Jury indicts six students

By Joe Littrell
Police Writer

A Jackson County grand jury Monday indicted six employees of a local nightclub in connection with the death of an SIUC student.

Jackson County State's Attorney Chuck Grace announced Monday that the grand jury handed down indictments against Edmund Bart, Steven Crawford, Charles Hicks, Jeffrey Judd, Martin Todd Lewis and Richard Wojcik.

The indictments charge each man with two counts of involuntary manslaughter, one count of aggravated battery, one count of battery, and one count of reckless conduct involving the death of Jose Waight.

Satisfaction, disbelief, anger, resentment — these emotions were expressed by various parties following the indictment of six SIUC students in the case of Jose Waight.

Waight, a 24-year-old freshman from South Holland, died of asphyxiation Feb. 5 following a confrontation at nightclub, 706 E. Grand Ave. The grand jury began hearing testimony in the case Wednesday.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said he was not happy about the situation precipitating the case, but the police conducted a satisfactory investigation that provided good detailed information for the grand jury in an unbiased and professional manner.

"The system works if it's given time to function," he said.

Grace also praised the actions of the police in the case, saying that they acted responsibly and swiftly.

The six students will appear in court Wednesday to hear the indictments against them and to have bonds set.

The coroner's inquest March 2 decided that Waight's death was accidental, but the coroner's inquest and the grand jury's decision are not related.

ST. LOUIS — We're going to the big dance.

After 15 years of hopes and expectations, the Salukis are going to the NCAA tournament after beating top-seeded Illinois State 70-59 to win the Missouri Valley Conference championship.

SIUC has not been to the NAAs since the last time it won the MVC tourney in 1977.

Team celebration started at the 1-minute mark when players on the bench were given MVC champion T-shirts and signs.

And what celebration would be complete without the dumping of the water, which Saluki Marcelo da Silva took the honors in doing.

Da Silva's aim missed his target, head coach Rich Herrin, but got his fellow teammates and coaches.

Herrin said he missed most of the water but would have gladly taken it.

When the final buzzer sounded, SIUC fans crowded the floor and mobbed the players until security cleared them off. The crowd of 10,877 was a record for the MVC at the St. Louis Arena.

Attorney General Roland Burris joined SIUC President John C. Guyon and other panel members for a discussion Monday about the condition of black youth.

Panel hears testimony from black community

By Thomas Gibson
Minorities Writer

Black people have done so much so long with so little, that black people are able to survive on little or nothing at all, said a member of a panel looking at the condition of the black youth.

The Illinois Commission on African-American males, created by Attorney General and SIUC alumnus Roland Burris, heard four hours of testimony from the black community Monday at the Student Center.

Witnesses came from Carbondale, Murphysboro and the surrounding area. About 80 people attended the hearings.

Stanford Scott, consultant for school District 189 from East St. Louis said the government has not little to correct all of the wrongs in the black community.

"The intent is good on the people in the community part but resources aren't there and most people do not feel a need to help programs for the advancement of black youth," he said.

Seymour Bryson, executive assistant to the president on affirmative action, said historically in the United States there has been a lack of development of strong African-American males.

Bryson's 10-minute testimony included statistics on African-American males. He said black males are not responsible for the situation that they are in.

Bryson said he was a product of the civil rights movement when doors for black men were opened in the 60s. Black men were propelled to high positions in jobs, he said.

Salukis cook 'birds, 70-59

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS — Mission accomplished. The mission: Winning the Missouri Valley Conference tournament, which the Salukis did in high fashion, beating Illinois State, 70-59, to earn the automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

It was a complete team effort by the Salukis, as emotion and determination took over and never let ISU get into the game.

SIUC head coach Rich Herrin said winning this tournament is the greatest feeling he has had in his life.

"These men worked really hard tonight and won a great basketball game," he said. "It's hard for me to express everything, but it means so much for us to get to the next step."

After being down 32-20, the Illinois State Redbirds brought the game to within six points at the 17-minute mark with two free throws by Mike VandeGarde. It was the closest ISU would come.

The Salukis then started an 11-2 run on a Marcus Timmons two-handed monster jam and capped off by a five-point Paul Lusk run.

Lusk, who had 13 points, said it was his best game this season, but he is more proud of his team.

"If you go right down the line, I think that everybody on the team had contributed well in this tournament and throughout the season," he said.

ISU head coach Bob Bender said it was the best he has seen the Salukis play this season.

"They were tremendous tonight, and they did everything it takes to win a championship," he said. "I think they will represent us very well at the NCAAs."

The NCAA pairings and sites for the first round will be announced Sunday on CBS.

The first game would be the following Thursday.

Saluki guard Chris Lowery led with 14 points. Senior center Ashraf Amaya and Timmons had 11 points each.

SIUC's shooting percentage was 47 percent, compared to ISU's 33 percent.

The Salukis defeated Bradley in a close opening game and beat Southwest Missouri State in the second round to advance to the championship.

Bender had a technical foul because he was getting too excited about the officiating. After the game he had a long talk with Jim Bain, supervisor of officials for the MVC.

Senior center named outstanding player

By Kevin Bergquist

ST. LOUIS — The Salukis, the second-highest scoring team in the tournament, used tough defense to bring home the NCAA bid.

SIUC hit the Redbirds with down-on-the-floor hustle and relentless rebounding to hold the top field-goal shooting team in the tournament to 33 percent accuracy.

Spear-heading the Saluki defensive stand was Ashraf Amaya, who was voted the tournament's outstanding player. Amaya pulled down 13 rebounds, including 11 defensive boards. Amaya also blocked one shot, and his interior defense played a big role in ISU's 21-percent field goal shooting percentage in the first half.

"He was great on both ends of the court," ISU coach Bob Bender said. "I think where he really made a statement on the game was on the defensive end. It seems like every time we turned to shoot the ball, he made us adjust the shot."

Marcus Timmons, who was one of three SIUC players named to the all-tournament team, also snagged 13 rebounds, 10 of which were defensive. For the game, SIUC commanded a 45-27 rebounding edge.

"We are a very good defensive team and very good rebounding team," said SIUC head coach Rich Herrin. "I'm sure that's where we won the game. It was just a great team effort. You can go right down the line."

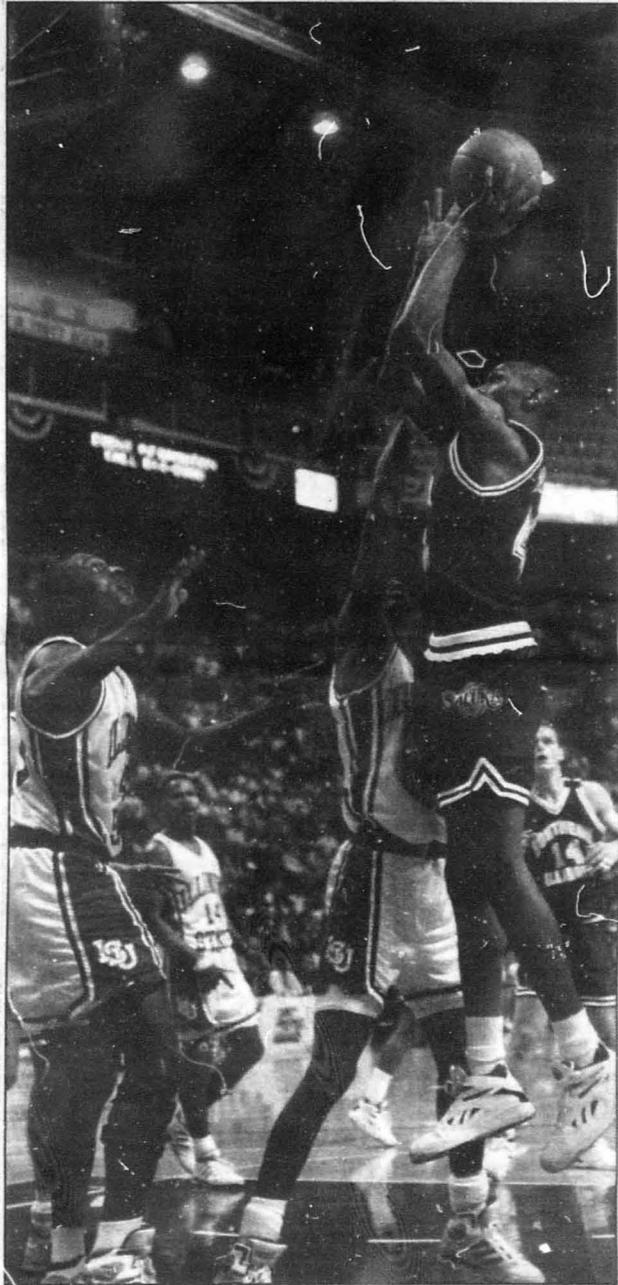

The top two Redbird scorers were Mike VandeGarde and Thomas Hunter, who hit for 16 and 12 points, respectively.

SIUC women to face Creighton in semifinals

By Kevin Bergquist
Sports Editor

Recent history is on the side of SIUC women's basketball team as it faces Creighton tonight in the semifinals of the Missouri Valley Conference Tournament.

The Salukis (18-9), who have finished first or second in the Gateway tournament the last four seasons, can put themselves in that position again with the win over the No. 2 seed Bluejays, 20-7.

But before SIUC can talk about a tourney championship, or a NCAA tournament bid, it must first do something it could not do earlier this season — beat Creighton in Omaha, Neb.

On Jan. 30, the Bluejays knocked down 26 of 28 free throws to take a 82-76 win on their homecourt. The Salukis on the other hand hit only 9 of 15 from the charity stripe.

Creighton also outrebounded SIUC 38 to 35 in the game. The Jays were one of only two teams (Northern Iowa being the other) to grab more rebounds than the Salukis in a game.

SIUC is not the only team to come away from Omaha with a loss.

Forty of the last 42 opponents have suffered losses on the Jay's home floor.

SIUC got revenge at home with a 76-73 win over Creighton Feb.

15. The Salukis turned the tables grabbing more rebounds (32-28) and forcing 21 turnovers to knock the then first-place Jays out of the league lead for good.

One Saluki who will be looking to have a big game is senior center Kelly Firth. Firth, who

Senate to slice curriculum pie; debate change

By Michael T. Kuciak
Administration Writer

The Faculty Senate will continue to wrangle over new general education requirements today, trying to get a proposal hammered out for public input.

The senate will meet at 1 p.m. in the Mississippi Room of the Student Center.

Jervis Underwood, president of the Faculty Senate, said the main issue of contention will be the new general education curriculum.

"The first plan of action is to get the senate to agree to a schedule that would include publishing the proposal in the Daily Egyptian and giving the community a chance to respond," he said.

John McKillip, professor of psychology and member of the senate, said the real issue is whether the propositions are appropriate or not.

"There is a lot of turf protection going on," McKillip said. "There is not any thought going into the content. The pie is getting divided up in the back room, and the students are going to have to take it."

"There is no concern with what is going into the curriculum, only that every department gets a piece of the pie," he continued.

He said the debate will focus on how much pie each department gets.

Artistic students win recognition, cash

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

Throughout the day on Monday, students and faculty toured the rooms of the Allyn building, which had been converted over the weekend into a temporary art gallery.

Visitors viewed the artwork and silently wondered which of the 17 finalists would win the Rickert-Ziebold Trust Award.

The waiting came to an end Monday afternoon, when the six winners of the award were announced. The students, Victor P. Panchot, Matthew A. Jones, William E. Pergle, Fred J. Furtner, Matthew S. Malmberg, Dean L. Huxman and Yuki Watanabe, will share a cash prize of $20,000.

"The work was of very high quality," said Jed Jackson, director of the Rickert-Ziebold and assistant professor of art and design. "It was a very difficult decision. It looked as good as any show in recent memory."

The winners, who were all graduating or recently graduated students of the School of Art and Design, were chosen by SIUC art and design faculty members.

William E. Pergle, who won with his highly stylized floor-level wooden sculptures, said the attitude among the contestants was one of community, even though the competition was terse.

"I feel very thankful to be in this show," he said. "I worked hard. This class has been very good sports about everything. There was a real sense that everybody was here for the same reason."

Pergle said he would use the money to move to Washington, and to help pay for graduate school.

Dean Huxman worked on several of his forged metal candleholders and sculptures at the same time, which added a cohesive feel to his exhibit.

"The process of the finished pieces involves several different stages, some of which are a lot more enjoyable than others," he said. "To survive that undesirable (time period), I keep several pieces going at the same time."

Huxman said he planned to spend the money on art materials and to go to small crafts schools.

Matthew Malmberg was the only design student to win the trust award. His design projects included an elongated broom that would assist senior citizens.

"My focus was to eliminate the eliminate the bending over with cleaning up the floor," he said. "My prototype is functional ... and it applies to people with bad backs."

Malmberg said he would use the money to pay for his prototype bicycle, which eliminates the conventional derailleur system.

Fred J. Furtner's life-size paintings of nudes were popular with the crowd at the Allyn building, possibly because many people knew the models who had been painted.

The six similar paintings, which were created in only two months, featured a harshly-lit figure with a plain black background. Furtner said he was inspired by a Whistler painting titled "Woman in Light," which used a similar scale.

"Something I had never dealt with before was scale," he said. "It was a challenge for me both in the logistics and in figuring out the composition."

Victor P. Panchot converted a foyer of the Allyn building into a concrete and steel landscape that consisted of large stone and metal towers surrounded by concrete tiles.

Victor Panchot, a senior in art from St. Louis, Mo., moves part of his 1,600 pound sculpture with the help of a friend. Panchot was one of six students who won the Rickert-Ziebold Trust Award.

Panchot said he wanted his exhibit to be hands-on, and people walked through it and felt the tiles, which looked like simple sandbags from afar.

"I wanted to create an environment," he said. "I wanted to show that concrete was very flexible. The tiles were made to contradict the concrete vertical pieces."

Yuki Watanabe was not available for comment. Her large piece, titled "Greens," features ceramic tentacles surrounding a circular abyss while waves of sand vibrate outwards.

The winning entries will be displayed March 22 to 30 in the University Museum.

Costello must stay active in south tip

FOR SOMEONE WHO IS from 100 miles north and west of Carbondale, Jerry Costello has taken a strong first step in getting in touch with the residents of the southern part of his district.

Costello, who was elected to represent the newly formed and much larger 12th Illinois District of U.S. Congress in November, is from Belleville.

Yet since his Jan. 5 swearing in, he has spent 11 full days and has made 31 sweeping visits to towns in the southern portion of his district.

The congressman appears truly concerned about the voice of his new, southern constituents. He has set up a system of town meetings for the entire district when he makes trips home from Washington.

ON HIS NEXT TRIP he will be in the Belleville area, but on April 17 and 19 he will visit the towns of Vergennes, Cutler, DeSoto, Tamaroa, Olive Branch, Cairo, Cobden and Dongola.

Citizens curious about the goings-on in Washington or those with questions or suggestions can talk to Costello and receive a response in person.

In addition to town meetings, Costello has set up district offices to help individuals with their questions and problems with the federal government.

The congressman, who has six full-time offices and three offices with part-time hours in each of the nine counties in his district, opened a Jackson County office last month in Room 115C of the Federal Building, 250 W. Cherry St. The office will have one full-time staff member and will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays.

IT GIVES CITIZENS WITH questions about veteran's benefits to complaints about taxes an opportunity to air their views and get help in person, rather than by mail.

Each office can serve for Costello as a finger on the pulse of an area's voters.

Before voting in Congress, he can call his district offices and get the views of several areas of the district, not just one.

Costello and his constituents can keep more in touch through town meetings and district offices. But it is up to both to make the congressman a true representative of the whole district.

A large portion of the population is in the northern part of the district.

Costello is in tune with those voters already — he has represented them for several years.

BECAUSE THE ECONOMY, businesses and industries are very different in the south, Costello must continue to make the effort to visit and meet the rest of his constituents. He also must use his district offices to get the voters' views while he is in Washington.

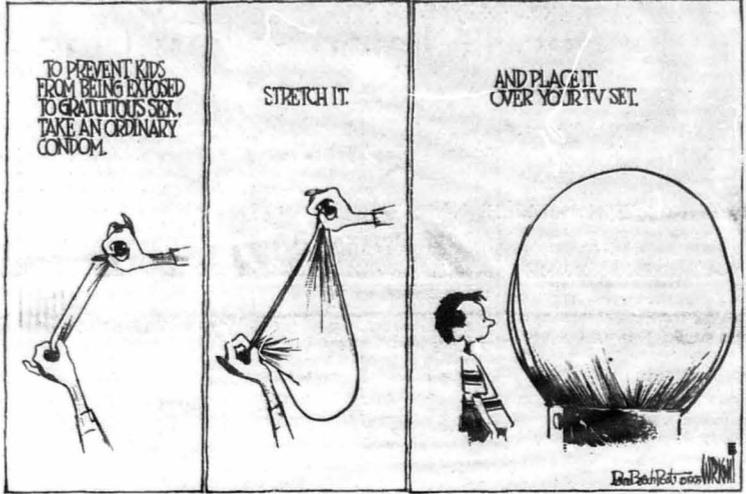

And citizens must take advantage of the Costello's efforts. If a problem concerns them, citizens should attend town meetings or get in touch with the area office.

The opportunity to make an impact on government is open. It is up to the people to step up and speak up.

Troublemakers deserve expulsion; bouncers should not be stereotyped

This concerns Ms. Roscetti's Feb. 22 letter to the DE.

Anyone who has seen the way recent events in the past 2 1/2 weeks have been going would be prompted to write a biased letter to the editor.

I guess if people have to be swayed by public opinion, then corresponding ignorant letters is the thing to do.

Isn't Ms. Roscetti politically correct? Don't get me wrong, I do not support what happened at Checkers; nor do I support the use of unnecessary force when removing bar patrons.

To put it simply though, if you do not want to get thrown out of a bar, then do not go. If you want to go to a bar and not get thrown out, then do not act like an idiot.

Obviously the only people who have to worry about the bouncers are those who act like idiots in the bars.

I would like to answer a few of the questions posed and generalizations made by Ms. Roscetti:

"What makes bouncers think they have the right to beat people when even policemen do not?" she asked. What a perceptive question. Ask Rodney King.

"Who do bouncers think they are?" she asked. We do not know, Ms. Roscetti. Why don't you ask them?

In my opinion, Ms. Roscetti, you are a woman who is unfair. You generalized most bouncers are big and dumb because of one incident.

Also, I know of no one who goes to a bar "to get an education for themselves." That is, unless that person is an alcoholic, barfly or a hooker.

I am not a bouncer, and I do not use steroids. I talk to people. I do not generalize.

People should try not to compensate for their closed-mindedness by writing ignorant, ill-perceived letters.

I think the only ego around Carbondale would be theirs. — Dave Fennell, sophomore, history education

Little progress in proposed GE programming

With regard to undergraduate education, the Faculty Senate's "Task Force on the 21st Century" recommended:

"...abandoning the General Education course as it now stands and adopting a more restricted core curriculum with fewer offerings. Which courses should constitute the core curriculum must be carefully considered to ensure coherence, balance, and breadth. SIUC needs to create a core curriculum that suits the needs and desires of the students and faculty, effectively reflecting our belief in and our philosophy of a liberal arts and sciences education. The core curriculum should be based on a set of courses that are standard introductory offerings in the sciences, the humanities and the arts; these courses should not be tailored for nonmajors, but should familiarize the student with the basic concepts and principles of the subject."

The task force's position was that thinking and communicating are best learned through substantive work in the arts, philosophy languages, sciences and literature.

Instead of a carefully considered core curriculum, the outline of the new general education program before the Faculty Senate presents, apparently, little more than a turf-protective rehash of the current general education course system.

Without detailed descriptions of courses and sequencing, the University community is at a loss to judge whether the new general education program represents a positive change from the inadequate status quo.

The task force's position was that thinking and communicating are best learned within substantive courses, e.g., those tailored for majors of discipline.

Similarly, multicultural appreciation is best learned through substantive work in the arts, philosophy, languages, sciences and literature. — Jack McKillip, professor of psychology, member of the Faculty Senate Task Force on the 21st Century.

Those with average intelligence understand Clinton's view, plan

I am writing in response to Mr. Mark Smith's letter trashing the Clinton administration and anyone else with similar views.

First of all, you obviously watch Rush Limbaugh too much.

Second, Mark, if Clinton's address to the nation was an insult to any American with average intelligence, how did it apply to you?

Third, President Clinton did not make a "no new taxes" promise to America.

He distinctly clarified that he would not pull a Bush "read my lips" campaign. Not because he was afraid to, but because he wasn't stupid. This is beside the fact that about 75 percent of people polled in an ABC telephone poll agreed with his recent plan concerning a middle class tax hike.

ABC also asked whether or not this tax hike would help them financially. Over 50 percent said it would not, but they were still willing to back it up.

As for Clinton's "giving in" to special interest groups, who says

Clinton's speech good for the average

In response to Mark Smith's letter on Feb. 23:

So you think President Clinton insulted the average American intelligence.

Those with average intelligence would realize:

1. That campaign promises are not written on gold (Mr. Bush can tell you about that);

2. Deficits are reduced with something called taxes;

3. It's about time someone gave a damn about so-called special interest groups such as environmentalists.

Furthermore, since when is a $140,000 income considered middle class classification? I do believe that Mr. Clinton put a tax hike on some of the more well-off Americans.

Now there is a change from the past.

You believe 40 percent of the American public voted for Clinton because he reminds them of JFK.

Now there is an insult of American intelligence. Although you probably would or maybe did vote for Bush just because you have one-sided views that only concern yourself. — William E. Budzileni, senior, engineering technology he's giving in? He is merely doing the things these Americans elected him to do. At least he's not a selfish-conservative-Republican-tight uh, wad.

And lastly, gridlock. Give me a break. Give him a break! Clinton's been in office, officially, barely a month. It'll take at least four years for things to loosen up from the previous 12!

Relax, reconsider, and write back then. — Rob A. Arthur, sophomore, social work

Winning coach should not get fired

This is in response to the Feb. 24 letter titled, "Eleven reasons enough to fire coach."

I disagree with your letter. Presently, the men's basketball team has a 22-9 record. They finished second in the conference and played in the Missouri Valley Tournament final Monday.

Rich Herrin is a winning coach! His teams have had four 20-win seasons in the last five years! He and his coaching staff have strongly developed a program that was on probation and in the cellar of the conference to an annual conference contender!

They have done this with integrity, dedication, and old-fashioned hard work. If Mr. Herrin is fired, what will guarantee that the Salukis will be any better?

Firing coaches with winning records makes no sense.

It just shows how our society has become obsessed with winning. Competition is good, but people tend to emphasize winning while overlooking other tangible aspects of athletics; such as cooperating with others towards a common goal, developing life-long friendships, becoming physically fit and learning self-discipline and responsibility.

College basketball is a "big business," but in light of the win at all costs attitude college sports sometimes has, the SIUC coaching staff sees that its student/athletes are good students, good citizens and overall good people. The majority of them graduate, as well as learn valuable lessons about life. They are doing a good job.

On the other hand, if you guys think you can do a better job, I encourage you to see if you can get hired to coach the Salukis next season.

I guarantee you will not be as successful as Coach Herrin.

I bet if the Salukis win the Valley Conference tournament, you seven will probably be the first people to jump on the NCAA bandwagon. — Scott Riggs, SIUC alumnus

All students, faculty should start saving world by recycling

I am shocked that the student workers who clean up the Roman Room on campus don't recycle the aluminum cans that they regularly pick up off the tables.

There is a recycling bin right next to the garbage can.

As far as I'm concerned, they are not doing their job properly.

It hurts me to see the garbage can in front of the library full of aluminum cans as I'm certain that thousands of cans end up in the trash every day.

I've always considered SIUC an environmentally conscious campus, but from what I see, I must be wrong.

Perhaps a huge mural of an aluminum strip mine in the Student Center would enlighten the students and faculty of the repercussions of aluminum waste, not to mention the polluting energy consumed in the process of transforming raw aluminum into usable products.

I realize that even a simple cardboard box next to most trash containers for aluminum cans would require great effort and expense, so I am simply asking you, the students and faculty on this campus, to please try to make that extra effort to insure that aluminum cans end up in a recycling bin somewhere, anywhere.

Thousands of cans get used everyday on this campus, it is our responsibility as human beings to begin today in our efforts to save the world for tomorrow.

Aluminum cans are not trash. — John Burhop, junior, liberal arts

Detained Palestinians were victimized before deportation

I would like to get the record straight on Mr. Goldman's letter of March 1.

In my first letter to the editor I criticized Mr. Goldman for comparing the Israeli justice system to that of the U.S. I stated that different rule: seem to apply to Palestinians and quoted from a human rights organization's report to substantiate my opinion.

Mr. Goldman apparently believes that John "Ivan the Terrible" Demjanjuk's trial and subsequent comments of Israel attorney Alan Dershowitz invalidate my comments. Mr. Demjanjuk was not a Palestinian, he was a U.S. citizen. I was speaking of Palestinian adolescents who are detained and tortured for days with no access to family or lawyer in conditions Americans might associate with the Hanoi Hilton.

Again I make these charges with facts to back them up. I urge the readers of this letter not to simply take my word for it but to look up the facts for themselves. Write for the following reports:

1. "Israel and the Occupied Territories," Amnesty International USA, 322 8th Ave. NY, NY, 10001;

2. "Targeting to Kill: Israel's Undercover Unit," Center for Policy Analysis on Palestine, 2435 Virginia Avenue NW, Washington, D.C. 20037;

3. "Lawyers and the Military Justice System of the Israeli-Occupied Territories," Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, 330 7th Ave., NY, NY, 10001.

There was also a terrific PBS program a few weeks ago entitled "Journey to an Occupied Land." This program explained the violations of international law that Israel engages in by settling the West Bank and Gaza with Jewish immigrants. Perhaps Mr. Goldman should consider this before he starts spouting off about obstacles to peace in the Middle East.

Mr. Goldman may obtain my address from the DE if he would like to arrange for a public debate on the issue. — Jeff Russell, senior, political science

SIUC bid for Baptist center to be considered by board

By Tracy Moss
Administration Writer

The Illinois Baptist State Association decides today to accept or reject SIUC's proposal to purchase the Baptist Student Center, but some board members oppose the sale.

The IBSA entered into negotiations with the University in January, resulting in approval by the SIUC Board of Trustees to buy the center for office space. SIUC officials attempted to purchase the property several years ago, but were unable to follow through because of a lack of funds. The property, located at 701 W. Mill St., borders the campus and houses office space rented by the University.

Rev. Bill Carter, a member of the IBSA board, said some board members want to sell the center because they want to get out of the dorm business but have indicated a strong feeling for continuing the ministry on campus.

"I am personally against selling the center," he said.

Marc Deem, head resident assistant of the center, said three board members visited the center this past weekend and said they have changed their minds about selling since they have seen the center.

Deem said most of the 72 board members have not seen the center. He said the three board members that visited were surprised by the good condition of the building. Board members had been given the impression that the building was in bad condition, Deem said.

Carter said board members were told the building had some serious problems that would take quite a bit of money to correct. He said the serious problems were bathroom facilities and a lack of electrical outlets for each room.

In the IBSA newsletter, Maurice Swinford, executive director of the IBSA, said the building needed "new wiring, individual heating and air conditioning controls in the dorm rooms and improved bathroom arrangements."

Swinford was unavailable for comment.

Deem said the mention of new wiring leads many to believe the whole building needs new wiring when only an outlet needs to be added to each resident's room. He said maintenance at the center has priced the wiring and found it would cost $5 or $6 a room.

Deem also said there are no problems with the bathrooms. The bathroom facilities are arranged in a bath-on-hall arrangement in which one bathroom, with several toilets and showers serves the whole floor. The improvements would include eliminating this arrangement and building bathrooms between rooms, Deem said.

Deem said the board members may have a false impression of how much profit the Baptist Student Center makes each year. He said the center has operated in the black for the last eight years, but operates on a cost recovery basis, meaning income equals almost as much as expenditures, so profit is not very much. The board members may see a low profit and think the center is not doing well, Deem said.

The IBSA newsletter also mentions a $411,000 dollar debt the center owes the association as one of the reasons for selling. Deem said the center used to be considered a mission meaning a cost situation not a profit situation. In 1970 the dorm was closed and upon reopening was no longer considered a mission, but a cost recovery business.

Because of this change the IBSA totalled the debts the center had amassed the last 13 years it was a mission which totalled $200,000, Deem said. At the same time the IBSA added a new roof and the total debt became $411,000 and since then the association has declared the debt unrecoverable and has not allowed the center to pay off this debt, Deem said.

Carter said the debt is only part of the reason the IBSA wants to sell the center and the debt is considered an interagency loan that the center has been unable to pay back.

Carter said the board will vote today on whether to accept the University's offer which includes an alternative piece of University land.

BURRIS, from page 1

the early '70s need to be repeated," Bryson said.

Larry Barnett, principal of Lincoln Junior High School in Carbondale, said a lack of any identifiable male role models in black families are partially responsible for the condition of the black youth.

Barnett said schools should have a curriculum in school dedicated to African-American history and culture.

The system herds black males into the special education area because teachers are unwilling to concern themselves, with the unique situation of young black males, Barnett said.

Barnett said most teachers are afraid of African-American males and therefore will not confront the problems of the black male student.

Silas Purnell, executive director of Ada McKinley Community Services, said the state needs a program that will move a critical mass of African-American youth.

He said people glamorize role models but role models do not teach people how to read, write or speak.

There were also testimonies about the discrimination of black people in the business arena.

Burris said the testimony from the panels are documented and will be taken into account when the commission examines testimonies from all of the hearings that are being held across the state.

Burris plans to use the best idea and fund the programs that the commission agrees will be the most successful.

all the way because it is ridiculous," Crawford said.

Charles Ghislain, a friend who was with Waight on the night he died, said he was satisfied with the proceedings so far.

"I think the charges should be harsher, not just voluntary manslaughter, but manslaughter," Ghislain said. "If they spent time in jail, I would really be happy."

Ghislain said he was a little surprised at the charges because of the apparent reaction by the grand jury to his testimony.

"When I was at the grand jury, it just didn't seem like they believed me," Ghislain said. "Well, I guess it worked out all right."

Michelle Waight said the family was pleased with the indictment of all the accused in connection with her brother's death.

"My father said it feels like a huge weight has been taken off his shoulders," Waight said. "We are now awaiting the Wednesday court date for the charges to be presented to those guys."

Waight said she hoped the employees would get the maximum sentence that could be delivered to them.

"We are just praying and hoping for justice."

Don Prosser and John Huffman, attorneys for the Waights, said they did not want to jeopardize the job of the state's attorney by making any statements.

"Based on our investigations, and what we heard at the inquest, we are not surprised with the charges," Huffman said. "Our feelings are that the death of Waight was tragic. At the same time I do not want to say anything in civil matters for the Waights that could affect the state's attorney's investigation."

Charles Victor, a spokesman for the management of Checkers, said based on the testimonies heard at the inquest, it was impossible to see how the grand jury came to its conclusion.

"We feel that the irresponsible act of an irresponsible individual is causing a great deal of trouble for many people, no different from a drunk driver on the road," Victor said. "We stand by our doormen and their actions in restraining Waight."

Victor said the doormen reacted in order to protect other patrons of the nightclub from someone uncontrollable and violent.

"What is upsetting is that on that unfortunate night, the bar was closing and patrons were leaving happily from the club," Victor said. "This one individual refused to leave and insisted on partying on. We were in a catch-22 since no patrons are allowed in the club after closing time."

Victor said six employees had to restrain Waight and lead him out of the premises, but they had a great difficulty in doing so because Waight was violent.

After staff released Waight outside the club, he started getting violent again.

Victor said Waight was restrained by the employees until the police, whom the management called, arrived at the scene.

Victor said much of the Carbondale community has suffered from misconceptions by the media coverage of the affair.

Victor said the management will stand by its employees and their actions and will do whatever it can for them.

"We believe in them, and in how they handled the situation," Victor said. "That is our stand."

Honored history instructor seeks link with past

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Kay Carr views life as a jigsaw puzzle, waiting for the links and pieces to fit into place.

"Life is the challenge: A jigsaw puzzle of history waiting to be put together by links," Carr said.

"The pieces are bits of history. They eventually fit together, somehow."

Carr has tried to put those links together through her work as an American historian. In her classes, she educates students while trying to find that one connection with the past.

"I think that is what history is all about," Carr said. "I am here with all my experiences to help students with theirs."

Carr recently was rewarded the Graduate and Professional Student Council's Outstanding Contribution to Graduate and Professional Education Award for her work with graduate students.

Two history graduate students nominated her by submitting a three-page letter full of recommendations from students, faculty and staff.

Susan Hall, GPSC president, said it was a tough decision, but Carr's student support could not be overlooked.

"We had a separate committee just to narrow it down to four," Hall said.

"Kay Carr had a lot of support from her students."

Although Carr won the award, continuing her work is more important.

"I am touched, and it is an honor, but I am going on with my life," Carr said.

"I am going to concentrate on my work and my book."

Kay Carr, associate professor of history, received the GPSC Outstanding Contribution to Graduate and Professional Education Award, for dedication to graduate instruction.

Staff Photo by Seokyoung Lee

In 1988, Carr coedited "Illinois and Michigan Canal National Heritage Corridor: A Guide To Its Historical Sources." In 1991, she wrote the "History Faculty Handbook" and many other articles.

Carr spent her life growing up in Western Illinois on a farm.

She attributes her philosophy of graduate students to her life on the farm.

"You have your feed corn and seed corn," Carr said. "The feed corn represents undergraduates that you are feeding information to while the seed corn are graduate students you are trying to help grow. I am dispersing each of them."

Carr received her bachelor's degree in history from Knox College in Galesburg. She continued her studies at the University of Chicago, where she earned both her master's and doctoral degrees in history.

After she graduated with a bachelor's degree, Carr taught a high school history class.

"I knew I had to go back to school to get more information," Carr said.

"How could I teach them if I did not know everything?" Carr became a member of the SIUC faculty in 1989 when she was 34.

Since then, she has worked with many students while conducting a lecture series to the community.

She works with Phi Alpha Theta, a history honor society, and the Southern Illinois Regional Genealogical Society. She also is involved with many graduate committees at SIUC.

"I believe I have an obligation to SIUC," Carr said. "The graduate students are so terrific to help. I am working to become a full professor instead of just an associate."

Carr said history is one of the most important courses a student can take.

"History, not only in the classroom, is important," Carr said. "We need to know our history before we can deal with our present and future."

History graduate student Laura Wheaton of Carterville said Carr's dedication kept her from getting behind.

"She helped with my semester from hell," Wheaton said. "She was there for me when I needed her."

Carr plans to spend her time thinking and working with her students.

She also enjoys the outdoors in her spare time.

If the world was going to end in a day, Carr said she would spend it with people.

"I would spend the whole time asking as many questions as I could," Carr said.

"It sounds crazy but I would be outside with people wanting to know everything I could about the living world. I would be happy with trying to find the pieces to the jigsaw puzzle."

Volunteer corps brings students job experience

By Katie Morrison
General Assignment Writer

A new program added to SIUC's Department of Student Development is getting students out of the classroom and into the community.

The Saluki Volunteer Corps gives students the opportunity to participate in community service. Community service allows students to network for jobs after graduation and gain work experience, said Katherine Pavey, coordinator for the Saluki Volunteer Corps.

"Now is the time to network — in college," Pavey said. "It may be the foot in the door students are looking for."

Volunteer work is key for juniors and seniors putting together resumes, Pavey said. However, it is never too early for freshmen and sophomores to get involved.

Graduate student Nick Kallieris found volunteer work useful for getting an idea of what employers want.

"Businesses ask what you do for the community if you work in the public sector," Kallieris said.

The Saluki Volunteer Corps began in the fall 1992 semester following a 1989 mandate requiring all public institutions of higher education to have a student volunteer program. Students must complete at least 30 hours of volunteer work in the program.

The Department of Student Development is the liaison between the students and the agencies where the students can volunteer. Students can choose from more than 90 agencies and about 200 students are in the program.

"The sky is the limit as to where you do your volunteer work," Pavey said.

The Carbondale Chamber of Commerce is one of the agencies working with the Saluki Volunteer Corps.

Jim Prowell, executive director of the Chamber of Commerce, currently has one volunteer but uses many more for large projects.

"For the airshow, we may have 30 to 40 volunteers, but for the Carbondale spring clean-up, we may have close to 200," Prowell said.

Pavey is developing an on-campus directory of agencies for those students with no transportation.

"Some students can't get to the agencies because they have no transportation," Pavey said. "An on-campus directory may get more students involved."

Students interested in volunteering can contact Student Development on the third floor of the Student Center.

Science able to correct nature's fatty food faults

By Angela L. Hyland
Environmental Writer

Editor's note: The following is a corrected version of story that ran last week with the wrong date for a University Honors lecture. The editors apologize for the error.

A new technology enabling plants to "grow" in factories should not bother people, a researcher and philosopher said.

Mark Sagoff, director and senior researcher of the Institute for Philosophy and Public Policy at the University of Maryland, will talk tonight about biotechnology, an alternative method of food production.

The free lecture, sponsored by SIUC's University Honors Program, will be at 8 tonight at the Student Center Auditorium.

In biotechnology, food is produced through the replication of plant cells, Sagoff said.

Many people assume plants require soil, air, water and sunlight to grow, he said.

But with today's technology, Sagoff said food can be engineered in factories with greater control than through traditional farming methods.

"It can be made with no fat, no cholesterol — it can be made exactly to order," he said.

Biotechnology will enable all aspects of plant growth to be controlled, Sagoff said.

"Rather than being dependent on the peculiarities of nature, location will be wholly dependent on abstract trading networks," he said.

As a philosopher, Sagoff said he is interested in the way people form views.

Because biotechnology produces food in a way most are unfamiliar with, Sagoff said he has found many people uncomfortable with this idea.

Sagoff said biotechnology is not an unnatural agricultural method, but few make the distinction between agriculture and farming.

"Agriculture has to do with the production of food," Sagoff said. "Farming involves tilling the land and producing crops.

"In farming, there is a direct, essential connection to nature," he said. "But in many ways, the production of food has nothing to do with farming and nature."

Frederick Williams, director of University Honors Program, said many people have a romantic vision of nature and its relationship to food.

"A lot of people associate farming with breathing fresh air, getting calluses on your hands and dirt under your fingernails—but this has very little to do with agriculture," Williams said.

Few people seem to make this distinction, and if they do, it often scares them, he said.

International Women's Day sparks forum on violence

By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

From the beginning of time, soldiers around the world have used more than weapons to fight their battles.

Even today in such places as the former Yugoslavia, one of the cruellest aspects of war remains the sexual violence inflicted on women.

This was the subject of an international forum Monday that commemorated International Women's Day.

Suzana Pani, associate dean of the College of Business Administration at Tirana University in Albania, said in the former Yugoslavia girls age 13 often are raped repeatedly by 20 or more soldiers.

"What is happening to Muslim, Croatian and Bosnian women in Yugoslavia is that soldiers are raping women because they have been told that it is the best weapon against their enemies," she said.

Pani was one of three speakers. She said most Muslim women are raised in a conservative atmosphere and when exposed to rape they are afraid to testify.

"So many of them are afraid to face their families because they have been told that giving birth to the child they are carrying is like giving birth to the enemy," she said. "Some of them try to have abortions in their homes or abandon the children once they are born."

Pani said the victims of these types of crimes often are left with nowhere to turn. This is a fact that may be changing with the help of a law professor from the University of Michigan.

The women who are victims of war crimes in other countries have yet to find someone to represent them. Shahla Raza of the Department of Cinema and Photography at SIUC said Palestinian women face the same atrocities as those in Yugoslavia, but they do not receive equal publicity.

"There are a lot of things that are not publicized," Raza said. "Women's bodies have been used as weapons of war and violence against these women has often been linked to violence against nature."

Raza said laws protecting human rights that apply in Israel do not apply in Palestine.

"I know of many cases where 11-year-old girls have been raped by Israeli soldiers," she said.

She said in one of the largest compounds in the area women are imprisoned, made to sign forced confessions written in Hebrew, tortured and sexually humiliated.

"Our language is Arabic, and the confessions are in Hebrew," Raza said. "The women are forced to sign them and they can't even read them."

She said another problem these women face is the lack of health care outside Israel.

"One organization which is helping these women is the Women's Health Project," Raza said. "It is located in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. They have begun to provide services formerly provided by the state."

Raza said the need for such an organization was emphasized when Israeli soldiers sprayed tear gas into a nursery and complex where several pregnant women were staying.

"Spraying the tear gas is one example of the Israeli soldiers' "

Magic programs help students take steps ahead in college life

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

For many students, the transition from high school or community college to a university setting can be quite a shock, but SIUC has three programs to ease the adjustment.

Projects MAGIC, STEP and AHEAD are programs offered to incoming students by SIUC Student Development's First Year Experience program.

Project MAGIC — Maximize Academic Growth In College — is a mentoring program for students seeking guidance from faculty and staff members.

Students meet with mentors three times during a semester to talk about academics, career and personal issues.

Charles Van Rossum, Student Development coordinator, said it is a good program.

"Faculty and staff mentor students to help them adjust," Van Rossum said. "I think it is a good idea. Students who are mentored have someone on campus to talk to other than their friends and it shows students that they matter."

David Rogers, a graduate student in college and student personal affairs from Murray, Ky. who has been working with the program for two years, said he thinks it is a wonderful way to get involved.

"Students have an outlet," Rogers said. "Students should open their eyes to the campus and enjoy. They should look at everything it has to offer."

Since the program started in 1983, every year almost 400 students and 200 faculty and staff members have volunteered to participate in the program.

"I have been involved in the program for four to five years and I think it is a fantastic program. It gives new students direction."

—Debra Walton

"We are looking for more participation from everyone," Rogers said. "Students come to campus and they do not know where to go or what to do."

Debra Walton, Student Development assistant director, said the program is a way of direction for students.

"I have been involved with the program for four to five years and I think it is a fantastic program," Walton said. "It gives new students direction."

Some mentors have had long-lasting relationships with students.

"I mentored students," Van Rossum said. "One of my former mentees sent me a wedding invitation."

"Studies have shown the importance of making contacts with faculty and staff," Van Rossum said. "It gives the student a feeling of self-worth, importance of career development and academic development. It makes students feel they matter."

Project STEP (Success Through Experienced Peers) enables the new student to meet with a peer mentor to develop friendships and discuss academic, career and personal issues.

STEP was developed to help new students get acquainted with students that already have had the first year experience.

"STEP is for students that want to be with other students instead of faculty or staff," Van Rossum said. "Any way, we want someone to be there for the new students."

Project AHEAD (A Humanistic Approach to Development) takes a different approach.

The program offers sociology courses to help the new students adjust. Some of the courses, such as Sociology 101, are required for new students.

"I think a new student should be connected with one of these programs," Van Rossum said. "I know my daughter, next year, probably will."

Anyone interested in information should contact the First Year Experience program at 536-2338.

Future of WIDB put on hold by bureaucratic obstacles

By Todd Schlender
General Assignment Writer

A bill passed last week to raise student fees $2 to get WIDB on the air was vetoed by the president because the wording of the bill was not clear.

Brad Cole, student body president, vetoed the bill following the Undergraduate Student Council meeting March 3.

A memo issued by Cole's office states that he encourages members to endorse this resolution if they supported the original bill.

Cole said he was unable to prepare a resolution in time for the March 3 meeting. In light of the number of WIDB supporters at the meeting last week, a resolution was prepared quickly and brought before the senate.

The original bill was passed with 24 votes in favor, one against and two abstentions.

WIDB officials are not worried about the technicality. When contacted Monday, Paul Cotter, WIDB graduate assistant and Michele Miller, WIDB public relations director, said they knew of the veto and felt sure the vote on Wednesday would be successful.

USG will meet again Wednesday with the option of either passing the original bill by a two-thirds margin or voting on the new resolution.

ethnic cleansing," she said. "This type of torture is not uncommon."

Wenona Whitfield, associate professor at SIU School of Law, said the international community's response to these types of war crimes is hampered by its own problems dealing with gender roles.

"I think Somalia is a good example of how slowly they have moved on these types of issues," she said. "It took pictures on television to get someone to act."

"If it took them that long to act in that situation and the response was limited," Whitfield said. "You can imagine how long it takes to get action in situations dealing with crimes against women."

She said the international organizations are examples of how women's role in society is regarded.

"In the United Nations, only four countries have women representatives," Whitfield said. "They are New Zealand, Barbados, Senegal and Trinidad/Tobago."

She said the questions asked of Clinton's nominees for U.S. Attorney General also signify how women in government are treated.

"Of all the men who have been confined for positions how many of them have been asked about who cares for their children?" she said.

The event was sponsored by the Women in Development Network, International Programs and Services and Women's Studies.

Despite losses, netters improve

By Brent Warren
Sports Writer

Despite her team's four road losses last week, Judy Auld, SIUC women's tennis coach, said she sees improvement on the horizon for the Salukis.

The losses to Memphis State University on Thursday, Centenary College on Friday and Northeast and Southwest Louisiana on Saturday dropped SIUC's season record to 3-6.

Auld said the team's performance was a big improvement, although it may not appear that way.

"The matches were closer than the scores indicate," she said. "We just were not winning the close points."

Early-season rustiness and the recent string of bad weather might be the reasons for the Salukis' lackluster play, Auld said.

"It's early, so winning the big points is a mental thing," she said. "The girls are physically in shape, but it's a matter of winning the right points at the right time." The Salukis' struggles began at Memphis State, where they lost, 5-2, amid the cold and windy weather. The team failed to win in doubles competition, but it fared somewhat better in singles play.

SIUC's No. 2 player Lori Gallagher disposed of Memphis State's Natalie Johnson, 6-1, 6-3.

Irena Feofanova, who played at No. 5 singles for SIUC, defeated Dawn Norrey, 6-4, 6-3.

SIUC could only muster a 2-7 record against Centenary College. However, the women did manage to take five matches to three sets.

Anyone watching the event might have had a sense of déjà vu, as Gallagher and Feofanova again were the only two Salukis to win their matches.

Gallagher, playing at No. 2 in singles, beat Heidi Zimmerman, 7-5, 6-3. Feofanova won No. 4 doubles, defeating Melanie Bolton, 5-7, 7-6, 7-6.

The doubles teams again came up empty, dropping all three of their matches to Centenary.

It was all downhill from there for the Salukis, who lost to Northeast Louisiana, 5-1, and Southwest Louisiana, 6-0, on the same day.

Against Northeast Louisiana, Karen Wasser, who played at No. 6 singles, managed the only win for SIUC, beating Jill Joseph, 6-1, 6-3.

The Salukis were dominated by Southwest Louisiana, losing all of their matches. Feofanova came the closest to victory, taking Ellen Fauser to three sets, but she eventually fell, 7-5, 6-7, 7-6.

However, Auld said she saw solid improvement over the team's last meet, and she was particularly impressed with the performance of Gallagher and Feofanova.

"Gallagher played very well," she said. "She sat out all last year with a hand injury, but I think she's back in form. Feofanova also had a good weekend. She came over from Russia two weeks late and then missed another week of practice to catch up in school."

"She's two-and-a-half or three weeks behind everyone else, but she still played tough," Auld said.

Gibbs makes Petibon believe

The Sporting News

During his 12-year career as the coach of the Washington Redskins, Joe Gibbs was known for his strong religious convictions. And he made a believer out of Richie Petibon last week.

"When something like this happens, considering all that's gone on, it makes you believe there really is somebody upstairs who has a plan for you," Petibon says. "That's the first thing I thought."

Petibon, the Redskins' assistant head coach/defense and a defensive assistant with the team for 15 years, became the team's coach when Gibbs stunned the National Football League by announcing his retirement Friday. Despite the departure by one of the best coaches of any generation, there was a peace and calm about the transition.

It's not like Bill Clinton replacing George Bush. The theme of continuity is alive and well in one of the NFL's model organizations.

Petibon, 54, will retain the Redskins' staff of assistants. Jack Kent Cooke is still the owner. Charley Casserly is still the general manager. The Redskins are still the Redskins. But that doesn't mean things won't change.

Trust us, Richie Petibon is no Joe Gibbs. That's not meant to be demeaning. Just a fact.

"Richie is more coldblooded than Joe," says Dan Henning, the Detroit Lions' offensive coordinator and a former Redskins assistant. "With Richie, there is always the bottom line. If you're a player, you're paid to perform. If you do, that's great with Richie. If you don't, there's no b.s. with Richie. Basically, it's, 'Get the hell out of here, let's bring in the next guy.'"

This should formally put quarterback Mark Rypien on alert. Few people believe Petibon would have stayed with Rypien as he struggled in 1992.

"Richie would have no problem with making a decision like that," Henning says. "Joe would agonize."

Richie would analyze the situation, make the decision and get on with it. It wouldn't bother him one bit to bench a $3-million quarterback, if that's what was right for the team.

There's little doubt that Petibon is the right man for the job. When Gibbs, 52, made his decision to retire because of health and family reasons, Cooke wasted no time in delivering the job to Petibon.

Despite long being recognized as one of the NFL's top assistant coaches, Petibon seldom was mentioned as a serious candidate for a head-coaching vacancy. He never campaigned for any of the jobs and often seemed aloof about the prospect of being a head coach.

"It's not my nature," Petibon says. "I don't think it's right to beat my own drum."

Henning says: "Richie's not a politician in a town full of them. He believes in what he does and believes it should stand for itself."

Petibon was one of the finalists for the New Orleans Saints job that went to Jim Mora in 1986. Privately, Petibon had really only coveted jobs in Chicago and Washington.

Petibon, who was a hard-nosed safety on the Chicago Bears' championship team of 1963, was disappointed when the Bears hired Dallas Cowboys defensive coordinator Dave Wannstedt over him in January. The disappointment was short-lived, much to Petibon's delight.

"I'm so lucky, so blessed right now," Petibon says. "I mean, and this is the truth, the one job I only really wanted was the Redskins'."

Members of the Redskins' staff noticed that Gibbs was suffering as the 1992 season wore down. In recent weeks, they also noticed that Gibbs was distant and somewhat unattentive in personnel meetings.

Petibon knows there is a tradition to maintain. Gibbs is 10th on the NFL's all-time career victory list with a 140-65 record. He was 16-5 in playoff games and is the only coach to win three Super Bowls with three different quarterbacks.

Greenberg—authority on women's basketball

Los Angeles Times

When the Monday morning sun rises and illuminates the cold streets of Philadelphia, Mel Greenberg—who has spent all of Sunday night and Monday's pre-dawn hours on another women's basketball poll—calls it a day.

Greenberg, 45, a 23-year newsman at The Philadelphia Inquirer, compiles the weekly women's college basketball poll for The Associated Press. Mel Greenberg is the AP women's basketball poll.

He's the sport's guru, its overseer. Need to know something about women's basketball? Greenberg is your guy.

When a West Coast reporter left a message on his answering machine Saturday, Greenberg returned the call Sunday after noon — from the office. He was still at the Inquirer sports department, preparing the poll that appears in Tuesday newspapers across the United States.

"What a week, what a bunch of crazy stuff going on!" he said. Georgia had upset No. 1-ranked Tennessee Saturday.

"I can't say for sure, but I'm guessing the coaches will vote Vanderbilt No. 1 now," he said Sunday. Vanderbilt was No. 1 when the poll was released Monday.

Greenberg was the student manager of the Temple men's team that won the National Invitation Tournament in 1969. He hasn't had a thing to do with men's basketball since.

"I went to work for the Inquirer the following year (and) got the women's basketball beat," he said. "I've outlived two sports editors, and I still have women's basketball."

Jones overlooked by NFL

By G.D. Clay
Newsday

Commentary

BALTIMORE — It's only 20 degrees outside, but David "Deacon" Jones is steamin' inside.

Jones, a Hall of Fame defensive end who was the fiercest of the Los Angeles Rams' famous Fearsome Foursome of the 1960s, is angry on several fronts. He's angry the National Football League doesn't recognize his sack total as the league's official record; he's angry about the NFL's hiring policies regarding black people; and, like the Rev. Jesse Jackson, he's angry that many black athletes don't stand up and speak out.

CBS Sports last year undertook a study to document Jones' sack total. It came to 180.5. But New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor is credited with having the record at 136.5, because the NFL didn't recognize sacks as an official statistic until 1982.

"It's a disservice to me; it's a disservice to football," said Jones, who was among 22 athletes honored as part of the black college All-America centennial football team here Feb. 19-21. "You can verify it through the film. They research baseball. Why can't the NFL do the same thing? Yeah, I'm bitter about it."

Jones, who perfected the headslap against offensive linemen, has a right to be bitter. He's the best pass rusher who ever played the game—but he's not recognized. It's time the NFL rights a serious wrong.

The man even coined the term "sack." Jones: "I hated all offensive linemen and quarterbacks. I wanted to put them in a bag and beat it with a baseball bat. That's a sack." And each sack, Jones said, earned him an extra $500 with the Rams.

Jones, whose book "Headslap" is scheduled to be released this fall, also has been sacking the NFL every chance he gets. "Are there any black presidents in the NFL?" Jones asked. No.

"Are there any black general managers?" he asked. No.

"OK, the NFL is racist to the core." That's the main reason Jones decided to go north of the border. He is a special assistant/consultant to Larry Ryckman, owner of the Canadian Football League's Calgary Stampeders. Jones also asked, "Why don't black athletes of today say anything?" These were sentiments that were echoed by Jackson, who at the Baltimore celebration implored members of the centennial team and the 1992 black-college All-America squad to speak out.

Said Jackson, who asked black athletes to use their fame as leverage to increase management representation: "You ask black athletes about Rodney King and they say, 'Naw, I can't get into that, man. I have to go shoot my free throws.'"

Jones was outspoken during his playing days, too. Maybe that's why he's been shunned, but he won't change his style. "Yeah, I'm a maverick. I'm always going to be that."

Take a message from Deacon: There should be more mavericks among black athletes—but have a just cause and don't vacillate.

Holyfield to get chance to prove theory in rematch against Bowe

Daily Egyptian Wire Service

NEW YORK — Evander Holyfield says more size is the answer. He will get his chance to prove it in September when he and Riddick Bowe fight a heavyweight title rematch, provided both win fights this summer.

"I want to get bigger, probably to around 220," Holyfield said from his ringside seat for Saturday night's Pernell Whitaker-Buddy McGirt welterweight title bout at Madison Square Garden. "For the last fight, I didn't do weights at all. I was too light."

Holyfield believes weighing 205, 30 pounds less than Bowe, was the reason he was unable to hurt the challenger and was rocked repeatedly. Holyfield said he weighs about 215 and is "lifting weights real heavy."

Holyfield spent Saturday afternoon watching a taped replay of Bowe-Holyfield on television. "No surprises, the same outcome," he said. "I lost."

That is a departure from Holyfield's statements a month after the fight, when he said he thought the fight was close enough that he should have gotten the decision and blamed his promoter, Dan Duva, for "not doing enough" to ensure a victory. He also added he was announcing the addition of pop music performer Hammer to his advisory team, and recently, replaced trainer George Benton with Emanuel Steward, although he still has not told Benton he has been fired.

According to Duva, Holyfield was in Whitaker's dressing room for 45 minutes before the McGirt fight, but never came over to speak with any members of his promotional team. "Not even hello," Duva said.

Sunday, Hammer said he and Steward had "figured out what needed to be done to beat Bowe the second time. We worked out the whole fight strategy." Asked about this collaboration, Steward said, "He'll handle the footwork. I'll do the lyrics."

The new singing/dancing/ rapping Holyfield will be unveiled in June against "preferably someone in the top 10," according to manager Shelly Finkel. Rock Newman, Bowe's manager, said "some real scheduling problems" would push Bowe-Holyfield II off to the fall, with the heavyweight champ facing untested Alex Garcia or rejuvenated Jesse Ferguson May 22, in Atlantic City, N.J., Washington, D.C., or Portland, Ore. Holyfield would fight an undetermined opponent in June.

According to Newman, he and pay-per-view exhibitor TVKO did not want to buck three major pay-per-view events in May and June—the Lennox Lewis-Tony Tucker heavyweight bout May 8, a proposed George Foreman-Tommy Morrison heavyweight bout June 7, and the World Wrestling Federation show "Kings of the Ring" June 22.

Sixers dump coach Moe

Zapnews

PHILADELPHIA — To lose by 56 points in the NBA should be a once-in-a-lifetime event.

Coach Doug Moe's Sixers did it twice.

And now he's "former" coach Moe.

The Sixers dumped him Sunday. His team was fresh off its latest 56-point massacre — this one at Seattle — and the Sixers cut him loose. Rumor has it that general manager Jim Lynam wanted to fire Moe during the game against the SuperSonics, but that he couldn't get close enough to him on the bench to wake him up.

Longtime assistant coach Fred Carter takes over for the rest of the season in what has to be the best spot imaginable. Carter's always wanted to be a head coach, and now's his chance. And, frankly, he can't help but look good.

If Carter can cut the losses down to 25 points, he'll be hailed a genius. Because right now, the Sixers are playing like the Dallas Mavericks — except that they don't have any Mike Luzzolinos or Tim Leglers to pin this on. The Sixers have some real players — at least a couple. Remember: Once upon a time, Moe thought they could win 50. To be losing games in the manner they've been losing them is beyond comprehension.

The Sixers have quit. There's no other way to describe it. They can take no bows; they can provoke no wows. But they can do bowwows. Boy, can they do bowwows. Off the way they've played recently, the Sixers could be entered in any of the Westminster Kennel Club's competitions and fit right in.

But no — they couldn't win them, either.

The players quit.

Ergo, Moe goes.

But look at it this way — he gets to keep the cash. And if it's true that he has 4 1/2 years left on his contract, then this guy just made more money for doing less work than anyone on the planet not living in Buckingham Palace.

There is a temptation to call this the firing of the last honest man in America. There is that temptation because Moe was so brutally honest as soon as it became clear what kind of team he had on his hands. In many ways, covering that team was a dream. A reporter could write anything he wanted to about the Sixers this season — anything bad at all — because whatever it was, it wasn't nearly as harsh as the things Moe was saying.

Sitting down by the Sixers' bench when Moe was the coach was a hilarious experience. He would rip anybody, any time, about anything. None of his players was safe. And timeouts? One night in Boston, he told the team, "This last few bleeping minutes is why you bleeping guys lose so many bleeping games. Bleep like that. That's bleeping why."

If you gather that there were a lot of F's, but not nearly as many X's and O's, you gather correctly.

SIUC women's swim team places third in conference

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

Porter and Doni Murgiondo all had a good meet, Klumper said.

One of the Salukis, who has been outstanding all year, Rachel Brinn, had somewhat of an off meet.

"I think she was a little disappointed with her times," Klumper said. "But she still placed second in the 500 freestyle, and she swam the last leg of our 200 free relay team that finished second, so she shouldn't hang her head."

Klumper said he will miss the leadership of the four seniors due to graduate, but he is excited to have so many young swimmers back.

"The core of our team is returning, so I think we can look forward to some good things next year," he said.

Next year starts in about two weeks, as the team will start their spring training while the coaches concentrate on recruiting.

Klumper, who finished his first season as women's head coach, said he enjoyed the experience.

The SIUC women's swim team finished its season on a positive note, as it swam to a third place finish in the Eastern Independent Conference.

West Virginia won the 10-team meet convincingly (593.5), and Notre Dame placed second (542). Saluki head coach Mark Klumper said he anticipated finishing second or third coming into the meet.

"We swam pretty good, but we could have gone better," Klumper said. "If we swam a perfect meet we would have finished second."

The Salukis, who had 457.5 points, had no first place finishes. The third place overall standing was a team effort, Klumper said. Many swimmers scored points by placing in several events.

Sophomore Kelly Krogh trined in a solid performance, finishing in the top eight in all three of her events, while Lia Barlean, Elizabeth Duncan, Melanie Davis, Karen
