City revises development plan

Recommendations include:

- A teen center to be built between 1997 and 2002.
- A sports complex to be built between 2003 and 2008.
- Realignment or widening U.S. Route 51 between 1997 and 2002.

TIME LINE: Carbondale wants to expand highways, create teen and sports facilities within 20 years.

WILLIAM HATFIELD
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Allowing greater access to Carbondale by encouraging construction for an interstate or four-lane highway to St. Louis is one of the recommendations added to a newly revised comprehensive plan to guide the development of Carbondale.

Tom Redmond, Carbondale development services director, said the revised plan includes a recommendation to widen state Route 127 or U.S. Route 51 to four lanes.

"This would allow better access to Carbondale," Redmond said. "The fact that we're kind of isolated makes it difficult to get in and out of Carbondale."

The recommendation was a part of a revised plan that was presented to about 45 Carbondale residents at a special meeting Monday night at the Civic Center, 200 S. Illinois Ave.

The first draft of the plan, which was presented to the public in February, was revised after the planners received input from city officials and the public.

The plan is being designed by Camiros Ltd., a community planning agency from Chicago, to guide the economic and physical development of Carbondale for the next 20 years.

The revised plan also recommends using vacant downtown buildings for residential or commercial use.

"Rather than tearing down old buildings, we're looking at how we can re-use vacant buildings again," Redmond said.

Camiros recommends that Carbondale consider land transfers with SIUC so the city can use University farmland south of Chautauqua Road for residential areas.

The plan provides a time line and cost estimates for Carbondale's planned projects, such as the construction of a four-lane highway to St. Louis or construction of a Mill Street underpass. The city is still awaiting finalized plans for the construction of the underpass from a design consultant.

Camiros estimated that the underpass will cost about $9.2 million and that it should be constructed between 1997 and 2002.

IN-DEPTH DISCUSSION: Nobuharu Sekine (left), managing director of the Pacific School Entity, Joe Foote (center), dean of the College of Mass Communications and Media Arts, and Jared Dorn, principal of SIUC-Nakajo, meet with Mike Starr, Radio and Television Department chairman about the long-term relationship between SIUC and the Pacific School Entity.

SIUC finalizes Nakajo contract

RENEWAL:

• The contract goes into effect May 16.

• Students at Nakajo will be able to transfer to SIUC after two years of study.

RENEWAL: President says agreement assures campuses of a long-term relationship.

TRAVIS DE NEAL
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC has an agreement to keep its Nakajo, Japan, campus open after a member of Nakajo's operating board visited campus earlier this week to review contract details, SIUC President Ted Sanders says.

"We are pleased with the outcome of (Nobuharu) Sekine's visit," Sanders said. "We have an agreement for next year, and a long-term relationship is assured."

Next year, the Pacific School Entity, which operates the Nakajo campus, will pay SIUC in yen rather than dollars, he said.

Faculty members teaching at the campus will be paid in dollars, though their contingency plan, which helps cover living expenses, will be in yen, he said.

Nobuharu Sekine, Pacific

School Entity's managing director, said while he was at SIUC to review the contract renewal, he also examined educational programs that would attract more students to the Japanese school.

"We are discussing a new system for Nakajo that could get more students," Sekine said.

As an extension of the long-term relationship with Japan, Sanders said, there are other possibilities the University will

Organization searching for funding

HIGH HOPES: American Indian Association needs $17,000 to bring first Powwow to region.

LA'KEISHA R. GRAY
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Iris Cressy says her Registered Student Organization is in jeopardy of canceling an event that could enlighten and bring a new cultural experience to Southern Illinois.

Cressy, the president of the American Indian Association, said the organization has hopes of presenting this region's first American Indian Powwow, an event that celebrates American Indian culture.

However, the group is suffering from lack of funding. She said the AIA is trying to raise $17,000 to present the "Spirits of the Midwest" on April 5 at a large facility.

"It's a cultural event that will enlighten people as to what a Powwow is," said Cressy, a doctoral student in educational psychology from Aviston. "We're looking at maybe having to cancel, but I'd prefer to just have a smaller event than we had in mind for the Powwow. But even to have that, we'd have to continue our fund raising in order to pull it off."

To help raise funding for the Powwow, the organization has sent sponsorship packages to individuals and local businesses. Yet, only $3,000 has been raised, which covers less than one-fifth of the cost of the event.

Other members of the group expressed their disappointment and regret at the lack of community support.

Sheila Teagues, a treasurer for AIA, said sponsoring a cultural event such as the Powwow should be a community effort.

"We had a lot of hope for this event, but it's going to take everybody's cooperation," she said. "We need the support of the community and the University. It will be a big disappointment for our association if we have to cancel because it would have been a great opportunity to share our culture and history."

TRAINING: For students of Marty Davis, tournaments are secondary to technique.

TRAVIS AKIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Eight-year-old Alex Barr watches with interest as his instructor begins the evening lesson in Kung Fu. He mimics every movement, a look of determination coming over his face.

And although the purpose of the class is not to prepare students for tournaments, Barr said nonetheless, he was amazed at his success in a few tournaments.

"At first I did not know what to expect," he said. "We don't prepare for tournaments."

Barr is a student of the White Tiger Kung Fu and Tai-Chi class, which is taught at two locations in Carbondale.

He finished third place in form at the City of Roses tournament in Cape Girardeau, Mo., in July 1996 and fourth place in form in the Open Karate Classic in St. Louis in February.

His secret for success is hard work and dedication.

"I have only missed one class," he said with a smile. "That was for a David Bowie concert in St. Louis."

The instructor of White Tiger Kung Fu and Tai Chi, Marty Davis, a junior in Spanish from Carbondale, said he does not teach his students how to win at tournaments because he wants them to focus on the forms of Kung Fu.

But Davis said he wants his students to go to overcome the fear of taking on a stranger in a fighting situation.

He said he is proud to see his students do well in tournaments because the judges at the tournaments rarely see Kung Fu.

"It is difficult to compete because Kung Fu looks different," he said. "It does not look as obviously powerful, and the judges are not familiar with it."

He said the movements have a dance element to them and are more graceful in appearance. But there is more power in the Man suspected of assault on police still at large

Carbondale Police say they have one man in custody and are searching for another man in connection with a March 8 assault on two plain-clothed police officers.

The two officers, one of whom was hospitalized, were on duty in the 500 block of South Illinois Avenue at 2:02 a.m. on March 8 when three men reportedly assaulted them. One man was arrested, another has been identified and is being sought by police, and the third has not been identified.

Jeff T. Killebrew 25, was charged with aggravated battery and aggravated assault in connection with the incident. Police also have identified Matthew E. Cripps 23, of O'Fallon, Mo., as a suspect, and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

Community resource officer Jeff Vaughn said that one of the officers was taken to Memorial Hospital of Carbondale and treated for injuries that included swelling to his face and head. The officer required several stitches on his head.

Killebrew posted $500 bond and was released pending a Jackson County Court appearance at 9 a.m. Thursday.

There has been no identification made of the third man involved in the attack, however, police have released a description of a suspect. He is described as white man; 5 feet 10 inches tall; weighing 210 pounds; with brown, medium length hair.

Senate defeats campaign finance amendment

WASHINGTON—In its first vote on campaign finance reform since the current furor over big money in politics erupted, the Senate Tuesday overwhelmingly killed a constitutional amendment that would have enabled Congress to restrict campaign spending without violating the free speech doctrine.

The 61-38 vote against the measure fell well short of a majority, much less the necessary two-thirds requirement for approving proposed constitutional amendments and sending them to the states for consideration.

Another Simon joins faculty

NEW ADDITION: Morris Library to welcome Jeanne Simon as adjunct professor.

TAMEKA L. HICKS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Another famous Simon is being appointed to the SIUC faculty.

Jeanne Simon, the chair of the U.S. National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, the wife of retired Sen. Paul Simon, accepted an adjunct professor position with the Morris Library faculty for next fall.

Carolyn Snyder, dean of Library Affairs, said Simon's duties will include planning the library's National Conference on Intellectual Property Rights/Copyright for spring 1998.

"Jeanne is highly regarded as a professional in the library world," she said. "I'm sure she will bring increased attention to SIUC and the library."

Simon will be welcomed to the library by a group of administrators, University faculty, library staff and the chairs of undergraduate and graduate student governments, who will give welcoming presentations, March 24. The reception will be in the first-floor lobby of Morris Library.

Simon said she is thrilled that Snyder is taking the time to welcome her with a reception.

"I really appreciate her going through all this trouble just to welcome me," Simon said. Simon said her role in planning Morris Library's conference on intellectual property will include gathering books, stories, poems and photographs.

Jim Fox, associate dean for public and collection development services for Library Affairs, said he is sure Simon will contribute her experience to the library.

"It's a high honor to have someone of her stature to join our faculty," he said.

Simon said that she has followed library legislation for years and has a life-long love affair with library affairs.

Simon is a member of the American Library Association and was appointed by President Bill Clinton as the chair of the U.S. National Commission on Libraries and Information Science in 1993.

Simon said as chair of the U.S. National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, she works to get federal grants for U.S. libraries. Federal grants are received based on library uses and needs.

"The library includes millions of people because everyone has access to a library," Simon said.

Tiffany Merrell, a sophomore in radio and television from Chicago and a library student worker, said she expects Simon to attract many people to the library.

"I don't know her personally, but with her background, I'm sure she'll improve the uses of this library," she said.

Simon said she hopes that she can live up to the expectations of everyone.

"I am not a librarian, I'm a lawyer," she said. "I never dreamed of being on the Morris Library's faculty. This is great."

Simon said when she begins her appointment, she will focus on how important the library is and will try to call attention to it.

"I hope I can contribute to making Morris Library the center of SIUC's campus, because a library should be the center of attention."

Clothes sizing shapes students' feelings

SIZE PSYCHOLOGY:

Finding a perfect fit is not always in the numbers.

MIKAL J. HARRIS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Joy Dickerson says when she tries on clothing and discovers she needs a size smaller than what she usually wears, it can propel her into a shopping spree.

"When I go shopping, getting into a smaller size always makes me want to continue shopping," said Dickerson, a sophomore in accounting from Peoria. "When I can't fit into my right size, and I have to get into a larger size, I stop shopping for the day."

Dickerson's experience in shopping for women's clothes is not uncommon, according to a recent national magazine article featuring an SIUC professor.

The March issue of Shape magazine features an article about the variation of sizes in the women's apparel industry and how it can affect a woman's feelings and even self-image.

Clothing and textiles professor Jane Workman said she responded to a request that Shape reporter Suzanne Schlosberg posted on the Internet. Schlosberg was looking for researchers familiar with the women's fashion industry, and Workman was eventually used in the article, titled "What's In A Size?"

Workman, who has been researching the apparel industry for 15 years, said clothing sizes should not determine a woman's mood, as they affected Dickerson's, or self-image.

She said most clothing manufacturers use the body dimensions of one woman, called a fit-model, to determine the sizing of their clothing lines.

"A standard size is usually between 8 to 10, and its dimensions are determined by the company's fit-model," she said. "Manufacturers usually grade that size up or down for women whose sizes are larger or smaller

Golden market perpetuates greed during spring break

They love us in Florida. Not just SIUC students in particular (though really, how can you not?), but college students in general. During this time of year, we are the Golden Market, prepared to funnel hundreds of dollars into whatever spring break locale we deem fit.

Not everybody, but certainly a sizable minority — one that I found myself a part of this past week.

Now, I realize most of you don't give a damn about my trip, so I'll spare you the play-by-play.

However, I will utilize my personal spring break experience to touch on a much broader and worthier topic: the systematic exploitation of our generation in an effort to get our money.

I'm no opponent of capitalism per se. What disturbed me about my venture was the grotesque magnitude of the consumer culture by which I found myself surrounded.

Spring break is supposed to be about getting a tan, chanting your school's letters at impromptu moments and throwing the concepts of proper sleeping, grooming, eating and behavioral habits out the window for a week.

Now, it seems, it's all about getting my money. They took what was pure and wholesome and good and turned it into greed gone amok.

Case in point: Upon my arrival at the hotel I am given a shoebox tied to a plastic card with a mega-telephone company's logo on it.

I won't give you the name of the company, but it's the same one that apparently assumes that the richest nation on the planet can't find enough loose change lying around to call home.

Anyway, this card is my key into my room. Without it, I will have to sleep somewhere else — in a strange car, perhaps, or on the beach. Therefore, I, and hundreds of others like me, become walking billboards for the next week with these annoying plastic cards dangling from our necks.

We have no choice — we paid for the room.

Second case in point: We go to a local business establishment where it is having a water contest of sorts. During the middle of the judging, an overweight emcee who probably didn't graduate from high school, much less see the hallowed halls of academia, begins to throw T-shirts into the crowd.

We yell and scream, begging to get one. (God knows we need more T-shirts.) I finally receive one, and once again I realize I've become a walking advertisement, and they're not paying me. I don't even like that kind of beer.

Third case in point: So you realize it isn't just the mega-companies begging for money. I'll give you a particularly disturbing example from a much smaller operation.

As I was walking to the beach, I passed a lady selling T-shirts and crappy jewelry. I noticed a few of these shirts had my longtime favorites Calvin and Hobbes on them.

"How quaint," I thought, stopping to take a look. My interest turned to horror, however, when I realized that this interpretation of "Calvin and Hobbes" was not

Our Word

Enfranchised?

Those who pay tuition, fees should choose student who serves on BOT

LAST WEEK'S DECISION BY THE ILLINOIS House of Representatives to give student trustees at state universities an official vote could have been a giant step forward for those of us who pay tuition at SIUC and other state schools.

However, the measure has two fundamental flaws: Schools with multiple campuses would have only one voting representative, and that representative would be appointed by Gov. Jim Edgar rather than elected by his or her peers.

By allowing only one of SIU's two student trustees to have a real vote, the state is depriving many University students of true representation on the Board of Trustees. Worse yet, the person who serves as the only official voice students on both campuses have in critical matters will not even be an elected representative.

THIS CIRCUMSTANCE IS UNACCEPTABLE — although it does make arguments against the measure laughable at best.

State Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, who supported the bill, said opponents of the measure fear that college students are incapable of voting from a mature, rational perspective. Apparently some of our representatives in Springfield have visions of drunken revelers dancing in their heads when they hear the words "student trustee."

EDGAR OBVIOUSLY IS NOT GOING TO WALK into a keg party, grab a specimen reminiscent of John Belushi's character in "Animal House" and announce, "Congratulations, Blutariski. By guzzling 27 beers in an hour, you have demonstrated the kind of spirit it takes to represent SIU on the Board of Trustees. You're hired."

The student selected for this position will be a responsible, serious, politically active student. If this situation turns out like some political appointments we have seen in the past, the student will in all likelihood be a member of the governor's own political party who generally supports the state's agenda for the University.

WHILE WE COMMEND THE STATE FOR giving our representative a real voice in how our school is governed, rather than a mere "advisory" vote, it is a slap in the face to have our own vote in the matter taken away.

If students are mature enough to shell out thousands of dollars to this University each year for an education, they also are mature enough to decide which of their peers will help determine what those dollars buy them.

A University of Illinois official opposed the bill on the grounds that students "lack the perspective to deal with a $2 billion operation" and may "have trouble grappling with tuition and fees issues."

WE CONTEND THAT COLLEGE STUDENTS — who on a daily basis manage to stretch their student-work income to cover housing, food, tuition, fees and a plethora of other expenses — are fully capable of getting the "biggest bang for a buck" when it is time to vote on the University's considerably more solvent budget.

We already grapple with tuition and fees issues on a far more personal level than any of our administrators, who make six figures a year, yet no one questions their ability to govern a campus. No one is more dedicated to making the University's money work for the students than the students themselves.

WHEN EDGAR STARTS PAYING OUR TUITION and fees out of his own taxpayer-funded pocket, he is welcome to choose our representatives.

Until then, our government needs to follow the old Revolutionary War adage: No taxation (or fee hikes) without representation.

'Church' merely a joke

Dear Editor:

With regards to Matt Hale's March 4 Guest Column, I'd like to make my opposition to his "church's" cause more clear to him.

While I agree that everyone possesses a certain degree of racism (myself included), that doesn't mean that all white people who don't outwardly agree with Hale's views are a bunch of sniveling cowards, telling racist jokes in dark rooms.

We aren't.

I see racism for the social evil that it is. It keeps large and feeling sections of the human population from realizing their inherent potential, as well as keeping them from feeling truly free in this, the land of the free.

As for the blacks and other non-whites of which Hale spoke, I don't believe that they accept any part of his credo.

Mr. Hale, why don't you ask a few of them? I think that you should do it from six or seven feet away, though.

As for your allegiance to Darwinism and survival of the "finest," I agree with you there. To the race — the human race that is — there is no belief system more dangerous than yours, and our most survival-oriented course of action would be to get rid of your kind.

Have you forgotten what racists with power did in World War II? Millions of people were killed for no good reason.

Well, there are a lot of people out here who haven't.

The minute you and your "church" begin to be a real threat to the safety of our communities, you will find out just how emotionally people remember that war. I envision some weary-looking, older faces (black, white and Jewish) recalling their combat training to the thoughts of their children's safety.

But don't begin to show your cowardice yet, because you are no threat. You are just another loud-mouthed sadist who stands behind a flag to hide his true motivation: The desire to boost your own anemic ego by attacking others.

If the Daily Egyptian's article was accurate, your "church's" leadership is just a sad joke.

One poor suicide, and some idiot who puts bombs on people's porches. And now you?

Well, enjoy yourself on the Springer show, with all the other ineffectual losers of daytime television. That is truly where you belong.

Classmate speaks on intelligence, society's celebration of weirdos

Dear Editor:

Well, the "Rev." has done it again. In his March 4 Guest Column, the pontifex maximus high priest of the World Church of the Creator, Matt Hale, proved that loud mouths can offend anyone at any time. Not only has he preached his belief that minorities are inferior but he has, with his column, managed to directly implicate Christianity outside the context of natural law.

While Hale fell short of actually denying that Christianity is a religion, his implication is clear. He is attempting to legitimize his cause by comparing it with the early days of Christianity. What the pontifex may not realize is that people followed Christ for a lot of reasons, none of which involved hate.

Additionally, Hale's comparison suggests that if his group becomes legitimate, he will go down as an early disciple much the same way Christians see St. Paul. So Hale is comparing himself to a martyr?

I must admit that I am a classmate of Hale's. As such, I am witness to the fact that he is an intelligent person. However, suggesting that someone is correct because he is smart, is, in the words of an admired law professor, roughly tantamount to arguing that the world is flat.

In the Feb. 17 Daily Egyptian article, Hale stated that the Nazis couldn't have killed 6 million Jews, as they assert, because there were only 4 million Jews in Germany to begin with. The Germans controlled most of Europe from late 1939 until their downfall in 1945 — more than five years. So, Polish, Austrian, Dutch, etc., people don't count? I don't mean to be hard on a fellow white guy, but the logic here seems a bit flawed. Maybe his white role model is Adolph Hitler, but this sounds more like Homer Simpson to me.

Ultimately, Hale will soak all the press he can (Jerry Springer) and eventually fade into the woodwork again. While his attempts to cause panic in the minds of reasonable people, anyone can deduce that Hale is a frustrated soul on the fringes of a society that celebrates freaks.

Some readers misunderstood Priddy column

Dear Editor:

The letter (March 5) by James Frey criticizing Emily Priddy's column about cloning needs a thoughtful response. This is not the first instance of someone misreading humor.

I offer the following definitions: Saïre — 1. a literary work in which vices, follies, stupidities, abuses, etc. are held up to ridicule and contempt (semicolons) 2. the use of ridicule, sarcasm, irony, etc. to expose, attack or deride vices, follies, etc.

Irony — 1. a method of humorous or subtly sarcastic expression in which the intended meaning of the words used is the direct opposite of their usual sense.

DE needs to take lead

Dear Editor:

Wow. What was that all about? James Frey proclaiming his depth and maturity in his (March 5) letter to the editor seemed to be nothing more to me than an attempt by you, the Daily Egyptian, to elicit a response — much like your cover story about the World Church of the Creator activity on campus.

Where's the meat? What are we communicating when we give life to half-baked ideas like these that only exist for the attention they draw and their ability to distract. You are wasting my time.

As gatekeepers, I think you have not broken any new ground, have not provided any new information, have not offered any solutions to the problem beyond the obvious, abstract and totally subjective paradigms we've already experienced, and I think you could do better.

You serve as a touchstone for the brightest minds in the region. Common ground for a whole arena of spectators drawn to this place (Carbondale) with the diversity and openness to begin a process of problem solving that might actually begin to solve problems, and you cannot provide even the simplest directions beyond what is required by your industry. For shame. Who takes the leadership?

What if you provided a forum showing what kind of projects people are working on, their goals and what they needed to finish them. Specifics. Depth. Follow up. Problem solving instead of angst-riddled, hormone-injected opinions of how the world "should" be.

Higher learning? Take the lead, DE. Teach us. We want to become more than what we already are. Why else would anyone read? Give us the tools. We'll do the work. You're in the perfect position to provide a little synergy to the system.

RSOs have chance to upgrade status

TASK FORCE: Team set to study status guidelines.

TRAVIS DeNEAL
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC Registered Student Organizations would have fewer funding problems if a plan that allows them to apply for Priority One status is implemented.

John Dunkel, USG public relations commissioner, said the primary benefit of the status is an annual guarantee of a percentage of money from the Undergraduate Student Government. Priority One organizations also receive more money than most RSOs, he said.

RSOs will be able to apply for Priority One status if the Undergraduate Student Government Priority One task force completes its study of status guidelines and purposes, task force member Joyce Newby said.

Priority Two RSOs must apply annually for an amount from USG, he said.

All RSOs are funded from the Student Activity fee, Dunkel said.

"What we are mainly trying to do is put together a set of guidelines that determine what is required for Priority

One status," Newby said. "Later this year or next fall, we would like to allow other organizations to apply for Priority One status."

Members of USG were elected to the task force last fall, responding to at least one RSO's query about obtaining Priority One status, Dunkel said.

He said the four RSOs with Priority One status are the Student Programming Council, the Black Affairs Council, Inter-Greek Council and the International Student Council.

The Priority One organizations represent large numbers of students on campus, he said. "There were no real requirements when the current Priority One RSOs were established," Dunkel said.

"Our objective is to make requirements that would tell an RSO how it could get Priority One status and keep the current Priority Ones at that higher status."

Dunkel said it is unlikely that a Priority Two RSO could gain Priority One status.

However, Newby said some Priority Two RSOs could become Priority One organizations.

"Out of 500 RSOs, there could very well be several who would have reason to apply," she said.

Workman said women who believe they are a certain size should not be alarmed when they fit larger sizes or be happy when they can wear smaller sizes.

"If we don't fit into a size 8, for example, we tend to think that there is something wrong with us," she said.

"We tend to think a size 8 should be a size 8, and it affects women psychologically."

For Brenda Hellmer, fitting into smaller clothing sizes made her feel better because she was able to wear sizes that, for years, she could not.

"Twenty years ago, I could not get in a size 8 or 10, and that's what I'm able to wear now," said Hellmer, the office manager of the Clothing and Textiles Department.

Workman stated in the magazine article that women's sizes in general have changed over the years.

She stated that today's size 8 has the approximate measurements of a size 16 in a 1902 Sears Roebuck catalog.

Workman went on to state that clothing manufacturers made the changes for competitive reasons, because smaller sizes make women feel better.

Workman stated that the smaller sizes helped sell more garments.

Hellmer, a former seamstress, said she realized the steady changes in size changes after observing the clothing made by different manufacturers. She said clothing apparel sizes no longer affect her judgment.

"I felt really good about getting in a smaller size, but I was probably thinner than I am now," she said. "The sizes have changed, so now they don't mean as much to me."

Workman said it is hard for most women to come to Hellmer's conclusion.

"Society has this expectation that women fit into a particular mold, and it's hard to ignore that expectation," she said. "But no one looks at a woman walk into a room and says, 'Oh, she's a size 8.' If women learned to concentrate more on how clothing fits instead of its size, women would be better off."

Dickerson said she eventually learned the psychological influences that clothing sizes can have on a woman's perception.

"It's all a mind game," she said. "You know what size you were in the first place. Clothing sizes differ, and if you can get by with something smaller, you feel good even though it is not true."

moves than people realize, and this is the reason his students did so well in sparring, the one-on-one fighting matches at tournaments.

Kung Fu is taught more in the East and West coasts, but in the Midwest, the most common styles of martial arts are forms such as Tai Kwon Do.

Even though one of Davis' students, Andy Sabens, a sophomore in criminology from Carbondale, was only one of 20 competitors to do Kung Fu, he won first place in the Open Karate Tournament in February.

He also won third place in sparring. Sabens said being the only one to do Kung Fu at tournaments does not bother him.

He said he studied other martial arts but plans to continue studying Kung Fu.

"It is impressive. The fluid movements got me interested," Sabens said.

"It helps you gain coordination. I also like the death strikes — things like palms to the nose."

The White Tiger Kung Fu school is based on the Chinese White Tiger system that dates back to 1644. The tradition was preserved in the Doo family for 350 years.

When the communists took over China, seven of the grandmasters fled the country. Doo Wai is the grandson of one of those grandmasters, and he trained the man Davis studied under.

Davis said his classes concentrate on all aspects of Kung Fu.

"Fighting is always the last resort," he said. "I teach the spiritual side of the arts. Things like meditation are good for stress reduction. It helps you maintain calm, which is something you need in any kind of threatening situation."

Davis teaches two Monday and Wednesday classes, one for adults and one for children. The classes are offered at the National Guard Armory, 900 W. Sycamore St.

British, Chinese wage rugby war

PLAY BALL: Chinese bring new sport home to Hong Kong.

LIN ANGELES TIMES

HONG KONG—British and Chinese soldiers confronted each other here Tuesday, three months before the mainland officially takes over this crown colony.

But the battlefield was a rugby pitch, and the soldiers were dressed for "olive ball," as rugby is known in Chinese, not in olive drab.

In an international 10-a-side tournament, the luck of the draw pitted players from Scotland's Black Watch regiment, now stationed at Hong Kong's garrison, against the People's Liberation Army team from just across the border. The last time the Black Watch faced the Chinese Army was in the Korean War in the 1950s. Tuesday's encounter was much friendlier but had its own historical significance.

"It's just a game," shrugged Lu Yong from Anhui Province, while two of his teammates stared at the tartan-kilted pipers wearing furry black headaddresses.

In the end, the bagpipes and cheering crowd could not help the Black Watch. The PLA won 12-7.

Commander London praised the "verve" of the PLA players, who learned rugby only two years ago.

consider: beginning a four-year university program for Asian studies, working with Illinois junior colleges to recruit international students and opening a high school in Japan for international students.

SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs said a high school in Japan would attract more students to SIUC.

"We discussed today starting an international high school there for recruitment," Beggs said. "We've had a very positive response to the idea of the high school."

Sekine said while there has been concern about the Japanese campus' future, the contract's modifications in Nakajo's core curriculum will hasten student transfers to SIUC and will attract more students while improving its financial status.

"I read an article about Nakajo that sounded pessimistic," he said. "We are not doing very good, but we see the potential for change that will renew the campus."

In January, Sanders said Japan's faltering economy and decreases in SIUC enrollment meant cuts in the Nakajo program were necessary to keep it from being closed in the next few years.

Last semester, enrollment at Nakajo fell from 327 to 285 students.

Robert Jensen, College of Liberal Arts dean, said Sekine met with Sanders, Beggs and several deans to learn more about education in the United States.

"He will get a feeling for what a contemporary American university is all about," Jensen said. "It could give him ideas for potential new programs and operations at Nakajo."

Sekine, who arrived Sunday and departed Tuesday, said he enjoyed his first visit to SIUC.

Jensen said Sekine's observations could reveal what programs at SIUC would attract more students to SIUC.

Since the Nakajo campus opened in 1988, it has been operating under a long-term contract with SIUC. Each year, changes made in the program are included in a contract renewal.

Jensen said the modified contract states core curriculum classes can be added to a student's first year of class.

Traditionally, students spend one year mastering English before they are allowed to take core curricula, which lengthens the amount of time spent in Nakajo.

If Japanese students can transfer to SIUC after one or two years instead of the usual three years, Jensen said, more students would be attracted to the program.

Combining the shorter time before transferring to SIUC with increased marketing of the programs SIUC offers would boost enrollment at Nakajo, he said.

Jared Dorn, principal of the Nakajo campus, said moving students through the program faster would not mean a reduction in quality of the students.

"We have sent over 600 students to the home campus, and our tracking record shows they do very well," Dorn said.

"We will continue to send quality students to SIUC."

Dorn said cooperation between SIUC and SIUN means the Nakajo campus will be improved.

"We have a commitment from both sides to try to improve both the quality of the program and the quality of the students going to the home campus."

If the Powwow takes place, members of AIA said they are sure people will be entertained and educated by elements featured in the program. It will be a time for the American Indian people to share their cultural traditions by offering authentic American-Indian dances and food. They also will feature handmade arts and crafts.

"They will see dancers in full Indian regalia," Cressy said. "Eddie Swimmer, the hoop dancer who dances with 38 hoops, is going to be performing. Plus, a cancellation stamp that is a collector's item will be for sale at the event. There are only 200 in the whole world, and we'll have them all right here in Carbondale."

And while the proceeds from the event will be used to enhance the aspects of the presentation, Cressy said they will also be used to establish a scholarship fund for American-Indian students.

As of now, she said AIA will settle for sponsoring a small event at a smaller facility instead of canceling the entire Powwow. Cressy said such an event is important to Carbondale because of its ability to dispel stereotypes, including the belief that American Indians are not friendly, sociable people, and they all have drinking problems. She said no alcohol will be served on the premises.

"We want people to become familiar with who and what we are," said Cressy.

A public hearing is scheduled for April 9, when residents can comment or express concerns with the plan. The plan will be revised again before being presented to the Carbondale City Council for adoption.

The plan should be adopted by the end of the spring semester. He said if it is not adopted by then, the city may wait until after the summer to present it to the City Council.

"No major decisions will be made when a lot of people are not in town," Redmond said.

Camriss representative Mike Blue said after the plan is adopted, the recommendations will not be set in stone and that not all the recommended projects in the plan will be ate the city to do anything. The purpose of the plan is to identify what the city of Carbondale would like to see in the future."

Blue said more than 750 people participated in the plan's development.

"We see this kind of participation in a lot of university towns," he said. "There is a willingness of people to participate because it is a very educated population with a tradition of planning."

Lugh Muldoon, a Carbondale resident who attended the meeting, said he is pleased with the plan, and it has brought city officials and the public together.

"It has established communication with citizens," Muldoon said. "The citizens know what is going on and are able to be involved with the development of Carbondale, more proactively rather than reactively."

No major decisions will be made when a lot of people are not in town.

The SIUC women's track team had its lone first-place individual finish from Vena Clendenin whose 133-9 foot attempt in the javelin throw was enough to take the top prize.

But despite only one first-place individual finish, coach Don DeNoon was satisfied with the outdoor season premier.

"It was a good start," DeNoon said.

"We had a couple of objectives, and we wanted to train hard while we were down there. I think we did that because the girls were pretty tired when it was over."

The Salukis' 4x400 meter shuttle hurdle relay had a good start in its first race of the season.

The running tandem of senior

Heather Greeling, freshman Dros Lavithi, sophomore Natasha Robinson and senior Donna Wechet recorded a time of 1:00.55, which is the third-best time in SIUC history.

The teams are looking forward to the Saluki Invitational, which starts at 11 a.m. Saturday.

"We're looking to solidify ourselves," DeNoon said. "We're going to have to regroup and be prepared for a major meet this weekend."

season ended, Clifford reminded the players of all of the hard work they had done since pre-season.

"Joe said the regular season was just a tune-up," he said. "The playoffs was where we wanted to be."

But team co-captain Rich Swanson said even Williams' 18 points could not help the Rolling Salukis against the Toledo team.

"We couldn't guard our own shadow that game," he said. "I was disappointed and upset, of course, but it can't take away from the fact that we still had a good year."

Swanson said he agreed that the team's overall accomplishments were not affected by its post-season disappointment, but Swanson said the team was saddened by its elimination for one reason.

"It was a little bit of an end for us because Joe (Clifford) is leav-

Clifford said he will miss coaching the Rolling Salukis next season.

He said he will continue to follow the team because of the potential the team has in store for next season.

"Because of the team's hard work, the wheelchair basketball program has received more respect," he said.

"Athletes want to come here and play. And if the recruiting goes well, they could win the NWBA Division championship and the Collegiate National Championship."

All of the team's players are returning next year as well, and Clifford said he was glad to have gotten close to them.

"It's going to be hard to leave because we've gotten so close," he said, "but if they keep working hard, they're going to make a serious run next season."

Benson adjusts to life as a Dawg

ARIZONA BREEDING:

Designated hitter says background prepared him for Division I competition.

RYAN KEITH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Making a smooth adjustment to playing Division I baseball has been a goal that Saluki designated hitter Brad Benson already has met this season.

Benson, a junior in physiology from Tempe, Ariz., who transferred from New Mexico State University this season, leads the Salukis in batting with a .481 average and in home runs with five.

Benson said he is pleased with his ability to adjust to playing against tougher competition at SIUC.

"I'm really happy with my mental approach," Benson said. "I think you have to be confident as a player when you come in. You have to really believe in yourself."

After playing in 13 of the Salukis' first 17 games, Benson has an .885 slugging percentage and a .542 on-base percentage. Benson hit a grand slam in the Salukis' 8-7 loss to Murray State University March 4.

Saluki coach Dan Callahan said Benson, who also is the team's backup catcher, has fit in nicely in the lineup this season.

"Brad is an adequate catcher who knows the game well," Callahan said. "But I'll take a guy who can be considered your No. 2 or No. 3 catcher anytime with the idea that he can swing the bat like he does."

Benson set a school record for RBIs in a season with 37 at McClintock High School in Tempe. He hit .363 with 17 doubles and five homers at Arizona Western Community College in 1995, leading the team to a No. 4 ranking nationally.

Benson transferred to the Salukis from New Mexico State, where he sat out the 1996 season as a red-shirt.

Benson said his baseball background in Arizona helped him become a better baseball player.

"I come from an area in Arizona where they play very good baseball," Benson said. "That gave me some confidence coming in here."

Callahan said Benson's transition to playing at SIUC was a positive influence on the team.

"We feel like we've brought some recruits in that have made the transition well from one level to the next," Callahan said. "We knew that it would be asking a lot for Brad to come in and do what (former Saluki) Mike Russell did the past two years, but he has done that so far."

Saluki
Baseball

While Benson has played well this season, the Salukis have not had the success they expected. SIUC is 4-13, with several of its losses coming after losing leads in the last innings.

Benson said the competition level, including Arizona State University and Texas Tech University, has been tough this season.

"Other than a couple of teams, we've played some really tough teams so far this season," Benson said. "I think we have a good team, but we need to believe that we're a good team."

The Salukis opened the season Feb. 14 with a three-game series against Arizona State in Benson's hometown, Tempe.

Benson said although the Salukis lost all three games, having the opportunity to play in front of his family and friends was exciting.

"It meant a lot for me to be able to go home and play in front of the people who watched me play in high school and watched me grow up," he said.

With nearly 40 games remaining in the season, Benson said the Salukis can turn their luck around.

"We need to try to keep our heads up because things will turn around," Benson said. "The most important thing is to keep a positive attitude and outlook, and things will turn around for us."

Rolling Salukis end season in playoffs

END OF AN ERA:

Wheelchair basketball coach reflects on final season with Rolling Salukis.

MIKAL J. HARRIS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The Rolling Salukis' elimination last week from the National Wheelchair Basketball Association playoffs marked the end of coaching for Joe Clifford.

But Clifford, who coached the team as part of a graduate assistantship at the Recreation Center, said the loss does not diminish the team's successful season and the camaraderie he found with the team as its coach.

"They had set a goal to advance from the sectionals all the way to the championship this year," he said. "They fell short of that goal, but the season was very successful, and the team is just a great bunch of guys."

After beating the Fort Smith Shooting Stars 60-35 in the first playoff game March 8 at the Recreation Center, the Rolling Salukis lost the second playoff game against the Toledo Silver Streaks by a score of 70-49 the next day.

Clifford said the team rallied to come within 10 points in the second half of that game, but the players still took the loss hard after the game ended.

"They were very depressed and hurt, and a lot of emotion was shown. But those things happen," he said. "That's sports, and it's just part of the game. I was proud of what they had accomplished and how we've all gotten to be pretty close. So I built on that when we talked after the game."

Team member Dave Williams, the season's MVP, said he was depressed after the game.

"We weren't satisfied with just winning the Fort Smith game," he said. "We wanted to go further."

Looking back on his 1 1/2 seasons as head coach of the team, Clifford said the Rolling Salukis' most gratifying accomplishment was this season's defeat of the Fighting Illini wheelchair basketball team for the first time in 20 years.

He was most proud of the team's hard work and improvement after a difficult start.

"We've done a lot of work in such a short amount of time since I took the position as the team's head coach," he said. "It was a new experience for me and for them. And we had to get used to each other."

The team was eliminated early in the playoffs that first season, and Williams said Clifford took the team through intense conditioning in August to get an early start on the new season.

"The coach had us doing the equivalent of sprints in our wheelchairs for two-hour periods at a time wheeling as fast and intensely as we could," he said. "Our hands were swollen and blistered, and I felt like I wanted to throw up, but we all wanted to improve our speed and endurance. For those first five weeks, we didn't touch a basketball."

Williams said once the team's regular

SIUC ATHLETICS

Three Salukis awarded academic accolades

Three SIUC student-athletes were honored this week for their achievements in the classroom.

Cross country standout Stelios Marneros was named to the all-academic cross country team by the United States Cross Country Coaches Association. The honor was the third straight for the Cyprus native who is a senior in hotel restaurant travel administration. He carries a 3.44 grade point average. Marneros won his third-straight Missouri Valley Conference title last fall and was named to the MVC all-academic team as well.

Saluki Swimmer Andrelina Rodriguez, a senior from Barquisimeto, Venezuela, was named to the GTE academic all-district team. The senior is also two-time MVC all-academic honoree and has grabbed four all-conference athletic honors the past two seasons while carrying a 4.0 GPA in computer science.

Also earning first-team GTE district honors is cross country runner Kim Koerner, who was a third-team GTE Academic All-American selection last season. Koerner carries a 4.0 GPA in physiology and has been on the dean's list her seven semesters at SIUC. Koerner also was an academic all-MVC selection twice in cross country and was all-MVC this past fall.

SIUC SOFTBALL

Schuttek honored as co-pitcher of the week

Saluki hurler Jamie Schuttek, along with Drake's Sarah Haak, was named Missouri Valley Conference Pitcher of the Week.

Schuttek was 4-1 with one save in SIUC's games last week, posting a 0.87 earned run average for the week. Her four-hit shutout over the nation's sixth-ranked team in the University of Michigan earned her the co-pitcher of the week honor. She also hurled a two-hit shutout against the University of Miami of Ohio. Last week Schuttek struck out 31 batters in 32.1 innings of work, allowing just four earned runs. Her season ERA stands at an impressive 0.47.

SIUC GOLF

Salukis struggle in Louisiana

The Saluki women's golf team struggled this past weekend in Louisiana finishing 14th out of 14 teams. Molly Hudgins finished with the best score for the Salukis, finishing with 245 strokes for 49th place.

The University of Arizona won the event with a score of 891 over three days. Louisiana State University was second, followed by University of Memphis in third.

The Salukis will tee-off again this Sunday when they play host to the Saluki Invitational. The meet will be at Hickory Ridge Golf Course. Tee-off time has not been announced.

SIUC BASEBALL

Baseball Dawgs rained out

The SIUC baseball team's game against the Governors of Austin Peay State University Tuesday was canceled because of the weather. Rainstorms soaked the field at Abe Martin Field, causing the Salukis to postpone the game. The Salukis will return to action today against the University of Evansville in Evansville, Ind. Game time is 2 p.m.

Running Dawgs go outside

SEASON OPENER:

Saluki runners fare well in first outdoor event of season.

DONNA COLTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Two first-place finishes were not enough to satisfy SIUC track runner Orlando McKee Saturday.

"I am kind of satisfied with my success," the sophomore East St. Louis native said of his performance in the Salukis' outdoor season-opener at the Snowbird Invitational. "But I am not yet happy."

The long jumper and 200-meter runner took home two of four first-place finishes for the Saluki men's team in Tallahassee, Fla. The SIUC women's team took home two first-place efforts as well.

McKee's first-place long jump effort of 24-7 3/4 was good enough to earn him the 10th-best jump in SIUC history. His 200-meter time of 21.26 was just two-tenths of a second slower than he needed to place him on the 200-meter top 10 list.

McKee, who is running a second faster in the 200-meter dash this season compared to last season, pounded a field of 26 runners to take the victory. But the sprinter said he still believes he has the ability to run faster.

"I want to run faster times," he said, "so I can be more pleased with my performance outside."

SIUC men's track coach Bill Cornell said he knew a year ago what impact McKee could have on the program.

"(Orlando McKee) obviously had a good weekend," he said. "He has been getting stronger each year. He can be a big point scorer."

SIUC also had a strong effort from sophomore distance runner Joseph Parks, who took home the Salukis' two other first-place finishes.

Parks finished first in both the 3,000-meter run and the 3,000-meter steeple chase. Parks' steeple chase time of 9:17 was a personal best for the Eldorado native.

Cornell said for the first outdoor meet of the season, taking home four first-place finishes was a decent effort.

"I am happy with the team's overall performance," he said. "We will be better in the

Saluki tennis squad struggles over break

ROUGH VACATION:

SIUC loses five of six matches in Florida.

BRAD WEBER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIUC men's tennis team approached its spring break with the expectations of pulling off a few upsets against some nationally ranked competition.

Despite winning one of five matches, coach Brad Iffner said he believes the team displayed its best performances of the season.

"Our first match was against Central Florida University. We were intimidated by their play," he said. "But we were ready to go out and play the rest of the week against all of our opponents."

Besides losing to Central Florida 7-0, the team lost matches to Stetson University 5-2, Rollins College 7-2, Bethune-Cookman 6-1, but finished the trip defeating Valparaiso University 5-2.

Junior Mick Smyth, the team's No. 2 player, won the first match of the trip for the Salukis against Stetson. Smyth said it was important for him to win because the team was shut out the first day against Central Florida.

"I might have given the others on the team confidence with my win," he said. "My win showed us that we can beat good players on good teams."

Junior Brian Eitzkin said as the week went by, the team showed its maturity by winning its final match of the week against Valparaiso.

"A lot of us were tired and sick earlier in the week," he said. "As the week went by, though, we were able to give a better effort each day."

Iffner said each day of the trip was a learning experience for the team because five of the seven players are freshmen learning to adjust to the rigors of traveling.

"Experiencing what it's like to travel and having to play matches on Fridays and Saturdays is showing them what it takes," he said.

Iffner said the competition the team faced in Florida is only going to help when Missouri Valley Conference begins play in two weeks.

"We played very strong teams over the break," he said. "When we head into conference play, it will make us a better team."

The Salukis face Murray State University and the University of Memphis this Saturday.

Eitzkin said the team has faced Murray State before, but it is unfamiliar with Memphis.

"This weekend is going to be a good test for our team because both teams we're facing are at our level of competition," he said.

SIUC TENNIS

On Saturday, the Salukis face dual match play in Murray, Ky. SIUC's match against Murray State begins at 9 a.m., and action against Memphis begins at 2 p.m.
