Women learn self-defense because of recent sexual assaults in Carbondale

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

When Renee DiCicco heard about the recent reports of sexual assaults and attempted assaults in the area, she decided take her own advice and learn self-defense techniques.

"I heard all of those reports," she said. "It's kind of freaky. I know learning a couple of moves will help me be better off."

An alleged sexual assault was reported to police on Sept. 28, and a woman reported she was attacked in her basement on Oct. 2. Another woman reported an alleged attempted sexual assault on Oct. 1.

DiCicco, a sophomore in zoology from Chicago, had the same opinion as many of the 40 women who were packed in a Recreation Center room Monday night for the introductory session of women's self-defense.

The class is one of the programs offered in conjunction with Women's Safety Week.

Debbie Morrow, a secretary at SIUC's Women's Services and one of the instructors at the event, said the high attendance at the workshop could be attributed to increased awareness concerning recent reports.

At the class, women of all ages and races seem to be fighting off the passive, victim view.

The first few exercises had participants practice identification techniques. The instructors asked everyone to remember characteristics like clothes, but to also look past the obvious and remember dialects,

Lack of funding adds grid to list of SIUC repairs

By Dylan Fenley
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Parts of the SIUC campus may have to close if another power outage strikes before state legislators approve funding to repair the campus power grid, SIUC President Ted Sanders says.

The mounting problems with the power grid were part of a long list of neglected maintenance problems that SIUC officials have been unable to repair for two years because of a lack of state funding.

State legislators and government officials were on campus Tuesday to discuss funding for $130 million in maintenance projects on the SIUC campus.

The Illinois General Assembly must approve money for maintenance projects on university campuses in the state. No maintenance funding has been approved by the legislature for two years, and several areas of SIUC's infrastructure are badly in need of repair.

Allan Haake, SIUC Physical Plant supervising architect engineer, identified several pressing maintenance problems at SIUC:

- Five main electrical feeders on campus, which are 30 to 40 years old, have become seriously damaged by water. There have been three power failures in the past few months, the latest of which caused a 12-hour power outage in the residence halls on the east side of campus on Sept. 19.
- The 26-year-old pedestrian overpass connecting the main campus with Brush Towers has become damaged by salt and water, and large chunks of concrete are dropping from the overpass onto Route 51 and the railroad tracks.
- Cancer-causing asbestos insulation used in Morris Library, mainly on the first floor and in the basement, needs to be removed.
- Heating and cooling units in Famer Hall were designed for use in a low humidity environment. Because of this, the units have insufficient drainage systems and often overflow onto the floors, damaging carpets, floors and ceilings.
- Much of the 2 million square feet of roofing on SIUC buildings is in Student denied re-admission

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC Law School student whose admission was rescinded earlier this semester was denied re-admission into the school in Jackson County Court Tuesday.

Kristopher K. Kilgore, a former second-year law student from Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif., filed a lawsuit against SIUC and the SIUC School of Law earlier this semester when his law school application was rescinded Aug. 26 by Thomas Guernsey, dean of the Law School.

Kilgore's admission was rescinded for not disclosing all information on questions 14 and 15 on his admission application about previous convictions and an alleged warrant for his arrest.

Kilgore did reveal two previous driving under the influence convictions in 1984 and 1989 on his application. He had listed a 1991 DUI on his application as occurring in 1989.

Jackson County Judge Kimberly L. Dahlen presided over the hearing that was continued from Sept. 30.

Dahlen said she denied the injunction because she said Kilgore's right to due process was not violated. Guernsey had the authority to withdraw Kilgore's application, and Kilgore should have disclosed a prior reckless

Hillary Clinton to make campaign stop at school

First lady Hillary Clinton will visit Mt. Vernon High School at 9:50 a.m. today to address students and faculty.

The visit is part of a campaign swing through the Midwest this week that includes stops at local high schools and universities in Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin.

The first lady's visit to Mt. Vernon will be her second trip through the area in six weeks. She is expected to address faculty, staff and about 1,500 students at the high school, located at 320 S. 7th St.

She, along with President Bill Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and wife Tipper, visited Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Cairo, Ill., on Aug. 30.

Titillating Princess Di video exposed as hoax

LONDON—The videotape of Princess Diana's semi-nude romp with her lover that titillated tabloid readers and TV viewers all day Tuesday turned out Tuesday night to be a fake.

The Sun, the tabloid that obtained the tape, reported it with great fanfare and distributed it to television, admitted that it had been the victim of "one of the most elaborate hoaxes of the decade."

The supposedly secretly recorded videotape of Diana cavorting with lover James Hewitt five years ago was excerpted in still photos by the Sun in the morning and made its television debut Tuesday, all day.

It showed, as it happened, a Diana look-alike or perhaps a composite Diana (it isn't clear yet how the hoax was perpetrated) doing a little striptease, down to what was being politely described as her "sports" underwear. It purportedly showed her riding instructor getting down on the floor and pretending to be a horse, with Diana taking a little ride on his back.

Art for kids' sake...

Festival exposes kids to music, museum

By Tracy Taylor
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Many elementary school children have never been to a ballet, have never heard a live orchestra and have never been to a museum.

This week the SIUC's Arts Education Festival is giving them the opportunity to experience them all at once.

Colorfully dressed belly dancers, the melody of trumpets and flutes, bright face masks and the sights and sounds of excited children invaded SIUC Tuesday as part of the 11th annual Arts Education Festival.

More than 2,500 elementary school children from all over Southern Illinois packed into buses and came to campus to learn more about arts ranging from ballet to mask-making.

Pansy Jones, coordinator of the arts festival, said its purpose is to acquaint elementary school children with visual and performing arts.

"Hopefully, this festival will instill in them a love and appreciation for the arts," she said.

Jones said the festival was important for school children who otherwise would not be exposed to arts.

"This is important because in elementary schools when budgets are cut, the first place to get cut is the arts," she said. "For some children, this is the only exposure to art they get in elementary school."

The festival has grown so large in the past few years that some schools had to be turned away, Jones said.

"I've been working with this festival for nine years, and we've gone from 500 school children to more than 5,000," she said. "For the past two years we have booked every facility on campus, and we are filled to capacity."

Jones said this year they had to turn away about 1,700 children.

Jones said the different activities in the arts festival are suited for each grade level.

"We have classes here from first through fifth grade, and there are different activities that are geared to each particular age group," she said.

"For instance, we have stories for first- to third graders and stories for fourth- and fifth graders. We even do stories in sign language."

The festival is sponsored by SIUC, the College of Liberal Arts, the Office of the Chancellor and Southern Illinois Cultural Alliance.

The festival continues today at various campus locations.

HIV testing coming to campus soon

By Colleen Heraty
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students will be able to receive HIV testing on demand at Student Health Services by the end of next month, officials say.

Currently, the service does HIV testing only for high risk cases. Students are classified as high risk if they or their partners are known to be infected, if they have syphilis or tuberculosis, if they have been sexually assaulted or if they have exchanged sex for drugs or money.

Rollie Perkins, medical chief of staff at Student Health Services, said HIV testing will be available on demand once professionals involved have finished proper training and enough funds have been allocated.

The testing will be confidential, but not anonymous, Perkins said.

Anonymous testing means the student's name is not known. With confidential testing, the student's test results go on his or her record, but the information cannot be released without the student's permission, he said.

"We have done testing in the past, but we are making it more easily available for students to come in and get tested," Perkins said.

The Graduate and Professional Student Council's AIDS Task Force voted in February 1995 for a $3 student fee increase that would allow testing to become more available for the students.

Carin Musak, head of the AIDS task force, said the testing has opened up to a much larger percent of the population in the past year.

Third party politics deserves voice in upcoming elections

THE ELECTION IS COMING UP FAST, AND everyone will soon be faced with the decision of who to vote for. Unfortunately, this country has been programmed into thinking that the only vote that can be cast is either for a Republican or Democrat. The idea of voting for any other party has come to be looked upon as odd. Many people, who for some reason or another, decide to vote for another party are often the recipient of the phrase, "Why are you wasting your vote?"

Right now, there is a third party created by Ross Perot, that has lured the vote of many people. Now this is not to support or denounce Perot, but the third party should be looked at with the same seriousness as the Republican or Democratic parties. Candidate aside, it is a legitimate party, and yet America still does not acknowledge it as serious as the other two. Why?

Recently, Perot was left out of the presidential debates. While some feel this was a good idea, others say that it was unfair to voters because all sides should be heard from before an election. This stance can be argued either way, especially because many think Perot has absolutely no chance of winning the election, and had absolutely no business being at the debate.

Another worry, according to a poll by CNN, was that, without bringing up actions of the past, Perot would turn the debates into something of a circus. No matter which point a person takes, the idea of leaving out a candidate from a debate is an interesting one from an election standpoint.

In order to address this problem, the idea of the third party must first be discussed. Whose responsibility is it to generate support for a third party candidate? Should it be up to the candidate themselves? Or is it the responsibility of the media and supporters of the party? Up until now, the third party has been genuinely ignored.

THERE ARE THOSE THIRD PARTY SUPPORTERS who believe votes are not wasted because they are voting for the best candidate in their opinion. Wasted votes are only wasted if a person chooses a candidate simply because they believe they have no one else to vote for.

But, for the first time in a long while, many consider the third party to be a viable candidate for the presidency. Or at least, the third party candidate has a better chance of winning than ever before by giving voters a genuine alternative to the traditional Republican/Democrat ticket.

Third party candidates have a long way to go before they are put on the same level as other presidential nominees, but at least it is a start. And while they will continue to be viewed as the underdog for a long time, it is up to the people who vote to give them attention. People often complain that there are no good choices with Republicans and Democrats. A third party is a good idea simply because it puts pressure on the other candidates to take a harder stance on some of the more controversial issues. And while respect is hard to come by, people should look at other parties as a possible alternative to traditional voting.

In the past, presidential nominees had a 50-50 chance of winning, and although the third party is still not as respected as it should be, the election may not be as 50-50 as it used to be. Only the voters can reform the system from the way it stands. And if for lack of anything better, the third party could be used as a powerful tool by the voters and force the other candidates to reevaluate what they are doing. If done correctly, it could make the Republicans and Democrats nominees look more into what it takes to be a president and not so much on what it takes to get to that position.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Night Transit needs vehicles

This letter concerns the operation of the Women's Night Safety Transit. I have been employed as a driver/dispatcher at Night Transit for four years. This semester, Night Transit has had more problems than I could ever remember from previous years. Before the Saluki Express was implemented in Carbondale, Night Transit's operation consisted of one van for disabled students, two cars and one on-campus van.

After the bus service began, Night Transit no longer ran the campus van service. This caused more women to use the car service. However, some time ago, the number of cars we use was reduced to one. My point is this: myself, as well as other Night Transit dispatchers/drivers are not to blame for the unreliability of Night Transit. We have one car to cover the entire area within the city limits.

What do you think happens when four people call the Student Center going to Malibu Village, Brookside Manor, Carbondale Mobile Homes and Sunset Drive? When the driver picks these riders up, the car is full and it will take at least 30 minutes to drop all of the riders off. This leaves the next caller waiting for 30 minutes. What can we do?

I understand that waiting 25 to 35 minutes or more is very frustrating and I agree 100 percent that it is ridiculous. However, we have no control over the number of vehicles, number of passengers, their destinations or the traffic situation in the city.

The bottom line is that ridership is up this semester and Night Transit cannot meet the needs of all travelers with one vehicle. If you want to receive the quality service you are paying for, complaining to the dispatcher or driver will not help.

I urge all the frequent riders who have been left waiting somewhere to speak out to the people with power and maybe something will be done.

Forcing religion on others pointless

Lately, I have found the ignorance in our society and even this publication quite humorous. Those that are quite uninformed about a particular subject, whether it be religion, homosexuality or what have you, always seem to elaborate and have a strong opinion on it.

Some people try to expel their eschewed viewpoints on to us as a general public. They tell us that their way of thinking and living is the "right" way, and all who do not follow will be damned to some eternal punishment. What is funny is I am at a loss when it seems that someone died and made them God.

What makes them think that they are the Almighty Enlightened and can then dictate what we should or should not do and how we should and should not live our lives? The humor, I find, is in their sadness and their utter ignorant and discombobulated way of thinking.

This country was created for people to practice their own beliefs, whether it be religious, political or otherwise. This country supposedly allows for people to live their lives how they deem fit, provided it is not harmful to others.

The problem is that people find anything against their own personal beliefs is wrong and claim that those opposing beliefs are harmful to our society. Our country has seemed to migrate towards the same way of thinking that caused this country to form. People still dictate what is correct, what is the right way of living, what you should believe, etc.

Some people are wasting too much energy on committing their lives to a campaign that stands against other people's lifestyles and beliefs. Not only is that harmful, but it also spreads hate and ignorance. This is what will truly cause the downfall of our American society. These people who are grossly misinformed need to educate themselves to those conflicting beliefs or lifestyles to truly learn what they are all about — for uninformed, ignorant people are truly humorous and disgusting.

MTV not life: Romance difficult

If only life were an MTV game show.

I love the idea of dating — romantic walks along some antiperspirant-commercial-inspired beach, workspaces adorned with foliage worthy of Merlin Olson, theater tickets charged on someone else's plastic — what could be more emotionally and economically advantageous than a sweet, supportive boyfriend who doesn't mind spoiling his better half?

Unfortunately, I'm not cut out for romance.

I'm a busy woman. I don't have time to sit by the phone making an emotional wreck of myself in the desperate hope that Mr. Right will call.

I don't have time to waste test driving Mr. Mediocre. Mr. Arrogant and Mr. Limbaugh on some pseudo-Arthurian quest for Mr. Wonderful.

And I certainly don't have time to waste feeling inadequate every time another daydream falls through.

All I ever wanted in life was to command the absolute respect and reverence of my ideal man without having to go through the hassle of establishing a relationship.

Is it too much to ask for my love life to be something akin to an episode of "Singed Out," complete with clapping and cheering and an obnoxious blonde making catty remarks about the losers I've encountered?

After "singling out" several dorks and a handful of egomaniacs recently, I thought I'd found a worthy candidate.

and capable of speaking in complete sentences, this delightful creature also shared my political views and understood the value of a decent cappuccino.

After seven pointless excursions to his workplace, three (admittedly sad) attempts at flirting with him and 26 pep talks from my best friend, I finally worked up the nerve to ask him out.

Wonder of wonders, he said yes. We downed a couple of steaming mugs of liquid caffeine, and my imagination was off and running.

Two canceled dates and an unreturned phone call later, our worthy hero's status dropped from "man whose future hypothetical children Emily might consider bearing if she weren't planning to have herself spayed the minute she hears her biological clock start ticking" (a rare honor) to "column fodder" (a rather dubious 15 minutes of fame).

Were his reasons for canceling legitimate? Maybe.

Could his roommate have forgotten to give him my message? Possibly.

Was I willing to give him the benefit of the doubt? Not an ice cube's chance in Dante's blazing inferno.

It's not that he wasn't worth it; it's just that I'm too proud to admit defeat. At the first sign of disaster, I had to write him off as an idiot with no taste in women. Otherwise, there would have been room for self-doubt to creep in.

To establish relationships, people have to take chances. They have to risk rejection. They have to gamble their pride on a shot at happiness.

I've already made plans to enter my tremendously overinflated ego as a float in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade; I can't afford for a guy to go sticking pins in it now.

It seems I was "singled out." No giant step forward for me; it's my turn to go dancing off the stage. But that's okay. I got some lovely parting gifts, including this topic for a last-minute column. Maybe I can come back next week and be part of the studio audience.

In the meantime, I must go. I just saw a man who looks like a young Sean Connery stroll past the news room. If I hurry, I can give him my phone number before Jennie McCarthy beats me to it.

2 CENTS WORTH Players' dances overboard

—by alan schnepl

Back in the early '80s when the Dallas Cowboys were called "America's Team," they had a puny, showboating wide receiver named Butch Johnson.

Johnson became quite famous for his trademark touchdown dance, "the California quake." Whenever little Butch scored, he would do the moonwalk for a few steps (remember, this was the '80s), spike the ball and drop to his knees "shooting" someone or something using his hands as pistols.

It was truly idiotic. Real football aficionados of the era who weren't Cowboy fans found "the California quake" to be dumb and wimpy. They thought Butch Johnson assumed the role of a cheerleader every time he scored.

Fifteen or so years later, the player/cheerleader problem has escalated to proportions that never would have been imagined in Johnson's time. NFL players celebrate so much these days that you'd think they were being paid on commission each time they congratulate themselves. Players now start acting all fired up even on the most routine plays.

The timing of some celebrations is even more ludicrous. Several times this season, I've seen a guy return a kickoff a good 35 yards before being laid into by someone on the kickoff team who promptly dances around and pumps his fists as if to say, "Wow, I'm really great everyone. Did you see my hit? I am so happy I could pee my pants!" In reality, the player should be mad at the rest of his team for allowing a longer than average return, but who cares about that when there's a chance to show off? Hell, players even celebrate a good play when their team is down by 20 points now. Duh!

Deion Sanders' and Merton Hanks' interception dances have added to their marketing potential and name recognition. The dances also make every interception by the two players look as if it is the first in their entire football career — pee wee league and all. I can tolerate a short, adrenaline-inspired celebration after a good hit on a key play. I played football a long time ago, and I understand the feeling of landing a good, clean hit into someone on a drive-ending play. But as the frequency of celebrations has risen, the frequency of good hits has dropped off. Now we get chop blocks and guys like Sanders who avoid hitting people altogether.

It's just another reason why the superior football action is found on Saturday afternoon instead of Sunday. In college football, players are content to be players instead of cheerleaders.

New license plates show support for SIUC

By Shawna Donovan
DE Government/Politics Editor

In an effort to get additional funding for higher education, the state has issued a series of new collegiate auto license plates, including an SIU plate.

Secretary of State George Ryan, along with SIU President Ted Sanders, SIUC Chancellor Don Pegg and state Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, unveiled the new white-and-maroon plate Tuesday at a press conference.

The plate, which costs $88 with a $75 renewal fee, will contribute $25 to the respective public and private institutions from every plate sold.

The public and private institutions that have the plates will take the money and place it in a general scholarship fund for that particular school, Ryan said.

The SIU plate is available for sale now and will be issued by mid-November, Ryan said.

Sanders said the money raised from the SIU plate will go into the SIU Board of Trustees account to distribute the general scholarship money.

Bost said he was happy to work with Ryan and the other legislators to get the plate.

"At a time when we are concerned with funding education, this is a good opportunity to support education," Bost said.

Ryan said the SIU fans can use the plates to support the school.

"This plate will also allow Saluki fans across the state to show their support for their favorite school," he said.

Marion Presley, vehicle services supervisor at the state driver's license facility in Carbondale, said there has been a growing interest for an SIU plate over the last two to three years.

Ryan also said besides the general interest in the plate, one of the reasons for the new plate is the establishment of scholarships to help families pay for tuition, and room and board costs.

He cited the U.S. Department of Education's study of the rising costs of a college education.

According to the study, in 1979 the cost of sending one child to a public university for a year — including tuition, room and board — consumed an average of 9 percent of a family's income. In the last few years, the one-year cost of a public university now consumes 14 percent of a typical family's income.

In Illinois, Ryan said the average cost of tuition at a public college is $3,400, which is 20 percent higher than the national average.

Ryan said state support for scholarships has not risen as fast because of competing spending pressures from other parts of the state budget. Allocations for the major state scholarship program, the Illinois Monetary Awards, have remained relatively constant around $100 million since 1990.

"This amount has increased slightly in the last few years, but there is still not enough scholarship money to go around to help all students who need help to get into college and stay in school," Ryan said.

Under the collegiate license plate program, 166 institutions of higher education in Illinois — both public and private — are eligible to take part in the program.

Seventeen schools have signed up for the program: Augustana College, Bradley University, Concordia University, DePaul University, Eastern Illinois University, Illinois State University, Loyola University of Chicago, Malcolm X College, Millikin University, Northern Illinois University, Northwestern University, Southern Illinois University, University of Illinois at Chicago, University of Illinois at Springfield, University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana and Western Illinois University.

Ryan said in addition to the new series, the state offers an environmental plate that has raised $3 million for conservation activities and a anti-violence plate that has raised $400,000 for anti-violence programs.

City development program working to improve houses

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Faulty wiring, leaky plumbing or bad roofs prevent about 100 houses on Carbondale's northeast side from meeting city codes, and city officials say they want to change that.

At a public hearing Monday, Assistant City Manager Don Monty said the city can apply for $367,000 from the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs to bring 24 homes up to code.

Cleveland Matthews, Carbondale community relations officer, said most houses on the northeast side date back to the 1920s.

"These homes are the original ones built there," he said. "We're talking about 70 or 80 years of time here. People are not capable of keep-

"Without this program, we'd be in dire straits. The folks are on a fixed income or a very low income."

ing the houses up. They don't have the income."

Matthews said the neighborhoods in northeast Carbondale are the poorest in town.

"Without this program, we'd be in dire straits," Matthews said. "The folks are on a fixed income or a very low income."

Monty said the city's Building and Neighborhood Services staff surveyed the northeast side in 1993 and found that 60 percent of the homes there needed some exterior improvements.

Since then, the Community Development Assistance Program has paid for about 60 home renovations in three annual grants.

Monty said the city has identified another 100 homes in the neighborhood that could be improved through the program.

Matthews said he does not see dangerous problems in the houses he surveys, but ones that could be health threatening or uncomfortable. He said the development program is a blessing.

Ted Mieling, a housing rehabilitation specialist with the city, said most common repairs are to roofs and plumbing.

"We do structural work on the foundations, repairs on the kitchen, electrical work, floor work," he said. "A house's plumbing or wiring might have been up to code when it was put in, but 30 years might have passed."

Improvements are limited to $22,500 per home, and the work must bring homes up to code, Monty said.

Mieling said the project's goal was to bring each house up to code for another 15 years.

Monty said the grants are targeted for the northeast neighborhood, but any Carbondale resident who owns a home may apply for the assistance.

"Priority will be given to the elderly, the disabled, single-parent households and people spending more than 30 percent of their income on housing," Monty said.

Mieling said the houses are prioritized according to the number of residents, age of residents and what work the houses need.

Mieling said early next year, the city will learn whether its grant application was approved. The money should arrive in time for the spring 1997 construction season, he said.

The Carbondale City Council will hold a special meeting Thursday at noon at the new City Hall, 200 S. Illinois Ave., to vote on submitting the grant application.

Security cameras cut Rec Center crime

By Brett Wilcoxon
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Recreation Center employees say the $39,000 purchase of new basketball court equipment and a video surveillance system last year has reduced the number of criminal offenses in the center by half.

Brian Lukes, an assistant director of facilities, said the number of thefts, fights, illegal entries and miscellaneous offenses per month were nearly twice as high before the added security measures.

Lukes compared the total number of offenses from October through December of 1994 — before the added security measures — with the total offenses during the same months in 1995 after the measures were in place.

He said the total number of offenses during the three-month period in 1994 was 54 and in 1995, the number of offenses dropped to 28.

"If something does go wrong, we don't have to take anyone's word. We have an actual account of what happened."

Brian Taylor,
Rec Center employee

Lukes said that in July of 1995, $10,700 in center funds was used to retrofit the basketball court goals with slam-dunk backboards and rims.

Lukes said this was done so employees who were monitoring the courts to prevent people from damaging the goals by dunking could instead act as greeters at the turnstiles.

Lukes said he believes having employees at the turnstiles to check identification cards and greet people is an effective way to decrease crimes in the center.

"There's a personal touch at the turnstiles," he said. "We have people there, and I think that is helping keep people out of here that don't belong here."

In early October 1995, center funds were used to pay Heartland Investigations, a Murphysboro company, $28,917 for a video camera surveillance system, Lukes said. The system consists of 16 cameras throughout the center.

While the system has aided in prosecuting offenses by catching the offenders on camera, Lukes said it originally was installed to prevent users from committing crimes in the center.

"The cameras were put in as a deterrent," he said. "We weren't looking for prosecutions."

Several fights have been caught on camera, and Lukes said the footage has caused people to admit their offenses.

"We've had several signed confessions," he said.

Brian Taylor, a Rec Center employee, said he believes the cameras and greeters are giving center patrons a symbolic warning as they enter. He said that is a major reason for the drop in offenses.

He said the camera footage provides an indisputable source when questions arise as to what happened in any incident.

"If something does go wrong, we don't have to take anyone's word," he said. "We have an actual account of what happened."

Lukes said the money for the upgrades came from a fund called the repair, replacement and modernization fund. He said every semester, students pay $1.75 into the fund as part of their student fees. Because the warranties on the system are still in effect, Lukes said he could not say how much maintenance costs for the cameras will be, but he said machines do wear out.

"It's just like a car," he said. "As it gets older, things will need replacement."

Lukes said he believes the center is secure now, and there are no plans at this time for purchase of additional cameras. But he said the cameras that are in place now may be repositioned.

"We will continue to evaluate the location and coverage of the cameras," he said. "But as someone that's responsible for security, I'm confident we've created a much safer environment for students and other users."

Visiting philosopher to lecture on erosion of morals

By La' Keisha R. Gray
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A philosopher who is described as one of the most outstanding philosophers in America will visit SIUC Saturday to lecture on morals, an SIUC professor says.

John J. McDermott, a professor from Texas A&M University, will speak at the 22nd Annual Wayne Lays Memorial Lecture, "Turning Backward: the Erosion of Moral Sensibility."

Thomas Alexander, an SIUC professor of philosophy, said McDermott is a leading scholar for the advancement of American philosophy.

"Few people have been directly responsible for the revival of interest in classical American philosophy, which has lasted a generation," Alexander said.

Alexander said McDermott is the recipient of several awards, including the E. Harris Harbison National

"He usually discusses ethical issues. But whatever he speaks about, you will enjoy what he has to say."

John Howie,
Philosophy professor

Award for Gifted Teaching, the Texas A&M Distinguished Achievement Award and the Herbert W. Schneider Award for "Distinguished Contributions to the Understanding and Development of American Philosophy."

John Howie, also an SIUC professor in philosophy, said McDermott is a dynamic and lively speaker.

"He usually discusses ethical issues," Howie said. "But whatever he speaks about, you will enjoy what he has to say."

Howie said McDermott has a passion for classical American philosophy. He said McDermott has written and edited various books and articles about classical American philosophy including those in "The Culture of Experience: Philosophical Essays in the American Grain" and "Streams of Experience: Reflections on the History and Philosophy of American Culture."

The lecture is scheduled for 7 p.m. Saturday at the Faner Hall Museum Auditorium.

Baklava celebrated in parade

Los Angeles Times

Not many pastries have ever had their own parade, but baklava has. In the days of the Ottoman Empire, it was the focus of a celebration called the Baklava Alayi, or Baklava Procession.

The procession originated out of a simple communal soldiers' meal held on the 15th day of the Muslim month of Ramadan. But the wealth of the empire, together with the famous sweet tooth of the sultans, had spurred the invention of all sorts of elegant pastries, above all the light, flaky baklava, and it came to be customary that the palace would distribute baklava to all the Janissary regiments stationed in Istanbul on that day. Each regiment would march in turn into the Second Courtyard of the palace, where the 20 royal kitchens stood, and receive two huge trays of baklava baked by the sultan's own confectioners. The trays would be slung in cloth sheets from a stout pole carried by two men and paraded back to the barracks with the utmost pomp.

need of repair or replacement because of age and water damage.

- The 37-year-old air conditioning cooling tower on the roof of Quigley Hall needs to be replaced and could fail at any time, leaving the hall with no air conditioning.

- The fire alarms in Morris Library are obsolete and do not meet current fire codes or Americans with Disabilities Act standards, which require fire alarms to have strobe lights to alert the hearing impaired in the case of an alarm.

- Power distribution machinery in the basement of Faner Hall is in need of replacement and could fail, leaving parts of the building without power.

- Heating and cooling pipes in Anthony Hall, many of which have not been replaced since the building was built in 1913, are corroded and leaking. Replacing the pipes will be expensive and difficult because they are wrapped in asbestos insulation.

The Illinois Capital Development Board (ICDB) is responsible for distributing funds for maintenance projects throughout the state.

Sam McGaw, executive director of the ICDB, said legislators are often more interested in allocating funds to build new structures than in maintaining old ones.

"This is the second year in a row that we have not received the funds to maintain the 1,505 buildings throughout the state, whether they be state agencies, universities or community colleges, encompassing about 84 million square feet of space that we are responsible for," he said.

State Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, told University officials that he hoped the maintenance funding could be approved in the fall veto session that begins Nov. 8.

The last time the legislature voted on the funding was two years ago, at which time it was defeated by a narrow margin. The legislature did not call a vote on the measure this year because they believed there were not enough votes for it to pass, Bost said.

State Sen. Dave Luechtefeld, R-Okawville, said he hopes that situations like the power failures at SIUC will pressure legislators to vote for the funding.

tattoos and even shoes.

"They (attackers) will rape a girl in a Bulls jacket, and then the girl will remember and ID them in that jacket," Davidson said.

"They get caught because they keep wearing the same jacket."

Even though the audience was interested in the information given about sexual assault, cheers rang out in the room when instructor November Davidson, a senior in political science from Geneseo, announced they would practice some moves.

The moves taught at the session Monday were not only for the athletic.

One move called the simple move, the "jerk away" was used when a person has a grip on the victim's wrist. The victim pulls away and twists against the aggressor's arm. The pulling movement provides a force against the attacker's thumb and nerves.

When combined with a loud "no," the victim may be able get away.

After witnessing the instruction, Jennifer Collins, a senior in criminal justice from St. Louis and a resident assistant at Thompson Point, said that the woman who prevented a possible sexual assault in the Thompson Point parking lot on Oct. 1 did that same move to get away.

With her own friendly demeanor and tiny figure, DiCicco does not look like she could defend herself completely on her own.

But she said after learning the moves, she would not hesitate to use them.

"I'm not afraid to fight anyone," she said.

Breakfast is Back!

Campus Restaurant Responds to its Customers

Most experts agree, breakfast is the most important meal of the day. So when customers requested breakfast be served again at the Marketplace, Student Center Dining Services took quick action.

Beginning this semester, the Marketplace began serving breakfast again (weekdays from 7:00 a.m. to 9:30 a.m.) and also introduced a brand new breakfast buffet for only $2.99.

Keyvn Hawke, director of dining services, said customers requested the Marketplace reopen for breakfast.

"In the past we served breakfast for a while, but decided to discontinue offering it last year," Hawke said. "We talked to our customers to see what they wanted, took their suggestions, made some changes and reopened breakfast adding the breakfast buffet."

John Lanzer, operations manager, said adding the breakfast buffet has been the best change to the breakfast menu.

"It is a hot buffet with a variety of breakfast foods," Lanzer said. "We offer two types of scrambled eggs, potatoes, pancakes, waffles, French toast, breakfast meats, toast, biscuits and gravy and oatmeal."

Bob Buffington, a frequent customer, said he ate breakfast at the Marketplace often before they discontinued serving it, and after the reopening it is even better than before.

"I love eating there (Marketplace)," Buffington said. "The breakfast buffet gives you ample servings of great food at a good price."

Hawke said the buffet also offers fast, convenient service for customers.

"It is our job to give our customers a hardy meal in a short period of time," Hawke said. "We want to please our customers any way possible."

The breakfast bar is not the only new feature to the Marketplace. A fajita bar has been added during lunch time hours, Hawke said.

"The fajita bar is the relocation of Peco's Petes, a Mexican restaurant, formerly located in the Big Muddy Lounge," Lanzer said. "Moving it to the Marketplace allows us to provide greater convenience and offer more choices to our customers."

Lunch hours begin at 11 a.m. The lunch menu includes the following: pasta bar, salad bar, Oriental stir-fry, fajita bar and a variety of vegetables and meats that change each day. Also, there are blue plate specials which feature new meals daily.

The Marketplace is located on the first floor of the Student Center. It is opened Monday through Friday for breakfast and lunch from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m.

driving conviction in 1981 and should have disclosed a DUI in 1991.

Alfred E. Sanders Jr., Kilgore's attorney, said the outcome of the trial was wrong.

"I am very concerned about the future of the Law School," he said, "especially if the school is allowed to have these broad powers to do whatever they want whenever they want."

Shari Rhodes, attorney for the School of Law, said the decision was fair.

"The judge listened very carefully, and she did her homework," she said.

"Her decision was well researched."

Sanders said during the trial that Kilgore should be re-admitted because questions 14 and 15 on the application were broad and could be interpreted many ways.

Sanders questioned Edward Dorsey, assistant dean for

"I am very concerned about the future of law school..."

Alfred E. Sanders, Jr., Kilgore's attorney

Admission and Records, about the questions because question 15 had been changed for the fall 1996 semester application.

Dorsey testified as to why question 15 was changed on the application form.

"The question was changed to ensure complete disclosure of arrests, convictions and any criminal matters," Dorsey said.

Sanders asked Dorsey if there had been a problem in the past with students misinterpreting the questions. Dorsey said out of the 900 applicants that the school receives each semester, there were a few cases in which students had problems with the questions.

Kilgore said he did answer questions 14 and 15 truthfully on his application and that he thought the 1991 DUI was actually in 1989.

Eugene Basanta, associate dean of the Law School, testified on Sept. 30 that he initiated the investigation looking into Kilgore's application.

Basanta said he heard rumors around the Law School about Kilgore having previous convictions, so he contacted the California FBI, a California police department and the SIUC Police.

Basanta said he did obtain a copy of Kilgore's alleged warrant in California for violation of probation from a DUI conviction in 1991.

Kilgore testified Sept. 30 on the stand he had no knowledge of a warrant out for his arrest.

Following her decision, Dahlen said it was up to Kilgore to prove whether the warrant existed.

Kilgore said his next steps could be to file an appeal against Dahlen's decision or to sue for damages because his reputation was damaged and sue for reimbursement of money spent while being in the Law School three semesters.

"I have not decided what I am going to do yet," Kilgore said.

"The pre-test is important so students understand the aspects of the test and the fact that even if they are negative, they can become positive if their behaviors are such that could put them at risk," Perkins said.

Students will receive their results at a post-test counseling session after about a week, Perkins said. They also will be given information about how their behavior can be changed to keep from acquiring the virus.

Perkins said students will be able to get an AIDS test only once every six months.

"Once you have been tested and clear, you would think you would take precautions to keep yourself healthy instead of just getting tested all the time," Perkins said.

One student said he was glad that people who have the slightest suspicion they may be HIV positive can get tested.

"I think it's a wonderful opportunity for the campus to prevent the future spread of the aids epidemic," Joey Judd, a sophomore in theater from Paducah, Ky., said.

While the rate of new AIDS cases reported among people born before 1960 appears to be reaching a plateau, the rate among younger Americans continues to escalate, a health official said.

Chris Labyk, coordinator for Student Health Programs, said the largest growing group of people infected with the virus is heterosexuals and teens.

Labyk said people who inject steroids also are at risk although they may not think about it since it is not heroin or cocaine they are injecting.

"The most important aspect of AIDS is the people who are too scared to be tested and do not take precautions to protect themselves," Labyk said, "although I believe many students are using condoms a lot more than they used to."

Carri Weems, a junior in speech communication from Austin, Texas, said she is in favor of testing for everyone on campus.

"It seems to me like it would be a good thing because more people could be tested," Weems said.

"I'm sure not everyone with HIV was in the high risk category."

Pedaling to success

BELOW: Racers fight for a lead on the open grass before they get into the woods where passing another racer becomes difficult. The race consisted of ops on a trail that switched between gravel roads and rough off-road trails.

Canadiens tie Ducks

Los Angeles Times

MONTREAL—A half a dozen goals, and it wasn't enough?

The Anaheim Mighty Ducks have been fretting about how they'll score without Paul Kariya in the lineup, but their problem against the Montreal Canadiens Monday night was keeping the puck out of the net.

The Ducks twice blew two-goal leads and ended up with a 6-6 tie as a Molson Centre crowd of 20,306 watched the Canadiens start the season 0-0-2.

"We shouldn't let them score six goals," said Teemu Selanne, who had a goal and two assists. "There are not so many nights when we can score six goals when (Kariya) is not here."

The Ducks have given up 10 goals in two games, and you have to wonder if they might have been a little hasty in trading Jason York, an unspectacular but reliable defenseman, just before the season.

"Our 'D' struggled out there. We gave them too much room," Duck Coach Ron Wilson said. "It just takes time. Preseason, you see certain things. But you have to wait until the real bullets start flying in the regular season. But (Montreal) has a great group of forwards, three solid lines. They're very deep.

"For us, we're without a key person. We could have rolled over and died. Our players hung in there. We came back two times, but so did they."

The Ducks led, 2-0, midway through the first period after power-play goals by Fredrik Olausson and Jari Kurri. They were ahead, 5-3, going into the third.

But they were undone by two Montreal scoring flurries and a hat trick by Brian Savage. Known for his quick starts, Savage had two goals in the first and another in the third. Saku Koivu, a second-year player who like Kurri and Selanne is from Finland, assisted on all three.

Montreal trailed by two goals late in the first but scored three times in a span of 1:54, twice on power plays after penalties against defenseman David Karpis and rookie defenseman Ruslan Salei, who was playing his first NHL game. The other goal came after Stephane Richer stole the puck from defenseman Adrian Plavsic, a journeyman who made the team out of camp.

"Maybe offensively we surprised ourselves, but we surprised ourselves defensively too," Plavsic said. "I thought I could have done a better job. It's the second game. Some individuals played better than others."

Sale of car possible NCAA violation

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—The sister of a prized UCLA basketball recruit purchased a car owned by Coach Jim Harrick two days after her brother committed to play for the Bruins, the Los Angeles Times has learned.

A black 1991 Chevy Blazer, with Harrick the registered owner, was sold to Lisa Hodoh, the older sister of Santa Monica, Calif. Crossroads High senior Baron Davis, on Sept. 20, according to Department of Motor Vehicle records. This transaction is a possible NCAA violation.

UCLA Athletic Director Peter T. Dalis, who said he advised Harrick not to speak to Times' reporters when confronted with the issue Monday afternoon, confirmed that the car was registered to Harrick, but said that Glenn Harrick, Jim's son, sold the car to Hodoh.

In way of explanation, Dalis said the situation was as follows: "I talked to Baron Davis' sister, this afternoon and she advised that she purchased Glenn Harrick's car, which he was selling because he and his wife are expecting. (Hodoh) overheard in the basketball office that (Glenn) wanted to sell a car. She said, 'I'm looking to buy a car.'"

Monday afternoon, before speaking with Dalis, Hodoh told a reporter that she bought the car for Davis at an auction. Davis has been seen driving it to high school.

Hodoh, who said she has been employed at the UCLA student union by Associated Students of UCLA since April, said that there was no way Jim Harrick's name could be on the car's DMV registration, "unless you guys did that."

DMV records show that Jim Harrick purchased the car in December 1990.

During this same interview, Hodoh denied buying it from Jim Harrick, and did not mention Glenn Harrick. She said she bought it from a woman, but was not sure of her name.

The Times asked to look at the sales receipts and Hodoh told the reporter to call her at home later. Frequent calls to her home went unanswered.

Dalis said he could explain the discrepancy between her original explanation and his, but added: "I am not prepared to."

Dalis said Glenn Harrick sold the car to Hodoh. DMV procedures are that the registered owner must sign over the title when the car changes hands.

Dalis and Hodoh said the car was sold for $5,000, but the Kelley Blue Book lists the retail value of that model of the car, factoring out mileage, at $12,750, and a Southland used car dealer estimated the retail value at $16,000. DMV records showed the car had 112,960 miles the day she bought the car.

Dalis said that on his request, Hodoh showed receipts for eight money orders totaling $5,000 to a UCLA compliance official. When asked late Monday to produce copies of the receipts, UCLA sports information department official said the receipts were inside a locked safe in Hodoh's possession.

Dalis said he contacted Pacific 10 Conference officials after The Times raised the issue Monday.

According to Dalis, David Price, associate commissioner of the Pac-10, is traveling to UCLA Wednesday to join an investigation that Dalis said had already begun by UCLA. Dalis had no timetable for when the investigation might be complete.

The NCAA rulebook states that there can be no financial aid or other benefits to the recruit or the recruit's relatives or friends by any "institution's staff member or any representative of its athletics interests."

crafty player." The doubles play was not as strong at home as the Salukis' top finishers came in the B flight doubles consolation title. The team of sophomore Jeremy Nelson and freshman Ore Shavit lost to fellow Saluki netters Etzkin and Ingle in an all Saluki final.

"I was not satisfied with our doubles this weekend," Inzer said. "I told these guys that I wanted to win the doubles." The next stop for the Salukis is the University of Kentucky Tournament Friday through Saturday, where the Salukis are expected to be the smallest school among a slew of Atlantic Coast Conference and Big 10 foes.

Cornell

In Cornell's three years of eligibility at SIUC, he was an All-American three times and helped his team finish fourth in the NCAA meet in 1962.

"In 1962, I finished with a time of 4:00.5 mile to finish second behind a runner from the University of Oregon," Cornell said. "In 1963, I concentrated on the 880, finishing second again against a runner from Oregon State University."

By 1964, Cornell still held British records in the 600, 880 and 1,000 yard runs, and the Olympics were drawing near.

"I had a good chance at making the British team," he said. "But I had to have a foot operation, and I didn't make it back during the outdoor season."

During the indoor season, Cornell came back and finished third in the 1,000 yards, making him a three-time All-American.

The year 1964 marked the end of Cornell's collegiate career and the end of his running. After graduating that year, Cornell wanted to stay in the United States and find a job, he said, but realized it would take a master's degree to coach. He stayed on at SIUC and finished his master's degree in 1966.

"During the time I was getting my master's degree, I was a volunteer assistant under Lou (Hartzog)," he said. "I started looking for a job, and was the last three at a number of interviews but didn't get the job."

After spending a year as a double graduate assistant without finding a job, Cornell left the United States to return to England to work. He was back in his home country only a month before being offered a job in the United States.

"Lou called and asked if I wanted a coaching job at Murray State University," Cornell said. "They were a Division I school, so I started there in the fall of 1967."

After 15 years of coaching at Murray State, Cornell returned to SIUC to take over as men's head cross country coach and eventually to take over as track and field coach for Hartzog.

That was in 1982. Cornell is still coaching after 31 years and plans to stick with it until he is 65. He said the athletes are what make it all worth while.

"I have one-on-one talks about motivation with all my kids," Cornell said. "I point to the picture of Eddie Weddeburn, Michael Franks and Alys Ford on my shelf, who all hold school records, made All-American and either the Olympic Games or the World Championships, and now they all have a family and successful jobs. It is to show the kids that they make it all worth while."

"I would hope I had something to do with their success."

Now Cornell faces the challenge of Parkinson's disease, but he said he doesn't let it hold him back.

"I had a hard time when I had a total knee replacement at the same time," he said. "But it is a lot better for me to be working than sitting at home feeling sorry for myself. I tend to forget about it when I am at work."

Cross country runner Ben Basalay, a sophomore in architecture from Hoffman Estates, said he admires Cornell for being so strong.

"I admire him for his strength," he said. "He is so tough because he ran until he had to have his kneecap replaced. Not many men are that strong, and he had the perseverance to do that."

Basalay also said he admires Cornell for examples he has set as a coach.

"He coaches not from theory, but by example," Basalay said. "I have a lot of respect for his past accomplishments, and he knows what he is talking about."

Matt McClelland, a freshman in agricultural education from Rushville, said Cornell's coaching ability is what made him decide to come to SIUC.

"He takes things in a positive manner," he said. "I like the way he coaches and trains. I also find it easy to talk to him about a problem, even if it is not about athletics."

Cornell still has a goal he would like to accomplish before his retirement from SIUC.

"I would like to qualify enough men for the NCAA meet and see them finish in the top three."

CROSS COUNTRY

Marneros earns MVC honors for run

Saluki men's cross country runner Stelios Marneros led all competitors at the Saluki Invitational Saturday to earn Missouri Valley Conference cross country Athlete of the Week honors.

Marneros' effort represented the second-fastest time ever in the history of the invitational and the second-fastest time by a Saluki in any race on the SIUC course. Marneros paced all 89 runners to help give SIUC a third place finish.

Cardinals, Braves begin play tonight

The St. Louis Cardinals will find out if they have what it takes to hit Atlanta's pitching staff tonight in Fulton County Stadium. The combination of John Smoltz, Tom Glavine and Gregg Maddux decimated Los Angeles in a three-game sweep. The Cardinals, who swept San Diego, begin the best of seven National League Championship series against Smoltz, this season's likely Cy Young award winner. Andy Benes will get the start for St. Louis.

Kramer, who has missed the past two games, was released from the same hospital nine days ago after undergoing extensive tests on his upper back and neck.

George, Rice garner September honors

Houston Oilers runningback Eddie George and Arizona Cardinals defensive end Simeon Rice were named the NFL's rookies of the month for September. George, the 1995 Heisman Trophy winner out of Ohio State, gained 314 yards on 66 carries for a 4.8-yard average. His best game was 143 yards on 17 carries in a win over Jacksonville. Rice, the third overall pick in the April draft, had five sacks among 18 tackles, two forced fumbles and one recovery.

Cornell relies on strength, experience to lead runners

By Donna Colter

When Bill Cornell arrived in the United States in 1961 as a scholarship athlete at SIUC, little did he realize that he would one day be the coach of the cross country team.

The call came for Cornell in March. On 1961 when, after a 2 1/2-year absence from running, he was recruited by SIUC Coach Lou Hartzog.

"Lou had heard about my athletic ability from another runner," he said. "He called me up and offered me a scholarship to run. So, I

After one month of training at SIUC, then a school of only 10,000 students, Cornell had the opportunity to run against a national champion and in front of a lot of screaming fans.

"We had an 880-yard time trial two months after I arrived here," he said. "I ran a personal best of 1:51.9 with 3,000 people watching."

TENNIS

Coach displeased with doubles play

By Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC men's tennis team experienced a flip-flop of doubles and singles success between its first and second meets, first-year Coach Brad Ifner said.

"It is one of those things that I can't really explain," Ifner said. "I guess maybe it is a sign of a young team."

The Illinois State Fall Invitational and the Saluki Fall Invitational were as different as night and day in terms of doubles play for the Salukis, which features five freshmen, one sophomore and only two juniors.

At ISU, the Salukis' No. 1 seeded doubles team of junior Mick Smyth and freshman Kyle Henry beat up on the competition by finishing the tournament with a perfect 5-0 record. Freshmen Randy deGuzman and Juan Carlos England, the No. 2 seeded doubles team, also left ISU with an undefeated 5-0 record.

"I have tried to emphasize the doubles a lot," Ifner said. "Their singles matches are their own responsibility to work as hard as they can work to try to win."

Despite Ifner's doubles philosophy, the Salukis' singles play shined at the Saluki Invitational as players came away with two individual titles and three consolation titles.

Junior Brian Etzkin won the C flight singles championship with a perfect 3-0 record by defeating his teammate, England, who finished in second place with a 2-1 record. Etzkin lost the first set 3-6 before coming on strong by winning the next two 6-0 and 6-2.

"It was nice to stay home," Etzkin said. "It was more relaxing not having to get up at 6:30 in the morning to go to the courts."

The extra sleep and home crowd must have done something for Etzkin, who said he played very consistently on the road to his C flight championship.

The Salukis also won the D flight singles championship as freshman Brian Ingle walked away with a 3-0 record for the weekend, winning the championship in two sets over Eastern Illinois University's challenger, 7-5 and 6-4. Ingle walked away with two set victories, not losing a single set to his adversaries.

The Salukis also added three consolation titles to top off the team's spectacular singles play.

In the A flight consolation finals, the Salukis' top seeded doubles team of Smyth and deGuzman found themselves on opposite sides of the net. Smyth came away with a two set win.

"It was kind of hard (playing a teammate), but it is still just another match," Smyth said. "It is just someone else across the net."

"We play in practice all the time, and it is pretty even. I thought it would be a really close match because Randy (deGuzman) is a
