Guyon to tell trustees about construction jobs

Child-care facility also in agenda for BOT meeting

By Christy Gutowski
Administration Writer

SIU Board of Trustees will meet on campus today to hear a presentation by the University's president about proposed construction projects at SIUC.

John C. Guyon will inform board members of five projects at SIUC, including constructing a child-care facility, a biological science building, a hotel, an on-campus parking garage and an upgrade of SIUC's Physical Plant facilities. The board will not act on any of Guyon's presentation.

Chancellor James Brown said he supports a child-care facility for the SIUC.

"Given the needs of the people who are associated with the institution, I think it's a (demand) that has been there for a long time," he said.

The Graduate and Professional Student Council and the Undergraduate Student Government approved a $3 increase in the student activity fee for the support of building or leasing a child-care facility. The student fee increase will be added to the $1 previously approved by the board for the support of child care.

Rainbow's End child development center is housed in the Student Recreation Center but is not qualified for licensing benefits from the state. Brown said the administration is trying to come to a workable child-care solution for students and University employees.

"The board is sympathetic to the kinds of needs President Guyon will be reviewing," he said. "They recognize the president's responsibility to propose what he

SIUC honors veterans at ceremony

By Michael T. Kuciak

Cadets of the Army and Air Force ROTC, members of the Veteran's Club and several dozen people stood in quiet recognition of the people who served in the military at the seventh annual Veteran's Day ceremonies Wednesday near the Old Main flagpole.

A dark sky poured heavy rain on the gathering, but the ROTC cadets stood at attention and the crowd was still and silent while several speakers reflected on the meaning of the ceremonies under a small canopy.

Sgt. David Kenney, a World War II veteran, told the people gathered that Veteran's Day is a day of respect and remembrance.

"One of the purposes of today is to assure veterans of recent conflicts that they have not been forgotten, and to assure veterans of other wars will not be forgotten," said Kenney, a political science professor. "We are certainly aware of the contributions made in Korea and Vietnam and even the great debt owed to veterans of Desert Storm."

Undergraduate Student Government President Brad Cole quoted Theodore Roosevelt. He said the 1992 Veteran's Day was significant because it particularly honored the people who fought and

Candle vigil remembers POW-MIAs

The soldier stood with head lowered and eyes closed. He did not move. He did not talk. The soldier held his left hand behind his back while the right loosely held a rifle. He was dressed in a formal blue uniform.

The soldier stood in front of an American flag that flew above a black POW-MIA flag. A jar holding a single lit candle sat at the bottom of the flag pole. The jar kept the candle from guttering in the cold wind and rain.

Flag and soldier stood together in front of the white Aerospace Studies, Air Force ROTC building.

Church of England narrowly votes to allow women to become priests

Los Angeles Times

LONDON—The Church of England decided by a two-vote margin Wednesday that women may be ordained as priests.

The General Synod ruling—a decision that some experts termed the most divisive for the church since the Reformation—came after 17 years of debate. Pending the anticipated approval of Parliament and Queen Elizabeth II, it could lead to the church's ordination of the first woman priest by 1994.

The decision brought cheers of jubilation from some Anglicans and glum expressions from others who gathered outside Church House in Central London, where the vote was taken.

"This is tremendous—now the church can go forward," said Deacon Christina Rees, who led a group supporting the ordination of women. Deacon Anabel Shilson-Thomas, whose husband, Hugh, is a priest, said that she was "exceptionally pleased." Her spouse said that he

Economic Security Council idea shows Clinton's economic focus

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON—President-elect Bill Clinton's proposal to create an Economic Security Council would put economic policy under the sort of daily White House scrutiny previously reserved for national security, an expert said.

The appointment of a new economic czar, with direct access to the Oval Office, signals Clinton's determination to keep close personal control of the most troubling issue facing his administration — the depressive interaction of weak national and global economies.

The initiative, a part of Clinton's economic program, has caught public attention. At a national meeting of business economists in St. Louis Murray Weidenbaum, chief economic adviser to former President Reagan in the early 1980s, was asked whether the Clinton proposal should be taken seriously.

"My short answer was 'Yes,'" said Weidenbaum. "It could be an important innovation. I view it as an experiment worth undertaking."

"The most important factor you can have for its success or failure is how seriously the president takes it.

It certainly seems it is going to have his attention, and it likely will have his participation."

The most recent precedent for the Clinton initiative was President Ford's Economic Policy Board, created in September 1974 to guide Ford's economic thinking as the country then teetered between runaway inflation and recession.

The EPB became one of the executive branch's most active and influential groups. In its 27 months, it met 250 times to consider 1,539 agenda items, and Ford described it as "the most important institutional innovation of my administration."

Seven-foot senior commits to SIUC

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

The Saluki basketball program climbed to a different altitude Wednesday as the men's program received a national letter-of-intent to play from 7-0, 238-pound Shane Wells from Olney.

Wells, who is currently a senior at East Richland High School, signed with the Salukis during the NCAA early signing period. Head coach Rich Herin said Wells has the physical tools to be a good player, and he is just starting to come into his own on the basketball court.

"He has good hands and runs the floor well, but he will need to improve his half-court skills, and this will come with playing time," he said. "He has just developed a love for the game in the last year or so and is excited about becoming a good player."

As a junior last season, Wells averaged 8 points and 5 rebounds a game, and by signing with SIUC, he will become only the second seven-footer in school history. Current Saluki center, junior Marcelo da Silva was the first 7-0 player to sign at SIUC.

RHS head coach Larry Bussard said as Wells enters his senior season, he is an exciting player to watch.

"Shane is getting better by adding confidence in himself each day, as last year was his first full year of playing the game," he said. "He is an unselfish player and his strengths are his hands, his touch and his ability to run the court."

Women's hoops tops MVC polls

SMSU, ISU, CU at top with SIUC

By Andy Graham
Sports Writer

In a preseason coaches poll, the SIUC women's basketball team has been voted most likely to win the first Missouri Valley Conference title for women's basketball.

The poll's verdict places a great deal of pressure on the team. Salukis coach Cindy Scott said.

Missouri Valley is predicted to be the toughest conference in the Midwest by Scott, Illinois State's coach, Jill Hutchison, Southwest Missouri's Cheryl Burnett and Creighton's Connie Yori.

Creighton, a new addition to the Salukis' conference schedule, won four out of five games against Big Eight teams last season. Southwest Missouri, who was picked to finish second, beat Big Ten favorite Iowa in the NCAA tournament last year, and SIUC did well against Big Eight and Ten teams last season as well.

"Southwest Missouri set a precedent for the Missouri Valley Conference, by doing so well in the NCAA tournament last season," Scott said.

Of the top four teams in the preseason poll, SIUC is the only team currently free of injuries.

Southwest Missouri's Tina Robbins, who recently underwent reconstructive knee surgery, is not expected to be active on the squad again until the team's Dec. 27 meeting with Kansas University, Burnett said.

Robbins was the Midwest Regional Most Valuable Player in 1992 and scored in double figures in all five of the team's NCAA tournament games.

Melanie Ward, a developing strength for Illinois State, is out of commission until at least December with achilles tendon problems, Hutchison said. She recently underwent surgery to correct this, but it did not help so she must seek treatment again.

"Melanie has been developing into a key player, and it hurts not having her there," ISU assistant coach Cindy Fisher said. "Her injury shouldn't pose too much of a problem on the performance of the team, though."

Creighton's Shannon Struby is in her seventh month of recovery from surgery on her ACL ligament, which is the main ligament in the knee, Yori said. The injury occurred April 2, and it kept her out of the last three games of the season.

Struby's credentials include a first team all-Western Athletic Conference selection, 14.9 points a game, and 57 percent shooting from the floor.

Yori called her team the mystery

Swimming, diving teams to travel to Champaign to meet five teams

By Sanjay Seth
Sports Writer

The SIUC men's and women's swimming team and the diving team will travel to Champaign this weekend for a series of dual meets hosted by the University of Illinois.

Both the men's and women's team will meet Northwestern University Friday night, followed by Purdue in the morning and Kansas in the evening Saturday.

The Salukis will wrap up the weekend extravaganza with a double dual meet with Illinois State and host Illinois Sunday.

Rick Walker, head coach of the men's swim team, said the squad would be looking to compete at a higher level at Champaign that would indicate an improvement of the team since they first started.

"Naturally we would like to win a couple of the meets, but it can't be our main focus," Walker said.

"If our men are beaten in competition but improve in their timings, is that being successful?"

Walker said an example of knowing that a loss in a meet is no indication of SIUC being a write-off would be the NCAA Top 25 poll of swimming colleges to which SIUC was given a number of votes.

Florida officials expected to file lawsuits over Giants

ST PETERSBURG — Officials in Florida are expected to file major lawsuits over the next few weeks in the wake of a decision by baseball club owners to prevent the Giants from leaving San Francisco.

Owners meeting in Scottsdale, Arizona, Tuesday rejected a $115 million offer from a Tampa Bay group to

"We have been damaged," said Rick Dodge, the assistant city manager of St. Petersburg and a key figure in the attempt to bring the Giants to Florida. "The only appropriate available channel is the legal."

FIGHTING DIES DOWN IN BOSNIA — Fighting appeared to have died down in much of Bosnia Wednesday as the midnight deadline for a ceasefire approached. The ceasefire would end the seven-month conflict between Serbs on the one hand and Moslems and Croats on the other. Senior representatives from all parties arranged the surprise ceasefire Tuesday in the presence of United Nations peacekeeping force officers in Sarajevo.

HONECKER TRIAL OPENS TODAY — The trial of 80-year-old Erich Honecker for his role in the shoot-to-kill order for border guards along the intra-German border has put the former East German leader back in the public eye as Germans debate whether he should be called to account. Proceedings open in Berlin Thursday against Honecker and five other officials of former East Germany. They are charged with responsibility for the killings of 12 people trying to flee East Germany.

RUSSIA FIRMS TIES WITH ETHNIC GROUP — Russian Prime Minister Yegor Gaidar pledged Moscow's support Wednesday to the Ingushi — one of the minority ethnic groups in Russia's troubled south — in building a republic. The pledge — including help in developing an airport, national bank and radio station — came at talks Gaidar had with Ingushi leaders. Observers said a clear aim of the move was to prevent the Ingushi from building ties with neighbouring Chechen.

THREE PALESTINIANS KILLED IN GAZA STRIP — Three Palestinians were killed early Wednesday in clashes with Israeli troops in the Gaza Strip, according to the Israeli Army and the Palestine Press Service. In a separate incident in Gaza, an Israeli soldier was seriously wounded when Palestinian militants ambushed a patrol with small arms fire. The deaths occurred when soldiers shot and killed an Arab youth in the village of Muecin as he tried to ambush their patrol.

BABBITT MAY BE NEXT INTERIOR SECRETARY — If talk on Capitol Hill is any measure, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt is a shoo-in as President-elect Clinton's choice for Interior secretary. "I hear that's a good possibility," Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said Tuesday. Clinton campaign officials would not comment on such speculation, and close Babbitt associates said the former governor has not been approached by Clinton aides.

EC, U.S. MEMBERS TO MEET IN WASHINGTON — Trade negotiators from the European Community and the United States will meet in Washington next week for crucial talks on ending a trans-Atlantic trade row over oilseeds. A spokesman for the E.C. Commission said the E.C. was seeking to organize a meeting with the U.S. "as soon as possible." European Farm Commissioner Ray MacSharry will leave for Washington next week for talks with the U.S. Agriculture Secretary Edward Madigan on oilseed subsidies.

CHIEF N.Y. JUDGE RESIGNS OVER SCANDAL — The chief judge of New York State, facing charges he black mailed his former lover, resigned from the bench Tuesday shortly after a federal magistrate ordered him to wear an electronic monitoring bracelet and be held under private guard in home detention as part of a bail agreement. The case not only has caused deep shock within New York's justice system. It suddenly has deprived the Republican Party of perhaps its strongest potential gubernatorial candidate.

NETWORK MAKE OFFERS TO LETTERMAN — Call it the Dave sweepstakes. Now that NBC "Late Night" host David Letterman is free to consider other job offers, the pitches are coming faster than one-liners. News Corp. Chairman Rupert Murdoch recently wooed the talk-show host with a flip-card presentation extolling Fox's youth-oriented audience. CBS News anchor Connie Chung touted her network to Letterman in a spoof video. Syndicator Michael King offered to write a $25 million check on the spot.

Unity focus of meeting held by Black Affairs

By Lynelle Marquardt
General Assignment Writer

The third annual Black Affairs Leadership Conference sponsored by SIUC's Black Affairs Council will focus on providing young African Americans with the opportunity to network and unify this week.

Tuesday Shorty, coordinator of the Black Affairs Council, said the conference was established in 1990 because students saw the necessity for such a program.

"It was the students who felt the need for awareness, in the areas of networking and marketing," she said. "So we got this idea to come up with a conference."

The conference, which will be from Nov. 12 through Nov. 15, will feature three main speakers as well as workshops and roundtable discussions. About 400 students and advisers from universities across the country are expected to attend.

The main speakers for the event will be Jawanza Kunjufu, Donna Farrakhan Muhammad and Giancarlo Esposito.

Kunjufu is president of African-American Images, a Chicago publishing house. He also is an author and is scheduled to speak at 6 p.m. Friday in the Student Center Ballrooms.

Muhammad is a Nation of Islam minister and the daughter of Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam. She heads the Vanguard class which teaches religion and social skills to young women in the nation.

She will speak at a luncheon at 11:30 a.m. Friday in the Student Center Ballrooms.

Esposito is an actor who has played in films such as "School

Daze," "Do The Right Thing," "Mo' Better Blues" and "King of New York."

He will speak at 7 p.m. Saturday in Student Center Ballrooms C and D.

Anthony King, coordinator of the conference, said the speakers were chosen for their specific fields.

"Basically we thought of three different categories," he said. "We thought of the literary category, then we wanted an Islamic female leader and of course people wanted to hear an entertainer."

The workshops will focus on relationships, and the roundtable discussions will concentrate on academics, King said.

For example, one workshop will be about relationships and the African-American family, and another will be on problem-solving, he said.

Roundtable discussions will be on the future of minorities in engineering, the road to becoming a medical doctor and what to do with a degree once it is received, he said.

King said one difference from last year's conference will be the entertainment.

"For entertainment, we plan to expose the talent right here in Southern Illinois," he said.

Also featured during the conference will be a career fair, at which students will be able to network with about 25 representatives from various professional corporations and organizations.

The conference costs $30 for SIUC students and $40 for SIUC advisers. Other University students will be charged $70. People interested may buy tickets for individual events as well.

Legislators and taxpayers feel SIUC is bloated with faculty, has lost its integrity and has poor quality programs, a University administrator told the Administrative and Professional Staff Council.

The AP staff met Wednesday in the Student Center to address the future of SIUC and to hear recommendations of the Committee on Long-Term Planning.

At the meeting, Ben Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, answered questions concerning the latest recommendations released by SIUC and the Illinois Board of Higher Education to improve the quality of education at the University.

Shepherd said IBHE recommendations, which included cutting 24 degree programs on campus, are not written in stone but should be taken seriously.

"Neither the board's nor the recommendations released by SIUC are mandates," he said. "But both should be viewed as serious proposals."

Some difficult decisions had to be made on what programs and degrees will be cut, and the faculty will have to do more, Shepherd said.

Work off loan after schooling—Clinton

IMAGINE NOT HAVING to pay back your student loan. President-elect Bill Clinton proposes radical options for graduate: with student loans; work it off in community service or pay it off via a wage percentage.

Clinton's idea, named the National Service Trust Fund, holds many positive effects. He expects to invest $10.1 billion toward education in the next year. It begins part of a five-year, $220 billion package intended to stimulate the national economy.

THE PLAN GIVES AN INCENTIVE for high schoolers to enter college. Families concerned with money could plan for their college hopeful to enter community service. It follows along the idea that the military G.I. Bill promotes, but with a twist: go to school first, then work the money off. And one does not have to train on weekends during the school year.

Depending on the community service graduates perform, it would add that experience to their resume. Jobs proposed to aid the community are adding police officers, child care or health care workers, peer counselors helping keep kids off drugs or teachers.

THE ADDITIONAL HELP the community receives would be valuable to it as well as the graduate. With the government allowing students to work off their debt in such capacities, child care costs, for example, could fall.

For the students, the two years would relieve the stress of finding a career job while trying to pass their major and, most likely, the toughest courses which come during senior years.

THE PROPOSAL WOULD ALSO encourage community involvement from the students. As they serve the community, they can become more involved and familiar with the workings of the local government and citizen groups.

Instead of wondering what happens to the money paid back in student loans, the public can see specifically what students are doing to earn their tax-paid tuition. Seeing those direct results would reassure taxpayers that those dollars were not going to waste.

FOR THOSE INTERESTED in getting into the career field right out of college, the proposal lets the lender pay off the student loan from a small percentage of earnings over a period of time.

The percentage would keep the payments within an affordable range. If the student starts at a low-paying job, the rates are low. If the student moves to a higher-paying job, the rates increase and work faster toward paying off the loan debt.

The jobs Clinton proposes for students should have salaries that meet the cost of living and recompensate the student loan debt.

The potential of the program Clinton proposes is great. Students and communities can both benefit from the plan, rather than imagine.

Color used as crutch

In response to Torrance Miller's letter to the D.E. on Nov. 4th, why don't you think of something original to complain about, racism is getting kind of old.

It appears to me that every time a decision is made, and it does not jive with the African-Americans, the word racism is swung around. Maybe, just maybe, decisions like not printing a picture of the Homecoming Queen and King on the front page of the D.E. was made for other reasons than racism.

I do not know why the D.E. did not print a picture of a black man and a black woman with little crowns on their heads. It could just be that it is no longer that big of a deal to those who print the D.E., and to some of those who read it (I'm not saying that a man spitting, and a woman getting her mail in the rain is a big deal).

SO WHAT!! So, you're black, white, yellow, red. Stop using color as a crutch. How many times do I have to hear about blacks being oppressed for hundreds of years, and the socio-economic pit they were placed in. I could give a damn about your past, just as you would mine. It's the people today I care about, the individual person, and situation, whether black, white, etc.

If you are not happy with the D.E. decision of no front page Homecoming picture, why don't you write in and question the school's moral, and if students really care anymore? You might find that they don't care as much for Homecoming, and one's skin color. — Jacob Meudt III, senior, cinema and photography / radio and television

Playboy decision based on respect; 'bimbo' tag untrue

I am writing in response to Andrew Ensor's narrow-minded and mean-spirited letter.

I was one of the women who spoke to the representative from Playboy when he was in town. This "bimbo" (a term Mr. Ensor used) was raised in a very supportive environment.

I was taught to have morals and to respect myself.

Mr. Ensor asked "What am I trying to prove?"

I am not trying to prove anything and I do not believe that I have done anything wrong.

Yes, I was concerned about how my family would react to my decision.

My dad whom I admire, respect, and who is a decent man was very supportive of me.

When I read him Mr. Ensor's letter his response was, "I raised you to be a good person and make responsible choices. If you want to do this, I support you. And I am always proud of you."

Yes, he said he was proud of me. He didn't call me a slut or consider himself humiliated.

I respect my body and above all I respect myself. I am proud of the person that I am.

I also believe that I am the type of person who has made SIU a place worth coming to.

I have high aspirations for my future.

I have studied hard, and next year I'll be entering law school, hardly typical of a slut/bimbo — huh?

If Salukis are fun, friendly, hard-working and intelligent individuals then call me a Saiuki, if not and this is the definition of a bimbo, then I am proud to call myself a "bimbo."

Once again, the issue is respect. I'm not asking you, Mr. Ensor, to agree with my choice, but please respect me and realize that it is my choice to make. — Joanna Mooney, senior, political science

Knee-jerk reaction paranoid; racism unfounded as cause

This letter goes to Mr. Miller. We are once again impressed by the level of ignorance displayed by a typical fearful, paranoid attitude. Your response was the model reflex action of an uneducated worm, black or white.

In our three years at this university we have met many African-American people and none of them showed the "Deliverance" type persona as you did.

We agree there is racism still prevalent in society, and it sickens us to see it, BUT we don't think that racism is the cause of every negative experience you have. Your paranoia of racism runs so rampant in your neurotic little mind that your brain is incapable of extrapolating any other cause. "That white person in front of me didn't hold the door open." Torrance Miller's explanation: He is a fearful white man worrying that the black race will one day rise up, buy the door company and build doors that only open for the true originators from the cradle of humanity.

If you had checked the DE, you would see that the October 12 issue had covered Homecoming AND showed a picture of the king and queen. So we guess now the DE has to make a point of bypassing every other event so as not to piss you off. "Sun goes Nova," oh wait Torrance Miller got married, well, put that on page one, we don't want him thinking we're racist or anything.

In a perfectly equal society, where racism had ceased to exist, the terms king and queen would be irrelevant. — Ken Evanchile, senior, computer science and Eric Bluhm, senior, cinematography

Police Blotter

SIU Security Police responding to a report of public drinking arrested a student on an outstanding warrant Wednesday morning.

Duke B. Gilliani, 46, of Allen I. was arrested at 12:53 a.m. Wednesday in SIU Parking Lot No. 106 after Security Police discovered that Gilliam was wanted on a Sangamon County warrant for failing to appear in court to face D.U.I. charges, police said.

Gilliam was taken to the Jackson County Jail where he is being held on $500 bail.

Carbondale Police arrested three city residents on drug warrants Tuesday.

Kimberly S. Crawshaw, 29, of 608 Oakland Avenue, and Timothy B. Jeffro, 26, of 608 Billy Bryant Street, were arrested at 8 a.m. Tuesday in the 300 block of Walnut at on separate Jackson County warrants for unlawful delivery of a controlled substance, police said.

Crawshaw and Jeffro were taken to the Jackson County Jail where Crawshaw is being held on $50,000 bail and Jeffro on $20,000 bail, police said.

In a separate incident, Curtis A. Johnson, 22, of 1100 Burns St., turned himself in to Carbondale Police when he learned of two Jackson County warrants of unlawful delivery of a controlled substance against him, police said.

Johnson is being held in the Jackson County Jail in lieu of $10,000 bail.

Dillard stepped to the podium and told the veterans present to be proud of the uniform and respect the flag. "Teach those who have not served to respect the flag and the uniform," he said. "As a vet, always show respect for others and and veterans any way you can."

Harvey Welch Jr., vice president of student affairs, thanked the veterans on behalf of the University for their service to the country.

After the speakers finished, two armed cadets in uniform escorted two members of the Veteran's Club in camouflage to the flagpole. The veterans placed a wreath at the base of the flagpole in commemoration for the soldiers who died in conflicts.

Two AFROTC cadets saluted while two others lowered the flag. Army First Lt. Elizabeth Vanhala, 20, sang the national anthem. Aaron Richardson, 19, played "Taps."

The flag was lowered and folded, and the Army ROTC fired a 21-gun salute.

Vigil." The other said "This is a silent vigil. Do not speak to cadets."

Passers-by would glance at the soldier, turn away and keep walking. One person asked the soldier what he was doing; he did not answer. The only sound was the splash of passing cars in the wet streets.

A second soldier stood up in a military fashion and waited while the first soldier, Al Bachesais, 19, a sophomore in aviation flight, shook the stiffness out of his muscles. Bachesais snapped to attention, turned and left. The second soldier took his place.

The same ritual repeated itself every 15 minutes from 4 p.m. Tuesday to 4 p.m. Wednesday. Bachesais was one of 27 members of the Arnold Air Society, a fraternal organization inside of AFROTC who stood in the silent vigil.

Mike Burkott, 20, a junior in administration of justice, said the organization was performing the vigil to remember the people who gave their lives for their country in war.

"It is something we kind of think about every day, but these 24 hours is their own day," he explained. "As people walk by, see a lone cadet and can think about those people."

Burkott said the candle signified the waiting and the silence of prisoners of war or people who had loved ones missing in action.

Two cadets would stand for an hour in 15-minute exchanges.

thinks will work, and the fact that he is making this presentation during (the board meeting) indicates that he does so with the chancellor's support."

Board members also will hear an update at the joint meeting between its finance and academic matters committees concerning what SIUC has been doing in reaction to the Illinois Board of Higher Education's Priorities, Quality and Productivity initiative.

The update will include a review of actions that already have been carried out as the first part of the University's productivity report. The University has saved slightly less than $3 million as a result of POP 1.

Brown said no new POP initiatives will be recommended in the update. He said the report is simply to inform board members "(POP) going on and on-going."

"We always have reviewed our programs, always raised decisions about priorities and always reallocated funds," he said. "But this time it's going around with a different kind of (emphasis) because of the BHE initiative and because it seems likely there will not be a lot of new money, (which) puts a different completion on it."

The board finally will act on eliminations that were part of the University's first reaction to POP, including abolishing:

- the Technology Commercialization Center in the Graduate School;
- Learning Resources Tenure Unit within Library Affairs;
- and the bachelor's of arts degree program and Department of Religious Studies.

Carolyn Snyder, dean of Morris Library, said at the Oct. 8 board meeting that abolishing the learning resources tenure unit was done to more effectively utilize resources.

The board also will decide whether to merge programs, including the master of science degree program and undergraduate minor in community development and the Department of Geography in the College of Liberal Arts.

was "thrilled and relieved."

But the Rev. Peter Geldard, who opposes having women serve as priests, warned that Wednesday's decision "will pit diocese against diocese, parish against parish, parishioner against parishioner."

The Church of England is the mother institution of the Anglican Communion, which includes the American Protestant Episcopal Church; 11 of 29 worldwide Anglican churches abroad now ordain women as priests, including the American branch.

The Episcopal Church in America approved the ordination of women in 1976. The first such authorized ordinations took place in 1977, although there were some "irregular" ordinations a year earlier.

In Britain, George Carey, who as the Archbishop of Canterbury is the spiritual leader of the 70 million member worldwide Anglican Communion, was expected to take a neutral position in the daylong debate before the 553 voting members of the General Synod, the church's ruling body.

But the archbishop, who also chairs the synod, supported ordaining women, declaring: "God calls us to take the risk of faith. I believe God is also calling his church to ordain women to the priesthood."

The Rev. Edmond L. Browning, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States, said that he was "thrilled almost beyond words" at the vote in Britain.

"The vote affirms the positive experience of our church over the last years as we have gratefully received the gifts of women in ... ordained ministry," he said. "Our women priests and bishop have brought a wholeness and enrichment to our common life that I hope and pray has been a model for others in our Communion."

But, he acknowledged, the vote would cause controversy. "I know this will not be welcome news for all in our household of faith," Browning said. "They need to be held in our prayers as well."

After announcing Wednesday's vote, Carey pleaded for reconciliation by all parties in the ordination debate as he faces the task of holding the church together during an expected crisis over the issue.

American Red Cross halfway to achieving goal

Blood drive totals exceed 700 pints at SIUC campus

By Jeremy Finley
Special Assignment Writer

The SIUC-American Red Cross blood drive met its halfway mark Wednesday as 1,600 pints were expected to be gathered by the end of the week.

The drive collected 305 pints of blood Wednesday, which brought the total collection to 705 pints for the week.

Jonathon Senft, chairman of the blood drive, said the Mobilization of Volunteer Effort organized the drives until last year, and IGC then was asked to assume the responsibility.

"They needed an organization to help with the drive, and it turns out we're doing a better job than in the past," he said.

Today the drive will take place at the Student Center and 2 p.m. to 8 p.m. Friday at the SIUC Recreation Center.

Vivian Ugent, Southern Illinois blood drive coordinator, said the drive has been so successful because of the organization of the Inner Greek Council and the American Marketing Association.

Ugent said another goal of the drive is to surpass the total pints collected at the University of Missouri, which has been in competition with SIUC since 1988.

Cory VanDeveer, assistant chairman of the drive, said 150 to 200 fraternity and sorority members helped with the drive Monday.

"We've at least had that many (200)," he said. "We expect more for the rest of the week."

Senft said most of the fraternities and sororities have participated in the drive and in a number of capacities.

"They've helped with food, refreshments, and have done an incredible job with getting the word out," he said. "Some are signed up to work, but some just pass it rough and decide to help."

University Museum gift shop offers international shopping

By Angela L. Hyland
General Assignment Writer

By shopping at the University Museum gift shop, individuals can give Christmas gifts with an international flair, said Lori Huffman, manager of the shop.

Today, as part of a special Christmas shopping day, the store will offer a discount on all merchandise.

Items from all over the world will be sold including hand-made stuffed animals from South America, gourd-type ornaments from Africa and metal toys from the former Soviet Union.

Many of these items can't be found anywhere else, said Wanda Oakley, chief adviser for the college of liberal arts.

"I shop there a lot because almost anything you would see in there is unique," Oakley said. "The toys are different, the glassware is exquisite, the books are excellent."

"It's a great place to go if you're looking for something special or for someone who's hard to buy for," she said.

Wednesday, the shop was closed while employees decorated. They domed gates, walls and shelves with beads, garland, wreaths and noisettes.

"We'll have potpourri out, so the shop will even have a Christmas smell," Huffman said. "It will be a very festive occasion."

Refreshments such as cookies, punch, hot apple cider and a large cheese ball will be available for visitors to muni on while they browse through the store, she said.

Oakley said she has found the prices at the gift shop to be competitive, especially for the type and quality of merchandise.

"It's very rare to be able to find a unique toy for $2," she said. "But at the gift shop, you can find carved birds, bracelets, rings, candies and cards. The cards are so pretty, they're almost like gifts."

Dracula movie to get viewers' blood pumping

By Casey Hampton
Entertainment Editor

Traditionally adorned in a high-collared cloak with a red medallion and bloody fangs, Dracula has been revered as the grandeur of evil — a vampire who feeds a diabolic craving into the veins of his victims.

But Academy Award-winning filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola has reopened Dracula's coffin and given him a transfusion.

Emphasizing the human emotion behind the most terrifying aspects of the story, Coppola is claiming uncharted territory in recreating Dracula for the screen with a faithful, completely original adaptation of the creature found in Bram Stoker's 1897 novel.

Authenticity to the book is supposed to be such a key element in the remake that the author appears in the title, "Bram Stoker's Dracula." And according to Cinefantastique magazine, the script indeed is "more faithful to Bram Stoker's than any other."

Leslie Block, publicist for Columbia Pictures, which is releasing the film, said of more than 200 Dracula movies in the past, "Bram Stoker's Dracula" is the first attempt to capture the intention of Stoker.

"The film is a true Victorian, gothic romance—it's not, as Coppola says, 'Freddy Krueger goes to Transylvania,'" she said. "It is less of a horror film than it is an epic adventure."

But when audiences arrive in theaters for the film's wide release Friday, they may discover this latest interpretation of the dark character is merely the latest stage in a long evolution.

Coppola has joined the legion of filmmakers who have attempted to recapture on film the essence of the creature established in Stoker's novel—a Dracula that is frightening and evocative, dangerous and charismatic.

Katherine Orloff, marketing project manager for "Bram Stoker's Dracula," said the film is trying to remain as true as it can to Stoker's vision, but Coppola had to stray from the book at times to tie the scenes together.

"I think there are certain narrative lapses in the novel because it is written in the form of a journal and notes," she said. "The scenes that (Coppola) added are there for the sake of continuity."

Regardless, Coppola is joining a list with a less-than-reputable past of remaining faithful to the novel.

Robert Fox, an SIUC associate professor of English, said since Stoker's original creation, the mythic elements surrounding Dracula have secured a wide appeal, which has translated into a multitude of films.

Multitude of theatrical vampires recreate Stoker's original vision

By Casey Hampton
Entertainment Editor

Since the onset of his creation by Bram Stoker in 1897, Dracula has endured more than a century of successfully haunting literary and dramatic landscapes.

In the process, he has taken on a life of his own, inheriting new details with each interpretation.

Dracula has abounded well beyond Stoker's original vision, which was described in the book as a "tall old man, clean shaven save for a long white moustache, and clad in black from head to foot, without a single speck of colour about him anywhere."

The on-screen development of Dracula began in 1922 with F.W. Murnau's unofficial adaptation of Stoker's novel, "Nosferatu: A Symphony of Shudders." The silent film emphasized the monstrous aspects of the count's appearance.

Perhaps more influential, the film concluded with Dracula perishing in the light of the dawning sun. Neither folklore nor Stoker describes sunlight as fatal to vampires, yet Murnau's invention has been used ever since.

In the late 1920s, the novel was adapted into a play by Hamilton Deane and John L. Balderston, in which Dracula received a complete makeover.

To meet theatrical conventions of the time, he sported elegant evening clothes, including a white tie and red medallion of some chivalric order, and a cape with an extremely high collar.

This new image of Dracula became so etched into the public's mind that when Universal Pictures bought the rights to the film in 1931 and tried to fuse elements of the novel into it, the capped image remained. And Bela Lugosi's performance as the Transylvania Count in the film continues to define the popular image of a vampire.

More than 200 subsequent films also have mingled with the Dracula introduced in Stoker's novel but have failed to

COBA stages Pride Week

Many events planned to get students to take pride in SIUC

By Vincent S. Boyd
Business Writer

In an effort to invoke pride in the College of Business and Administration, a COBA registered student organization is hosting a series of activities and events to accomplish this.

Blacks Interested In Business is sponsoring its second annual COBA Pride Week.

Michael Haywood, faculty adviser for BIB, said COBA Pride Week was developed in spring 1991 as COBA Pride Day.

"We initially planned a one-day event," Haywood said. "But the ideas were transformed into a full week of activities."

COBA Pride Week began in fall 1991. This year it will be Nov. 15-20.

He said the purpose of COBA Pride Week is to get students to take pride in SIUC and to give the University a better name and image.

"When many people think of Southern, they envision a party school," Haywood said. "COBA Pride Week helps dispel all of the negative imagery surrounding the University."

Stephan Toussaint, a senior in finance from Chicago and president of BIB, said the week is intended to increase student awareness of COBA.

"It (COBA Pride Week) is geared toward increasing student awareness of the history and accomplishments of COBA and fostering pride in everyone affiliated with the college," Toussaint said.

Haywood said he hopes to see the week expand to the University.

"BIB wants its activities to spread through SIUC," Haywood said. "We eventually want to see an SIUC Pride Week."

"It will be a chance for the University to stick out its chest," he said. "It will be good for everyone involved."

COBA Pride Week will be full of a variety of events. All SIUC students and faculty are encouraged to attend.

The week will start Nov. 15 with the COBA Basketball Tournament. The tourney is from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Student Recreation Center. BIB is the reigning championship team.

Nov. 16 is the beginning of the Banner Theme Contest. Student organizations within the college will make banners with a theme relating to the college. An award will be given based on originality and content.

On Nov. 17, a bowling tournament will be open to all students. Teams will be comprised of four players, male or female. The entry fee is $7 per team. Prizes will be awarded for the top three finishers.

On Nov. 18, there will be the student professional development seminar. The topic will be "Taking Care of Number One."

A guest speaker is scheduled for Nov. 19, but is yet to be confirmed. COBA Pride Week concludes Nov. 20 with a dinner banquet.

For more information on COBA Pride Week, one may call Haywood at 453-3328.

Disney recalling cartoon watches

The Hartford Courant

Disney Consumer Products is recalling about 73,000 movie-related children's watches because of high lead content in the characters painted on the watchbands.

The company on Oct. 28 and again last week sent warning letters to owners of its Beauty and the Beast and Rescuers watches, which were offered as premiums to those who ordered recently released videotapes of the Disney films.

The cartoon characters on the translucent wristbands of the Beauty and the Beast watches are produced with paint that contains 0.2 percent lead, more than three times the amount permitted under the Federal Hazardous Substances Act, said Albert E. Maruggi, spokesman for the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission. Under the act, lead content in paint must be under 0.06 percent.

The lead content found on the Rescuers watch could not be determined Tuesday, although a Disney spokesman said the wristbands on both watches were made by the same company and that it's likely the lead content is the same. The company's 101 Dalmations watches, which contain lead levels that slightly exceed the federal standards, are not being recalled.

Children who ingest high levels of lead can experience a variety of a diverse health effects, including nervous system disorders and diminished learning capacity.

The company's tests detected the high lead content in the Beauty and the Beast watches Oct. 27.

But filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola, director of the latest version, "Bram Stoker's Dracula," is confident his screen version creates a unique approach to the subject.

The film's producers claim "Bram Stoker's Dracula" is faithful to Stoker's book and presents the underlying story the book was based on, which is a true story of Vlad Dracula, a Rumanian prince who fought for the Christian church and battled against the infidels who were invading Europe.

Katherine Orloff, marketing project manager for Coppola's film, said Dracula appears in the film very much like he is described in the book, and traditional preconceptions on the traditional Dracula should not misguide people.

"Anybody who goes into any movie should go into it with an open mind," she said. "People need to experience it for what it is and not expect to see old Dracula movies—this is a very unique vision and they should try not to bring that extra baggage along."

Robert Fox, an SIUC associate professor of English, said many filmmakers are just unable to capture Stoker's writing style onto the screen, and he will be impressed if Coppola is able to do so.

"(Stoker) was a great storyteller," he said. "I'm going to be curious if Coppola's really going to try to capture Stoker's style, or if he's just exploiting the idea."

When audiences attend the premiere of "Bram Stoker's Dracula" Friday, they will have the final say if the subject should be buried.

Daily Egyptian places fourth in national paper competition

By Karyn Viverito
Special Assignment Writer

The Daily Egyptian has finally made its mark outside of Carbondale and Illinois.

After competing against 223 daily tabloid publications from four-year universities across the country, the Associated College Press has listed the DE as No. 4 in the nation.

DE acting managing editor Wanda Brandon said she was not surprised with the national recognition of the DE.

"Our editors spent a lot of time planning stories and ideal design techniques that were going to make it," she said. "We have a lot of talent here from the beginning to the senior writers and editors, and their efforts paid off."

The award was presented for a Best of Show competition at the annual ACP/College Media Advisors convention in Chicago Nov. 1.

Joining the DE in the four-year daily tabloid Top 5 were the No. 1 Daily Northwestern, at Northwestern University; the No. 2 Daily Nexus, at University of Southern California at Santa Barbara; the No. 3 Daily Evergreen, at Washington State University; and the No. 5 Daily University Star, at Southwest Texas State.

Annie Witta, manager of critical services for ACP, said competing newspapers are looked at carefully when being judged.

"It takes more than appearance to make a top publication," she said. "Not only do we look at the quality of coverage, design and layout, but we look at editor leadership and continuity."

This was the second year the DE participated in the national competition, and it was the first time it received a top ranking. The paper attended the 1991 convention in Denver, where it was honored with a regional Pacemaker award as one of the top 12 college dailies in the nation.

Brandon said she has always found the DE to be a quality newspaper, but has found it has changed in the past few years.

"The DE has seemed to make some steps up as a publication and that has been noticed with better rankings in national and state competitions in recent years," she said.

DE student editor Tony Mancuso said the award can be attributed to a small, but dedicated and outstanding staff.

"The DE has had a tough, transitional semester, and a lot of hard work has been involved," he said. "Those who have stuck with it this semester can feel a sense of pride in our latest accomplishment."

"With the added adversity and criticisms we have received this semester, it is nice to be recognized by a group of people that know what a quality newspaper is," Mancuso said.

The DE is satisfied and proud of the ranking, but the real challenge is to get a first place ranking, Brandon said.

"We are going to look and see what we can better from the publication we turned in this year," she said. "Next year we hope to be No. 1, and we will be back."

case for keeping," he said. "But we do not have the resources to keep all of them."

"I cannot say which ones will be cut," he said. "But we will have to cut programs, services and degree programs if we are to maintain the quality and integrity of SIUC."

Shepherd called on the staff to get more involved with the process by making recommendations and asking questions.

"We are going to expect more productivity from our staff and faculty," he said. "I urge them to voice their concerns to their departments and to get more involved."

The most important issue addressed at the meeting is that there is no longer just talk; but the downsizing has turned into action, said one staff member.

James Scales, chairman of the AP staff council, said the downsizing initiative is being put in motion.

"I cannot say which part of the of the University will be cut the most as far as academics versus non-academics," he said. "But we will try to take out those things that are less necessary to SIUC."

Scales served on the committee of 12 with SIUC President, John C. Guyon. The committee developed the recent recommendations that is now up for approval by constituency groups and the Board of Trustees.

Scales said he hopes IBHE will accept the majority of the recommendations by the committee.

"So far we don't know what will happen when we introduce our recommendations to the board in Springfield," he said. "We know 100% of our recommendations will not go through."

Scales said he hopes the meeting with the board will be a collaboration to come up with what is best for SIUC.

DRACULA, from page 7

"Despite our scientific and technological development as a culture, the human factor is much more compelling," he said. "Dracula presents the notion of immortality — he's feeding off life to retain life."

"But anytime you take one kind of art form and try to turn it into another, there are always going to be changes," he added. "Filmmakers have a tendency to make things more graphic, which increases the shock but takes a little away from the imagination."

Coppola's film follows the Transylvanian prince as he moves from Eastern Europe to 19th century London, where his taste for humanity has grown bold with desire after centuries alone in his castle.

Hype surrounding the film indicates a love story will take a bite out of the traditional horror theme.

Screenwriter Jim Hart said his interpretation of Stoker's novel focuses on a fallen hero looking for love and redemption.

"I think Francis and I liked the same things about the script, which was very romantic and sensual and epic, a real love story that was very passionate," he said. "This is the story of Dracula. It's not really a vampire movie. To me, it's more about the man Dracula, the warrior, the prince. He is unlike any other man — he's mysterious and sexual — attractive in a dangerous way."

Fox agreed one of Dracula's more captivating qualities is his sexuality, but he said filmmakers misinterpret the romantic element found in Stoker's novel when they try to make Dracula into a love story. In the novel, his curse is a source of pain, not passion, Fox said.

"He is superhuman and unearthly in his sexuality," he said. "But the romantic elements in the novel are romantic in the sense of the Romantic movement, not the Hollywood leading-man romance. I think (Coppola) is reading backward into the book. To talk about Dracula as a love story is a little perverse."

Yet Coppola's film reportedly possesses the best of both worlds, sharing a provocative Gothic love story with a baptism of blood.

Audiences have only a day until the inspiration behind Coppola's "Bram Stoker's Dracula" is revealed on screen. True-to-the-book or not, his film is only another bat in the belfry.

Lemonheads take control of SIUC despite bad sound, slow beginning

By Dave Kazak
Entertainment Writer

Review

Tuesday night, playing before a crowd which barely came close to filling half of the Student Center Ballrooms, the Lemonheads jammed, then played softly, covered a Charles Manson song, jammed again, and ended with songs written by friends of the group.

Lead guitarist and vocalist Evan Dando said the small size of the crowd at the show did not disappoint him in any way.

"Other bands try and play for the people who do not come to the show," he said. "I try to play for the people who come. The crowd was a typical relaxed crowd, and that just lets me be more relaxed in playing."

Relaxed was an understated description of the small crowd that came out to view the Lemonheads and opening band Walt Mink, at least it was while Walt Mink played.

The audience reaction did nothing to reflect the quality of music Walt Mink delivered. Despite the poor acoustics of the Student Center Ballrooms, the music was hard-driving punkish pop highlighted with impressive guitar riffs and a fast-paced beat.

After Walt Mink's performance, the audience relaxed. When the Lemonheads took the stage, the dancing began.

The Lemonheads' first song was not met with much enthusiasm, but the second song, "Confetti," a song about Dando's feelings during his parents' divorce, drew the audience into a more danceable mood.

"We are really trying to express ourselves musically," he said. "We are not out make a statement or be political or anything like that. If you going to play in a band, you have to love the music."

Covers are a big part of the Lemonheads performance, and they played several, including a song written by Charles Manson.

"I was really into Abba and the Jackson Five when I was younger," Dando said. "When I do a cover of a song, I'm not trying to make fun of them, I try to do nothing more than play the song in our own style."

"Most of the time this is fun, and that's just what we are trying to do—have fun," he said.

After the concert Dando said he does not feel music is a force in changing the world.

"What is changing the world," he asked. "When you go to the store and by a candy bar, you're changing the world because now there is one less bar of candy in the box."

"We are not trying to be political or anything like that," he said. "We are just trying to have fun. Even groups like U2...I wonder just how serious they are at trying to get a message across, or are they just being pretentious and having fun at doing it?"

The fun Dando talked about after the show was evident during the show. The ballads played halfway into the performance brought audience members to the point of raising their hands and swaying back and forth. The harder songs sent the audience into a dancing frenzy, including a mosh pit.

By the end of the show, the crowd had settled down and was back to just standing around and watching the band.

The band concluded the show by playing a couple of songs written by friends of the bands, including a love song called "In your arms."

SPC member Margaret Mesic said the size of the crowd was disappointing but could be expected because of the short amount of time spent promoting the concert.

The Lemonheads will continue touring with Soul Asylum for the next six weeks, take a few months off from touring, and then tour Japan and the Pacific Rim.

Dando said he is planning on going into the studio in May 1993 and hopefully releasing a new album by next Christmas.

City orchestra to play romantic finale

By Melissa Willis
Entertainment Writer

In its final concert of the year, the Carbondale Community Orchestra will perform a selection of romantic classical music.

The program will begin at 5:15 p.m. Sunday at the First Baptist Church in Murphysboro. Musical selections for the performance include Mozart's "Symphony 39," Waldteufel's "Herbstweisen Waltz" and Rubenstein's "Khammeni-Ostrow."

Chuck Heidemann, principal trumpet player, said the orchestra has performed five concerts this year.

"We perform from March through November and try to schedule as many concerts as time permits," he said.

Heidemann, of Elkville, said the group began five years ago with five people who got together to play for enjoyment.

"We did this for three years," Heidemann said. "As more people joined the group and we developed a smoother sound we started thinking about performing public."

He said the orchestra is formed of musicians throughout Southern Illinois.

"We have members as close as Carbondale and as far as Creal Springs," he said. "The ages range out also. The youngest member is my son who is 11 years old."

Heidemann said several music teachers and other people interested in classical music make up the group of 20 players.

"I would like the number of members to increase so we can become a full-fledged orchestra," he said.

The orchestra rehearses on Mondays at 7 p.m. at the Christian Scientist Center, Heidemann said.

Conductor Joyce Hesketh, of Carbondale, said during practice she tries to get the group to think as one mind.

"It takes an invisible kind of energy to get everyone motivated and have them all respond to the music," she said. "There must also be a lot of encouragement for musicians who have not played in a while and the younger players who are not as experienced."

Hesketh said she compares the orchestra to a minor league baseball team — "it just keeps getting better and better."

Hesketh said the orchestra is a non-profit organization that is partially funded through grants from Carbondale Community Arts and the Southern Illinois Arts Council and private donations.

"The support we receive is what keeps us going," she said.

Hesketh said an advantage to playing in a church is a wider range of audience attendance.

"We have people come to these performances because they are a member of the church," she said. "Some people might not attend orchestra concerts regularly, but reading about it in a church bulletin may spark some interest."

The First Baptist Church is located at 400 N. 15th St. in Murphysboro.

Admission is free.

Blackhawks' Keenan may move to St. Louis

The Sporting News

Mike Keenan quit? Get serious. Keenan, who has taken teams to the Stanley Cup finals three times in the last eight seasons, would not walk away from a team that was so close to winning the Cup last spring.

Keenan was fired by the Chicago Blackhawks after refusing to sign a five-year, $2-million contract in which Keenan would have agreed to give up coaching and would have been general manager with the full responsibility and authority of the job.

Blackhawks Owner William Wirtz would not allow Keenan to make trades without asking for his approval and he would not permit Keenan to hammer out contracts, a job Wirtz has entrusted to former general manager Bob Fulford. More succinctly, Wirtz did not trust Keenan with his money.

Strange treatment for a guy who takes your team to the Stanley Cup finals for the first time since 1973, eh?

In truth, Keenan wanted to coach one more season. But the Blackhawks feared losing Darryl Sutter to another team. It's also true that Keenan felt out of the mainstream not being behind the bench, especially with Chicago off to a slow start.

Wirtz gave Keenan a deadline of last Friday to sign the contract, or else he was fired.

"It came right out of the blue," Keenan says. "We had a handshake agreement in terms of basic salary but not over job description."

"The reason I was fired came down to two issues. If I wasn't going to coach, I wanted to assume the complete control of a general manager, but there were no discussions."

Wirtz says, "We thought we had a handshake deal. But then Mike rejected that and came back and wanted more authority than we're ever going to give a general manager."

This is the same owner who let Bobby Hull get away over a few dollars, when Hull signed with the World Hockey Association in 1972. It's the same team that was 30-41-9 in 1987-88 before Keenan took the Blackhawks to the conference finals twice and to the Stanley Cup finals once in four seasons.

Keenan does not have to make an immediate decision on his future—the Blackhawks paid him $375,000 to terminate his contract. But Keenan's agent, Alan Eagleson, faxed each of the NHL teams informing them Keenan was available and received two immediate responses—one from the St. Louis Blues.

In 1988, the Blues offered Keenan the same four-year contract the Blackhawks did—to coach and then become the general manager after two seasons.

The Blues would be the perfect fit for many reasons: —Bob Berry is subbing for Bob Plager as coach. Berry isn't certain he wants the job long-term.

Except for their first three seasons, when they went to the Stanley Cup finals as an expansion team, the only year the Blues won more than one playoff round was 1986, when Jacques Demers led them to the conference finals against Calgary. —The Blues' season-ticket base dropped this season and faces another drop next season unless changes are made soon.

Hull leading balloting for All-Star team

Zapnews

St. Louis Blues right wing Brett Hull is the leading the balloting for the National Hockey League Campbell Conference All-Star team. The NHL All-Star game will be played at the Montreal Forum on February 6th, 1993.

Hull, who led the league in balloting last season, leads the Campbell Conference and the league overall with 66,604 votes, nearly 20,000 votes ahead of defenseman

Paul Coffey of the Los Angeles Kings, the second-leading vote getter in the conference.

Winger Jaromir Jagr of the Pittsburgh Penguins leads all Wales Conference vote-getters with 58,712.

Investigation may force Huskies to forfeit wins

The Washington Post

SEATTLE—From the Life Just Ain't Fair department, we bring you Don James and the Washington Huskies, backed against the ropes and covered up as best they can following a hellacious combination to the chops.

Last Wednesday, the Seattle Times reported that backup quarterback Billy Joe Hobert had borrowed $50,000 from an Idaho businessman, a transaction that has prompted him being declared ineligible. There is still the possibility that Washington may have to forfeit all eight victories (five in the conference) this season. The Huskies, however, won't have to worry about forfeiting one game—Saturday's 16-3 loss to Arizona—that pretty much ended Washington's attempt to win a second consecutive national championship or give the Huskies a pleasant diversion from the controversy Hobert wrought.

Two things you could pretty much count on when it came to varsity football here at UW: The Huskies would win lots of games (22 straight through last week) and stay out of trouble. That's what made last week's double-whammy such a shocker. James, coach here since 1976, is sort of a Joe Paterno of the Pacific Northwest. Hard-working, successful, respected, honest, affable. He runs a program so clean you'd think he was Felix Unger.

But James finds himself being pulled down by Hobert, a brash, big-talking quarterback who is leading the team to unwanted headlines one season after helping them to a 12-0 record, the Rose Bowl and the school's first national championship.

Hobert borrowed the money in three installments last spring from multi-millionaire Charles Rice. What Hobert did with the money isn't really important. The school has ruled that the loan was improper as determined by NCAA rules. Now the critical question in "Billygate," as it's called here, is whether James or any coaches-administrators knew in advance about the loan. There would be even bigger trouble if Rice, a retired nuclear engineer, was a UW alum or a Husky booster. From all indications, he is not. He's told local reporters that he's made loans over the years to all kinds of students in need from various schools.

If the Pac-10's investigation finds that the coaches and/or school administrators were hiding knowledge of the loan, the conference could force Washington to forfeit its victories, because Hobert would have been ineligible to play in those games. Hobert has been laying pretty low through all of this, other than going to the golf course with Rudy Finne, the 43-year-old Seattle longshoreman-fisherman-friend who introduced the player to Rice, Finne's father-in-law. Finne told a Seattle reporter Sunday that UW knew nothing of the loan.

"I have no remorse whatsoever about getting the loan," Hobert told the Post-Intelligencer. "Hindsight is always 20-20, but I should have gone to Dick Dun (UW's faculty athletic representative). I just didn't think it was anybody's business. Especially if it wasn't connected to the university and it wasn't special treatment because I was an athlete. I take full responsibility."

Capriati advances in Virginia Slims Championship

Zapnews

PHILADELPHIA—Fourth seed Jennifer Capriati of the United States advanced to the quarterfinals of the $350,000 Virginia Slims of Philadelphia Tennis Championship Wednesday by downing fellow American Elise Burgin, 6-2, 6-0.

Lisa Raymond, the 1992 NCAA singles champion from nearby Wayne, Pennsylvania, upset seventh seeded fellow American Amy Frazier, 6-4, 6-4, in a second-round match this afternoon. Raymond is a sophomore at the University of Florida.

In other action, Natalia Zvereva of Belarus and Gigi Fernandez of the United States won their first-round matches Wednesday. Zvereva topped American Ros Fairbank, 6-2, 7-5, and Fernandez edged Larisa Savchenko of Latvia, 7-5, 6-4.

it ain't over 'til it's over," said Vincent Naimoli, who heads the Florida group attempting to purchase the Giants. "I can't make any further comment."

Florida's two senators say they hope to bring the matter before a Congressional hearing examining baseball's anti-trust status. Republican Senator Connie Mack has been a leader in the movement to have baseball stripped of its anti-trust exemption.

Florida Governor Lawton Chiles Wednesday called the owners' decision, "reprehensible," and said he would get involved with both the movement to have the antitrust exemption dropped and any suits filed by the Petersburg group.

The San Francisco group actually got off the first legal blow Tuesday by filing a federal lawsuit asking a U.S. District Court judge to invalidate the agreement between the St. Peter Dome in St. Petersburg for the 1993 season. One of Lurie's main reasons for wanting to sell the Giants is the area's refusal to fund the building of a new stadium to replace Candlestick Park. Magowan's group would keep the team at Candlestick Park until a suitable stadium could be built.

San Francisco group expected to buy Giants

Los Angeles Times

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz.—The Giants are remaining in San Francisco, with the probability that a group headed by Safeway supermarket magnate, Peter Magowan, will emerge as the owner in the next 10 days.

Magowan may not offer admission rebates for double coupons, but he probably will play almost a full schedule of day games to cope with the cold of Candlestick Park, and there is a strong possibility that former Los Angeles Dodger Dusty Baker will replace Roger Craig as manager.

In this troubled and tumultuous time for baseball, with attendance and ratings down and payrolls and pessimism up, Magowan may find there is an almost daily restocking of food for thought.

Even before rejecting relocation of the Giants to St. Petersburg, Fla., on Tuesday, for example, major league owners heard Dick Ebersol of NBC Sports paint a bleak and blistering picture for the next national TV package. Ebersol predicted that each club's annual TV revenue, now about $15.4 million, could be cut in half.

Wednesday, preparing for their assault on the compensation system and the attempt to do away with arbitration, the owners will discuss salary caps and revenue sharing and could vote on whether to exercise their Dec. 11 option to reopen collective bargaining negotiations, with the possibility of a spring lockout to drive home the need for change.

There have also been reports here from the format committee, exploring realignment and the possibility of an extra playoff tier; and a restructuring committee that might leave the next commissioner with many of that office's previous powers and even put all labor negotiations under his jurisdiction.

Yes, these are the same owners who wanted to strip former commissioner Fay Vincent of his labor role and forced his resignation, to an extent, because they felt he abused his power. But if you're looking for consistency and direction and a clear indication that someone's in control here, forget it.

Civic pride and responsibility is one thing, but Magowan might soon decide he was better off behind the counter.

The decision to keep the Giants in San Francisco is typical of baseball's current mess.

Consider:

If the decision to reject relocation represented a reaffirmation of baseball's "long-established preference for the stability of its franchises," as a National League statement said, what kind of stability is represented by restoring a franchise that: —Has drawn more than two million only once in 35 years and less than one million in 10 of those years. —Has never done its part to demonstrate that a suspect market area can support two teams. —Must now return to the abysmal environment of Candlestick, with no promise that an area in which voters have rejected four stadium proposals will ever approve one.

National League President Bill White said Tuesday that the Magowan group wouldn't be putting up $100 million "if there weren't shortage plans and political backing for a new stadium."

Current owner Bob Lurie, listening nearby, must have wondered if this wasn't where he came in—and went out. His fourth stadium defeat, in San Jose in early June, led to an appeal to Vincent, who agreed that the Giants had met all of his tough criteria for franchise relocation and gave him permission to explore his options.

Some owners now believe that Lurie had the $115-million deal with Tampa-St. Petersburg in his pocket even before the San Jose vote. Some believe they deserved better than to have to learn from their morning paper that Lurie had completed a deal to move the club. Some insist that "exploring options" didn't mean he had transfer approval.

Some or all of that may be true, but if the widespread beliefs of November were there when Lurie announced his sale on Aug. 6, why wasn't it said to him then that he had overstepped his mandate and guidelines?

Why wasn't the deal voided then, saving White and Dodger President Peter O'Malley three months of behind-the-scenes machinations, three months of what St. Petersburg is almost certain to claim was illegal interference with an agreement of sale?

couple of spots just outside the Top 25 colleges waiting to pluck someone out," he said. "Personally, I think it's a great situation because we're not the one's in there waiting to get plucked out."

Walker said some of the sprinters were also expected to perform better this weekend.

"People we haven't really noticed right off the bat like Ryan Kelly, Trent Fischer and Mark Wehner have all done good jobs," he said. "I expect to see them swim a little bit faster since they've backed off a little bit."

He said this would give the Saluki a pre-indication of what they would be able to do in December.

Walker said continued success was also expected from Kevin Rosepapa, Doug Fulling, Ward Bracken and Greg Bever, some of the key swimmers that have already set themselves up in that role.

Mark Kluemper, head coach of the women's team, said his squad was looking forward to competing at Champaign.

The meet the women will be focusing on will be the double dual against Illinois State and University of Illinois, he said.

"We want to be able to compete with the state schools and win," Kluemper said. "Whether we can or not remains questionable."

Kluemper said he was still very new to the team and did not know all his swimmers well enough, but if the team did win the double dual, he would consider the weekend successful.

"Anything beyond that would just be icing on the cake," Kluemper said. "The other three schools are ranked within the Top 20 nationally, so we just want to stand up, race against them and be competitive."

The swimmers who performed well at the Evanson meet last weekend, Rachel Brinn and Melanie Davis, would probably be the swimmers to look out for, Kluemper said.

"Camille Hammond, a junior from Colorado, has also been swimming really well in practice as well," Kluemper said. "In addition, seniors like Julie Adams, Christina Body, Kristin Harvey and Karen Porter are always looked upon to provide leadership and should do well."
