SIU snags funds for more teachers

Sen. Dick Durbin awards $1.5 million to College of Education

MOLLY PARKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The College of Education will receive $1.5 million to help put more teachers into classrooms across the state and nation.

U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was instrumental in securing the money for SIU that recently passed the House and Senate. It is to be used for improving teacher training and development.

The money will go in part to a new program that will allow students who graduate in other areas to get their master's degree in education. Students, for example, who graduate with a liberal arts and science degree will be able to go back to school and receive their teacher certification said Keith Hillkirk, dean of the College of Education.

The students will pursue course work in teaching curriculum, as well as spend time with a "mentor teacher" at an area school. Although the program is not concrete, it will likely take four semesters to complete. Additional class work may also be needed to fill teaching requirements, Hillkirk said.

The area teachers that participate in the program will receive some type of reward for providing a place for the students to immerse themselves in the teaching environment, Hillkirk said.

"In order for this program to work the way we want it to work, it's going to have to stand on three legs; the college the student got their first degree from, the College of Education and the participating school," Hillkirk said.

Hillkirk said it is important for the graduate students to spend time in the classroom to learn hands-on about teaching. He said it was not enough just to know the curriculum, because as a teacher you have to know "how a thirteen-year-old thinks."

Students help winterize migrant camp

Social workers trek to Cobden

MARK LAMBIRD

Students in the School of Social Work sacrificed part of their fall break to prepare the Cobden migrant camp for winter.

They helped remove storm debris, paint houses, clear a garden and repair clothes lines by the housing complexes all for the sake of lending a helping hand.

Elsie Speck, director of the Cobden migrant camp, said finding groups from SIUC to volunteer in the fall has been a problem in the past because of breaks.

"This group made a sacrifice to give up the first weekend of their break," Speck said. "It is really wonderful that so many stayed behind for a couple of extra days to help out."

The School of Social Work organized a volunteer day on Oct. 27 and 28 at the Union-Jackson County Farmers Housing Association Camp in Cobden. The camp is run by the United States Department of Agriculture and provides housing for workers who are employed on the farms and orchards around Cobden.

The student volunteers were guided in what to do by Speck. She said that any volunteers that come to the camp are helpful because of the camp's tight budget.

"Because we can get volunteer help, we can offer more services to the families that use the camp," Speck said. "The extra money allows us to run summer school for the children of the workers."

Speck said she prepared for the volunteers days in advance.

"It is a lot of work, because I have to make sure we have things lined up to do and the

Floundering enrollment spurs new

New administrator takes office at end of month

CODELL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN

To help with enrollment, SIUC is looking at University of Arizona for help.

A new position, assistant vice chancellor for enrollment management, will take effect by Nov. 28 and the front-runner for this position is Anne De Luca. Currently, De Luca is the associate director of admissions and new student enrollment at the University of Arizona in Tucson.

Most departments in Student Affairs would report to the assistant vice chancellor who would serve directly under Larry Dietz, vice chancellor for Student Affairs and Enrollment Management.

David Shoup, dean of the College of Agriculture, is the head of the search committee to find the new assistant chancellor. Shoup said the decision to place De Luca in the new position is not finalized, but Dietz is currently negotiating with her and she is the kind of person they are looking for.

"We kind of identified her as a person with a lot of energy and a lot of new ideas," Shoup said.

Some of those ideas are expected to fall on admissions and recruiting according to Shoup. This field is especially important because of the 954-student drop in enrollment this year.

"One of the main goals for a person in this position is to increase enrollment," De Luca said.

Chancellor Walter Wendler said the Anthrax pops up in Senate offices

WASHINGTON (CNN) — Capitol Police announced Sunday that traces of anthrax were found in the offices of five additional senators in the Hart Senate Office Building.

Officials from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention say the traces of anthrax found pose no health risk based on the minimal amount of spores found.

The new discoveries are believed to be linked to the anthrax-laden letter received by Sen. Tom Daschle in October, and criminal investigators are continuing to inspect mail for cross-contamination.

The killings started when Taylor became angry with waiters who were arguing a door at his apartment. Defense lawyers argued that Taylor was insane and suffered from delusions.

FBI seeks information on mystery planes

ST. LOUIS — The FBI is seeking information on the owners of three small planes that were reported to have dropped gray smoke over boats near Cairo, Ill. and Crystal City, Mo. The FBI said Sunday that tugboat workers saw three aircraft flying about 30 feet from the boats.

U.S. Coast Guard spokesman John McGarttagh said the FBI did not find harmful material on the boats.

"It was determined that there was no residue to be found on the tugboats whatsoever," McGarttagh said. "The boats have been released, and there's no injuries, no nothing."

More than 400 dead in Algeria flooding

The worst flooding in two decades has claimed the lives of 404 people in Algiers, said Interior Minister Zerhouni in a radio report Monday.

The floods killed 339 people Saturday, according to civil defense officials. Since Sunday evening, 34 bodies have been recovered.

The government said it will offer the hardest hit areas with financial and housing assistance.

The rain in Algiers mostly stopped Sunday, but more rain is expected through Thursday.

Nepalese princess dies in crash

KATHMANDU, Nepal — A Nepalese princess was among five passengers who were killed in a helicopter crash Monday morning in the remote Mugu district of northwestern Nepal. Bal Bahadur, Nepal's minister for tourism and civil aviation, said Princess Prekshya Rajya Laxmi Shah and four other passengers had chartered the chopper Monday morning for a flight to Rara Lake.

Princess Prekshya's husband was one of the 10 royals murdered in a palace massacre last June. She was also the sister of the late Queen Aishwarya.

Shoppers at Kmart browse the holiday merchandise that embellishes the store.

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas

Local stores begin preparing for the holiday season

GINNY SKALSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Area stores have been gearing up for the holiday shopping season since mid-October, hanging up Christmas lights, painting store windows with fake snow and stocking tons of holiday themed merchandise.

Although the busiest shopping day of the year is not until the day after Thanksgiving, business owners say there's a lot of money to be made in the meantime.

The Great Outdoors Company, located in the University Mall, has been stocked with Christmas merchandise since Oct. 1. Owner Mickey Stewart said the store has been dressed with Christmas lights, trees and ornaments since before Halloween to keep up with the department stores, which traditionally prepare for Christmas in mid-October.

Stewart said the early preparation helps draw in more sales during the fourth quarter of the fiscal year, which runs from Oct. 1 to Dec. 31. And while the nation is suffering from a recession, Stewart said business is up this year and he anticipates a 10 percent increase in holiday sales from last year.

"People always spend for Christmas, they may spend a little less, but they're always going to spend," Stewart said.

David Hvidston, manager of JC Penney in the University Mall, has been working with the company for 32 years and said it has always been their tradition to put out Christmas decorations in mid-October. In about a week, Hvidston said Christmas carols will be filtered into the store's regular music to get shoppers in the holiday spirit.

Hvidston also expects to see a rise in sales this holiday season, despite the nation's declining economy. "[Southern Illinois'] economy was probably lower than the rest of the country prior to [the recession], so we have nowhere to go but up," Hvidston said.

Kmart manager Gary Ratliff said the store began stocking holiday merchandise before Halloween, two weeks before it had in years past. Ratliff said the Kmart corporate office called for the early decorating and stocking.

Although some families were still picking out Halloween costumes for children and Thanksgiving decorations, Ratliff said customers still shop for Christmas merchandise long before the first hint of the holiday season.

"Seasonal stuff begins selling the day you put it out there," Ratliff said. "There are always people shopping earlier for every season."

Panel discussion promotes international knowledge

Public Policy Institute encourages students to study international affairs

ALEXA AGUILAR
DAILY EGYPTIAN

If you don't know about the Chalillo demonstrations in Belize or the name of the Kenyan President, you're exactly the kind of student that the Public Policy Institute is trying to target.

Sen. Paul Simon, director of the Institute, is concerned about young peoples' ignorance of international affairs. In response to that concern, the Institute will sponsor a conference on Thursday that will look at ways to solve that problem.

Mike Lawrence, associate director of the Institute, said that by listening to international students on campus, he learned that they were involved in international affairs much earlier and more intensely than their American counterparts.

"Obviously, the events of Sept. 11 have increased the interest of American students in parts of the world that they probably knew very little or nothing about before that tragic day," Lawrence said. "But we are interested in stimulating an ongoing interest."

"We are living in a world where a lack of interest or involvement on the part of American students is becoming a huge negative."

The event will feature a town hall meeting, a panel discussion of experts and a keynote speech by John Anderson, former Illinois Congressman, 1980 U.S. presidential candidate and president and CEO of the World Federalists Association.

Anderson heads up the WFA, an organization whose "vision is to establish a democratic world federation capable of and limited to achieving positive global goals that nations cannot accomplish alone." He will speak about the importance of young people's participation in that arena.

The town hall meeting includes student panelists from SIUC, three other universities and other students who have spent time abroad. The meeting will allow the panelists to field questions from the audience about their experiences.

Then, Simon will direct a panel and working group to come up with specific recommendations.

Andy Meissen, a graduate student at the University of Illinois-Champaign, is a student panelist and will talk about his experiences abroad.

"My time there changed everything," Meissen, who spent a year in Russia on a State Department Fellowship, said. "Every time you go abroad you see the world with different eyes."

He says even now, two years after the fellowship, when he picks up a Russian newspaper, he reads it from a different perspective.

Michael Perry, president of Undergraduate Student Government, one of the sponsors of the event, said he wanted to get USG involved.

"International affairs do not get the attention it deserves," Perry said. "In this college setting, people are focused on their own lives. We need to become more concerned with what's going on outside of Carbondale, outside of Illinois and outside of the country."

While he said he has no preconceived ideas

Hotmail website down

Hotmail's website has been on the fritz for the past few days, but the problem appears to stem from the e-mail service itself and not SIUC's campus server.

Hotmail was unavailable in Morris Library, residence halls and computer labs across campus. The Information Technology Department noticed the problem this past weekend, when Yahoo and Microsoft sites were also unavailable. Those sites were up and running Monday, but attempts to log on to the Hotmail website were still unsuccessful.

Network engineers worked on the problem throughout the day, and residence halls were told the site would be fixed by the afternoon. However, the technology department discovered the frustration was due to the website itself and not the campus server.

Hotmail is one of the world's largest email providers and access is frequently slow or unavailable due to the large number of users.

YOUR WORD

Busted! Who should pay: the owners or employees?

"I think it's irresponsible [to sell alcohol to minors]. But if I was a worker and could get away with not caring people, I probably would. The owners should enforce the rules."

Tiffany Hatley
Freshman, music business

"Taking away their [liquor] license is too harsh. It's the clerk's responsibility to check. It's the owner's responsibility to make sure the employees are doing what they're supposed to."

Jillian Raney

"A lot of places don't card hard. It's probably the owner's fault. Fixing the working class won't help. Fines to the liquor store owners would be OK. If it's that obvious, they should get a hefty fine."

James Staros
History Section Instructor

OUR WORD

Liquor stores owe it to the community to be responsible

Can the city's image get any more tarnished than it is already without the help of Carbondale and Murphysboro liquor stores, who last week were discovered to have sold alcohol to underage drinkers?

As part of an Illinois State Police sting, 11 out of 15 stores were found to have sold alcohol to minors. Illinois State Police detectives sent students from area universities into stores with underage driver's license. The 11 stores allegedly never asked for an ID.

If true, the irresponsible practices of the 11 stores is shameful and an embarrassment to the city. These businesses have no right to criticize rowdy students on the Strip when they actively contribute to their behavior. How hard is it to ask for identification from patrons? Not hard at all if it's a standard practice.

The maximum fine the stores can receive is $2,500 for violating state law. If proven guilty, the stores should pay the fine and be thankful that it is not more. The store clerks are not free from responsibility as the first line of defense, but the stores themselves should receive fines, not the store clerks.

Store owners will have a chance to defend themselves at a Nov. 27 City Council meeting where evidence from the police sting will be presented. It will be interesting to hear the store owners' defense. We hope they do not try to put the blame on the workers. If their clerks are not checking IDs, it is the owners' responsibility to be on top of that.

Underage drinking is serious problem in our society. Parents, schools and community and health organizations are trying to keep young people safe. Businesses have a right to earn profits from the sale of merchandise. If that merchandise consists of alcohol, so be it. Businesses who sell primarily to students or those located in a college town such as Carbondale have a greater responsibility.

A study released this summer by the Harvard School of Public Health found a high percentage of college binge drinkers to be under the legal drinking age of 21, who find cheap or free alcohol at fraternity parties or bars. Areas near college campuses were found to have a high volume of places to buy alcohol.

More than 7,000 students under 21 and nearly 5,000 students over 21 at 116 colleges around the country were surveyed for the 1997 study. Participation was voluntary. College campuses have a rich pool of potential customers. Business have to be aware of their selling practices.

Any local business that sells alcohol to minors and underage students are committing a destructive act. There are plenty of students 21 years and older who consume alcohol. Liquor stores should card any person who looks underage and adamantly refuse to sell to anyone who does not show an ID upon request.

The stores can't stop every young person from going into bars, but they can prevent them from drinking by carding them. We don't want to see bars closed down or their selling practices grossly monitored because the fail to put the well being of its customers above profits.

Clarity: Uncle Sam, bin Laden and a Day-Glo bus

OK, so I needed some clarity involving our current "campaign of justice" in the Middle East. So, I thought I'd ask good of Uncle Sam.

Outlaw Nation

BY JOSEPH D. JOHNSON
joseph_d_johnson@hotmail.com

Joe: Why exactly are we bombing the Taliban, again?

Uncle Sam: They bombed the Trade Towers, the Pentagon, Dresden, Hiroshima, everything! They send us anthrax in the mail causing a culture of fear. They oppress their people. They dress funny. They probably even voted for Ralph Nader. Well, we're still looking into that.

J: Yes, but I thought you said Osama bin Laden was responsible for the Sept. 11 atrocities.

S: Indeed, but the Taliban is harboring him! Not to mention Cat Stevens!

J: Well, that is pretty evil. But what's the proof that bin Laden did it?

S: We cannot reveal that at this time. It could cost more American lives to give up such intelligence secrets.

J: Will the American public ever see the proof?

S: Probably not.

J: Weren't the majority of the terrorists from Saudi Arabia? If so, why are we bombing Afghanistan?

S: Oh - er, I mean ... certain strateg - er ... what are you, a terrorist?

J: Uh, no.

S: Our allies have almost conquered the Taliban and that's what is important.

J: In allies, you mean the heroin industry heroes, the Northern Alliance. Well, anyway, what about the anthrax scare? Didn't our government conclude that it probably came from right-wing fanatics, perhaps replying to the execution of Timothy McVeigh or Rush Limbaugh's deafness?

S: Um ... I'm sure we'll find some way to connect it back to bin Laden ... I mean, this guy's evil! He probably had something to do with the Holocaust!

J: Oh, you mean, like IBM? You know, that corporation the Congress is trying to wipe out their taxes for ... to supposedly stimulate the economy ... or more realistically make a down payment for the next election. IBM profited from the Holocaust, along with other American corporations who want to help "stimulate."

S: Stop living in the past, hippie! Get your gun, Iraq is next!

J: You're really gone feeble and senile in your old age, Sam.

S: This is a time we must all band together as one. We must give up our individuality, perhaps even sacrifice a few liberties. We must snuff out dissent and march forward to end terrorism. Bin Laden's crafty and sinister and has a sick sense of humor. But we will find him!

J: Well, I think you have a better chance of finding Amelia Earhart, but that's just me. I suppose I should have better faith in my government.

S: Indeed. This cleansing of terrorism will surely make me feel better. I've been having some regrets about that whole American-Indian holocaust and that whole slavery thing. Of course, at the time it made sense.

J: Yeah, I'm sure it did.

Well, my fictional interview provided no solutions and now, because of Monday's events, I'm far too frightened to even board an airplane. I suppose I'll have to try to shed my current feelings of cynicism and doubt, and trade my airline tickets in for some cash. I'll put it all in the stock market on Kraf. That's what we're dropping to the Afghan refugees that are still alive. Then, I'll sell and spend my thousands on a trippy Day-Glo painted bus named Further, which I'll ride around the country with my friend Walter, experimenting with hard drugs, mourning Ken Kesey and searching for the American Dream.

Veteran's Day deserves respect and recognition

DEAR EDITOR:

SIU and Carbondale appear to be unaware of the importance of the date of Nov. 11. This is a date when many nations, not just the United States, pause to reflect on the deeds of those who gave their lives for their countries, arising from the end of the first World War.

The ceremony organized for the day began at 3:30 p.m. - WHY? Around the world, people stopped to remember at 11 a.m., the time when hostilities ended. Why couldn't this ceremony be set at the appropriate time?

There were a number of veterans present, but very little was done to honor them. Why were they not provided with a special area for sitting and taking part? Their moment of recognition lasted less than a minute - lest we forget, this day was set up to honor both those who died and those who served. We need to also remember that millions around the world gave their lives in both world wars, many of whom gave their lives to protect western freedom (including millions of Russians, whom we tend to forget because of the Cold War).

Also, the speech given by Representative David Phelps was far more a jingoistic call for action against modern terrorists than it was a commemoration of veterans. I have no problem with remembering the victims of the World Trade Center as casualties of war, but they are not the primary reason for Veterans' Day. Also, we should recall that citizens of many nations besides the United States died in that tragedy. Mention it, certainly, but also remember wars and battles where SIU students and graduates gave their lives, as well as citizens of Carbondale. Lastly, why was there no minute of silence for those who gave their lives in the service of their country? This is the least we should do each Veteran's Day.

Parking an issue for Thompson Point

Residents and Law School students desire more access

BEN BOTKIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN

A wish for close, convenient parking is at the root of a conflict between residents of Thompson Point and students of the Lesar Law School.

Efforts for Thompson Point residents to have closer parking in lots now occupied by Law School students are a concern for Valerie Climo, a member of the Traffic and Parking Committee.

Climo's most recent efforts were made at the Nov. 7 meeting of the Traffic and Parking Committee, where she made a failed motion to have all of Lot 63 given to Thompson Point residents for overnight parking. The second motion she made was to have 35 spaces from Lot 63 reserved for overnight Thompson Point parking but was again rejected by the committee. Although her motions were unsuccessful, Climo said she will continue to pursue the issue.

The conflict stems from a change made in January that switched Lot 63 from overnight parking to commuter parking for students at the Law School. The change also gave Thompson Point 54 spaces in Lot 23, which is on the corner of Oakland Avenue and Douglas Drive. This change resulted in a loss of 124 spaces for students in Thompson Point, who now have to park behind Greek Row in Lot 59, which is adjacent to Greenhouse Drive. Climo said she will meet with students who live on Greek Row for input, since students living in greek houses also park in Lot 59.

Thompson Point residents have also brought up safety concerns, because they have to walk from Lot 59 to their residence hall, a five to 10 minute walk. Climo, formerly a student resident assistant in Thompson Point, said although it is a short walk, female residents occasionally feel concerned.

"There has been more than one instance of a female student followed from Lot 59," she said.

Glenn Poshard, vice chancellor for Administration, said parking is a complicated issue because all drivers want to park close to their destination.

The Law School's students have mandatory attendance, something Poshard said is an important consideration.

"We all looked at this issue and determined this wasn't something that could be changed," he said.

Thomas Guernsey, dean of the School of Law, said Lot 63 was originally designated for the Law School before it changed to overnight parking for Thompson Point at the beginning of the 2000 fall semester. Guernsey said parking near the Law School is also important because of their evening events.

"It's not unusual to have 325 people come here in the evening," he said.

Poshard said the campus structure makes parking a difficult issue.

"We have a large, dispersed campus and buildings are not close together," he said.

Flight trainees selected

Six SIUC Air Force cadets to attend pilot training

JARRET O. HERZOG
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Ever since they were little boys, Aaron Gibbs, Daniel Wiesner and Rick Mitchell have been fascinated with airplanes and dreamed of flying, for them that dream may soon become a reality.

"Surprisingly, a lot of people have these dreams and they don't work out," said Mitchell, a senior in aviation management from Riverton.

Six out of the eight SIUC Air Force ROTC cadets who applied for pilot training have been selected to attend. Approximately 90 percent of those selected to be pilots make it through training, according to Capt. Mike Hills, assistant professor of aerospace studies.

The applicants who did not get chosen before graduating college still have a good chance of being pilots because they can reapply later in their careers, Hill said.

The pilot selection process consists of several criteria which future pilots must meet. Men applying must have less than 20 percent body fat and pass a flying class physical. Vision is also important. To be a pilot applicants can have 20/70 vision, but it must be correctable. Color vision is also mandatory for pilot duty, according to Hills.

The cadets' commander plays a large role in the selection process. Academics and aptitude test scores also determine who gets selected.

"It is a competitive process. That's why not everybody is picked up for it," Hills said. "They control their own destiny throughout the whole process."

According to Hills, the program is open to all majors and genders. He has seen cadets from non-aviation majors leave SIUC to become pilots.

Although no females applied for this year's pilot training, there have been women selected from SIUC in the past.

"When I was a freshman there was a woman that applied and she got it," said Paul Kelly, a future pilot trainee and senior in aviation management from Bartlett. "It really doesn't come down to sex, it comes down to numbers."

Kelly said following graduation most soon-to-be pilots will go on "casual status" before entering the year-long pilot training. Future flight students are placed in casual status to perform administrative duties until a seat is available in flight school. After completing pilot training they are obligated to fly in the military for 10 years.

Those who become pilots can fly anything from a fighter to a helicopter, Kelly said. The type of aircraft is determined by their performance in pilot training.

"If you're rated number one in your class you can pretty much pick which plane you want to fly," Kelly said. "A lot of people want to fly fighters because they're fast and have bombs."

Mitchell said he was selected for a different program than his colleagues. He will train with aspiring pilots from other countries in the Euro-NATO flight program. According to Mitchell, the competition is extreme and 35 are accepted out of about 300 applicants.

If the war on terrorism is still being fought after flight training is complete, the pilots will face the issue of fighting in the war. Mitchell said he would be ready and willing to fly missions over Afghanistan, if ordered to do so.

"Protecting the liberties of the country are the main goal of the military and that's what we have to do," Mitchell said. "None of us look forward to [war], you know we're not barbarians."

Wiesner also said he would carry out the necessary duties to serve his country, even if it meant flying into combat.

"If I have to drop bombs, I'll do it, but it's not something I think about everyday," he said.

Aaron Gibbs, a senior in administration of justice from Marion, said serving his country is important to him. He was inspired by his grandfather at an early age to serve his country. Gibbs' grandfather served in the Marine Corps during World War II.

Gibbs said he would feel patriotic if he has to fly into combat.

"If you're called to go fight for your country, you will go to it," Gibbs said.

Kelly will admit that pilot training will not be easy, but he is optimistic about his future experiences.

"It's going to be a great job," Kelly said. "It's going to be the best job in the world, I think."

Local programs encourage family reading time

BETH COLDWELL
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Reading to small children helps them communicate, listen and become closer to their families, and it has become a mission for two Carbondale women.

Mary Wendler and Pat Luebke have helped organize local campaigns to make sure parents know the importance of reading to their small children.

Wendler is the head of the Book in Every Home program, a campaign to collect preschool-age appropriate books to distribute among Head Start students.

Wendler said even though parents have busy lives, finding time to read to their children is essential.

"This is something I think will promote good family relationships," she said. "Reading fostered a lot of times in our family that were very special."

Wendler said that although she has only lived in the Carbondale area for three months, she already senses generosity from the people who live here.

"I do believe this is a very giving community," she said.

The Book in Every Home campaign collected around 2,600 books last year, and Wendler said she hopes to exceed that donation this year. Several SIUC locations are accepting books, including the chancellor's office in the Northwest Annex, Student Health Service, the Student Development Office and Morris Library.

Luebke, Carbondale Public Library's children's librarian, agreed that reading to small children is important for families.

"Just the sound of a voice and rhythms of the language will help the child recognize words," she said. "Spending that time with them makes them more relaxed."

The Carbondale Public Library hosts family reading night every Thursday at 6 p.m. and has also started a campaign with Southern Illinois

Healthcare to give a book to the parents of every newborn baby. She suggests buying simple books to read to babies, toddlers and preschool-age children, with pictures on each page, rhymes and repeated phrases.

According to Luebke, parents should read to children at least 20 minutes every day from the day they are born. She said parents should be persistent about reading, even if the children seem disinterested.

"There are definite benefits to reading to a child even as young as a baby," Luebke said.

materials we need to get the jobs done," she said.

During the two day event, the volunteers worked not only with the migrant housing but also at the Su Casa Headstart. The Headstart is part of the migrant camp complex along with the Shawnee Health Clinic. Headstart is a government program that gives low cost or free day care for individuals with children that are not old enough to go to school.

The volunteer day fell on Make a Difference Day, a yearly event organized by The Points of Light Foundation. Make a Difference Day is a nationwide event that encourages people to volunteer in their communities.

The event was organized by a committee of social work students after the events of Sept. 11. The committee is part of the Social Work Student Alliance. Dana Sample, a junior in social work from Benton, was the chair of the committee.

"We wanted to go to New York but they said there were enough volunteers, so we decided to look closer to home," Sample said.

The committee decided on the migrant camp after people brought in suggestions. Sample said several students from the social welfare and social institutions class had volunteered at the camp before but never in a group.

"The camp just felt like a good fit for what we were wanting to do," Sample said.

The 19 people who took part in the event worked at various jobs throughout the two days. Painting was completed in the Su Casa daycare and in an apartment that will be used during the winter by a family that will stay.

Speak said the family will stay in the camp during winter to make sure the grounds are not vandalized.

The groups also cleaned out an old flower bed behind one of the Headstart buildings. The flower bed will be used by the Headstart students next year to plant vegetables.

The days were not just filled with work. Many of the volunteers took time out to stop and play with the children of workers that were still staying in the camps. Roni Steber, a senior in social work from Olney, was one of the volunteers that took part in the event.

"Not only did it give me a chance to volunteer for a good cause, but it gave me a chance to see how other people live and the lives they led," Steber said.

Steber said the best part of the event was getting to interact with the children. She said during the days of work two brothers, Alex and Victor, helped her paint and move brush.

"It was a great learning experience for me and them," Steber said. "I had the chance to learn firsthand about their life's culture."

Elaine Jurkowski, assistant professor in social work, is the adviser for the Social Work Student Alliance and helped to organize the event. She said the event was successful and other events will continue in the future.

"Students wanted to help rebuild after what happened in New York," Jurkowski said. "This event gave them a chance to see that there is rebuilding to be done here."

She said one of the most beneficial aspects that came from the event was the connections that the students made with the children.

"One of the easiest ways to reach a population is by working with the children," Jurkowski said. "The next day a representative from the camp came by the office and dropped off a poster that had the hands of all the children and a thank you note."

She said the children's gratitude had a powerful impact on the volunteers and helped them to understand how important the project was to the children.

The group is continuing to look into places they could volunteer. Sample said there is a church camp that is seeking volunteers and the group is looking into the opportunity.

"With everything that has happened, people want to be involved, and it is important that we take time to do our part to help others," Sample said.

Carbondale Community High School Superintendent Steve Sabens said that any efforts to increase the number and quality of teachers entering the system will help.

The National Education Association has predicted that 2.4 million teachers will be needed in the next 11 years because of a large number of teacher retirement and increased student enrollment. The shortages will be concentrated in the areas of math, science, computer science, English as a second language and foreign language.

The program is expected to help fill shortages in these areas by allowing students who have already majoring in these areas to receive an education degree.

"I think anything that would provide alternative routes to certification would be good for education," Sabens said.

Also, the new money will go to the Hands Across America program, which will allow students access to the Library of Congress' electronic archives.

This program will allow students to access official government documents such as the Bill of Rights and "Gettysburg Address."

The program may eventually expand to area schools, and there may be additional training needed to jump-start the program, Hillkirk said.

position will be good for SIUC's enrollment.

"The primary concern is recruitment and retention," Wendler said. "We need to continue to reach out to good high schools."

While there have always been those who deal with recruitment and retention, Wendler said having a separate position that specializes in it will ensure enrollment will get its proper attention.

"This is going to help focus the energy," Wendler said.

De Luca, who is originally from Morristown, N.J., said she is excited about possibly contributing to SIUC. She graduated from the University of Arizona with a doctorate in higher education and student service. After graduation, she received the job of associate director of admissions and new student enrollment and has served University of Arizona from that position for the past five years.

De Luca said she has ideas for the position but is not comfortable commenting on them until she knows for sure if she got the job. But after visiting the campus for the interviews, De Luca said she would be content on calling Carbondale home.

"I thought it was beautiful — great students and a great staff," De Luca said.

DAVID SWANSON - PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

Rockway Beach reels as tragedy strikes yet again

CECILIA KANG, AMIE PARNES & JESSIE MANGALIMAN
KNIGHT RIDDER NEWSPAPERS

NEW YORK (KRT) - The people of Rockway Beach had barely finished burying their dead from Sept. 11 when tragedy struck again Monday.

Their seaside community was jarred by the sound of a crashing jetliner, the smell of burning jet fuel, the site of yet another plume of smoke clouding a clear day.

To some, it appeared to signal another terrorist attack, this time on the Rockaway peninsula that lost as many as 70 people in the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center. To others, even the later speculation that the crash was a tragic accident and not murder offered little solace.

"I don't think I accepted the World Trade Center yet and now this," said Gail Allen, 54, who lives a block from the crash site. "It's hard to think that there are going to be more tears shed in this community," added Allen, whose son was one of the firefighters killed when the trade center towers collapsed.

"I know that I have seen the faces of those gone," said Allen, referring to the half dozen or more missing residents who lived in houses hit by the crashing plane or destroyed in the inferno that followed. "I've probably seen them many times."

Densely populated, Rockaway is a three-block wide stretch of single-family homes and small apartment buildings nestled on a strip of land between the Atlantic Ocean and Jamaica Bay. Long home to the sons and daughters of Irish, Italian and Jewish immigrants, it is considered a safe enclave by many of the city's firefighters and police who raise their families there and look out for one another.

"My first reaction was God, they did it again," said Deirdre Buckley, 39, a homemaker who lives at Beach 129th Street and Newport Avenue, one block away from where one of the engines landed, and two blocks from the bulk of the debris.

Buckley was home on the fourth floor of her apartment building when she heard the sound of a plane engine, a familiar sound so close to Kennedy airport. Her 7-year-old son Danny looked out the window. "I was drawing a picture of the World Trade Center, then I heard a loud kaboom. Then I saw the plane spinning and then it broke," Danny said, using his hands to describe the plane rotating as it went nose down.

Michael and Synnove Jefford and their two children were sitting in their living room enjoying their 6-year-old son's day off from school when they heard the boom and felt their two-story house on Beach 124th Street shake.

"It felt like the wind was sucked out of the room," said Synnove Jefford. "I thought it was terrorism straight away," said Michael Jefford.

Michael ran outside, saw big pieces of metal falling from the sky, billowing black smoke and screaming neighbors. He ran back in and ushered his family into the basement.

There, they heard a warning for residents to leave the area because jet fuel that had spilled into residential sewers. They hopped into the family car but found they could not escape the Rockaway Peninsula; the local Marine Park bridge was closed. After driving around in circles, they were able to get back to their home by 11:30 a.m.

Transit Authority worker Steve Conza, 35, was standing in the bedroom sorting laundry when he heard a loud noise and looked out the window. "I saw a huge piece of something making an arc in the sky," he said. "I just ducked. Under the bed. There was nothing else to do. I thought I was dead."

Conza lives next door to 414 Beach 128th Street, where one of the engines landed in the back yard, destroying a kitchen and toppling a boat in the garage.

Jeff Caspi witnessed both courage and fear in the crash's aftermath.

Running several blocks to check on his mother-in-law, Jeff Caspi saw firefighters rushing out of their homes, ready to work to save their own neighborhood. "They had their gear on and they were coming from all directions," he said.

Returning home, he found his 9-year-old son, Matthew, crying. "Dad," the boy said, "they're coming to get us again."

Lee Ielpi, a retired New York firefighter from Great Neck who lost a son in the World Trade Center attack, rushed to the scene after hearing of the crash to volunteer to help.

"We are a resilient group of men. This is what we've been trained for. We need to keep on fighting. My oldest son, Jonathan, is still lying at the World Trade Center," he said before pointing to the crash site. "And my youngest son, Brendan, is in there fighting."

Vincent Plover, a firefighter with Ladder 85 in Long Island, was finishing his duty when he heard that a plane had crashed.

"I thought I needed to be there, just like I thought I needed to be at the Trade Center," said Plover, whose bright blue eyes stood out from his soot-stained face. Plover had helped with the rescue effort at the World Trade Center for 18 hours on Sept. 11th.

When Plover arrived at the crash site in Rockaway Beach before 10 a.m., he saw plane parts in flames, smoke, burning houses and 40 to 50 charred bodies. "It was devastation. There wasn't much left of the plane," he said. "I thought it was another act of war upon our country."

Last week residents of the Rockaways raised enough money to build a memorial for their community's World Trade Center victims. The week before that, they raised $62,000 for the victims' families.

Said Ellen O'Toole, a worker at nearby Peninsula General Hospital: "We're one big family down here."

Kang and Mangaliman, of the San Jose Mercury News, reported from Rockaway Beach, as did Parnes of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Joe Gambardella and Monica Yant of the Philadelphia Inquirer and Maureen Fan of the San Jose Mercury News contributed to this story. Steven Thomas and Lenny Savino reported from Washington.

Sports Trivia Bowl set for Nov. 28-29

LIZ GUARD
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The Alumni Lounge, tucked away in an upstairs corner of the Recreation Center, usually doesn't see much action. But on Nov. 28 and 29, it will be stuffed with sports enthusiasts competing in the Sports Trivia Bowl.

The Office of Intramural-Recreational Sports has been home to the Sports Trivia Bowl for about the past 15 years for sports nuts on campus.

Throughout each semester, the staff at the Recreation Center puts on several sporting events, ranging from volleyball matches to a home run derby.

But Ray Thompkins, a graduate assistant in intramural-recreational sports, said the Sports Trivia Bowl is an event that lets students concentrate on the mental rather than competitive aspect of sports.

"It's something different from just doing the regular sport activities, the physical part," Thompkins said. "It's just the mental part in terms of sport knowledge and trivia."

Thompkins said the event gives students something to do, even if they are not top-notch athletes.

"It's definitely something different," Thompkins said. "You might have individuals that are not really that athletic and they have a hard time competing, and this is something where you can use your mind."

Herman Williams, assistant director of Intramural-Recreational

Sports, said the event usually elicits a strong response. Williams said the competition can become fierce when there are so many teams battling out sports trivia questions.

"One year it was so tense up in there we had to call security," Williams said.

The Trivia Bowl is made up of teams containing up to four people each. Williams said participation in the event has picked up some and in the past few years there have been upwards of 20 teams.

Participants are asked a wide range of questions about the world of sports. The questions asked deal with mainstream as well as unconventional sports, which usually give players trouble. The questions can come from the realms of college, professional and Olympic sports.

The Bowl is set up much like a combination of several popular game shows. Teams are placed at tables, each equipped with a buzzer. After the question is asked, players have five seconds to buzz in. The player who rings in to answer has to answer the question without help from teammates.

Williams said the trivia event lets students express their competitive edge while using their mind.

"Everybody loves to pick and see how much they know," Williams said. "There are four members on a team and you try to get all that knowledge and thinking you can be the quickest and the fastest to press that buzzer."

If a toss-up question is answered correctly, a bonus question is offered. The team may consult to answer the bonus question and any member can answer.

Players are not penalized for missing a question. But if a toss-up question is answered incorrectly, it can be stolen by an opposing team.

The game consists of three rounds. Round one lasts 10 minutes with toss-ups worth 10 points and bonus questions worth five. Round two also lasts 10 minutes, but toss-ups are worth 20 points with bonus questions valued at 10 points. Round three is also known as the lightning round, which lasts five minutes. Questions are worth 20 points and there are no bonus questions.

The game sounds serious, but there are no real stakes in the Sports Trivia Bowl. Thompkins said the game is just for a little good, clean fun among fellow sports fanatics.

"[The winner gets] the satisfaction of knowing they know all the information about sports, and we also give the winners T-shirts," Thompkins said. "It's just for fun and bragging rights."

Reporter Liz Guard can be reached at elizabethguard@aol.com

"It's a struggle ... but at the same time, it's so exciting because they're going to be that much further ahead and they're not going to be rookies."

Matt Limegrover
SIU offensive coordinator

"We will take the biggest guys that we can take that can run," Claeys said.

Tight spot: The Salukis find themselves in something of a pickle at the quarterback situation entering this week's game against Western Kentucky. SIU has been rotating between Kevin Kobe and Macei Williams at the quarterback slot for the past several weeks, but Williams may be unable to play this week due to a strained quadricep.

That means Kobe may be the lone soldier at quarterback, which would be acceptable provided he can stay healthy.

If Williams is unavailable and Kobe sustains an injury against the Hilltoppers, the Salukis will be in a difficult spot.

With only two games remaining in the season, the SIU coaching staff is firmly intent on maintaining the redshirt statuses of promising freshmen quarterbacks Joel Samburky and Stanley Bryant. In short, the coaching staff will be praying for Kobe's health if Williams isn't able to suit up.

Although the coaching staff is committed to allowing Samburky to conserve a season of eligibility this year, he has traveled with the team all season and Limegrover said he isn't too far from being able to perform in game conditions.

"It's a tremendous advantage now if he happens to be the starter in game one or game two next year that when we go on the road, he knows the routine and he knows the schedule," Limegrover said. "He has done a great job himself of locking in and on a weekly basis thinking of himself as the third quarterback."

That hurts: SIU's list of injured players continues to grow as the season nears its conclusion. Ten Salukis are listed on this week's injury report as either out of action or uncertain to play in Saturday's game, and several of which are key cogs in the Saluki arsenal.

SIU's offensive line is one of the hardest hit areas of the team. Three one-time starters — Matt Anderson, Mike Fritzier and Brice Schaffer — are out of action with injuries, which has thrust true freshmen Loren Flaherty, Andrew Wynn and Matt Miller into action.

"It's a struggle because those guys make mistakes, and they make quite a few," Limegrover said. "It does alter the decisions you make, but at the same time, it's so exciting because they're going to be that much further ahead and they're not going to be rookies when you start out next year."

Uphill battle: Nothing has come easy for the SIU football team this season, and that will be the case and then some this Saturday.

The Salukis (1-8, 1-5) are traveling to Western Kentucky to face a team that is stingy from a 24-23 loss to Northern Iowa last week in a game that had Gateway Conference title implications.

The Hilltoppers are 7-3 on the season, and as usual, boast solid team speed and a dangerous option attack on offense that will present a major challenge to SIU's injury-ravaged defense.

"Somehow we've got to do things where we're very disciplined and take care of our assignments, but be aggressive with them also," Claeys said.

Koutsos is grand: SIU running back Tom Koutsos rushed for 165 yards Saturday against SMS, giving him 1,043 yards on the season. That marks the third straight season Koutsos has hit the 1,000-yard mark.

Also, Koutsos' next 100-yard game will allow him to set another Saluki rushing mark, as he'll pass Karlton Carpenter for most career 100-yard rushing games with 17.

The thump from the resulting fall led to the quietest moment I have ever heard at SIU Arena, as everyone feared the worst for Southern Illinois' favorite son.

However, as he has done several times before, Williams took a few moments to catch his breath and then popped right back up and was ready to go.

Williams has been a target since he arrived on SIU's campus, with one of his most memorable run-ins being his freshman year with former University of Tennessee star Tony Harris. SIU was playing Tennessee in the Puerto Rico Holiday Classic when Williams set a screen on Harris. Harris took it personally and threw Williams to the ground and received a technical foul for it.

Despite Williams being only a freshman and Harris being an All-American candidate, Williams didn't back off and just went right back to playing hard, as he always does.

That is when SIU knew Williams wasn't just another pretty boy, but rather, one hell of a hard-nosed player. And he's proved it every game since.

Seniors didn't get their way

Saturday's 25-24 loss to Southwest Missouri State marked the final time the seniors on the SIU football team would ever have the chance to play in front of the home fans at McAndrew Stadium.

And just like what happened on Saturday, it's safe to say things didn't go the way they planned when they first set foot on SIU's campus four years ago.

Seniors Bart Scott, Andre King, Bryan Archibald, Mark Shasteen, Chad Graefen and several others have been a key part of the team through the difficult Jan Quarless years as well as this, the inaugural season of the Jerry Kill era.

They've been through good times such as starting the 1999 season with three straight wins, as well as a come-from-behind 21-20 upset of No. 2 Youngstown State University on the road last year.

But they've been through even more difficult times, such as losing five straight games in 1999 after their 3-0 start, never finding a way to beat either Western Illinois or Indiana State and, worst of all, having to endure the death of teammate Charles Teague in a car accident in 1999.

The SIU defensive line prepares to go head-to-head with the Southeast Missouri State offensive line earlier this year. Larger opponents might be the cause of recent injuries on the Saluki defense and late touchdowns due to exhaustion.

Salukis in for second-half trouble

"What the hell can I do to stop this?" That was the prevalent thought swirling through the mind of SIU defensive coordinator Tracy Clays as Southwest Missouri State rumbled down the field against the Salukis in its decisive scoring drive to cap off Saturday's 25-24 win over the Salukis.

Clays had plenty of reason for despair. Southwest used a punishing ground attack to methodically move the ball downfield before Demetrius Smith finished the Salukis off with a 1-yard touchdown plunge with just 11 seconds in the game.

The Salukis have had a horrible time containing other teams late in games, especially on the ground, largely because SIU becomes exhausted as games roll on by opponents who are generally bigger and stronger. That makes for some pretty exasperating moments on the sidelines for coaches like Clays. SIU loaded up on the line of scrimmage against the Bears anticipating the run but still couldn't prevent Southwest from racking up chunk after chunk of substantial yardage.

"That's really the worst nightmare that I always have is when you can't get a team stopped," Clays said. "If anybody's ever had that feeling, that's the worst feeling in the world."

Clays, who along with offensive coordinator Matt Limegrover substituted for recovering head coach Jerry Kill at Monday's weekly news conference, said that although the SIU coaching staff will continue to try and bolster the Salukis' team speed in future recruiting classes, the season has hammered home the importance of also finding players with decent size.

Kill likely to be released from hospital soon

Football coach could be back with team today after suffering seizure Saturday after Saluki loss to SMS

SIU football coach Jerry Kill talks to reporters after the Salukis' loss to Southeast Missouri State University earlier this season.

SIU football head coach Jerry Kill remained hospitalized at Memorial Hospital of Carbondale for the third consecutive night Monday in the aftermath of a seizure, though his release could come as soon as today.

SIU defensive coordinator Tracy Clays confirmed Monday that a seizure was the cause of Kill's Saturday evening hospitalization. He suffered the seizure near his office about two hours after Saturday's Saluki loss to Southwest Missouri State.

Although early on Monday Kill was expected to be released later in the day, it was decided that Kill would be best served to stay another night so doctors could better regulate his medicine.

"They're trying to find the right mixture to allow him to be as active as possible without having a lot of side effects," Saluki offensive coordinator Matt Limegrover said on Monday evening.

Limegrover said although Kill is anxious to move on from the incident, he recognizes the importance of not rushing the healing process.

"He's frustrated, as any of us would be, but the bigger picture is that he wants to get this cleared up rather than having it hang around longer than it needs to," Limegrover said.

Earlier in the day, Clays indicated the tests that have been done on Kill since Saturday have been reassuring.

"Nothing showed up bad on them, so everything looks good so far and we expected it all to look good so far," Clays said. "They're trying to get his medication regulated, and he'll be fine."

Kill will likely be released from the hospital today and ease into his work schedule. He'll become more involved with the day-to-day operations of the team as he gains strength, and should be able to accompany the team to its game at Western Kentucky on Saturday.

"His No. 1 concern will be the kids — it always has been from the time it happened to every time I've talked to him," Clays said. "He knows as a staff we'll be fine."

Kill endured a frightening seizure last year when he was coaching at Emporia State, but has been assured by specialists that continuing to coach does not put him at serious health risk.

Clays added that Kill remains in his usual jovial spirits despite the alarming weekend episode.

"I visited with him [Sunday] night and he was eating a double cheeseburger, having some fries and a small blizzard, so hell, he's doing all right," Clays said.
