Ecuador, ~ always out of reach, the largest Saluki athletes excel in academics.

By Jay Reed
Sports Writer

Student-athletes are often stereotyped as dumb jocks, but for 46 percent of SIUC student athletes there are dirty words.

A report issued at the June meeting of the Intercollegiate Athletic Advisory Committee revealed that 46 percent of the SIUC student-athletes had a grade point average of 3.0 or higher. Only 26 of the 339, or 13 percent of the student-athletes, were on academic probation with a GPA below 2.0.

These figures are relatively consistent with the figures tallied at last year’s meeting. The percentage of SIUC student-athletes with a GPA of 3.0 or better for the spring semester of 1991 was 41 percent and the number of student-athletes on academic probation was eight percent.

Nikki Chambers, academic advisor for athletics, said she was impressed with the spring athletic report.

“I think the students did beautifully and the only reason why we see a decrease in student-athlete do as well as he possibly can academically,” she said. “It is very difficult for a student to see a student with a problem get through this.”

Chambers said there were three academic-athletic advisors that help the student-athletes.

World’s top-flight golfers tee up in British Open

MURFIELD, Scotland (UP) — As a mild westerly wind blew off the nearby Firth of Forth, the world’s leading golfers preparing for the British Open knew their game became could be little more than a ford, distant memory by the end of the week.

Certainly, reigning Open champion Ian Baker-Finch has played in Scotland enough times to know the Murfield course was at its most benign two days before the start of the £1.83 million British Open Thursday.

“I don’t rate myself as one of the great wind players, like Paul Azinger or Davis Love, but I do very well in the wind,” the 31-year-old Australian Baker-Finch said Tuesday. “But I am a good wind player and I enjoy playing in it and it does not bother me or scare me.

“If the wind blows I will try to avoid the fairway bunkers more than anything, because if you are trying to keep it low, the bunkers are going to be a problem.”

Baker-Finch has been paired for the first two rounds with local favorite Sam Torrance and popular, big-hitting American John Daly, who will be making his British Open debut.

“I don’t like all the heping and holing (of Daly’s followers) in the States, but it won’t be like that here,” said Baker-Finch. “Daly can win on any course. He flies it over the bunkers and so long as the spotters can find his ball, he has a great chance.

“I have never displayed his chances of success here, although he has promised that the severity of the rough and the dangers of the changing winds will not force him to forgo using his driver.”

“One will hit a lot of drivers,” he said. “I have a new driver — the head on it is so big it is a 14 degree. Maybe I can hit the ball 10 or 15 yards further.”

Another threesome sure to attract a lot of interest in Scotland’s leading hope Colin Montgomerie, reigning U.S. Masters champion Fred Couples, and his fellow American Rocco Mediate.

Montgomerie wore a pullover emblazoned with the St. Andrews crest at the Scottish Open last weekend at Glenelgaves and has threatened to do so again at Murfield on Sunday if he is in contention going into the final round.

But the big Scot denied he is drumming up any international rivalry.

Defending champion Baker-Finch striving to win second Open

MURFIELD, Scotland (UP) — The big debate in the little Scottish town of Gullane Tuesday was whether Australia’s Ian Baker-Finch could win a second straight British Open.

Maybe there’s no debate in Baker-Finch’s mind. When he arrived at blustery Murfield he jokingly declared he would lend the trophy to the local club for a week.

“As to my chances compared to last year, well I don’t think that I will win, but I will be in the mix,” Baker-Finch said Tuesday. “This is a very good course and it is just as good, if not better than last year but my game is as good. I think my confidence is about the same as last year.”

The 31-year-old Queensland leads a powerful contingent of 16 Australians challenging for the third major of 1992.

After 43 Americans, the Australians are the second largest foreign field at Murfield in the past little town of Gullane outside Edinburgh.

Baker-Finch is the fourth Australian to win the title since World War II. The big force in Australian golf during the 1950s and 1960s was Peter Thomson, who won the Open five times.

“The course is in perfect condition and the greens are as good as I have ever seen in an Open, certainly since my first in 1984,” said Baker-Finch, who has been deluged with encouragement since his victory.

“I played the back nine here yesterday in the wind and I played very well and enjoyed it. It was hard to concentrate on the course when the wind was so strong, but it was good to get out and have the feel of a strong wind.”

Baker-Finch says the favorites this time should be Nick Faldo of England and Nick Price, a South African-born Zimbabwean.

Barcelona games reflect new political landscape

Barcelona, Spain (UP) — In keeping with an ideal that is forever pursued but seemingly always out of reach, the largest gathering of world-class athletes in the history of the planet will convene this week for the XXV Summer Olympics.

The globe’s everchanging political landscape will, as usual, be glaringly reflected in the proceedings.

They will come from England and Ecuador, from the Dominican Republic and Denmark, from Fiji and France. They will even come from countries that months ago did not exist — Latvia and Lithuania, to name two.

They will gather along the Mediterranean coast not only to compete, but, as citizens who have gone before have done, to gain a better understanding of their fellow human beings.

The co-concentration of humanity will bring the inevitable scenes of sweltering crowds, agitated crowds and horrendous prices, accompanied by possibly oppressive heat.

But through the suffering is the case every four years, attention around the Earth will be focused on the grand achievements and heartbreakings of athletes who have strived, who have overcome even for this moment on the stage.

The Barcelona Olympics will begin at 6 p.m. local time (7 EDT) next Friday when the United States and Italy open the 104 soccer matches to be played that evening.

Ceremonially, the Games will not start until tradition and opening festivities will be held on the grounds of the marvel built in the midst of the city.

The Olympic longs, comprising nine sports for athletes, the raising of the Olympic flag and the lighting of the torch with a flaming arrow, will touch off two weeks of almost non-stop activity.

During those two weeks, people girls will do flips on narrow beams, men 7 feet tall will shoot basketballs, athletes from both sexes will sail the open seas through the air, while the abandant padding will job each other with blades of steel.

There will be 257 gold medals given away in 30 sports. Those medals will be cast by 10,000 athletes — some fully expecting to be hailed as the best in their generation, others gratified to be called an Olympian.

The Faculty Senate and Graduate Council met Tuesday to request the BOT to postpone the September deadline for faculty members to propose their cuts at SIUC, citing a meeting marked by controversy over the elimination of religious studies.

The productivity, qualifications and priorities (PQP) request form, a process of internal review of activities and programs, began in the fall of 1991, said SIUC President John C. Geyon.

The Board members urged administrators Thursday to prepare the PQP documents in full to be presented in September. The revised copy will be sent to the Illinois Board of Higher Education in October.

Jervis Underwood, president of the SIUC Faculty Senate, said the time limit given to satisfy the form is not enough.

"There is not going to be enough time to do this," Underwood said. "There is just simply not enough time to get the form together in full."

Underwood requested a joint meeting of the Faculty Senate and the Graduate Council to ask the BOT to postpone the September deadline, saying no more faculty consideration of the form can take place.

"The BOT must realize the importance of faculty participation," he said. "We need the time for full participation and to modify other instruction."

Prior to the Senate's request for a work document deadline extension, about 30 faculty members and community and religious leaders debated the cutting of the Religious Studies department.

Dale Benston, chairman of the Religious Studies Department, said the elimination of the department was a relief of conscious for the Senate members.

"Like a lot of things at SIUC there is a tremendous amount of goodwill but no support for it," Benston said.

Benston said he found it interesting that there was tremendous support for the continuation of the department from faculty and Carbondale leaders, and the vote still swayed in the other direction.

"I know that certain people contacted members of the Senate, and I believe that certain members' minds were already made up before the meeting," said John Jackson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

"We have to find our strength and weaknesses, and act on both," Jackson said.

Cuts postponed; company given chance to buy
By Rebecca Campbell

A site approval hearing for the Jackson County Landfill was extended to Aug. 13 to give a New Jersey-based waste management company interested in purchasing the landfill a full opportunity for study.

Representatives of Continental Waste Industries Inc. said at a July 9 hearing in Jackson County that they intend to purchase the landfill if approval to increase the size of the landfill is granted by the county board.

The landfill currently has 21 acres of waste overflowing onto land not covered under its current Illinois Environmental Protection Agency permit. Several areas in the landfill also are up to 20 feet higher than the permit allows.

Everett Allen, owner of the landfill, is seeking approval from the Jackson County Board to have the overflow area made a legal part of the landfill.

The July 9 hearing had been extended from October 1991 so Allen had a chance to find a company to buy the Jackson County Landfill. Several companies had been interested in purchasing the landfill, but did not follow through because of the site-approved problems.

Tom Voli, CWT chairman, said one of the conditions for CWT buyout of the landfill is the Jackson County Board's approval of plans the company has for the operation and eventual closure of the facility.

"We and the county have to be satisfied with this plan," Voli said."

Late Tuesday night, police were still negotiating with a man who barricaded himself inside his trailer, and threatened suicide.

Police searched off parts of S. Graham and Route 13 and closed four restaurants at 8:45 p.m. last night, reporting that a man barricaded himself inside his trailer, on the corner of S. Graham and Rt. 13 possibly armed with a gun and a rifle. Neighbors said the man's name is James, citing they did not know his last name.

Carnival outbacks
Du Quoin Fair loses three days
By Christine Leninger
Entertainment Editor

Du Quoin State Fair officials have been forced to reduce the Fair by three days and cancel some major fair events because of budget cuts.

State lawmakers cut about $900,000 from the Du Quoin Fair, forcing officials to cancel the livestock and horse shows and two Grandstand shows. The opening of the Fair has been delayed until Sept. 1.

Ron Summers, Du Quoin State Fair manager, said the cuts were necessary.

Research of primates centered on lifestyles

Kelley O'Connell
Senior Writer

A doctoral student in the Department of Anthropology is studying the connection between gorillas, lion-tailed macaques and spider monkeys.

Kelly Cichy is doing her doctoral research on primates. She is mostly concerned with the connection between primates and humans.

"If I can find more out about the primates and how their reproductive systems are affected, then I might be able to incorporate this into the human system," she said.

Cichy said her primary focus is on the comparison of the three primates and how their time is spent. She looks for general behavior samples and different behavior categories.

Twice a week, Cichy travels to the St. Louis Zoo to observe five gorillas, seven lion-tailed macaque and six spider monkeys. The gorillas, which are endangered, but not highly endangered, are from Africa. The lion-tailed macaque, which could soon become extinct, are highly endangered primates from India. Coming from South America are the spider monkeys, which are not endangered.

"The gorillas are by far my favorite," Cichy said. "They are very subtle, whereas the monkeys have almost a gut-level of behavior. Their behavior is constantly changing."

Particular observations include the gorillas move, their resting behaviors and the different positions they take. For instance, when gorillas rest, it is common for them to go into a feet-clasp. A feet-clasp is when the feet rest in the foot, almost looking like a cradle.

Cichy also looks for the aggressive behavior, or aggressive behavior to see if the animals get along.

"Female lion-tailed macaque tend to buddle together when they affiliate," she said. "But they can turn agonistic quickly; you might not even know what triggers the change," Cichy said.

Change is different enough, especially because the gorillas are apes, while the lions tailed and the spiders are monkeys.

"Their levels of interaction are different," Cichy said. "I still for an entire day and observe, others just pass by and make faces. They are becoming familiar with me, and I feel sort of a bond forming."

Cichy said she has not been able to find any other research similar to hers. "It's so interesting because this information will help generate preservation of species in their countries," she said.

Cichy said the research has a news value because it has never been done before. "I think it's lots of data that will hopefully help preserve the wildlife," she said.

Cichy said she has always been interested in primates, especially preserving and conserving them in wildlife.

Her research is based on observations which she started in mid June. She will continue observing until the end of July and then do her write-up in August.

Cichy received her masters in cultural anthropology in 1985 and hopes to get her doctorate in 1995.

Her research is an independent study under the supervision of Dr. Dickramer, a zoology professor. Dickramer also is a member of Cichy's committee.

"Hopefully I'll be able to do a preliminary data of analysis within the next week," Cichy said.

This would enable Cichy to piece together the parts and actually see what kind of similarities the primates have.

Archaeology focus pulled from curriculum

By Lynelle Marquardt
General Assignment Writer

The elimination of the conservation archaeology specialty from the master's degree program of the SIUC Anthropology Department will not affect students because it is no longer a viable program, University officials said.

Lee Person, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts, said it will not affect the students at all.

"We just cleaning up something that should have been done a long time ago," he said. "The field of archaeology has changed. Conservation archaeology is no longer a viable concentration."

Jon Muller, chairman of the Anthropology Department, said the students in the specialty track and the students in the regular master's degree program take the same classes, so there was no need for the concentration.

The anthropology graduate program is structured so that the students can design their own specialty within their master's degree, he said.

No students currently are active in the conservation archaeology program, Muller said.

"Conservation archaeology is scientific archaeology done for public purposes. "It deals with the public need to protect information from the past and at the same time allow development for the future," Muller said.

For example, if a coal company is going to strip mine an area, the company first has to get a permit. The environmental impact has to be studied before a permit is granted, Muller said.

Archaeological studies are one part of the survey that must be done before a permit will be granted. Years ago, an ethical problem surfaced when unqualified archaeologists began opening mines, he said.

The special program for conservation archaeology was established to provide high-quality archaeological work and meet ethical standards.
Opinions from elsewhere
Universities should put academics first
From the Saint Louis Post-Dispatch

Dick Schultz, executive director of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, sounded pretty happy with himself when the NCAA released graduation rates for athletics: compared with college students in general. The score: all students, 52 percent, athletes, 51 percent. Mr. Schultz said, “I always felt people on the other side were very surprised about the graduation rates of athletes.”

But his efforts to put the best face on the statistics ignores the graduation rate for black male athletes: heretofore—only 33 percent, compared to 58 percent for white male athletes. Schools must do much more if they are not merely attracting athletes to campus to exploit their skills in sports, then not following through to make sure they receive an education as well.

Pressures on colleges to release graduation rates for athletes has come from Sen. Bill Bradley of N.J., the former basketball star who is concerned that college athletes are poorly serving their athletics. He termed the NCAA statistics “deeply disturbing” and called for more research about why so many blacks persists in higher education to gain their diplomas. “Far too many promising student-athletes are lured by the illusion of a career in professional sports,” he said, “and left behind with neither a sports career nor an education.”

That illusion of the fountain of pro stardom is a strong magnet, and many talented teenagers need little coaxing to wade to campus and take their best shot at the big time. Usually, their dreams sour quickly, an when their eligibility on the field or the court ends, their usefulness to the schools that were eager to attract them is over as well. At that point, athletes can either discard these young, impressionable and confused athletes, leaving them to fend for themselves. This is the crux of the problem. Is there in implicit in their recruitment—to make sure they would have every chance to succeed, in academics as well as in sports.

The NCAA last year showed that too few schools are dedicated to helping student-athletes graduate. After this month, when the individual schools release their graduation statistics, Mr. Schultz predicts that “you’re going to see some schools that are going to be pressured.” Will that embarrassment prompt them to act more fairly toward athletes? Or will it be just another short-lived news blip, soon to be drowned out by the next sports scandal—football and basketball fame? How much longer will it take for schools to put academics first and athletics second?

Children worse off than four years ago
From the Saint Louis Post-Dispatch

About this time four years ago, both political parties were big on children. Candidates did more than kiss babies. They promised better schools. They tried to outdo each other. Deal for kids.

But a report by the Children’s Defense Fund says the national population of poor children rose 11.9 percent, to 11.9 million in the past five years, an instructive and revealing as candidates, starting with Vice President Dan Quayle. Again try to exploit the issue of “family values,” that seldom gets mentioned between elections. Instead of talking about family values and trying to change lifestyles—which isn’t necessarily the government’s business to begin with—perhaps Quayle and others should focus their energy on economic policies, which are responsible for the existence of poverty.

As high-paying industrial jobs are vanishing, parents are forced to accept minimum-wage employment, which in turn makes it difficult for them to support children. In Illinois, 9.7 percent of white children are poor, as are 43.3 of black ones.

The Defense Fund’s study shows why family-values rhetoric must give way to programs that lift children out of poverty.

how the facility will be operated," he said.

James Andrews, of Andrews Environmental Engineers in Springfield, has expressed an intent to prepare a plan for CWI to close most of the landfill in September after new IEPA regulations go into effect, requiring clay and plastic liners, monthly groundwater tests for contaminated water, and maintenance wells.

George Brown, public health environmental specialist with the Jackson County Health Department, said the landfill will not be able to meet these regulations unless it was closed five or six acres which are empty or nearly empty now will be kept open for four more years under CWI's plan. This area of the landfill will be lined with a clay and plastic liner according to new IEPA guidelines, he said.

President Carlmona proposed the landfill take in more waste than it currently does and the dumping fee be increased. The increase will amount to about 15 percent increase in fees to the home owner. This new money would be used to pay for proper closure and maintenance of the landfill in compliance with IEPA regulations, he said.

Andrews proposed a plan that would ensure a uniform sky over the landfill area after it is closed to prevent precipitation from being absorbed on the soil. The landfill will be covered with an impermeable plastic liner.

Andrews also said the height permit would need to be 15 feet above the existing 10 feet to achieve the accomplishment the proposed plan. The plan also calls for the drumming of an area of the site. Snip mine on the property and lining it with a clay and plastic liner to hold waste. The current requirement needs to be approved by the county board and the IEPA for CWI to implement the plan.

Volini said an impermeable plastic liner over the top of the landfill will help protect the ground water from being contaminated by precipitation that works its way through the land.

The landfill does not have a liner under the garbage to protect against water table contamination because the following operation before regulations regarding landfills became law.

police say those cars are in the line of sight if the man chose to fire.

The police finally reached the man by phone at 10:15. Previously, the man had been hanging up as soon as picking up the receiver, the police said.

The Carbondale Fire Department was called to bring in a lighting truck to illuminate the trailer for the police.

Scott Rice, a high school teacher from Carbondale, said he had seen the police as he pulled up to Murphy's gym.

"I did not see it or thought to do was get inside.

"The police said they didn't want any movement," he said. "Now we've been here for two and a half hours." He said at 10:20 p.m.

As the DEE went to press, the police had contacted the man and asked him to surrender, and the man asked for time to think, police said.

Ann-Janine Marry, SIUC English professor, said she will not be forced to retire in "Mississippi". She granted "my tenure in Religious Studies to English because of the concern that she feared she will not get her position.

"I had to transfer because I was a Mississippian, but people did not think the department administration wants it," the professor said.

"Religion is not something missing from the community, it will only be dealt with by the department," Mary said.

Guyson said internal reallocations are the key to the PIP, the "IPHE is saying if you are doing to go to class, we are going to have to do it through internal reallocations," Guyson said.

"We have to make a productivity," said Charles Shelden, vice president for Academic Affairs and faculty and staff efficiency are needed for PIP.

"We are down sizing and consider every program," Shelden said.

"Don't want quality and the time to do so," Allen Kaczynski, chairman of the budget committee, said. The chair of the BOT will not be pleased with the request.

"Do not think the BOT will do anything to further the deadline," Kaczynski said.

"The BOT is telling the administration to hurry, hurry, hurry," Kaczynski also discussed the ongoing budget requests for SUC.

Clinton, Gore solicit support from crucial groups

NEW YORK (UPI) — With the Democratic National Convention preparing to adopt a nearly battle-free political platform, Bill Clinton and Albert Gore made the rounds Tuesday shoring up support among groups needed to keep them on track.

Clinton, the Arkansas governor who will be nominated as the Democratic presidential candidate Wednesday night, got a rousing welcome from the party’s women’s division, despite the fact that Gore, the Tennessee senator picked as the vice presidential running mate, was nowhere in evidence.

Both groups are considered vital to a Democratic victory this fall against President Bush and possibly Texas billionaire Ross Perot, especially in the key state of California.

California’s former governor, Edmund “Jerry” Brown, was still the odd man out at an otherwise harmonious convention. Although he has several hundred delegates, there was little chance Wednesday of addressing the gathering and his support Monday kept changing his name during the convention proceedings.

Democratic National Chairman Ron Brown said Tuesday he went to meet the former governor Monday night to iron out what he called "minimal differences," but Jerry Brown would not see him.

"I want to look Jerry Brown in the eye and have a face-to-face meeting with him and see if we can’t resolve whatever differences that exist," Brown said on CBS’ "This Morning."

The convention resumed Tuesday with the first order of business being adoption of the platform, often a contentious document in the past but no problem this time around.

The platform has been given the option of approval in advance but the convention leaders were allowing debate on four minority planks that have little chance of passing. Three of the planks were economic ones supported by delegates for former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts who dropped his vice presidential candidacy in April.

Other highlights of Tuesday’s convention schedule included speeches by former President Jimmy Carter, who was nominated twice in Madison Square Garden; civil rights leader Jesse Jackson, and two victims of AIDS.

Outside the hall, a major AIDS rally and march was scheduled to dramatize the need for more help in fighting the disease.

Clinton was spending most of his time working on his acceptance speech to be delivered Thursday night but did take time out to visit the women’s division.

With their stand on abortion rights and other issues, Democrats think they have a chance to make major inroads into the women’s vote this year and were highlighting female candidates and programs throughout the four-day convention.

Brown will not betray principles; refuses to endorse Gov. Clinton

NEW YORK (UPI) — Edmund “Jerry” Brown refused Tuesday to endorse Bill Clinton for president, the prize Clinton was supposed to win in his heated primary campaign, saying he would not “betray” his principles or, in the language of an appearance before the Democratic National Convention. “If he has any hope for an endorsement today, the former California governor told Democratic “leaders” in person.

Clinton’s forces, in firm control of the convention schedule, refused to grant a coveted prime-time speaking appearance to Brown unless he agreed to formally endorse the Arkansas governor for the party’s presidential nomination.

“Don’t want to have to condition a speech to some side deal that I have to make,” said Brown.

Brown instead was apparently considering a back-door approach that will put him on the podium at Madison Square Garden Tuesday night before his nomination.

“Is he setting down, writing a speech,” one aide said. “A nominating speech for himself.”

Whole new world

Gore: Democrat victory will end environmental approach

NEW YORK (UPI) — Spokesman vice presidential candidate, Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee, told an environmental group Tuesday a Clinton-Gore victory would end the Republican administration’s environmental "mirrors approach" to environmental protection.

"This is an environment book’s" well before he was named to the Democratic ticket, Gore pointed at President Bush’s administration’s environmental policies, saying Bush does not even himself the "environmental president" anymore because the label draws laughter from Republicans and Democrat alike.

The American people have figured out that President George Bush is as phony as a $3 bill, it’s that simple," Gore said. "You guys, the Sierra Club members at a fundraising breakfast.

"This cynical administration thinks ..." a, Gore said. "You want to stop taxpayer subsidies of clear-cutting national forests, if you want to stop the footloose and fancy-free international environmental policy, yet involved, make a difference. Be a part of this winning team," Gore said.

"This decision offers the clearest choice on the environment we’ve ever had," said Gore, one of the most outspoken advocates of environmental protection in the Senate.

The vice presidential candidate said Bush’s policy clash even with environmental policies of his Republican predecessors.

Crushing forces: Changes in party platform advanced by former candidate Tsongas challenged Clinton; Democrats’ stance closer to political center

NEW YORK (UPI) — The forces of Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, in full control of the Democratic National Convention, crushed Tuesday proposed changes in the party platform advanced by Paul Tsongas, his one-time rival for the party’s presidential nomination.

Three of the Tsongas planks were overwhelmingly defeated by voice vote and a fourth — putting a tax cut for the middle class on the national agenda — was defeated Wednesday. Asian leader was defeated by conformed of a roll call vote.

The platform, written to conform to Clinton’s vision of the 21st century’s future, made “opportunity” for jobs the top priority, but it was advanced by a “radical change” in the role of government that will demand Americans contributions.

The party platform, to be approved intact, moves the party closer to the center politically and Clinton the type of document that he wants to carry into the campaign against President Bush and possibly Ross Perot.

“In the preamble, the party platform said, ‘The revolution of 1992 is about a radical change in the way the government operates not the Republican proposition that government has no role, nor the old notion that there’s a program for every problem.”

The document, to make that revolution, we seek a new coalition of people . . . to the role of the American people and their government, that embraces opportunity, insists upon growth, individual responsibility as a foundation, restoration of the economy and the security of society for a prosperous and improved future.

The Platform is based upon the following tenets:

1. The American people have figured out that President George Bush is as phony as a $3 bill, it’s that simple,” Gore said. "You guys, the Sierra Club members at a fundraising breakfast.

2. This cynical administration thinks ..." a, Gore said. "You want to stop taxpayer subsidies of clear-cutting national forests, if you want to stop the footloose and fancy-free international environmental policy, yet involved, make a difference. Be a part of this winning team," Gore said.

“Whatever you’re doing, let me tell you something,” said the vice presidential candidate said Bush’s policy clash even with environmental policies of his Republican predecessors.

Although Tsongas did not participate in the proceedings in Madison Square Garden, he sent a letter to the delegates that said, “If we are to leave a legacy of economic well-being for future generations rather than a legacy of debt, the 1990s must be a time of tough choices.”

Drug testing weapon in battling Olympic drug war

BARCELONA, Spain (UPI) - There was no crowd on hand in 1988 when the most important moment of the Seoul Olympics took place.

There was no finish line to cross, no judges to give a score and no young heroes to celebrate that evening. Instead, the Olympic athletes were silenced for such times and for such tasks.

Somewhere in a laboratory, at the end of a process not seen by the public or by the person whose life would be determined by the results of training observed the results of his 15 years of research that somewhere was probably in trouble.

The urine sample he had just tested turned out to be positive. That sample carried only a number. Only those in charge of the International Olympic Committee's drug-testing program had the list that matched numbers to names.

The name in question turned out to be Ben Johnson, who, 48 hours earlier had won the title of World's Fastest Man. After the results of that test were screamed across front pages around the world, Johnson's title became World's Fastest Cheat.

Johnson, having tested positive for anabolic steroids, was banned from the games. His gold medal was retracted and the sports establishment was forced to decide what to do with the athlete who would finally be the catalyst that helped remove performance-enhancing drugs from the playing field.

Now, four years later, three-time American hurdles champion Renaldo Nehemiah says this:

"These are drug conversations between athletes as easily as I'm talking right now. There are many athletes who are being educated by bits and pieces of conversation and who are learning. The two performance-enhancing drugs they can't test for. There are HGH (human growth hormone) and EPL (Erythropoietin)."

"And anyone someone can tell you that those two performance-enhancing drugs cannot be detected, you're opening Pandora's box. You're just telling everyone, 'OK, we can't test for these, so go ahead and try it.'"

The doctors and technicians will be on hand again in Barcelona this month in hopes of finding those Olympic athletes who do try it. They will likely catch some since they always seem to be able to do so at the Olympics. But they also know they will not catch everybody.

To do so, it is going to take more research and an eventual move to the testing of blood rather than urine.

"It's apparent that urine testing is not 100 percent effective and people are obviously beating the test," Nehemiah said. "I think the only way to do away with this is to give a blood test."

That will not be done at the Barcelona Olympics. It may or may not be possible to do so at the Winter Olympics in Norway 19 months from now.

And doctors and athletes both say it is the next logical step in the battle against use of drugs and other techniques that sometimes seem to be as good as a second chance.

Sprinter Johnson makes run at undoing Olympic wrongs

TORONTO (UPI) — The biggest disgrace in Olympic history is looking to make amends in Barcelona.

Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson, at the center of a drug scandal that rocked the Seoul Games four summers ago, just wants to compete this time.

"I want to get my name back," Johnson said before his European departure. "If I finish last, it won't matter. I just want to be there."

Johnson was considered a dark horse to make the Canadian sprint team after nearly two years of disappointing post-suspension results. He needed to run at least 10.28 once or 10.30 twice and finish in the top three at the Canadian 100-meter trials to make the team.

In the final, he finished in 10.16, placing second behind Bruce Surin, in his best time since his notorious run in the Seoul 100-meter final.

Johnson lost the Olympic gold medal, all his world records and millions of dollars in endorsements four years ago when his own drug test showed traces of steroids. In a subsequent government inquiry, Johnson, former teammates and coaches detailed a long history of steroid use among track athletes.

Johnson will be competing in Barcelona, while his former coach Carl Lewis will be restricted to tracks and the long jump after missing the U.S. team.

ACADEMICS

of the student-athletes attained a 3.0 GPA and the 118 female student-athletes averaged over a 3.0.

"We now have three academic coordinators that are doing a better job working with athletes to concentrate on academics totally," she said. "The 46 percent of student-athletes on the dean's List this semester is the best we've ever had."

One of the adviser's hired onto the athletic-academic team was former University of Kentucky football player Darren Bilberry. Bilberry, who is African-American, hopes to offer help and encouragement for minority student-athletes.

"I hope to set an example as a role model for the athletes," he said. "Commitment is first and foremost, along with the awareness of the college environment and being a responsible individual."

"My goal is to paint a realistic picture of life after college," he said.

SIUC women's volleyball coach John Smith said the academic-Athlete program is a first step in a process where the athletes who do try their hand at college sports also succeed in their academic endeavors.

"A lot of people don't think this is possible," Smith said. "But it is."

Wingate charged of alleged assault after battering ex

COLUMBIA, Md. (UPI) — Washington Bullets guard David Wingate has been charged with assault after he allegedly punched his former girlfriend during a domestic quarrel, according to a Howard County District Court summons.

This was the third time since 1991 that Wingate, 28, has been charged with assault. The other two involved alleged rapes.

This time, however, Wingate's bome April 24 to discuss their children. During an argument, the guard asked her to swear on a Bible that she would not bother him anymore. She refused to swear because of her religion, and Wingate allegedly kicked her in the leg, according to the court summons.

She tried to call police, but Wingate reportedly ripped the phone out of the wall. As she tried to escape, she said he grabbed her and forced her from four to six times on the back and stomach, tearing a bruise the size of a half-dollar, the summons states.

Holland said she fically bit Wingate to escape his hold.

The assault charges followed by just over a year a charge of rape by a Baltimore teenager against Wingate who allegedly awakened her during a 1991 party at his home.

The case was transferred to the inactive criminal docket, and was to be dismissed if Wingate's record remained clear for a year.

The prosecutor who handled the Wingate case was not available for comment on whether his latest rape is considered within his probation period.
