It's not just about money.

It's about...

RESPECT

Yes, salary and benefits are important issues. We all live in a society where one's value is in large measure determined by one's monetary worth. But money is not everything. Indeed, it's no more important than several other critical issues like faculty-student ratios, tenure & promotion guidelines, intellectual property rights, faculty layoff procedures, and other considerations that define the intellectual life of any great university.

But even though a university is now an integral part of today's complex society, it is distinctly different from almost any other modern institution. Universities trace their histories back to a time before there was industrial mechanization, a system of nation states, or even much contact between peoples of the world. Universities began and continue to exist as generators, storehouses, and disseminators of knowledge—not profit, not money, or even anything of the physical dimension. Ours is a product of the mind.

As such, we all come to the university with a certain idealism. We search for truth and to unravel the mysteries of our time. Whether student or teacher, we are admired by society, not for the material wealth we create but for the intellectual wealth we contribute.

Generation of that intellectual wealth is wholly dependent on mutual respect: respect for ideas counter to our own, respect for theory that challenges our assumptions, respect for each other in an atmosphere we know as intellectual freedom.

The Faculty's complaint today is not just that we are paid too little money. It is that we are paid too little respect. We have tolerated this disrespect for too long and believe it has now reached such a level that it threatens the viability of this university. We demand the respect we are due.

Examples of this disrespect are ample. It is disrespectful to pay us less than faculty at comparable doctoral-granting institutions. It is disrespectful to cut our numbers each year and replace us with part-time instructors. It is disrespectful to challenge our maintenance of tenure and promotion standards. It is disrespectful to lay monetary claim to our intellectual property. It is disrespectful to cut academic programs without our input. It is disrespectful to hire expensive out-of-town lawyers to bargain against us. It is disrespectful to say that students can graduate without the presence of Faculty on campus.

We who currently care for the Carbondale campus look back on a history of nearly 150 years and see the efforts of a dedicated faculty in the faces of thousands of proud alumni who respect and support their professors.

In the current contract negotiations, we are demanding the respect of our colleagues who have left teaching and have taken on administrative tasks. By an 88 percent majority, we have empowered our Faculty leaders to do whatever necessary to gain a fair contract, even if that means closing down the university. We do not want to strike, but we will do whatever is necessary to guarantee a quality education for our students, to gain a voice in governance, and to save our beloved university.

If you are concerned about the future of SIUC, contact your legislator or the SIU Board of Trustees. For addresses and other facts, see: <http://www.SIUCFA.org>

Diploma endures as important documentation for graduates

Katie Tillman
FSView & Florida Flambeau
(Florida State U.)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (U-WIRE)— Graduation. It's the time of year when a student walks across the stage and receives a piece of paper that will be mounted on the walls of offices and living rooms to come. But has anyone ever stopped to wonder where this powerful piece of paper called a diploma originated?

Diplomas have been used since the 1200s when European schools were granted the right to examine and license their graduating students. By the 1300s, the system of degrees had been arranged to modify the grid system. A student began working in an apprenticeship, which was his or her resume, or a bachelor's degree. Receiving the bachelor's degree was equivalent to becoming a journeyman in a craft. If one achieved a master's degree in a craft, one would then be qualified to teach that skill to an apprentice, who then completed his own journey through the system of degrees.

This system of education went unchanged until the 1700s and 1800s when the advancement of science made a huge impact on education. In more recent years, college degrees have been extended to include a large amount of highly specialized careers.

Once a student has climbed this hierarchy of degrees, there is only a small piece of paper that represents all those years and training a student has received. The diploma was originally printed on parchment paper made from the skins of sheep, goats or calves that had been prepared as a writing surface. Parchment paper was used because it was highly durable. Even today, scrolls printed on parchment paper in 1500 BC are still intact. Using this durable paper not only insured that the student's only record of his level of skill was preserved, but it was also symbolic of how everlasting an education is.

Today, diplomas can still be printed on parchment paper, but they are also printed on heavy card-stock paper. It is ultimately up to the discretion of the school.

Ordering diplomas for an entire graduating class at large schools, like Florida State University, is quite a task in itself. To coordinate graduation details like this, Florida State University has an entire graduation office.

Diane Skinner is Director of Commencement for Florida State and is a fountain of knowledge on the life of a diploma in the 21st century. According to Skinner, Florida State University is under contract with Josten's printing company to print diplomas every year. Once the graduation office receives a final listing of graduates, they send the list off to Josten's about 2-4 weeks before graduation. Usually, the diplomas are delivered to the school by the time graduation ceremonies are held, or soon thereafter, but diplomas are not received until two weeks after commencement.

Naturally, students wonder where the diplomas are in the layover period. FSU's graduation office reviews each and every diploma by hand to check the spelling of the names and to make sure that each major is correct. These are the only documents that prove a person's education and they will be around for a long time. Skinner and her staff want to make sure that they are absolutely perfect before they get to the student.

From here, it is up to the student how the life of the diploma will continue. For some, a diploma is put on walls behind big mahogany desks, soon to be followed by plaques and eventually other diplomas. For others, a diploma is hung in their parents' home in the living room, next to the pictures of grandchildren and other accomplishments the family has achieved. And still for others, they are put in a drawer or filing cabinet, as just another piece of paper documenting their existence.

But no matter what one chooses to do with their diploma, that doesn't change what it represents. It represents late nights in the library, cramming for an 8 a.m. exam all night. It represents enduring early morning classes on rainy days when you have a cold, just so you can earn that one point on your final average for perfect attendance. It represents four years, or seven years, or eight years or more of education. Only if you have endured that education can you truly appreciate that small piece of paper we call a diploma.

The graduation speech none of us will receive

Daniel Cucher
Arizona Daily Wildcat (U. Arizona)

TUCSON, Ariz. (U-WIRE) - Parents. Students. Faculty. I'd like to welcome you all to the graduation ceremony for the class of 2002 and a half. (Wait for applause.)

Most of us began this journey four-and-a-half years ago, in the late summer months of 1998. It was August: hot, humid, dusty. The dorm rooms smelled like new stereo equipment and Ozium.

Some of us will spend the rest of our lives trying to preserve these memories. In the midst of an unlivable life, we'll remember the good times we spent in Tucson with our friends and lovers, flipping through pictures and trying to relive college one snapshot at a time.

This is to be avoided at all costs. College should be remembered fondly, but without longing. Too many people use their college experience as a reservoir for serotonin-releasing memories. Their lives are unhappy because they never figured out how to move on, how to exist outside the university bubble. They never adapted to change, to take joy out of it. These are the people who tell you that college was the best time of their life. It's sad.

If we have one mission as college graduates, it is to say goodbye. At the very least, it will keep us from staring back and turning into pillars of salt.

Some recent college graduates look like they just fell off the bus. They sit in the street, rubbing their wounds and wondering what fun and exciting city the bus is visiting this week. They wait for another one to come by and rescue them from the side of the road. It's a wonder that they don't stand up and start walking somewhere. Anywhere.

Maybe the problem is that there is no defined destination for many of us. In college, the goals are clear: One semester at a time leads to an eventual graduation. After college, it's a bit more difficult to flow with the current.

What do you want to be when you grow up? It's alarming how many of us aren't quite sure. But what's more distressing is how many of us know what we want to do, but are completely unenthusiastic about it. We were excited to go to college, right? Why can't we now graduate and passionately pursue ... something ... anything!

There is no reason why life has to slow down after graduation. If it does, it is our own fault for lacking enthusiasm. People always tell college graduates to take a year off and travel or do something completely different: Get a job in a faraway place, learn Swahili. This is good advice, but the year too often stretches into several years, then decades. Eventually, we're fluent in Swahili and managing the coffee shop, but we never wrote that novel or performed open heart surgery on an elephant like we planned.

The eventual fate of all human life is worms and decomposition. Now is our big chance. Sometimes, it helps to remind ourselves that we can go almost anywhere we want and do almost anything we want with our lives. Most of our limitations are actually illusions that we accept upon ourselves willingly, without ever putting up a fight. We must have faith in our ability. We must manifest our own futures before the worms get us.

Our college experience is already in the early stages of decay. Our photographs are stolen images that will one day also fade. What we are left with is an open door.

Congratulations. If you're graduating this winter, you hold a coveted place on the planet among the few people with higher educations. You won the lottery. Cheers! It's a big responsibility.

Now go out there and do good. And do it passionately.

Graduates: Two degrees are better than one

Margo Harakas
South Florida Sun-Sentinel

PORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (KRT) — Amos Legrand Jr. is a man of ambition. In December, just 3 1/2 years after entering the University of Miami, he will snare a double trophy; a bachelor's degree in political science and a bachelor's in geography.

"I think an extra degree gives you a broader education and makes you more marketable," says Legrand, 21, who hopes to get a job with the federal government or in education.

Legrand has made the most of his limited time at the university, packing 18 hours into each of his last three semesters and tacking on summer classes, as well. But in a competitive job market, he expects the effort to pay off.

"I think it shows you're able to handle more work than you have to, and that you can take on a lot of things at once and be successful at them," he says.

Legrand reflects a growing trend in higher education, of students opting not just for a single degree, or a major and a minor, but two degrees, sometimes in seemingly unrelated disciplines.

Sue Levitt, a 38-year-old single mother of four and a junior at Nova Southeastern University in Davie, Fla., is pursuing a dual major in biology and pre-law. "It gives me an option to go to medical school or law school," she says, looking farther down the road.

Levitt lives in Okechobee, Fla., and commutes two hours each way to the Davie campus. She's taking 18 credits, with all her classes packed into two days.

"My day starts at 4 in the morning and I don't get home till midnight," she says. On scholarship, she's managed so far to maintain a 3.7 grade point average.

It's high achievers such as these, say the experts, who are maximizing their education with dual degrees.

No one is tracking the trend nationally, but admissions officers note the upswing.

Albert Matheny, at the University of Florida in Gainesville, says, "It's becoming fashionable. It's like accessorizing your college experience."

Of the 11,000 students in the College of Arts and Sciences, about 7 percent (or 750) are on the dual degree track, says Matheny, director of the college's advisory center.

That's "probably a 100 percent increase in just four years," he says.

"Part of the reason is that the quality of the freshman class at the University of Florida is getting really, really high. We have smart kids who want to break out of the box. I had a student the other day doing a triple major and it made sense."

Sue Levitt studies in the library at Nova Southeastern University in Davie, Florida. She is working on a double major in pre-law and biology.

Helping to fuel the trend are the Advanced Placement, International Baccalaureate and dual enrollment programs offered in high schools. A high school student taking advantage of these programs can enter college with 30 hours of class time completed, the equivalent of one year.

"That gives you flexibility," says John Barnhill, of Florida State University in Tallahassee. "Instead of taking freshman English or freshman math, these students can jump into more advanced courses in those areas, or begin their majors earlier."

Among FSU's fall enrollees are 2,830 students with Advanced Placement scores, up 22 percent from last year, and 154 students with International Baccalaureate diplomas, a 15 percent increase.

Some students use the added credits to fast-forward through college, graduating in three years. Others, says Barnhill, decide, "I can spend the normal four years in college and get an extra degree."

That's the case with Barnhill's daughter, Jennifer, who entered FSU with 39 credits. Her plan was to major in multinational business and minor in Spanish.

"I talked to a teacher at FSU who said why don't you major in Spanish as well, so I decided I'd do both," says Jennifer, who is one hour short of being a junior.

She's now considering seeking yet a third bachelor's, in management information systems.

Certainly for the majority, the motivation is sheer economics. But some, drawn to the arts, see the dual major as a way to prolong at least a little longer a passion they or their parents view as impractical. They'll couple art with business, or theater with education, thinking the fall-back degree will provide a living until they hit it big on Broadway or at the MoMA.

Other overachievers, with an eye on grad school, wonder, as Rita Duetsch of the University of Miami puts it, "Does it look more rigorous (on the transcript) to present a double major?"

Two years ago, UM had 1,131 students declaring double majors. Last year the figure was 1,239. That's out of an undergraduate population of 9,418.

Depending on the university and the particular program, the number of additional credits needed for a second degree may not be that great.

"If you choose your classes carefully, and substitute your majors for electives, you can do things like this," says Legrand.

Carmen Sosa, an adviser in liberal arts at Nova, says that in some cases as few as 18 additional credits may be needed.

"You need 120 for one degree, and 138 for the second if you use your electives to fill the other requirements."

Florida Atlantic University in Boca Raton has witnessed a doubling of dual majors in the past few years, 232 last year compared to 106 four years before. Among them is junior Michelle Williams, who is pairing criminal justice with political science.

"A lot of the courses you need to satisfy criminal justice are the same for political science," notes Williams, 22.

Like Legrand and Levitt, Williams didn't come to college with credits earned in high school. Carrying 17 hours and working 11 hours a week, she may have to go an extra semester, but she doesn't care.

"I decided to do both because I thought it would give me a good background for the career I want to go into, which is law," she says.

While the better students are most apt to take on the challenge, even for them the extra load is not a breeze.

Levitt, a former Tampa police-woman, concedes that without the support of her mother, her oldest daughter and her ex-husband, she could not possibly pursue her dream.

"It's a lot of hard work. I'm studying all the time," she says. "Those two days I'm on campus, I go to five classes. In between classes, I go to the library."

Legrand, who keeps his focus in these final weeks by envisioning the graduation celebration his family is planning, realizes had his academic appetite been less voracious, "I could be coasting now." Instead, he finds himself consumed with two senior seminars. "They're very difficult. There's a lot of reading, like 100 pages a night, and a lot of papers to write," he says. "But in the end, it's all worth it."

Successfully pulling off the academic combo, says Williams, "requires a lot of commitment and sacrifices." As well as organizational skills.

"I have a study timetable, and a daily schedule. I find that to be helpful.

"If I were not organized, I know I'd be a lot more stressed."
