 1996 Super Bowl and three trips to the AFC Championship Game in the last four years.

Back injury may sideline
Boston's Jefferson

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. Boston Red Sox outfielder Reggie Jefferson has had a relapse of his back injury and could be out for a while. Jefferson is unsure how he originally injured his back, but it may have happened when he attempted to jump away from a pitch that hit him on the back of the head June 20 in Miami.

Jefferson had a cortisone shot before the break, but his lower back has been bothering him all weekend. He left the game Tuesday in the seventh.

"I feel like it's something where if I just rest it, it will get better," Jefferson said. "I was hoping I could play through it and it might get better. But it's continuing to go downhill."

Jefferson was 1-for-15 on the trip.

Outfielder Darren Bragg sat out Tuesday's game with a sore left groin. He was injured making a throw from right field Monday. He could have played but the team was reluctant to use him on artificial turf.

Mo Vaughn was the best hitter on the trip, going 8-for-23 with four RBI. Troy O'Leary was 2-for-21 and Lewis 4-for-24. Matchups for the Indians series: Pedro Martinez (11-3, 2.90) vs. Bartolo Colon (9-4, 2.56), Wednesday (7:35, ESPN); Tim Lincecum (10-4, 4.21) vs. Dwight Gooden (3-3, 3.29), Thursday.

Defensive problems identified

In an effort to improve on a last season's 3-8 sixth-place finish in the Gateway Conference, the SIUC football team has to win close games and improve their defense to exceed last season's output.

The defense needs the most improvement. Last season the Salukis gave up nearly 33 points per game and recorded only 12 sacks all season, with a mere 41 tackles for a loss.

Defense is an aspect that head coach Jan Quarless said must be improved.

"We have to have a better defensive pass rush this season," Quarless said. "We also have to tackle better if our defense is going to improve overall."

To do this Quarless will have to count on a lot of new faces. Only one starting letterman returns on the defensive line from 1997, Tavita Tevilo. Two defensive backs, Jean Baptiste and Sam Wilkerson, will be back from last season.

On offense the Salukis have a lot more firepower. With starting quarterback and last year's team MVP Kent Skornia and a backfield of last season's offensive MVP Bryan Nolbertowicz and Karlton Carpenter, SIUC should have a strong offense once again this season.

The offensive line will be anchored by returning lettermen Brandon Frick, Jared Joiner and Walter Skeate. Junior Mike Green will start at tight end while Cornell Craig will be the starting wide receiver.

For a successful offensive season, coach Quarless said that his team must improve on keeping their scoring drives alive.

"We have to improve on our third down conversion percentage this season," Quarless said. "Not being able to convert on third downs really hurt us in several games last year."

Homecoming for the Salukis is scheduled for October 17 against Western Illinois University. Western is one of the best teams in Division I-AA every year. Last year the Salukis nearly knocked off the Leathernecks, at Macomb losing 31-26 after staging one of their many last-minute comebacks.

After the game, Quarless was not very happy with the lack of sportsmanship displayed by the Western players, however, Quarless says that he does not have the game against Western this year circled on his schedule.

"I'm not worried about the Western game right now," Quarless said. "I just try to take them one game at a time, and right now I'm just looking ahead to our Sept. 5 opener at Murray State."

Coach still has something to prove

You can forgive Jesse Tai if he doesn't look forward to July 27 of this year. That was the day he broke his leg in two places four years ago, just four days after signing with the SIUC track team.

Tai, an assistant coach for the SIUC men's track team from West Palm Beach, Fla., never fulfilled the promise he showed coming out of Allen County Junior College.

Tai was an All-American in the long jump in junior college, and was heavily recruited by Nebraska, Florida and Louisiana Tech before deciding on SIUC in 1994.

Tai's career as a Saluki consisted of rehabbing his leg, constant injuries and battling with coach Bill Cornell.

Tai used the free time to obtain his bachelor's degree in administrative justice in 1997. Tai currently is in graduate school and studying exercise science.

The injuries put a damper on Tai's remaining collegiate career and have left him disappointed.

"I felt like I had a bright future, I broke records in junior high, high school and junior college," Tai said. "When I came to SIUC it all stopped."

The Prairie State Games became an outlet where Tai used to continue his track career. Tai has competed the last three years and won nine medals overall.

Tai had his best results at the Prairie State Games this summer by winning three gold medals and a silver. Tai received a gold medal in the long jump, 4x400 meter relays, 4x100 meter relays and a silver medal in the triple jump.

The weather conditions at the Prairie State Games this year made Tai's accomplishments worth savoring.

"This year was the worst because the heat index was 110 degrees and we had to wait two hours in the middle of the afternoon to begin the long jump," Tai said.

Tai used the knee injury to explore different avenues and unexpectedly became an assistant coach. Tai said he never thought a coaching career was in store for his future until he talked to coach Cornell.

"Me and coach Cornell had a
