Clinton set to take presidential oath

Washington Post

President-elect Clinton's journey from tiny Hope, Ark., to the pinnacle of the White House began in earnest Tuesday, as he spent a final day in transition praying at the Kennedy gravesite, partying at presidential gala and telling the nation's governors: "I desperately want to make a difference" as president.

At a new Wednesday on the Capitol's West Front, Clinton will take the oath of office as the 42nd president of the United States. On his last day as a private citizen, he appeared absorbed with the challenge of what lies ahead and the life he will leave behind.

As Clinton prepared to become president, he pleaded with his friends not to let him become isolated in the Oval Office—or from their advice. "I'm going to do my best to stay in touch with the American people and to stay in touch with you," Clinton told the governors at an emotional luncheon held in the newly restored Great Hall at the Library of Congress.

Clinton asked the bipartisan gathering of governors for a gift of "true friendship"—constructive criticism when the new administration is making mistakes. "We're going to open the doors of the White House to you, but you've got to walk in," Clinton said.

"Telephones are two-way instruments."

Clinton's chief spokesman promised on the eve of the inauguration that the new administration would hit the ground running, but virtually all the domestic agencies and departments lack any Clinton appointees below Cabinet level.

The transition team announced a slate of State Department officials and said former Vermont Governor Madeleine Kunin (D) would become the deputy secretary of education, but the promised unveiling of

Downscaling, retirement used to tighten SIUC staff

Between employee downsizing through retirement and a possible salary increase, SIUC will try to run with a smaller but better-paid staff, officials said.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education suggested an average 2.5 percent salary increase for public university professors in 1994. The increase would cost the state $25.4 million.

Because of the state's financial problems and traditional cuts in IBHE recommendations by the General Assembly, the raise may not materialize. But regardless, SIUC President John C. Guyon said the University has enough money set

The situation in Iraq should not affect the price of oil in the United States, an oil industry official said.

Loius Pukelis, manager of public affairs for AAA Motor Club in Chicago, said AAA keeps a close watch on the price of oil, and they have found no reason to suspect the price of oil will rise.

"As of now, it doesn't appear that the price of gas will rise," Pukelis said. "But there was a different story two years ago." In August 1990, Iraq soldiers invaded Kuwait and the price of oil began an immediate increase, he said. The price continued to rise, but the Gulf War broke the increase, and prices have dropped or remained steady ever since.

Pukelis said even though it seems the situation will have no effect, the situation can change.

"If we do see a price increase in the next couple of months, it might be a result of what's going on," he said. "Another major difference is that the Iranians were on the offense two years ago, and now we are."

As the Pentagon reported new attacks Tuesday on Iraqi air defense installations, the United Nations Security Council scheduled a meeting to discuss misgivings of some of the coalition partners about the allied actions.

Baghdad TV reported that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein offered a cease-fire in the "no-fly zones" which had been the target of allied air attacks. According to the television broadcast, he also was prepared to allow United Nations weapons inspectors to fly directly to Baghdad from Bahrain, as demanded by the U.N. and previously refused by the Iraqi government.

Iraq's refusal to allow the flights and firing on allied reconnaissance aircraft in the no-fly areas had been two of the main reasons for the attacks this week on Iraqi targets.

A Pentagon official, according to CNN, described the reported offer from Iraq as a "hopeful sign."

The State Department insisted there was broad agreement among the coalition members— including Russia— about the principle of the need for Iraq to obey U.N. Security Council resolutions. But some of those coalition partners— among them including Russia— expressed misgivings Tuesday about the tactics by which those principles were enforced by the United States and its allies.

No. 1 Vandy bounces Salukis, 85-55

The Vanderbilt women’s basketball showed the Salukis why they are the nation’s top-ranked team in a 85-55 win over SIUC Tuesday night in Nashville, Tenn.

During a nine-minute stretch in the first half the Lady Commodores connected on 11 consecutive baskets while forcing eight SIUC turnovers.

The Lady Commodores, winners of 23 of their last 25 home games, improved to 16-0 while snapping a three-game winning streak by the Salukis, who fell to 7-5.

SIUC Coach Cindy Scott said the difference in the game was the size of the much bigger Lady Commodores, who outreared eight players over six-feet tall.

“We were totally intimidated in the first half,” Scott said.

The Lady Commodore starting front line of 6-foot-10 Heidi Gillingham, 6-2 Minty Lamb and 6-1 Shelby Jarrard an 6-4 reserve Mara Cunningham combined for 54 points and 14 rebounds to make the difference in the ballgame.

All-America candidate Ania Scott paced the Salukis with 18 points and three steals. The Saluki 1-2 combination of Tiffany Boyd and Kayla Keir were held to a combined 18 points and 13 rebounds. They were combined near exactly 28 points a contest.

Coach Scott said the Lady Commodores had a good job of denying the ball to Bolden and “...we couldn’t get our big people the ball,” Scott said.

Coach Scott said although the game was decided in the first half, her team proved they could play well in the second.

“We played them in the second half,” Scott said, “In the first half, defense was our downfall, but we played well, but they hit some shots with the clock winding down.”

Scott said it will be a travel to Indiana State Saturday.

At the start of Missouri Valley Conference action this week, the basketball Salukis were able to get back on track by beating Bradley, 77-74, Monday night in Peoria.

It was the Salukis’ first MVC victory on the road, giving SIUC a win in the game column after going 0-2 on the road against conference opponents Illinois State and Creighton last week.

The Salukis, 5-2, got out to a quick 8-0 start in the first half and never looked back, keeping the Braves at a distance the rest of the evening.

Saluki head coach Rich Herrin said the victory was not as easy as it seemed.

“It was a very hard-fought battle. And Bradley played a very physical game,” he said. “We did a good job defensively in the first half and we really took care of the basketball by executing properly.”

Herrin said the victory was even nicer against the Braves, who were coming off a win over Southwest Missouri State.

“We are a good team that has been coming through some ups and downs,” Herrin said. “Against Bradley, we really took control.”

Senior guard Tye Veazie led the Salukis with 19 points, while senior forward Ashant Amany (18 points), 11 rebounds and sophomore forward Mark Timmons (15 points, 17 rebounds) both had a double-double game.

The Braves’ freshman sensation Don Jackson scored a career-high 31 points to go along with his 13 rebounds in Bradley’s effort.

Elsewhere in MVC action, the Bluejays of Creighton, fresh off an upset of SIUC Saturday, pulled another upset out of the bag against Southwest Missouri.

In beating the Bears 72-58, Creighton moved to 2-0 in the MVC, and are on a two-game win streak.

SMSU was picked in mid preseason polls to be one of the top three teams in the MVC, but awn the Bears are in last place with a 1-4 record.

Creighton coach head Rick Johnson said his team’s recent surge could be credited to a new conference attitude.

“The first seven games for us was difficult for us as a young team compared to the team’s we were playing,” he said. “We are starting to get our conference back, with wins against teams like Illinois State, SIUC, and SNU.”

Johnson said Creighton has been held together by consistent performances from senior Matt Petty and has recently surged by the play of junior point guard Jason Siggins.

“Jason has really been the difference for us and has made things happen on the court,” he said. “His play has made everybody better.”

Quiz: Can you name the National Basketball Association player in this script?

A superstar suffers a serious injury. He isolates himself from his team, loses confidence, works out privately and shuns management plans to appear at games.

When he considers himself fit to play again, he insists the team reinstate him immediately. When the owner and general manager balk, the player threatens to make a scene until he gets his way.

Answer: No, it is not Bernard King, although his current situation is similar to the bizarre situation that took place in Chicago in 1985-86 between the Bulls and Michael Jordan.

The Bulls were trying to protect their most valuable property, Jordan had become a box office magnet by his spectacular play as a rookie in the 19-E-85 season. But he suffered a cracked bone in his left foot in an exhibition game against the Golden State Warriors and spent the first five months of the regular season rehabilitating.

Like King, Jordan had his own medical team supervising his rehabilitation in North Carolina. He re-hired general manager Jerry Krause’s plan to join the team on the road trip, but was seen on television sitting on the North Carolina bench with his college coach, Dean Smith.

He further alienated his teammates by suggesting they were

Students to celebrate new year with festival
By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

Celebrating Chinese New Year has always been one of the biggest celebrations in Chinese culture, and this year's festival offers something special.

"This year's celebration is special because it occurs on what Americans consider Leap Year," said Andy Ng, vice president of the SIUC College Bowl team. "The Chinese, Malaysian and Singapore Student Associations, as well as several other groups, are providing a Chinese New Year celebration at 5:30 p.m. Jan. 31 in the SIUC Student Center."

"We want people to understand the celebration is not just for Chinese students," said Wan-Lin Wu, president of the Chinese Student Association. "Everyone is invited."

Ng said the festivities will include dinner, exhibits, dancing, skit presentations and prizes.

We plans to bring audio/visual material that displays Chinese culture. A small orchestra performing authentic Chinese chamber music will also be present.

The cost is $13 for the general public and $11 for members of the student organizations.

"They aren't just for certain races," Ng said. "We invite those who are just interested in our culture to join."

The history of the New Year's celebration began with a fairy tale. A monster, who terrorized the villages and ate small children, would invade the countryside every year. The beast was afraid of the color red and could only be driven away during the celebration.

"The monster was frightened of the color red, so everything during the celebration is red," said Wu. "It is one of the only times an entire family can get together."

The actual Chinese New Year begins Jan. 23, but because of the winter break the organizations did not have enough time to plan the celebration by then.

Future of leadership needs explanation

WHEN BILL CLINTON delivers his inaugural address today, people listening to it should expect a vision of the future.

At times of turmoil in the United States, newly elected presidents have come up with speeches that have strengthened the spirit of the people and have set goals to help deliver the nation from trouble.

Franklin D. Roosevelt's calm assurance "...that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself..." was just what a panicked country needed to hear in the throes of the Great Depression.

AT OTHER TIMES, new presidents have signaled a transfer of power to a drastically different group of leaders, and their speeches reflected a new philosophy of leadership.

In 1961, John F. Kennedy stated the changes that people voted for were about to start. "Let the word go forth...that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans..."

Clinton, 46, also comes into power at a time when the face of national leadership is changed. A whole new generation of leadership will be in Washington this year.

Not only has Clinton appointed mostly fresh, new faces to his administration, but 123 fresh, new faces also have joined Congress.

AS THEIR LEADER, it is up to Clinton to tell America what this younger generation of Washington newcomers is all about.

He faced with a similar situation, Kennedy explained that the new leaders were "...tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, and proud of our ancient heritage..."

Clinton and the other 1993 newcomers are some of the first politicians to admit to smoking marijuana, to protesting the Vietnam War, and to speak about it as a public that is war-weary.

People listening to Clinton's address should expect him to give a general outline of what the next generation of power will deliver. America voted for a change because the people wanted to see a change in the way Washington responded to their needs.

The nation should not only get a promise that the Constitution will be upheld and defended. It should hear the assurance that it will get what it needs: a government that will remain a leader in the world community but one that will start putting domestic problem-solving first.

'\'Bells of Hope' not necessarily signal for onset of racially aware leadership'

By Courtland Milloy
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The last time I was in Hope, Ark., headed for my father’s birthplace in Earl, something ugly happened. My parents had stopped at a gas station and my mother had asked if she could come inside to heat my bottle. It was the winter of 1951, and I was 5 months old. My mother was told no. "Coloreds" were not allowed. I would just have to drink cold milk or go hungry.

Of course, I don’t remember the incident. In fact, I didn’t even hear about it until last Christmas, when my parents came to Washington. That’s how I learned about my past, mostly during holidays, when a racial riot gets coughed up like an old bone that has been lodged in a family member’s throat.

In the aftermath of Bill Clinton’s election, the news carried stories about quaint old “Arkansas,” but my family was not laughing.

One story mentioned that the odd odor of chlorine Clinton volunteer pronounced the name of a town in Arkansas called McGehee, where she was told to drive a turn out that was the town where a Ku Klux Klansman posing as a sheriff’s deputy had shot and killed my grandfather.

I mention this as a backdrop for saying how much I had hoped Sunday’s ringing of the “Bells of Hope” would signal a real desire on Clinton’s part for genuine racial healing in this country. And how disappointed I am that, in the wake of his change of heart, I for the suffering of Haitian refugees, the whole inauguration has taken on a hollow ring.

Call me naive, but I really wanted to believe that Clinton meant it when he told Morehouse College students in February that “the cheap politics of division in the 1980s have kept America divided and dumber and poorer than we ought to have been.”

Before his election, Clinton had called the Bush administration’s policy of forcibly returning Haitian refugees “morally wrong.” But now, after announcing his support for Bush’s blockade of Haiti, Clinton is scheduled to kick off his inaugural activities at the historic Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church, which makes freedom for Haitians and South Africans a hallmark of its ministry.

As a governor, this is how Clinton played the game: schmoozing with blacks to James Brown music on one side of town, then heading off to play golf at an all-white country club on the other. This may be acceptable backwater politicking, but I don’t see how he can withstand such a clash of symbols under a national spotlight.

Here is Washington, something as mundane as a parade of inaugural performers that has descended into madness. Consider the selection of "blond soul" singer Michael Bolton to perform "A Change Is Gonna Come." The song meant so much to Sam Cooke that Cooke’s estate has allowed it to be played in a for-profit situation only once — in the scene in Spike Lee’s movie in which Malcolm X is about to be assassinated.

Enter Bolton, who never met a black man’s music that he couldn’t use to make himself a million bucks. In a presidential inauguration supposed to be about change, there is nothing new about that.

Another headline is Michael Jackson. Here is a black man who has surgically narrowed his nose and chemically whitened his skin. According to a recent news report, Jackson wanted a white kid to play him as a child in a commercial.

So the Clinton-Bloodworth-Thomason production gives us a white man who makes a killing sounding like a constricted black man and a black man who literally looks like he is dying to be white.

The symbolism has gone way haywire. Then again, what else might one expect from a television production team that brought us “Designing Women,” which features three white women and their nestered black ex-con serves?

Sometimes, the patrocinizing of the liberal white elite can be as offensive as the outright hatred of racist white conservatives.

Seizing on Clinton’s Haitian switch, a comedian recently quipped that when it comes to Bells for Hope, “count one going for hope in an even home.”

How ironic that Clinton, campaigning among black audiences, passionately spoke up for Haiti while addressing racial polarization and inequality at home. Ask Maya Angelou to compose a piece was a nice touch. But it’s going to take more than kind words to heal deep racial wounds.

Clinton told students at Morehouse that his racial awareness went back to when he was 5 years old and lived with his grandparents in the town of Hope. His grandfather ran a store that was terrorized by blacks and whites. It certainly sounded like a friendlier place than the one my parents had visited with me in 1951.

By Clinton’s own recollection, his grandfather used to talk with him about the evils of racism. If that is true, Clinton might want to talk with his grandfather’s grave and have another chat.

Kim Harris, associate professor of agribusiness economics, follows the oil industry closely from week to week.

Harris said the Iraqi situation should not have a large impact unless the conflict would enlarge and spread to Saudi Arabia and Khorasan.

The difference between the current situation and the one or two years ago is that Iraq was the main supplier of oil in 1990 to the world, and the war took that away, Harris said.

"Since (1990), the Iraqis have been off the market, and we've learned to live without them," he said.

Harris said there is an oversupply of oil in the world and oil prices have continued to drop since September.

Pekelis said despite the little attention the situation should have on the prices, oil companies may use the situation to raise prices.

"There is always the possibility that the gasagi market will make some extra money off the situation," he said.

Robert Silvers, a graduate student, said there is the possibility, he doubts the companies will use the situation to their advantage.

"The oil companies are very concerned how the public perceives them," he said. "Also, it is hard to defend raising the price while gas is good," he said.

"I doubt the price will go up right now," Silvers said.

"The price is decided upon by the individual dealers, which is the reason the price of gas will vary gas around the nation," he said.

"The price is decided by supply and demand, not gas around the nation," he said.

"It is really a consumer market," he said. "I don't see how the war within minutes of his statement, Silvers agrees that rise price of oil should not be influenced by the Iraq situation.

"When there is instability somewhere in the world, you see prices change," he said. "I guess rising gas prices are possible, but I haven't seen any evidence of that yet.

Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams reported that American aircraft had fired rockets and dropped cluster bombs on Iraqi armored vehicles in the "no-fly" zones declared by members of the Allied coalition.

Iraq's INA news agency reported Tuesday night that three people had been killed and three others wounded when U.S. planes raided a military position in Ninawa governorate, 30 miles north of Baghdad.

INA quoted a military spokesman as saying Iraqi forces "confronted the attacking aircraft with fire and forced them to flee without fulfilling their missions.

"Williams said that Monday's attacks on air defense installations in the no-fly zone south of the 22d parallel had effectively put them out of action," the Sunday attack on a military-industrial complex south of Baghdad had destroyed "key elements" of the compound, where U.S. intelligence said Iraq had been manufacturing parts for its nuclear weapons program.

In the Arab world, U.S. embassies reported to Washington that there was public questioning about the American actions against Iraq, with some newspapers and leaders comparing the violence against Iraq with Israel's actions.

more than 100 subcabinet appointments was delayed another day.

The Clinton team has gotten approval to hold over four dozen senior Bush administration officials to ensure continuation.

And once again, the counterpoint to Clinton's day was another U.S. skirmish with Iraq, a ticklish military problem that will fall into his lap within minutes of his wear-in ceremonies and offer early clues to Clinton's foreign policy instincts.

Clinton presidency put on market by image-conscious advertisers

The Washington Post

Look carefully at advertising over the next few weeks and you'll likely notice an upsurge in the emphasis on images, or 'branding' as image-conscious advertisers have begun calling it. The ad won't say so, but you'll be able to read the subtext: it's the Age of Bill Clinton.

If advertising capitalizes on even the tiniest shifts in the national mood and culture, then Bill Clinton and his presidency offer advertisers a bonanza in the next four years.

Not since the conservative Reagan era dawned a dozen years ago, say people who create advertising, has a president provided such a rich palette of symbols and themes from which to paint the ever-present images of consumption.

The signs and imagery that have attached to Clinton are profound and silly: Transition and change (from Republicans to Democrats, from yuppies to the South). The rise of the Internet. An accomplished caretaker: woman as first lady. Bus tours. A place called Hope. Jogging and McDonald's. Socks.

Advertising has always tended to reflect the tone struck by the nation's chief executive. Said Jane Fitzgerald, who tracks consumer trends for the Ogilvy & Mather ad agency, "Look at the tone the Reagans set for the 1980s, and how the character of the times shift when George and Barbara took over." Fitzgerald said, "We went from glitz and glamour to sweat pants. The food was different. The objectives were different."

Advertisers say the factors that produced Clinton's election began to be clear years ago in the changing tone of marketing. Indeed, the Clinton Era in advertising may have begun in late 1990, when an unknown new company began airing images of a small Southern town.

The narrator of one of the commercials was a little boy who told a story how his family had moved from Detroit to rural Spring Hill, Tenn., because his dad was about to start an exciting new job. The first commercials for Saturn cars perfectly embodied themes that Clinton himself has been trying to gain the presidency.

The car ads, like the candidate, spoke about changing the established order, about caring for people, about a new start.

Pregnancy inspires woman to create art out of sewing

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

Serious art and sewing are two things rarely uttered in the same sentence. Embroidered plaques bearing the phrase "home sweet home" are nailed close to a museum piece that a needle and thread get. But a new Masters of Fine Arts exhibit by Gwen Faber Maitzen shows that a needle and thread can be used for much more than sewing a button onto a shirt.

The exhibit, which runs in the University Museum until Jan. 29, features mixed-media works created in the past year from cloth that ranges in size from tiny cocoons to massive, six-foot-square constructions.

The cloth is torn, damaged or manipulated, then sewn together with thread, which replaces paint and traditional drawing tools.

The pieces are stark, colorless and ambiguous enough so that the viewer becomes active participant, projecting their own ideas upon Maitzen's textural landscape.

Maitzen hit upon the unusual technique during her pregnancy three years ago. She began an embroidery to pass the time during long waits at the doctor's office but found the final product "too cute. It wasn't serious. I felt liked sewing, but I hadn't making clothes."

Maitzen abandoned her painting to concentrate on her new-found artistic fixation with needle and thread. Just as functional sewing is about creating an outfit for a woman, Maitzen's pieces look as issues from a uniquely feminine point of view.

The project arguably being one of the pinnacle events of a woman's experience, it is natural that she should deal with the subject in her art.

One piece, a six foot long length of hand-loomed cloth, stretches down to frame a large portrait of a pregnant woman's abdomen, swollen with new life she carries inside.

Maitzen said her pregnancy was a life-changing experience for her.

"It really got me in touch with what it is to be a woman," she said. "It connected me."

Maitzen's child Katherine was born in October 1990. Just as life is produced in the sheltering womb, other pieces in the exhibit explore the protective nature of cocoons.

The simple pieces consist of dead rose petals, pomegranate and peonies surrounded by cotton thread. Maitzen said she aims to deal with the preservation of life.

"[The pieces] preserve something that was once beautiful, even though it isn't beautiful anymore," she said. "I see it as a respect for life. They provoke an 'age of beauty. The memory is beautiful.'"

The majority of the pieces in her exhibit examine aspects of relationships and social constraints through the use of the thread-and-needle technique.

Two large pieces of thin cloth joined together by a dense network of cross-stitching describes "The Relationship." a piece Maitzen said was inspired by her husband Chris, a graduate student in cinema and photography.

The visually arresting "Skin," one of several pieces that deal with the concept of healing, is simply a band-aid of irregular fabric, violently ripped and then sewed together.

The works recall both physical trauma and attempts to patch up emotional wounds, Maitzen said. "A lot of people walk around damaged in this society," she said.

The emotional damage people experience sometimes spurs them to put up physical and physical shields to deal with the pain.

A series titled "Persons" consists of small cut-out pieces with objects such as hair and pearls sewn onto them, and gives clues to the defenses people use in their everyday relationships.

"They're inspired by the armaments people use and the different personalities," she said. "You could almost think of them as little portraits."

Maitzen admits that because of the personal nature of her work, it is difficult to talk about. She said that she would rather let the work speak for itself as 'visual poetry.'

Carbondale: Success in 1992 and Moving Ahead in 1993

Progress is every city's goal and Carbondale continues to be successful. 1992 was topped off with teas tuck in's announcement that it will build a $25 million new production facility in the Recenter Industrial Park and with the opening of the 2nd annual Lights Fantastic Parade. 1993 proves to be equally as successful as 1992. Retail growth in the University Mall area will continue with the major renovation being the April opening of the Wal-Mart Super Center. The success of the commercial area has maintained Car's population as the premier retail shopping center in the region. Look for more exciting stores to open in 1993.

Downtown Carbondale will continue its redevelopment efforts. With the completion of the Freight Depot Pavilion in November, the City's efforts in 1993 will turn to the use of the renovated train depot and to the design of the Civic Center Mall.

Transportation projects will be in the forefront during the next year with the addition of the Carbondale and SIU community to continue to be developed towards implementation. The corridor location study for the Northern Connector will result in the selection of a preferred alternative: north alignment, south alignment, or both. The decision will proceed with the Park Street reconstruction and the Church Street Underpass.

Carbondale will grow physically as new residential and commercial developments are built and demand the expansion of the sanitary sewer system. Growth areas are targeted in every direction of Carbondale.

Economic Development will continue to be the City's top priority. The Carbondale Business Development Corporation will work towards the solid foundation and the success of retaining tuck in's to recruit new quality jobs to the community.

Carbondale Memorial Hospital will proceed with its $22 million expansion that will maintain Carbondale as the region's medical center.

People: Pride...F.It progress. Carbondale is the Best Small City in Illinois and getting better.

Welcome to the New Communiqué

The City of Carbondale is proud to present the new Carbondale Communiqué to all Carbondale and Carbondale area residents. The new design has been published by the City for over 18 years and distributed to residents and water and sewer customers in the City. Beginning with the January 1993 issue, the distribution of the new design will be through new advertising space purchased from The Southern Illinoisan and Daily Journal newspapers which have a combined circulation of 40,000.

The purpose of the Carbondale Communiqué is to inform the citizens of Carbondale regarding their local government activities. Carbondale is a home to a combined 2/5% of Carbondale's population of 27,030 as living in group quarters (dormitories, apartments, nursing homes, etc.) which means they are probably not billed directly for water and sewer and therefore have not received the City's utility bills as of the past year.

In addition, the 1990 Census states that there are 37,000 persons who live in the immediate Carbondale area, but actually outside the City limits resulting in a greater Carbondale population of 37,000.

The distribution of the Communiqué through the local newspapers will enable the City to better inform the citizens of Carbondale and those people who live near Carbondale and probably work in Carbondale. Carbondale is a progressive city that is looking to the future and wants to share our good news with everyone who is associated with Carbondale.

Candidates Files - File for Council

Nine Carbondale residents have filed with the City Council positions that will come up for election this year. The following positions are open for election:

- Alderman, District 2 (incumbent)
- Alderman, District 4 (incumbent)
- City Clerk
- City Laboratory
- City Surveyor
- City Treasurer
- City Attorney

In order to replace the number of candidates to run for the alderman election, a primary election will be held on Tuesday, February 24, 1993. The five candidates who receive the most votes will be placed on the ballot for the alderman election to be held on Tuesday, April 20, 1993.

Minimum Standards for Door and Window Locks

On November 17, 1992 the City Council revised the City Code provisions which set minimum security standards for door and window locks for residential dwellings located within the City. The change makes the door and window lock standards applicable to all dwellings in the City. The change was in response to concerns raised by the Graduate and Professional Student Council at SIU. It was noted that some older dwellings in the City did not have appropriate window and door locks.

At the time housing security standards were adopted in 1977 in a "grandfather" clause exempted dwellings existing prior to June 29, 1977. Since then residents have become more aware of the importance of having security devices to deter crime. The City realized that although some older dwellings had not been brought up to current standards, to immediately require changes in door and window locks would prove to be an unreasonable burden. Consequently the changes adopted were effective on February 1, 1993.

 Basically the door and window lock provisions require that all doors to the exteriors of the dwelling and all windows less than 6 feet above the ground be provided in addition to the door locks with locking devices. For single doors that mean a single cylinder deadbolt lock with a minimum throw or one inch, Glazing within 60 inches of a door locking mechanism must be installed. This is to prevent someone from breaking the glass and reaching inside to unlock the door. Window locking devices must be capable of withstanding a force of 150 pounds. It is important to note that the City Code provides for a variety of alternative methods to secure a dwelling.

For further information on door and window lock requirements or to arrange for an on-site consultation on lock provisions at your dwelling call the Building and Neighborhood Services Division at 549-5302. Also free workshops on window and door locks will be conducted Tuesday, January 27, 1993 at 3:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. in the City Council Chambers at 609 East College Street.

Lights Fantastic Parade Gets Bigger and Better

Thousands of people from near and far braved the cold temperatures on December 5, to watch the 2nd Annual Lights Fantastic Holiday Parade, and it was indeed FANTASTIC. It just gets bigger and better every year you come out to see it. The floats, marching bands and vehicles illuminated brightened spirits for the holiday season. Congratulations to all volunteers.

The Pavilion in Town Square was all aglow with white lights and music of the season. There were other.Celebrations, lighted parade, Yuletide lighting of the City's official Christmas tree and a visit from Santa to close off the evening.

If you missed this year's Lights Fantastic activities, mark your calendar now for December 4, 1993. We'd love to have you join us.

Celebrating 120 Years of Progress

Carbondale's fourth annual Community Pride Breakfast will be held on Saturday, January 23, in the Red Jacket Court at University Mall beginning at 7:30 a.m. A number of citizens and business representatives will be gathering to celebrate accomplishments of the past year and to hear plans for the future.

The theme of this year’s breakfast is “Celebrating 120 Years of Progress.” Young people and community leaders are encouraged to attend.

Want to Get Rid of Your Old Telephone Book?

The City of Carbondale will provide a telephone book recycling service this year for Carbondale residents. The City will provide book drops of all old telephone books during the dates of January 11-22. The phone books should be set out in the book drop bins on the normal recycling collection day.

The following locations in Carbondale have agreed to serve as telephone book recycling drop off points during the dates of January 15-23. They are: Brookside Manor-1200 East Grand Avenue, Country Fair-1702 West Main, El Greco's-516 South Illinois Avenue, GTE Phone Mart University Mall, GTE Payment Office-214 West Monroe, Karco Recycling-New Era Road, Kroger East-Rt. 13, Kroger West-Rt. 13, McDonald's East-1396 East Main, and McDonald's West-202 West Main, National Foods-915 West Main, and Southern Recycling-220 South Main.

Volunteers will be needed to help transport telephone books from drop-off points to Southern Recycling in Carbondale. Individuals or service groups interested in participating may contact the Clean and Green Office, at 549-4111.

Last year 30 tons of telephone books were prevented from being dumped in local landfills. This year Carbondale Clean and Green has set the same goal by coordinating telephone book recycling in Carbondale, Marion, West Frankfort, Benton, Herrin, Carterville, and Thompsonville during the dates of January 15-23.

GTE is contributing $900 toward the recycling of the phone books. They are also printing 67,000 flyers, at the cost of $1,300, listing all the cooperating phone books drop off spots. The flyers will be packaged with the new GTE phonebook to be distributed beginning December 27.

Uptown Theatre

The Uptown Theatre is a historic landmark in Glenview, Illinois. It was built in 1928 and operated as a movie theater until its closure in 1997. After sitting unused for several years, the City of Glenview purchased the property and has been working on plans to redevelop the area.

Glenview Redevelopment

The Glenview Redevelopment Agency is a public body that is responsible for the economic development and revitalization of the Glenview area. The agency has been working on plans to redevelop the area around the former Uptown Theatre site, including the construction of a new commercial and residential development.

Construction

The demolition is expected to take place in the coming weeks. The City of Glenview will work closely with the Glenview Redevelopment Agency and other stakeholders to ensure that the demolition process is carried out in a safe and efficient manner.

Future Plans

Once the demolition is complete, the City of Glenview will begin the process of planning for the redevelopment of the area. The City is committed to working with the Glenview community to ensure that the new development fits within the existing character of the area and meets the needs of the community.

Retailers' survey says shoppers are shrewder

The Baltimore Sun

NEW YORK—Remember consumers of five years ago? They had carefree looks on their faces and threw money around like confetti. They're gone, MasterCard International is telling the nation's retailers in a study to be released Tuesday.

The American consumer is shrewder, more pressed for time and more demanding than ever, the report concludes. The survey, to be presented at the National Retail Federation convention in New York, paints a picture of American consumers who has-become much more knowledgeable about the retailing industry. They know the differences between retailers and have realistic expectations about each, the report shows.

"The retailers that prosper in the remainder of this decade will be those that meet or exceed shoppers' expectations," said Ted Jablonski, MasterCard's vice president of retail marketing. The survey also identified some clear differences in the way men and women shop. Among men, 73 percent say they know what they are going to buy when they go shopping, while only 51 percent of women have their minds made up in advance, the research showed.

Women are more likely than men to find shopping relaxing, by 64 percent to 35 percent. One exception is grocery shopping, which men like more than women, the survey says.

Mimi Lieber, of LAR Management Consultants in New York, said the main reason was that groceries are among the most organized of stores—a factor that appeals to men. Thus, the study recommended retailers appeal to the male customer's "linear" approach to shopping.

Be realistic in setting health goals

By Rob Sapich
Wellness Center

How many of us have kept our New Year’s resolutions? How many of us made them? How many of us noticed that a new year has arrived? If you have not maintained your resolutions, do not despair. The time is always right for trying to change habits, particularly health-related ones. Now may be a good time to evaluate your goals for the semester or year to see what you can realistically achieve.

The problem with most New Year’s resolutions is that people try to accomplish too much in too little time, said Don Powell of the American Institute for Health and Medicine in Farmington Hills, Mich. Rather than look at your goals as a 100-yard dash, try viewing them as a marathon for throughout the semester or year.

Losing weight is the most popular resolution among Americans, while quitting smoking ranked second, according to Powell. To increase the chances for success, be realistic about what you want to accomplish, and be sure it is something you want to do. For example, if weight loss is a goal, try resolving to eat a healthy breakfast and exercise for 30 minutes, three times a week. These goals are more specific and attainable than just “losing weight.”

Or if you smoke it may have taken you to form that habit. So give yourself more than a few weeks to maintain a smoke-free lifestyle. Research shows that people who quit smoking have made about five attempts to quit before succeeding. Persistence is the key. Each semester, the Wellness Center offers a “Freedom from Smoking” group to help people quit smoking.

The time it takes to practice a healthy lifestyle now will be worth it in the long run. Be kind to yourself as choosing a goal, and try to keep it positively phrased. Occasional backsliding is part of behavioral change. How you react to your slip-up is crucial to your continued success. Powell advises, “don’t give up; forgive yourself and then get right back on track.”

For more information about making health changes in your lifestyle, contact the Student Health Program Wellness Center at 536-4441.

"Because one ear is dominant to one side, the brain is dominant to the other side. It causes both sides to work together," Williams said. "This produces a bit of difference between the two ears that is something you don't actually hear. It sounds real, but your brain is actually processing two.

Each unit consists of a pair of goggles, with lights that flash, which you can change the intensity on and headphones, which produces a myriad of different tones that go along with the lights. A unit has 18 programs on it, running anywhere from ten minutes to an hour.

"Your optic nerve is being stimulated, but there is actually nothing to go along with it. What is happening is that your mind is taking this stimulation, and it is just making up things that people see: a wide variety of colors, shapes and geometric patterns," Williams said. "The headphones and light are just playing along with an environment and nothing else to go with it. You kind of get to play it." As far as potential side effects, there are none known yet, but to be on the side of a Mind Trek session, a release form must be signed to say that you do not have a condition known as photosensitive epilepsy. Forumas under 18 must have parental signature. Rates are $35 for fifteen minutes, and the maximum session length is one hour.

not trying hard enough to win games in his absence.

"I'm not trying to create controversy," Jordan said, "but I also believe a hurt dog will hole.

"I didn't say the whole team wasn't trying, just certain players."

Again, like King, Jordan's own personal therapist, Judy Joffe, declared him ready to play in March.

But Krause felt the team was served best by his delaying Jordan's return until the following season.

Jordan, adamantly forced a meeting with Krause and owner Jerry Reinsdorf.

They reached a compromise under which then-coach Stan Albeck would limit Jordan's time to some 24 minutes a game.

"We were trying to hedge our bets," Krause said in retrospect. "I wasn't trying to be the guy who let Michael Jordan break his foot again."

Jordan ultimately returned to action March 15, 1986, and gave the Bulls a split personality.

"I'm not trying to be the guy who let Michael Jordan break his foot again."

But Jordan was playing a deliberate half-court style. With him, the Bulls played an up-tempo game.

But with a chance to make the playoffs, Jordan was turned loose and freed of management restraints.

He would electrify the nation by scoring 49 and 63 points in the first two games of the mini-series against Boston before the Celtics held him to 19 in completing a two-game sweep.

But Jordan had taken his place alongside NBA legends Magic Johnson and Larry Bird.

"We're trying to hedge our bets. I wasn't going to be the guy who let Michael Jordan break his foot again."

-Bulls' GM Jerry Krause

Call him selfish, but King, at 36, apparently still entertains the same dream of becoming the center of the basketball universe.

Dallas: No experience, no problem

The Baltimore Sun

SAN FRANCISCO—Don’t tell Jimmy Johnson that his Dallas Cowboys don’t have much experience. “We have experienced guys,” the Cowboys’ coach said after his team beat the San Francisco 49ers, 30-20, in the NFC title game Sunday. “We went to the playoffs last year. We won the first playoff game. We said we wanted to go further than what we did last year and we’ve gone further and we’ve still got one game to go.”

The Cowboys will be favored by a touchdown, though they don’t have much Super Bowl experience. They don’t have a single player who was on the team 14 years ago, when the 49ers beat it to their last Super Bowl. They have only two who have made it with other teams: Charles Haley of San Francisco and Ray Horton with the Cincinnati Bengals.

That’s why experience, or the lack thereof, is going to be a topic of much discussion in the next few weeks. The Cowboys are up against the San Francisco 49ers, 49ers, in the NFC title game Sunday. The 49ers are on the rise, while the Cowboys are on the decline.

The Cowboys’ lack of experience didn’t hurt them against the 49ers, who were making their fourth appearance in the NFC title game in the past five years. On Sunday, the Cowboys didn’t have a single player who was on the roster when they last played in the NFC title game in 1982. Jim Jeffcoat and Mark Tuinei, the oldest veterans in terms of service for the Cowboys, arrived in 1983.

“Since we’re one of the best teams in the NFL history, with their comeback from a 35-3 deficit in the Super Bowl, they’re on top of the league,” said the Saints’ Don Shula. “We’ve had a tremendous amount of respect. Now we’re on one out of the league’s most respected coaches.

“It started four years ago, when we made the playoffs,” said Cowboys’ Johnson.

“Our organization has demanded a lot from our players, sometimes more than our guys could give. But there has been a tremendous amount of commitment. Now, we’re one game away from where we really want to be.”

Assuming Johnson can squeeze one more solid game out of his players (which at this point wouldn’t appear too difficult), then the Cowboys will be exactly where they want to be on the evening of Jan. 31 in Pasadena.

They’ll be doing all of those things for one simple reason: They’re a better team than the Bills. Not that the Bills’ moving performance aren’t without merit.

They displayed the heart of a champion—like an NFC championship participant ever—the Dallas Cowboys. They displayed the heart of a champion—like an NFC championship participant ever—the Dallas Cowboys.

The 49ers are a team with a superior defense, whose quickness and versatility is unmatched.
