College of Science dean steps down

By Katie Morrison
Administration Writer

After 10 years as dean of the College of Science, Russell Dutcher is stepping down, saying he wants to get back in touch with students.

The search for a new dean was announced at Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting by Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost.

The search will be internal and may be conducted over the summer, if opposition within the college to a summer search is resolved.

"There has been some opposition expressed by two departments within the college and that is enough to hold off on the search," Shepherd said.

The search will pick up August 16, if opposition continues, Shepherd said.

Dutcher has been at SIUC for 23 years, with 13 as head of the geology department and 10 as dean.

"I decided 10 years was enough," Dutcher said. "It's time to let someone else take over. I'm not 30 years old anymore."

Dutcher wanted to get back in touch with the students.

"I miss dealing with students," Dutcher said.

Some of the fun of the job is taken out with budget problems, he said.

"It is a necessary part of activity and I'm happy to do it, but it definitely takes the fun out of the job," Dutcher said.

"It's time to let someone else see what the budget is like."

The College of Science's faculty expressed that Dutcher will be missed as dean.

"I got several letters indicating the staff didn't want me to go," he said.

While the letters did not change his mind, it was nice to hear, Dutcher said.

"It's nice to know that you're liked," he said.

Dutcher came to SIUC in 1970 to head the geology department. In 1983, he was named dean of the College of Science.

A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., Dutcher graduated from the University of Connecticut.

He holds a master's degree from the University of Massachusetts and a Ph.D. from Pennsylvania State University.

He was also former assistant director of the famed coal research section at Penn State.

Dutcher's research is mainly on chemical and mineral characterization of coal and has been awarded for his contributions to the American Institute of Professional Geologists.

The search for a new College of Science dean is only one in many searches this year.

There are dean searches in the colleges of business and administration, agriculture, science and the school of medicine.

There also are preliminary efforts to search for a dean to the proposed new College of Mass Communication and Media Arts.

Restructuring to dominate BOT agenda

By Tracy Moss
Administration Writer

Restructuring of academic programs fills the Thursday agenda of the SIUC board of trustees and will surely fill the summer agendas as University officials wrap up the final response to the Priorities, Quality and Productivity initiative.

James Brown, SIUC chancellor, said the board in its June meeting will consider proposed cuts by the University planning committee.

"In the September meeting, the board will vote on the final PQP response that will be reviewed by the board in July," he said.

In Thursday's meeting the board will vote on the elimination of several academic programs that are listed in the IBHE inventory, but do not have large enrollments.

An example is the proposed elimination of the Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees in the specialization of musical theater.

Affirmative action imperfect solution

Officials say SIUC making progress but it takes time

By Brian Gross
Special Assignment Writer

Officials and minorities say affirmative action is not a perfect solution to achieving equality, but no one has been able to propose any better alternatives.

Some people prefer to take a subtle position on affirmative action and work behind the scenes.

One such person is Seymour Bryson, SIUC executive assistant to the president for affirmative action. Bryson says calling attention to affirmative action does not help because it is such an emotional issue.

Other people prefer to get on a soap box. One such person is SIUC campus Larry Bolles, director of Northern Illinois University's judicial office. Bolles says one of the best things to happen to people who do not want to hire minorities is affirmative action.

Somewhere in the middle are people such as Carmen Suarez, SIUC affirmative action officer. Suarez is quick to point out numbers that show SIUC has 238 full-tenured professors, and of those 21 are women and four are black. But Suarez still believes in affirmative action as a tool to gain equal opportunity — an imperfect tool but the only one the United States has.

source: SIUC Affirmative Action Office

Affirmative action has nothing to do with quotas, as people opposed to it would have the public believe, Suarez says. Affirmative action simply says that the University must make a good faith effort to have minorities in every job search.

Bryson said equal opportunity cannot be legislated; affirmative action opens the review process on hirings, and to that extent it works.

"Is it helping diversify the campus? Yes," Bryson said. "Is there room for improvement? Yes. Is the central administration behind it? Yes. Does everyone buy into it? No. Are there ways to get around it? Yes."

Bolles, a former dean of students at SIUC, said getting someone in an applicant pool is not enough because affirmative action has nothing to do with the key part of the job.

Faculty Senate expresses desire for pay increase

By Katie Morrison
Administration Writer

The Faculty Senate recommended a reallocation of funds from SIUC's colleges in order to supply money to salary increases, graduate student funds and other costs in the upcoming year.

The three-year budget plan proposes three years of tuition increases and two years of internal reallocation of funds. However, a state wide freeze on tuition increases has left the option of reallocation.

Under the budget plan, 1.25 percent will come from academic affairs and 2.5 percent from non-academic affairs.

The plan was presented to the Board of Trustees last year and the board had signed on to the plan, said Allan Karnes, budget committee chairman. Then the board changed its mind.

"They changed horses in the middle of the stream," Karnes said.

Originally, the budget committee had proposed a 5 percent salary increase. Now, the increase may be as small as 1.25 percent to 2.25 percent.

Even though the proposed increase is small, Karnes argued that the plan needs to go through.

"We have to look at salary increase down the road. We have to get this small increase," Karnes said. "If we don't keep it alive this year, it will be gone."

Questions were raised by Faculty Senate members as to whether the trade-off of reallocation was worth it, considering the salary increase was so small.

SIUC coach Bill Cornell expects a tough battle when the Saluki men's track and field team travels to Terre Haute, Ind., this weekend to compete in the Missouri Valley Conference Track and Field Championships. Illinois State is leading the rankings in the coaches poll by only four points over Indiana State. Northern Iowa and SIUC are close behind.

"Anything can happen, but realistically we'll be in a fight for fourth or fifth place," Cornell said.

Cornell said that the separation between the top team and the fourth team is surmountable, however.

"We're not so far behind the top that if two or three of our men excel and a couple of their guys falter, we'll be right there," he said.

SIUC community, Amaya await call on NBA draft day

Picture this: It's NBA draft time. Commissioner David Stern steps up to the podium and announces, "And the world champion Chicago Bulls select forward Ashraf Amaya from Southern Illinois University to cap off the first round."

Yes. It would be nice to see Da Bulls "three-peat" and have the Salukis' star senior go to them in the draft, but it all goes back to speculation that started at the beginning of the season.

Like the Bulls, Amaya was predicted to have another stellar season, and go on to be the first Saluki to move on to the NBA since Mike Glen.

Thing started off great for Amaya, and the speculations were right on target when he scored 32 points in the second game of the season at Eastern Illinois and 39 points at Northern Illinois the very next game.

But then, Amaya's point totals dropped, and while he was averaging in the mid-teens for the next few games, everyone was waiting for him to get on a high scoring run again. It did not happen.

Amaya passed the 20-point mark only three times in the next two months, and names of other team players were seen taking his place as the game's high scorer.

His performance was solid and important to the team's overall success, but in terms of his performance making him an NBA draft prospect—his status was starting to become questionable.

Most NBA draft prospects are the sole leaders of their teams in both leadership and scoring presence on the floor.

From the Pressbox
Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

Being that the Salukis are not a high profile national team from a high profile conference, Amaya needed to do everything in his power to make himself known and stand out as one of the top players in college basketball.

Then, after a strong appearance at the Missouri Valley Conference tournament, came a dead end—Duke.

Amaya was held to a lowly 8 points in the Blue Devils' rout, although he managed to pull down 11 rebounds.

Amaya was disgusted with himself after the game, saying things like "I played pitiful" and "I envisioned myself playing much better tonight."

So did all of us that turned on our television sets to see Amaya and the Salukis shine, and possibly give the defending champions a run for the money.

So now the season is over and it's time to evaluate Amaya's chances of playing with the Big Boys.

Amaya can push it around down inside, while being tough to push around himself at 6-foot-8, 230 pounds.

His defense down low has earned him Missouri Valley Conference defensive player of the year honors for two consecutive seasons, and he is ranked No. 2 in school history in rebounding.

And Amaya can not only defend the basket, but he can place it in the basket—from most anywhere.

There's nothing sweeter than seeing him take it in for a dunk, and then come back a minute later and pop the three. His versatility is definitely a plus.

Then there's Amaya's attitude. This guy has a pure heart of gold and loves the game of basketball.

What team would not want him—a guy that works hard and is a team player that just wants to play.

It seems like it could be a potluck in trying to figure out which team might select Amaya. All NBA teams have requested his state and bio from sports information in the past month.

Most NBA scouts have also come to see him play, whether it be a Saluki game, or tournaments such as the Portsmouth Invitational tournament and the Desert Classic that are for individuals who are top draft prospects.

It once looked like Amaya had a chance to be a late first round choice, but if he is drafted, it will probably be in the second round.

With young stars like Michigan's Chris Webber, Brigham Young's Shawa Bradley, Kentucky's Jamal Mashburn, Wake Forest's Rodney Rodgers and Memphis State's Arfenec Hardaway entering the draft

Fluids, USDA triangle key to summer diet

By Jeff McIntire
Special Assignment Writer

Several authorities on campus say that two useful guidelines when planning a diet for the summer include drinking a lot of fluids and following the USDA triangle.

Fluids are useful in preventing dehydration in the hot weather that is just around the corner, according to several sources at SIUC.

Following the USDA triangle means using fats, butter, and oils sparingly, taking in moderate amounts of meat and dairy products, eating a larger amount of fruits and vegetables, and including many servings of breads and cereals in one's diet each day.

Carl Hausler, an associate professor in animal science, food and nutrition, said the USDA triangle is the most reliable source for dietary guidelines.

"I would suggest that one follow the USDA triangle when selecting a diet," Hausler said. "The idea is to cut down on calories, not to cut out certain foods and lose important nutrients."

Sara Anderson, assistant professor in animal science, food and nutrition, said that taking in a lot of fluids is important.

"Being in a warm climate, I would recommend taking a lot of fluids," Anderson said.

Anderson also said those who are trying to lose weight should try to lose one or two pounds a week, and a change in lifestyle would be necessary to accomplish this.

"There will have to be a change in lifestyle. There's no way around it," she said.

She said it is not necessary to look perfect in order to have a healthy weight, however.

"Society's ideals are often different from healthy ideals," she said.

Debbie Hudzik, a senior in consumer economics, said breakfast is important to her, and she recommends fruits and vegetables.

"It is very important to eat breakfast during the summer to maintain energy during the day," Hudzik said.

"Fruits and vegetables are good, especially in the summer, when they're in season."

She also said that it is important to take a walk or jog after eating to prevent the food from settling.

TRIBAL PEOPLE FACE HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSE — The world's 300 million indigenous people in more than 70 countries are at "grave risk" from human rights abuses. Amnesty International said Wednesday. "They have been massacred and terrorized, forced from their ancestral lands, caught up in bitter civil conflicts, and left without redress for the abuses they suffer," the human rights organization said. Amnesty cited as examples the treatment of the Nuba in the Sudan and the Indians in Peru, as well as violations against tribals in India, Bangladesh, Vietnam and Tanzania.

U.S., CHINESE GOVERNMENTS TALK IN BEIJING — The Clinton administration held its first high-level talks with the Chinese government in Beijing on Tuesday. Murphysboro celebrates 150 years

By Teri Lynn Carlock
Special Assignment Writer

In the back of Alice Arbeiter's mind there are 84 years worth of memories about the small town of Murphysboro, and she says she would not have it any other way.

"I've never lived outside of Murphysboro because I've been satisfied with what this town has given me," she said. "I like living in a small town where the traffic isn't so heavy."

Arbeiter and other residents of Murphysboro are celebrating the town's 150th birthday this year.

Special events will be taking place all this month, with the Logan Days Carnival beginning today until Saturday.

Murphysboro, the seat of Jackson County, is home to the Gen. John A. Logan, the state's first coal mine, and it supported a steel industry, brewery and shoe company.

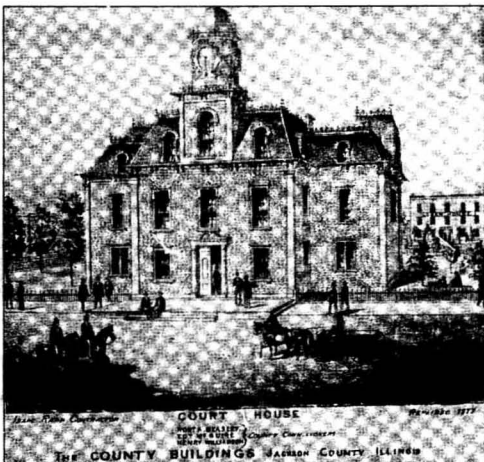

At one time, the town had two railroad stations and dozens of churches and hotels. But a devastating tornado, the Great Depression and a string of fires led to hard times for Murphysboro.

Today the town of about 9,900 people is known for its annual Apple Festival, its national champion barbecue team, its state park and Kinkaid Lake.

Arbeiter said the main reason for her long residency in Murphysboro is her strong family ties.

Her grandfather Martel was one of the founders of the St. Andrew's Catholic Church in 1868 and her father owned a harness shop and later a car top business on N. 11th Street in the early 1930s.

"Papa opened the harness shop because there was a lot of farmers in the area — he and his nephew were partners and they made those

The Jackson County Courthouse was transformed from a two-story brick box into the structure pictured above in 1877. The building was replaced in 1928 by the present court house.

fancy buckles," she said. "He was the only harnessmaker in town so he had a nice business."

Her father would trade harnesses for fresh vegetables and chicken so he could have food on the table for his family.

"Me and my sister would pull our little red wagon uptown so Papa could fill it full of vegetables for us to take back home," she said. "We always had plenty to eat."

The harness business slowed when automobiles were becoming popular, so Arbeiter's father decided to try to cut out a pattern of an old car top to see if he could possibly make a profit. He was successful, and continued to make them until he died in 1967.

When Arbeiter was growing up in Murphysboro in the 1920s, she could buy a chocolate candy bar or popcorn for 5 cents and watch a black and white film at the Star movie house for 10 cents.

She had a nice dress to wear to church every Sunday and was taught by nuns at the Catholic school until she entered high school.

She considered her family to be middle class, with her father the businessman, her mother the homemaker and her four brothers and four sisters.

One of her family's favorite pastimes was riding in their Sedan. She did not drive the family car until she was 24.

"We didn't have driver's licenses then, so Papa just let me drive it home one day," she said. "We just thought we were really something — it was a pretty thing and we were proud of it."

But at least one of Arbeiter's childhood memories is not a happy one, but rather one of death and destruction.

In 1925, when she was a junior in high school, she was sitting in her geometry class when the devastating tri-state tornado hit Murphysboro.

"My teacher had been through a tornado before and he knew what was coming," Arbeiter said. "He was pacing by the windows and saying he had to leave because he had a new baby at home and he was nervous about being away from it."

The tornado — the biggest ever recorded — killed 260 people, destroyed much of the business district, two schools and 1,200 homes.

"The pressure was so great that you couldn't even open the classroom door to leave, so our teacher was going to jump out the window," she said. "But we could see the darkness outside and finally persuaded him to stay with us because we were scared."

Three high school students died that day, all of whom were in study hall when the building's walls blew in, crushing them to death.

Still in shock from the aftermath of the storm, Arbeiter and her sister walked home from school that day, being careful to step over the broken glass and power lines lying on the ground.

"We had very little damage to our home — just broken windows — but there was a lot of damage to

SIUC to be smokeless in 2 months

Staff Report

In less than two months cigarette smoking will be banned on the SIUC campus except in the residence halls.

Effective July 1, 1993, the new Clean Air Policy will restrict smoking to resident halls and research labs where smoking is studied, according to an Administrative and Professional Staff newsletter.

The policy was established after a study by the American Lung Association of Illinois reported more people die annually in Illinois, about 1,500, from secondhand cigarette smoke than from automobile accidents, which was 1,448 last year.

The policy was scheduled to take effect on July 1, 1995, but a number of constituencies pushed for an earlier date because they became more concerned about second-hand smoke after the study.

After the Civil Service Council proposed to move the date to July of 1993 the Undergraduate Student Government joined the Faculty Senate, the Administrative and Professional Staff Council and the Graduate and Professional Student Council in endorsing a new deadline.

President John C. Guyon is putting together a committee to study how to phase the policy into the Residence Halls. Guyon could not be reached for comment.

End of school year a time of goodbyes

IT IS ONLY THE MIDDLE of finals week, but because this is the final day of publication for the Daily Egyptian it is time to say "So long" to the students, faculty, staff and administration until the summer or fall.

The past year at SIUC has been filled with changes and probable changes, from vastly revamping the University's general education curriculum to proposed bar entry reform; from an Illinois Board of Higher Education proposal to cut 24 SIUC programs to the SIUC planning committee's counterproposal; from having a College of Communications and Fine Arts to a proposed College of Mass Communication and Media Arts — a smaller college and a longer name.

But through all the changes, some things have remained constant: Students go to SIUC to learn, faculty try to provide an education while keeping up on research, staff members try to keep the campus running smoothly and administrators ... er ... keep administering.

IT IS NOT REALLY FAIR to say administrators just keep administering. They actually have had a rough year battling to preserve programs while making difficult budget decisions.

Administrators truly have been putting in long hours, days and weeks to make sure SIUC continues or improves the education it offers already while trimming thousands of dollars from departmental budgets.

Although these officials do not get much of a rest between semesters, the Daily Egyptian appreciates their hard work and looks forward to finding out what creative plans they come up with next.

FACULTY AND STAFF also deserve credit for handling more assignments while keeping virtually the same pay.

Faculty did receive a salary increase for the first time in years, but it barely covers the costs of inflation. New positions have opened up, but because of the budgetary crunch some have not been filled.

That means the average SIUC employee is doing more work for no increase in pay, and no increases are expected in the near future.

The Daily Egyptian wishes these people well — especially faculty that need to make up time on their research during intersession.

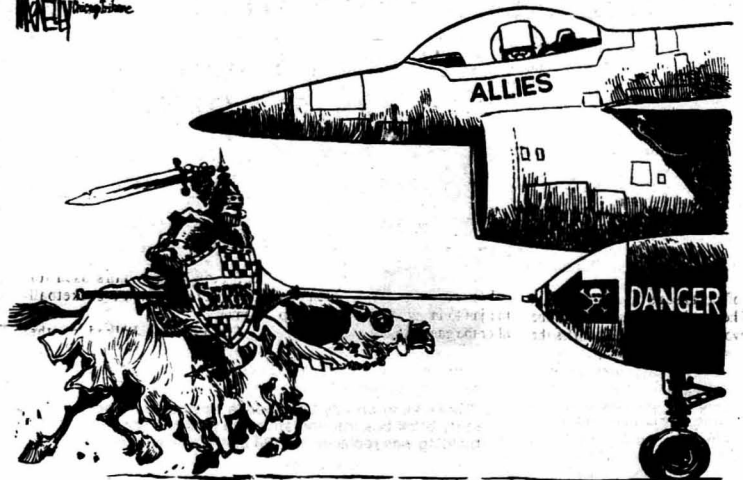

STUDENTS GET A NICE BREAK, though. Of course, they need it to get jobs and pay off monstrous increases in tuition and fees that have occurred during the past few years.

The DE hopes returning students will make some money and enjoy their break, whether it be until the summer or fall semester.

The Daily Egyptian wishes a special goodbye to those graduating this year.

As they leave with a degree — and hopefully soon a career — they should be cheered for making it through a college education. They eventually will be rewarded with fine jobs, but just as important they should be proud of their accomplishments while at this University.

A farewell from Mangrosso

It's not going to be easy to say good-bye to this place.

The Daily Egyptian has been a second home to us for four years now. We've watched many people before us graduate and shed some tears, but we never thought the feeling would catch up to us.

This column represents our rite of passage, giving us a chance to reflect and show our appreciation.

Through the years ...

We met in early fall 1989, two of the youngest, most baby-faced cub reporters ever seen in Room 1247 of the Communications Building.

We quickly became fast friends and a great team ... Brony Mangrosso they called us because we had so many double bylines on stories. We are certainly grateful to faculty managing editor Wanda Brandon, who stuck with us through our diaper years, and of course, our terrible, obstinate 2s. She gave us a chance early on, and we most acknowledge that we would not be here were we without her watchful eye. A lot of credit goes to the journalism faculty, too, and the director of the school.

After being roommates for two years, working together, eating together, taking classes together, watching movies together, going out together, it's understandable that there's been times we've wanted to kill each other. But we're still talking about moving to Florida together after we graduate.

Sources, sources, sources ...

Of our four years here, our favorite source was William Hall, former student member of the Board of Trustees (for three years). We always enjoyed listening to him get excited about conspiracies and administration coverups. He and his wife, Susan, always found a way to help us when we were trying to get information no one else was willing to give. For that,

Tony Mancuso/Brian Gross
former student editors

we thank them.

Our favorite administrator was former Chancellor Lawrence K. Pettit. He was especially skilled at handling the media. We can't single out the administrator who was the worst at handling the media because it would be a tie among several.

One administrator stands out, of course, for media relations: SIUC President John "No Comment" Guyon. We'll never forget the day last fall he walked in the newsroom upset that we broke the story on proposed state budget cuts before everyone else. We also made a mistake, listing some of SIUC's cuts with ours — an extra page of SIUC cuts had been photocopied to our packet of information.

At the risk of sounding defensive ...

One thing that is hard to take is when people criticize the DE's credibility. Those people do not know the DE. They love to get on us when we mess up, but we don't hear much positive feedback when we do a series of in-depth issue stories or quality features. That really hurts because we're trying, but we're also learning. People expect us to be seasoned professionals while we're going through the seasoning process.

Remember, too, that when you look at the DE, you're looking at some of the brightest young journalists in the state, if not in the country, who will have outstanding careers ahead of them and will be tomorrow's media leaders.

The DE provides the best daily coverage of the SIUC campus community. Putting out a daily newspaper is quite a chore for about 100 full-time students, who are asked to carry full loads of classes and work as much as 30 hours a week.

These people are special. There's a sign in the pressroom that captures this spirit and should apply to all DE workers: "Within these walls are located the most intelligent, the most resourceful, the most dedicated, the most diligent, the most skillful student workers at SIUC."

What we will miss ...

Honestly, a lot of journalism is doing the no-brainer stories that do not require much depth. But on occasion, something really big happens, we get a tip, and we jump on it. That is what is exciting and reminds us that journalism is really worth it.

Watching the paper come off the press is a pleasure. Taking the paper in our hands with the ink still fresh and shiny, the paper crisp, we see the final product we worked so hard on printed 27,000 times.

We will miss training and molding future leaders of the Daily Egyptian, teaching them how to get information and put it into words — without them realizing they are becoming competent reporters and editors. It is amazing how competence sneaks up on you, despite some of our critics' arguments to the contrary.

We definitely will miss this extraordinary experience — a learning lab that allows independent work and improvement.

Today we clean out our desks, say our good-byes, move on in our careers and wish our successors the best.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Men's sports deserve more funds

First of all, how long has male sports been at the University compared to when women sports started?

Now, go to Davies Gymnasium, they have nice restrooms and lockers galore. Women should have stayed there where they had sufficient facilities. Basketball averages about five or six hundred at their games, with plenty of seating.

Here at the Arena, we can seat around ten thousand. Sure leaves a lot of empty seats doesn't it.

The media coverage is the same as women for basketball, unless the men's game is televised. What television company wants to come into a ten thousand seat arena and televise a woman's game with five hundred people in attendance.

Ms. Bandy, whether you would ever admit it, the men's sports brings in all the money, not the Solution to women's inequity found within men's inability to trade places

I am only nine years old but I think I have a solution to your problem having to do with the women not being treated as fairly as the men at sports (May 4 Daily Egyptian).

I think they should change places for a year and see how the men like being treated like the women (unfairly). — Rebecca Tompkins, Dongola women's.

Women sports doesn't even pay the janitorial expenses for clean-up after the games.

You want to talk about the baseball facilities, the men's baseball team raised the money for that facility, and with all volunteer labor constructed that facility, without help from the women.

Another thing, the men's basketball team sold advertisement and bought the chairs used for men's and women's basketball games.

The coaches balked on the women using the chairs, but someone raised cane and guess who won out, women use the chairs.

You women should check out all facts before making such a issue about men's sports. — Theron Scott, Arena Custodians

Need for federal, state funds will be a problem until minorities finally achieve state of equality

This is a response to Ms. Youssef's letter which condemned the use of federal and state funds for minority programs at SIUC.

The issue of our tax dollars being spent to ensure that all people regardless of sex, race, or sexual preference (among consenting adults) be given the chance to an undiscriminated life is moot.

Our government is paid for by the people and shall serve the people.

If people want these types of services, they support and elect someone who will serve their interests.

People have the right to vote even though they do not pay taxes because the United States tries to be a nation of equality.

However, voting alone does not create equality.

Some of our United Statesians do not eat properly, live in safe conditions, have an environment which they can learn at school, have clean air and unpolluted water, or have a legal job within an hour bus ride.

This is an injustice and not equality.

I come from a wealthy white town in the north where my friends, parents and many of my classmates were and are racist and sexist.

They would not hire an African United Statesian, a Hispanic, or a woman for high paying professional jobs.

The type of jobs offered to them would be housekeepers, lawn caretakers and secretaries.

These white elite men manage large corporations.

Don't believe that it will be easy for underprivileged people to brake the glass barriers of the white male dominated businesses.

When the time comes for equality to be reached by all of society then we will have a healthy society, and minority organizations will not be needed.

Until then, let minority organizations free all people. — John Banshee Vigil, senior, civil engineering

Health care reform should come from own responsibility

This is a response to the May 5 Newswrap abstract addressing Clinton's new health care reform.

The purpose of health reform should focus on prevention instead of cures and the negative side effects of treating the symptoms.

For example, Clinton's health care advisors proposed an enterprise liability plan that would focus the malpractice suits to the hospitals, the insurer, or the individual health plan instead of the doctor.

That will only weaken an already weak system which Clinton is trying to improve.

Why squabble over where to throw the blame?

The real issue should be prevention and maintenance of our bodies as the major issues of health care reform instead of who is liable for the malpractice and responsible for the high price of pharmaceuticals.

Discipline of fat intake, exercise and regular checkups with a dietician medical advisor will more adequately accomplish the underlying problem of our health care system.

In other words, change the focus, change your habits, and take the responsibility for your own health.

Lanetta L. Wilson, art education

Clinton's last resort must be sending Bosnia U.S. troops

President Clinton should think long and hard before he commits U.S. soldiers to any action in Bosnia other than the continued enforcement of the no-fly zone.

Bosnia-Herzegovina is not Kuitwait.

The conflict is gruesome, but we must remember that it is essentially an internal problem.

Sending in American troops, especially unilaterally, is not the solution.

Renewed sanctions, this time with the backing of Yugoslavia and Russia, could work.

This split between the Serbian state and the Serbians of Bosnia should severely constrict their access to the materials for war-making.

Insurances can be made by sending a large contingent of U.N. soldiers in to main checkpoints along the Yugoslav-Bosnian border to see that nothing goes in or out.

The Bosnian Serbs also need a clear understanding that if agreements are not reached within a certain period, the UN will arm the Bosnian Muslims and let the two sides reach a conclusion themselves.

This will result in destruction and bloodshed on a scale the Balkans have not yet seen in this war, but if contained it can settle this conflict one way or another and give the Muslims a fighting chance.

There are no easy answers to this problem.

The conflict in Bosnia is gruesome, but we must remember that it is essentially an internal problem. Sending in American troops will not provide us with the solution...

I fear that the president may want a quick solution to this complicated conflict so he can get his focus back on domestic issues.

This is a dangerous course of action.

If Mr. Clinton sends American soldiers to die without first perusing every other option available, history and the American public may not forgive him. — Gregg Blake, senior, radio-tv

Graduate school adding multicultural programs

Council wants information on cuts

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Graduate and Professional Student Council members want to know more about future cuts in SIUC graduate programs, according to a memo sent to Graduate Council members.

"The memo reflects the concerns and voices of GPSC members," said Ron Smith, GPSC vice president for Graduate-School Affairs. "The future seems uncertain."

The resolution memo details that GPSC members have not received adequate communication from SIUC President John C. Guyon and Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, about the further elimination of graduate programs, and they oppose any elimination of those recommended by the Long-Range Planning Committee and accepted by the Graduate Council before April 1, 1993.

They also have recommended waiting until next fall to vote and discuss on the future of other proposed graduate cuts.

Guyon announced at the April 29 Graduate Council meeting there would be a hiatus for more graduate eliminations in response to the memo. Smith stated the announcement was a positive step.

"I think it was a positive step for the Graduate Council not to consider any more cuts this semester," Smith said. "It answered some questions we have for now."

Shepherd said he was not surprised about the memo.

"I was not surprised because I was aware of some questions they had for the Graduate Council," Shepherd said.

Despite continued recommended program cuts by the Illinois Board of Higher Education, the SIUC Graduate School is updating and enhancing multiculturalism and diversity among existing programs to compete and survive.

The new initiative is called PROMPT, or Pro-active Recruitment of Multicultural Professionals of Tomorrow. It was started this semester to attract under-represented minority groups, according to Dean John Yopp.

"The graduate school is taking a more active role in assisting the University in determining graduate education," Yopp said. "It is strategic planning on determining what we can afford to keep and what needs to be kept."

"Developing a strong multicultural and diverse recruitment strategy this semester has been a positive step for attracting more students to attend SIUC who are under-represented,"

he said. "It has been an outrageous year. I have not seen anything like it in my 23 years."

The school put out a focus statement stating the path to follow for the future and how eliminating certain programs affect the area.

"I think the focus or mission statement is something to be proud of," Yopp said.

"We just want the IBHE to recognize we are a comprehensive University with quality graduate and undergraduate education and to recognize our Carnegie II Research status because it sets us apart from other Illinois universities," he added.

"We have found that the elimination of certain programs affect the area more than we had thought. Engineering, education and business bring sources back into their programs from the area. It is something to take into consideration," Yopp said.

The Carnegie II status is a rating of how much funding is allocated for research. The IBHE asked the graduate school's opinion on certain programs, and responded on the information received. Programs were looked at for academic standards, the quality of the faculty and if there was sufficient financial support.

Steven Kraft, Graduate Council chairman, said the future of the graduate school looks promising.

"The future of graduate and research programs at SIUC looks promising even though we have gone through a painful experience of cutting some programs that the IBHE has imposed on us, and the lack of state funding," Kraft said.

Films revisit Harlem Renaissance

By Thomas Gibson
Special Assignment Writer

Today's films by African American filmmakers are not just mindless action, a screenwriting professor said.

"It's art and revolution," said Ken Dancyger, associate professor of screenwriting at New York University.

Dancyger said when Spike Lee appeared on the scene in 1986 with his feature film, "She's Gotta Have It," films about black topics were deemed economically expedient.

A string of films with a exploitation flavor followed Lee's film.

He said most of those films did not really have a story line; most of them were trendy.

Juan Mitchell, a junior in cinema and photography at SIUC, said he intends to add the same type of flexibility as other filmmakers of different nationalities.

He said he will not let the system push him into deviating from his plan of making films for his audience.

"Woody Allen's film are not intended for everyone," Mitchell added. "He has something in particular to say for a particular crowd."

Mitchell said for years African-Americans have spent millions of dollars collectively going to the movies.

"They never get what their entitled to from Hollywood," he said.

Lane Jefferies, a senior in film production at Howard University in Washington D.C., said he is a nationalist, and his vision as an artist and nationalist can co-exist.

He said his generation has turned their gold chains for cowrie shells. They have also gotten rid of curls for dreadlocks to show their natural African features, he said.

Jefferies said filmmaker John Singleton is one of the pure nationalists who uses his talent for the upliftment of black people in this country and abroad.

Dancyger said there needs to be more black filmmakers whose vision is not limited.

Gerald Wright, a senior in cinema and photography at SIUC, said Hollywood is a racist institution.

"Black filmmakers have to force their way into the Hollywood system," Wright said.

He said Spike Lee is resented by a lot of people in the industry. Lee is great but because he has rubbed a lot of people the wrong way he will not be allowed to penetrate into the studio, Wright said.

"If you want to change something, the best way is from the inside," he said.

Jefferies said this new wave of African American filmmakers add to the renaissance that is taking place.

Oscar Micheaux, an African-American filmmaker in the '30s and '40s, should be credited for his early independent features," he said.

Jefferies said he wished the older generation had not made the mistake of letting black films that were exotic become exploitation.

"My parents' generation must thank filmmaker Melvin Van Peebles for opening the arena of films that held a interest to African-Americans in the early seventies," Jefferies said.

Finals week leaves students on brink of insanity

By Karen Ham
Health Writer

Regardless of whether it was successful, the end of finals week is in sight—and many students will be trying to climb down from the mountain of worry they have built.

But this is harder than it sounds, and for those who are unable to clear their mind of stress and give themselves a break, the mountain will only grow.

"For some people, the end of finals week can be a relief; the tests and projects are over," said Matt Denis, a counselor at the SIUC Wellness Center. "But now the stress of finals week turns into the stress of worrying about grades. It can lead you to grow bored, depressed and tired."

Denis said rewarding oneself is the first step in relieving stress.

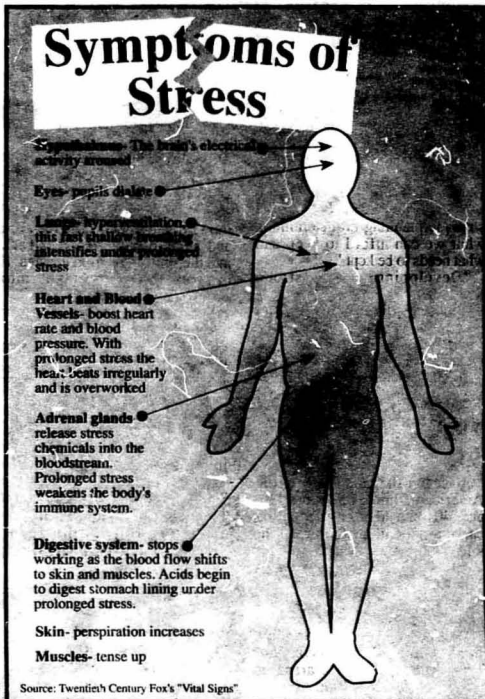

"You need to reward yourself for your effort. If not, you can become resentful or regretful and not capable of enjoying yourself," he said. "You must make time to do something you enjoy, something you really like that you might have put off for a while. You have to put yourself first."

To ensure a person takes time to have fun, one should schedule fun-time on a regular basis and make it a habit.

But one should not expect stress to disappear overnight, Denis said. The more stress a person has endured, the longer it takes to relax.

"If you've gone through a trauma, it's harder to recover," Denis said. "The harder the semester, the more time you need."

Recovery also depends on how well a person manages stress prior to finals week. If a person has a positive attitude, obtains adequate sleep and eats nutritious meals, he or she is more likely to recover faster from the stress.

"You have to remember not to push yourself too hard anytime," Denis said.

Students often push too hard to relax, he said.

"You can try too hard to have fun, but it's important to have a 'me' attitude. You have to take care of the self," he said.

Denis said the best thing to do in recovering is up to the individual.

He suggests to do what works best for the person.

"Some people relax by sitting, others by keeping active," he said. "But you do whatever it is that allows you to let your mind get away from stress—that gives your body a chance to rest—whether that means reading a book or running."

Denis said if a person does not know what relaxes them, they should write down things they enjoy.

"Finding time for yourself is hard to do, but it has to be done," he said. "It's hard, but don't put yourself down. Changing your attitude is a positive choice and you have to believe you deserve it."

Denis said other stress relieving techniques include:

- imagining a peaceful place,
- breathing slowly and deeply,
- walking and exercising,
- getting in touch with friends, and
- adding humor to one's life.

"Anything that makes you laugh is a great stress reducer," Denis said, "so it's very important to enjoy your work."

"Stress reduction and recovery are all necessary parts of overall body maintenance. We need to find enjoyment from the things we do everyday."

Jeff Harris, a counselor at the Counseling Center, said sometimes people have a hard time recovering from stress on their own.

"Do some common sense things first, like eliminate stress from your environment. If that doesn't work, educated yourself about stress-related issues," Harris said.

"If you've tried everything, seek out professional help to learn better what you're feeling and how to handle it."

Everyday stress has rewards, too much unhealthy

By Karen Ham
Health Writer

A counselor at the Wellness Center said stress is a necessary part of life.

"Without stress, people would be unable to feel rewarded in life," said Matt Denis, a counselor at Wellness Center. Excessive stress, however, can lead you down a physically destructive path.

"Some stress is necessary and almost everyone encounters it at some point in their life," he said. "But too much wears you down."

Stress is characterized by the body's constant state of readiness. The body is designed to react to crisis situations by releasing adrenaline. The body responds to physical danger the same way it responds to stressful events, such as finals week. And this release of adrenaline and other stress chemicals into the blood stream can be helpful, providing a person with energy, Denis said.

But long-term stress wears the body down, creates physical exhaustion and weakens the body's defense system.

"If we're stressed too long, we get worn out," Denis said. "We don't stop thinking, but we can't focus. It's all non-productive thinking; even when you try not to think, you're thinking."

Symptoms signaling stress include being tired all of the time, being in a bad mood, being depressed, suffering from a sense of anxiety, worrying excessively, suffering from headaches and isolating oneself.

"Stress can also breakdown the immune system. That's why it's hard to get over colds," Denis said.

Long-term side effects of stress also can contribute to insomnia, stomach problems, ulcers, heart disease, high blood pressure, trembling, nervousness, alcoholism, muscle tension, excessive sweating, sexual dysfunction and back pain.

"50 to 80 percent of all visits to physicians are stress related," Denis said.

Denis said many of the side effects of stress are compounded by poor eating habits, lack of exercise and inadequate sleep.

Research has also shown stress may be an inherited and learned tendency. Stress can be learned from parents and friends, but there may be a link to genetics.

People who have been through traumatic experiences also may have a higher tendency to become easily stressed in situations, Denis said.

And college students striving for perfection also set themselves up for excessive stress.

"Perfectionists set themselves up for a fear of failing," Denis said. "These are unrealistic goals to make."

He said instead of striving to be perfect, strive to do the best one can.

Jeff Harris, a counselor at the Counseling Center, said stress can occur in college students because of the many roles for which students are responsible.

"Students play multiple roles: they worry about studying, grades, work and money," he said. "Multiple roles cause stress because they leave less time and energy needed for coping with stress."

Denis said although a few people manage to live stress-free, it is useless to think stress will go away forever.

For example, students worry most about relationships, school and money, while elderly people worry most about health, losses and money.

525 S. UNIVERSITY ST. CARBONDALE, ILL. 62901-4304

529-1344

Dear Colleagues:

This has been a busy and difficult year in the life of the University. Together, we have confronted complex challenges requiring honest and sometimes painful self-examination, and our collegiality has responded with praiseworthy positive results. The entire University community is to be commended for the progress we have achieved, even though the process has been at times stressful. I am proud of the strengths the University community has displayed.

During the last nine months, faculty, students, and staff have worked to complete a planning effort that has been three years in the making. That effort resulted in several reports being prepared, including the Task Force for the Twenty-First Century, the Budget Advisory Committee recommendations, doctoral program review, Report on Assessment, the Long-Range Planning Committee Report, and the general education curriculum revision. We proceeded to address these areas with the full understanding that, given the progressive decline in state support for public higher education, the University was both underfunded and overprogrammed. This funding shortfall resulted in our having to internally reallocate scarce resources in order to meet present and future priorities.

An important and obviously influential overlay on our own planning process has been the need to respond to P*Q*P and the list of program elimination recommendations received from the Illinois Board of Higher Education in October 1992. The resulting workload has been enormous, but the various bodies have discharged their responsibilities fully, thoughtfully, and in a timely fashion. I feel confident that the long-term health of the University has been enhanced by our being able, in a full and participatory way, to identify a series of academic and non-academic program recommendations that the University will begin to implement in the coming months.

One of our immediate tasks is to review this year's work and prepare a single document that will be presented to the University community. This report, which will be consistent with the recommendations and deliberations of the campus constituency groups, will be submitted to the Board of Trustees for notice in July and for approval at its September meeting. It will also form the basis of our P*Q*P response to the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

In view of the modifications proposed and the budget constraints that are before us, it seems appropriate to reaffirm that the University has not changed its institutional mission or the values it has acquired over decades. We are a comprehensive institution offering a full range of undergraduate and graduate programming consistent with our Carnegie II Research status. We are recommending modifications to our program inventory, but the basic thrust of the University has not been and will not be altered.

Our educational mission consists of the two very important objectives of maintaining and enhancing the quality of our comprehensive undergraduate program in both general education and the major, and our commitment to research and graduate education through the doctoral level.

In fulfilling these two important objectives, SIUC will continue its involvement in the economic, social, health care, and cultural development of southern Illinois. Throughout our history, we have provided educational opportunities to a broad range of students. We continue to prize that commitment. The same holds true of our concern for regional service, our appreciation for tolerance and freedom of thought, and our emphasis on preparing well-educated and responsible citizens. These historic commitments are what make SIUC unique and distinguish us from other universities in the state.

Those recommendations which will emerge from this year's planning process should not be viewed as detracting from our proud history. Indeed, the success of our planning process will be determined in the last analysis by the University's ability to translate its plans into deeds that fulfill its obligations in teaching, research, and service. It is important to understand that we can no more refuse to change than we can deny our past. Both identify who we are and what we will become.

From the outset, our planning process has included broad participation by the University community. Many faculty, students, and administrators took time from their busy schedules to participate in this deliberative process. These constructive suggestions have strongly influenced the outcome, shaping its content and tone. When we once again pick up this planning process next fall, our challenge—yours and mine—will be to remain attuned to our past accomplishments, our values, and our aspirations so that we can clarify our sense of the future. The University's focus statement, which was developed in consultation with the faculty constituency heads and presented to IBHE staff, provides the direction for the task ahead.

Southern Illinois University at Carbondale

As one of the major public university campuses in Illinois, SIUC offers a full range of baccalaureate programs, is committed to graduate education through the doctorate degree, and gives high priority to research. It receives substantial federal support for research and development and annually awards a significant number of doctoral degrees balanced among selected liberal arts and sciences disciplines and professional programs.

Within the programmatic context noted above, SIUC has identified six areas of special focus in which it strives to:

- maintain and continually enhance the quality of undergraduate education in both general education and the major and to develop the professional, social, and leadership skills expected of college students.*
- support the economic, social, and cultural development of rural central and southern Illinois through appropriate undergraduate, graduate, and professional education and research, partnerships with communities, businesses, and other colleges and universities, and utilization of telecommunications technologies.*
- cultivate and sustain a commitment in research and instruction to problems and policy issues related to the region and state's natural resources and environment.*
- meet the health care needs of central and southern Illinois through appropriate health-related programs, services, and public health policy.*
- cultivate and sustain diversity through a commitment to affirmative action, international programming and a global perspective.*
- improve retention and graduation rates*

All program and program-support areas of the university are encouraged to distinguish themselves by their contributions to this programmatic context and these special areas of focus.

To assist in the planning process, I have asked each of the Vice Presidents to work with their colleagues to refine criteria and finalize the process that will be the basis of our further deliberations. I promise to provide the leadership necessary to accomplish this task. I encourage you to review our progress and to take pride in the recommendations and achievements that so many individuals have made. I am grateful to those who have worked so constructively and effectively on behalf of the University and seek your continued cooperation and support.

Sincerely,

John C. Guyon

Because of the way administrators write job descriptions, minorities seldom come up as the most qualified candidate, he said.

But a number of minorities in the pool never get the job because they are ranked second or third in qualifications, he said.

"The process allows you to look like you're doing the right thing, but for every minority who works here, 500 are kept out," Bolles said. "If you want to hire people of color, they're out there."

"There's no question it's legal, but if you wiped out affirmative action, there wouldn't be fewer minorities hired or more hired," he said. "It's a very good way of maintaining the status quo."

The president of the university has to say, "Don't tell me you can't do it; show me the results," Bolles said.

Suarez defined affirmative action, albeit imperfect, as an ongoing attempt to try to address some incredible imbalances in minority hiring.

"It's an imperfect answer, absolutely," she said. "But we've never heard any talk about how else to do it. It's obvious the first thing people still notice is race, gender or if you're in a wheelchair. We still have so far to go."

People say they cannot be punished for what their forefathers did, but centuries of discrimination have to be overcome. Three decades of affirmative action is not enough, she said.

Under presidents Reagan and Bush, affirmative action suffered a setback because of calculated policies to undermine the program and associate numbers reviews with quotas, Suarez said.

Bryson said he could not give figures on how many hiring discrimination complaints have been filed with his office, but he said few are processed.

Charles Western, director of career planning and placement at SIUC, settled a discrimination lawsuit against SIUC last fall for $11,000.

Western, a former SIUC graduate assistant, applied for a counseling position in 1981 but was not interviewed. He said his situation probably is a pretty good example, because SIUC's career development office was not as affirmative-action minded at the time.

"I don't think they would admit it, but my lawsuit kind of caused them to look at themselves," Western said. "Now they have a black director. He would not be there if it had not been for my actions."

James Scales, director of career development, was not available for comment.

Affirmative action is better than nothing, Western said, but it has not worked as well as it was intended.

"A lot of lip service is paid to affirmative action," he said. "But the figures really never match up to the efforts. I think an awful lot of it is a political game the white power structure plays."

SIUC dean searches for the College of Business and Administration and the College of Agriculture have narrowed candidates to three each, but no minorities or women are included.

Search committee chairmen said the business and agriculture fields do not attract many minorities, and even fewer have enough experience to qualify for a dean's job.

"I haven't seen affirmative action make any difference here," said Gordon Bremer, COBA dean search chairman. "If they have the qualifications, they're still considered the same as the others."

Robert Wolff, chairman of the agriculture search, praised affirmative action but said agriculture just is not an area where many minorities work.

Lawyers prepare for case of death of SIUC student

By Joe Littrell
Police Writer

Lawyers both for and against six SIUC students have about two months to prepare for proceedings in the case of the February death of an SIUC student.

A pre-trial date of July 12 is set in the case against six present and former SIUC students charged with involuntary manslaughter in the Feb. 5 death of SIUC student Jose Waight — Steven Crawford, 21, senior in construction technology; Charles Hicks, 22, senior in business; Jeffrey Judd, 23, senior in civil engineering; Martin Todd Lewis, 24, senior in political science; and Richard Wojcik, 23, junior in administration of justice;

Edmund Bart, 22, had enrolled for the spring semester as a senior in psychology, but withdrew four days after the confrontation that led to Waight's death.

Waight, a 24-year-old freshman from South Holland, died of asphyxiation following an early morning confrontation at Checkers nightclub, 706 E. Grand Ave.

Final deadlines for discovery in the case have been set as July 9 for the state and July 15 for the defense.

A coroner's jury in March returned labeled the death accidental after almost five and a half hours of testimony, but a 16-person grand jury indicted the six only a few days later.

Each man plead not guilty to two counts of involuntary manslaughter, one count of aggravated battery, one count of battery, and one count of reckless conduct during a court appearance last month.

Jackson County State's Attorney Chuck Grace, the charges of involuntary manslaughter and aggravated battery carry sentences of two to five years in prison with a possibility of parole.

allow $4,000 to reallocated elsewhere at the expense of no students since the only student enrolled in the program will graduate this semester.

Also, several physical education majors in the Master of Arts education program will be proposed for elimination, because it is in the IBHE inventory although the programs are no longer offered or even listed in the graduate catalog.

Action will be taken on the proposed abolition of other academic programs and the board may also be presented with the University's response to IBHE's proposed academic cuts.

Brown said President John C. Guyon will probably update the board Thursday on the progress of the PQP response including the proposal for a new college of mass communication and media arts.

Guyon is on the BOT agenda to deliver an update on PQP and discuss the update with the Finance Committee.

Guyon was unavailable for comment.

The proposal for the new college was given the support of the Faculty Senate in April by a vote of 26 to 2. The senate had voted against supporting the college in an earlier meeting, but voted to reconsider the issue.

The proposal now awaits approval from the Board of Trustees and the IBHE.

the high school and to other buildings on the west end of town," she said. "It was awful."

After graduating from high school in 1926, Arbeiter went to work as a cashier at a meat shop for $6 a week.

"I only got paid $1 a day...that's terrible when you think of it now," she said. "But I was able to buy little things for myself, so that was good."

She married Eddie Arbeiter, an insurance salesman on July 4, 1934, stopped working the same year and raised three children.

In 1940 they moved into a one-story, white house on Edith Street where she still lives today.

"This place has been home to me all this time, but you wonder if Murphysboro will be here too much longer," she said.

"We only have one dress shop and one shoe store and a lot of buildings have burned and not been rebuilt," Arbeiter said. "I feel sorry about that, but I wouldn't want to move away from here unless I have to."

Band sparks fire with tunes

Local blues group creates soulful CD with energetic twist

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

"Live at PK's — Where There's Smoke...." the new CD from Slappin' Henry Blue, successfully captures the sweat-soaked energy of Carbondale's longest-lasting and hardest-hitting blues band.

The CD, released this week, was recorded live at PK's during the full moon on Oct. 9 and 10, 1992. The two evenings of music were recorded by Soundcore's mobile 16-track studio and combined to give the feeling of a full set.

"Live at PK's" opens with crowd noise, cleverly captured by four open-air microphones, giving the listener the feeling of stepping into a crowded, smoky bar.

"Slick" kicks off the disc with an up-tempo instrumental attack. The song showcases guitarist Russ Baldwin's clean, articulated picking. Joe Beert's subterranean bass and Bill Lancaster's poly-rhythmic drumming.

"Baby What You Want," is a clear indicator that part of Slappin' Henry Blue's appeal is Tawl Paul Frederick's tick, growing vocals.

A Carbondale fixture and cult figure in his own right, Frederick's vocal technique is both hard-rocking and amusing.

Several fast blues numbers, "Ain't Got You" and "Can't Judge a Book," feature frighteningly tight band interplay, as Baldwin rips lightning fast licks from his guitar over a powerful rhythm section.

The band also downshifts a few gears for some slower songs, including a moody take on Ray Charles' "Hit the Road Jack" and Koko Taylor's "Wang Dang Doodle," which explodes into double-time blues frenzy after a few verses.

"Tawl Paul" shows his charisma on "Hit the Road Jack" by rapping a story to the crowd over a syncopated backdrop. The crowd's response to his verbal ramblings adds to the effect.

Lancaster's twisting backbeat propels a hot blues take on "Peter Gunn," vaulting the song beyond the realms of the original spy-thriller theme.

"Walking" to "Nawlins," a sped-up cover of Lou Reed's "Walk on the Wild Side," shows how Slappin' Henry Blue sidesteps blues clichés with Baldwin's complex riffing, Beert's loping bass, Lancaster's explosive drumming and Tawl Paul's slurred vocals.

As the bartenders yell for last call and the disc grinds to a halt, it is obvious that "Live at PK's" is the next best thing to seeing Slappin' Henry Blue in person.

The CD is one of the few live recordings that integrates a bar atmosphere with the music. The crowd is ever-present on "Live at PK's," providing an instant indicator to the band's booty-shaking effect on a crowd.

In addition, "Live at PK's" shows Slappin' Henry Blue as a band made up of top-notch musicians, who rock with vigor and soul.

Slappin' Henry Blue will host a tape release party at PK's this Friday night. The show should be the perfect opportunity for students leaving town to catch a last glimpse of the band, and the CD will allow students to take a piece of Carbondale home with them this summer.

Professor creates circle puzzle

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

A former SIUC professor is hoping the geometric game he invented 13 years ago will become the Rubix Cube of the 1990s.

Rombix was created by Alan Schoen, a member of the design department from 1972-84. Rombix is a set of flat, plastic, multi-colored geometric shapes that fit together to make a circle inside a tray that comes with the set.

The object of the game is to mix up the pieces and fit them back together on the tray, like a jigsaw puzzle that changes every time.

Bill Perk, co-president of the Rombix company, said usually it takes the average person 30 to 45 minutes to complete the puzzle. He said, however, that there are several ways to make the game harder.

"You can try to make a circle with completely scattered colors, where no pieces of the same color touch," he said. "The inventor knows of 30 ways to completely scatter colors. I've only discovered six ways, and I am very pleased with myself."

Besides forming circles, the pieces can be put together to make different shapes and pictures. The

The box comes with an instruction manual filled with samples of silhouettes players can copy from.

Rombix is available in the University Bookstore for $14.95. Rombix is, however, being test marketed in selected Wal-Marts throughout the country. The game is being test marketed through Petrick Sales Co. to determine if it can sell well on a nation-wide basis.

Perk, who worked with Schoen in the design department, said Rombix is exciting on several levels.

While people can just put together the circles or make shapes, he said, there is an added dimension of mathematical genius.

Running, sit-ups, stairclimbing ways to exercise during summer

By Jeff McIntire
Special Assignment Writer

Keeping fit during the summer is difficult without access to the recreational services, but several ideas have been proposed by authorities on campus to make things easier for students to maintain fitness.

Dan Beque, assistant professor in physical education specializing in exercise physiology, said that running for 20 to 30 minutes with moderate intensity three times a week is an effective way to keep fit.

Beque said that those who want to lose weight, however, should run more often at lower intensity.

"To lose weight in an exercise program, what you want to do is run more often, about five times a week, but with lower intensity," he said.

Several students at SIUC have their own approaches to keeping fit.

Michelle Santana, a senior in radio and television broadcasting, lifts weights and rides a stationary bike four times a week.

When those facilities are not available, she recommends jogging, bike riding, or walking.

"You don't have to think of it as a job, but the bottom line is you'll need to make it a point to get some exercise outside, such as bike riding, walking, or jogging," she said.

Mark Davidson, a junior in radio and television, recommends push-ups, pull-ups, jogging, sprinting, and sit-ups for those who are trying to lose weight or keep fit.

Davidson said those who have exercise machines, such as stair climbers, should make use of them.

"They can, to a certain extent, make you feel and look healthier above and beyond what you can do on your own," he said.

Davidson said that motivation for exercise can be difficult, but it is worthwhile.

"If you can stick with it, doing a little bit every day for three months, then you won't be able to live without it. You'll want to do it," he said.

Jason Langston, a junior in journalism, trains people as a hobby, and he recommends push-ups, sit-ups, and running.

"I would recommend push-ups and sit-ups each day, and running three or four times a week for those who are trying to burn off fat," he said.

Langston has trained people for over two years, and has worked in an exercise program for over eight years.

before their college careers were over, Amaya's chances of being picked in the first round probably have dropped down.

Teams will still have senior players Duke's Bobby Hurley to choose from.

Let us hope that no matter what round it is, Stern will step up to the microphone and say the words "Ashraf Amaya."

Hats off to the graduating senior that should graduate on to the NBA. SIUC thanks you for four years of outstanding play.

Good luck, Drew.

NCAA executive director resigns

Zapnews

NCAA executive director Dick Schultz Tuesday announced his resignation amid allegations that he knew of improper loans to student athletes while he was athletic director at Virginia in the 1980's.

Schultz, 62, who has held his job since 1987, made the announcement during a conference call. He will remain in the position until a replacement is found.

Schultz made it clear that his resignation was not an admission of guilt, but a way to avoid damaging the NCAA's credibility. Schultz has repeatedly maintained that he had no knowledge of the program which gave Virginia athletes no-interest loans in violation of NCAA rules. An internal probe by Virginia backed Schultz up, concluding he did not participate in making the loans.

Schultz was the athletic director at Virginia from 1981 until September 1987.

Monday's USA Today reported that the NCAA executive committee decided last Thursday to retain Schultz. That was the same day Virginia received two years probation from the NCAA infractions committee.

Hoping to win individual events will be Brian Miller in the shot put, Cameron Wright in the high jump, Torry King in the discus, Johnathan Hirsh in the javelin, Garth Akal in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, and Bernard Heary in the 800 meters.

Indiana State coach John McNicholls said that it will be a tough battle for the conference title between Illinois State, Northern Iowa and his Sycamores.

"It appears that it's a three-team race for the title," he said. "The team that wins will be healthy and compete with a great deal of emotion."

Indiana State also has an athlete hoping to win the high jump in NCAA automatic qualifier Steve Smith.

Only 1/4 of an inch separates Wright and Smith in the conference rankings, so the high jump should be an interesting competition.

"That ought to be one of the premier events of the meet," McNicholls said.

and Wichita State), if everything clicks this weekend, can become the conference champions."

Although only Dawn Barefoot and Cathy Kershaw are ranked at the top of the conference in the 5,000 and the 10,000 meters, respectively, DeNoon said the Salukis could score in every event.

"We have the potential to score in every event," he said.

Indiana State coach John McNicholls said he expects a close battle.

"It will be a close meet with Illinois State," he said. "It will come down to who's ready to compete."

Indiana State features Hollie Hyele, indoor NCAA champion in the 55 and the 100 meters, and NCAA outdoor qualifier in the 100 meters, the 200 meters, and the 400-meter relay.

"Hollie is one of those athletes that coaches dream about. She does everything you ask and comes through with great success," McNicholls said. "She knows how to stay focused and relax, qualities shared by all of the best athletes."

Saluki athletes expected to have strong finishes this weekend include seniors Nacolia Moore and Crystalia Constantinou, each competing in their last collegiate meet.

Moore is expected to compete in the long jump and the triple jump, and Constantinou is expected to do well in the 100 and the 200 meters.

Also competing for the last time on the collegiate level are Leann Reed, Christina Gabler, Laura Baisie, Cynthia Grammer, Annette Klett and Shaunae Winfield.
