High-schoolers may administer USG election aid

Sanders appointed to Ryan's education transition committee

Jay Sevah
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIU President Ted Sanders is among 38 people appointed to the Education and Workforce Committee, Governor-elect George Ryan announced Friday.

The Education and Workforce Committee, part of Ryan's Gubernatorial Transition Team, is the first of several committees Ryan is expected to announce for his transition team. The committee intends to study education issues and make recommendations to Ryan regarding initiatives to consider once he takes office in January.

The committee is made up of a diverse group of members, including teachers, students, business leaders and administrators. The committee is chaired by Illinois Education Association President Bob Haisman.

"I wanted to unveil the education transition committee first — before we announce any others — so they can get to work immediately," Ryan stated in a press release. Sanders was unavailable for comment on the appointment, but Nelson Ashline, executive assistant to the president, said Sanders is enthusiastic about serving on the committee.

"Sanders looks forward to it," Ashline said. "He has many things he can offer the committee in terms of advice on primary, secondary and post-secondary education." Ashline, Sanders and Ryan are long-time acquaintances, dating back to Ryan's days in the General Assembly. Ryan came to know Sanders during that time, who served as the Illinois Superintendent of Schools from 1985-1989. According to Ashline, Ryan and Sanders have remained friendly.

Sanders is the only public university president on the Education and Workforce Committee.

The idea was to get someone who was not biased in any way to judge the elections.

Atherton said he wanted to involve high schools in the area, to give them some experiences in the political arena and as a way to introduce them to SIUC in hopes that some might decide to attend the University.

The reform stems from last year's elections, which were characterized by many violations from several parties and an outcome questioned by the losing candidates.

After discussion by the senate, Ben Syfert, College of Agriculture senator, recommended that USG invite Keith Smith, the Youth in Government program coordinator, that USG was at least interested in considering the possibility of approving the amendment. The current election system consists of an Election Commissioner and members of an Election Commission. The election results from the spring were questioned by Isabell Saluki party candidate Sean Henry. After examination by the USG Judicial Board, the election was found to have violated the USG Constitution.

The Judicial Board allowed last year's election results to stand, however, and recommended that the possibility change be looked into for future elections.

The original mandate, submitted to USG at the Nov. 4 USG meeting, asked that JAC look into changes. It was written by Rob Taylor, a student activist, and submitted by Greg Henk, senator for the second legislative district.

"This is to be good for everybody," he said.

He added that he hopes to see the change in time for the elections next spring.

"We might need a constitutional amendment, but I don't see a problem with that," he said.

Reinhart said he believed the system was implemented without the need for an amendment because the current guidelines do not specify or exclude any process.

Dean’s book features role of television correspondents

RYAN KEITH
DEAN OF MASS COMMUNICATION

For Foote, who has been studying the role of correspondents since 1993, the move from a focus on relatively unlimited reporting to making a profit has been a slow but painful process for news correspondents in the last decade.

"The bottom line was the job wasn’t what it used to be," Foote said.

"They didn’t have the autonomy that (renowned journalist) Edward R. Murrow had, where you could go out all over the world with a camera and say, ‘We’re going to report and send it back and have it on the air virtually untouched.’"

The book examines the downward fall television news correspondents have had to suffer from as the medium has transitioned to focus on media outlets toward financial profit.

The 159-page book, which is published by Southern Illinois University Press and retails for $19.95 per copy, details the experience of a host of renowned journalists, including ABC’s Ted Koppel and CNN’s Gariick Utley.

For Foote, the challenge was to make the book relevant to students and professionals working in the field.

"For the students and professionals who read this book, the book is a guide to the current landscape of journalism and what they can expect.

"For the general reader, the book provides a historical perspective on news correspondents and how the profession has evolved over time.

Journalists reflect on TV reporting

RYAN KEITH
DEAN OF MASS COMMUNICATION

Several prominent television news correspondents with experience around the world have different take on their role in the news media.

"I’m a journalist who has been working in television news for over 20 years," said legendary correspondent Peter Jennings.

"I believe that the role of the correspondent is to report the truth and to give the audience an accurate portrayal of what is happening in the world.

"It is crucial to have a voice that is independent and not influenced by political or commercial interests.

"The role of the correspondent is to hold power accountable and to bring to light issues that may otherwise be ignored or swept under the carpet.

"This book is a reflection of the changing landscape of television news reporting and the role that correspondents play in that landscape.

"I would encourage anyone interested in the field to pick up a copy and read the book.

"It is a valuable resource for anyone who wants to learn more about the role of the correspondent in the news media.

"I would recommend this book to anyone who is interested in the field of journalism, or who wants to learn more about the role of the correspondent in the news media.

"The United States is a founding member of the United Nations and has been a strong supporter of the organization since its creation in 1945.

"The United States has a responsibility to pay its quota and support the work of the United Nations.

SIUE faculty picket for equality

MORE MONEY: Edwardsville staff demands salary increases comparable to SIUC peers.

DAVID FERRARA
DEAN OF MASS COMMUNICATION

Members of the Professional Staff Association at SIUE picketed Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning in an effort to attain an equilibrium with the Carbondale counterpart.

Professional staff at SIUC were given salary increases of 5 percent this year, but members of PSA in Edwardsville received a 1 percent increase.

LaDonna Holshouser, PSA president, said that Carbondale faculty and professional staff may have been given the increase because it is too universal.

"We are asking for at least a 5 percent increase," Holshouser said.

"We have quite a group of people, including counselors, lecturers, and researchers, who are here and are doing just as much work as everyone else, but they are not being compensated fairly.

Reaffirm support for out-of-state decrease

Sometimes less is more. Perhaps that is what the SIU Board of Trustees was thinking when it approved a decrease in out-of-state tuition rates in February.

Although the decrease does not go into effect until fall 1999 for all out-of-state and international students, the University is expecting non-resident student enrollment to increase as a result.

But the tuition decrease will come at a cost to the University—a cost of about $1.8 million to be exact.

The University is projecting a $1.8 million shortfall in the Fiscal Year 2000 budget as a result of loss of revenue from the tuition decrease. The shortfall does not come as a surprise to University officials, who predicted there would be an initial disparity in the budget. They made it clear in February that they expected an initial loss but were confident it could be regained with an expected increase in enrollment.

They also indicated a plan to step up out-of-state and international recruitment and retention programs in order to counteract the effects of the decrease.

The DAILY EAGLE supports the tuition decrease and believes it is an important gesture by the University in reaffirming its commitment to remaining a global university.

Although the University reports that international enrollment is up this year, it was not long ago that SIUC was losing international students as well as its standing as a global university. This will strengthen that standing as well as make SIUC more competitive with other universities.

But the University needs to show the specifics of the recruitment plan to combat the loss following approval of the decrease. University officials said they have made plans to send University representatives on international trips to university fairs to recruit students.

International Student and Scholars Associate Director Carla Copp said many international students are happy about the decrease and are spreading the word to friends and family.

Although word of mouth is a useful tool, it should not be the only tool. Aggressive advertising and government programs are essential to overcoming this shortfall by bringing in more students.

The tuition decrease does send a message to students that SIUC is committed to remaining a global university, but it is imperative that this message is backed by action to be a strong one.

Hmm... I heard that the newsroom has good coffee, too.

Thoughts and impressions '98

The key is a good columns to make one main point and to back it up with examples. This was what I tried to do last week when I wrote about the SIU football team.

The column was written with the hope of seeing a season ticket on Lincoln Drive while mowing across the parking lot to my 1A seminar. I thought it occurred to me that I may have never been more wrong.

Last week, I used the word "illiterate" to remind me that although life can sometimes be hard, but through being there, I also had a few more screenings sessions in my car while listening to Swing Out Sister's "Broken". I felt like I was living in the things that I've learned or realized from the past year and semester. So throw in some Maxwell or Everything But the Girl and While I'm not so much a fan of the music, but I can still appreciate the people and things around me.

On the serious side, as I have gotten older, I realize the importance of time passing. It's funny, I can't say that I enjoy doing that but I've been able to live through many factors. Mortality was one, and the death of my friend Jenny was another. Time will do a lot of things, but it won't really change the past. Sometimes I feel like I'm just starting to understand some of the things that I have. I still keep one eye toward the future on my goals and dreams, but I have learned to appreciate the people and things around me more than ever.

Yet there are things that no one can understand or can help you with. Academics is one of them, and I found my focus last semester was on more studies and the future (maybe a combination of both).

However, I realized now that making things that happen for a reason. It is a nice, vague explanation. My mind plays as I try to come up with reasons for why things happen and the timing of those events.

Why can't things happen earlier, later or most of the time not at all?

I wanted to write a "relationship" column—especially after reading James Fuller's "Life and Love: Conscious of the Confusion" and the first draft of Rick Gorden's column—"but I never got around to it.

Maybe it is because I'm more confused by love and the games of relationships than ever—though I learned so much just by watching what my friends went through. I've learned so much on the sidelines that I don't know if I want to enter the game.

People get me bugged in general. Pretentions run rampant in our society, and materialism is everywhere. Against was right all along, and it's obvious that no one wants to be the one that matches you win but how many elements and shoes you can sell.

Is there nobody of real existence and substance out there? It's kind of funny, though, when I said that "I would not speak to more than seven people until I get all my applications and other social self-justifying destroy (e.g., "I'm a student") and "I'm a student," a few other people or events into those early chapters or to make it better.

There's nothing you can do. So stay in the presents, I am glad that 1998 is about to close, and I am looking forward to 1999.

Take this note of this optimism (it might be the only time I have it). I feel that if I do and what do I and my heart and mind are supposed to do. I'm supposed to do everything— even the things that have eluded me in the past. You have failed the same.

This column is dedicated to the people who have inspired my columns and have made me think. In 1998: mom, dad, the entire PSYC department, Babydoll, C. Pham, C. Post, my two "SIU moms" BAE, "the girl who doesn't read page 4," Dr. Wade, Aiki, my boys at 311 W. Cherry, Dr. O'Bryham, Angela B., Rafa, etc, and co-workers and houses, I have failed to do too much in peace; Jim, my students, "A, Rashida, J, and my boys in 112 at the Point (thanks for being there through it all)."

Katie Sermsheims

Katie Sermsheims was wrongly criticized

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the recent letter critiquing the actions of the Department of Languages and Cultures. As an assistant director of Student Development, I feel that it is important to consider the implications of that letter.

The basic argument of the letter is that the department is hypocritical in its handling of diversity issues. I disagree. While the department may not have handled every issue perfectly, it has always been committed to excellence.

The letter also criticizes the department for not doing enough to promote diversity. I think this is unfair. The department has been proactive in this area, but this does not mean that it has done everything it could have done.

In my opinion, the letter is not as well written as it could have been. It lacks specificity and lacks a proper argument.

I believe that the department is doing its best, and that it is important to support it in its efforts.

Letter to the Editor

In the name of God (Gd) the Most Gracious, Most Merciful

I provide this letter to the DAILY EGYPTIAN and to all of the students of SLUC to ask for your personal input. I am directing my letter to The Hqryn, a word that means “You must find your soul’s comfort in reading other words.”

It is not a word in the Hebrew Bible, says, ”And fear the word which is useful, Which afflicted no particular (Gd) of those who are obedient; and know that God (Gd) is strict in punishment.”

This reads to me that woe gives people who believe in Gd’s word a sense of comfort and assurance, even if it can be an severe and unpleasant response from Gd. Furthermore, when people who believe in Gd’s word die their bodies are taken to the hospital. It is no longer in the same body. After too long a time when people needed to uplift their spirits, they turned to Gd. It is Gd who is the only one who is truly in the hospital. The Christian, to the church of Gd and the Jewish in the mosque. But there seems [to be] so much more smoking and drinking and other vices that are in the correct path to Gd. As a result, people are left to join only in the hospital.

There has developed over the year’s concept - a frame of mind if you will — that promotes the idea of “If it Feels Good, Then it Is Good.” The result is that we have an increasingly ill-informed society.

Well, “All is not good!” And those of us who know what it takes to develop the human character toward proper conduct of one’s life are ready to stay up now. Because this wondrous paradigm will be the destruction of all America and the world.

Recently one of my Christian friends pointed out to me that the only common sin between heterosexual and homosexual relationships was the set of fornication. I do not know what to say to any sexual encounter outside of marriage. In fornication Gd is越发 [and] marry [three] as a man is in all—and adulterous.

The word “Fornication, Good, Then it is Good” seems to advocate that one’s’s Thoul rules — not our Gd’s given commandments. A word which would point out how we can only reproduce and continue as a human race through men and women. Mas to mass sexual intercourse continues until the acts of human reproduction. I [to myself] I do not know what to say. Where is it? What’s going on? Marry their children [and create more children].

I wish I could better understand that which is happening. Many people love their pets. A man should be allowed to marry his sheep or a woman [the same for the man] be granted marriage in order to “fully express” that love. It’s all good, isn’t it?

Aerosmith’s designer shows up

Aerosmith’s designer shows up unprofessional-like attitude

Letter to the Editor

I noticed the SUU Arena last Thursday, so they were supposed to have rocked the television airspace with me on SCNYTV.

This is the second letter I have sent regarding arrangements through personal contacts to get an interview with an Americana music band or to contact the radio service on a SCNYTV show, “Everybody Wants Some!”

It seems to be a trend, again with me writing a message on my answering machine in response to the many phone calls I had written to the group about this matter. Through

On Thursday, plans were instead for a local Aerosmith music videos, and footage of a concert set up versus the concert set. I was amazed, I did not hear about it, but I am sure there was a group who would be on hand at the SUU Arena prior to the concert, and when they were there, I could ask them a few questions on camera.

I was ecstatic to say the least. All I had to do is show up and sit down and let Aerosmith’s designer show up unprofessional-like attitude. If anything, I will try to get a chance to visit some of the local fashion designers in the near future.

Perhaps if he knew he was being taped by my crew member with video cameras, he wouldn’t have warned me to the ego-spawned disrespect and disregard that he did.

When one watches the tape, they witness the designer, arm crossed, being unnecessarily rude and childish, then they ask, “what are we doing in front of our pre-made transactions with the secretary.”

The designer said that we were supposed to be there in the morning when I explained to him that the secretary noted the afternoon was the preferred time (and subsequently noted that perhaps it was not appropriate). He interrupted me with an intense tone, saying that personally he felt our SCOYTV show served no purpose. He would only do it if we made arrangements setting up folding chairs, but that was about it.

The whole thing was handled in the course of 15 to 15 00 30 on some three blocks.

I was surprised at his reaction.

I would love to know if he knew of his borderline harassment.

I suppose the “wait-lists” are not worth dwelling on; they just make the more interested people feel left out, feeling both embarrassed and degraded.

To an author Jerry Stahls, “This is how things happen. They call you up and say you’ve won the lottery, then when you start to think you’ve actually got the cash, they let you know they’re not completely sure about it; in fact, there’s good chance the lottery has been disconnected, and anyway, the most likely number is already sold away. But they’ll be in touch, make us up when you didn’t ask for it knowing you down when you start to believe that will never always the deal.”

The designer’s stance on the Aerosmith Importance Scale may have been high, but then he gave me no reason for making his ideas and film not appropriately, nor did he give him the right to change pre-agreed plans at his whim.

I should have known from the get-go that nothing is ever fully-fulfilled in show business. The situation was almost am斯特ダル — the vision of a dreamer not born down by a corporate figurehead. Fighting against the ego and the designer who will not seem to stand a chance of being Amustomed.

Rubbing stress the right way

Sheryl Hinchcliff provides some stress relief through the Massage Therapy Program for Anne Clough, a second-year law student, in the Recreation Center. The program will be giving free five-minute massages for students during finals week in Lent, Grinnell, and Trueblood Halls.

RUBDOWN: Students turning to massage therapy to deal with the pressures of end-time tests.

Anita Rothen
Daily Egyptian

In a secluded room filled with delicate scents and soft music, Anne Clough relaxes in a specially-designed chair while her therapist works out the tension and stiffness in her muscles.

Clough, a second-year law student from Carrollton, said she had been glued for the Massage Therapy Program in the Recreation Center and decided to try the program.

"At the end, you feel really relaxed and don't know what's going on in your life," Clough said.

Her therapist, Sheryl Hinchcliff, was soothed enough that she received her first massage that she wanted to incorporate massage therapy into her life.

"It's good for the people, and I enjoy helping them relax," she said.

Hinchcliff is a part of the massage program, which started in August when a therapist wanted to practice his massage skills.

The program is designed to increase interest in massage, and organizers will be giving free five-minute massages for students during finals week—between 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. Monday and Tuesday in Lent, Grinnell, and Trueblood Halls.

A finals-week massage may be the perfect study break for some students—benefits of massage therapy include the reduction of muscle tension, relief of tension-related headaches, improvement of muscle tone and the reduction of stress and anxiety.

The massage therapy program offers two types of services. A table massage allows the therapist to treat up to three areas of the body, including full-body massages, which can run from 30 to 50 and minutes and cost $23 to $50.

The other service is a chair massage. A person receiving a massage in the specially-designed chair remains cloaked and sojourned use the chair massage focused on the head, neck and shoulders of a person:

The chair, which is lightweight and portable, allows the program to offer on-site massages. A massage can be given in an office for $20 compared to a $23 cost at the Recreation Center.

Hinchcliff said when she does lengthy massages, she focuses on the skin, muscle layers, and bones of the body. She said she also focuses on the muscles and bones of the body. She said she also focuses on the muscles and bones of the body.

"I thought it was very professional," Clough said. "I thought I was going to get stuck in a chair, but she was very skilled."

Kathy Guilfoyle, assistant director at the Recreation Center, said she was prescribed a massage by her doctor after being diagnosed with stress-related degeneration.

"Massage therapists have a natural way about giving the proper therapeutic touch to people that not everyone would be able to do," Guilfoyle said.

The program offers different styles of massages. One type, the Swedish massage, is long, gliding strokes, kneading and percussion strokes on the more superficial layers of muscle. The Shiatsu and Acupressure styles, which use direct pressure to release knots along acupuncture meridians and the neuromuscular therapy, apply concentrated finger pressure and friction to release and break down sore areas of the muscled.

Clough said she was not only relaxed after her first time of massage, but she was given posture tips to break bad habits that cause the aches in her muscles. Because of her first massage experience, she has been telling other people about the massage therapy program.

"I thought it was very professional," Clough said. "I thought I would feel strange, but I felt very comfortable."

SIUC student makes television debut

KAREN BLATTER
STUDENT AFFAIRS EDITOR

When Tim Robinson went to Hollywood with the SIUC Hollywood Studies Program, he never thought his face would grace the television screen.

"I never thought that I'd get an audition," Robinson, a senior in the program from Du Quoin, said. "I knew it was a dream that would never come true."

Robinson will appear as diner number three in "Diagnosis Murder" on CBS tonight at 8. He had two lines spoken on camera and two off.

His appearance on television is the first time that anyone for the Hollywood Studies program was picked to be in a television show or a film.

The Hollywood Studies Program is designed to create connections for students and to give them the opportunity to have an internship. Robinson got the acting opportunity by chance. Over the summer, he worked as an intern for up-and-coming casting director, Victoria Berube. Berube approached Robinson and asked him to audition for the small part in an episode of "Diagnosis Murder."

The part he was cast for originally only had one line, but by the end of the filming day, the character had four lines.

Robinson said his short appearance in the show took almost a whole day to film. When he arrived on the set, he had his own dressing room and was treated well by everyone. "They took really good care of me," he said. "They kept on making sure that everything was okay." The six-hour day consisted of 10- to 15-minute shoots with breaks in-between. Robinson was given breakfast and lunch and also had the opportunity to talk to other actors.

While on the set, Robinson got the chance to meet Dick Van Dyke, who plays Dr. Mark Sloan, the main character of the program. ""Diagnosis Murder" is a light-hearted medical drama, and Van Dyke plays a doctor who, for the special medical consultant of the local police department, Dr. Sloan, often helps his police partner, Lt. Steve Sloan, played by Dick Van Dyke, in his real-life role.

"It was really cool to see Dick Van Dyke," he said. "I had seen him in other shows when I was a kid. He was just like I pictured him to be..." Robinson said he and some friends will gather in front of the television to watch his debut. Not until a couple of days ago, did Robinson realize how overwhelming it would be to appear on national television.

"I didn't realize that it is kind of a big deal," he said...
Horns of Plenty: MU330, Johnny Socko, Boro City Rollers set to take stage at Copper.

KELLY E. HERLING
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Having been influenced at a young age, Potthast, the guitarist and vocalist from MU330, said his mother encouraged him to sing and perform before the ripe age of 6. "I've been playing music for a long time, but what really got to me was when my mom would leave me alone in the bathtub," Potthast said. "To know that I wasn't drowning, she would make me sing so she could hear me. I would scream 'Old MacDonald Had A Farm' at the top of my lungs to get her attention."

"When we first started playing, we tried playing every song of music, but ska was the only thing we sounded good at," he said. "When we first got our CD in the mail and opened it up and booted it, it was the coolest thing. When we saw the song titles on the back, we knew this was right." Potthast, who influenced the line-up, said tonight at the Copper Dragon Brewing Co., 100 E. Grand Ave., Johnny Socko, MU330 and local act the Boro City Rollers are taking the stage at 10 for a plethora of local horns, rock-'n-roll and a ska beat.

"There is such a wide variety of styles. There's always a plethora of things we do," Potthast said. Members of all these bands said they consider themselves friends. Having performed in the area previously together, Boro City Rollers and MU330 prepare for an elaborate display of rock, ska and funk to please their audience.

"It is really good that we get to be a group effort," Minier said. "We are all friends, and everyone has to get involved."

Sinatra files released by FBI

Frank Sinatra was so sensitive to allegations that he was a draft-dodging Communist that he volunteered to become an undercover FBI informer, newly released documents claimed Tuesday.

Sinatra made the offer in 1950, the same year he smuggled $1 million to Italy for underworld kingpin Charles "Lucky" Luciano. The tantalizing double-sided portrait of the singer who befriended gangsters and politicians, while becoming an American legend emerged Tuesday in a glossy, 137-page intelligence file on Ol' Blue Eyes released by the FBI in response to news media requests.

The Sinatra files, a raw mix of fact, fiction and unproven allegations covering nearly four decades of his life, say he offered to work for the FBI about the time an FBI informant was accusing him of being Luciano's henchman.

Sinatra, according to an FBI memo on Sept. 7, 1950, used an unidentified go-between to tell FBI officials that he felt he had an opportunity "to do some good for his country and for the FBI." The singer, the memo continued, was "most interested in his support of "subversive" activities and his draft-exempt status during World War II.

"Sinatra consequently feels that he can cooperate without suspicion," the memo said.

The FBI, aware that Sinatra was at least 1,000 miles away in Las Vegas, ended "several" other gangsters, including Luciano, in the 1940s. Sinatra died in May at age 82. His family had no comment on the request, a spokesman said.

The documents claim that in 1949, after returning to Italy, Sinatra carried $2 million to Luciano in Havana in 1947 -- when most of the nation's top gangsters gathered there for a four-day meeting with Luciano.

Several other entries refer to his longstanding friendship with Chicago mob boss "Gabby" Giordano and to his association with Carlo Gambino, the long-time leader of one of the five Mafia families based in New York.

The files contain no mention of Judith Exner, the woman who allegedly had affairs with two men -- Sinatra introduced her to Giancana and President John F. Kennedy. The singer said he tried to use a campaign contribution from the late mob boss Spiri Agnew to get a gangster released from prison -- and that he himself failed to get the Teamsters to fund a casino project.

Sinatra also took to the redhating 1950s that accused and then cleared Sinatra of belonging to the Communist Party, said to any other. A former USG informant, newly released documents Tuesday, said Sinatra "feels that he had an opportunity to do some good for his country and for the FBI."

The FBI started its Sinatra file in February 1944, after Winchell alleged Sinatra had paid a doctor $5,000 to swear he was physically unable to serve in the Army. The FBI determined that Sinatra was found unfit because of an ear defect. Still, the file grew future.

There are virtually no Sinatra documents after 1980, when another of his friends in high places, Ronald Reagan, was elected president.

Hohosher said the union has been attempting to secure salary increases for SIUC's PAA employees since August and had reached impasse. "We are definitely looking to address matters of salaries and equity," Hohosher said.

"We are seeking to be treated as other members of the SIU system have been treated," Hohosher said.

A bargaining session has been scheduled for Dec. 18 to reach agreements with management officials.

Cook said he hopes the association makes agreements with administration representatives.

"This is an issue that could be settled quickly," he said.

David R. Vinoff, IBEA-NEA Organizer, said the pending dispute by administration may have been in response to arrangements made among PAA committee members.

"I believe that was a response to our organizing effort," Vinoff said.

"Only through organization can you ensure adequate salary and benefits into the future."

Although Vinoff could not comment on an expected time that Carbondale commitments by the Board of Trustees' regular meeting and during its lunch hour, "it is another way to heighten members of the S.I.U. system have been treated," Vinoff said.

"We are seeking to be treated as other members of the SIU system have been treated," Hohosher wrote.

In his preface, Jackson emphasized the respect for "the old guard." Utley remarked that while the book was successful in analyzing the situation, the future of correspondents lies on the Internet and in specialized reporting while waning away from long careers in television.

"I would rather have a news story reported by Garrick Utley because I know about his credibility based on years and years of experience," Vinoff said.

"I would not know that next time when I go to an Internet site. I want that credibility, and I like the packaging and the quality of writing that somebody who that kind of experience and talent brings," Vinoff said.

"Foote believes the future of television correspondents will not drop as significantly as Utley and others believe," Vinoff said.

"I'm not sure it's dead in the sense that I don't think the logical progression is that people are going to be more and more in their search for news," Foote said.

"They may be passive, but it may be a different channel that they're watching."

NASA plans for 2012 trip to Mars

(UWIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. — To Mars by 2012. The goal is embedded into JPS 60, a three-credit PNP class that focuses on designing a human mission to Mars in collaboration with NASA. Led by Larry Kuznetz, a former NASA space technology, the class offers students a chance to develop projects — ranging from space suit design to crew size analysis — that NASA could ultimately pick up and use.

The class, which will be held for the second time this spring, is part of an effort to increase interaction between universities and NASA.

NASA currently does not have a set human mission to Mars, but through the Human Exploration and Development of Space — University Partners, Program, NASA aims to form a pool of students with various universities, giving students a chance to make a lofty plan real.

"Everybody who's tried to sell a human mission to Mars, but no one has succeeded," Kuznetz says. It takes something like this to get a project off the ground, to fly.

...budding pilots, I just want to go (on the human mission to Mars) and I want to fly," says Terry Traylor, an airforce ROTC student. "I'd just like to have the opportunity to go and see the planets, to have the opportunity every two years — a window of time where travel from earth to Mars would be most efficient. It will take approximately six months to travel to Mars if scientists use the stage type of equipment and methods to send astronauts to the moon.

One team, Gordon, says they will design the spacecraft with the assumption that the researchers will be to Mars for two years. "You're talking about sensing researchers, the Mars mission, NASA will fund your own assign- ment — to create a Web site through which other universities, including Stanford and MIT, can communicate.

"If successful, NASA will adopt the Web site as its own and use it to coordinate the various universities' efforts on the Mars project," says Kuznetz.

"This spring, Smith says he hopes the group can build on the project and venture into space craft design.

In designing the spacecraft, the team will have to keep in mind certain logistics. Most likely, NASA will send researchers to Mars for either two or two years.

Because of the rotation and orbit of the two planets, NASA plans to have opportunities every two years — a window of time when travel from earth to Mars would be most efficient. It will take approximately six months to travel to Mars if scientists use the stage type of equipment and methods to send astronauts to the moon.

Gordon, Smith and a team of students will continue to design the spacecraft with the assumption that the researchers will be to Mars for two years. "You're talking about sensing researchers,

"We did research based on the Apollo suits, and we have given a good deal of guidance in terms of our research and methodology," says Kuznetz.

One of the most valuable lessons from the class, says Kuznetz, is that realistically, a mission to Mars would most likely take off during the year 2012. Still, he says he has high hopes for the students and the class.

"The greatest experience I ever had was during the moon landing, knowing I contributed to it," says Kuznetz. "That feeling that really, truly, that mission to Mars would more likely take off during the year 2012."

Still, he says he has high hopes for the students and the class.

newcomers will have immediate impact in competition. Particularly, he hopes freshmen Maria Appiah-Kubi and Darya Dolgovska will add some life to the 400-meter dash corps. Another newcomer is sophomore Tamajl Ames, who DeNoon said is throwing the shot put this year, that would have earned her sixth place in the MVC last year.

The trio joins several experienced veterans on the team, including junior Jenny Monroe (first in conference, 100-meter dash) and Felicia Hill (second in the high jump).

"I've never liked to say that a team is too young to succeed," DeNoon said. "I don't score half as many points as Indiana State and Illinois State." DeNoon believes his team is in position to make an early statement about the 1999 track and field season.

"I'm looking for something much better than our poor start last year (in the same quad)," DeNoon said.

"This year will be a lot more challenging, especially since we're not as skilled and we're not as experienced," DeNoon said. "Hopefully, we'll be able to step up to the next level and compete." The team finished fifth out of seven schools in last year's MVC indoor Conference Championships, and upward is the most likely direction this mix of young and experienced will go.

"We've got some moving up to do," DeNoon said. "I'm looking for the newcomers to make a tremendous impact. Winning the conference, both indoor and outdoor, is our primary goal."

Cusick

Unfortunately these questions will probably never be answered, and the national championship will last year's MVC indoor Conference Championships, and upward is the most likely direction this mix of young and experienced will go.

"I have a question for the future of college football. How long will it take you guys to develop a new generation of players that make college sports so exciting to watch? Why not have a football version of March Madness and have the top 16 teams (or however many necessary) battle it out? I think ESPN analyst Mitch Albom said it best when speaking of the BCS last week when he said, "If you take the 'C' out of BCS you lose what it really is -- just a bunch of BS."

BC$ not good for football

This past Saturday I watched for hours as college football games progressed.

The No. 2 ranked Brains were upset by the Miami Hurricanes 46-35; No. 3 Kansas State lost a double-overtime heartbreaker to Texas A&M 36-33, and No. 1 ranked Tennessee kept its national title hopes alive by coming back over Mississippi State 24-14.

A great day for college football, right? Unfortunately not.

Because the ever-controversial college football national championship format - the Bowl Championship Series or BCS - it looks like another great year of controversy will be in the offing.

The BCS is, in fact, a format that is supposed to create a national title game each year.

The Fiesta, Sugar, Orange or BCS Bowls. The BCS rankings are an average of polls from Associated Press, the USA-Today/ESPN Coaches, computer rankings and strength of schedule and tradition.

This year, the Fiesta Bowl - I'm sorry the (insert your corporate logo here) - will feature Florida State, which is supposed to be the national title game.

Tennessee, UCLA and Kansas State were battling for the right to a ticket to the Fiesta Bowl. After the upset, the No. 4 ranked Kansas State team that was last Saturday moved into the No. 2 position.

The Kansas State team, which remained No. 13 in the BCS rankings, received another dagger this weekend as the BCS committee still had the Wildcats on the outside looking in at unranked Purdue (8-6).

The Owls (8-5) squeezed into the Orange Bowl after receiving one of the two at-large bids. The Owls beat Temple 49-20 to win the Mid-American Conference Championship. Temple (9-4), which received an automatic bid for being the champs of the Big East.

What is this? I'm no Kansas State fan, but they were hooded. The BCS committee couldn't pass up the chance to make a quick buck when it was presented.

Florida seemed the logical choice to play in the Orange Bowl, which is played in Miami, because the Gators would be a better draw.

"I'd be lying to you if I said that didn't play a factor in it," Orange Bowl executive director Keith Tribble said during a press conference Sunday. "It's basically up to the discretion of the bowl to try to get people to the game and then to the area."..."I'm sure the Kansas State fans would have loved to make the trip to Miami rather than that same excitement up the Atlantic Coast... As for UCLA (10-1), No. 5 BCS? They will now play in the meaningless Rose Bowl against Wisconsin (12-1), No. 9 BCS.

There are many questions lingering throughout these BCS season. Who will be named national champions if Florida State wins the ACC Championship? Will Kansas State get knocked out of the BCS picture? They were only one play away - from playing in the Fiesta Bowl for the national championship and are still ranked No. 3 by the BCS poll.

Torica Hathaway's eight-grade report card led to more than just a "parent of an honor student" bumper sticker.

"Her 'straight A' report card helped persuade her father, Greg Hathaway, into allowing Torica, a sophomore in social work from Providence, Ky., to enroll her in football and baseball options at the university. Torica Hathaway said, "Since they saw that I was pretty good..." ever since he's helped me."

Torica's father gave her more than just lessons. It seemed he had found her every secret about Kentucky high school basketball.

At Providence High School, where her father served as an assistant coach, Torica earned national attention during her senior year. She was selected USA Today's Kentucky "Player of the Year" in the three sport of her choice.

"I'm proud of my game, but I'm proud of the team," said Torica. "I was proud that all three of us could do it together."

Torica scored more than 2,800 points, which didn't come easy. It took 380 minutes to set Kentucky records in all categories. She not only led her team in scoring, she also led the team with 36.5 points per game average. She also pulled down an average of 16.7 rebounds.

"She's just a natural," STU coach Karl Beed said. "She's a high school player, but she's still one of the greatest players. She could post up and use layups in high school over anybody."

Committee to FBS season even more than changing from high school to college basketball for Hathaway. Becoming a Saluki meant she would have to play guard as opposed to playing inside. But Hathaway made the proper mental preparation needed before entering a Division I program...

"In my mind, I already knew that I wasn't a star, and it was going to be more of a mental adjustment for the team," said Beed. "So it wasn't a big disappointment to me because I had already prepared.

A star among stars, Hathaway continues to impress this season. She leads the Salukis by averaging 13.8 points per game. But she has little concern for her role as a star...

"All I wanted to do was go out there and perform the best that I could. I didn't want to do what it takes to help the team to win."

HITTING THE BOOKS:

Two track and field athletes to miss meet because of finals

Rob Allen

Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC men's track and field team takes the phrase "madness" literally. Just ask Peter Forde and Brandon Arling, who will be hitting the books this weekend instead of hitting the track at Illinois State University.

Because of finals week and fall sports, men's head coach Bill Cornell will have to cope without his top sprinter (Forde), hurdlers (Drring), and thrower (Junior Mike Sandusky) as the Salukis open their indoor season of the Illinois State Quad in Normal Saturday.

Forde and Drring will stay behind in order to secure the grades they need during finals week.

Sandusky, who placed fourth in the Missouri Valley Conference Championships last year in the shot put, is still recovering from his ankle on the football field.

Cornell said the meet will be used as an opportunity for individuals to gauge themselves rather than a chance to make a run at MVC-foes, Illinois State University and Indiana State University.

"We're always anxious to look at the results (of the meet), but because of academics, football and basketball we've had to put it off," said Cornell. "We've not concerned about the score in this one."

Cornell said, "We want to use this as a yardstick for the individuals."

That is not to say some quality athletes are not hurting to Normal. Senior Romanie Archer will look to add to his MVC Championship accomplishments last spring (third, 400-meter-dash, fourth in 400-meter-dash as senior Baye Wilson (fifth in 400-meter-dash)...

Cornell firmly believes that a full-strength Saluki squad will be a force to be reckoned with this season.

"We think we're in the hunt for the conference championship, and I don't say that unless I mean it," Cornell said.

The Salukis' women's team will also begin its run for the title at the MVC Championships Saturday in Normal.

The Salukis will run into two of the races targeted in their MVC hopes - Illinois State and Southern Illinois.
