Conduct hearings for riot ensue

By Dylan Fenley
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Two SIUC students have admitted to violating the Student Conduct Code and are receiving relatively light punishments by the University for their actions in the pre-Halloween riots; a University spokeswoman says.

So far, two students have admitted guilt at preliminary fact finding hearings. Sue Davis, an SIUC spokeswoman, said.

One student was put on disciplinary probation for the rest of the student's undergraduate term, and the other student was given disciplinary censure, essentially a written warning, and was referred to the Wellness Center, Davis said.

Students are routinely referred to the Wellness Center for drug and alcohol education and counseling in cases of underage drinking. Barb Fijolek, the Wellness Center coordinator, said.

Hearings before Student Judicial Affairs are being conducted to determine what sanctions the University should administer to students who violated the Student Conduct Code during the riots, Harvey Welch, vice-chancellor for Student Affairs, said.

Welch said 40 students have been sent letters ordering them to attend preliminary fact-finding hearings at Judicial Affairs, and officials still are attempting to identify students from videotapes of the riots.

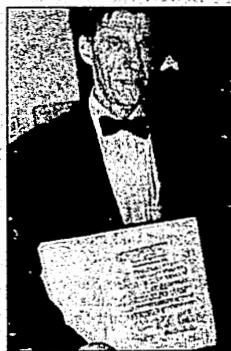

"The preliminary hearings are to determine if a formal hearing is necessary," Welch said.

On Oct. 29, SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs pledged to seek strict disciplinary measures, up to and including suspension, for students identified as participating in the riots on Oct. 26 and 27. During the riots, more than 1,000 people crowded onto the Strip, hurled bottles at police and caused more than $10,000 in damage to property.

Welch said if a student elects to admit guilt at the preliminary hearing, disciplinary measures can be administered without a formal hearing.

Garett Braun, 18, an undecided freshman from Belleville who was arrested on the Strip Oct. 27 for damage to property, said he felt he was treated fairly at his fact-finding session at Student Judicial Affairs.

Law professor honored for years of work

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Edward Kionka, one of the original faculty members of the SIUC School of Law, has been teaching every semester since the summer of 1973. Also, since 1979, he has served on a committee for the Illinois Supreme Court.

Now he is being honored by the court for his dedication to law.

Kionka was honored Sept. 29 by the Illinois Supreme Court for the 17-years he served as a reporter on the court's Committee on Jury Instructions in Civil Cases. Kionka received a plaque at the committee's meeting to commemorate the occasion.

Kionka said the committee makes the jury instruction books judges follow in civil trials.

"I loved serving on the committee because this is where the law is applied in the real world with the jury," he said.

Kionka was appointed by the Illinois Supreme Court to the committee and said he was the only member from a law school.

"It is not abnormal for a member of a law school to be appointed reporter for the committee," he said. "I served as the reporter because I am good at research and writing, while the lawyers on the committee served as the practical experience."

He said he retired from the committee in December 1995 to pursue writing for other law publications. Kionka said he also does some appellate work, civil appeals and spends time with his six children.

Kionka is the last remaining member of the founding faculty of the Law School.

"I taught the first class on torts and legal writing at 8 a.m. in August of 1973," he said. "I have been here since day one. They just haven't figured out how to get rid of me."

One student who was in that class 23 years ago said Kionka was a consistent and fair teacher.

Thomas Britton, now associate dean of the School of Law, said he still remembers what Kionka

Some residences can seem like roach motels

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

Even though the dorms do not allow any pets, Michael Banks says for the past semester he has had hundreds of them.

When Banks, a sophomore in computer science from Chicago, moved into his dorm room at the beginning of the year, he said he noticed a few cockroaches in his room.

As the semester rolled on, his and his two neighbors' rooms were invaded by a small colony of able-bodied varmits.

"After a while, they went away on their own after we killed about 70 of them," he said.

Banks is just one of the many college students who have to share their residences with hundreds of cockroaches.

And they infest the walls, electrical appliances and floors beneath the feet of college students everywhere.

Banks said roaches were behind his dresser and in the closet. He said he and his neighbors had to move the furniture around to clean the room, and they laid down various roach traps to control the problem.

"We haven't seen any for a while," he said. "They seemed to have stopped. But they will probably come back sooner or later."

If students suspect a roach problem, they should definitely take action against the insect or a health risk might result, an exterminator said.

Elizabeth Knote, owner of Capekil exterminators in Cape Girardeau, Mo., said if students see any pests in their homes, they need to get the problem under control. Otherwise, unwanted guests will populate and infest the area.

"If you see one roach and do nothing about it for a year, you can have up to 10,200," she said. "If a roach problem gets out of hand, a health risk can occur. The German cockroach, the No. 1 most populous roach in the world, is known to carry salmonella, a form of food poisoning."

Knote, who has been in the extermination business for 15 years, said the three most common cockroaches that invade homes are the German, Oriental and American roach.

"In my experience, there have been a lot of American cockroaches in the Southern Illinois region," she said.

Knote said roaches are great travelers and can come into a home in many ways. She said roaches love to eat glue and hide in cardboard boxes and paper bags from grocery stores.

She said once inside a house, the roaches head for cracks and crevices in the walls as well as electrical appliances. She said they can hide in any appliance including ovens, phones and televisions.

If students cannot afford to get an exterminator, Knote said, they

City library tax increase hearing set for tonight

The City of Carbondale will conduct a public hearing tonight on a proposed municipal property tax increase to fund the Carbondale Public Library.

The city proposes raising property taxes 10 percent for the next two years and 7.3 percent for the following year. The city's General Fund contribution to the library would decrease as the increasing property tax eliminates the need for it.

The hearing is scheduled for 7 p.m. at the Carbondale Public Library, 405 W. Main St. A library board meeting will follow.

CARBONDALE

Aldi's site of attempted robbery Monday evening

Carbondale Police are investigating an attempted burglary in which a man reportedly tried to enter a grocery store through the roof during store hours.

At 4:15 p.m. Monday at Aldi's, located off Route 13 west, a cashier was in the employee lounge when she heard a noise in the ceiling above her. She said she screamed when she saw the suspect removing a ceiling tile. She said the suspect then replaced the tile and fled.

The cashier and another employee described the suspect as a white male, about 35-40 years old, with a medium build, wearing jeans and a gray suede jacket with "Harley Davidson" on the back.

Sgt. Luanne Brown said police could not comment on how the man gained access to the roof of the building.

Protest photos focus on Cairo

Former NAACP president to sign books today

By Lisa M. Pangburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

African Americans should know their history and shape their attitude toward their futures, a photographer and a former president of the Cairo NAACP says.

Preston Ewing Jr.'s new book printed by the SIU Press, "Let My People Go," features 110 black and white photos of a civil rights march in Cairo. It provides faces and feelings from the last significant march of the Civil Rights Movement in the United States from 1967 to 1973.

Ewing said he hopes the book will affect people in a way that helps them understand what kind of time "the great movement" was.

"I have a feeling that these types of things can repeat themselves," he said. "However, from the pictures in the book, people can see that these types of things happened."

"Also, they can see why people were angry, and they can learn from it. People can act on that understanding, and these types of things don't have to happen again."

"Let My People Go" tells a powerful story, good and bad, through the photos of ordinary people grappling for justice. It shows people being beaten, people rallying, police guarding, and white supremacists protesting.

Willie Sanders, coordinator of the Black Affairs Council and a senior in administration of justice from Chicago, said the marches in Cairo were a sign of the times, and Ewing's book will help people understand those times.

"I think this book is good because it is a piece of history," he said. "This gives blacks a chance to look back on what people had to do for their freedom and equality. This book provides great historical documentation."

The book was edited by Jan Peterson Roddy, an associate professor in cinema and photography, who said she hopes the book will work on many different levels.

"I think there are two main things that this book deals with other than a look to the past," she said. "One thing is the fight for civil rights is not over. While, in the book, we did look at some of the hardships of 'yesterday,' we wanted to make a point to where race relations lie today. There are battles still to be fought."

Roddy said the second point she hopes people understand is the traditional exclusion of African-American faces, voices and opinions in society.

"That is being remedied nationally, but regionally, there is still a gap to fill," she said. "This book starts to fill that gap. The people featured in this book should be role models for everyone. They did so much for the people in Cairo, but there is still more to do."

Ewing grew up in Cairo and said he became interested in photography during the Civil Rights Movement because of the educational value of photography.

He is now an education consultant with the National Center for the Educational Rights of Children. He has won an ACLU Award, an NAACP Outstanding Service Award and an Illinois Education Association Outstanding Human Relations Award.

Ewing will be at a book signing today in the Old Main Lounge at the Student Center from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.

College of Business gets $30,000 donation

By La'Keisha R. Gray
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The College of Business has received an unselfish, generous, and much needed gift, a faculty member says.

A faculty member of the College of Business and her husband, an alumnus of SIUC, gave a $30,000 contribution to better the college.

The bearers of the gift, Galen and Marcia Cornett, declined to comment about the gift. Marcia Cornett is the associate dean of the College of Business.

However, Hassan Elsaid, chairman of the Finance Department, said the contribution deserves recognition.

"She should be recognized for her great gift, but she really wanted to do it quietly," Elsaid said. "I think she really believes in what she's doing, and that's why she does not want publicity for it."

Tammy Cavarretta, the director of development for the College of Business, said the gift is greatly appreciated by those in the college because it is for financial institution and financial marketing data information research used by faculty and students to augment classroom study.

"This is a much needed gift because there is no present, solid source for financial market data research, and this ensures there will always be some source of funding," Cavarretta said.

Cavarretta said many faculty members were surprised by the commitment and they hope this act will set an example.

"Hopefully this will inspire other faculty to be unselfish in their support of the Finance Department and invest in the well-being of the students and faculty," she said.

Senate race shows need for changes in campaign finance

INFLATION ALWAYS SEEMS TO BE ON THE rise. But it still would be hard to find anything that costs 87 percent more than it did four years ago — unless you are a politician, of course.

The race for the 58th District Senate race did just that. This year, the campaigns of Republican Dave Luechtefeld and Democratic challenger Barb Brown cost a whopping $1.199 million, a $550,000 increase over the 1992 figure for that district.

It is ridiculous to spend more than $1 million on a legislative campaign in this rural district. The situation in the 58th District illustrates why Illinois' campaign finance laws need to be changed.

Because Okawville incumbent Dave Luechtefeld was appointed to his post in the Senate when Ralph Dunn retired, he had never been elected by the 58th District's constituents. His unproven popularity status with voters made the race one that state Democratic leaders thought they could win. Doing this would have given the party one more coveted seat in the Senate that would have put them one step closer to toppling the Republican majority.

THAT'S WHEN THE MONEY STARTED POURING in. Party leaders on both sides started funneling money into the race because it could go either way.

Financing campaigns in such targeted races has a few similarities to the stockpiling of nuclear weapons during the Cold War. Although neither the United States nor the Soviet Union could effectively use the outrageous amount of weapons each country manufactured, both countries could not afford to get behind in the race. There ended up being enough weapons to destroy the Earth several times.

Each time one party starts sending cash into a campaign, the other must do the same or fall behind. Like the arms race, this Illinois campaign finance "matching game" results in a lot of overkill. Except it now comes in the form of repetitive campaign commercials that clutter the airwaves and belittle opponents but seldom address real issues. Have you ever seen a campaign commercial that specifically detailed a candidate's legislative plan?

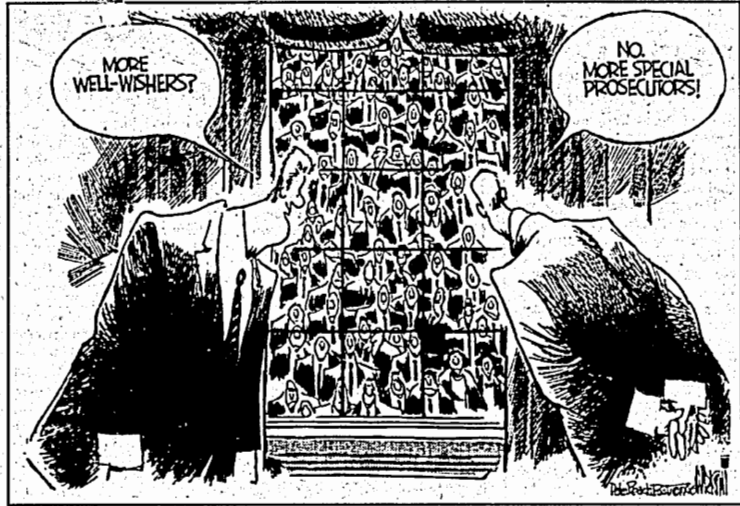

THE MATCHING GAME DOES NOT ENSURE that all candidates get the same amount of money, however. Luechtefeld ended up spending an outrageous $734,725, while Brown spent a more reasonable $464,350. Luechtefeld can thank cash for his victory because Brown only lost by 127 votes while spending $270,375 less on her campaign.

Complaints about the tone and quantity of political advertisements have been endless during the past campaign season. Both are symptomatic of races that are financed and directed by state party leaders instead of the candidates themselves.

But there is hope because many candidates said they would push for campaign finance reform before the election. It is now up to Illinois voters and the news media to make sure members of the General Assembly remember what they were saying before they were elected. That is, why a letter or a phone call to your state representative or senator at this time still has a lot of meaning.

There are several areas that warrant change, including limits on the amounts of individual contributions, caps on funding from state parties and limits on contributions from political action committees and unions.

The General Assembly should follow through with their rhetoric and start working to change campaign finance laws immediately.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Everyone wants alternatives

It is a very narrow-minded perspective to think that only African Americans like African-American artists. It is not only African Americans who want to hear more hip-hop and R & B.

I can name quite a few people who are just disgusted at the repetitive music played on the Strip. I am a Caucasian woman who often requests hip-hop, and when I ask the disc jockey if he has a certain CD, the answer is often no.

Todd Jenkins said, "they (the bars) are going to play what the majority wants to hear."

Just because the majority is Caucasian does not mean that they do not want to hear any R & B or hip-hop. LL Cool J would be a nice change of pace compared to the Hokey-Pokey. Give me a break!

Welcoming all races should be an issue in any management position. This does not mean that the bars should try a few bands that cater more towards African Americans and then give up if it is not successful.

It takes time for word to get out about any change in the types of music played.

Nanzi Neblett stated that, "the number of black people who go into bars will not make the managers change the music."

I rarely see an African American at the bars and certainly not enough to make an impact on the type of music played.

If more African Americans came, it may make the managers realize that more hip-hop is necessary. If this does not make a difference, maybe more people, Caucasian and African Americans, should request more hip-hop and R & B, and the music may finally change.

For all of those DJs out there, MTV Party to Go volumes 1, 2, etc., does not replace hip-hop or R & B.

I guess until the managers realize that their music is too repetitive and they do not have much of a selection of music, we are going to be stuck listening to the same "Greased Lightning" mix and watching a few people dance to the "Chicken" dance.

Student explains his own creativity

Matt Hale writes that he is involved with, and speaking for, a new religion for white people that is all about "creativity." We should not let this guy give the word creativity such a negative connotation.

In fact, before I get on with what I have to say, I ask readers to send in letters off/for creativity which have nothing to do with the racism/religion that Hale seems to profess. This is the only way we can save, in our minds, the connotations of this important word.

Creativity is the opposite of cynicism, which makes what Hale is up to all the more sinister and intellectually abusive.

And just to get a little edge in on Hale's argument, I would like to offer my own pre-creation argument.

It is far more creative to bring a mixed-race child into the world than to bring one of us so-called same race children into the world. Of course, even these distinctions are blurred because, for instance, Germans and Irish would have been considered different races in the pre-American paradigm of racial thinking. But now such races, especially in America, are irreversibly mixed.

This is one of America's creative powers, and Europe is now trying to catch up with us by taking down its borders.

The new race is, of course, the opposite of incest, which you find rampant among racists. Race mixing is the irreversible wave of the future, and this is a good thing. Someday, our descendants will look at photographs of us and laugh at how funny we look as divided races. And they will read about the common man's closed mind and lack of creativity in general.

Class, religion, race, the political party system and other vestiges of negative separation are institutionally contrary to creativity, and, in my opinion, are all on their way out of the paradigms of this planet.

It does not seem that way right now, but anyone who wishes to argue on one of these points offers me the opportunity to elaborate further on why I believe this.

I think that Hale knows intuitively that real creativity is a threat to the institution he seeks to organize. Creativity takes separations and dichotomies and merges them into syntheses. And if you measured the genius and creativity of children, I am sure you would find mixed-race children in the highest percentiles. I noticed this visually while watching a documentary on gifted children.

Interracial dating is the most creative and earnest way for the contemporary college campus to prosper and the edge of this era of evolutionary change.

The nonsense of riots, racism, sexism and phony rhetoric politics that we currently experience would quickly dim if students actually took it upon themselves to make new friends in new directions than they ever have before.

Dating someone of a different race will force someone to stand up for themselves and others, and the social creativity will just fall into your lap automatically. The same is true with other efforts of creative pursuits.

'Buttbusters' not effective

This story comes from an SIUC education major who recently spent several weeks observing in a local elementary school classroom. The model teacher is a veteran educator approved by both her own administrators and SIUC's Education Department.

The classroom activity is a word game, the object of which is to teach students about synonyms and shades of word meaning. The teacher uses a commercially prepared story in which the word "large" or one of its synonyms is periodically called for but omitted. Students supply the missing synonyms.

Teach concludes the first passage with "Caleb found himself staring into the face of a _____ octopus." She calls on Brittany, who has not raised her hand. "Ummm...," stalls the reluctant synonym slinger, "err, uh, gian?"

"Good for you," praises Teach, tossing the relieved Brittany a piece of candy. Teach continues, "But this octopus had never tried to stretch its tentacles around anything so _____ as the steamship's smokestack." She calls upon Colin. "Humongous," he asserts.

"Wrong," says Teach. "The two correct answers are 'gigantic' and 'huge'; 'humongous' is not a word," she explains. Creative Colin tries to argue, but it is clear that he will not win this battle and equally clear that he knows it.

"Who ya gonna call?" yells out Teach. "Buttbusters!" rejoins the class. Colin shuffles to the front of the room and picks up the custom-made, Buttbusters paddle. He delivers himself a tentative blow that glances off his hip. His fellow students clamor for more as Teach moves in to "assist" her struggling pupil. Colin administers a second, more satisfactory smack, then slinks back to his desk, never again to use the word "humongous" except in describing the extent of his humiliation.

-by neil romney

While Buttbusters continues for many more rounds, you get the picture. The students' familiarity with the game suggests it is played often. Teach's leaving the door open and choosing this activity when an outside observer is present suggests that she has no inkling of the educational problems inherent in Buttbusters, which, at best, creates a false division of "right" and "wrong" answers and discourages risk-taking by punishing those who answer incorrectly.

According to the observer, Teach is well-meaning and loves her students. Benevolence, however, is no substitute for common sense. Already in her forties and possessing years of classroom experience, Teach probably is irremediable, regardless of how many more education classes or years of teaching she completes.

In an ideal world, she would be replaced by someone with good teaching sense, but the strength of the education union makes it difficult to fire a teacher for something so innocuous as bad teaching. Thus, her presence in the classroom is no surprise.

What is a surprise, though, is that the kids in this classroom have parents who lack the good sense necessary to recognize bad pedagogy or the courage to point it out. Even if their parents don't ask them, elementary school children often describe their classroom experiences, so it is almost certain that many moms and dads had heard of Buttbusters. Why weren't they down in the principal's office the next day to register their discontent?

Parents who criticize the public schools often expect somebody else to be responsible for teaching their children. But any school system will be only as good as the parents who support it. Thus, those who want reform must take an active role in their children's learning, both in and out of the classroom. The alternative is for the problems in public education to grow ever more humongous.

Fuzzy hats say nothing

-by james lyon

I don't claim to be a fashion expert. Actually, 90 percent of my clothing is black, and the other 10 percent consists of blue jeans and gray shirts. So when it comes to fashion, I am a pretty simple guy. But I do know when something looks ridiculous.

When was the rule initiated that teenage boys who want to ride a skateboard have to wear clothes that are 30 sizes too big? Have you seen these junior high rejects on campus? They look like a bunch of 4 year olds who got into their daddies' closets. I think mommy should take their little skateboards and give them a good smack on their little behinds.

Then there is the grunge look. I suppose this look came from us Generation Xers who were looking for our own style. And that is fine.

This is about people who wear the clothes. People, if you want to wear flannel and loose shirts, that is okay. But please, comb your hair. My hair is getting pretty long, but I at least try to run a comb through it before I go out. But maybe I am overlooking the point to what the grunge look is supposed to mean. I guess if a person does not care about anything, then it doesn't matter what their hair looks like. Or maybe they are just really lazy.

And then there are those hats. When did people decide to start wearing those stupid joker/jester hats? They make everyone who wears them look completely ridiculous. Let me give you a piece of advice. When you get ready for class in the morning and you put one of those things on your head and think it looks good, then you need to stop drinking or taking up before class. When you think it is a cool thing to wear on campus, think again. It isn't. People laugh at you. It is a ridiculous piece of fabric with long, fuzzy extensions and little balls on the end. I wouldn't put one of those things on my dog, let alone on my head.

Fashion is something that makes a statement, and I realize that. I wear black because I think it personifies my inner mood. People go for the grunge look to identify with a forgotten culture. But I fail to see what extremely large clothes and goofy, fuzzy things on your head have to say about anything. Maybe it is just a person's way of telling the rest of the world that they wish they were bigger and would really like to juggle for the king and queen.

Army targets another base in Missouri sex inquiry

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Amid an expanding investigation into rape and sexual misconduct charges at the Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland, Army officials disclosed Monday that they are conducting a strikingly similar — but unrelated — inquiry at a second training post, Fort Leonard Wood in Missouri.

Confirmation of the Missouri probe, which came late on the Veterans Day holiday, is likely to give new urgency to a question that has been raised about what may have occurred at Aberdeen: Is there a systemwide problem of sexual harassment in the training of Army recruits?

During a round of television interviews Monday morning, Gen. John

"We certainly have to assume that it could be happening somewhere else."

*John M. Shalikashvili,
Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff*

M. Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the Army was determined to answer that question.

"We certainly have to assume that it could be happening somewhere else," the four-star Army general said on the CBS-TV show "This Morning" before news of the Missouri probe broke. "But right now," he added, "I don't think we have all the evidence, or it's very difficult to determine just how big that problem really is."

Officials revealed few details of the probe at Fort Leonard Wood, except to say that the investigation has been going on since September — as has the inquiry at Aberdeen — and could result in charges from rape to fraternization. So far no charges have been brought.

According to the officials, who asked to remain unidentified, Army lawyers still are trying to decide what charges to bring, if any, in the Fort Leonard Wood probe.

The investigation involves two or three suspects, the officials said, and is not expected to mushroom the way the Aberdeen investigation has.

Like its Maryland counterpart, the Missouri post is a training facility where young recruits, fresh out of boot camp, learn the skills that form the foundation of their Army careers. At Fort Leonard Wood, these trainees — many still in their teens — learn to become combat engineers; at Aberdeen's Ordnance Center and School, they are trained as mechanics.

At Aberdeen, calls continued to flow into the toll-free hot line that the Army has set up. As of Monday afternoon, the hot line had received nearly 2,000 calls; 145 of them were complaints of sexual harassment that the Army deemed serious enough for investigators to pursue.

Sgt. Delmar G. Simpson, a 12-year veteran, is accused of a variety of charges, including nine rapes involving three recruits and consensual sex with seven women. He is jailed at the Marine Corps brig in Quantico, Va.

Capt. Derrick Robertson, an 11-year-veteran who is Simpson's boss, faces charges that include rape, sodomy and adultery; he remains at Aberdeen but has been reassigned. Sgt. Nathanael Beach is accused of adultery, threatening a soldier and violating an order to stay away from trainees; he, too, remains on post but has been reassigned. Another two soldiers, who have not been identified, have been charged with lesser violations of Army rules.

Strip meets a w

From books to black lights, lava lamps to lavalieres...the Strip offers full a range of shops and services.

ARTICLE BY
MIKE THURWANGER
 REPORTER

It's a central feature of any college town—a bawdy mix of bars and bookstores, restaurants and retailers, college clothes and all-night copiers. The names and storefronts may change from time to time but the focus is always the same. Provide students with the products and services they need, cut the frills, keep it cheap and, whenever possible, serve it up with fun and flare.

Carbondale's Strip is straight out of the mold. Like most it goes through periodic upheaval, weathers occasional storms and continues to adapt to meet the needs of its customers. Too often painted in a negative light, The Strip still spells variety and convenience within ready walking distance from campus. Look beyond today's bar entry age skirmish to the rest of the Strip and you'll find it's still a dynamic mix of old standbys and today's trends. A lot still goes on along this double half-mile up Illinois and down University avenues.

In spite of the headlines and late-night discussions, the Strip isn't dead and a major part of that life occurs during the daylight hours as a mix of students and shoppers shuffle along the Strip and take advantage of all that it offers. Will Ashton, a grad student from Makanda majoring in Speech Communication, summed it all up, "I like the Strip! It's convenient. To me, this is downtown. I enjoy seeing the students and I enjoy seeing the people here." For many, the attraction centers around the old standbys. A Dairy Queen that one employee says dates back more than 40 years to the early 1950s, the Varsity Theater offers students a few hours of escape from the books just as movies have done for decades and the Amtrak station across the street where business is slow until the rush around University breaks. Down the street, students struggle to and from Laundry World, juggling their baskets and books while around the corner a mix of students and local residents finish lunch at the Corner Diner and watch the world go by from between signs advertising the daily specials.

Mingled among the old staples are newcomers offering the latest trends and hottest fads. Yesteryear Tobacconist offers exotic foreign cigarettes and quality cigars. For others, it's a latte or cappuccino, the chance to socialize and weekend entertainment that pulls them in. "Coffee is essential. I have to come down to the Strip for coffee," said Caroline Prinz, who works at the Women's Center and hails from Makanda. "I come down here to the coffee shops a lot, almost every day—Melange is my favorite coffee shop."

Jason Stearns, a grad student from San Francisco majoring in Fine Arts, was still savoring his cup in front of Melange. "I mostly come to the Strip for the coffee and for the photo shop—B & L's. It's right around the corner for us. It's all within walking distance between the studio where I work and the campus." Many were seeking more substantial fare and the Strip offers a wide variety of restaurants serving food the way Mom makes it...even Bookstore in search of computer books. A junior majoring in computer science, Simmons said he comes to the Strip for the selection. "The Strip has the best variety of records, tapes and books—things that I can't find at the shopping centers," Ashton, echoed Simmons' the different kinds of stores. Like Shawnee Trails, for example. It's the only place in Southern Illinois that offers the kinds of things they do—outdoor gear, rock climbing equipment, that kind of stuff."

Convenience is a consideration, but others are willing to drive quite a distance. Duffee, from Raleigh, Ill., visits on a regular basis. "I live about an hour away," Duffee said. "I probably come down to the Strip about twice a month to buy clothes, get a haircut and eat at one of the restaurants. I also go to some of the clubs at night—usually, Stix. It's about fifty-fifty between coming for the shopping during the day and going to clubs or restaurants at night."

While some come to the Strip for the exotic, most come for the mundane. It a convenient place to hit the ATM, for cash, grab a haircut and meet that special someone for lunch or a malnee. Far from dead, the Strip is alive, well and serving the needs of students and local residents.

"I like the Strip! It's convenient. To me, this is downtown. I enjoy seeing the students and I enjoy seeing the people here."

—Will Ashton, Grad Student

And to confirm that you are in Southern Illinois, you can enjoy a barbecue or two along the way.

"We come here for the restaurants. My favorites? I don't know, maybe, New Kahala or Quaros," said Elizabeth Dagostino, a grad student from Ontario, Canada, majoring in Fine Arts.

For others the focus was on shopping. Shane Simmons was at 710 remarks, "I could go to the malls, but I like it here because the stores are unique. I like to go to Rosetta News—there's no place around here like that—there's nowhere like that in the Southern Illinois area."

The attraction of some of the Strip's unique shopping attracts people from beyond the local area. Bram Duffee, a sophomore majoring in Public Relations at Southeastern Illinois College in Harrisburg says he's a regular on the Strip. "I come here for some of

Mall shop to pay for center's move

By Jennifer Camden
 Daily Egyptian Reporter

A science gift and toy shop at the University Mall operated by the Carbondale Science Center will help pay for the museum's move to the mall this winter, museum officials say.

Executive Director Jim Mueller said the Science Center, 611 E. College St., will open the store in the University Mall, 1201 E. Main St., on Nov. 29. The museum will open in the mall Feb. 1.

At Monday's Science Center Board meeting, the board reviewed the mall lease. They will sign the lease this week and begin moving into the mall on Monday, Deborah Collette, board president, said.

"The mall move is going to bring many more bright faces to the museum," Mueller said. "We're going to be able to reach many more Southern Illinois families."

Mueller said mall statistics show that the shopping center draws 408,000 people per month.

Mueller said the new store will sell books, T-shirts, chemistry sets, stuffed animals, science kits and other toys. He said the store, like the museum, will use volunteers to give demonstrations and conduct science programs for children.

"Mom and Dad will be able to drop Junior off for two hours while they do their Christmas shopping," Mueller said.

Mueller said he worries that the store will make the Science Center appear to be a commercial venture rather than an educational museum.

"Our business is not selling toys," he said. "This is for raising the money we need to raise. We want to be a resource for families and teachers."

Allison Diehl, the Science Center's outreach coordinator, will manage the store. She said the move will increase the museum's visibility and change its appearance.

"We can get a little flashier now," Diehl said. "The store is a nice way to do that."

The museum has stayed rent free in the old city hall complex on East College Street, which city government vacated last month when it moved to the new city hall.

When the city moved out, officials told the museum coordinators to move by May 1997. The museum has been in the building since January 1994. The old complex will be sold or demolished.

Collette said the Science Center board had discussed moving to the mall since last spring. However, it was not until recently that museum officials decided that being in the mall could raise the money needed to stay there.

Mueller said the museum needs $50,000 to open in the mall and improve the exhibits. It has raised about $8,000 during the last two months.

Profits from the store will help, she said, but probably will not amount to the $42,000 needed to reach the museum's goal. Therefore, she said, a fundraising drive is planned.

Collette said the East College Street museum will be open Sunday afternoons during December but will close its doors in January to prepare for the February grand opening in the mall.

Canadian hockey teams migrating

Los Angeles Times

Will the last Canadian-based NHL team to move to the United States please turn out the lights?

Although their flight has halted — at least temporarily — after the Quebec Nordiques' departure for Denver and the Winnipeg Jets' move to Phoenix, the plight of NHL hockey in Canada has, in many ways, never appeared worse.

Thousands of seats go unsold for games in Ottawa's new Corel Centre, and the Calgary Flames play to about 85 percent capacity in the expensively renovated Saddledome. Vancouver fills about 90 percent of the seats at GM Place, and even the Montreal Canadiens don't sell out every game. The Toronto Maple Leafs, who play the Mighty Ducks tonight in Anaheim, do well at the box office, but they haven't won the Stanley Cup since 1967.

It's bad enough that Canada lost the World Cup of Hockey to the United States in September. Still, most Canadians accept it as the outcome of a compelling and fair competition. That native sons make up an all-time low of 60.8 percent of the NHL's players is also tolerable because they believe foreigners add skill and flair to Canada's uniquely gritty style.

But losing their teams because the American dollar is stronger and more plentiful strikes them as unjust, a difference that can't be settled on the ice.

"There is some feeling we've lost control of the game," said Christie Blatchford, a columnist for the Toronto Sun. "The World Cup loss is a matter of national pride, and couple it with the fact that Hamilton (a city located between Toronto and Buffalo) can't seem to get an NHL franchise when cities that, to us, appear to be bizarre for hockey or that appreciate it in a different way are getting franchises, and it combines for a sense of loss."

The Nordiques and Jets, situated in cities with small business communities and arenas that had no luxury boxes, couldn't keep pace with rising player salaries. The Nordiques were sold for $75 million and became the Colorado Avalanche before last season, and the Jets, bought for about $67 million by Richard Burke and Stephen Gluckstern, became the Phoenix Coyotes this summer.

"Everybody has a different version of what should have happened.

The (new) arena should have been built sooner. There's probably half a dozen reasons," said Winnipeg lawyer Mark Chipman, who led a group called Save the Jets. Drawing on mom-and-pop businesses and kids' piggy banks, the group raised $60 million to help support the team. It wasn't enough.

"Even if we had gotten it done, we would have run out of time," Chipman said. "In three years' time, we might have been back asking the public (for money) again. ... I don't think the NHL owners really care about where their markets are. They say they do. The whole lockout (in October, 1994) was to protect the small markets, they said. But the collective bargaining agreement has never been used to stop the escalation of salaries."

In Quebec, individual fans could afford to pay only so much for tickets, and there was little corporate support to pick up the financial slack.

"In the new world of the NHL, it wasn't a strong market, it's as simple as that," said Pierre Gauthier, who spent 12 years with Quebec as a scout and is now general manager of the Ottawa Senators.

BASKETBALL

Hentgen's perseverance pays with Cy Young victory

Los Angeles Times

He pitched for a second-division club rather than a World Series champion, but that probably helped rather than hurt Pat Hentgen's chances to win the American League Cy Young Award.

Hentgen, of the Toronto Blue Jays, edged Andy Pettitte of the World Series champion New York Yankees on Tuesday to win the award in the closest voting since 1972.

His durability was perhaps the deciding factor among members of the Baseball Writers Association of America, who voted on the award.

Hentgen, 20-10 with a 3.72 earned-run average, led the major leagues with 10 complete games and 265 innings. His ERA was the second best in the league behind teammate Juan Guzman's 2.93.

He also had three shutouts, tying Kevin Brown of Florida and Ken Hill of Texas for the major league lead.

Pettitte, 21-8 with a 3.87 ERA, normally pitched only into the seventh or eighth innings before Manager Joe Torre turned the game over to the Yankees' formidable bullpen.

Hentgen received 16 first-place votes, nine second-place votes and three third-place votes for 110 points. Pettitte had 11 firsts, 16 seconds and one third for 104 points.

It was the closest margin of victory for the AL award since Gaylord Perry defeated Wilbur Wood in 1972. Mike Cuellar and Dennis McLain tied for the award in 1969.

Yankee reliever Mariano Rivera finished third in Tuesday's voting, with Cleveland starter Charles Nagy fourth.

"To be honest, I definitely was prepared to come in second," Hentgen said during a conference call. "I was shocked. I'm overwhelmed."

This was a turnaround season for Hentgen, a right-hander who in 1995 suffered his first losing season in the majors by going 10-14. Until this season, his best year was 1993, when he won 19 games and helped the Blue Jays win their second consecutive World Series.

He grew stronger as the '96 season progressed. He was 8-6 before the All-Star break but improved to 12-4 after it. He won his career-high 20th game on the season's final day with a 4-1 victory over the Baltimore Orioles at SkyDome.

"Things snowballed for me in the second half," said Hentgen, who turns 28 Wednesday. "There was a point where I just knew I could go out and pitch a good game."

Hentgen, who earned $2.25 million in 1996, gets a $50,000 bonus for winning the award.

Pettitte, a left-hander in only his second major league season, was trying to become the first Yankee to win the award since Ron Guidry, who went 25-3 with a 1.74 ERA in 1978.

He said he had been trying not to think about winning the award, but it wasn't easy after the Yankees' World Series victory over the Atlanta Braves. He said he had spent the last few days at home in Deer Park, Texas, getting ready for hunting season and repairing an off-road vehicle.

"All the talk that I was going to win it got my hopes up, but Pat deserved it," said Pettitte, 24. "When the season ended, I told my wife that I thought Pat deserved it. He was totally dominating. I didn't dominate. I didn't get the chance because of the setup we had with relievers Rivera and John Wetteland."

Defense

quick because they have to trap a lot," she said. "They also have to have a lot of quickness and a lot of agility. And long arms too!"

Bardley, who is 6 feet 3 inches tall, is known for her arm span, and she said the long arms really help out the mad dog.

"The long arms help in deflections, trapping and a couple of steals in there," she said. "I happen to be tall and quick, so I happen to play the mad dog on defense."

If tiring out while playing the defense is a problem, Bardley said that practicing the press can help condition a player.

"Sometimes it is a tiring defense, but it helps with conditioning — especially the mad dog," she said. "If the ball is on the other side of the court, you have to bust over there and help with the trap."

Coach Cindy Scott said since the Salukis can put the quickness on the floor, the defense is a good opportunity for Robinson and the team.

"I think it can help the team, and the kids enjoy it," Scott said. "It is great to have a young coach teach something and to have the coach know she is responsible for it."

Robinson and Scott agree it is too early to tell if the defense will work, but it puts some spice in the game.

"It adds to the options, and it is just one more thing that we can do," Robinson said. "I don't want it to come down to my defense, but just something that is added into the program."

SPORTS TALK BY KEVIN DEFRIES

Fond football memories gone in puff of smoke

Ever since smoking was banned in all of SIUC's campus buildings, I knew it was only a matter of time before McAndrew Stadium joined the ranks of the smokeless.

Saturday will mark a sad day for many smokers who once walked the stands of McAndrew with a cigarette dangling and smoke spewing out of their mouths like chimney stacks. Saturday is the last day to smoke inside the walls that have seen so many great smoking moments.

As a matter of fact, many of my best smoking memories at SIUC came while enjoying the smooth refreshing taste of that sweet Carolina tobacco.

October 1992

It was a cool day, just right for a cigarette. I was going through that "home-rolled cigarettes are cooler than store-bought" stage. So I rolled up 20 cigarettes the size of my thumb and knew I was in for a full day of smoking.

I was lagging behind after the first quarter, only smoking three cigarettes. I started coughing in the second quarter and fell even further behind, only smoking two cigarettes.

But the second half was a different story. With 15 cigarettes left to smoke, I started smoking them two at a time. Nothing was going to stop me from finishing. I was just throwing my last two cigarette butts at the closed concession stand as the gun went off ending the game.

Northern Iowa 30, Salukis 25.

September 1993

Throughout my years at SIUC and as a smoker, I remember the menthols the most — probably because whenever I smoke them, the first few drags send me into a violent coughing fit. So I decided to take it easy on this particular day and only planned on smoking 10 or 12 cigarettes, mostly because I wanted to avoid the usual spectacle I make of myself. But that was not the case.

After only two cigarettes, my lungs could not handle any more menthol smoke, and I started to choke and went tumbling down the aisle coughing all the way. I laid there for a few minutes as the medics finished putting the splint on my leg while going off on some spiel about the ills of smoking.

I thought about quitting — not for good because that never seems to work out quite right. But after a breather, I forged on and mounted a comeback. With three cigarettes left and the two-minute warning closing in quickly, I had to take drastic measures.

I thought of an old smoker's trick where you eat to get that craving for that tier-the-meal smoke. But the concession stands were closed. So I ripped two cigarettes apart and ate them. Mmmm, minty. I smoked the last cigarette with 1:42 left on the clock.

Western Kentucky 51, Salukis 24.

Yet my greatest smoking memory at McAndrew came while smoking a regular Camel Light. It was the first cigarette I ever had. I figured that since my parents were 200 miles away, I could use a new hobby. And I decided it was to be smoking. I got the greatest head rush of my life, and I thought I would always be able to enjoy the feeling of tobacco smoke, packed full of tar, nicotine and other such cancer causing agents, at McAndrew.

We were all winners that day: me, for the pleasant feeling of that tender nicotine buzz; McAndrew Stadium, for all the cigarette butts I gave to pad that space under the bleachers in case somebody falls through; and the tobacco companies for winning over another loyal smoker. I do not know how the Salukis did that day because I enjoyed the nicotine buzz so much that I smoked the whole pack. Before I knew it, I woke up, and McAndrew was empty.

After Saturday, McAndrew will be a non-smoking zone. So smoke 'em if you got 'em while it is still legal. Pretty soon, the stands will be lined with people chewing tobacco and spitting all over the place.

Players try 'mad dog'

Salukis work on new defensive court press

By Donna Collier

SIUC women's basketball player O'Desha Proctor has been practicing to be the "mad dog" of the Salukis' new defense.

The "mad dog" defense is a 1-2-2 full court press that is very aggressive and changes tempo with a lot of trapping, assistant Coach Lea Robinson said. Robinson brings the defense to SIUC from her playing days at Western Kentucky University, where it is a trademark defense.

"If done right and aggressively, it can be very successful and a great press," Robinson said. "We will work on it and try to fit it in to our style of play, but we are still working on it."

The mad dog is the player at the head of the full court press. She is the player who works the hardest and is everywhere on the court, Robinson said. The key to the mad dog defense is quickness and knowledge of each position in the defense.

"The mad dog runs the press," she said. "The whole press depends on what the person at the mad dog position does."

Proctor, a sophomore guard from St. Louis, said there is an added touch to this particular defense that sets it apart from other full court presses.

"In regular presses, you have to get to the ball fast, but not really quick," she said. "This is one you have to get there extra quick."

"It is pretty much the same as other presses, but it puts a lot of responsibility on the mad dog."

The person at the mad dog position can get tired the quickest, but Proctor said there will always be a Saluki who can step up to play mad dog.

"I think it can work because we have a tall team, and they are quick players," she said. "Almost anyone on the team can play the mad dog, so it gives us a lot of options."

been playing the position. She said the mad dog position needs to be a player with a lot of different aspects to her game.

TENNIS

Tournament doubly disappointing for netter

By Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC tennis player Molly Card faced the competition she expected at the Rolex Tournament in Madison, Wis., but fell short of the expectations she put upon herself.

"It (the competition) was basically what I expected," Card said. "Everyone in the tournament was very tough."

Despite going in with respect for her opponents, Card and teammate Sanem Berksoy were ousted from the Rolex on Thursday — the first day of the tournament.

"I can't say that I was mad, but I was disappointed in how I played," Card said. "You play a lot of different tournaments, and you can't win them all."

Card played a total of three matches at the Rolex.

Her first two matches were singles matches, and the third was a doubles match with Berksoy, her newly acquired partner. All the matches looked the same on paper, as Card's best performance saw her lose 6-2, 6-2 in the consolation bracket.

Card's first match pitted her 110 national ranking against 25th-ranked Laura Guignon from Northwestern University. Although Card lost 6-1 and 6-2, Coach

"I can't say that I was mad, but I was disappointed in how I played."

Molly Card,
SIUC tennis player

Judy Auld was not all that impressed with Guignon.

"I really felt that Molly (Card) had beaten players as good if not better than her (Guignon) throughout the year," Auld said.

But Card said her game was just not up to par at the Rolex, especially not in the first match.

"She (Guignon) had a pretty tough serve, and it took me a while to get used to that," Card said. "I just didn't have my timing that day."

The loss put Card in the consolation bracket where she faced Nives Milosevic from DePaul University. Auld said Card played a little better, but still was not at the top of her game.

"She just didn't have a good tournament," Auld said. "She wasn't moving well, and her mobility is the strong point of her game."

Card and Berksoy teamed up for the first time to face a strong doubles team from the University of Miami-Ohio. But the Salukis were outmatched losing 6-2, 6-2. Auld said the tandem from Miami-Ohio was impressive in their doubles play and took away any opportunity for a comeback the Salukis tried to mount.

"The one girl from Indonesia was a very smart doubles player," Auld said. "You could just see her setting the points up. Even when we had an advantage in the game, we just didn't close it out."

"You really have to do that (close the game out) at that level. You just can't let the people back into it."

Looking back, Card said she would not change how she prepared for the Rolex.

"I can't say that I would prepare differently," Card said. "It's the same way I have always prepared, and it's not like I've never lost before."

Auld said one tournament does not make or break an entire season, and Card's accomplishments throughout the year should not be overshadowed by the Rolex.

"She's had a really good year, and it would have been nice for her to add a few wins," Auld said. "We have to look at the whole season. We can't let one tournament overshadow the rest of the year."
