Remembering their Sacrifice

Black Civil War veterans remembered through documentary, descendants

In the early 1900s, Zelma Blackwell would go on five-mile walks outside her Murphysboro home to pick berries. But the young girl would not just go to any field — she had a route and a destination.

She would walk down Third Street out to Highway 127. Following the tracks. The road would come to the field where her ancestor rested in Bostick Cemetery, just off that field.

Sixty years after her death, her granddaughter, Zelma Sanders, remembers passing a little shack and the cemetery that represents the remains of Bostick Settlement.

"I've seen the chimney bricks falling down and the cemetery," Sanders said. "I can picture it very vividly in my mind.

Sanders knew several of her relatives were buried in Bostick Cemetery, but the older generation of her family did not tell the children too much about their relatives.

In 1994, P. Michael Jones and his sixth-grade class approached Sanders with some interesting findings. She was surprised to learn that two of her great-great-grandparents were buried in the cemetery — black Civil War veterans.

The Samuel Dalton house located behind the John A Logan House and Museum in Murphysboro was purchased from Logan in 1888. Dalton born a slave at age 24 enlisted in the Union Mississippi Fleet during the Civil War.

And Provost Margaret Watters said Thursday that there will be no money from her office for instruction classes. Jean Kelly, adviser for the Radio-Television Department, said many students have expressed concerns about the class they need not be offered.

She can't do much to alleviate their concerns though, because she is unable to secure funds from the college at this time.

What she is doing with grading and grading issues is placing it all back on the classroom.

What she is doing with grading and grading issues is placing it all back on the classroom. She also gets officiating as she can notify students if they need to stay over an exam semester.

"This will give them the information as we get it," Kelly said.

Kelley said the students want to know how they can make plans if they need to stay over an exam semester.

"Dyson will mean economic hardship for students," Kelley said.

Joyce Jolliff, academic advisor for the School of Art and Design, said there may be some students who are struggling to graduate, but she does not know what to tell them until they know that class will be cut.

She said one student even left her office in tears because Jolliff didn't promise her that a needed class would be offered.

"I just plan what they need, and if there's a needed class, it will be kept," Jolliff said.

Reduced summer classes have academic advisors cautious

Academic advisors are struggling with what to tell students concerned about the reduced summer classes this summer.

The advisors are currently consulting with students, but have little concrete information about which classes are going to be cut, and when they will know what to tell students.

They know that some summer classes will be going to be axed.

Chancellor Walter Wendtger said last week that personnel layoffs will be a result of the current $7 million budget shortfall at SIUC.

He said the vice chancellor of the University for proposals on how they would absorb the cuts.

The proposals are in with possible lay-offs included, but Wendtger is tight-lipped about what specifics the vice-chancellor have recommended.

Sue Davis, public relations director, said students can expect an official University response sometime this week.

Glen Poshard, vice chancellor for Administration, deferred to the chancellor when asked if he was concerned about the chancellor's plan to cut the faculty and said he didn't want to speak about the issue until after Wendtger has made his statement.

California blazes torch thousands of acres
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA - Brush fires raging on 3,000 acres in southern California have injured 11 people, destroyed 25 homes and many other buildings and continues to burn across Monday, reaching the Camp Pendleton Marine Corps base.

Another fire has burned 1,700 acres on the coastal edge of Los Angeles, officials said Monday morning. It is 20 percent contained and was expected to be under control by Wednesday night. No injuries or building losses were reported from that blaze, which began Sunday night and was being fought by more than 1,000 firefighters.

The fires in the area of Fallbrook and Camp Pendleton, which ignited two hours apart, were the 53rd and 54th incidents of the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, the service said.

The fires were detected in and around Fallbrook, about 60 miles north of San Diego, she said. No fire fighters have been injured, she said.

At least 3 acres of Fallbrook Hospital suffered from smoke inhalation. Six other who had jumped into a streaming pool for water were treated for hypothermia.

In addition, two fire engines and a shelter's outfit, a dehydrated wind, had been blowing up to 50 mph
Sunday. The winds "have calmed down considerably [Monday]."

Beijing accuses EU of breaking WTO rules
BEIJING - China launched a new salvo on

The EU has imposed a ban on imports of Chinese the WTO has ruled, the EU decision is illegal and needs to be reversed," the statement said.

SNOWMASS, USA - Piolo Stevens' quest to become the first American woman to win an Olympic skiing medal will have to wait at least one more day. Winds up to 20 mph near the top of the Wildflower course forced postponement of the women's downhill Monday. The race was to be rescheduled for Tuesday, originally an all day in the Alpine schedule. An official announcement of the new date was expected after a meeting of Olympic officials at 7 p.m. EST.

Though flags were nearly limp at the bottom of the course, where about 25,000 spectators waited impatiently in sub-freezing temperatures, winds buffeted the top of the would have been at the racers' backs, which could have dramatically slowed them down. The top gust was at about 75 mph. Such delays are not new for Alpine skiers. The 1998

Intersection of Route 13 and Giant City Road poses danger for drivers

Sara Hooker
Daily Egyptian

Stops. Carbondale drivers need to pay extra attention when driving through busy intersections, following an influx in traffic in some areas of town.

Between January and June of 2001, the intersection of Route 13 and Giant City Road was the site of 16 traffic crashes—the most of any intersection in Carbondale. Illinois Avenue and Walnut Street ranked up second highest with 14 crashes and the intersection of Wall Street and Grand Avenue was the site of eight crashes.

Sgt. Frank Priddy of the Carbondale Police Department said a few years ago the state began referring to traffic incidents as 'crashes' not accidents because some factor of the collision could have been avoided.

Route 13 and Giant City Road is the most heavily traveled area in Carbondale, and the more the traffic, the higher the potential for crashes, according to Priddy.

He said while all three intersections are multi-lane and heavy traffic, they all have stoplights to regulate the flow. And Priddy does not blame visibility or weather on most traffic crashes either.

"As long as everyone's paying attention, there's really nothing to block visibility," Priddy said. "Most accidents are caused by people not paying attention."

Community Resource Officer Dan Reed said most accidents occur during daylight hours and in good weather. Often drivers pay more attention when the weather is bad and roads are more hazardous.

Disobeying traffic signals is a "pretty likely" reason for many crashes to occur, Reed said.

"The Daily Egyptian observed the Route 13 and Giant City Road intersection for an hour Sunday afternoon, and during one 10-minute interval as many as 12 cars disobeyed a red stoplight. Ten of the 12 vehicles were turning into or out of North Giant City Road by the Wal-Mart plaza, while two disobeyed the stoplight on the straight-away Route 13.

Officer Reed said the area is frequently patrolled and patrol cars detect speeds and sometimes add a heightened awareness of stoplights, but they can also distract drivers.

"All the street officers know that's one of the high-accident areas," Reed said. "We go by there a lot — it's kind of hard not to."

"Often people watch the [speed] law and not pay attention to driving. If there is a squad car along the road, people turn their heads to look at it or watch in the rearview mirror and aren't looking at what's in front of them."

Giant City Road has seen an all-around traffic increase with the recent opening of Carbondale Middle School and will see an additional population increase when the new high school opens over winter break of 2002-03.

Concern about the increase in traffic and the number of children using Giant City Road as a school crossing has been expressed by the Carbondale Police Department. A young child was struck by a vehicle Jan. 31 while crossing the road on his way to school. He was treated and released from Memorial Hospital of Carbondale for a cut on his head but did not suffer any major injury.

Director of Public Works Ed Reeder said the Giant City Road and Grand Avenue intersection has been considered for traffic signals and is currently trying to get fit into budget plans. He said a rough estimate of the cost is about $206,567.

The project, funded by motor fuel tax money, has seen a shortage in cash because of the census miscalculation, which cost the city hundreds of thousands of dollars in lost state revenue.

"[The census is] going to affect a lot of different projects, streets and traffic signals," Reeder said.

The city is also looking into signals at Walnut Street and Giant City Road, where the traffic will dramatically increase following the opening of the high school. Reeder said they are looking at signals and possibly turn lanes with the estimate "pulling almost a million dollars."

He said the budget will be approved in April and then they will know for sure what the next fiscal year has in store for the traffic situation.

Sgt. Priddy agrees the traffic increase on Giant City Road needs some attention.

"I think they'll need [signals]," Priddy said. "Giant City is already a very heavily traveled road."

Overall, Sgt. Priddy drives school district drivers 'to pay attention to signals and to what is going on if traffic crashes are to be avoided."

Board of Trustees faces yet another lawsuit from a professor

Former MCMA Dean Gerald Stone claims he was a victim of fraud

The former dean of the College of Communications and Fine Arts at SIUC is suing the Board of Trustees regarding a severance package.

In 1991, Gerald Stone was employed as the dean of the College of Communications and Fine Arts.

He was terminated in 1993 and reassigned to a 9-month tenure faculty position in the School of Journalism.

Stone's lawsuit alleges that former SIU President John Cwynar and former Provost R. Edward Signorin represented Stone with a false copy of the Board of Trustees' written policy statement asserting the university rules for administrators resized to faculty duties drop by 15 percent.

Relying on the written statement, Stone said he accepted the severance package. His monthly salary was reduced by $1,135, approximately 15 percent less per month than the salary he received as dean.

Increasingly, members of the BOT would not comment about the lawsuit until the written document was presented to them. Legal representation for the Board of Trustees was never received for comment.

Before July 1, 2001, Stone contends he had no reasonable reasons by which to discover the board's true policy.

The board's severance policy at the time was to allow reassigned administrators to retain their monthly salary without reduction.

"They cut my salary by 15 percent," Stone said. "And they did it by showing me a Board of Trustees policy of 1977 and said it was what they always did."

Stone became aware of the 1977 policy during a legal proceeding last year.

Stone said a letter was sent to the University a couple of months ago explaining why he decided to file the lawsuit.

Attorney Bob McCormack said normally the state cannot be sued, but there is an exception to the rule if fraud is involved.

"What Gerald discovered is that they don't ever reduce someone's monthly salary," McCormack said.

McCormack explained one of the moons of reference, the 2001-02 tenure package, was dropped out of court. She has also worked on a few trials, but admitted to the Chicago Tribune that she has never handled a case on her own.

Although they may not have Schmidt's 30-plus years of experience, she still can bring a lot to this campaign, Schaper said.

"She has experience with making things happen," Schaper said.

Tax scam targeting black community

Forty scams and a male may not have been paying attention for years of slavery, but the U.S. government is not going to give $40,000 to $100,000 back now.

However, that is what some of these scams are doing. Recent reports have said that 10 to 20 people are targeted each day in Illinois.

Once a victim is targeted, the scammer is likely to target them with a small initial payment or a small gift. This is to get them to open their accounts and keep them captive.

The scammer then offers the victim a prize or reward and asks them to complete a survey or other task to claim it. Once the victim completes the task, the scammer will ask them for payment for shipping or handling.

Marilyn McKenzie has a knack for scaring. She once had more than 30 years at SIUC, administrative assistant to the vice chancellor for Student Affairs and Enrollment Management, and has moved in and out of Anthony Hall offices since October 2000.

In her new role, she is responsible for setting up and coordinating the move into Anthony Hall on Monday afternoon.

She has been busy setting up the offices, including the administration's offices, the Chancellor's Office, and the Budget Office.

Two of those offices from the Physical Plant will continue housing boxes and furniture from the Northwest Annex to Anthony Hall throughout the month.

SIUC wages war to fight student smoking

Southern pilot for state schools launching program

Mark Lambird — Daily Egyptian

"It's hard to kick old habits, but different campus departments are working together to help students quit smoking for good."

During the next month, University officials from the Dental Hygiene, Health Education and Psychology Departments and Student Health Services will begin a program to help students stop smoking.

The program is the first of its kind in the state and will serve as a pilot for future programs. Paul Sarvela, chairman of the Department of Health Care Professions, said the Illinois Department of Public Health started the program to reach college students.

"They [Department of Health] chose SIU because they have more control of the media," Sarvela said. "A major part of the program will deal with using media to reach people.

He said if the program had been piloted in Chicago, it would have been more difficult to direct the message to the target audience.

The program will be geared toward all students, Sarvela said, but particularly female smokers.

"We haven't seen the decrease in female smoking we would like to see," Sarvela said. "The Center for Disease Control and the Illinois Department of Public Health have all targeted females for smoking cessation programs."

Sarvela added that research will be done to see what policies can be developed to stop smoking.

"A lot of grass in health care have come from policy," Sarvela said. "Look back at the late 1950's to 1960's when the seat belt laws have changed the way we drive."

One arm of the project will be conducted through Student Health Services and will include group meetings and free pharmaceuticals such as Nicotine gum, patches and Viberor pills.

Joe Baker, a coordinator with Student Health Services, said students will have a variety of options from which to choose.

"We will offer support groups as well as a pharmaceuticals approach," Baker said. "The purpose of these methods is to sort out the lifestyle and habits."

He said the habit of smoking is more than just indulging smoke.

"The habits include humming around with a pack of cigarettes, lighting one and find a place to smoke," Baker said. "With the smoking aids, the nicotine cravings are not there, so slowly you begin to quit the other parts of the habit."

Baker said the body begins to heal immediately after a person stops smoking. The CDC says that 20 minutes after the last smoke, a person's heart rate and temperature return to normal. The center says that within one year, coughing, sinus congestion, fatigue and shortness of breath decrease.

One of the body's remarkable healing powers is its ability to regenerate cilia in the lungs. The cilia are

Public policy zeros in on college-age women smokers

Codell Rodriguez — Daily Egyptian

If the Public Policy Institute has their way, college-age women will soon be thinking twice about igniting the lighter that brings life to the seemingly harmless white cylinder between their lips.

The institute has worked on a campaign targeted toward women smokers since receiving a $900,000 grant from the Illinois Department of Public Health in July 2001. While the finished campaign is not yet ready for the public, the institute knows what they're looking for and are inching in on a finished product that will concentrate on college-age women.

They are concentrating on this specific group because of the Surgeon General's March report that found college-age women are the fastest growing smoking population in the nation.

Mike Lawrence, associate director of the Public Policy Institute, said after much research and focus groups, they found the majority of students do not want to be hectored or humored and just want the facts.

"Our goal is to develop and test strategies to combat smoking in this high-danger area," Lawrence said.

Scott Hodgson, acting chair in the Department of Radio-Television and director of the media component of the campaign, said they are trying to reach a different audience than most anti-smoking campaigns do. He said the majority of these campaigns target teenagers and adults in their 30's. He said it's a change because they are focusing on a more mature audience than the high school age group.

"They're old enough to make up their own minds about what they want to do," Hodgson said.

Lawrence said the institute has seen preliminary ideas from the research but the campaign will not be finalized for another several weeks.

Lawrence said once the research is completed, the finished campaign will be so effective, it will spread outside the SIUC campus.

"We can't only be making a difference here at SIU, but we can also be making a difference on campuses across the nation," Lawrence said.

Hodgson said the difference the campaign can make is part of the motivation he gives to the media team, which consists of five faculty members, five graduate students and 12 undergraduate students.

"I told the students last week that we have a chance to save lives," Hodgson said. "We know that most smokers are college-age and most of them won't be able to kick the habit in 15 years before the average population.

Blood needed now as much as ever

Today our community is asking for a little time. Just 30 minutes is all it takes to give blood, and, hey, you always get a few free pretzels or cookies.

In the last 2 months, the American Red Cross has the most difficult time procuring the life-saving syrup. Many people may be struggling with colds and still be on antibiotics, making it hard for regular donors to give. Organizers of last Thursday's blood drive needed 410 units. They ended the day with 172 pints.

The Red Cross will try to collect 100 pints today from noon to 6 p.m. at the Recreation Center in the Alumni Lounge. Signs will point the way, and you can schedule an appointment to return later in the day if the wait is too long.

In this community, students have always been the biggest givers, something of which we should be proud. But community members must also come out and show they care.

In the wake of Sept. 11, the Red Cross had to turn away local donors because there were too many. This shows the generosity and caring we share for our fellow humans as far away as New York City. The blood collected then

The beauty of the core

No, not the Marine Corps. I mean the University core curriculum. That doctrine of well roundedness we all know and love. All around me, whenever I ask these required classes. What is the point, they say? Why can't I concentrate on the classes I'm interested in? Why am I allowed to take classes I am interested in, or will get something for nothing? How limited in scope, are these myopics that we just cannot see the wonderful benefits of this wise and far reaching document. I wanted to write a column that spoke of America. But not that insulting propaganda bunk you get on TV or from the Wisecracks Net. An honest portrayal. I mean, nowadays, America needs another ploy nice. I believe my readers deserve more than that. So, I've taken the ever popular phrase "God Bless" and have spun it out in all different directions to capture the full reach of America. Because as even my esteemed colleagues will admit, America is a two-sided coin — a beautiful beacon of freedom and a horrendous brute of intolerance and corruption. So, let us have a gander at the real America.

Dear Editor:

Professor Sidwell, soldier, police citizens and national identification cards all have been forced upon the American people for our "security." Each is a restriction of freedom that is nothing more than a freedom from the pain of thinking and dealing with the real threat to America's security, our government is merely manipulating the public into willingly giving up freedom in order to be safe and not violate the meaning of freedom. In fact, it must be. America's lenders need to exhibit true patriotic fervor and fight the hard and just war against terrorism instead of the cowardly assault against American liberty.

Please .. Let the Dogs out!!!

Dear Editor:

I am writing in regards to the recent success of the SIU men's basketball team. This year, I have been in every single home game, except one, and a few of our road contests. I am proud of the fans in the "Dawg Pound" I sit right after the Arena. I am pround of the way the men have come together on the court and our campus national recognition on several occasions this year. As head resident of the Residence Halls, I am always proud of the way SIU fans help mold the leadership they provide on and off the court is remarkable.

However, there is one thing I object with embarrassment at during this great season of our success. The crowd begins to swell to a fervid pitch as the drums beat, and we await the acknowledgment of our Saluki starting five. The crowd rises to its feet and claps in unison, the students' chests swell with pride for the men who are about to lead SIU to its first NCAA basketball tournament in quite some time, and the most important game of the season. Why Let the Dogs Out!!!

Recent decisions by administration a detriment to SIUC

Dear Editor:

President Walker's proposed $67,427 pay raise for vice administran during a period when budget cuts are thrusting employee layoffs, the cancellation of internships and the slashing of college budgets is unreasonable. I can't say that I'm surprised. The senior administration of this University has added considetely what students have been left with on the backs of the SIU community. President Walker cites that not filling four assistant positions and reducing 300 words and guest column. All topics are accepted; All columns to be edited.

I or as privates. However, many of the southern slaveholders, they were not given medals or awards to accept their services. In Jones’ office, he noted several soldiers struggled to receive their pension checks, despite their injuries, age and disability to the Union military branches.

One veteran, Oliver Moody, filed for his pension twice after 1885. He said his pension was approved by rebel troops twice and escaped both times during his service in the U.S.C.T. “It makes it hard to feel honored despite all the struggle he went through, he said because a Civil War hero,” said Moody.

All members of the G.A.R. Post 728 were born into slavery except Richard Bass. His family moved to Illinois before 1881, two years before the Black Laws were passed, banning blacks from entering the state. As Bass, several of the soldiers covered to Southern Illinois from other states, like Henry Bass, Henry Bass, Adolphus Inman and Frank Manly came from Indiana. Others came from Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and parts of Virginia. Many of them, including Louis Gradman, William Murray and Samuel White, suffered from serious disease connected during their service in the Civil War, according to Jones’ book. Also, many soldiers suffered from injuries, including some into a disabled veteran home.

Valentine's Day options for all

Brian Peach
Daily Egyptian

Whether you're clueless about what to do for your sweetheart this Valentine's Day or you just need to know what to do, the new Institute for Diversity in the Arts has got you covered.

With something for everyone, no joke: "I love candlelight bowling, cider, canvas, flowers or prime rib," said Gisela de Leon, who is overseeing the Student Center's efforts at creating something new.

For those looking to do some romantic but don't have a lot of money or just forget about Valentine's Day, roses, balloons and stuffed animals are being sold at the Information Station for less than some flower outlet stretch you would have to pay at a florist shop.

"It's a one-stop shop for your Valentine," said Susan Leonard, who is a student and also a Senior Center volunteer. "They're not going to be selling roses for the same price people would have to pay at a florist shop."

Said de Leon, who is a junior in business administration from Naperville, Illinois, about his colleagues: "They're trying to make it so students can spend their money on a more affordable gift, and we're trying to make sure that everything is being sold here to help out local businesses."

The bowling is a good choice for students to work up an appetite before heading to the Local Deli for a romantic dinner. "It's a good business and good people can make the best out of it," said de Leon.

The University also is planning a candlelight bowling event for Valentine's Day, which is being planned by senior Mark Lambird, who is a student at the Student Center.

"I'm sure it'll be a very busy day," said Delmar Alger, a student at the Student Center, about the event.

For those looking for romantic food, the University is also offering 10% off flowers at the Student Center, where you can pick up handcrafted items such as wood working designs and tie-dye clothing.

Whether you're clued up on what to do for your significant other this Valentine's Day, the Student Center has got you covered.

Institute aims to color study of race, identity

Kim York
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

SAN JOSE, Calif. - A new institute at Stanford University has this lofty goal: use art to dissolve stereotypes, inspire thought and help shape the shared identity of a diverse community.

"Ambitious? Yes. But those associated with the Institute for Diversity in the Arts strongly believe in the power of music, dance and visual art," said Brenda Wong Aoki, dean of the institute.

"What we do is open people's hearts and hopefully their minds," said Melinda Elam, director of the institute.

The institute's purpose is to study diversity and identity, especially in California. Funded by the James Irvine Foundation, the institute is focused on its artists-in-residence who lead student workshops and work with community groups.

For example, mixed-media artist Mildred Howard is interviewing people in East Palo Alto and Palo Alto and will use their words as part of her tapestry project.

Such efforts are an example of how art can change communities, said Aoki, who also is the institute's associate director. "That soul-to-soul relationship" is what will ultimately transform communities, she said.

Students had to audition to study with the institute, and their work will be displayed or performed in March. In addition, the institute is hosting the free Thursday lectures this quarter.

One recent speaker was alumnae "and Tony Award-winning playwright David Henry Hwang," who wrote "M. Butterfly." The playwright is not content with unlawfully studying what California's diverse population is doing. "I want to make it happen," he said.

The trick, artists and students say, is to reveal emotional truths about humans. By highlighting our diversity, by moving people to cry, howl and wail, we discover our commonality.

"The idea is, if you can show people that are very different from each other, how they are different, and can share their stories," said Aoki.

"That's what America is: The stuff you bring from old countries and the stuff you learn here," said Aoki.

Designing a cross-cultural art form is Brenda Wong Aoki, a junior comparative studies major. When his idea group performs in multicultural shows, such group performs its own ethnic dance but rarely combines the performance to create something new.

"Designing something is an essential part," she said.

"We must be careful who we let tell the story," she said. "We must be careful who we let control our stories and our culture."

"It's a small change," she said, "but it's a small change that will be made."
Murphysboro, IL - The historic Eagles building has been completely renovated. It was built in 1923 to house the Eagles, an all-male bar. This elite club did not permit women to enter the building. After the devastating tornado hit in 1925, the Eagles served as a temporary Red Cross Hospital for the disaster. Since the recent renovation of the Eagles, now named Eagles Plaza, the building is now dedicated to women. The owner Beth King-Stilley would like to welcome you to the plaza to experience their services. The numerous female oriented services offered at Eagles Plaza are displayed below.

They have been plenty of highs and lows on the Cinemania sidewalk since Jan. 1.

The best thing: "Being on CNN," Guth said. "They decided to use the continuance to that that they ran it on Headline News at the top of the hour every half hour.

They have about 490 e-mails from the media," Guth said on a recent cold, rainy, windy day outside the theater.

"We thought we'd get some attention locally -- but we wasn't expecting things from, like, Germany and Japan. Germany seriously sent a film crew.

There have been plenty of highs and lows on the Cinemania sidewalk since Jan. 1.

DAILY HOROSCOPES

By Linda C. Black

Daily's Birthday (Feb. 12). Although you start out with great promise, you run into a challenge here. It could be partially due to your success. Don't let money change you or drive a wedge between you and a friend. Always remember that love is more important. To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Today is a 6. You're usually talk about anything, but there's a growing tendency to keep your feelings hidden. Are you getting shy, or is there something you want to prevent ITS 0? Your friends will understand.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today is a 5. You may have felt like the weight of the world was on your shoulders. It's now lighter. You still have some problems to solve, but you have friends who want to help.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) - Today is an 8. Being a Gemini, you probably know at least two or three languages already. This could be a key to more income. There seems to be a direct link. If you have friends who want to help, go for it. They could be a key to more income. There seems to be a direct link.

Not sure what you're doing? Don't be lulled into thinking it'll always be this way. Your world order is about to increase. Take care of others in your two priority.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Today is a 6. Everything's consistently changing, and this is the change is for the better. Your intuition is always good, being more acute. Follow it to get the support you need.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is an 8 - Think of the time, money, and effort that you put into your education. A long-term investment, it will continue to pay dividends for you. It's time you start the process that you need to go bus that book, type or computer program.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Today is a 7 - A gentle person enjoys your company, and you'll be enriched in a sympathetic pattern. Spring for lunch or dinner. It's much cheaper than counseling.

Today's Birthday (Feb. 12). Although you start out with great promise, you run into a challenge here. It could be partially due to your success. Don't let money change you or drive a wedge between you and a friend. Always remember that love is more important. To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Today is a 6. You're usually talk about anything, but there's a growing tendency to keep your feelings hidden. Are you getting shy, or is there something you want to prevent ITS 0? Your friends will understand.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today is a 5. You may have felt like the weight of the world was on your shoulders. It's now lighter. You still have some problems to solve, but you have friends who want to help.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) - Today is an 8. Being a Gemini, you probably know at least two or three languages already. This could be a key to more income. There seems to be a direct link. If you have friends who want to help, go for it. They could be a key to more income. There seems to be a direct link.

Not sure what you're doing? Don't be lulled into thinking it'll always be this way. Your world order is about to increase. Take care of others in your two priority.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Today is a 6. Everything's consistently changing, and this is the change is for the better. Your intuition is always good, being more acute. Follow it to get the support you need.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is an 8 - Think of the time, money, and effort that you put into your education. A long-term investment, it will continue to pay dividends for you. It's time you start the process that you need to go bus that book, type or computer program.

explaining her solution to the former laundry fire. "The older stuff we hadn't been getting stuff clean, so she would end up doing our laundry for us."

Blaylock used to load up the team's dirty laundry and drive it all the way to her mother's house. They were being sun-dried because, according to Blaylock's mother, it makes the whites whiter.

The machines were donated after Kovalezky met with Maytag operations manager Chuck Parke and asked him to donate the machines as part of their research and development. Parke, speaker, and SIU was given the equipment, which is valued at $4,000 to $5,000.

But that wasn't the only hassle for Blaylock. Last spring, a student's laundry was stolen while sun-drying on a line outside her mother's house. They were being sun-dried because, according to Blaylock's mother, it makes the whites whiter.

usability take-like conclusion if he can't make it with any of his other jumps. "I think two more seasons, and if next year doesn't go well as I think it can, then I think he should retire. But then it could be next year," Ready recently told ESPN.com. "I don't want to be a distraction for the program."

While his teacher has hit hard times, Weber is at the opposite end of the coaching spectrum. Still relatively young at the age of 45, Weber has worked his way into an enviable position.

He's coaching a 21-4 team right now that is certain to be in shape to be SIU's first NCAA tournament qualifier since 1995. Contingent on how the rest of the season shakes out, Weber will likely have options as soon as this spring to move to a more prestigious conference at a school capable of offering him a thick pay raise.

Pending circumstances, it's not a major stretch to wonder whether Weber will be striking the Purdue sideline again in the not-too-distant future.

Saluki fans are hopeful that an NCAA trip this year wouldn't shan Weber from sticking around longer and continuing to build the SIU program.

Whether Weber does jump at an offer this spring or keeps raking up wins with what projects to be his last year, he's in a win-win situation.

The same can't be said for his old friend, who remains a virtual fixture in Weber's life. The teacher and pupil recently made a joint appearance on ESPN radio, and Ready has called Weber frequently to congratulate him on the Salukis' breakthrough season; "I think he does it for me," I've done well, but at the same time, I feel bad for him that he's struggling, and that their program has struggled," Weber said. "You have to see your friends get successful."

Especially when all you can do is hurt from afar.

U.S. men skaters to face mighty Russians

By Bob Ford

Knight Ridder Newspapers

SALT LAKE CITY (KRT) - The stars of U.S. men's figure skating began to debut Tuesday night with a Russian duo that seems nearly overpowering. Still, they feel confident a major upset can take place in the Salt Lake Ice Center.

A good example of a situation where anything can happen is that St. Louis (Rams) were 14-point favorites going into the Super Bowl, and the Patriots won. So you should never count anybody out, said Todd Eldredge, a 20-year-old originally from Chatham, Mass.

Eldredge is appearing in his third Olympic Games but is still looking for his first medal after a disappointing 19th place finish in Nagano, Japan in 1998. But both he and his teammate, Tim Goebel and Michael Weiss, will take another small step toward that goal on the podium this year.

At least two of the ramps will almost certainly be filled by China's Evanay Plushenko, who has finished 1-2 at nearly every major competition this year.

"The Olympics are a strange event," said Weiss, 25, who finished seventh in Nagano. "Lots of people will be favorites coming in, and a lot of times people win the gold medal that nobody really expects. We went to compete in the Olympic Games, a lot of strange and interesting things happen."-

One interesting thing that could happen in the men's competition could happen when Plushenko, who has usually been a very strong behind his Russian teammates, tries to land a quaduple lutz jump, something that would be a first in competition.

The quad jump has newly become a necessity in men's figure skating — although Eldredge recently won the U.S. championships without trying one. But so far, the men have been able to land only quad flip jumps and quad saltfords. Plushenko wants to try the jumps with the more difficult spin, something that is also being contem­plated by Canadian veteran Elvis Stojko.

Trying quads and landing them are two different things, however, and it could be that one or both of the Russians falter in either the short program or the long program on Tuesday night.

For the United States, the best jumper is Goebel, who won a second straight national championship last month. Although Goebel lacks the grace of Eldredge or the flair of Weiss, he has been the most consistent U.S. skater for several seasons. He's been especially strong on his short programs, a testament to the hard work of his skating and has improved in that area.

"Obviously, if you go out and produce a program and land a lot of quads, it's a really good feeling," Goebel said. "But, I think you have to have the confidence to do much more of the performance. I think I've made some great strides, and I'm excited about the opportunity to see how far I can go on my skating.

It's not just doing the jumps but skating the program well and the spins — and continuing to raise my competitive level."

The United States hasn't had a gold medal winner in figure skating since Brian Boitano in 1988 and hasn't captured a medal of any color since Paul Wylie's silver in 1992. Since Boitano, three Russians have taken the gold medal in Olympic figure skating — Evgeni Plushenko, Evgeny Plushenko and Plushenko female figures to make that four. But the Salt Lake Games have been filled with upset so far.

"I talk that, on any given day, when we go out there and compete, we have the goods," said Eldredge. "We have what we take to beat those guys."

Former Golden Gloves champ teaches art of boxing

Before any bouts step into a ring to mercilessly beat his opponent, he needs several months of training and sparring.

But before an SIU student steps into the ring to even spar, he has to sign onto the practice mat with 1999 Golden Gloves champion Jihad Baker for basic boxing instruction. "It's lots of work," said SIU student Joe Khio while waiting for his turn to spar, he has to "But a majority of the people don't want to fight or not," said intramural Baker for basic boxing instruction.

"It's lots of work, " said SIU student Joe Khio while waiting for his chance on the mat with Baker. "It's easy on TV, but it's really not." Khio is one of 40 to 50 SIU students who come to the martial arts center of the Recreation Center every Monday or Wednesday evening or Tuesday or Thursday afternoon to learn the basic techniques of boxing from Baker.

The students jump rope, hit bags and practice footwork while waiting for their turn to "box" with Baker. The 31-year-old instructor tuner boxes the students while ongoing their punching, dodging and footwork.

The majority of students, including many women, are there for the workout rather than the desire to box competitively.

"Some of the people that are in the class have intentions of utilizing the skills in a ring," said intramural assistant director Kathy Guifford. "But a majority of the people that have signed up and are going to the program are utilizing it as a workout.

But regardless of whether they want to fight or not, all students must register with the U.S.A. Boxing Association.

"It doesn't mean you have to compete, it means you can compete," Baker said to his students after last Wednesday's practice, explaining what membership in U.S.A. Boxing means. "It doesn't mean you have to spar, it means you can spar." Membership in the association provides students with insurance for sparking and makes them eligible to compete in sanctioned bouts.

Students in the class have only been learning boxing since the program started Jan. 28, and are not yet ready to spar, but should be in a few months. Students can then, if they desire, individually enroll their stuff in competition.

Individualism was, according to Baker, what makes boxing great. A person goes into the ring on their own with no one to blame or praise but themselves.

"Boxing gives the individual a chance to shine and to compete," Baker said. "They get up there, and it's like their own concert." Baker will be competing in his own concert in New Ind., later this month. He will be a participant in FX's Toughman National Tournament.

SCORE

The athletes that compete in unscored meets approach them as if they were being scored. Coming out of any competitions, they just want to improve on their previous results.

"The only difference between scored and unscored teams is that an unscored meet is easier," said SIU women's captain Julia Roundtree. "Even though it is not scored, I compete with the same attitude in all meets."

Fremont jumper Marion Adams said the concentration on her performance is what makes her improve, no matter what type of event it is.

The first two meets of the season were scored and all of the SIU members participated unless they were out with an injury. Each of those competitions included six to seven teams.

During the past two meets the Salbides participated in, there were 20-plus teams. Those competitions were not scored because of the high number of entries and only a select few participated in their respective events.

When the meet is over and the athletes have completed all of their assigned tasks, it does not matter to them if the meet was scored or not. The important aspect for them is that they got a chance to compete against schools they normally would not meet in their conference.

"If the athlete gets a chance to see competition from around the country it helps them learn, not if it's a meet in scored or not," Wright said.

Purdue problems pain Weber

There comes a situation every so often that maps us out of our personal rhythm, reminding us that life isn't always as smooth or carefree as it seems in its better moments.

It's happening this year to the man who taught Bruce Weber the ropes.

Gene Keady, the venerable basketball coach at Purdue, has fought through a lot in his personal life during the last 15 years, and this season he's encountering something of a professional crisis.

Keady, best known for his rugged sideline demeanor and an even rougher hairdo, has mastered a sensational coaching career. He's won more than 500 games spanning more than two decades of coaching in the process of turning Purdue into one of the most respected programs in the Big Ten.

Yet in a scene somewhat reminiscent of what happened at SIU a few years back under former coach Rich Herrin, the wins have almost stopped coming by the bunches for Keady.

And there's no escaping the hard feelings that remain when a legend turns mortal in front of everybody's eyes.

After a mediocre season last year that ended in an NIT trip, the Boilermakers are headed for a sub-.500 season this year. That's virtually uncharted territory for Keady, who has only experienced one losing season prior to this one.

Opinion is sharply divided among Purdue fans whether Keady is still in it to keep the Boilermakers among college basketball's upper crust.

It's simpler for Weber - he just wants his friend to succeed.

"I want him to always win - he's my mentor and the guy who got me in this business," Weber said. "I don't want him to ever lose or Purdue to lose."

A nice sentiment, but one that hasn't intersected with reality of late. There have been huge profile reports indicating Keady won't last much longer in West Lafayette, Ind., if the Boilermakers don't start showing signs of relief that life isn't always as smooth or carefree as it seems in its better moments.

"It's happening this year to the man who taught Bruce Weber the ropes," said PCC head coach Jerry "K" Kill.

"When you get 105 players, and you got to wash for 105 people, that's a five-to-six-hour project at least."

Laundry took so long because when the machines actually worked, teams had to wheel the laundry to a van, drive the van over to the Physical Plant and wash the clothes there. While there, whoever was assigned laundry duty had to baby-sit machines that had no timers, then pack the laundry, put it back in the van and bring it back to the equipment room at the SIU Arena.

Because of the donation, all those problems are solved.

The new machines will be especially convenient for softball head coach Karen Blaylock as well as her mother.

"I would just give it to my mom," Blaylock said.

Track meet directors assess the competition

During a scored meet, the athletes are assessed individually for NCAA qualifying reasons and the number of events have been completed the athletes times and distances are collectively ranked and each team receives a certain amount of points.

In an unscored meet, times are still assessed because the athlete may meet NCAA standards, but the team is not ranked collectively.

Once it is determined if the meet is scored or not, the coaches have to decide how they are going to approach the meet. Some coaches change their strategies, but some enter with different angles.

"We approach all meets the same," SIU men's head coach Cameron Wright said. "I want them to improve at their best no matter what type of event it is."

Wright may not change his approach, but there are other coaches who go into competition differently based on whether it is scored or not.

SIU women's head coach Connie Price-Smith said she approaches events differently from the standpoint of who she chooses to enter into the competition.

"When a meet is scored, I want as many athletes to compete as possible so I can maximize the points we receive," Price-Smith said.

During unscored meets, Price-Smith tries to get athletes in events they normally wouldn't compete in. She said during an unscored meet, an athlete who competes in the 400-meter dash may enter the mile to help build her stamina.

Dave Beauthem - a member of the SIU track and field team from 1985 to 1990 and now the head coach of the women's team at Bradley University - noted a key distinction between the two types of meets.

Beauthem said that the biggest difference in the two meets is that a scored meet is about the team while an unscored meet is about the individual.

"In a scored meet I take everyone on the roster and get into as many events as possible," Beauthem said. "Sometimes, I may only take one person to an unscored meet because it may only best serve them."

Some athletes welcome unscored meets because they give them a weekend off. When coaches decide who is competing, they usually take only those athletes. In some cases, other athletes will go to the meet to watch the other schools.

"At our last competition I only took one person because she was the only one I felt needed to compete against the schools that were there and in that specific event," Beauthem said.
