Peaceful troops move to reopen Beirut airport

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Hundreds of peacekeeping troops from Syria and Libya—many holding red roses as peace symbols — pulled into Beirut airport Monday as the vanguard of a new pan-Arab bid to stop the Lebanese war.

The 50 trucks had white flags tied to the side rails.

The force had orders to reopen the airport after 15 days of total paralysis and separate Syrian intervention forces from their Palestinian guerrilla opponents at the most dangerous flashpoint.

In other developments:

— Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met in Paris with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on the Lebanese war and said later: "We favor any method that will bring about peace in the entire region, including peace talks in Paris involving all factions.

— In Washington, a State Department official, speaking at a funeral for the diplomat, Ambassador Francis E. Walsh, planned the assassination of two U.S. diplomats in Beirut last week.

— In Damascus, Libyan Premier Abdulaziz Jalloud said he regretted that the Libyans in the Arab truce force numbered only "in the tens." But there were conflicting reports from witnesses in Lebanon who said they saw "hundreds of Libyans" as well as Syrians in the convoy of Syrian army trucks marked "Arab Security Force.

— Damascus radio and Al Baath, the newspaper of the ruling Baath party in Syria, both reported that the vanguard of the peace force would be composed of one battalion of Syrians and one battalion of Libyan troops.

— The force was to include Libyans, Algerians, Saudis, Sudanese, Syrians and Palestinians and according to a Syrian government decision of Arab League foreign ministers who met in Cairo last week.

— About 500 soldiers from the 1,000-strong Arab force were seen taking up positions in and around the war-battered airport terminal.

A shipload of American and other evacuees who left Beirut four days after the assassinations was sailing to Athens, Greece, on a U.S. Navy ship, and expected to arrive there Tuesday.

— The State Department said a second evacuation of Americans may be undertaken if the Lebanese situation deteriorates. Only about 300 Americans in Beirut chose to go on the ship that left Sunday.

Area center recycles resources, talents

By Joseph A. Shopepil Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Resource Reclamation Inc. is an all-volunteer non-profit organization which provides both retired and handicapped persons with a chance to make a living and productive lives.

According to Sue Casebeer, director of the program, the volunteers assist in sorting different grades of paper, cans and colored glass so they can be packed for shipment to various plants where they are broken down and reprocessed into new products.

"I'm very concerned with the environment," said Rachel Wendt, former professor in psychology at SIU and currently a volunteer at the center. "This is one way to keep the environment from being covered with trash."

Wendt, 88, was also involved with designing and setting up the Clinical Center in Wabash Building. Of all volunteers, however, are retired or handicapped. "I feel that it's something that has to be accomplished," said Patricia Stollerhan, 44, a supervisor for the center. "Being a concerned citizen I feel that it is important."

Soleiman's husband, Lowell, who works as a volunteer also works as a paid staff at the Jackson County Workshop. Once the material is gathered and bunched, he takes it to the various plants for sale. He does most of the "heavy" work at the center.

Jean Lit, a physical therapist for the Jackson County Health Department, is also a volunteer. "I started with the program because I'm very concerned with the handicapped," she said.

The center is in the process of making the facilities more accessible to the handicapped. Lit said.

Kissinger proposes oil trade unification

PARIS (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger proposed Monday that the Western industrial democracies coordinate their trade with the Soviet bloc in order to "build a stronger and more positive" international economic system.

In a speech to ministers of the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), Kissinger said a unified approach to expand the flow of Russian oil to the West and keep Moscow from using "selective political pressure" to play one Western country off against another.

The Soviet Union and its allies, accounting for about 20 percent of world output, have the seven largest economies in the world but, needing consumer goods and technology, are vitally dependent, mostly to the European Common Market countries and Japan.

U.S. officials said a joint trading arrangement could be politically sensitive since it would give the United States a more prominent role as compared with other members, especially to the same time they said the proposal, which will be amplified next month at a meeting of the OECD executive committee, was not put forward in a spirit of confrontation toward Moscow.

"In the past," Kissinger said, "trade and economic relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe have played a central role in Soviet foreign policy. They first transformed the spirit of détente toward the West."

The cost of the Soviet blue private to Western buyers doubled last year to $10 billion and the total hard currency trade is nearly $40 billion. While trade restricted by the U.S. government now contains strategic materials, technology and government — extended to Soviet Blue nations by the United States is $8 billion.

Citing forecasts that Western imports of oil will increase about 10 million barrels a day by 1985, Kissinger said that extensive mineral resources of the East can expand petroleum supplies worldwide.

Wages for the handicapped workers are determined on the basis of how their work rates compare with piece work rates used in similar industrial situations.

"We sell them for what we would get for them at the factory," said Rachael Wendt, retired professor in psychology at SIU and currently a volunteer at the center. "This is one way to keep the environment from being covered with trash."

According to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), Americans discard 86 billion cans, 31 billion bottles and 40 million tons of paper annually. The EPA says the recycling process greatly reduces the strain currently being imposed on natural resources.

The center is in the local of the old Patch's Red Seal Beer Brewery on River Street in Murphysboro. The building and necessary equipment are being leased from the Jackson County Workshop. A truck donated by the City of Carbondale makes various pickups. One of the most load comes from SIU. Other major sources are local industry and businesses. Although pickups are not made at private homes, the center does accept newspaper.

One of the biggest money items is used data cards from IBM computers. Once sorted and packed in large refrigerator boxes, the cards are then sold for approximately $175 per ton. Large ledgers from the SIU offices must first have the bindings removed before they can be recycled. Under supervision handicapped workers from the Jackson County Workshop cut the bindings off with electrical saws.

Freshman found dead in Chicago

An SUU coved was found dead Saturday afternoon in a Chicago South Side alley.

Sonja Lynn Moffett, 18, a freshman in special education, was reported missing by her mother on June 30, according to Chicago Police Sgt. William Boreceky.

Boreceky found the badly decomposed body of Moffett in the alley near 86th Street and Paulina Avenue by a child playing.

The Cook County Coroner has not released a report on the cause of death. It's probably a murder, said Boreceky, who estimated Moffett had been dead about one week.

Funeral arrangements are pending. Moffett was found 708 S. Bennett St in Chicago, was a Neely Hall resident.

Judge issues prison term in shooting case

A 49-year-old Carbondale man convicted of a Dec. 17 shooting which left one man injured was released by Circuit Court Judge Richard Richman Monday to 16-months to four-years for prison.

Morrison, a carpenter, was found guilty on two counts of aggravated battery. The jury found him not guilty on charges of attempted murder and the unlawful use of a weapon.

At the sentencing Judge Richman denied defense motions for a new trial and another asking that one of the two counts of aggravated battery be dropped.

Don't call Carter 'conservative'

To the Daily Egyptian:
Jim Santori's editorial, "Liberalism's Death—A Foothold for 1984", contained a serious but all too common misrepresentation of the political view of the Democratic presidential aspirant, Jimmy Carter. Santori refers to Carter as a conservative, an accusation which is demonstrably false.

Too many individuals have dimissed Carter as a representative of the political right simply because they have failed to examine both his record as governor of Georgia and his present beliefs concerning America's social problems.

Carter favors national health insurance, public work programs in areas of high unemployment, tighter gun controls, development of solar power with a de-emphasis on nuclear energy, and tax reform that eliminates most deductions and treats individual income the same.

He has called for a massive reorganization of the federal bureaucracy and a simplification of the many overlapping programs and departments which now comprise the federal welfare program.

As governor of Georgia, Carter worked inextricably to promote the cause of civil rights. Black leaders from across the nation have pledged their support to his presidential campaign.

Carter believes that seven to eight billion dollars of waste can be trimmed from the extravagant military budget and has declared that his first act as president will be to grant a blanket pardon for all Vietnam draft evaders and deserters.

Although he personally opposes abortion and busing, he has stressed that he would do nothing as president to challenge the Supreme Court's decisions on the matters.

I believe Carter's aforesaid campaign declarations repudiate the validity of any reference to his political persuasion as conservative.

Mr. Crannich:
And who turned it into the mail slot?
I thought Mr. Crannich had put it away because that's not my name. Likewise for "A Foothold for 1984."

I was also informed that not only was there no provisions in the coming budget for a full time operator or an additional machine. Thus, the 139.644 documents on the fourth floor would not only collect a list of dust, but may deteriorate before the one part-time operator could possibly get around to making a copy for a student who needed it.

This poses an interesting question to any undergraduate math major. That is, just how long would it take to make a copy of the 139,644 documents by the one part-time micro-fiche machine at Morris Library at SIU-C, five days or five years?

WIDB update

To the Daily Egyptian:
In the June 15th D.E., there was a story about WIDB’s limited service during the summer semester. The story was accurate, except for one fact that is a recent development and possibly of interest to you. Ann Kallenam, recent acting program director, will be unable to fill the position as assistant 93.2/105.5 WIDB, promotion director of WIDB, has declared that Mr. Glick, a former member of the WIDB staff, will hold the position of program director for the WIDB, with Mr. Santor’s signature, during the current school year.

Mail-aholic’s plight

By Arthur Hoppe

My neighbor, Mr. Crannich, is in serious trouble. He left his mail on his front door. When our postman, Mr. Farley, first noticed it, he rang the bell. "Your slot seems strung, Mr. Crannich," he said, "but here's your mail." "No thank you," said Mr. Crannich, "I don't care for any more junk mail." "Look here," said Mr. Farley indignantly, "neither rain nor sleet nor you are going to keep me from delivering this mail!" But Mr. Crannich smashed the door and said, "I am not interested in the deteriorating quality of the mail service, madam," said one, "why don't you write a letter to the newspapers like everybody else?"

But I don't think the quality of the mail service is any worse than it ever was, said Mr. Crannich. "What's really gone way downhill is the quality of the mail service."

A nostalgic look came into his eye. "Back in the good old days, the mail was an exciting event. But now..." Shrugger. "I've been keeping track and 83.2 per cent of the mail I get I wish I hadn't."

My friend, Mr. Crannich, said, "A lot of folks don't like junk mail," said the inspector, "but they learn to live with it."

"Oh, the junk mail's easy," said Mr. Crannich. "If the envelope's addressed to 'Occupant,' I throw it away because that's not my name. Likewise for 'A Personal Message from the Desk of...' because I don't know any desks. Or 'You May Have Already Won, $900.00,' because I never knew anyone who did."

"What about personal letters," asked the other inspector, "like in blue envelopes with European stamps?"

"They always write on both sides of very thin paper, you can't read it," said Mr. Crannich. "More tantalizing is one with an unfamiliar return address. But that's always a friend of a friend in Boise who's moving here and needs help."

"Look," said the other, "why not just throw all your mail away and not cause trouble?"

Mr. Crannich shuddered. "I tried that. Then I got an envelope that said, 'You won a trip to Paris. You try to throw away this letter or you can save little Rosaria's life.' As I was going to duplicate mailing lists. I killed them all."

That's when I knew I had to kick the habit.

We're all pulling for him. If he can do it, we can do it. But yesterday I caught him going through our garbage can. In his trembling hands was an unopened envelope labeled, 'An Important Message' I fear he's still hooked.
Candidate says one thing, does another

Government Operations Committee reported that as of June 1, 1975, there were 1,449 agencies, departments, committees, boards and commissions in the federal government. That does not count subgroups within some of the agencies. Carter says that as governor he abolished 278 boards, bureaus, and agencies in Georgia, leaving only 20 major divisions, but some of the numbers seem to depend on who does the counting.

A planning specialist who worked on the reorganization plan, says that as governor he abolished 66 agencies, committees, councils and authorities attached to the major departments. He said many of the smaller units had no funds and were not functioning, but he had no count.

The number of agencies left is also in dispute. Carter's count of 22 major operating divisions does not include independent, operating agencies such as the Georgia Forestry Research Council, various state retirement systems and parks authorities, all of which report to the governor.

Carter claims he eliminated 2,109 unnecessary state jobs (about 5 per cent of the state payroll not counting teachers). He says he cut administrative costs by 50 per cent although he has given varying dollar figures, stating $50 million in a campaign biographical sketch and referring to a saving of "$10 million last year alone" in a statement distributed to reporters in Phoenix, Ariz., in 1975.

State Auditor Ernest Davis says that the jobs Carter claims to have eliminated were only paper jobs. "They existed in the merit system on paper as a paper classification," said Davis who is a Democrat like Carter but opposed him on individual programs, including reorganization.

As for the savings, Davis said: "I have personally not been able to identify any savings that resulted from reorganization per se. He said the claimed reduction of administrative costs "is strictly fiction.

"Absolutely no program functions were eliminated. No agency was abolished, no service done away with. Their organizational identity was merely submerged in another agency. I think practically all the improvements could have occurred without reorganization at all.

Bill Roper, a Carter appointee who was assistant project director for the reorganization, says that before he quit monitoring the program in June 1974, he had identified savings of $34.3 million. Nearly one-fourth of the sum was in "cost avoidance." Expenditures for duplicated services that the state otherwise would have paid, Roper said. He said changes in programs - combining some departments and reorganizing operators - made it impossible to identify specific savings.

Roper said his figure also included $14.7 million in annual cost reductions from reorganization, counting changes such as renewing professional and trade licenses every two years instead of annually.

As part of his reorganization, Carter says zero-base budgeting "strips down government to zero, starts from scratch. Every program has to justify itself annually. You have an automatic weeding out of old and obsolete programs. Obviously you continue programs that are necessary, and you have an automatic detection of overlapping and duplication among agencies ...

The plan Carter implemented was not a true zero-based budgeting system. Such a plan is not really feasible in state government because there is no possibility of eliminating certain programs. What Carter did was to switch the budgeting system to require annual reviews or spending. State operations were broken down into "decision packages" and department heads were required to assign them priorities.

State Auditor Davis says the plan in theory gave Carter a good grasp of government. But he says department heads found a way to subvert it.

When the governor asked, for instance, the commissioner of agriculture to assign priorities, the commissioner would put a low priority on things he knew had so much public support they couldn't be done away with and assign top priority to things he's close to, but which may not have much support.

That's exactly what evrystate agency did.

Next: The Rest of the Record

Resolved: Jimmy Carter is here to stay

It's been two weeks since the last of the big primaries have been held; two weeks in which to assess the credibility of Jimmy Carter's winning the Democratic party's nomination for President.

There have been no choice but to give it to Carter. Any type of backroom maneuvering to deny him the prize in July would be courting electoral disaster in November. Party regulars don't like Carter, but they like losing even less.

Also, there is no longer standing on the issues. Democratic Party National chairman David Durenberger is perhaps one of the few in the Carter regime, said: "... It's a pretty damn successful way of running a campaign - if you can get away with it. It's the way I would have been rolling a limerick away with it. He stands on solid ground in avoiding taking hard stands on the issues.

A recent Harris poll shows that the American people admire Carter for having the courage not to make hard pledges. The party regulars don't like Carter, but they like losing even less.

It's almost a cliche to state that Carter's rise from an obscure Georgia governor to Democratic nominee for President is amazing, but there is no other way to say it. His range of endorsements is no less so, from liberal Williams, to moderate Wallace, to somewhat less enthusiastic King. And who would have thought that a major labor union (United Auto Workers) would endorse a Presidential candidate that was once governor of a state with right-to-work laws.

It is true that party regulars don't like Carter; it is also true that Carter's primary victories for the most part were pluralities, not clear-cut majorities. But his bandwagon has grown so large that he forced Chicago's mayor Richard Daley to do something he's never done before: endorse a candidate before the convention.

The late Gov. Adlai Stevenson once said that in a democracy, people usually get the kind of government they deserve. Did the American people, accused of being full of love and compassion by Carter, deserve the former Georgia governor? Conversely, does Carter deserve the American people?

Come January, Carter will take the oath of office for President of the United States. Like him or not, one thing is sure to happen. After his first year in office, he'll lose that damned smile.

With the recent announcement that work-study jobs are in great supply, it's going to be harder than ever to talk students into graduating.

Parking Office reminds bike riders of registration

Students who have not registered their bikes must do so before the SIU Security Police start ticketing at 6 p.m. A bicycle ticket is required for riding on SIU campus property. Fines are $50.00 with an additional $5.00 fee for each day the bike is seized.

When bicycles are brought in to be registered at a fee of $15.00, a special ticket is then used to clamp the license plate onto the seat of the bike in preventing the plate from being stolen and identifies it if it is stolen, according to Susan Krogman, coordinator of Parking and Traffic.

Once a bicycle is registered, the license is valid indefinitely. Bicycles may be registered with the City of Carbondale or with the University, and both licenses are honored in Carbondale and on campuses.

Students are advised not to register to prevent the plate from being stolen, according to August LaMarche, coordinator of Parking and Traffic.

For safety, students must have a bell or horn on their bicycle in order to register. Students riding at night must also have a light and a reflector.

"We'd like to see them operate their bicycles as safely as possible," said LaMarche. "They should obey all the same traffic laws that cars do.

During the summer, bicycles may be registered at Building D in Washington Square. Monday through Friday 7:30-9:00 p.m. Fines and spring hours are from 8:00-4:30 p.m.

Smith will discuss "The Marketing Consultant from St. Louis," an internationally known sales speaker and will be the keynote speaker for the conference. The conference, sponsored by the SIU Marketing Department, the SIU Business Alumni Association and Phi Sigma Epsilon, will concentrate on the areas of the economic, legal and other aspects of marketing along with relevant issues of planning, advertising, pricing and selling.
Southern Illinois Reagan delegate enjoys politics

By Steve Hahn
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

"My greatest passion is partisan politics. I feel that my greatest passion is going to yard sales," a casual observer would say if he thought of the 30-year-old Southern Illinois woman. But despite apparent lack of social baggage, there seems to be a strange sense of unity within this rather proper lady.

Roberta Harvey, 30, a mother, self-proclaimed housewife, civic activist, and a Republican delegate from Marion County, Illinois, said she enjoyed the small activist and since she was the first to be elected to the Republican delegation, she was pleased with the outcome.

"You ought to get involved in the boycotting," Harvey said. "I got that one for 10 cents." She told me as I examined the brass and copper, "I like other dishes was rimmed with what appeared to be tarnished silver. She didn't doubt she was able to get this into this time you're young," she said.

Several feet from her was a copy of an Illinois newspaper. A headline in the newspaper read: "Agriculture: Carbondale to have its new Daily Sun-News.

"Why is that important?" I asked. "It has a new editor."

Harvey said that the newspaper is now available in the state of Illinois. She also said that it is a new paper and that it is printed in a local town.

"I'd like to see it," Harvey said. "I think it's a good idea, especially since there is a lot of confusion about this new paper.

Tollin Prowse, the two women are the center of attention when they walk into the room. They wear a green and white suit and under glass, quite similar to a "republican" suit. They are the first to be elected to the Republican convention. The students are enrolled in the school of business.

"I believe in going by the book, but with some exceptions," she said.

I asked her about the political activities of the school. She said, "I think the students are very interested in politics, especially since the school is located in a small town.

"I'd like to see some students become active in the school," she said. The students are very active in the school, she said, and that is why she is interested in seeing them become more involved.

Female crew race scooher

ON BOARD THE SCHOONER SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL (AP)

The girls were having a chat over coffee.

"Come on, someone called down.
...captain wants you. There's a sheeting up to do." The four young women aboard the 115-foot schooner had been anchored out a sail, climbed a rigging, followed orders and grumbled, "Bloody sail-hanging at the time of night."

The sail went up wrong, so they did it again. But there were complications. The Church was slipping along slowly and a light breeze. Around it, tall-masted ships sparked along the horizon.

The British Sail Training Association, schooner Sir Winston Churchill is racing with a crew of 42 free-spirited young women against some 100 other ships between Bermuda and Newport, R.I. The trans-Atlantic race started in Plymouth, England on May 2, but the girls took over from a male crew only for the last leg of the race, which began in light air off Bermuda on Sunday.

Most spectacular ships in the race are 18 tall-square riggers, including the U.S. Coast Guard training bark, Eagle, and two Russian ships, Krestovskii and Tovarishch, which have dominated the speed prizes so far.

The Churchill is a lighter, more slender craft, with three masts and a foot high and square sails on the foremast. The young women ages 18 to 25 - spent only six hours before the race began heaving sails on the 135-foot long. They are the first women to sail the Churchill - the ship first sailed in 1966, and the first women boarded the ship in 1967.

The Churchill's female crew includes a nurse, a librarian, a waitress and a number of students. Some have never sailed before.

Nevertheless, divided into watches which were led by veterans of the sail training program, they climbed the rigging, put on lines, and stood at the helm.

"I feel terrible," she said. "But I won't get sick, not before we go over the starting line. It's grim determining."

The Sail Training Association describes the program's purpose as the building of character, as much as the creation of mariners - the ship's purpose is to give landlubbers a taste of the sea. Several of the girls say they expect their experiences to make them more confident and responsible.
"It's going to be fantastic," said Penny Williams, 17. "But a bit overwhelming."

For over 25 years, Martha Johnson has taken a cab from the east side to the west side of Carbondale, where for a few hours a day she becomes an integral part of the family for whom she works. She has become like a second mother to some Carbondale residents who have long since stopped wearing diapers, but whose earliest memories include Martha feeding, bathing, and getting them off to school in the morning.

Martha is 77 years old now, but still works two days a week. She lives alone on North Wall Street, where she keeps busy working in her garden, sewing, or visiting with friends.

Martha's main interest is her garden, which except for breaking the ground in the spring, she works herself. In her garden, which is the size of most people's back yard, she grows everything from tomatoes to sweet peas. Enough to last her through the year and supply her neighbors with fresh vegetables as well.

Money management course sought for ex-offenders

By Gregory Johnson

Student Writer

An SIU professor of Family Economics and Management, John angrily is optimistic of receiving a federal grant to do a pilot program which would provide consumer education for criminal offenders.

Most of the crimes that happen in America are about money, said the professor, Thomas Brooks, who believes that with a better knowledge of economics and consumer affairs most convictions would not come crimes when released from prison.

The program, which will be the first of its kind in the nation, will try to familiarize parolees with the basics of money management and consumer information necessary for re-adjustment into society.

Parolees from Jackson, Williamson and Union counties will participate in the pilot program.

Brooks said the program was initially brought to his attention by T.S. Bell, U.S. commissioner of education, who contacted various prison system experts and noting SIU’s convenient location in Carbondale and the Southern Illinois Work-Release Center will be the facility.

Brooks said the program was designed to benefit Brooks and the program director. So Brooks applied for the grant which he hopes will be approved soon.

As an example of how this program would work, Brooks cited the story of a man in Menard prison who married a woman with six children.

Sweden’s king marries commoner

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Sweden’s King Carl XVI Gustaf and commoner Silvia Sommerlath of West Germany were married Saturday in the first wedding of a reigning Swedish monarch in 180 years.

Their courtship was a well-guarded secret for almost two years. It culminated with a ceremony at Stockholm’s great church Cathedral before 1,200 guests and millions of television watchers.

Gustaf, royal wedding.

A police force numbering well over 1,000 gathered in Stockholm to protect the royal couple and their guests, who include three reigning monarchs and three chiefs of state.

A long list of royalty was headed by King Olav of Norway, King Baudouin of Belgium, Queen Margaretha of Denmark and ex-King Constantine of Greece, who lost his throne when Greek voters abolished the monarchy in December 1974.

The forefront of the “royal procession” was reserved for princes Walter Schotz of West Germany, Chio Kikken of Finland and Kristjan Eildjar of Iceland, and the bride’s parents, retired businessman Walter Sommerlath and his wife, Alice. Mrs. Sommerlath is of Spain’s noble De Toledo family.

The blond, 20-year-old king met his bride-to-be, 32, at a private party at the inauguration of the 1972 summer Olympic Games in Munich, where Miss Sommerlath was chief hostess.

“When I first saw her it said click and it has kept clicking since,” the king recalled at a news conference recently.

The king had gained a reputation as a playboy fond of fast cars, speedboats and discotheque dancing with a variety of girl friends.

The king and Miss Sommerlath dated as often as their programs allowed, but courted. But despite rumors and persistent journalists, the couple kept their romance as secret as they could.

They were seldom seen without a surrounding crowd of loyal friends.

Their engagement was officially announced in March and preparations began for their wedding.

Farmer’s Market combines food selling and socializing

By Diane Pintoul
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

On Saturday mornings, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., the farmers come to the Farmer’s Market, located at the corner of Main and Washington streets in Carbondale. Arriving in cars, trucks and vans, they spread their wares and goodies from which morning-fresh vegetables, fruits and dairy products rapidly disappear. The farmers come to sell, socialize, casual or in their employer’s overall. They come to sell their goods and to socialize.

Farmer’s Market, Inc. is a non-profit organization started by area farmers with the help of Mike San Filippo, 25, of Carbondale. The Market was started when San Filippo, then a graduate student in community development, was doing a feasibility study on marketing cooperatives. He began to talk to growers about their selling problems with truck farming.

“One of the growers suggested we start a Farmer’s market. We contacted some growers in the area a year ago, had a meeting and called it ‘Farmer’s Market. ’” said San Filippo.

San Filippo owns and tends his own small family farm, San Filippo Dairy Co., located in the heartland of ash land. The milk they produce is sold locally.

Christian Foundation changes name

The Student Christian Foundation, or SCF, that has been renamed the New Life Center, according to Jane Kuhl, student director and a Junior Sociology-Ministers UCM.

The Student Christian Foundation is the new name of the campus ministry that SCF has been donating the center. Wes said said the UCM campus is the center as a resource center for religious work, work, religious expression and life issues.

The center’s tall programs in close relationship of workshops, of Evergreen Terrace, a support group for alcoholics, and married church classes on simplified lifestyle.

Other human service groups will be operating out of the center according to Wes. A peer counseling group is being offered to develop a helping network for the campus, summer, including music, art.

Police say arson
hits car, garage

Two separate but possibly related incidents of arson occurred early Saturday morning.

A vehicle belonging to George Goodman, 30, of Carbondale, was set on fire and severely damaged at a residence in the gas tank and lit on fire, police said. The Carbondale Fire Dept. put out the blaze and damage was minor.

A garage behind 200 Elm was set on fire utilizing gasoline and lighter fluid and left unattended. The garage was partially burned.

Batack to speak at meeting

Michael Batmick, assistant professor of history, is scheduled to speak at a meeting for the Committee of Artistic and Intellectual Freedom in Iran (CAIFI) which is held at 7:30 p.m. in Activities Room A in the Student Center.

Batmick will speak on American foreign policy, atheism, and their influence in Iran.

The speech will also include a historical perspective on American policies in Iran and how it influenced the resulting policies and the suppression in Iran today.

In speaking of suppression in Blacksmith artistry to be judged in July

The Blacksmith as Artist and Craftsman in the U.S. is the title of a biennial exhibition announced by the University Museum and Art Galleries at SIU. Entrants must send two color slides of their work to the Museum before July 4. Articles must be principally iron or steel. Entries will be judged by Paul Smith, Director of the Museum of Contemporary Crafts, New York City, and L. Brent Kite, President of the Blacksmith Institute, Seattle. The exhibit is sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Library of Congress.

A grand opening is planned for July 3. San Filippo said most of the growers haven’t been marketing their wares yet because “it’s still early in the year, and because of the ‘lack of fruit.’” He said to 20 growers will be selling by July.

“We even plan to have a bluegrass band for the grand opening,” said San Filippo.

Publicity for the market has been achieved through donations, said San Filippo.

“Since we’ve started, we’ve had some radio spots and TV ads, appeared on talk shows and had articles in various papers. We have been able to get posters advertising the market by having the students at a local grade school make them.”

San Filippo said the growers have relied on advice from truck farmers in other states.

“We say tremendous amounts of energy if we sell in the area alone. If we try to sell in the produce in Chicago.”

The growers plan to stay open through the summer.

Scholar says conformity stifles creativity

By Joan Pearlman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

"Creativity is impossible in a society that advocates conformity and sells presidential candidates like it was a toothpaste campaign," Ron Hirschein, philosopher and former SIU student said during an interview at the National Conference on Creative Interchange held this weekend, at the Student Center.

Hirschein, a professor of philosophy at Chico State College, California, was one of 57 scholars and educators to examine papers written on the late Henry Nelson Wieman's theory of creative interchange.

The two-day conference held in memory of Wieman, brought together philosophers and educators from throughout the world to participate in workshops and discuss creative interchange as a mode of communication for creative treatment of human conflict.

Wieman, a distinguished philosopher and author, was honored in the opening session of the conference on Saturday. He was a professor of philosophy at the University of Chicago for 20 years. From 1956-66 he served as distinguished professor of philosophy at SIU. After retiring from SIU in 1966, he moved to Grinnell, Iowa, where he died at the age of 90. Of his many public lectures, "Man's Ultimate Commitment" is considered one of his most important works on the theory of creative interchange.

The type of creativity discussed at the conference dealt with Wieman's philosophy that man's creative growth should not be stifled after childhood. Hirschein said man should exist in a society where "people can become what they had never imagined."

The fact that a child's personality undergoes so many changes is always growing is proof that creativity is born into man, Hirschein said.

Hirschein went on to say that man's creativity often begins to slow down in early adulthood when he begins to go out in society and earn a living.

"There is a large portion of society that will first take care of man's basic needs -- an atmosphere exist that would make creativity grow," Hirschein said.

Hirschein, who studied under Wieman while he was at SIU, said Wieman's philosophy is that people should always be in search of goals. These goals have no end, Hirschein said. When a goal ends so does man's growth.

Conflicts are also necessary for growth, Hirschein said. "To look at a conflict is to face life. To avoid conflict is to exist in a type of death."

Through creative interchange, man can learn how to deal with his conflicts in a constructive manner, Hirschein said.

Prof. William S. Minor, director of the Foundation for Creative Philosophy said papers on creative interchange as related to the author's area of specialization were presented to the conference.

The purpose of these papers is to establish a breakthrough beyond confrontation, encounter, debate and the Socratic method," Minor said.

The papers were examined critically and discussed in the workshops, Minor said. Critical issues that rise from the papers are to be used as subject material for the New York Bicentennial Symposium of Philosophy sponsored by the International Federation of Philosophical Societies that will be held in October.

The philosophy of creative interchange as well as its application to education, religion, world affairs, social reconstruction, social planning, exploitation and the process of growth were the subjects of featured papers.

In a closing summary statement, Sister Mary Monetta of Niagara University said that the questions raised by most of the participants in the conference was "when do you start changing reality. The problem"

Southern AD job needs more than name

By Scott Burnside

Southern athletic director position tomorrow.

Since Southern has not produced anything close to a sports legend (Walt Frazier comes close), the mere thought of Sayers as the guiding hand of Saluki sports is enough to excite any sports fan for the common fan.

As one observer put it the other day, "You couldn't buy the amount of publicity Sayers would bring to Southern."

While this statement is correct, it doesn't have anything do with whether a man would be a shrewd and capable athletic director.

There's a philosophy going around which adheres to the thought that the only thing an athletic director does is go to cocktail parties and luncheons, but an athletic director does more than drink and generate publicity. A poor director could spell doom to a well-rounded program as Southern's.

Gale Sayers was a great running back for the Bears and Kansas, but does that make him qualified to run the athletic director's job?

Olympic trip spurs Chicago half-miler

CHICAGO (AP) — In 1972, Rick Wohlhuter's date with Olympic glory was torn up by the sunbeam. Now he's back-more confident than ever for one last chance.

Wohlhuter, 27, is the world's fastest half-miler and one of the world's best middle distance runners. He inexplicably tripped in the Olympic trial run at Munich and the 800-meter race and lost his hopes for a medal vanish.

"I'm not too certain of what happened," he said before leaving for this week's U.S. Olympic trials in Eugene, Ore. Nobody wrote him off the time, Wohlhuter tripped and fell over the sunbeam. "I thought that was a pretty good explanation."

Although he and his coach, Ted Hart, are both working in the University of Chicago Track Club, says the mishap did not face him, it's a bare bet Wohlhuter has been working the past four years with an eye towards proving to the Olympic world he's 'every bit as good as he thinks is and that's the world's best."

Wohlhuter set the half-mile standard of 1:44.1 in 1974 and also holds the world mark in the 1,000-meter run with a clocking of 2:22.3, 13.9 seconds.

In 1974, he won 26 consecutive races, including his 50th in record time, and was named recipient of the coveted Sullivan Award as the nation's top amateur athlete of 1974.

He was not quite as outstanding in 1975, but he feels he's back on the beam. He's rated a co-favorite for the 800-meter gold medal in Montreal and is the only racer with a chance capturing a medal in the 1,500-meter.

Based on last season's record, the 23-year-old is rated No. 3 in the world in the 800-meter event and No. 7 in the 1,500.

"He's the only American to have a chance to qualify in both events, which one mass has yet captured in the Olympics since Peter Snell turned the trick in 1964."

"I'd love to win both but right now, I'm just looking toward qualifying for the U.S. team," he said. "After that, I'll sit down and the games themselves will take over in my mind. It would be difficult for me just to get a medal in the 1,500 meters but I think I've got an excellent shot."

Trio of camps start at SIU

Baseball coach "Itchy" Jones is running a basic fundamental camp this week at Abe Martin Field. The camp runs for $115. For both weeks it costs $150.

Also at the SIU Arena, gymnastics coaches are preparing to start summer gymnastics camp for boys. High school and junior high gymnasts can choose from one of four programs. These programs are in the all-around, horse, bars, and floor vaulting and tumbling.

Entire sports program of a major university.

Without knowing the man personally it's hard to make any type of judgment. From what little information we know, Sayers is an intelligent man and would probably be an asset to any program in any capacity.

However, let's make sure Sayers or whoever we hire for the job is capable of doing the whole job of directing Saluki athletics.

Southern's situation is different from that of other schools. Many of our most respected sports, nation-wide, are what sports people call minor or non-revenue sports, which has been in other years, the SIU-C swimming, wrestling, and baseball teams were rated among the top teams in the country.

Our wrestling team was strong enough to win in home contests with two of the best wrestling teams in the country. Western Illinois State and the University of Oklahoma. The swimming team has enough of a tradition to attract Indiana University swimmers and in it's undersized Pullman Pool. The basketball teams are up to par with the top teams in the country.

But for now it's a weak sister when you compare its other sports programs with the major ones. The administration means to change that situation since four of the five initial candidates for the athletic director's job have football backgrounds.

The candidate is, of course, Paul Lambert, head basketball coach, who's considered the biggest revenue generator on campus, although last year with a highly successful team, it was plagued by fill the Arena.

Lambert would make a fine director of athletics, but there is that sneaky feeling that Sayers already has the job.

University administrators always seem reluctant to promote an individual from within the ranks, and Sayer's reputation and name is almost identical.

However, before George Mace and company make any final decision they need to examine all the angles. Let's make sure we're getting something more than just a name.
