Budget threat to retailers

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

Illinois lawmakers voted to replace the $6.30 Granny Tax with an increase in cigarette taxes early this week as part of a solution to the state budget crisis.

Despite being on separate sides of the issue, downstate legislators narrowly passed the 14-cent-a-pack cigarette tax increase in favor of the $6.30 charge a day to nursing home residents.

Sen. Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin, said he thinks Illinois business owners will feel the brunt of the tax increase.

"I did not vote for the tax increase because the retailers will be affected," Dunn said. "My district, which runs along Missouri from Cape Girardeau to St. Louis, will feel this.

"People will go across the river, if they can get across it, and buy cigarettes and other things they may think of to buy while there," Dunn said.

Downstate lawmakers recently have opposed the cigarette tax increase because of a fear that citizens will cross state lines to purchase cigars and other items.

Rep. Larry Woolard, D-Carterville, said he voted for the tax increase because of a promise he made to senior citizens.

"I pledged to the senior citizens and their families in my district that I would never support continuing the nursing home tax in its original form," Woolard said. "Today, I can say that senior citizens and their families are the winners in this budget agreement."

Not all lawmakers were worried about bootlegging, but Sen. Jim Rea, D-Christopher, agreed with Dunn, saying he thinks the tax increase will hurt the state.

SIUC summer enrollment increases

By Patti Dulik
General Assignment Writer

SIUC's summer enrollment has increased for the fourth year in a row bringing this year's total to 11,935 students compared to last year's total enrollment of 11,898.

Roland Keim, director of Admissions and Records, said the increase in students is mainly because of an increase in graduate and professional student enrollment while last year this enrollment was down.

"Because of the current economic conditions, people are finding a need to continue or go back to school," he said.

Last year 2,857 graduate and professional students took classes on campus compared to this year's enrollment of 2,946.

Tim Boudreau, research assistant for the school of journalism, said he returned to school partly because he was tired of his job but mainly because he wanted to teach and could not do it without a PHD.

This summer, 8,720 students are studying on-campus, in Carbondale and Springfield. This is an increase of 89 students compared to the summer of 1992 which had 8,631 students enrolled.

Off-campus programs, which include programs on military bases and the Nakajo campus in Japan, attracted a total of 3,215 students, 32 fewer students than last summer.

Leslie Stern, senior in health care management, said he believes on campus enrollment is increasing during the summer because of the outdoor recreation and the friendly atmosphere.

Sexual harassment policy tops senate meeting

The revamping of the SIUC sexual harassment policy dominated the Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday.

Recent changes in the Illinois Human Rights Act that went into effective July 1 require the University to make revisions in its policy.

Focus on timely handling of complaints, faster responses

Illinois Department of Human Rights.

Pam Brandt, director of personnel services at SIUC, introduced the proposed changes in the policy and said the focus would be on the timely handling of complaints.

"The main changes will not be in the policy itself," she said. "We will be dealing with compliance.

Under the current system people are unable to get a quick response."

Brandt said an example of the ineffectiveness of the policy can be seen through a complaint filed last May.

"A complaint was filed last May and a hearing was not able to be set up until September," she said. "During that time some things occurred both on and off campus that caused turmoil."

Margaret Winters, chairperson of the governance committee, said the time table present in the current policy would be eliminated.

"The amount of time a person has to file a complaint will remain the same," she said. "The only thing that will be changed is the amount of time each department has to respond to a complaint. No

Race car driver dies after helicopter crash

The Washington Post

And then there were none.

The death of Davey Allison Tuesday morning, of head injuries from a helicopter crash Monday in Alabama, caps a skein of tragedy for the famous stock-car-racing family that leaves no Allisons to race on the blazing asphalt tracks where their fame was forged over the last 30 years.

Allison, 32, who barely missed winning the National Association of Stock Car Auto Racing championship last year, was the second top Winston Cup driver to die in an air crash this year. Alan Kulwicki, who nosed out Allison for top honors in the last race of 1992, died in a plane crash in Tennessee this spring.

But if that misfortune rocked the racing community, where death never lurks far below the surface, this one, pieced against a backdrop of relentless recent travail for the

Less than a year ago, Davey's only brother, Clifford, 27, crashed and died while testing his Grand National race car in Michigan.

Davey rushed to the scene, then raced around the same track two days later, grimly taking fifth place.

Davey at the time was recuperating from the worst of a half-dozen crashes that marred his driving year, steering with his broken right arm in a splint, and was still getting over the death of his grandfather, Pop Allison, to cancer in the spring.

His father, Bobby, whose fabulous, 84-win NASCAR career ended in a near-fatal crash at Pocono in 1988 that put him in a coma for two months, had returned to racing as a car owner and helped his son through the hard times.

So did his uncle, Donnie, whose driving career also ended in a crash.

Intramural sports offer summer challenges

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

There still is time to bash a blistering spike, hit a colossal home run, score a Pele-like goal, dart across the finish line and drain the clutch putt.

These challenges wait for those students interested in participating in one of SIUC's remaining summer intramural events. The events left are a beach volleyball tournament, home run derby, soccer tournament, two-person canoe race and a putt-putt golf tournament.

Herman Williams, co-ordinator of SIUC's intramural program, said SIUC's intramural system is one of the best.

"As far as state schools go, ours is right near the top in terms of size and organization," Williams said. "But the U of I is an exception, in terms of numbers of students."

Williams said his goal is to get more students involved in intramurals.

"We would like to get Greek participation closer to 100 percent, and get more sororities involved," he said. "But we are really concentrating on getting more students from the residence halls to participate."

Plans to attract more residence hall students will focus on more advertising, and a system where residence hall floors play against other halls and floors, Williams said.

Williams said intramurals not only offer fun and excitement, but also provide jobs for students.

"We've produced quite a few referees," Williams said.

"They work for us and then start calling high school softball or basketball games. That's good experience and offers them a chance to make a little money on the side."

Williams said the best thing about intramurals is that the students make them work.

"Sure we have a few professionals who help, but our grad assistants and the kids who ref the games really do a great job," Williams said. "They make things easy for us."

Laura Proescher, a graduate assistant in intramurals and veteran of various intramural sports, said she also would like to increase participation among on-campus students.

"I think intramurals should be geared primarily toward the students on-campus," Proescher said.

"We are going to try and advertise more and make sure students are aware, especially the freshman."

Proescher said intramurals serve a valuable purpose.

"They offer amateur athletes who couldn't play at the intercollegiate level a chance to play," Proescher said. "But also it is organized, so it makes it better than pick-up games."

This fall students will have plenty of intramural sports to choose from. Team sports include volleyball, 16 and 12-inch softball, soccer, flag-football, floor hockey and basketball.

Individual events consist of a graduate/faculty/staff golf tournament, tennis, badminton, racquetball and squash.

Child's play: Hundreds of Southern Illinois children participate with sports programs organized by the Recreation Center

By Jeremy Finley
Sports Editor

Anyone who has exercised at the Recreation Center this summer has seen them.

They run, they play basketball, they swim, and they literally climb the walls.

Because of several sports programs taking place at the Recreation Center this summer, hundreds of kids are using the center to its fullest.

And they are learning to not only understand new sports, but to understand each other.

Kathy Hollister, director of special populations for the Recreation Center, said in the different sports programs offered for kids this summer are designed to introduce them to several sports and to different varieties of people.

The programs bring together boys and girls from Southern Illinois, she said. These boys and girls are from different areas and different racial backgrounds.

"It gives kids the chance to interact with a variety of kids," Hollister said.

"It brings together urban and rural kids. It's a multi-racial program."

This is no more true than for the National Youth Sports Program.

Hollister said the youth program gives economically disadvantaged young people the chance to experience several sports, both outdoor and indoor.

The program is sponsored through a grant by the NCAA. SIUC is only one of 175 colleges that participate in the program across the nation.

Hollister said the other sports programs for kids cost a fee to take part in, but the youth program is free and offers transportation from certain areas to the Recreation Center.

The kids involved with the youth program not only participate in sports such as flag football and tennis, but they also take trips across the Southern Illinois area.

"We've taken trips to the airport museum, where they could see the career opportunities they offer," she said.

Hollister said the education component to the program includes inviting speakers to speak on drug and alcohol awareness and fitness issues.

The youth program is in its final fifth week, but Hollister said kids still can enroll for the remaining days until the program ends Saturday. A free physical is given for those who wish to participate.

Hollister said this is the sixth year for the program, and she hopes for a seventh year despite the lower number of kids that participated this year.

Every day of the five week program, 240 kids are needed to participate to meet the programs goal. Nearly 200 kids are averaged to have participated this summer, and that number needed to be higher.

The NCAA will evaluate SIUC's program in October, and the lower number of kids participating could be not looked upon favorably, Hollister said.

"This is something we can't afford to lose," she said.

"The community will have to show support if we are going to continue."

Hollister said she hopes that participants and their parents will write letters in favor of the program.

Other sports programs at the Recreation Center include a multi-sport camp and youth recreation program.

The multisport program engages the children in activities such as the climbing wall, softball, roller skating and bowling. The kids pay a $125 fee a week.

NBA gambling problem under investigation

Newsday

NEW YORK—National Basketball Association legal representatives met Monday with Richard Esquinas, an admitted compulsive gambler, to discuss his claims that Michael Jordan is a compulsive gambler who lost $1.25 million in golf wagers to him in 1991.

There were no league officials at the 2-hour meeting at the Manhattan offices of Frederick Lacey, a former federal judge and U.S. attorney whom the NBA has retained as a consultant. However, the informal meeting is the first step in what may become an extensive investigation into gambling and unsavory associates of NBA players.

Esquinas was accompanied by attorney Robert Costello, who said Esquinas was questioned about the claims he made in his book and about areas not covered in the book. Costello said the lawyers had agreed not to discuss those areas with the media.

Costello said, "It looks like they intend to do a thorough investigation and let the chips fall where they may."

NBA commissioner David Stern has said he was concerned about associations between players and gamblers. He said the league will investigate gambling and associations of NBA players.

Lawyers for the NBA were prepared with extensive notes on Esquinas' book and other areas, Costello said. He added Esquinas answered every question and did not avoid repeating any of his claims. A league spokesman declined to discuss the specifics of the meeting, but said Lacey will prepare a report on it.

Esquinas, of San Diego, wrote of his high-stakes matches with Jordan in a book called "Michael and Me: Our Gambling Addiction... my cry for help!" Esquinas wrote Jordan lost $1.25 million in bets on golf matches between the two. Jordan has said he lost about $500,000 to Esquinas, but maintains he doesn't have a gambling problem. Esquinas' allegations were not the first involving Jordan and gambling. Jordan admitted last October that checks totaling $165,000 he gave to a convicted drug dealer were to pay gambling debts.

MEXICO TO REFUSE CHINESE IMMIGRANTS — Mexico will not accept the 658 Chinese immigrants currently detained at sea by the U.S. Coast Guard, saying it is up to the United States to resolve the crisis, Mexican officials declared Monday. After a weekend in which U.S. officials indicated an agreement between the two countries could be near, Mexican diplomats flatly said they would reject the Clinton administration's request to accept the immigrants.

ECONOMY FLOUNDERING IN YUGOSLAVIA — In Belgrade, where the average worker lived as well as many in Western Europe until two years ago, food lines, ration cards and charity are further affronts to the already wounded pride of the Serbian nation. The bottom has fallen out of the Yugoslav economy over the last two weeks, sending mind-boggling hyper-inflation into an uncharitable upward spiral and launching the Serbs on an unusual spree of panic buying.

CANADA UNELECTED SENATE RESCINDS PAY — Long known as the "chamber of sober second thought," Canada's unelected Senate surrendered to second thoughts brought on by public pummeling. With only one defiant no vote and 80 yeases, the Senate rescinded a $5,000 expense-allowance increase it had granted its members 19 days before. "In a democracy, this was not a humiliating thing to do, but the right thing to do," said the ruling Progressive Conservative Party's Senate leader.

JOURNAL STAFFERS ATTACKS EXPOSE — It doesn't take long to figure out the chief villains in Francis X. Dealy Jr.'s new book on the Wall Street Journal. Norman Pearlstine, former executive editor, is portrayed as a social-climbing dealmaker who watered down the paper's coverage of the financial scandals of the '80s. Karen Elliott, a Journal vice president, is depicted as a ruthless Dragon Lady. Elliott is married to the paper's publisher, Peter Kann; Dealy terms the partnership "the most conspicuous and destructive case of nepotism in corporate America today." But "The Power and the Money" has credibility problems, according to people were interviewed for the book.

FRAMEWORK OF HEALTH REFORM PLAN SET — The White House health-reform plan has taken the shape of a meticulously calibrated mobile, each of its dozen pieces balanced against the weight of all the other pieces. Change one piece too much or not enough, and the whole thing could fall. Much of the structure of the plan has been decided. The White House task force on national health-care reform has been disbanded.

MANY TEENS SNOOZE THROUGH SUMMER — College junior Eric punched out his alarm clock the other day. "It drives me crazy," says his mother. "When my husband and I were younger, we had responsibilities." Eric, who is 20, has a simple explanation. "It's summertime," he says. "I stay out late. I need more rest." It's a simple equation. Unlimited free time plus no steady job equals hours of time in the sack for hundreds of high school teen-agers and college kids.

OFFICIALS RESPOND QUICKLY TO DISASTER — Sensitive to allegations of ineptitude for their performance during Hurricane Andrew last year in South Florida, federal disaster relief officials appear to be responding quickly—and certainly visibly—to flood-stricken areas of the Mississippi River. Besides moving swiftly to open 20 victim-assistance centers in five states, the Federal Emergency Management Agency has begun a full-court press on the public-relations front. see story, page 9

MANY ADULTS SUFFER LACK OF SLEEP — When it's time to get up in the morning, do you sink back under the covers and fall back asleep? Are you often too exhausted to get out of bed? Do you feel tired and lethargic throughout the day? If so, experts say, you are among the millions of adult Americans who aren't getting enough sleep. Although not everyone needs the same nine hours that young people do, experts say grown-ups should get seven to eight hours of sleep a night.

City devises task force to ponder license policy

By Shawna Donovan and Jonathan Sent
Special Assignment Writers

The issue of mandatory inspections by the city of Carbondale rental property is causing debate from citizens, city officials and students, as privacy becomes an area of concern.

As a result, the city has created a task force, which will meet Thursday, to discuss current information that regards the possible licensing of Carbondale rental property.

The task force previously concluded that more than 70 percent of Carbondale housing units are rented, and many have substandard living conditions.

Some task force members suggest that the city be allowed to enter rental units and make sure all city codes are enforced, a right they presently do not have.

Jeff Doherty, Carbondale city manager, said something must be done about the housing situation.

"It is a serious condition when housing units are not proper for people to live in," Doherty said. "I would like to see a mandatory housing license in place in the near future."

Doherty has met with student leaders regarding their concerns about the mandatory inspections and infringements upon students.

Lorenzo Henderson, a student member of the task force, said the Undergraduate Student Government is reluctant to agree with the mandatory inspection policy because the inspections may violate tenant's privacy.

Henderson said he opposes the inspections because they will also let the city know what else the tenant is doing in their units, in addition to checking the conditions of the property.

In Carbondale, certain zoning laws prohibit more than two unrelated people to live together. A reason why the zoning laws are in effect is to keep noise levels down in residential areas, considering the noise levels may go up if more than two unrelated people live in a unit.

"Housing conditions fall when low income people are grouped," Henderson said. "Low income groups and students will be forced into the zoned areas, when the city is checking zoning laws, in addition to enforcing safety codes."

Henderson said this grouping will force some Carbondale housing areas to decline in conditions.

Mike Spiwak, USG president, agrees with Henderson and feels the city's good intentions may be corrupted when the city goes in to inspect for housing conditions, but ends up looking for other violations that may be taking place in the home.

However, Doherty denies the chance of such an event taking place.

"Rental licensing is a housing issue, not a zoning issue," Doherty said.

"If there are situations in the unit, other than safety violations, like violation of zoning policies, the city usually will know, before the inspection," he said.

Doherty said the city uses methods, such as complaints from neighbors and address checking from the Bursar's and post office, to find out what the situation is in the rental units, if housing codes are being violated.

Meanwhile, Carbondale landlords are caught in the middle of the issue as they may benefit or be disadvantaged by the inspections, depending on the condition of their properties.

Leonard Bening, owner of Bening Real Estate, said the rental licensing issue will probably be passed on to the tenant.

"The city will penalize the good landlords and nothing will happen with the bad ones," Bening said.

Flood wreaks havoc on riverside

Los Angeles Times

QUINCY, Ill.—The Mississippi River has spilled out as wide as 16 miles across the low plains of Illinois and Missouri, a chocolate-colored inland sea so vast that it will leave behind a temporary ribbon of swamps even after it recedes, altering human, wildlife and plant habitats for months.

Lingering floodwaters along the Mississippi's 583-mile upper branch will likely delay a speedy recovery and wreak havoc on everything from the reclamation of sunken river towns to the survival of wild grasses, say scientists and engineers girding for the impact. Unlike earthquakes and hurricanes, which spend their fury in a matter of days, the Mississippi's devastation is a quiet, invisible undermining that intensifies as long as floodwaters remain.

Mosquito and mayfly populations are already showing signs of exploding in the saturated bottomlands. Thousands of birds are expected to stray off the Mississippi flyway during their fall migration. The risk of bacterial disease and drownings will rise among families trying to return to homes eroded by water, caked with silt and filling with river fish and poisonous snakes.

"What's phenomenal is that even after the river crests, this crisis is not over. It's just starting," said Robert H. Stratton, a federal animal biologist who directs the Mark Twain National Wildlife Refuge, a 275-mile-long preserve now completely underwater. "We've got above normal rainfall predicted until September so the water will sit in some places as long as late August and September before it drains out," said Gary Dyhouse, chief hydrologist for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineer. "I wouldn't be surprised to see some water still around by winter."

From the air, the flood's sway over the Mississippi valley is clear. North of the town of Quincy, Ill., the river bulges out to its greatest width, 16 miles of water lapping at the steel tops of 30-foot-high grain silos. Another muddy 15-mile band stretches farther south, at Clarksville, Mo. Even beyond those widening banks, small lakes and curling fingers of ground seepage splay for miles—evidence that standing water will not soon evaporate.

Agency must keep its head above water

IT'S BEING CALLED THE GREAT FLOOD OF '93. The record-breaking crests of the Mississippi and its sister river, the Missouri, have toppled farm levees along their routes, causing at least $2 billion in crop losses. The people washed out of their homes by the flood easily have topped 51,000 in the seven Midwestern states devastated by the flood. Similarly, as the waters continue to rise, so do the already staggering numbers.

President Clinton formally has declared flood-stricken portions of five states—including Illinois and Missouri—major disaster areas, making way for the Federal Emergency Management Agency to step in and offer its assistance.

But the highly criticized agency has been charged with worrying more about nuclear war than natural disasters, and its past record seems to say the same. But despite its shortcomings, the agency insists it is changing. The Great Flood is its opportunity to either keep afloat or drown.

THE FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY is the central coordinating agency between state and federal government for disaster relief efforts. But critics have charged that the agency itself is a disaster, weighed down with political appointees and slow to respond to crisis. In the 1980s, it spent $2.9 billion to help the nation survive nuclear war—13 times that spent preparing for hurricanes, floods and earthquakes—giving higher priority to the possibility of nuclear war than the reality of natural disaster.

After 1989's Hurricane Hugo hit Charleston, S.C., the emergency agency did not open its first disaster-aid centers for 10 days. After Hurricane Andrew hit Florida last year, victims looted groceries while waiting four days for the agency to open its aid centers, according to news reports. The Florida disaster sparked several investigations, each citing several shortcomings inhibiting its effectiveness. "FEMA currently lacks an effective strategy for rapid federal response," the General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative branch, said in May.

THE CRITICISMS HAVE CREATED EFFORTS IN Congress to revamp the agency and the way it handles business. Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., has introduced legislation that would cut the number of political appointees from 34 to five, put emergency planning directly under the White House and require closer coordination among state and federal agencies. But time is invaluable to disaster victims.

The emergency agency, urged by Clinton's administration and continuing criticism, insists it is changing, highlighting its quick response to the flood. So far, the agency has added 50 operators to its current 150 to take calls from flood victims needing assistance, and has opened up offices in each of the states officially marked with disaster areas.

FEMA Spokesman Marvin Davis said the agency is not objecting to the proposed Congressional changes, but it is trying to change itself. He said the agency is keeping in close contact with the state governments affected by the floods and trying to provide more immediate services to the victims.

THE GREAT FLOOD OF '93 IS A DISASTER IN slow motion when compared to hurricanes and earthquakes—it is measured in inches and allows the agency more time to prepare. Nonetheless, it is a test case for how well FEMA's changes work. On his recent tour of the flood-devastated regions of the Midwest, Vice President Al Gore declared the agency is responding effectively to the disaster, when in actuality it is too soon to tell.

FEMA needs to provide the necessary assistance to those affected by the devastating flood waters, and it cannot afford to go wrong—or else the agency will remain seriously water-logged in the future.

Commentary

Flood insurance plan drowning

The Baltimore Sun

For some Americans watching and reading about the unprecedented floodwater damage in the Midwest, sympathy and generosity are going to be tempered when they get the bill—much of the disaster relief cost is going to be for repairing or replacing structures built dangerously close to rivers well known for their destructiveness. In many cases, these structures have been flooded again and again, and rehabilitation has been subsidized each time.

The subsidies come in two forms. There are grants and below-market-rate loans for victims without flood insurance. Congress can be counted on to respond to the tragedies floods produce with emergency appropriations for such programs. The second form of subsidization is flood insurance, itself. The federal government now underwrites flood insurance at far below risk-based rates.

The problem with flood insurance is that too many homes have it and too few do. Estimates of the number of uninsured structures in risky flood areas along rivers and the coasts vary, but only about one-fourth of all at-risk structures are insured. Congress will soon be asked to bail out uninsured homeowners in the Midwest, but luckily there are not more policy-holders. The insurance is sold at such a low cost to many homeowners the fund is unable to pay off the claims in a bad year.

And 1993 is a bad year. Before the first flood insurance claim from this month's floods was ever filed, the National Flood Insurance Program was in deficit—about $18 million. NFIP has to borrow money to pay off claims when it can't cover them from premiums. There is a limit to how much it can borrow—about $1 billion—and it is predicted claims will exceed that this year. In addition to the claims from the Midwest, hurricane activity is expected to be greater than usual this year, and hurricanes can generate enormous flood damage. The NFIP has more than $200 billion in outstanding policies. Congress will be pressured to appropriate money to pay off claims if the NFIP's borrowing limit is exceeded.

There is legislation aimed at avoiding such a disaster and bringing some logic and common sense to the flood insurance program. It would make lenders require flood insurance of threatened properties, raise premiums to reflect true risk, and put an end to repetitive claims in high-risk flood zones. It is legislation that deserves to become law. Those willing to take the risk involved in living on the seacoast or lakefront or river's edge should not be denied that right. But they, not other taxpayers, should have to pay for the resultant damages when the waters rise.

Police need to take bite out of city's crime

Crime in Carbondale is rapidly becoming one of the largest threats to the well-being of the University.

Nearly every day, one can read in the DE about someone's car or property being vandalized, a home burglarized, etc.

The crime problem in Carbondale is just one more thing for students to consider when they are trying to decide whether to attend SIU or another university. Indeed, crime is a problem in any college town.

However, many universities with this problem can afford it, for they have so many students applying for admission that they have to turn them away.

SIU enrollment is not saturated and therefore cannot afford to have a reputation for being located in a city where crime runs rampant.

I personally had the top of my convertible slashed.

A good friend of mine, who I work with at SIU, had all four wheels on his car stolen. Another just had his windshield broken by vandals and yesterday I read about several trailers being burglarized. SIU and Carbondale police should do more.

Increase the number of patrolling officers by 100 percent, for example.

Not enough money in the budget for this? Consider the alternative. The reputation Carbondale has for criminal activities will eventually cause a decline in student enrollment, if it has not already, and this means less revenue for the City of Carbondale and SIU, resulting in more budget problems, which causes more cutbacks and so on.

It is in the best interest of SIU to deal more effectively with crime in Carbondale now, before it is too late. —David C. Autry, SIUC graduate, U of I medical student

"There's not a lot of places you can see deer on your front lawn at night," he said.

"You can really get in touch with yourself and the outdoors. It's not like any other Illinois campuses," Stern continued.

"SIUC is a really good place to be because of the supper friendly atmosphere. The students get along really well together. It's a fun place to be."

Elisa Albaugh, senior in music education, decided to stay at SIUC this summer so she could graduate soon.

She finished four years of of college but picked up a minor and now has two more years to complete.

Albaugh said enrolling at SIUC for the summer was a good idea because the classes go by much more quickly than in the fall.

Tom Wheatley, an undecided freshman, enrolled in SIUC this summer, shortly after high school graduation, because he wanted to start school slow and get a feel for college life.

"I like that you get to pick your own classes and make your own decisions," he said. "It kind of shows me how it would be in the real world. It's pretty fun."

Overall SIUC's enrollment is 8,684 undergraduates, 2,908 master's and doctoral students, 116 law students, 206 medical students and 21 medical studies students.

"This tax will hurt businesses along the Kentucky border," Rea said.

"The cigarette tax in Kentucky is only 10 cents; a difference of 41 cents is a big difference," Rea continued.

"A lot of people will cross over and buy cartons of cigarettes for their families and friends, and they will buy other things while they are there," Rea said.

Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin, said he does not think the increase will send people across state lines.

"I do not think 14 cents will make a difference in bootlegging," Hawkins said. "I did not want to vote for a tax increase, but it came down to picking between taxing the nursing home beds or cigarettes and I chose the cigarettes."

Dunn said he did not want to vote for the increase in cigarette tax and said he thinks the money needed from the cigarette tax increase could have come from a different area.

"I would have rather seen a 1-cent tax on food and drugs; that would have raised plenty of money," Dunn said. "But that did not take since the Governor (Jim Edgar) is committed to no new taxes. He calls the cigarette tax a user-fee. I did not think the cigarette tax increase was a good idea."

time constraints will be included."

Both Brandt and Winters said this would help eliminate many of the obstacles plaguing the process.

Many faculty members were concerned with the changes in the policy and the implementation of a sexual harassment training program.

Orr said during the Executive Council meeting questions were raised regarding the workload to be placed on faculty members.

"Some people were asking whether it was appropriate for deans to determine when the training programs would be initiated," he said.

Benjamin Shepherd, SIUC vice president and provost, would be responsible for aiding the deans in putting such a program into action.

Armando Amador, visiting associate professor of obstetrics and gynecology, said he shared concern over the consistency within departments in implementing the training program.

Changes in the policy will be voted on during the next meeting in September.

An issue relating to the treatment of mental health problems for University employees also was given significant attention during the meeting.

Geoffrey Nathan, chairman of the faculty status and welfare committee, said he will be conducting an investigation into the effectiveness of Biodyne.

"Biodyne is an agency contracted by the state for all public universities," Nathan said. "If an employee wants to be compensated for 80 percent of mental health treatment they will go through Biodyne."

Nathan said the Faculty Senate at the University of Illinois recently reviewed complaints of the agency made by employees there.

"The Faculty Senate at U of I voted to remove itself from the agency because of complaints," he said. "The complaints were in the areas of payment and the heavy-handed way in which the agency is discouraging treatment."

Nathan said he is not accusing Biodyne of acting ineffectively, but is concerned about the possibility of complaints.

"I am not trying to make trouble I am just concerned about whether or not there is trouble out there," he said.

If faculty members have a complaint against Biodyne or know someone who has had problems in dealing with the agency Nathan encourages them to contact him.

The findings of the investigation will be revealed at the next Faculty Senate meeting.

Policy amendments to Faculty and A/P Staff Handbook regarding non-tenurable and contingent appointments and tenure promotions were approved during this meeting. Also discussed was the Illinois Board of Higher Education agenda for the coming year.

Jim Van Oosting, of the faculty advisory committee to the IBHE, said the agenda will include administrative costs, degree programs, alternatives to the academic calendar and faculty responses to workload.

"The report on these issues was submitted in advance of staff recommendations to the IBHE," he said. "We haven't decided how we will handle the workload issue."

John Pohlman, faculty representative for the College of Education, said at a recent meeting of the Faculty Leaders of Illinois Public Universities four issues were discussed.

"During the meeting we discussed privacy rights, sexual harassment, healthcare benefits and mental health services," Pohlman said. "The meetings will be held at Sagamon State from now on."

Nathan said the Faculty Leaders of Illinois Public Universities will be the ones to take action against Biodyne if proved to be ineffective.

"If the leaders of the Faculty Senates from the public universities in Illinois get together and find Biodyne poses a real problem I am sure the State will do something to correct it," he said.

Exhibit presents photographic art inspired by impressions of deep

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

David Sailors began his career in photography taking pictures for corporations such as AT&T, Nestlé and Johnson Wax. But Sailors' inner drive to create works of art rather than a product burned inside of him. A scuba diving trip set off a chain of imagination within Sailors — somewhere deep within the ocean waters was an idea.

"I saw this underwater world I felt that it had been sorely neglected artistically," he said. "I was helped by the strangeness of the surroundings ... the shock of the new vision woke me up."

Unimpressed with the realism of the National Geographic school of underwater photography, Sailors opted instead to produce impressionistic, abstract images from the world beneath the sea.

Sailors' exhibit "Signs of Life" is on display in the Cinema and Photography Gallery and features 16 examples of his innovative underwater technique.

The color photographs were taken during 1991 and 1992 on the coral reefs of Belize, Bonaire, Dominica, Little Cayman and West Caicos.

Sailors said his personal experience with underwater photography contributed as much to the works as the subjects he photographed.

"Before I began photographing coral reefs, I hadn't expected that the experience of being underwater would affect my work as much as the subjects that I would encounter.

"These 'water-altered' impressions involve the body in a new way and help free me from the habits of a familiar world," he said.

Some of the photographs are so abstracted that they resemble modern paintings more than photographs, Sailors said.

"Most underwater photos are technically very sharp and crisp," he said. "I intentionally diffused the image to make it look like a painting."

The silvery, lucid detail of "Grotesque" strangely echoes the work of Swiss painter H.R. Giger. "Untitled #233" uses artistic elements of form to create a striking visual experience.

"Birth Angel" is a photograph of a vase sponge shot straight down, with the bottom of the sponge focused and the outer lip completely unfocused. This disorientating effect produces the ghostly, multi-hued image of an angel.

In the exhibit, Sailors defracts the architecture of the sea through the lens of his camera, creating an alien landscape of surprising beauty.

Fish tails are transformed into incandescent blurs. Sponges become undulating, ominous blobs. Coral reefs glow with aquatic light.

The short titles that accompany the photographs, including "Ephemeron," "Premonition" and "Star Blaze," are meant to point the viewer's interest to a certain form, but still leave the images open to individual interpretation.

"I make the titles to help the viewer," Sailors said. "I don't think it's interesting to make things too obscure. I don't want to reduce the possibilities of the viewer."

In addition to the arresting technique and subject matter of the exhibit, the photographs have been printed with a revolutionary color process that renders them virtually permanent.

Sailors said the expensive process, perfected by Bill Nordstrom of California, elevates the photographs to the level of art by eliminating the fading problem associated with traditional color photography.

One of the photographs from the exhibit, "Sun Tail," recently won the Photo '93 National Juried Photography Exhibition in Cape Girardeau, Mo. "Sun Tail" was selected by juror Charles Swedlund, a photography professor at SIUC, over 264 other entries.

Sailors said he will continue to experiment with underwater photography, and his images probably will continue to further abstract the underwater world rarely seen by human eyes.

"I have to continue until the process itself shows me another direction," he said. "I don't feel I'm finished with this. I'm glad I've found something that I'm interested in."

"Signs of Life" runs through Aug. 15 in the Cinema and Photography Gallery, located in the C&P Department offices in the Communications Building. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

"The extra expenses will be carried over to the tenant and nothing good will come out of it."

"There should be something done about landlords who do not take care of their properties," he said.

Current city ordinances do not provide for mandatory inspections of housing units; inspection is obtained from permission from the owners or residents to enter the housing unit to perform electrical, plumbing and building code inspections.

Henderson said students must ask themselves whether the city will actually make the inspections for other than safety reasons.

"We need to do something to improve Carbondale housing," said Henderson.

"I don't know whether the mandatory inspections is the best path to travel though," he continued.

The Carbondale City Rental Licensing Task Force is comprised of city officials, SIUC administration and students, rental property owners, Chamber of Commerce and citizen representatives.

A public hearing will take place in September before the task force will make a recommendation to the City Council by late fall.

Disaster relief officials respond faster than critics

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Sensitive to allegations of ineptitude for their performance during Hurricane Andrew last year in South Florida, federal disaster relief officials appear to be responding quickly—and certainly visibly—to flood-stricken areas of the Mississippi River.

Besides moving swiftly to open 20 victim-assistance centers in five states, the Federal Emergency Management Agency has begun a full-court press on the public-relations front, seeking to convince critics that FEMA is changing the way it operates.

For the first time Tuesday, the agency began broadcasting hourly briefings from its Washington headquarters to Midwest television stations on a satellite linkup to explain its disaster-relief measures. Also, top FEMA officials have made appearances on network television interview shows to publicize changes made in providing assistance to flood victims.

The agency's early steps appeared

Agency's efforts seem aimed at avoiding past complaints to have had some initial success. As one of its sharpest critics, Sen. Barbara A. Mikulski, D-Md., said in an interview: "FEMA is out there, on the ball. So far, I'm very pleased."

However, Mikulski said that as flood waters recede and damage is more accurately assessed, FEMA will have to intensify its response and the agency will face a more-severe test. Also, Mikulski said, FEMA's "quick-step actions" cannot substitute for legislation she has introduced that would overhaul the agency and shift its emphasis from preparing for nuclear attacks to getting ready for natural disasters.

Richard Krimm, FEMA's associate director for state and local programs, said the difference in the agency's response is that "for the first time in FEMA's history, we have a professional emergency manager." He was referring to President Clinton's new FEMA director, James Lee Witt, former Arkansas director of emergency management.

In the past, FEMA has been criticized as an agency plagued by political patronage, a dumping ground where incompetent administrators spent more time fighting among themselves over such perquisites as parking spaces and office decor than the needs of disaster victims.

"He (Witt) knows other emergency managers all over the country and has been working with them, as well as with the White House. We got a picture of what's happening early on," Krimm said.

In addition to setting up processing centers for disaster-relief applications, FEMA has dispatched 35 damage-assessment teams to the stricken states. Following Hurricane Andrew, the agency was severely criticized for failing to quickly make damage assessments.

Thevictims-assistance centers—located in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, Missouri and Iowa—have been augmented by three "tele-registration" centers, staffed by 250 operators, that are accepting disaster-relief applications called in to a toll-free number, Krimm said.

Some of the walk-in processing centers are tentatively scheduled to remain open for only about a week, based on estimates of the number of potential applicants in the area. FEMA officials said the short-term schedule for the centers was an economy measure, and that if the closing dates are not extended, flood victims either can go to another center in the area or apply for assistance by telephone.

FEMA communications director Morrie Goodman told a meeting of state and federal emergency-management specialists in St. Charles, Mo., Tuesday: "We don't want any problems like what Andrew happened. We want to be fast, compassionate and accurate."

FEMA officials in Washington said they had been working with state disaster officials on flood relief for weeks because they had anticipated that a federal disaster would be declared.

Krimm said Witt has held daily conference telephone calls with emergency managers of the affected states, and that on Thursday Vice President Al Gore spoke with governors on a conference call.

Gore said Tuesday that federal aid to the Midwest likely will top the $1.2 billion previously announced. He said some financial assistance is already being dispensed.

Efforts continue to keep rail, truck freight rolling through areas affected by flooding

The Washington Post

As water rose dangerously high on the Des Moines River at Ottumwa, Iowa, early in the Mississippi Valley flood, the Soo Line Railroad sat heavily loaded railcars on its threatened bridge in a successful effort to keep it solidly in place.

It's an old railroad trick, one of dozens the flooded railroads of the Midwest have used to keep tracks from washing away and to keep freight flowing to customers who are far more dependent on on-time delivery of freight than they were in the old days of big inventories.

"It's working so far," Soo spokesman John Bergene said Tuesday. "But we're still under water."

With many rail lines flooded out, numerous highways closed and only three river crossing points open to truck traffic on the upper Mississippi River, railroads and trucking companies are fighting a common enemy. Freight has backed up as far away as the port of Long Beach, Calif., but so far, sensitive and perishable freight appears to be getting through, although there have been scattered reports of shortages.

"It's kind of a chess game of moving pieces around," said James E. Zamjahn, who oversees General Motors freight traffic. Zamjahn said GM plants have received enough parts to avoid any shutdowns although, "I always worry about the bullet you don't see." Deliveries of finished cars are running a few days late, he said.

Auto companies, which now rely on "just-in-time" deliveries rather than large stocks of inventory, would be among the first to be affected by a shutdown of freight service. And the floods are directly in the Detroit-to-Los Angeles path of a heavy freight lane for auto parts.

The majority of traffic between the industrial Midwest and California ports now moves by rail, usually in fast trains of containers stacked two deep, with trucks making short-distance final deliveries. There are not enough drivers or truck tractors to haul the shipments by highway.

Approximately 25 percent of the country's rail freight moves through the flooded area.

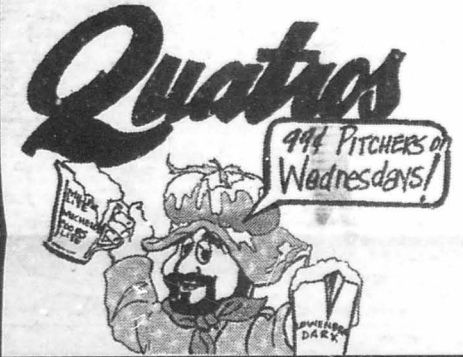

Fred Serpe, executive director of the Illinois Transportation Association, made up largely of truckers, said trucking companies are doing all they can, but many of them are set up only to make deliveries from rail yards, and the others cannot handle significantly more freight.

Besides, he said, truck companies are having their own problems because the only upper Mississippi crossings open to trucks are the Interstate 80 bridge, a bridge at Quincy, Ill., and bridge at St. Louis. Warehouses and company truck lots also are threatened by rising water.
