Student candidates decide to appeal

Low funds delay action: Lack of due process in first hearing cited as reason for appeal.

By Stephanie Moletti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Three student candidates decided Thursday to appeal a ruling which so far has kept their names off the Feb. 28 Carbondale election ballot.

Mayoral candidate and SIUC student Matt Parsons, said the candidates' Collinsville attorney Carl Runge has not drawn up the appeal yet, but is moving in that direction.

Circuit Court Judge Dan Kimmel affirmed the Carbondale Municipal Board's Jan. 9 ruling which found there were too many invalid signatures to allow Parsons and city council candidates Lorenzo Henderson and Anne Helene Lundsteen to appear on the primary ballot.

Parsons said he expects the appeal to Kimmel's Feb. 3 decision to be filed Monday at the 5th District Appellate Court in Mt. Vernon.

Parsons said the candidates have to file the appeal within 10 days of the first ruling.

"(If the appeal) is based on the fact that we didn't receive due process," Parsons said. "We will prove we didn't know we could call witnesses (for the first hearing)."

He said the judge can dismiss the appeal, but must hold a hearing first.

"I'm sure the city will file for another motion to dismiss," Parsons said.

Parsons said he hopes the appeal will get the student candidates' names back on the Feb. 28 city election ballot.

He said the candidates had not appealed the decision earlier because of lack of funds for legal expenses. However, in the last few days the candidates have received several private donations.

The candidates will have a fund-raiser next week, tentatively planned to occur at Oriental Foods, East K-Mart Plaza. Another fund-raiser is planned for the following week on campus.

The board found that Parsons had 61 of the required 64 valid signatures needed; Henderson had 49 signatures and Lundsteen had 43, based on the county clerk's roll of registered Jackson County voters.

If the student candidates fail at this appeal, they have the option of being write-in candidates, but have to apply by Feb. 24.

'Pound' slapped with 2 technical fouls

By David Vingren
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The diehard group of Saluki fans that call themselves the Dawg Pound finally crossed the line with other fans and Athletic Director Jim Hart, and prompted referees to "T them up."

Hart spoke to the two officials prior to Thursday's SIUC versus Creighton game at the SIUC Arena telling them to first issue a warning to the crowd upon the first time hearing "vulgar" language and a technical foul against the Salukis there after.

In the first half, officials did not react to the phrase "you suck," which the section screams out in unison any time the opposing team hits a free-throw. But midway through the second half the officials instructed the public-address announcer to warn the audience that any further use of profane language used by the fans would result in a technical foul against SIUC.

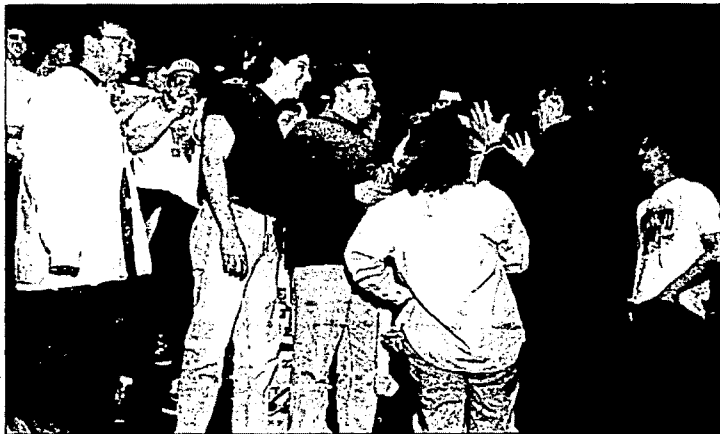

"This is not the image we (SIUC) want to portray. It's not the way we should treat guests or families with little kids," Hart said.

"The phrase 'you suck' is not bad in today's terms, but not in the presence of a five year old.

"I hear protests from more and more people each week. People threatened not to bring their families anymore."

Hart said the officials did not address the shouting of the phrase in the first half because "they must not have heard it."

The warning and first technical foul only provoked most of the Dawg Pound to shout the phrase even louder.

"It's kind of a protest," "Dawg Pound leader" Chris Wallace said. "They don't want us to say you suck but that's not profanity. It's just a form of harassing the other team."

Wallace said he will encourage the fans to refrain from using the "vulgar" language when a game is close and a technical foul could be the difference in a Saluki loss.

"We would never do that in a close game," he said. "We'll just do it when we're winning by a lot like tonight."

Hart said he has the backing of SIUC coach Rich Herrin and will continue to ask officials to issue the warnings and technical fouls, even in a close game.

Wallace said he and other Dawg Pound members plan to look into NCAA rules to determine if officials are justified for issuing a technical for "you suck."

"I really love the Dawg Pound, and I know we've got a lot of guy's in it who don't believe in it (vulgar chants)," Herrin said.

"We just asked them to clean it up themselves, and that's about all we can do"

Crab Orchard incinerator 'done deal'

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A contract for a toxic-waste incinerator at the Crab Orchard Wildlife Refuge was announced Thursday by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, despite some citizen opposition.

Guy Lombardo, project manager for Schlumberger Environmental Services, said the contract was basically a "done deal."

"We are essentially done, although we haven't signed the contracts yet," he said. "This is the stage where planning and report preparation begin to pay off."

At the meeting, opposition was

Kinkaid development still questioned

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

More than 200 people filled Davis-McCann Civic Center in Murphysboro Thursday night to hear the Kinkaid Lake developer again outline the potential benefits of a resort development.

Philip Taylor, head of Taylor Investments Corp., said the lake development would promote jobs and tourism in Jackson County.

Some of the benefits Taylor and Don Sargent, project manager, outlined were high-paying union jobs, public facilities at the resort area which would be available to area residents and an increase in Jackson County's tax base.

Lengthy agenda keeps the Jackson County Board from discussing the Kinkaid Lake ordinance.

warnings about courtesy from members of the Kinkaid-Reed's Creek Conservatory District Board.

In opposition to the development, former Carbondale city engineer Bob Wyatt presented the results of soil-type testing done by the State of Illinois on the south shore of Kinkaid Lake.

He said the soil, which was deposited on bedrock as silt, is less than six feet deep, adding the state of Illinois declared the soil to be "extremely fragile, highly erodible and not suitable to build on," about 25 years ago.

"The full responsibility will rest on the members of the board and I hope they won't take this responsibility lightly," Wyatt said.

Taylor utilized a slide show of a resort in northern Minnesota his company built in conjunction with the state several years ago.

He said both the state and resort guests are "tickled pink" with his work, and he will bring the same quality to the proposed Kinkaid Lake development.

Taylor said he has spoken with more supporters of the project than opponents.

"There are a lot of people who

ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN LEADERS POINT FINGERS — JERUSALEM—An angry meeting between Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat on Thursday deepened the sense of crisis in Israeli-Palestinian relations, with each side accusing the other of endangering their peace agreement. The two leaders agreed to meet again in one week to try to break a deadlock over how to move negotiations forward. During talks Thursday, Rabin listed steps Arafat must take before Israel would continue talks on extending Palestinian self-rule throughout the West Bank and redeploying Israeli troops out of West Bank towns and villages. Rabin demanded that Arafat disarm Palestinian factions in the Gaza Strip that have vowed to destroy the Israeli-Palestinian peace framework.

MURAYAMA WILL NOT RESIGN DESPITE QUAKE — TOKYO—Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama said Thursday that he accepts political responsibility for the "sacrifice of more than 5,000 lives" in the Kobe earthquake but would remain in office to rebuild the area and make Japan "a nation that is strong against disasters." Murayama made the comments in a special news conference about recovery measures his government is taking. The 70-year-old prime minister said he is aware of criticism of his initial handling of the crisis. But, when asked whether he would resign, he said that working to rehabilitate the earthquake areas "constitutes the responsibility given me now." After dodging two more questions about taking "political responsibility" — i.e., resigning — Murayama said he has a duty to revamp national disaster plans.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TERRORIST CAPTURED — NEW YORK—Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, the alleged mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, was captured in Pakistan after a two-year international manhunt and spirited back here Wednesday under tight security to face charges in the massive explosion. Officials said Yousef, 27, was seized Tuesday. He is accused in the blast that killed six people and injured more than 1,000 in the trade center — one of the worst acts of terrorism in the nation's history. Yousef is scheduled to be arraigned Thursday before U.S. District Judge John Keenan in Manhattan. In a statement, President Clinton called Yousef "one of the world's most sought-after suspected terrorists" and noted that he was on the FBI's most-wanted list. "The arrest is a major step in the fight against terrorism," the president said.

FOSTER SETS RECORD STRAIGHT ON ABORTIONS — WASHINGTON—Henry W. Foster Jr., President Clinton's announced nominee for surgeon general, said Wednesday night he performed 39 abortions and oversaw 35 more in his medical career, correcting the record in the face of evidence he had underestimated his involvement in abortion. Foster, in an appearance on ABC's "Nightline" arranged by the White House, said his earlier estimate that he had performed fewer than a dozen abortions was made from memory rather than a detailed examination of his records.

FOR-PROFIT CHILDREN'S CHANNEL PLANNED — WASHINGTON—The Children's Television Workshop, producer of "Sesame Street," is considering a major commercial initiative: the creation of a for-profit children's educational cable channel, according to its president and CEO, David V.B. Britt. Britt says planning for the channel began well before the new Congress set its sights on cutting funding for public broadcasting, but the initiative takes on a new significance in the current political climate. The workshop is quick to make clear that such a channel would not be intended as a new home for "Sesame Street," one of the signature programs of the Public Broadcasting Service.

UNION SAYS PROPOSED PAY RAISE NOT ENOUGH — WASHINGTON—The head of the biggest federal union says the 2.4 percent 1996 federal pay raise proposed by President Clinton is not enough. It's less than half the amount owed employees under the pay law enacted by the Bush administration and a Democratic-controlled Congress. This is the third year the president has proposed frozen or smaller raises for federal workers. John Sturdivant, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, says these pay proposals "jeopardize the middle-class status of federal employees" and could dilute the quality of federal services.

BOT names chancellor search committee

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

EDWARDSVILLE—Individuals chosen as representatives to the chancellor-search advisory committee were named at Thursday's Board of Trustees meeting.

Marco Nasca, a sophomore in political science, was appointed as the SIUC student representative to the committee.

Nasca said he is happy to be appointed and will be meeting with individuals in both student governments to get their input about the chancellor search.

He said both student governments are concerned with finding a chancellor who is accessible to students.

As an example, Nasca said he felt the student candidates currently trying to have their names places on the ballot in Carbondale's upcoming mayoral and city council races have not received much support from the University.

Candidate must support SIU students—appointee

"It seems as if the city has attacked them and the University has not supported them," he said.

"We are looking for someone who will have a specific interest for the students. We're the ones putting out the money to be here. We need somebody who is going to hear our concerns," he said.

He also said any student who has a concern about the chancellor search could get in touch with him at the Undergraduate Student Government office.

The SIUE student representative is Dan O'Conner, a senior in mass communications.

Patrick Smith, Graduate and Professional Student Council president, said he is upset that two undergraduate students were chosen.

"It would have been nice to have a graduate student somewhere in the process," he said. "Now there are about 5,000 unrepresented students."

"The best we can do is to keep in touch with the student representatives that were chosen," he said.

Chancellor James Brown said the undergraduate students were chosen because of their large population at both campuses.

"It's better to represent the largest body of students, and both universities have plenty of undergraduates," he said.

He said Nasca was chosen because he has been involved in several different activities.

Nasca is currently a student life advisor and a USG senator from Thompson Point.

Last year Nasca was the president of Abbott Hall. He also has been involved in the Thompson Point Executive Council and the Residence Hall Association.

O'Conner, the student representative from SIUE, could not be reached for comment.

Chancellor Brown has already narrowed the field of applicants for his position and has given his recommendations to the trustees.

The trustees are responsible for choosing the finalists. The finalists will be interviewed by the SIU Board of Trustees and the advisory committee.

Other individuals appointed to the committee from SIUC are:

- Marcia M. Cornett, associate dean of the College of Business and Administration, representing the Graduate Council;

- Lawrence K. Dennis, professor of Educational Administration and Higher Education, representing the Faculty Senate;

- Muriel D. Narve, medical technologist with Student Health Programs, representing the Civil Service Employees Council; and

- Judith G. Rossiter, academic advisor for the journalism school, representing the Administrative and Professional Staff Council.

Representatives from SIUE are:

- Penny J. Bodine, secretary in Admissions and Records, a representative of the University Staff Senate;

- William R. Feeney, professor of political science, a representative of the Faculty Senate;

- John R. Oxford, director of development services for the SIUE Foundation, a representative of the University Staff Senate; and

- Rudolph G. Wilson, associate professor of curriculum and instruction, a representative of the Faculty Senate.

Kinkaid issue fills meeting

'Show of support' fails to prompt discussion of lake

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Even with residents standing wall-to-wall at the Jackson County Board meeting Wednesday evening, the board chose not to discuss the proposed Kinkaid Lake subdivision ordinance.

Residents were told they could not discuss the issues due to time restrictions.

Murphysboro resident Lou Stark interrupted the board meeting to ask why the minutes from the previous board meeting did not reflect the Kinkaid lake issues that were discussed. He also asked if any other residents could ask the board questions about Kinkaid lake.

Board Chairman William Alstalt responded by saying the board was aware of the Kinkaid lake issues and discussion would not be necessary or possible because of the lengthy agenda the board faced.

At this, many residents booted. Some hissed. Most left.

Information circulated before the meeting indicated a petition would be presented to the Board, but no petition was presented.

"We do have a petition which we will present at the next Conservancy Board meeting," Stark said. He also said the petition contained about 3,000 names opposing development of Kinkaid lake.

The Conservancy Board is comprised of three Jackson County

"Sure, a lot of people showed up (at the Jackson County Board meeting), but they don't represent all of Jackson County."

Kay Allen
Jackson County Board member

Board appointees and two Murphysboro mayoral appointees.

"We do have legal options concerning this ordinance through the courts," Stark said. A lawyer has been retained and Stark said he and his group will sue if it comes to that.

Stark insisted he was not against development in Southern Illinois. He said he is unhappy with the idea of using the public property around Kinkaid lake for private profit.

"In 1974, the original plans for Kinkaid lake called for development around the lake. Things like public use facilities and a lodge were all supposed to be built," Stark said.

"The developer came in here initially and proposed to do just that. We wouldn't be opposed to that," he said.

Murphysboro resident Bob Wyatt said he was not surprised by the Board's reaction to the crowd because he knew ahead of time that the issue would not be discussed.

"We wanted people here as a show of force," Wyatt said.

Alstalt said no matter what his personal feelings about Kinkaid lake, by law, the Board must grant the subdivision ordinance if the developer fulfills all specified guidelines.

"We could just throw this mess into the Conservancy Board's lap and let them handle the subdivision, but that would not be wise," Alstalt said. "The mood of the people toward the Conservancy Board is not good right now."

Board member Kay Allen said despite the number of people who showed up at the meeting, she will not be swayed into thinking the Kinkaid lake project is a bad idea.

"Sure, a lot of people showed up, but they don't represent all of Jackson County," she said. "I get plenty of phone calls at home from many residents who say they are in full support of the project."

"The only reason they don't come to the meetings and speak publicly is because they are afraid they are going to get booted or hissed," Allen said.

Crossing borders: Festival aims for 'global' viewpoint

By Michael D. DeFord
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The 1995 International Festival, with the theme of promoting global appreciation, will prove to be bigger than ever with the addition of several new events, said Wan Kamal Wan Napi, president of the International Student Council.

Wan Napi said the purpose of the week-long festival is to allow people to learn about the many cultures and nations of the world.

Wan Napi said events for the '95 festival have been arranged differently to get more people involved in the event.

"In the previous years people thought the festival was only Saturday and Sunday during the fashion and culture show," he said.

"The festival lasts seven days, and this year we are starting the festival with the art exhibitions of the countries involved to generate awareness."

This year's events will begin Monday morning at 10 a.m. with a magic show and story telling in the Student Center Auditorium. Napi said over 600 students from area schools will attend.

Federal grant to upgrade 27 homes in Carbondale

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Carbondale received $300,000 in a federal grant from Gov. Jim Edgar Feb. 1 to renovate 27 homes on the northeast side of the city as part of the Community Development Assistance Program.

Edgar awarded the funds to Carbondale through the program, which is funded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Grants totaling $7 million were awarded to 37 communities in Illinois.

Jeff Doherty, city manager, said homeowners applied for the money, and a ranking system was used to prioritize the applicants. He said the elderly, those with very low incomes and residents on the northeast side of town were given top priority.

"The purpose of the program is to correct code violations and bring the houses up to standard," Doherty said.

Only homes occupied by their owners were eligible for the grants.

In the past 20 years, hundreds of homes were rehabilitated with money received under the Urban Renewal and Community Development Block Grants, Doherty said.

"We received a similar grant last year and we got our program up and going," he said.

Inspiration for 'Slaughterhouse Five,' Dresden bombing still touchy subject

The Baltimore Sun

DRESDEN, Germany—On the apocalyptic night when the British bombers came by the hundreds, Ingeborg Hommelsheim crawled from the cellar of her family's burning home to find the Dresden sky a red dome of fire.

It sucked the air from her lungs, burned her hair and tore her suitcase from its handle. Friends who had been caught outdoors earlier were blackened like logs. Those who'd sheltered in water tanks were boiled alive.

Across the city, American soldier Kurt Vonnegut listened to the attack from deep in a meat locker near a barracks for prisoners of war. Decades later in his novel "Slaughterhouse Five," he would call the attack a "massacre" comparable to Hiroshima.

Germans such as Hommelsheim have never felt free to be so blunt: for half a century the country has dodged the issue of what level of grief and anger is acceptable concerning the 70,000 dead of Dresden. But with this week's 50th anniversary of the bombing the specter of the tragedy will be too close to ignore any longer.

That's why the country will be paying careful attention when German President Roman Herzog speaks at commemoration ceremonies beginning Monday, wondering if at last a German leader will accuse other nations of incalculable behavior in the war in which Germans behaved worst.

Europe's Hiroshima

In its death toll, destruction and debatable morality, the bombing of Dresden that occurred Feb. 13-14, 1945, indeed invites comparison as Europe's Hiroshima. Dresden, like Hiroshima, was attacked chiefly to kill and terrorize civilians in a war already being lost on the battlefield.

But whereas the Japanese embraced Hiroshima as a symbol of their own losses and the beastliness of war, the Germans have kept Dresden at emotional arm's length. They've never reached a consensus on what their feelings should be, and high officials and public commentators usually grow edgy when anyone tries.

Anyone doubting the depths of this awkwardness need only ask Vonnegut how much reaction he's gotten from German readers to his Dresden book, a 1966 anti-war novel that still generates letters from American students.

The response to the German version? "Virtually zero," he answers. "No letters or calls."

Not even a passing remark during his later visits to Germany?

There are some Germans who would just as soon have Herzog say nothing at all about Dresden, or else place the ultimate blame on Germany.

"I beg your pardon, but he may not say that this was a war crime," shouts Moritz Mebel, a Berliner who strolled through the ruins of Dresden only a few months after the bombing.

Mebel thumbs through the browned pages of a pocket diary from those days, rereading his description of the city as he found it. "It was a horrible place," he says. "Only ruins. And of course at first I asked myself, 'Was this necessary?' But then I remembered Hermann Goering's words after the bombing of Coventry in England—'Koventrieren, ausraedieren,' ('People of Coventry, wiped out'), and Germans were applauding. So there you go."

Incinerator

voiced about incinerators in general as well as the handling of the local project.

Rose Rowell, a citizen of Herrin, made an impromptu presentation criticizing the EPA's handling of the public meetings.

"This meeting is being conducted because it has to be conducted," she said. "You are not here to listen to us, but to lull people into believing incineration is safe."

Four locations on the refuge were contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) through industrial dumping on the refuge after World War II, and in 1990 the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ordered Schlumberger Environmental Services to clean it up.

Lombardo said Schlumberger has contracted the project to Maximilian Inc. of Massachusetts, which will bring a portable rotary-kiln incinerator to the site.

The incinerator will burn approximately 50,000 cubic yards of PCB-contaminated soil in four to six months, and then be removed.

Rowell and others at the meeting said they opposed the use of incineration because it produces dioxin as a by-product, a toxin the EPA treats as a cause of cancer and other physical problems.

Richard Whitney, a member of the SIUC Lawyers Guild, said the EPA knows dioxin is dangerous, but has done insufficient investigation on incinerators.

"The fact is, dioxin is not very blatant; it is a subtle kind of poison," Whitney said.

Nan Gowda, EPA project manager, said the estimated amount of dioxin produced by toxic-waste incinerators is very small—smaller than that produced by many other sources, including residential wood-burning.

"We are currently doing a risk assessment for this particular project," he said. "In this assessment we will assume the worst, by being very conservative with our numbers."

support the project and understand what it can do for Jackson County and the city of Murphysboro," he said. "It will have tremendous economic impact for this city like it's never seen before."

Crowd members reacted unfavorably when Taylor said he did not know the total number of private homes that would be built on the 29.5 miles of shoreline slated for development.

Plans for development are awaiting further environmental testing.

and SIUC President John Guyon will be the guests of honor during the proclamation of International Week Monday at noon in the Student Center Hall of Fame.

"The festival has grown since it started, because of changes in planning and events," Wan Napi said.

"The festival is getting bigger and bigger every year," he said. "One thing we have added this year is the food."

"This year we are selling the food so each individual group participating can make a profit," Wan Napi said. "We have about 20 different countries participating, with five different dishes in each group."

"We also have a martial arts demonstration," he said. "The demonstration will consist of several different martial arts techniques and fighting demonstrations."

Suprotim Bose, from Student Center Special programs, said the festival is important to SIUC

"It is my belief that it is the cultural diversity of students and faculty that makes education at SIUC such a rich experience."

because it creates an interest in other cultures for students and the local community.

"SIUC has a large enrollment of international students, and this is the one time that people get to see other cultures in one place at one time," Bose said.

"The festival is as authentic as possible," he said. "You have real food, real arts and crafts and its a great way to show how people of other cultures live."

James Quisenberry, director of International Programs and Services, said the festival is a perfect opportunity to discover different cultures.

"This is a major event, one that has been planned very well," Quisenberry said.

"From the standpoint of the international student, it is an opportunity to share culture with the SIUC campus and the Southern Illinois community."

Joanne Yantis, University Programming coordinator, said the events added to the festival will make it the best one ever.

The festival will end on Feb. 19 with the culture show, featuring students performing a cultural song and dance.

"The climax of the festival will be the culture show," Wan Napi said. "This will include a folk dance and some countries will show the background of their country through scenes of everyday life."

SIUC has more than 2,000 international students from over 100 countries, which Napi said, adds to the learning experience.

"It is my belief that it is the cultural diversity of students and faculty that makes education at SIUC such a rich experience," he said.

"The International Festival has made an important contribution in attempting the bridge the gap between ignorance and knowledge of different cultures."

All counties in Illinois are eligible for funding, except for seven in the Chicago and Metro East areas, said Lynn Morford, spokesperson for the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs.

"The funds go to communities of local governments with a population of 50,000 or less that don't receive their funding directly from HUD," she said.

Doherty said Carbondale will apply for more funding in the future.

"We want this to be an ongoing program," he said. "As we feel we have adequately addressed the needs of the northeast (side), we'll move to other parts of the community," he said.

A True Confession

FRED'S
Live Music Every Saturday Night!

I don't know how it happened... at first I was going to SIU, Living at Thompson Point doing what SIU students normally do on the weekends; going down to the Strip and standing around with the rest of the people pretending to have fun. Then one time I went to FRED'S. I couldn't believe it! Everybody was dancing, well maybe 75%, but when was the last time you've seen more than 10% of the crowd dancing up town? Even my friends who said they didn't like country music were dancing up a storm. You know, all those places say they are "The place to party," well they don't even know the meaning of the word. So, anyway, now I'm hooked on FRED'S. I confess... FRED'S has really spoiled me! - Dana Davidson

Bagel man Winston recovers from accident on interstate

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Winston Mezo

Students who frequent the Strip this weekend will not be seeing Winston Mezo, the bagel man. He will be at home recovering from an accident.

Mezo said his jeep slid off Interstate 57 near Sikeston while he was returning from a trip to Missouri Monday.

"My pride hurts more than anything else," he said.

"I've driven jeeps, trucks, tanks, and 18-wheelers in a lot worse conditions. It just got away from me."

Mezo said he was hospitalized overnight at the Missouri Delta Medical Center for observation, but did not suffer any serious injuries from the accident. The jeep he was driving flipped over three times and was totaled, he said.

"I'm just grateful," Mezo said. "The truck is totally destroyed, but I can get another truck."

Mezo said he will have employees manning the bagel carts, but he does not feel up to working.

"I feel like I got in a baseball bat fight and I was the only one without a bat," he said.

Mezo said he expects to be back to his regular schedule by Monday.

Tardiness: Students tired of waiting

By Dean Weaver
DE Special Assignment Reporter

Tardiness is a word not usually associated with professors, but many students find themselves waiting in classes for professors who never arrive.

Although it is considered a professional courtesy for faculty to notify classes of a future cancellation or in emergencies contact the department so a cancellation notice can be posted, students tell a different story.

Anthony Walther, a sophomore in Radio and Television from Maywood, said he remembers five occasions he was left sitting in a classroom waiting on a professor who never arrived.

Dawn Brobarney, a sophomore in administration of justice, is tired of waiting for tardy professors.

"It really makes me mad because they expect us to be on time," she said. "The first time I waited 20 minutes — now I just wait 10."

Peggy Herring, a junior in marketing from Rochelle, said she assumed the written rule was to wait 15 minutes.

Some students use a more complicated time formula that takes rank into account. David Shrumanski, a graduate student from Beardstown, said he thought the rule was five minutes for teaching assistants, 10 minutes for those with a master's degree and 15 minutes for those with a doctorate degree.

Kyle Perkins, associate vice president of academic affairs at SIUC, said he knows of no written policy on the length of time students should wait on a professor, but individual departments and colleges may have their own rules.

University Ombudsman Kenneth Ingrid Gadsday said she knows of no students who have issued complaints about faculty tardiness.

"If a professor comes in 15 minutes late and a student has left, there is nothing to protect them (the student)," she said.

Perkins said if students are unsure if the professor is coming they should check with the academic department office.

Police Blotter

Carbondale Police

■ Annie L. Carr, of 505-B S. Lake Heights Ave., told Carbondale Police her car was burglarized between 4 a.m. and 10 a.m. on Feb. 4. The offenders allegedly broke out the rear window of her 1981 Oldsmobile and took an in-dash radio and an amplifier. The loss is estimated at $200.

■ James Edward Young, 38, of Carbondale, was arrested for domestic battery, resisting or obstructing a police officer, and criminal damage to property in connection with an incident at 12:55 a.m. Feb. 8.

Police said Young had been using crack cocaine and got involved in a violent disagreement with his stepson, then left the residence. An officer attempted to arrest Young in the 300 block of Birch Lane Drive, and Young resisted the officer, striking him with his fist and tearing his pants, according to police.

Police said after Young was in the squad car, he tried to kick out the rear window, causing damage to the door frame. He was taken to Jackson County Jail and later released. The damage to the car and pants is estimated at $500.

University Police

■ University Police said an 18-year-old student was sexually assaulted sometime between Feb. 4 and Feb. 5. She did not want to provide any information and wants no action taken at this time, police said.

■ University Police said someone reported a man masturbating in Morris Library at 11:17 a.m. on Feb. 7. The man was described as white, 25 to 30 years old, 5-foot 10-inches tall, 210 pounds, walking with a limp. He was gone when the SIUC Police arrived.

■ At 5:31 p.m. on Feb. 6, University Police responded to a report of a person with a gun in Mae Smith. They found someone with a plastic gun, which they confiscated. No formal charges were filed in the incident.

■ Corey L. Meister, 21, of Carbondale, was arrested on Feb. 7 on a Jackson County warrant for failure to appear on a charge of fighting by agreement. University Police said they arrested Meister after going through the Recreation Center, where a disturbance was reported. He was taken to Jackson County Jail where he posted bond and was released.

■ University Police said Masroor A. Shamsi, 20, of Carbondale, was arrested for retail theft after he placed a micro cassette in his pocket and left the University Bookstore without paying for it. He posted bond and was released.

■ Devin L. Miller, 22, of Carbondale told University Police his bicycle was stolen from the area of Faner Hall between 4:05 p.m. and 4:45 p.m. on Feb. 7. The loss is estimated at $200.

■ Charles R. Campbell, 44, of Carbondale, told University Police his book bag was stolen from Wham between 4:30 p.m. Feb. 2 and 8:30 a.m. Feb. 3.

■ University Police said Jason M. Endicot, 20, of Carbondale, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol and disobeying a traffic control device on Feb. 9. He posted bond and was released.

■ University Police said Najjar M. Abdul-Musawwir, 36, of Carbondale was arrested Feb. 9 on a Jackson County warrant for failure to appear on a previous charge of driving without insurance. He was taken to Jackson County Jail, where he later posted bond.

■ Police said Allan V. Wood, 29, of Carbondale, was issued a citation for failure to yield the right of way at 4:25 p.m. on Feb. 6, after his vehicle collided with a vehicle owned by Christopher C. Woodland, 21, of Mulkeytown, on Lincoln Drive near lot 39. The damage caused by the accident is estimated to be more than $500 per vehicle.

■ University Police said Jianxiang Peng, 23, of Carbondale, was issued a citation for improper backing Feb. 7 in connection with a three car accident in lot 10-a involving Cynthia Roth, 31, of Murphysboro, and Lea Ann Flanagan, 29, also of Murphysboro. The damage caused by the accident is estimated at $300.

■ University Police said Shao Shiyuan, 32, of Carbondale, and Scott K. Pharis, 25, of Hoffman Estates, were involved in an accident Feb. 7 on Lincoln Drive west of Douglas Drive. No citations were issued in connection with the accident and no injuries were reported.

The damage caused by the accident is estimated to be more than $500. ■ University Police said Xiaoyang Zhu, 31, of O'Fallon, and Travis Cacciatori, 20, of Thayer, were involved in an accident at the intersection of Douglas Drive and South Oakland Street. No citations were issued in connection with the accident and no injuries were reported. The amount of damage is unknown.

SIUC alumnae to visit School of Journalism

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Two Washington Post journalists will be on campus today to offer professional insight to students, faculty and the general public.

Staff writer and columnist Courtland Milloy and reporter Lonnæ O'Neal Parker are both SIUC graduates. Milloy graduated in 1973 with a bachelor's degree in journalism and Parker is a 1988 graduate of the School of Journalism.

Parker said it is very gratifying to be invited back to the School of Journalism.

"It is a dream come true to be able to write for the Post," she said. Parker said she started by answering phones there but had a goal to write. Some people come in with high credentials, she said, others just have to find a way to move up.

Reporters to discuss merits of practical experience

Parker is currently working as an editorial assistant at the Post, she said. In June she will become the Metro reporter for the newspaper.

She said that since the market has changed, aspiring journalists, especially at the junior or senior level, need to write, whether it be on a volunteer basis writing a newsletter or with a daily publication.

"It is a dream come true to be able to write for the (Washington) Post."

*Lonnæ O'Neal Parker
Washington Post reporter*

Professor Anna Paddon said she is glad to have alumni come back and talk with her journalism history students.

"We may be taping the presentations so students will be making history as well as studying it," she said.

If taping is done, they will be part of the library's special collections, she said.

Bill Elliott, associate dean of the College of Mass Communications and Media Arts, said it is not very often the School of Journalism hosts professionals from one of the top five newspapers in the country.

"It's a chance for students to have access to very successful individuals in the journalism profession," he said.

Milloy was a staff writer for the Daily Egyptian from 1970 to 1973.

The articles he wrote on campus relations led to a summer internship at the Miami Herald in 1972.

While writing for the Style section of the Washington Post, Milloy profiled such celebrities as former heavy weight champion Muhammad Ali, painter Lawrence Jacob and the late reggae singer Bob Marley.

Dave Kazak, vice president of the SIUC chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists, said it is a good opportunity to meet and talk with professionals in the field who are former SIUC students.

SPJ is sponsoring an open forum for the public in room 171 of Lawson Hall at 2 p.m.

Trade war to cost students

Made in China:

Students would pay higher prices for many everyday purchases.

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students could be spending more at the store for such basic goods as picture frames, gloves and tennis shoes if planned tariffs against Chinese goods go into effect because of a trade war half a world away.

The trade war, brewing in the government's political circles for the last seven months, was instigated by China's refusal to respect U.S. intellectual property rights, or IPRs.

IPRs cover such products as music CDs, computer software, video-taped movies and books.

According to the U.S. Trade Representative's office, China has been committing acts of piracy by copying these products and then selling them for a fraction of the true cost of the product.

U.S. Trade Representative Micky Kantor says the Chinese are reproducing close to 100 percent of videos and video games. Copyrighted computer software copying is about 94 percent, and 100 percent for CD-ROM programs.

The United States, angered at the theft of American products, has retaliated with a threat to impose 100 percent tariffs on many important Chinese products.

Products receiving the brunt American retaliation include bicycles, watches, fishing rods, jewelry boxes, knitted items such as gloves and scarves, gym shoes and cellular phones.

Pamela Rucker, spokesperson for the National Retail Federation, said college students buy a lot of the products targeted by the tariffs because they are available at big retail stores like K-Mart or Wal-Mart.

"Some of the bike prices will go up close to 80 percent," she said. "What college student doesn't ride a bike? The other products are going to see large increases also."

Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Diane Wildman said, "These tariffs really don't mean much to the average citizen because the products we are targeting will be available through other countries. Retailers will be able to buy other products from other countries."

"We don't expect to see prices rise from this," Wildman said.

But Rucker said even though it may not happen immediately, tariffs will have a negative affect.

"China gives us the highest quality products for the lowest price," Rucker said. "If we get them somewhere else, we will have to worry about the quality of the products we will be buying."

The tariffs will be imposed on the Chinese goods on Feb. 26 unless the Chinese prove they are doing something about the piracy problem.

"We cannot stand by while the interest of our fastest growing, most competitive industries are sacrificed in China," Kantor said Sunday. "So far, the Chinese have taken some steps, but they can have not addressed the major substantive problems — or the continuing operation of Chinese factories that mass-produce pirated products for export."

Microsoft spokesperson Beverly Bird said the impact on the consumer is only one side of the coin.

"You have to look at it another way. The computer industry lost $351 million to piracy in China," Bird said.

"If it wasn't for the rampant piracy, we could hire more people. The piracy is taking jobs away from the consumer."

Bird said Microsoft works with the Business Software Alliance and that the BSA is working closely with the government to resolve the situation.

"I wish I had a crystal ball to predict if all this was going to blow over," Bird said. "But things do look hopeful."

SIUC Political Science professor Scott Tarry said the piracy of IPR products possibly could be a product of America's industry stifling third-world countries by charging such high prices for products needed to increase industry in those countries.

"They are a socialist country experimenting with capitalism," he said. "One theory says the only way they can get the technology to improve their industry, like high-priced computer software, is to, for lack of a better term, rip them off."

"If they have to pay a lot of money for these products, it hurts their own development," Tarry said. "At least, that's what some scholars say."

Tarry also pointed out that retaliation from China could hurt our own industry.

"The government says punish China, but there are a lot of American firms that deal with China, and they could be hurt by a full out war," he said.

Cops: Buckle up kids or face ticket

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Feb. 12 marks the beginning of Child Passenger Safety Awareness Week and State Police will be out in force making sure people buckle their kids up.

Captain Jeffrey Trego, District 13 commander of the Illinois State Police, said in a press release most traffic fatalities of children can be prevented by securing them in safety seats.

"Injuries from motor vehicle crashes are one of the leading killers of children," he said. "More than 70 percent of children, up through age 4, who die as a result of riding unprotected in a motor vehicle would have been saved if they had been secured properly in safety seats. It is essential that parents buckle their children into safety seats every trip."

Trooper Roger Webb, Safety Education Officer for the Illinois

State Police, said State Police will promote Child Passenger Safety Awareness Week with public service announcements, stricter enforcement and possibly road side safety checks.

"It is important that people understand that unlike the seat belt law, we can pull people over just by seeing the violation," he said. "With the seat belt law, we would pull you over for some other violation and if you are not wearing your seat belt, we issue a ticket. With the child restraint law, if we see a passenger who we think is younger than six years old not wearing a seat belt, we can pull you over just for that violation."

Webb said children age three and under must be restrained by a safety seat and children ages four and five must wear a seat belt.

"People can expect to see fairly strict enforcement," he said.

"I don't think there will be a lot of warnings written because most troopers feel very strongly about this."

Parents interested in obtaining information on child safety seats, including a list of seats that have been recalled for safety reasons can do so by calling 1-800-424-9393.

John McHale is quite the rock samaritan these days. He has been singing and songwriting, handling promotion and trying to keep a stable sense of mind for his band, The Cause. Putting together a nationwide tour is not the easiest thing for an independent musician.

The Cause hails from Columbia, Mo. and have been playing together for two years. They have just released their debut album "Hunger" on the Columbia-based Wobbley label. The Cause has a sound that would appeal to a wide variety of listeners by touching on rhythms from reggae and funk to guitar-jazz and blues.

The Cause is McHale on bass and vocals, Peter ("Ubi") Ubriaco plays guitar for the band, while Mike Turallo closes out the group on drums. They are a trio that feels this is the time to branch out and attract some listeners.

"Man, we are out. We may never have another CD out again. I don't know," McHale said. "But I do know... that if we don't do what we need to do as a band right now, then what's the point of having a CD out? I mean how many chances like this are we going to get?"

The Cause is out to make a name for themselves and has played the likes of The Cubby Bear (Chicago), Kennedy's and The Red Sea (both in St. Louis), just to name a few.

McHale said it is important from an artist's point of view to maintain creative control when it comes to signing a record deal, but that doesn't mean there aren't any advantages with the support of a record company.

"You have distribution, which is really hard when we are releasing our CD independently and getting it into the stores initially," he said. "And then to monitor sales and keep them (CDs) on the shelf. That's a big job."

McHale said he certainly likes the freedom his band has in being independent, but that's not to say The Cause wouldn't like to work with a stronger label to get that support necessary to breaking real big.

The Cause decided to stick with three members to have a quick way into things and also to have the option of a quick way out.

"On a functional level it's hard enough to get three guys together whose schedules are coordinated, and in terms of travel it's always a consideration that it's easy," McHale said.

"But hey, if the Police can do it with three people... How many people do you really need?"

McHale lists the band's influences as The Clash, Albert Collins, The Beatles and U2's the Edge.

"Because of our divergent influences, you can't really pin us down to grunge this, punk that," he said. "We are more than just electric. It's not just pieces of other stuff. It's a new sum."

The musical writing is done by McHale and Ubi as they give each other different ideas and try to fashion the songs together with the groove of Ubi's guitar.

"There is a lot of cleverish in Ubi and I," McHale said. "There is certainly not a song of basic music and basic structure, when the words are done, that wouldn't be complete with out Ubi's touch on the guitar. He's a great guitar player, I can't even compare to what he knows and what he can do."

The Cause believes this is the time to show America what it has to offer. The band will be touring Colorado, Wyoming, Texas and back through the Midwest sometime in June. The Cause will try to regroup and see what stuck to the wall and what didn't in terms of touring nationwide.

"Right now is all that exists," McHale said. "I don't have the future. I don't have the past. I got the present in my hands and the present determines who I am."

"At this present moment I have to give it my heart," he said. "And if I do that then everything is going to work out for me at the end of the day."

McHale said he likes the idea of his band having a wide range of listeners. The Cause has gotten support in the three major markets of Chicago's WXRT, The Point in St. Louis and The Lazer in Lawrence, Kan.

"I don't want to be this kind of music or that kind of music," he said. "It is important to me that the range of people that could enjoy our music is as wide as possible."

"The best songs transcend generational or stylistic considerations. I really believe that. We seek to make as many lives happier and more enjoyable as we can."

The Cause has a lot of material ready to put together a new album, but McHale said there is no hurry to do so. The band would like to get as much as they can out of "Hunger" before they start to think of getting back in the studio.

"All I am worried about right now is touring," he said. "So, we haven't even thought about our next album. We really thought that recording that album ("Hunger") was the most important thing we were ever going to do.

"Just like the show on Friday night is the most important thing we are ever going to do. We may never get a second chance. We are going to put our heart into it and present something that is real."

The Cause will play at Sidetracks tonight and tomorrow night at Sidetracks. Showtime is 10 p.m. and there is a cover charge of $1.

Drovers keeps Irish eyes a' smiling, brings heritage to alternative rock

By Benjamin Golshahr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Like St. Patrick, who chased the snakes out of Ireland and drove them to the sea. The Drovers will wash their fans away with mesmerizing rhythms and hyper-fernetic percussion.

Fusing Irish folk music with alternative rock, The Drovers, from Chicago, have developed a distinctive sound that entices fans into mass swaying and frenzied dancing.

Paul Bradley, drummer for The Drovers, said the band's roots extend across the Atlantic to the country noted for rolling green hills, potatoes, leprechauns and Guinness Stout.

"The main instrument is the fiddle," he said. "A lot of the songs are based on Irish jigs and reels."

The Drovers, who will play at the Hangar 9 this Saturday night, are bassist/lead singer David Callahan, fiddle player Sean Cleland, guitarist Mike Kirkpatrick and Paul Bradley — who plays the drums standing up.

The band's sound has slowly transformed over the years as members have changed, but the current group has been together for a year and a half.

Bradley said the band, on their independent label Tantrum Records, does not want quick success by signing to a major label. They would like to gain recognition by slowly building a loyal following, he said.

"We want a long career out of this," he said. "I wouldn't want to be a 'one-hit wonder' band, I'd rather build a following through the grass roots method. It would be nice to make it into the big league, but not be selling ourselves away to a record company."

He said the band goes on tour every few months and does about two to three gigs a week, but lately the band has been working on their next full-length CD. Steve Albini, who has worked with Jesus Lizard, Nirvana, The Breeders and The Pixies, is engineering it.

"Our first album (EP "Kill Mice Elf" released in 1994) did really well," he said. "This album will definitely be the one that will grab people's attention."

He said the band is taking their time working on their new LP, which they didn't do on "Kill Mice Elf." They have already completed three songs.

"We like to spend a few days recording stuff and then a few weeks to listen to it," he said. "Then we go back over it and make changes or don't. It's a nice way to go about it. In the past we've always felt pressured to release things, but this time it will be the best possible thing."

Bradley said the album will include some things the band has been playing live for the last year, and some things no one has heard. The Drovers are constantly writing new material and testing it on audiences, he said. "We usually play new music on audiences for a long time," he said. "It helps us get tighter on them, and we can see the audience's reaction." The Drovers also appeared in the 1994 film, "Blink," which gave them world-wide exposure.

Bradley said the band is thinking about playing in Europe, but not until the summer.

"We're looking to line up a tour (in Europe) over the summer," he said. "We might go out for a couple of weeks to play some music festivals. We are selling some discs out there now, and if it becomes a good market we'll go out and play."

The Drovers are a full-time band; none of the members have other occupations.

Bradley said it takes a lot of hard work and dedication for a band to reach the level of success The Drovers enjoy.

"I think it has a lot to do with the will of the band — they've got to believe in the music enough to think they have a career in it," he said. "Everybody has to be dedicated, and they have to put that much more energy in to make it work."

'Gillian' troupe's February offering

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The grief of seeing his wife plunge to her death is the force that drives a man to create a wall that his loved ones cannot penetrate. Overcoming this man's guilt is the objective of the new drama "To Gillian on her 37th Birthday."

The Stage Co., in its 12th season, is bringing this play to Carbondale every weekend throughout the month of February. One of the most interesting parts of the performance is the double casting of two characters; this enables the company to create a different performance with each show.

The play takes place during the weekend of what would have been Gillian's 37th birthday. Gillian, who is played by Catherine Field, died in a boating accident two years ago. The tragedy was witnessed by her family.

David, played by Bruce Welker, is the grieving husband who has forgotten every aspect of his own life in his inability to let go of his wife.

The recurring action is portrayed in David's nightly conversations with his dead wife. The dialogue flowing through these conversations communicates to the audience the closeness of the two characters. As one person speaks, the other finishes his or her sentence.

The climax of the story occurs with the emergence of Kevin, a former female student of David's who has been brought along for the weekend in an attempt to awaken David from his self-induced sleep.

Each character is searching for a meaning to life and a way to survive. Each faces his or her own challenges: the daughter whose father has forgotten her, the best friend who develops her first crush on the older and emotionally-devastated David, the long-lost student whose divorce has made her want to love again, and David, who simply wants to continue mourning his beloved wife.

Director Stan Hale said he chose this play because it depicts the importance of life in a nice, emotional way.

"After I read the script, I realized this is a great show. So light, so simple, the characters just draw you in," Hale said.

Kim Frick, who plays the character of Kevin, has been with the Stage Co. for twelve years and said this is one of her favorite plays.

"This play is probably the most beautifully-written play I have ever done," said Frick.

Hale said the cast does a wonderful performance and the double casting of the Rachel and Cindy roles brings a different delivery to every show.

"It's interesting; each girl brings a different angle to their characters," Hale said.

Ann Nickel, one of the Rachels, said "Working with each other, we get to watch one another practice to see how the other person did it and better ourselves."

The Stage Co. has 135 members and is supported by ticket sales and financial contributions from the community.

The Stage Co. is providing an interpreter for "To Gillian on her 37th Birthday," during its last showing, the matinee on Feb. 26th.

The show will open this Friday at 8 p.m.; tickets are $7. For more information call 549-5466.

ANNAPOLIS, Md.—It's better late than never for Spiro T. Agnew, the former Maryland governor who resigned the vice presidency in disgrace during the Nixon administration. Agnew's portrait, relegated for years to a storage room, is moving to a place of honor—courtesy of

The governor said Wednesday he wants Agnew's visage to hang with those of other past governors in the State House Reception Room.

"I think, warts and all, a person who serves ought to be there. People can look at it if they want and say, 'This was a disgrace,' but he was governor," said Glendening.

Internationally known Irish poet to read poetry exploring role of women throughout century

By Benjamin Golshah
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An internationally recognized Irish poet whose work explores the silent roles women have portrayed throughout the past century will share her poetry with SIUC.

Eavan Boland

In one of her poems she depicts an Irish seamstress living in St. Louis in 1860 that works so hard to produce an intricate lace pattern she loses her sight.

Another of her poems is written from the point of view of a woman distraught over the death of one of her sons in the Great Potato Famine of 1849.

Some of her poems are not historically based, but address the silence she sees of contemporary suburban women.

Boland will read tonight at 8 p.m. in the Morris Library Auditorium as part of a national tour. After her SIUC reading she will be off to New York City. Charles Fanning, an SIUC English professor, said her rejection of the long-held personification of Ireland as a woman by its writers has contributed to Boland's fame.

"In terms of Irish writing, there have been a set of images of Ireland personified as a woman," he said. "Boland criticizes this image and tries to provide an alternative. She is seen as a significant voice in women's studies as well as literary studies."

He said her style of giving a voice to women who have not been heard throughout history has also established her as a prominent poet.

"She makes references to women in classical mythology and focuses on women through history as voices

"She makes reference to women in classical mythology and focuses on women through history as voices that haven't been heard."

Charles Fanning
SIUC English professor

es that haven't been heard," he said.

He said one of her most important poems retells one of the oldest legends in Ireland, The Story of Deirdre, from the perspective of a woman.

"Deirdre is the story of a young girl who was betrothed to an old king, but she ran away with a young man instead," he said.

"The young man was killed, and she is forced back to the king, but she kills herself — it's one of the oldest tales in the Irish tradition."

Lucia Perillo, an SIUC English professor in creative writing, said some of the themes Boland writes about are the absorption of Irish culture in America.

"She's interested in the relationship between the U.S. and Ireland," Perillo said.

"Many of her poems are set in the 19th century during the time when many people were immigrating in large numbers to places like Boston.

Many of her poems are about how Irish culture was absorbed by America in ways that were not always reciprocal."

Her last book of poems, "In a Time of Violence," was the 1994 recipient of the Lannan Literary Award for Poetry. Previous books include "Outside History," "In Her Own Image," "Night Feed," and "The Journey," which has been called a "feminist Dante."

Her poems have appeared in such publications as The New Yorker, The Atlantic and The Paris Review.

Perillo said Boland's style of poetry can be understood by anyone, regardless of their literary background or lack thereof.

"I think she's a good poet for students to see because she takes difficult ideas and makes them accessible to people who don't normally read poetry," she said.

"She's a good person for people who are unfamiliar with poetry to hear."

Fanning, who has heard Boland read several times, said she is one of the best poets writing today.

"She's one of the most significant poets that are writing in the language today," he said. "She's an excellent poet and a strong reader and she'll be worth listening to."

Vic Vacume bringing show to Patty's

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

"The Stupid Cupid Show" is making its way to Carbondale just in time for Valentine's Day as Vic Vacume and the Attachments bring a dose of their wild antics and crazy costumes to Patty's this weekend. "The Stupid Cupid Show" will have Vic in traditional Cupid garb, as a representative of the church, as a nice lady named Jay, and as a groom for other purposes along with a bunch of goofy gags, Vacume said. According to Vacume the drummer doesn't care about "The Stupid Cupid Show," but will still play the set without getting into the act. Vacume sarcastically described his music as entertainment for the whole family. "It's parody lyrics along with what we like to think is good trash metal music," Vacume said. "It's definitely a crossover, because we use both elements (punk and metal)."

Vacume said the band just finished a new recording that remains untitled. The release has nine songs on it and will come out on tape and seven-inch records. He said the CD "Big Cuz" (the which they released last December has been doing well. "We've gotten air play in New York, Arizona, California — really every where. "We're going to send the seven-inch to some college stations and see if we can get some air time there," Vacume said.

Vacume said the last time here Carbondale was great and he is looking forward to another performance. The last one was a blast. I couldn't move the next day. You know you had a good time when you can't drive," Vacume said. "We're going to let our imagination run wild." Vic Vacume and the Attachments will play at Patty's Saturday night. Opening for Vic will be Fulcrum. Fulcrum is expected to begin playing around 9:30 p.m.

Everyone from frats to ROTC plan special Valentine's Day activities

By Kellie Huttes
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Even though Valentine's Day is not until Tuesday, many SIUC organizations and Carbondale businesses are putting events together for this weekend. Fraternity traditions live on at SIUC in the form of annual Valentine's Day dances for members and their sweethearts, and Saturday night will be an evening full of love, according to some members. Ryan Garrity, social chair for the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, said the organization has had a Valentine's dance the weekend near February 14 since 1973. Garrity, a sophomore in marketing from Flossmore, said although the theme for the dance is love, fraternity members have been redecorating the house's "pit room" and painting it green for Saturday's dance. "We're painting it green so people will get real horny before the dance," he said. "We'll also have red and green M & M's left over from Christmas and red hots. "We're all real lovey here."

Garrity said the dance is open to SIUC women after 10 p.m. Jeremy Switcegood, social chair for the Delta Chi fraternity, said about 80 members and their dates will travel to Marion and spend the night at the Marion Holiday Inn after their Valentine's Day dance. Switcegood, a junior in education from Lake Forest, said members will decorate the Holiday Inn ballroom with red balloons and streamers. Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals and Friends also are sponsoring a dance and new member night with food and dance music at the Church of the Good Shepherd, corner of Orchard and Schwartz, Saturday at 8 p.m. Brett Jenkinson, assistant professor of military science, said a joint Army and Air Force ROTC military ball will take place in the main ballroom at SIUC's Student Center Saturday. For those not involved with organizations, the Holiday Inn in Carbondale is offering a "Sweetheart" package Saturday and Tuesday, which includes dinner, a room and breakfast in bed for two or dinner and room for two. The band Idle Wild will be playing in the Holiday Inn's lounge Saturday. Fat Freddy's, Rt. 13 in Cartersville, is offering two Valentine specials. Fat Freddy's owner, Fred Kisak said one package includes dinner and a room at the Best Inns in Marion for two or dinner for two. The dinner features a choice of prime rib, rib eye or chicken with champagne and a heart-shaped cake. "We just wanted to do something nice for the sweethearts," he said. "We've already got a whole list of people signed up."

NOTICE FROM THE FINANCIAL AID OFFICE ALL UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS MUST COMPLY WITH THE FOLLOWING SATISFACTORY PROGRESS POLICY IN ORDER TO RECEIVE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

SATISFACTORY PROGRESS POLICY FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS AT SOUTHERN ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY AT CARBONDALE

The Federal Government, the States, and Southern Illinois University at Carbondale have invested large sums of money in order to provide financially needy students the opportunity to obtain a post-secondary education. Financial aid recipients are responsible for using the funds provided in an acceptable manner. Therefore, a student who wishes to benefit from the receipt of financial aid funds must maintain "satisfactory progress" as defined in this policy.

AUTHORITY

The Higher Education Act of 1965 as amended and the final regulations set forth by the Department of Education in 34 CFR 668 require that institutions of higher education establish reasonable standards of "satisfactory progress". A student who does not meet these standards is not eligible to receive federally funded financial aid. Southern Illinois University at Carbondale shall make these standards applicable to all state and institutional aid programs for the purpose of maintaining a consistent and reasonable financial aid policy.

SATISFACTORY PROGRESS STANDARDS

Southern Illinois University at Carbondale requires that a student be making "satisfactory progress" toward a degree if he or she wishes to receive financial aid funds. A student is making "satisfactory progress" toward a degree if successfully meeting two basic academic standards. First, a student must complete a reasonable number of credit hours toward a degree each academic year. Second, a student must maintain a scholastic standing, derived from grades, that allows for continued enrollment at the University under current academic guidelines. The following parameters will be used to define these two basic academic standards:

1) Maximum time to graduate: A full-time, eligible student is expected to complete a degree in six academic years (12 semesters). A half-time, eligible student is expected to complete a degree in twelve academic years (24 semesters). In order to be sure that a student is progressing toward that goal, each student's progress will be measured annually after Spring Semester to determine the progress made for the last academic year of attendance. Each term of at least half-time attendance shall be included in the annual review whether or not the student received financial aid for the term. The following chart will serve as a model to determine if each student is meeting this requirement of "satisfactory progress".

2) Grades: A student must remain in compliance with the University's policy concerning scholastic standing, grades, and grade point average as defined under the topic "Grading, Scholastic Regulations, and Credit" in the current Undergraduate Catalog Bulletin. A student who is on Scholastic Suspension is not maintaining "satisfactory progress". A student who is scholastically suspended may be readmitted under Scholastic Probation status by the appropriate academic dean and remain eligible for financial aid. Each student's scholastic standing will be monitored after each semester or term of attendance.

A student who does not meet both of the standards set forth above and who cannot show "mitigating circumstances" is not maintaining "satisfactory progress" toward a degree and is no longer eligible to receive financial aid funds. (See Appeals)

Nothing in this policy shall be construed as a reduction of external requirements by other federal, state, public, or private agencies when they award or control financial aid. Examples of such agencies are: Veterans Administration, Vocational Rehabilitation, and the NCAA.

DEFINITIONS

Credit hours completed shall be defined as the total number of academic credit hours for which a student receives any grade other than a failing grade. Incompletes, withdrawals, audits, and remedial courses which do not count toward a degree shall not be considered as credit hours completed. Credit hours received for repeated courses shall be counted only once.

Eligible students shall be defined as those students who are admitted to the University in a degree-seeking classification. All other students are not eligible for financial aid.

Full-time attendance for undergraduates shall be defined as enrollment in twelve (12) hours or more per semester.

Half-time attendance for undergraduates shall be defined as enrollment in six (6) or more hours, but less than twelve (12) hours per semester.

Undergraduate shall be defined as a student who is a freshman, sophomore, junior, senior or a senior with a bachelor's degree seeking a second bachelor's.

NOTIFICATION OF TERMINATION

It shall be the responsibility of the Financial Aid Office to publish this policy and to notify by letter any student who is no longer eligible to receive financial aid funds. Said notice shall be addressed to the student's most current permanent address on file with the University. IT SHALL BE THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE STUDENT TO INFORM THE UNIVERSITY OF A CORRECT PERMANENT ADDRESS AT ALL TIMES.

REINSTATEMENT

Students will have their eligibility to receive financial aid reinstated when they have reached the level of satisfactory progress required of them by this policy. They may achieve this status by the completion of incomplete grades, correction of incorrect grades, and by earning sufficiently more than the required number of completed hours for a term or terms of attendance without the benefit of financial aid.

APPEALS

Any student who cannot meet the grades requirement, or the cumulative credit hours completion requirement shall have an opportunity to appeal in writing to explain "mitigating circumstances". The appeal should be sent to the Financial Aid Office within 15 days of the notice of termination. The Financial Aid Office will review the "mitigating circumstances" documented in the appeal and provide a written decision within 20 days after receipt of the appeal.

Sorority to bring valentine cheer to children

By Dustin Coleman -
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC sorority will attempt to make the lives of the children in the Memorial Hospital of Carbondale a little brighter on Valentine's Day. Sigma Sigma Sigma Sorority plan to send each child valentines in an effort to cheer them up on the holiday.

Kirsti Vick, president of Sigma Sigma Sigma, said this is just one of the many things the sorority does for children.

"Sigma serves children. That is our theme," she said. "Some of the children are in the hospital over periods of months, and it is important to do things like this on the holidays."

Vick said every child will get more than one valentine to make them feel extra special.

"We are making sure that no one gets missed," she said.

"Each kid will get between 45 and 60 valentines. That is more than they would receive if they were in school."

Cindy Frenkel, director of maternal child services at the Memorial Hospital of Carbondale, said events like these are usually well accepted by the children.

"It is usually a very positive experience," she said. "It is especially nice for those who are of the school age-group."

Frenkel said the valentines will come as a surprise to the children.

"It is something that will be totally unexpected to the children and to their parents," she said.

Frenkel said with the children's parents' permission, they will be able to deliver the valentines themselves.

"Half of the joy to the people who made the valentines is to see the expression on the face of the children when they give them to them," she said.

Rumi Pak, a member of the sorority, said the experience will probably be good for both her and the children.

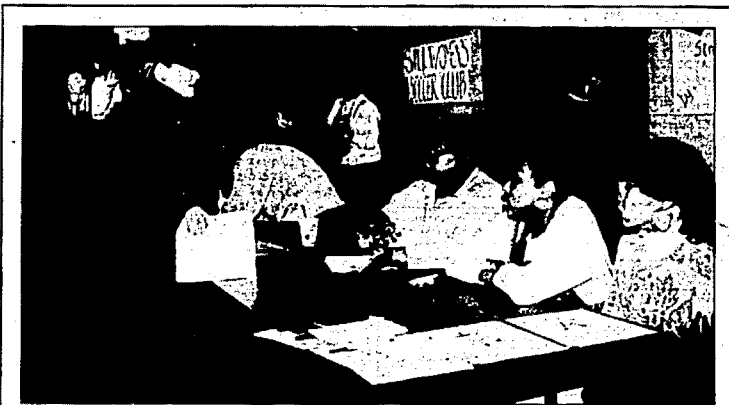

"I'll get a chance to visit and give valentines to the children in the hospital," she said. "I think they will enjoy it because they don't have many visitors, and the fact that the children will be getting something special."

Tasha Ray, a junior in speech pathology from Rockford, said the sorority has done many things such as fund-raisers, but this one is much different.

"We have never interacted with children on a one-to-one basis," she said. "I love children, and I want to work with children when I get into my career."

"I hope it will be a good experience, and the children's day."

Fulbright Scholar selects SIUC

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The influence of SIUC is spreading rapidly across the Southeast Asian region of the world. Faculty members from around the globe are recognizing the University as a resource gold mine.

Fulbright scholarship recipient, Masur Alam Khan, from Pakistan, chose SIUC to do research for his study on environmental issues as depicted in the media with an emphasis on television. Khan said phase two of the study will be to collect the same data from Pakistan, finally comparing the two in the final phase.

"SIUC has fantastic research materials. Especially Internet and Illinois on-Line," he said. "The research done here will open the avenue for communication research in Pakistan."

"It's wonderful here at SIUC because we have a scarcity of resources," he said.

He said it is the first of its type of research to be done in Pakistan.

He is using this preliminary research to complement a global research project established by professor emeritus at University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, George Gerbner. More than 35 countries will participate in the project, depending on fund allocations. Khan will likely represent Pakistan. Khan is also involved in research sponsored by UNICEF in Pakistan to help in the development of national communication. The literacy rate is 33 percent in Pakistan, according to Khan. He said they have many natural resources in Pakistan but there is a need for knowledge in how to utilize it.

Masur Alam Khan

He is a member of the academic council at Gomal University in Dera Ismail Khan, Pakistan. As an academic council member he chooses curriculum for the institutions in the University.

Khan acts as the chief editor of the university paper, the "Danish," meaning scholar in a regional language of Pakistan. He is the only faculty member on the monthly publication. The paper is published in four different languages, including English.

Through a research fellowship with the United States Information Agency, Khan was able to apply for the Fulbright scholarship. More than 1,143 applicants from 119 countries received the opportunity to attend other universities.

According to Khan he is on the nine-month Fulbright scholarship. His family joined him on the trip, except for his oldest daughter who is completing high school examinations in Pakistan. She will join the family at their Southern Hills residence shortly.

He said the relationship between the two countries and schools has been established through previous exchanges by SIUC staff members and Pakistani scholars.

"We can go further with the relationship now and help it to mature," he said.

Khan received his master's in journalism with distinction from Punjab University in 1970. For three years he worked in television and as a writer for a national newspaper in Pakistan, he said. In 1974 he joined the staff and was an original pioneer of Gomal University in the department of mass communication and journalism.

"I love the teaching profession, so I left journalism," Khan said.

He earned his doctorate in communication with a major focus on intercultural communication at the University of the Philippines at Manila where he spent four years. It was here that Khan and his family were first initiated with American culture.

"Manila is a bit like America with the large department stores and a town square," he said.

Good relations will likely continue between Pakistani universities and SIUC because of the continued effort by the University to broaden the base of journalism in the region, he said.

Fulbright scholarship in recognition of former senator's accomplishments

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Former Sen. J. William Fulbright, an urbane intellectual from rural Arkansas who became one of the most influential shapers and strongest critics of America's Cold War foreign policy, died Thursday at the age of 89.

In a congressional career that covered parts of four decades, Fulbright concentrated his energies on establishing support for an assertive American role in the world: writing a resolution as a freshman member of Congress that helped provide the foundation for U.S. involvement in the United Nations, sponsoring the international scholarship exchange program that still bears his name and eventually rising to a position of pre-eminence in the American foreign policy establishment as chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

But his greatest renown came, not as a builder of U.S. policy, but as its most influential opponent at the period of its greatest distress—the war in Vietnam.

In a series of nationally televised hearings starting in 1966, Fulbright's committee subjected senior Johnson administration officials to unprecedented public cross-examination, galvanizing public opposition to the war and hastening the process that unraveled Lyndon B. Johnson's presidency. His initial support for Johnson's policies—particularly the Tonkin Gulf resolution that the administration cited as legal justification for the war—was his worst mistake in public life, Fulbright later said.

Fulbright's hearings were "the first time that organized congressional opposition had been put together at a senior level. It legitimized dissent," said Stanford University historian Barton Bernstein. "When the criticism came from the Congress, it was far more devastating than when it came from the campuses or the streets."

The attacks on Vietnam policy, amplified in a series of lectures that Fulbright turned into a book, "The Arrogance of Power," established Fulbright as a leader among those who supported U.S. involvement overseas but sought to temper what they saw as American over-reaching.

To Johnson, those critiques made Fulbright a detested enemy. But to many who opposed the war, he became a champion.

Among those who idolized the senator was a young part-time aide and Georgetown University student from Arkansas—Bill Clinton. In an interview during the early days of his presidential campaign in 1991, Clinton spoke of Fulbright, recalling how he would stay late working in the senator's office and watching him wrestle with the decision to challenge Johnson over the war. The experience, Clinton said, turned his own ambitions toward politics.

"If it hadn't been for him I wouldn't be here today," Clinton told reporters at the White House after Fulbright's death.

At the same time, Fulbright's career contained a deep moral schism. His foreign policy idealism made him a hero to American liberals in the 1960s and 1970s. But his stubborn support for segregation in his native South and his participation in Southern filibusters against civil rights legislation left many of those followers deeply discomfited.

Fulbright and his supporters argued that his position on segregation served a higher good.

"He rationalized his position by saying that he had a powerful position from which to influence U.S. policy and that raising his voice on behalf of civil rights legislation wouldn't accomplish much since the Southern position was doomed anyway," recalled former Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., who preceded Fulbright in opposition to the Vietnam War, but opposed him on civil rights. "Somewhat painfully, I have to concede he probably made the only choice that was open to him."

In the end, however, Fulbright's opposition to civil rights helped defeat him. In 1974, Arkansas' popular governor, Dale Bumpers, challenged him in the Democratic primary.

As governor, Bumpers had put an end to his party's segregationist heritage, and in the primary, he won heavy support among black voters. That, plus a sense among many Arkansians that Fulbright's concentration on international affairs had put him out of touch with local concerns, ended his career in political life.

That career had begun 32 years earlier, after Fulbright, at the age of 37, was fired from his job as president of the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville.

James William Fulbright, the son of a locally prominent family, had been one of the university's best-known graduates—a handsome, brainy and a gifted athlete who quickly became a star football player, captain of the tennis team, student body president and president of his fraternity.

After graduation in 1925, at the age of 19, Fulbright won a Rhodes scholarship for study at Oxford, England, from which he graduated in 1928. On returning to this country, he obtained a law degree from George Washington University, worked briefly at the Justice Department, joined the faculty of the University of Arkansas law school and then, in 1939 became the university's president.

But the university's board of trustees was controlled by the governor, Homer Adkins, whom Fulbright's mother had denounced in the local newspaper, which the Fulbright family owned. In 1941, on commencement day, the trustees requested his resignation. Fulbright refused.

"I told them it would make it much plainer to the public if they just fired me," Fulbright said later. "So they did."

Fulbright's mother challenged him to run for office, and in 1942, he sought and won a seat in the House of Representatives.

Saddam tries sugar instead of vinegar

The Washington Post

BAGHDAD, Iraq—At the mayor's office these days, foreign visitors are handed an English-language brochure detailing the consequences of U.N. economic sanctions against Iraq: mounds of uncollected garbage, drinking-water shortages, 50 percent of all municipal sewage pumped untreated into the Tigris River.

Its title: "Baghdad, the City of Peace."

More than three months after Saddam Hussein recaptured the world's attention with an abortive military thrust toward Kuwait, the Iraqi president is trying to appeal to its conscience.

Belligerence now muted

Gone, or at least muted, is the belligerence of last September and October, when the government-controlled press warned that "every Iraqi is a missile" that can be targeted against Western cities—an apparent threat to resort to terrorism if the U.N. Security Council did not lift the sanctions.

At least for now, Iraq has taken a conciliatory approach, recognizing Kuwait and its borders last November and beginning to strike a more-cooperative attitude with U.N. inspectors.

Similarly, Iraq has sought renewed ties with Arab states, made conciliatory overtures toward Kurdish opposition groups in northern Iraq and refrained from interference in the Middle East peace process, diplomats said. To showcase the sanctions' side effects on the Iraqi population—and demonstrate the regime's continued grip on power—it has encouraged visits by foreign journalists, aid workers, trade delegations and dignitaries.

The strategy has paid dividends in the Security Council, where France and Russia have begun to make the case for relaxing the sanctions over strenuous objections from the United States. Those differences are likely to flare next month, when the council meets to review Iraq's progress on compliance with its postwar obligations.

The appearance of fissures on the council has created high expectations in the Iraqi government, whose ministries are busy drawing up plans and soliciting bids for the eventual rebuilding of the country in anticipation that sanctions could be eased this year.

In the meantime, Iraq is emphasizing the suffering caused by the sanctions, among the toughest in modern history, which bar the country from selling its principal resource, oil, except under strict conditions it so far has refused to accept. Iraq is permitted to import food and medicine but cannot afford to meet its needs without access to oil revenues.

Although forecasts of famine have proved exaggerated, conditions have deteriorated over the last year, following the exhaustion of prewar stocks of food and spare parts and goods looted from Kuwait, U.N. officials said.

Malnutrition widespread

Hospital pediatric wards reportedly go without X-rays and antibiotics, malnutrition is widespread, and many middle-class Iraqis are reduced to selling family heirlooms and appliances to make ends meet in a country where rocketing inflation has reduced the average government salary to the equivalent of $4 a month.

More than four years into the embargo, this once-vibrant capital is crime-ridden and threadbare—its parks unkempt and heaped with trash, its intersections patrolled by children begging for handouts.

The palpable evidence of human suffering has created a dilemma for U.N. aid workers, who sometimes clash with U.N. officials responsible for enforcing the sanctions. The U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, for example, has been rebuffed in its efforts to import insecticide and spare engines for crop-dusting helicopters.

(16-6, 9-3) move into a first place tie in the MVC with the Golden Hurricane heading into Saturday's league action.

"As a senior, me Paul Lusk and Ian Stewart, and I guess I'll talk for all three—we need to just take one game at a time and stay focused," Timmons said.

"Just like Tulsa slipped up against Drake, Indiana State could slip us up. That's a tough place to win."

Saluki forward Chris Carr finished the game with 16 points and conquered the 1,000 career-point mark in thunderous fashion at the 14-minute mark of the second half with a slam dunk.

Carr and Timmons were the only SIUC players to reach double-digits, but eight other Salukis chipped in at least two a piece.

Creighton was led by Lockett, who finished with 15.

Next up for SIUC is a trip to Indiana State Saturday for an 11:05 a.m. tip-off. The game will be broadcast on cable's Prime Network.

Tulsa heads into Evansville Saturday night.

Family, talent help Sumrall to achieve 'full potential'

By Cynthia Sheets
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Family roots have helped Angenette Sumrall, Daily Egyptian Athlete of the Week, grow into the basketball player she is today.

"My parents try to make it to all the games, both home and away," Sumrall said. "When I'm on the road, I never know when I might see them. My parents have gone to Creighton, Southwest Missouri and Bradley just to see me play."

"My entire family has always been supportive of me, and I think that is very important."

Growing up in East St. Louis, Sumrall entered the athletics program as a cheerleader. The transition was then to volleyball, and finally, in seventh grade, the switch to basketball.

Sumrall became interested in the game by watching her uncle and brothers play.

Although unsure of her basketball future out of high school, Sumrall has turned her decision to pursue a basketball career to her advantage. The star forward has had seven double-doubles this season, recently scored 12 points and 13 rebounds last Thursday against Creighton, and 19 points and 12 rebounds and three steals against Evansville, last Monday.

"I would say my best game so far this season was against Evansville," Sumrall said. "My shooting average was around 9-13, and that has been the best average for me this season."

Last year she garnered the First Team All-Missouri Valley Conference honors, and hopes to repeat the feat this year.

Daily Egyptian Athlete of the Week

Angenette Sumrall

"Earlier in the season, my game had not up to par," Sumrall said. "Right now it is starting to turn around for me, and I'm building up confidence."

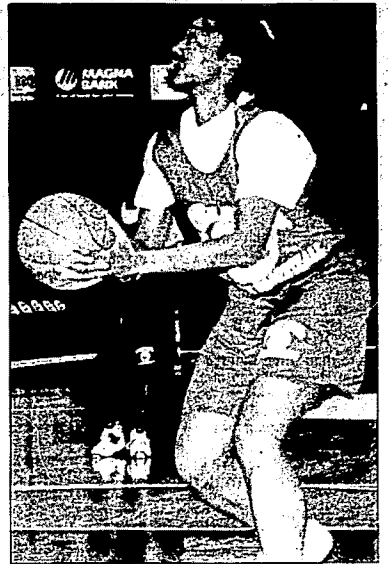

Sumrall, whose nickname is Nette, came into the season as the leading rebounder on the Saluki women's team. Ironically, she is one of the smallest power forwards in the MVC. "My jumping ability has allowed me to become a good rebounder," Sumrall said. "I have to get in there and work harder in the paint to make up for my size."

SIUC women's basketball coach Cindy Scott said Sumrall is the most aggressive rebounder she has ever coached.

"Angenette is also a prolific scorer for us," Scott said. "She is doing well for us this season, although she hasn't reached her full potential yet."

"When Angenette is having a good game, we have a much better team."

Sumrall has high expectations for herself and the rest of the team. She was on the team that went to the NCAA's her freshman year, and looks to capture the MVC title this year. "Sure I've been there before, but I just want everyone on the team to have the same experience."

SEAN NESBITT — The Daily Egyptian

Angenette Sumrall, a senior forward from East St. Louis, goes for a jump shot during practice Thursday afternoon. The Salukis are preparing for Saturday night's contest against intrastate rival Illinois State.

Invite

"I think all of us can run a little better than we did last Saturday," relay runner Kelly French said. "I don't think there was really anything wrong, we can just do better."

The men's team will also be eyeing the Sycamores at the Saluki Invite, but may focus even harder on breaking a three-week streak of what head coach Bill Cornell calls "disappointing performances."

Indiana St. is the favorite to win the men's MVC Championship, also held in Normal on Feb. 25, so Cornell is hoping his team will snap its skid so he can use the meet as "a good yardstick for us."

"We're really hoping that being at home will help us start to pull things together," he said.

"We're a good team on paper but have to start showing it by conference time."

In addition to Indian State and Illinois State, the men will face nine different schools, including highly touted Mississippi State and Memphis.

The men's and women's meets get under way Saturday at 9 a.m. at the Recreation Center.

Rivalry

Illinois State is 4-7 in the league and 8-11 overall.

Hutchinson said the rivalry has fueled some close games, but the results have not gone the Redbirds way in the past few years.

"Lately, we've been on the bottom-side of this rivalry and that's due to coach Scott out-recruiting me," she said. "SIUC has really been the dominant team in this series."

Both coaches think what happens inside the paint will be the key to the game.

"I'm most concerned with their inside kids," Scott said. "They do a lot of things well down low, so we're going to have to play great interior defense," Scott said.

"SIUC does a lot of things well and one of them is obviously rebounding," Hutchinson said. "They are probably the best rebounding team in the conference."

The contest tips-off at 7:05 at the Arena

Bowl Alliance institutes bowl game tiebreaker

two or 10—that team wins.

The Bowl Alliance may be the playoff equivalent of a streetcorner Rolex, but the NCAA I-A members are doing what they can to make it as close to the real thing as possible.

The NCAA Football Rules Committee this week approved the use of a tiebreaker in post-season bowl games.

Among the other changes recommended in its annual meeting, the Rules Committee also approved an end to the latest fad among football stars and wannabes; i.e., taking off the helmet while on the field.

That will be prohibited this season, except during a timeout or on the sidelines.

All recommendations must be approved by the NCAA Executive Committee, which usually defers to the wisdom of sport-specific committees.

The bowls requested the exception to the current Division I rules, which allow the tiebreaker in Divisions I-AA, II and III as well as I-A conference championship games.

In the NCAA tiebreaker, each team gets the ball first and-10 at the opponent's 25-yard line.

A possession ends when a team scores, runs out of downs or commits a turnover.

If a team is ahead after a like number of possessions—one,

"Part of the rationale was that there is more of a possibility of one-vs.-two than ever before," said Georgia Athletic Director Vince Dooley, chairman of the Rules Committee and, it should be known, a long-time proponent of a post-bowl championship game.

"They should have the right to come out with a champion. It breaks tradition in Division I-A, but we've gotten used to it in our (Southeastern Conference) championship."

The SEC has not been forced to employ the tiebreaker in its three championship games.

However, its existence stirred a controversy this year when Alabama lost to Florida, 24-23. Crimson Tide Coach Gene Stallings elected not to go for two points after a touchdown gave Alabama a 22-17 lead midway through the fourth quarter.

In an increasing effort to promote sportsmanship, the committee also voted unanimously to ban removal of the helmet.

"It's more individualism, self-glorification," Dooley said. "We want to fight to get away from that." The committee also approved penalizing the defense 5 yards when a defender's entry into the neutral zone forces an offensive player to move.

Costas: Voice of baseball reason

The Sporting News

Some men are born to play baseball. Bob Costas was born to say it. Nobody says "baseball" like Costas. The word rolls off his tongue in a fine, plump dulcet tone. It comes across with a 33-rpm RCA Victor sensibility, in a quadruphonic, digitally mastered package.

He practically croons it. The sound is at once soothing and provocative, evoking romance, grit and the best part of America's star-crossed passion. Baseball is a tricky word. When Don Fehr says "baseball," it sounds vaguely menacing, as if he means to sue you. When Bud Selig says it, you get an urge to roll your eyes. But when Costas says "baseball," you want to do one of two things: pop a beer and turn on the Game of the Week, or pass the Grey Poupon and turn on Ken Burns' documentary.

"Baseball" is Costas' best word. It might have to do with the alignment of his tonsils or the design of his Adam's apple. More likely, it has to do with his love of the game. In Costas, nature seems to have created the perfect confluence of baseball appreciation and voice box.

Costas professes to disdain the romantic treacle dripping over baseball. Yet, he can't seem to stop poetry and profundity from coming out of his mouth. There's a comedic aspect to his struggle: Bob talks, Bob slaps himself for sounding corny, Bob talks, Bob slaps himself for waxing nostalgic, etc. He wants to be sure he doesn't alienate the manly men who play and own baseball. And yet, this high-fidelity mouth, this brilliant, 50,000-watt mouth, seems to have a mind of its own.

Some people say Costas is dis-

"Baseball is a great game. It has great history, a textured history, with grand, dramatic events, clowns, characters, buffoons, quirky events."

Bob Costas

posed to do more than appreciate and comment on baseball. In one of the game's darkest hours, he has been mentioned as a potential leader to return it to normalcy. But for that to happen, fans, players and owners need to believe that Costas is the conscience of baseball, and not just a wind tunnel.

Listen to Costas, as he speaks to The Sporting News, and it is easy to forget, momentarily, that baseball is writing in pain, and easy to remember why Americans love it.

"Baseball is an interesting game," Costas says. "It's fun to sit in the sun, fun to talk about something you have in common. And it's a link between generations. Those are significant virtues to get out of something that's just a game. Plus, since you play it every day, your interest in it is renewed day to day, and from season to season.

"Tony Kornheiser once wrote in the Washington Post, 'Yeah, baseball is part of America. But so is a Corvette going down Route 66 in 1958.' He missed the point. Baseball renews itself every day and every night. A '58 Corvette is a museum piece.

"It's fashionable to sneer at having a real love for baseball, because on the one hand the people who own it and play it don't seem to care that much about it. On the other hand, all of these tributes to baseball are so numerous and overwrought and mushy they give appreciation of baseball a bad name.

"The truth is, there's a lot to appreciate. Baseball is a great game. It has a great history, a textured history, with grand, dramatic events, clowns, characters, buffoons, quirky incidents. The pace of the game makes it conversational. The way it is measured statistically allows for comparison.

"It has a part, a reasonable, proportionate part—I'm not talking about Rousserie League nerds or people who rent Field of Dreams every week and dissolve into tears—it has a part in the life of reasonable people.

"The vast majority of what's appealing about baseball is not some high-faluting metaphorical thing. It has simple ongoing pleasures. Sure, you do get to the All-Star Game or the seventh game of the World Series. Those are highlight moments. But those moments are created out of hundreds and hundreds of individual days, where it isn't that big of a deal. It's not a laser show when they introduce the starting lineups. It's not a battle of helmets crashing. It's not a spectacle. It's just tonight's game."

Dawgs defeat Jays, 69-48

By Grant Deady
DE Sports Editor

In a game that had about as much excitement as a bird watching expedition, the Saluki men's basketball squad grounded the Creighton Blue Jays, 69-48, at the Arena Thursday night.

Neither team broke into double figures until the 8:55 mark of the first half and SIUC held an ugly 26-19 edge at intermission, despite CU turning the ball over 17 times before the break.

However, SIUC shifted into high gear midway through the second half with an 18-8 run that squeezed the chirp right out of the Jays.

"The first half, we weren't clicking as a team. We forced them into some turnovers and couldn't capitalize on them," Saluki swingman Marcus Timmons said.

"We kept making steals and forcing turnovers and just weren't capitalizing on them."

Creighton pulled within six, 41-35, with 9:41 remaining in the game before the Dawgs really turned it on.

Saluki guard Jaratio Tucker hit back-to-back jumpers to push SIUC's lead back to double digits and Dawg forward Ian Stewart drilled a three-pointer into any hopes of a Blue Jay comeback.

*The Salukis are now tied for the MVC lead with Tulsa. Both are at 9-3 in Valley play.

The game took on a ragged pace through the final five minutes of the game until the SIUC crowd was whistled for a technical foul with :37 seconds after being warned by officials for using obscene chants at the 2:55 mark.

CU guard Marcus Lockett hit 1-of-2 at the line as a result of the technical to bring the Jays within a helpless 24 points.

But the first technical only seemed to taunt the Dawg faithful even more, as the referees slapped another "T" on the crowd with :32 seconds left for barking the obscene chant once again.

This time, Lockett went 2-for-2 at the stripe to trim the SIUC lead to 20.

Timmons was done for the game when the SIUC crowd began chanting up and said he wanted to leave the bench so he could talk with the students who he felt were the cause of the problem.

"I asked Jim Hart (Athletic Director), 'will I get a technical foul if I walk over there,'" he said. "I was just going to go over there and say 'hey, it's great to have your support, but not to use profanity like that and cause us a technical foul.'"

Not until the final buzzer did the SIUC crowd erupt again since that's when the Arena public address announcer stated Missouri Valley Conference leader Tulsa had been upset at home by Drake, 60-53.

Salukis to continue rivalry with Redbirds at Arena

By Doug Durso

Illinois State vs. SIUC

One of the most intense rivalries in Missouri Valley Conference women's action takes place in Carbondale Saturday, when the Salukis take on the Redbirds. SIUC's oldest league foe, ISU leads the overall series 32-28, but the Salukis have won 12 of the last 13 meetings, including 10 straight.

Saluki women's head coach Cindy Scott, said Illinois State is always a huge game for SIUC.

"Over the years this game has been a really big rivalry," she said. "These are always hard-fought, clean games that the players really enjoy."

Jill Hutchinson, Illinois State's head coach, who has been involved with the Saluki-Redbird rivalry for 24 years, said that the intensity between the two clubs was there before she started coaching.

"This rivalry started two or three decades ago, before coach Scott was at SIU and I was at Illinois St. and it has evolved into a very healthy and competitive match-up over the years," she said.

The Saluki women squeaked past Illinois State, 77-72, in Normal on Jan. 12. Nikki Gilmore scored 22 points and Kasia McClendon added 17 points and eight steals. The Redbirds were paced by Kay Schroeder who led Illinois State with 14 points, nine rebounds, six steals and three blocks in the contest.

Illinois State comes into the game riding a hot streak, upsetting Bradley and conference powers Wichita State and Southwest Missouri State consecutively.

"I think they are playing very hard right now," Scott said. "They have won some big games and are on a great roll, while we are not."

"It's going to be a great game and hopefully we can get back on track during this game."

The Saluki women come into the game with a 11-7 record and a 6-4 mark in the MVC, while

Track to host seven at Saluki Invite

SIUC looks to get back on track at home meet

By David Vingren
Daily Egyptian Reporter

"We can't get beat big by Indiana State. We need to hold our own. We need kids to step up this weekend."

Don DeNoon
Saluki track coach

Although seven other teams will go up against SIUC and Indiana State, don't be surprised if the two Missouri Valley Conference powerhouses treat Saturday's Saluki Invite as a mini-conference meet.

The Saluki and Sycamore women's track teams will get previews of each other before the Feb. 25 conference championship meet in Normal, which most likely will feature the two squads and Illinois State battling for the big trophy.

Yet this will not be the first time the two teams have faced off this year. Back in their first meet of the season on Dec. 10, SIUC beat the Sycamores, 57-49, while both teams were bumped off by Illinois State's 59 points.

But both teams now have two months of practices and meets behind them since their previous encounter and, therefore, should display different levels of performances.

"They (Indiana St.) certainly have a lot of depth, particularly in the 5000 and the 3000 (meter runs)," head coach Don DeNoon said.

"They kill us with their numbers. They have three or four runners each race and they're all really good. Each is in the top five or six in the conference."

"We need to come out looking good just before the conference meet. We can't get beat big by Indiana State. We need to hold our own. We need kids to step up this weekend."

For the first time in nearly a month, the Salukis can give their fans a rest and enjoy home field advantage, which DeNoon said could play a big factor in his team's performance.

"We can win this thing," he said. "At home we're good and we haven't been home for a month. We seem to be much sharper in the Rec. There's an electricity created when everybody's behind you."

To win the meet, the Salukis will have to get past a powerful Mississippi State team, as well as the Sycamores.

A victory in the long jump would also be a huge victory for an SIUC athlete since it would mean a win over Alabama-Birmingham's Vonneta Jeffery, who owns the nation's top leap this year.

Another big victory would come from the Saluki distance medley relay team, which was beaten by an Indiana St. quartet at last weekend's non-scored Indiana Invitational.

Zampese scratched as candidate for Rams job

Los Angeles Times

ANAHEIM, Calif.—Ernie Zampese, the Dallas Cowboy offensive coordinator who formerly held the same post with the Rams, said Wednesday night he will announce Thursday he is withdrawing his name from consideration for the vacant Rams' head coaching post.

"I'm going to officially tell the people in Dallas that I'm staying and not going to do anything with the Rams," Zampese said. "I like the Ram people so much, and if I was ever going to take the opportunity to leave and become a head coach it would be with these people."

"The Rams went first class the whole way, but I have decided to stay with the Cowboys. I really enjoy my job in Dallas, and there are still some things I want to accomplish here."

The Rams told reporters in St. Louis and Los Angeles earlier Wednesday that Zampese was a finalist for the job along with Oregon Coach Rich Brooks. Zampese's exit, however, leaves the position wide open for Brooks, unless the team decides to make one final run at former Chicago Bear Coach Mike Ditka, UCLA's Terry Donahue or San Diego State Coach Ted Tollner.

The Rams talked with Ditka again Wednesday but so far have been unable to convince him to schedule an interview.

Brooks, meanwhile, returned to Eugene Wednesday, but he could come back as soon as today to meet with owner Georgia Frontiere.

"I'm very interested in the job," Brooks said. "I thought my meeting with (team President) John Shaw went well, but we have not talked contract. I assume I will be hearing from them in the next day or two."

Shaw called Brooks a "very serious candidate," and said he had received the strongest endorsement of Steve Ortmyer, vice president of football operations.
