Clinton: 'Don't be fooled'

Speech deems financial aid essential to economic future tudent financial aid is the key to American economic development and career opportunity for American citizens, President Bill Clinton said Monday to a crowd of more than 10,000 who gathered on the Pulliam Lawn to hear him speak.

With campus and regional government leaders sitting behind him. Clinton told the crowd that higher education is essential to keep the nation in competition economically with other countries which have constantly changing technology.
Clinton said the Republican-led Congress would make this competition impossible by cutting financial aid services such as the direct student loan program, which was authored by Sen. Paul Simon, D-III.

'Let's face it folks, these changes that are going on are awfully good for people who have an education — people who can be in the forefront of change," Clinton said.

"They're pretty tough on...people who don't have a very good education and can no longer get the kind of jobs they used to, or if they get a job, never, ever seem to get a raise."

Clinton said it is impossible for many American citizens to improve their financial condition without an education, and this edu-cation is impossible without federal monetary help to college students.

"Will our country meet the challenges of the twenty-first century, or will we cut off our nose to spite our face by cutting back on edu-cational aid at the time when we need to invest more in it?" Clinton said as a large portion of the crown applauded.

Clinton said programs like the direct student loan, which is now used at 40 percent of uni-versities in the country, help get students the financial aid they need without political red

MUGABE MAKES HOMOSEXUALS PUBLIC ENEMIES

HARARE, Zimbabwe—It is one thing to embrace trade, foreign aid and diplomatic relations with Europe and the United States. But when it comes to sex, says Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe, let the Europeans and Americans keep their habits to themselves. With that moralistic and Africanist rationale, Mugabe has declared rhetorical war on his nation's presumably small but largely hidden homosexual population and given voice to a strong undercurrent of cultural chauvinism that holds that homosexuality represents the descrepating influence of that holds that homosexuality represents the degenerating influence of European cultures. Mugabe called gays "perverts" and "sodomists" last month as he prohibited GALZ, or Gays and Lesbians of Zimbabwe, from setting up an exhibit at the Zimbabwe International Book Fair, a continental literary event.

WALESA ON DEFENSIVE AS POLAND CHANGES — WARSAW, Poland.—Fifteen years after Lech Walesa led millions in the remarkable, improbable fight for freedom in the name of Solidarity, he is battling for political survival in the democracy he helped create. Walesa is seeking re-election in November, nearing the end of a five-year presidential term with hikewarm support from his most loyal constituencies—the Solidarity labor union and the Roman Catholic Church. From the public at large, he receives ambivalent reviews of his day-to-day conduct as Poland's first popularly elected leader, as bottom-rung poll ratings attest. Recently, Walesa took his campaign to the historic port city of Gdansk to bask in the memory of the 1980 accord that legalized Solidarity and to address followers under the soaring arches of the basilica of the Virgin Mary, not far from the shipyard where Solidarity took form.

SCIENCE JOURNAL GIVES CLUES TO SIDS MYSTERY.—
The sudden; unexplained death of an infant is not only a tragedy, it is also a mystery. Sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) is most common in children between 2 months and 4 months old. It usually occurs during in children between 2 months and 4 months old. It usually occurs during sleep, and is more common in children lying on their stomachs. Nobody knows why it occurs. One theory—derived in large part from the observations about sleeping position—is that SIDS results from the failure of a complex physiological "feedback loop" involving the brain, lungs and leart: Babies in the prone position are more likely to breathe exhaled air, which is relatively rich in carbon dioxide. As carbon dioxide builds up in the bloodstream, the body must compensate, usually by breathing faster or deeper. These compensations may be difficult for newborns. Research published in the Sept. 8 issue of the journal Science provides some anatomical evidence in support of this theory.

ne night stands on rise; dating declines

By Rebecca Hutchings Daily Egyptian Reporter

Some students who come to SIUC say they find that college life is expensive and time consuming. As a result they say casual sex becomes more common, while formal dating declines.

Chris Houk, a senior in outdoor recreation from Barrington, said there are too many alternative things to do at college, such as class and hanging out with friends, to have a serious relationship.

Student takes lie detector test to prove turned in assignment

By Dustin Coleman DE Features Editor

Lie detector tests are generally thought of as tools to prove or dis-prove the innocence of possible criminals. But for one SIUC student, taking a lie detector test was an attempt to get a course grade changed from a B to an A.

Incinerator unsafe, should be stopped

SATURDAY, A HANDFUL OF CONCERNED citizens gathered in boats on Crab Orchard Lake in opposition to the planned construction of a PCB incinerator at Crab Orchard Wildlife Refuge. While the number of people participating in the boat regatta was small, the message they were trying to bring to the public should not be ignored. PCB incinerators emit toxic substances, often causing more health problems than the substances they are designed to destroy. Incineration is a flawed and expensive technology that is a non-solution to the problem at Crab

Last year, the Daily Egyptian took the stance that it is too late to stop the incinerator from being built at the refuge. However, we have since learned that the Environmental Protection Agency could stop the project by revisiting the consent decree, which is the document authorizing incineration at the cite. Incinerators in Bloomington, Ind., Jacksonville, Ark., and Bedford, Mass., have all been stopped this way recently. Valdas Adamkus, the head of Region Five of the EPA, has the power to do this at any time. The DE strongly urges him to do so now.

ALL PCB INCINERATORS EMIT DIOXIN AND other toxic substances as the result of incomplete combustion. While the EPA acknowledges that fact, it claims the levels of emissions of these chemicals can be carefully monitored to prevent health risks to the public. However, they cannot even identify all of the chemicals emitted by an incinerator, and cannot measure them accurately. According the the EPA's own documents, the equipment that measures emissions from an incinerator during a test burn is permitted to have a 50 percent margin of error. Further, EPA documents indicate that while not all chemicals emitted can be identified, the EPA says it is reasonable to assume that they are toxic. How toxic these chemicals are is impossible to determine, however.

DIOXIN IS A NASTY, NASTY CHEMICAL. IT IS bioaccumulative, which means it is stored in fatty tissues and increases in concentration toward the top of the food chain. It causes cancer, and has recently been linked to birth defects, damage to developing immune systems, and disruption of hormone systems. The recent EPA reassessment of dioxin indicates that the average American is already exposed to a level of dioxin that puts them at a risk of developing cancer that is 100 times higher than the risk level the EPA considers acceptable. Any further exposure to dioxin will put members of the community at an even higher risk of cancer. This is unacceptable.

There are alternative techniques being developed, but because of the lack of adequate performance and cost data, reluctance to use them is widespread. It would seem that leaving the contamination where it has sat for the past 50 years until a safe alternative is developed is the safest action at this time.

IN ORDER FOR THAT TO HAPPEN, THERE MUST be a public outcry. Write to Adamkus and urge him to revisit the consent decree for the site. And write his boss, President Bill Clinton, and urge him to pressure Adamkus to do so. Do it for your health, and that of your friends and family.

Pay education debt back promptly

Lately I have been hearing a lot of people say that they should not have to pay off their student loans. Even an letter in the Sept. 8 DE voiced this opinion. Even an letter in the Sept. 8 De volced use opinion. Wake up people, if you have a student loan, you signed the promissory note stating it will be paid back. It is really sad that a number of people in the past have abused the program, giving others the impression that student loans are grants. Too bad there was no way to repossess those educations. Chances are they are not being used in the program of the p repossess those educations. Chances are they are not being used anyway.

The U.S. barely has the money to fund the loan programs in the first place. We are S5 trillion in debt right now, and its rising every year. Indirectly we are borrowing this money from our children and grandchildren. Basically if you do not think you should pay off your loan, you are stealing from your kids' education. Don't get me wrong, I think America needs to help its citizens get a higher education, but not to forgive loans for lazy graduates that don't want to budget their money.

e crackdown on defaulted student loans needs to be a lot harsher. This would prevent others from following in the deadbeats footsteps. If we can get this money back, we could use it to lend out again. People money tack; we could use it to lend out again, recopie would be likely to borrow only what they need if they knew they would have to face heavy punishment for non-payment. This also would lead to more money in the system. It should go unsaid that people need to have the morals to pay back what they owe.

Money won't equal Alaskan losses

The Los Angeles Times

A dispute as bitter as the Alaskan winter rages across the North Slope. Inupiat Eskimos on the coast, who stand to reap a bonanza in jobs, are eager to open the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas exploration and drilling. But 150 miles to the south, Gwich'in Indians, too far away to get the jobs, see only calamity, fearing drilling would ruin the calving grounds of the migrating caribou bend on which they subsist.

The Inupiat-Gwich'in conflict is just one layer of the complex national debate over opening the remote refuge to oil companies. The majority of Alaskans have long favored drilling but always ran into a wall of environmentalists and their allies in Congress. Now A dispute as bitter as the Alaskan and their allies in Congress. Now for the first time the pro-drilling forces have a good shot at success.

Budget Bailout: That is not bugget Ballout: Had is not because of an urgent need for Alaskan oil but because Congress, desperate to pass a budget without still more painful cuts, sees 1.4 billion dollar signs. The budget resolutions of both houses, subject to abhana seasons 21.4 billion to change, assume a $1.4-billion Alaskan gusher, over five years, from oil leasing and rentals along the 100-mile-long, federally owned coastal plain, So presto, with little debate the budget reconciliation could open the refuge. President Clinton, opposed to drilling, would face intense political pressure against a veto of legislation needed to fund government operations.

At issue are 1,2 million acres of tundra along the Beaufort Sea. The frigid area teems with fragile flora and caribou, musk oxen, polar bears, wolves and peregrine

Oil proponents cite the national security need to reduce dependence on foreign supplies. They say modern drilling techniques have low environmental impact and avoid the spider web of development that has marred the nearby Prudhoe Bay fields. Opponents, led by Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt, maintain that the risk of damaging a unique environment is too great. Babbitt likens it to damming the Grand Canyon to produce hydroelectric power.

The economics of drilling in the refuge are questionable. When President Reagan pushed to open the refuge in 1987, oil was expected to sell for $33 a barrel, in 1984 delice, but the were 2001. The 1984 dollars, by the year 2000. The current world oil surplus has pushed such projections much lower, and a recent report by the U.S. Geological Survey concluded that potential reserves, once thought to be 4 billion or 5 billion barrels, are "significantly smaller." Goody for Alaskans: Alaskan voters see the refuge as a way to continue their free ride. Thanks to coil production, Alaska has no incoine tax and every Alaskan gets an annual "dividend" of about $1,000. All that will be threatened when the oil at Prudhoe is played

Neither Alaskans' attachment to their yearly checks nor concern about the federal deficit is a sufficient reason to open the arctic refuge. Drilling proponents have some cogent arguments, and ultimately Congress may want to permit at least some exploratory drilling. But the issue is too crucial and complex to deal with in Washington's frenzy of budget reconciliation over the next three Environmentalists are urging Clinton to declare the refuge a national monument if Congress does not back off. This would put the area under National Park Service control and bar drilling, Clinton may indeed have to resort to that to slow this train down.

Homelessness in the United States: A lingering illness that is treatable

By Luzie McKinney Special to the Washington Post

Right before the summer break, regat before the summer break, the House approved drastic cuts to housing programs for the needlest Americans: homeless people who have chronic mental and medical illnesses. Four of these—the McKinney Programs, named after my late bushand. Stowert my late husband, Stewart B.McKinney, who was a Republican representative from Connecticut—face reductions of 40 percent or $444 million (as compared to that unasked-for $7 billion pared to that unasked-for S7 billion the House decided to give the Pentagon). Usually when I testify before Congress I talk about the people who have reclaimed their lives through the offer of bousing and a helping hand. In keeping with the times, however, I'd like to reframe the debate—and talk about statistics and cold, hard cash. I'm stunned that Congress, which has proclaimed its commitment to

I'm stinned that Congress, which has proclaimed its commitment to finding and funding plans that actually work, would allow these cuts to stand. The McKinney Programs provide funding for something called supportive housing—permanent housing linked to a safety net of support services that allow even chronically disabled people who are homeless to live autonomously in hope and dignity. And according to the evidence, including two separate government evaluations, supportive housing is our best bet for rending homelessness and doing so cost-effectively. The first study found that former-ly homeless people with severe mental illnesses achieved stability at a rate of 83.4 percent in supportSaving lives and saving moneyhow can that be bad? "

> Luzie McKinney Foundation chair

ive housing. Tenants also cut their hospital inpatient use by 50 percent. The four-year evaluation conclud-ed that this unique housing "not only will alleviate human suffering, but also will reduce costs for instibut also will reduce costs for institutionalization and hospitalization. The five projects (studied) offer proof that the face of homelessness in American can be changed dra-matically."

The second evaluation found a success rate of 84.5 percent and concluded that supportive housing "provided cost-effective assistance to help families and individuals escape from homelessness.

So. These programs actually end homelessness, which is one of those seemingly intractable social prob-lems we thought would be a per-manent part of the American urban landscape.

As to the cost, Congress doesn't seem to grasp the fact that cuts, far from saving money, will waste it. Put simply, not housing our most vulnerable Americans costs millions more than housing them. It's just common sense: People with mental illnesses end up using expensive hospital beds, state psy-chiatric institutions and even jails as de facto housing; people with AIDS end up in acute-care bods (at more than $1,000 a day); people with alcohol or drug dependencies stay too long in high-cost treatment pro-grams. Meanwhile, they are still homeless, still dependent on crisis services and no closer to living independent productive lives. This is worse than penny-wise, pound-foolish—it's billions foolish.

The cost of providing housing linked to services, on the other hand, can be as little as $10,000 a year, an expenditure that actually ends that person's homelessness and allows him or her to use clinics instead of emergency rooms, coun-seling instead of psychiatric bospi-talizations and drug counseling instead of treatment centers. Supportive housing also promotes self-sufficiency through employ-ment and education linkages. Aren't these the very goals Congress is so anxious to advance?

My late husband was committed to ending the blight of widespread homelessness. Four months before he died, he even spent a night on the streets in 20-below weather to bring media attention to the plight of homeless people. Yes, he was deathly ill at the time, but so are more than 70 percent of homeless Americans.

We may not have a cure for AIDS, cancer or a way to provide health care to all Americans, but we do know how to end homelessness. And while the cure is not cost-free, it costs a whole lot less than not facing-and solving-the problem. Saving lives and saving moneyhow can that be bad?

Political ideas may be cause for roundtable exemption

By David R. Kazak Daily Egyptian Reporter

Graduate and Professional Student Council President Bill Karrow has found himself smack in the middle of a political controversy Monday.

The Washington Post, as well as several networks, have reported that Karrow was blacklisted by the White House because he was not allowed to be a part of Clinton's roundtable discussion.

Clinton met with 11 students from differ-

The Post reported that U.S. Rep. Jerry Weller, R-Ill, tried to create controversy by saying Karrow should be commended for refusing to be a "stage prop for the Clinton White House." Instead, Weller was reported to have said Karrow was rejected for his political views.

Karrow said although he is a Republican and does have questions about Clinton's financial aid agenda, he denies wanting to and agenda, he demes wanting to cause trouble. He said when answering a question posed by White House officials about direct lending and graduate loan interest exemptions, he was con-cerned that the exemptions were taking a back seat to direct lend-

"This is the one question."
Karrow said. "Direct lending is good, but if we have to give up our interest exemptions, I would be against it." He said after learning interest exemptions for graduate students were dis-cussed at the roundtable that he was pleased the subject was brought up.

"I guess there was some mis-communication between the White House and myself," he said. "I'm glad there were grad students there to bring up the

"I guess the Republicans are using me, but the Democrats are using the other students (in the roundtable," Karrow said. "If roundtable," Karrow said, "If the president wanted a group of people around to just praise his programs, he should have stayed at the White House where peo-ple get paid to do that." "I couch my political views as a student leader," Karrow said.
"I think I'm just way over my head in this."

The Post reported White House Spokesman Mike McCurry said dozens of students were interviewed for the discussion and Karrow "didn't cut the mystard" cut the mustard.

Because she does not want to see people in similar situations as her, she said she wanted the president to know she supports his stand on saving financial aid programs like the DSLP, which was created by Sen. Paul Simon, D-III..

"I want a little pride in there," she Clinton began the discussion shortly after 11 a.m. Monday. SIUC Financial Aid Director Pam Britton moderated, keeping the topic on financial aid. After Clinton made a few opening remarks to the students and media, the students took over.

Each told of their support for fed-eral aid programs and their fear of cuts. Most said were it not for federal programs like the Pell grant or subsidized loans for graduate stu-dents, attending college would be impossible.

Clinton said repeatedly that Washington officials need to hear stories like Birch's before they decide on federal aid issues. Those decisions are expected to be made by the Senate later this week.

Clinton said vast cuts in federal aid programs like the DSLP will hurt America's future by destroying incentive to go to college. Republican critics like U.S. Rep. Donald Manzullo, R-III, said

Donald Manzuno, K-III, saud Clinton is using scare tactics to advance his pet programs. Clinton said one foundation Republicans are using for their claims that the DSLP is costing more, a Congressional Budget Office report that states the DSLP will cost $1.5 billion, is actually onthing but smoke and mirrors.

"They pulled an incredible gimmick," Clinton said. "The new majority in Congress got the people who run their budget office to pull an incredible gimmick." Clinton said the Budget Office played with numbers so badly it makes the DSLP look more expensive than it

"It is bizarre," Clinton said. "And it's classic—it's a special interest group that overlooks the fact that the stories that you all have told are good stories for America's future." Two SIUC students, USG

President Duane Sherman and Black Graduate Student Association President Vanika Mock, also participated in the discussion. They also spoke of their support for the president's program.

But it was ! oemi Rivera-But it was bemi kivera-Morales, a graduate student at Indiana University who works in IU's financial aid department, who grabbed the president's attention toward the end of the discussion. "Mr. President," she said, cutting into the discussion of another student. "A point very important that is missed out in the debate is that the direct lending is substantially less bureaucratic."

She then displayed the direct lending forms used at IU as an example of how simple she said she thinks it is. This stirred the other students into offering comments about how simple it is, and the discussion changed from formal to informal quickly. Students were talking back and forth so fast that Clinton could not get a word in without being interrupted.

Britton gained control by asking the students to let the president talk. When she said this, the students quickly snapped back into formal mode and listened to the president

Other issues discussed included student loan default rates, student loan caps and federal work-study programs.

Either by choice or chance, some missed opportunity

By Julie Rendleman Daily Egyptian Reporter

Thousands of SIUC students and citizens flocked to campus to hear President Bill Clinton speak, many were disappointed when they were unable to get into the speech. And many SIUC students said they did not even try to hear the presidential address.

Some SIUC students said they stood in line only to be turned away once they reached the gate.

"The line was to long so I did not get into the speech and it was tiring standing all that time," Gary Williams, an undeclared freshman from Chicago, said. "I stood in line for an hour only to watch the line move about an inch every ten minutes.

Williams said many non-SIUC spectators took up space on the Pulliam lawn which should have been reserved for SIUC students.
"Clinton should have spoken to college students only or spoken in an area where everyone could see him," he said.

Megan McCrary said she thought the speech area was not big enough to accommodate all spectators.

"SIUC students should have gotten priority seating," McCrary said, "Clinton could have spoken in the football field or in the Arena. They could have secured that just as well."

Julie Lampley, an SIUC student from Thompsonville who had to listen to Clinton speak from outside the designated area have gotten to hear him since he is speaking about issues that concern college students more than anyone. Some SIUC students decided to take the day off and relax in the student center instead of hearing Clinton speak.

"I decided I was not really interested in hearing Clinton. I would rather do my homework," Jennifer Kobat, a freshman in accounting from Tamaro, said.

Some students said they did not go to the speech because they thought Clinton was just speaking at SIUC for publicity reasons.

"I do not think very highly of Clinton. This is all just a public-ity gimmick to get votes," Todd Martin, an undeclared freshman from Peoria, said. "Clinton will have to do a lot more to get my vote, like give me money out of his pocket to go to school on."

Many students commented on the historical importance of Clinton's Laura Kinley, a freshman at Carbondale Community High School said, "I think it's good he wants to speak to people. I think the people at SIU should know how he (Clinton) feels. It's history in the making and we're here to see it. Even if people don't agree with him (Clinton) they should still come — it's history."

Kerry Bowden, also a freshman at CCHS, said seeing Clinton was important.

"I think it's great he's (Clinton)

it's a great event."

Many of the children said the president's visit was enjoyable, but were disappointed because they had difficulty seeing over the heads of

Republicans attack Clinton's speech as inaccurate

By Signe Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

President Bill Clinton's speech may have stirred students here at SIUC, but most Republicans weren't as enthused about what the President had to say.

John Czwartacki, press secretary to the House Republican Conference, said Clinton's speech was inaccurate concerning the Republicans' proposed reductions in education.

"If Clinton was a student at SIU, he would be guilty of academic dishonesty," Czwartacki said. "Republicans are not going to cut student loans. We are trying to save them."

Currently there are 6.6 million student loans and next year there will be 7.1 million student loans available, Czwartacki said.

"There is going to be a change in status quo because we're going to balance the budget," Czwartacki said: "We've got to stop borrowing from the future so we can live in excess today. No one's threatening the program. We're trying to save it. There won't be a dime for anything in 17 years from now if there aren't changes made."

Clinton said the direct student loan program will save money, but Congressional Budget Office found the program will cost $1.5 billion, Czwartacki said. "The Republicans see the elimination of the direct loan program as one way to save money," he

Bill Goodling (R-Penn.), House Economic and Educational Opportunities Committee chair-man, said Clinton's speech was nothing more than a propaganda campaign aimed at Republicans.

"The facts are these: No student will lose eligibility or access to col-lege loans under our budget pro-posal," Goodling said, "The

in-school interest subsidy will remain intact. We will not increase the loan origination fee paid by students; we do not increase interest rates on loans for students, and the interest rate reduction for new loans scheduled to take effect July of 1998 will remain intact.

Student groups use president to present issues

By Carey Jane Atherton Daily Egyptian Reporter

While President Bill Clinton was delivering a speech on financial aid Monday, several student groups were addressing this and other political issues in their own

SIUC Undergraduate Student Government and the United States Student Association used the speech site to increase student financial aid awareness and voter registration.

Duane Sherman, president of USG, said tables were set up out-side the speech grounds at which people could register to vote, pick up information about financial aid cuts and sign a nation-wide USSA petition/registry.

Dan Piper, USG governmental relations commissioner, said the USSA petition/registry gives spe-cific information about proposed financial aid program cuts and eliminations and questions if the petitioner is going to vote in 1996.

Piper said the petition/registry is a means of educating students about today's financial aid situa-tion, letting Congress know that students care about financial aid

Sherman said he thought student turnout was decent, however he wished they (USG and USSA) could have gotten more to attend. Piper said the petition will be sent to congress Sept. 15.

Ryan Barton, president of Gamma Beta Phi, an honors and community service organization, was one of the few SIUC students selected to sit on stage with the president.

Barton also said he spoke to Carol Moseley-Braun and she gave him her business card. He said he wished to talk to about special education legislation.

Dillard said everything went fine, but only because of the work of so many peo-

SIUC professors agree; Clinton quite a speaker

SIUC professors had different reactions to President Bill Clinton's speech yesterday, but they said they all agreed on one thing — Clinton is a savvy thing — Clinton is a savvy speaker and campaigner. "I think he struck a chord with students today," Political Science Lecturer Barb Brown said.

Brown, a Democrat seeking a seat in the Illinois Senate, said the main purpose of Clinton's speech was to define his position on the college financial aid issue.

mancial aid issue.
"He was focused," she said. "He really addressed the differences between him and the Republicans. If the president is going to be effective in influencing Congress, he has to make people aware of the issues."

She said campaigning for the 1996 election was not the main reason Clinton made the visit.

Clinton made the visit.
"They're not really into

she said.
David Derge, an SIUC political science professor the added that any political visit has the dual purpose of addressing issues and of addressing issues and campaigning.

Derge said Clinton does have great speaking and campaigning skalls. "It was very nicely done," he said of the visit.

The man has a well deserved reputation as a good campaigner."

Suzanne Daughton, an assistant speech communication professor, said Clinton's effectiveness at public speaking stems from several things. She said referring to spe-cific groups in the audi-ence, such as the Lincoln ence, such as the Lincom Middle School and stu-dents from Indiana University, strengthened his speech.

I talked to a (SIUC) student just a few moments ago who told me that the difference of this year and last year was a difference of four months and one week in getting the student loan," Clinton said.

Clinton said the benefits of direct student loans and other financial aid programs outweigh the Republican argument that eliminating such programs would balance the budget.

"Do not be fooled by the smoke screen of balancing the budget," Clinton said. "We are all for balancing the budget. You do not have to balance the budget by cutting college aid. You do not have to bal-ance the budget by shortcuttig the future of America."

NCAA appearance in a few years

Nonetheless, they are a team loaded with a talented senior squad and a multi-talented young bench who deserve the same recognition and support that other Saluki athletic organizations receive; it's a shame that recognition is so hard to get.

The fact that fan support can influence the outcome of a game, or an entire season for that matter. is nothing new.

After all, it has helped in bringig three MVC tournament titles to SIUC basketball and it no doubt helped the spikers against Indiana

Just think of what crowds of over 375 at each home game would do for the spikers; I guarar tee it would only enhance their already talented style of play.

Volleyball is a game of momen tum and motivation. The size of the crowd only helps to increase the level of motivation on a team, which in turn, enhances the style of play.

If you've never ventured into the confines of Davies Gymnasium do so; you'll find that the performance of the spikers is nothing short of exciting.

Regardless whether or not you know anything about the sport does not matter.

What matters is the importance of supporting those who have the desire to work hard to make it exciting.

This year's squad is loaded with talent and anyone who attends a home game will have the pleasure of witnessing the action that makes volleyball such an exciting sport; whether it be a service ace by Heather Herdes, a kill by Alicia Hansen or a dig by Kim Golebiewski.

Watson said being positive is the key to any successful football program.

"If you haven't got what I'm about right yet, I'm about being positive and really, if your going to t things done its to be positive, Watson said.

"If you continue to accentuate the negatives and look at things in a bad way, that's where your headed. "Your headed for a loss; your headed for failure, and I'm not going to do that."

Watson said part of being positive is being honest with the players in good times as well as bad. "I am going to tell them the truth.

I'm disappointed in our perfor-mance on Saturday. I am disappointed because I expect a lot better out of them," he said. "Am I going to worry about those things? No. We have to coach against them.

"That's part of the psyche of coaching, you have to get in their heads a little bit."

One of the changes Watson plans on making this week is a spring drills type of practice on today and Wednesday.

"We're going to have a little dif-ferent format this week," he said. We're going back to a spring practice format, where we emphasize fundamentals on offense and defense and kids are put in positions where they have to make plays.

"I've got to go back to what I believe in and I believe in having physical practices on Tuesday and Wednesday, within reason."

The Salukis next game will be at Division 1-A Arkansas St. this Saturday at 6 p.m.

Saluki QB once again thrown into spotlight

By Chris Clark DE Assistant Sports Editor

Imagine being a freshman, third-string quarterback expecting only to learn the team's offensive system and, before midseason, being thrust into the starting role.

This happened to Saluki sophomore quar-terback Danny Smith when he was a member of the University of Miami (Ohio) football team in 1993.

"I would say at Miami,

I was surprised and over-whelmed," Smith said, "I went into camp with two majorly sprained ankles and I never thought I would play my freshman year, anyway.
'Then, all of a sudden,

Smith's putting his past behind him showed Saturday, when he was again thrust sinto the spotlight against Murray State. Saluki head coach Shawn Watson pulled starting quarterback Reggie Kennedy after a rough first half, and gave Smith the nod in the second half.

have played his way into the starting job against Arkansas State, Sept. 16.

Despite the Dawgs falling 35-3 to Murray State, Smith said he felt more comfortable Saturday as a Saluki than he ever did at Miami.

"Here, I feel like I've had to really work and really strive to get the starting position, and I feel really comfortable," he said.

"At Miami, I was unsure of myself at times - here, I'm not at all."

Although he will be the Salukis' second starting quarterback in three weeks, Smith said there is animosity among the signal

"Reggie and I, we're real close with Chris (Schullian) — and we help each other out, and that's why I think that we're growing as a unit at that position," he said. "I was helping Reggie in the first half last week, telling him what I saw (on the field).

"Even after he (Kennedy) came out, he'd come to me every time I would come off the field and just tell me what was going on, or 'don't worry, shake it off.

SIUC spikers need more fan support; no-shows missing exciting contests

On the surface, fan support for Saluki athletics seems even across the board.

Despite last year's disappointing season, the football team still has its crowd. The Arena is always packed during basketball games and even the baseball team draws its fair share of fans to the Hill.

However, unbeknownst to many. a great number of fans fail to flock to Davies Gymnasium to watch the spikers play their game of volley-ball; an unfair token of appreciation given to a team that deserves much more. If this does not apply to you, please don't take offense; if it does, you don't know what your missing. In case you missed it, Friday's match against Missouri Valley Conference rival Indiana State dre a rare, but welcome crowd of 375. The fans who attended were not disappointed with the spikers' performance. SIUC blew the Sycamores right out of Davies Gymnasium wd support.

Saturday was a different story, nowever, as the football team drew the crowd away from Davies. Blame it on timing or whatever you wish; the fact remains that the spikers deserve some recognition in the form of a consistent full house.

There is no doubt that the SIUC volleyball team has had a history of low numbers when it comes to fans. The only question is why such a tal-ented team fails to pack the house— especially now that it's
